HIS GRACE.

ALEXANDER,

DUKE OF GORDON, MARQUIS AND EARL OF HUNTRY,
LORD BADENOCH, BARON ENZIE, &c. &c. &c.
ONE OF THE SIXTEEN PEERS OF SCOTLAND, AND
KNIGHT OF THE MOST ANTIENT ORDER OF THE THISTLE.

MY LORD,

IN writing a Dedication to YOUR GRACE, an extensive field for Panegyric is opened to my view.—It would be no flattery to YOUR GRACE, were I to mention the Greatness and Antiquity of the House of GORDON, and enumerate the heroic Deeds and generous Actions of a long train of Ancestors, who have made a truly conspicuous figure in the Annals of Caledonia. Their Virtues, MY LORD, have descended to our Days.—Every one who has the Honour of being known to YOUR GRACE, may, with delight, survey the private virtues of Domestic Life, united with true Patriotism and Generosity, to stand forth in defence of your Country, when Danger threatens our happy Constitution in Church and State.

D E D I C A T I O N.

The early Encouragement YOUR GRACE was pleased to give this Undertaking, has inclined me to put the Result of my Labours under your Protection, as the Friend of Letters. It is a Deposit of the dying Language of YOUR GRACE's Ancestors, which was once famous in the Western World, and is still the speech of many of his Majesty's faithful and loyal Subjects, who have ever been the firm Friends of Regal Government, and over whom YOUR GRACE is so considerable a Chieftain.

I am happy in having this opportunity of shewing my attachment to YOUR GRACE; and have the honour to be, with the most profound respect,

MY LORD,

YOUR GRACE'S

Much obliged, and

Most obedient humble Servant,

LONDON,

May 26, 1780.

P R E F A C E.

THE human mind, from an innate curiosity, and the pleasure received from the contemplation of melancholy images, is more delighted by a retrospective view of the past, than any conjectures she can form of the future. How much soever disconnected by situation, birth, or other circumstances, the patriotism, virtue, learning, and bravery of individuals; the wealth, power, customs, and manners, national character, and extent of territory, with the gradual decay and dismemberment of a people, she considers with an attention highly interested, and gently perplexed.

And although, by the contingencies of human affairs, and the usual fate of empires, a nation be reduced from its antient splendour to an inconsiderable state amongst neighbouring powers, yet the understanding of the philosophical enquirer, set at liberty from the low and narrow dictates of a selfish spirit, being accessible to truth, and friendly to mankind, and having foregone the little distinctions of party, with liberal capaciousness of mind, indulgeth intellectual appetites from every opening source of gratification. Whoever affords entertainment for mental desires, or information to the speculative, renders an acceptable service to the friends of literature.

Sensible of this, his inclination would have led the Compiler to embrace the present opportunity of enquiring into the different migrations of the Celtic nations over the various kingdoms of Europe, and of giving an account of their empire and power, attended with numerous vicissitudes, since they parted with their progenitors Japhet and Gomer, in Asia, until their present gradual decline and eve of existence as a separate people in the British Isles, and present the reader with every gratification such an investigation might afford; but as this would lead into a tedious discussion of what hath been lately written for and against Scoto and Ibero-Celtic antiquities, and exceed the compass of a Preface, I shall reserve that for a separate disquisition, and confine myself to an account of the present undertaking.

The general encouragement the present age hath so generously given to every work that can afford either pleasure or instruction, hath induced many to become candidates for fame in the republic of letters. Every science and art is improved; every subject hath been impartially discussed. Whatever can tend to information, to promote knowledge and the improvement of life, hath, on whatever subject and from whatever source offered, been cheerfully received. Not insensible to the impulse of ambition, nor indifferent in the pursuit of honest fame, originally prompted by patriotism, and instigated by some learned men, I have been ambitious to cast my mite into the stores of Literature, gleaned from the remains of the venerable Celtic.

The approbation which the curious have been pleased to signify of the Analysis of the Scotch Dialect of the Galic, published at London in 1778, encouraged me to turn my thoughts towards the present work. But the difficulties attending such a laborious undertaking seemed so numerous and insurmountable, that my expectations, however sanguine in theory, appeared irreducible to practice. Some learned friends observed, that such a work could only be effected under the immediate auspices of the Scotch and Irish nations by a public subscription; as a tour through these countries, to complete a Dictionary, must be performed. Being however inwardly persuaded, that whatever is the business of many is the business of nobody, I was discouraged from any application of that nature. As the Public hath often been imposed upon, proposals were made for printing by subscription a Galic Dictionary; and that my countrymen might be more convinced of my zeal and real intention of publishing, payment only on delivery of the book was the condition.

