twice coming to his Subaltern's rescue, and on each occasion killing his man.—'Yesterday, the 6th July 1857, Lieutenant J. Hills was on picket duty, with two guns, at the mound to the right of the camp. About 11 o'clock a.m. there was a rumour that the enemy's cavalry were coming down on his post. Lieutenant Hills proceeded to take up the position assigned in case of alarm, but, before he reached the spot, he saw the enemy close upon his guns before they had time to form up. To enable him to do this he boldly charged, single-handed, the head of the enemy's column, cut down the first man, struck the second, and was then ridden down, horse and all. On getting up and searching for his sword, three more men came at him (two mounted); the first man he wounded with his pistol; he caught the lance of the second in his left hand, and wounded him with his sword; the first man then came on again, and was cut down; the third man (on foot) then came up, and wrenched the sword from Lieutenant Hills, who fell in the struggle, and the enemy was about to cut him down when Major Tombs, who had gone up to visit his two guns, saw what was going on, rushed in and shot the man and saved Lieutenant Hills. By this time the enemy's cavalry had passed by, and Major Tombs and Lieutenant Hills went to look after the wounded men, when one of the enemy passed with Lieutenant Hills' pistol; he first cut at Lieutenant Hills who parried the blow, and he then turned on Major Tombs, who received the blow in the same manner. His second attack on the Lieutenant was more successful, as he was cut down with a had sword-cut on the head, and would have been, no doubt, killed, had not Major Tombs rushed in and put his sword through the man.'—*Extract from Despatch of Lt. # The Best Work of the Best Authors

Never, in the history of magazine publishing, has there been recorded such a marvellous success as that achieved by

THE SMART SET

A MAGAZINE OF CLEVERNESS

In a little more than two years it has gained a foremost place among the great monthly periodicals of the world; its subscription list and its monthly sales have increased enormously with every issue. This wonderful achievement has not, however, been in any sense sensational; it has been a steady, sure and healthy growth, due to but one thing—unrivalled merit. It was determined at the outset that stories should be accepted for publication in The Smart Set simply on their merits, without regard to the reputation of the authors, because they were good stories, with human interest and real sentiment or humour; that the verse should not be merely ephemeral and used only to fill empty space at the bottom of some page, but vital poetry, or lyrics of grace and charm; that no illustrations at all should be given a place, since it was believed that if stories were not worth reading for themselves, they were not worth reading at all; that each number of the magazine should be complete in itself—in other words, that no continued stories should be published; and, finally, that the great reading public wished to be entertained, not instructed. To this end, the brightest and cleverest known writers were sought, and many new ones were found. The result of such methods has been that each issue of The Smart Set forms a unique collection of stories, poems, essays, and witticisms, in which the best literary art is joined with brilliancy of thought and true feeling. The most distinguished authors the world over have contributed and will contribute their best work.

THE SMART SET is published on the 15th of each month; price
ONE SHILLING.
