The Blockhouse, which was loopholed, was the key of the enemy's position. Seeing no Offi- cer of the storming party near, and being anxious that the place should be taken immediately, as any protracted resistance might have caused the main body of the Bhootas to rally, the British Force having been fighting in a broiling sun on very steep and difficult ground for upwards of three hours, the General in command ordered these two Officers [Captain Trevor, and Lieut. J. Dundas, R. Engineers (since dead)] to show the way into the Blockhouse. They had to climb up a wall which was fourteen feet high, and then to enter a house, occupied by some 200 desperate men, head foremost through an opening not more than two feet wide between the top of the wall and the roof of the Blockhouse. Major General Tombs states that on speaking to the Sikh soldiers around him, and telling them in Hindoostani to swarm up the wall, none of them responded to the call until these two Officers had shown them the way, when they followed with the greatest alacrity. The Officer who commanded the troops on the occasion reports: 'About an hour later in the day, Dr. Douglas, 2nd Battalion 24th Regiment, and the four privates referred to, gallantly manning the second gig, made their way through the surf almost to the shore, but finding their boat was half-filled with water, they retired. A second attempt made by Dr. Douglas and party proved successful, five of us being safely passed through the surf to the boats outside. A third and last trip got the whole of the party left on shore safe to the boats.' It is stated that Dr. Douglas accomplished these trips through the surf to the shore by no ordinary exertion. He stood in the bows of the boat, and worked her in an intrepid and seamanlike manner, cool to a degree, as if what he was then doing was an ordinary act of everyday life. The four privates behaved in an equally cool and collected manner, rowing through the - roughest surf when the slightest hesitation or want of pluck on the part of any one of them would have been attended by the gravest results. Captain Holmes, Captain M'Rae, and others proceeded to the spot, and let down a well rope of sufficient length to reach the soldier, and capable of sustaining him for a time. Both Captain M'Rae and Captain Holmes volunteered to go down, but as the former was a light weight it was decided that he should make the trial, Captain Holmes demurring, as he wished to undertake the risk himself. Captain Holmes was at the head of the rope, and his strength enabled him to lift both completely. After hauling up about 10 or 15 feet, the rope broke, precipitating Captain M'Rae and his charge to the bottom of the well. A second attempt was made, and both were brought to the surface. The depth of the well was 83 feet, of which 12 feet was water. It was quite dark at the time. With reference to this case, the following divisional order by the Duke of Connaught was issued to the troops in his command:—"His Royal Highness the Major General Commanding, having been made acquainted with the circumstances connected with the rescue from drowning in a well at Rawul Pindee of Trumpeter S.