Observing with regret the indolence and inactive zeal of my compatriots in the cause of their expiring language, with the most ardent enthusiasm I was impelled to attempt snatching from oblivion, and in her last struggles for existence preserve in a Dictionary, as much as possible of the greatest monument of antiquity perhaps now in the world: for the Galic is the language of Japhet, spoken before the Deluge, and probably the speech of Paradise.

Encouraged by the good wishes of my friends, excited by a partiality for the subject, and a hope of realizing what had hitherto been little thought of or neglected by my countrymen, in the spring of 1778 I undertook a journey from London to the Highlands of Scotland. Having made a progress into almost every corner of the Highland part of the continent, and visited the most considerable of the Hebrides, exposed to much fatigue and many inconveniences, I passed over to Ireland, there also to pursue the Galic; and returned to London in February 1779, after a perambulation of about three thousand miles, with a collection of near thirty thousand articles for a Dictionary.

In the Highlands, there being few books, and still fewer MSS. in the Scotch dialect, the language in the living voice was the only source from which I could glean vocables. In the island of Mull, however, Mr. Macarthur, one of the ministers there, who understands the language well, laid before me about two hundred words, part of which I transcribed, uncertain whether I had seen them before.

P R E F A C E.

The better class of the people every where with alacrity afforded every possible information, and for that purpose seldom spoke to me but in the antient tongue, turning the conversation to various subjects, to give an opportunity of catching new words. But the common people, who are generally possessed of whatever narration remains in the country, must all be bought. They told me, I had been well paid by his Majesty for what I undertook, otherwise I should not have been at so much pains, and therefore they seldom opened their mouths before they were paid.

Sir James Foulis, although of the Low Country of Scotland, and consequently once a stranger to the Galic, by study is now better acquainted with it than many of the natives. This gentleman, in the sequestered vale of life, hath employed his leisure hours in gleaning and depositing in his library whatever remains of Celtic antiquities he could reach at; and perceiving that my design was not to boast of what learning the Galic contained, whilst I concealed it from public view, but at once present the world with the language itself, unlike to others, hid not the result of his investigations and long labours under a bushel, but generously allowed me the use of his manuscript collection. His knowledge of a tongue, believed impossible to learn, is a living instance of what application, and a taste for antient learning, can do; some Bard, therefore, will write his epitaph, and every patriot Gaedheal add a stone to his carn.

In Ireland I have been chiefly obliged to Lieut. Col. Vallancy, who, by indefatigable industry, has acquired a thorough acquaintance with the Galic, and deserves much of all the friends of the antiquities of that nation. There are many valuable MSS. in his possession, the use of which he generously granted me. Trinity College Library contains many books and MSS. in the old letter, and on a variety of subjects, to which I had free access by means of Dr. Cleghorn, and the indulgence of Dr. Leland. These volumes, elegantly transcribed, but sealed books to most of the present age, whilst I surveyed and examined them, and looked back to the ancient state of this once blessed and lettered island, produced emotions easier conceived than described.

Having, thus, collected my materials at a considerable expence and waste of time, I sat down to arrange the whole, probably sacrificing more useful pursuits to a desire of recording what in a few years no labour or industry could recover. The small number of subscribers, and the expence I had already been at in procuring materials, made me apprehensive I should never be able to publish; and I was about to deposit my MSS. in some public library, when some Gentlemen in London, with true patriotism in the republic of letters, encouraged the work on the plan of subscription. Amongst these I hold myself particularly indebted to Lieut. General Melville; who, adding to military science a taste for ancient as well as modern learning, shewed himself a zealous promoter of this undertaking in favour of the Galic language. By these means I have been enabled to send this work to the press, although on a more contracted plan than I at first proposed. It however contains nearly every word in both the Scotch and Irish dialects, with an English translation opposite, in the First Volume; and the most necessary articles in the English, with their opposite Galic terms, in the Second. The Galic reader will find no innovations in orthography; for I have considered it my business rather to record words as they have been written in the ancient Irish MSS. than attempt to write a Dictionary, by altering the spelling from the received method, to what I might conceive it ought to be, according to the powers of the letters, and the philosophy of language.

A speech so singular in its inflections, so ancient in its structure, and so copious in words as the Galic, although much written, cannot be so fixed in its orthography as those tongues which enjoy the benefit of Printing. With the Irish, however, (whose dialect has always been the written and studied language) the difference was very inconsiderable. One vowel or diphthong is sometimes substituted for a similar one, and the commutable consonants and combinations are interchanged. This has been the case with the Greek and Latin languages, as well as with the Galic.—The perfection to which the last arrived in Ireland in such remote ages is astonishing, and of which the perusal of this Dictionary is an indubitable proof. I have, however, sometimes written the abstract termination Orachd, for Mhorachd, Al, for Amhuil, and Lachd, for Amhuilachd.—Opposite every English word there are as many different Galic words as I could collect. The most common are first, and the more ancient or obsolete last, which the curious Orientalist may compare with similar words in the Eastern tongues.

As a Dictionary becomes perfect only by different editions, and the industry and abilities of the different editors, I do not intrude the present work upon the Public as a book to which nothing can be added. It will answer the purposes of a Galic and English, and English and Galic Dictionary; and by it, and the assistance of the Analysis or Grammar, one may acquire a considerable degree of knowledge in the language, and be more able to form a just idea of Celtic learning. If my labour affords the desired assistance to those at home who may wish to improve the knowledge of their mother tongue, or satisfaction to the curious abroad, that may be inclined to compare words in it with other dialects of the Celtic, or the Oriental languages; and if, in these books, I have preserved in an intelligible and rational state, a tongue more copious, nervous, and softer than is commonly allowed, I have obtained my wish—for whatever adds to the stores of Literature, I reckon gain.

Bealteine. The first of May. Teine Beil, or fire of the god Belus, i. e. Mayday in Irish, so called from the fires which the Druids lighted on the summits of the highest hills, into which they drove the four-footed beasts, using at the same time certain ceremonies to expiate for the sins of the people. This Pagan ceremony of lighting those fires in honour of the Asiatic God Belus, gave its name to the entire month of May, which to this day is called Mios na Bealteine, in the Irish language. Dr. Keating says, the design of it was to keep off contagious disorders from them for that year, and that all the inhabitants of Ireland quenched their fires on that day, and kindled them again out of some part of that fire.

H.

H, Although now admitted into the Galic alphabet, is more an aspirate than a letter, for there are no words in the language beginning with h. After a consonant, different combinations, new sounds or letters are formed, as may be seen in a scheme laid down in the Analysis of the Galic Language, to which I refer the reader. The name of this letter or aspirate is Uath, the white thorn-tree. H, between two words, is a euphonie; thus, dheisid e ri a h oran, he listened to her song.

I A C

IS the eighth letter of the alphabet, it sounds as in Latin, French, and Italian, and is called Iodha, vulgo, iubhar, the yew-tree. The Galic admits of no (I) consonant any more than the Greek, and it appears that the Latins did not use it as a distinct character, for they wrote peius for pejus, and eius for ejus. Joined with the other vowels several diphthongs are formed. Vide Analysis..

L.

L Is the ninth letter of the Gaelic alphabet, and is called Luis, from Luis, vulgarly Crithan, the quicken-tree. It, as also N, R, never admits the aspirate h after it in the inflection of nouns or verbs, but is founded in such situations as if a ll. Thus labhair e, he spoke, is not as with the other letters lhabhair e, but llabhair e, although never written so. Vide Analysis.

P.

P A C

P Is the thirteenth letter of the Galic alphabet—This letter is called by the Irish grammarians Peith-bhog, but they do not tell us from what tree, for the letters were commonly named after trees. It would, however, appear to be nothing else than Beith-bhog, or B soft, i. e. P is only a soft or mollifying way of expressing B, and the reason is, originally they were the same letter, and P was not used in the Irish language until our knowledge of the Latin, since the time of St. Patrick. In the old parchments these letters are indiscriminately used, as Prutach, a boor or rustic, for Brutach, Peist for Beist, &c. With the aspirate H which it bears, it is pronounced like the Greek Phi, and Ph in the English word Prophet.

T.

T, Is the sixteenth letter in the Galic alphabet, and is soft as in the Italian. It bears an aspirate, and then is mute; as Tog, lift up; Thog e, he lifted up, is Hog e. The Irish writers have called it Teine, and no one of them has given the reason of that appellative. This letter hath often, in the Irish manuscripts, been commuted for D, as G hath for C, which is prejudicial to the affinity roots in one language beareth to those of another. Vide Analysis.

U

U Is the seventeenth and last letter of the Galic alphabet. Grammarians have called it U, which according to Flaherty signifies Heath, i. e. in Galic Fraosch. It hath also, and with greater propriety, been called Ur, i. e. Ubhar, Iubar, or the Yew-tree. Its power and sound is the same as in the Latin and Italian languages. U seems once commuted for V in the name Ualtair, Walter, which the Gael pronounce Valtair. Bh and mh having the force, with little difference from each other, of V, sometimes supply the place of V in other languages; and as the grammatical reader must be no stranger to the frequent commutations mh, bh, v, u, and w, little here need be said on that head.
