CORNET IN SIR JOHN COPE': REGIMENT OF DRAGOONS.

DEAR SIR,

WHILE my heart is following you, with a truly paternal folicitude, through all the dangers of military life, in which you are thus early engaged, anxidus for your fafety amidst the instruments of death, and the far more dangerous allurements of vice, I feel a peculiar pleafure in being able at length, though after fuch long delays, to put into your hands the memoirs with which I now prefent you. They contain many particulars, which would have been worthy of your attentive notice, had they related to a perfon of the most distant nation or age: But they will, I doubt not, command your peculiar regard, as they are facred to the memory of that excellent man, from whom you had the honour to derive your birth, and by whofe generous and affectionate care you have been laid under all the obligations, which the beft of fathers could confer on a moft beloved fon.

Here, Sir, you fee a gentleman, who, with all the advantages of a liberal and religious education, added to every natural accomplifhment that could render. him most agreeable, entered, before he had attained the flature of a man, on those arduous and generous fervices to which you are devoted, and behaved in them with a gallantry and courage, which will always give a fplendour to his name among the British foldiery, and render him an example to all officers of his rank. But, alas ! amidft all the intrepidity of the martial Hero, you fee him vanquished by the blandishments of pleafure, and in chace of it plunging himfelf into follies and vices, for which no want of education or genius could have been a fufficient excufe. You behold him urging the ignoble and fatal purfuit, unmoved by the terrors which death was continually darting around him, and the most fignal deliverances by which providence again and again refcued him from those terrors, till at length he was reclaimed by an ever-memorable interpofition of divine grace. Then you have the pleafure of feeing him become, in good earnest, a convert to Christianity, and, by speedy advances, growing up into one of its brighteft ornaments ; his mind continually filled with the great ideas which the golple of our Redeemer fuggefts, and bringing the bleffed influence of its fublime principles into every relation of military and civil, of public and domeftic life. You trace him perfevering in a fteady and uniform courfe of goodnefs, through a long feries of honourable and profperous years, the delight of all that were fo happy as to know him, and, in his fphere, the most faithful guardian of his country; till at laft, worn out with honourable labours, and broken with infirmities which they had haftened upon him before the time, you fee him forgetting them at once, at the call of duty and providence; with all the generous ardour of his moft vigorous days ruthing on the enemies of religion and liberty, fuftaining their fhock with the moft deliberate fortitude, when deferted by thofe that fhould have fupported him, and cheerfully facrificing the little remains of a mortal life in the triumphant views of a glorious immortality.

This, Sir, is the noble object I prefent to your view; and you will, I hope, fix your eye continually upon it, and will never allow yourfelf for one day to forget, that this illuftrious man is Calonel Gardiner, your ever honoured father; who, having approved his fidelity to the death, and received a cream of life, feems as it were, by what you here read, to be calling out to you from amidit the cloud of actimelifes with which you are furrounded, and urging you, by every generous, tender, filial fentiment, to mark the footfleps of his Chrittian race, and freenuoufly to maintain that combat, where the victory is through divine grace certain, and the prize an eternal kingdom in the heavens.

The laft number of the Appendix introduces a moft worthy triumvirate of your father's friends, following him through the fame heroic path, to an end like bis; and with pleafure pouring forth their lives in blood, for the refeue and prefervation of their dearer country. And I truft, the eloquence of their examples will be prevalent with many, to emulate the many virtues for which they were configuous.

My hopes, Sir, that all thefe powerful motives will effectively have their full efficacy on You, are greatly encouraged by the certainty which I have of your being well acquained with the evidence of Chriftianity in its full extent; a criminal ignorance of which, in the middle of great advantages for learning them, leaves for many of our young people a prey to Delim, and fo to vice and ruin, which generally bring up its rear. My life would be a continual burthen to me, if I had not a confciousness in the fight of God, that during the years in which the important truft of your education was committed to my care, I had laid before you the proofs both of natural and revealed religion, in what I affuredly efteem to be, with regard to the judgment, if they are carefully examined, an irrefiftible light; and that I had endeavoured to attend them with those addresses, which might be most likely to impress your heart. You have not, dear Sir forgotten, and I am. confident you can never entirely forget, the affiduity with which I have laboured to form your mind, not only to what might be otnamental to you in human life, but above all, to a true tafte of what is really excellent, and an early contempt of those vanities by which the generality of our youth, efpecially in your flation, are debafed, enervated, and undone. My private, as well as public addreffes for this purpofe, will, I know, be remembered by you, and the tears of tendernefs with which they have fo often been accompanied : And may they be fo remembered, that they who are most tenderly concerned, may be comforted under the lofs of fuch an ineftimable friend as Colonel Gardiner, by feeing that his character in all its most amiable and resplendent parts, lives in you; and that, how difficult foever it may be to act up to that height of expectation, with which the eyes of the world will be fixed on the fon of fuch a father, you are, in the ftrength of divine grace, attempting it; at leaft are following him with generous emulation and with daily folicitude, that the fteps may be lefs unequal !

May the Lotd God of your father, and I will add, of both your pious and honourable parents, animate your heart more and more with fuch views and fentiments as thefe! May he guard your life amidit every fcene of danger, to be a protection and bleffing to thofe that are yet unborn; and may he give you, in fome far diffant period of time, to refign it by a gentler diffolution than the hero from whom you fprung; or, if unerring Wifdom appoint otherwife, to end it with equal glory !

I am,

Dear Sir,

Your ever faithful,

Affectionate Friend, and

Obliged humble Servant, P. DODDRIDGE.

LIFE

Of the Honourable

COLONEL JAMES GARDINER.

§. 1. WHEN I promifed the public fome larger account of the life and charafter of this illuftrious perfon than I could conveniently infert in my fermon on the fid occafion of his death, I was fecure, that if providence continued my capacity of writing, I fhould not wholly difapoint the expectation: For I was furnished with a variety of particulars, which appeared to me worthy of general notice, in confequence of that intimate friend-flip with which he had honoured meduring the fix laft years of his life; a friendflip which led him to open his heart to me in repeated convertations, with an unbounded confidence,

(as he then affured me, beyond what he had with any other man living), fo far as religious experiences were concerned ; and I had alfo received feveral very valuable letters from him, during the time of our absence from each other, which contained most genuine and edifying traces of his Chriftian character. But I hoped farther to learn many valuable particulars from the papers of his own closet, and from his letters to other friends, as well as from what they more circumftantially knew concerning him : I therefore determined to delay the execution of my promife, till I could enjoy these advantages, for performing it in the most fatisfactory manner; nor have I, on the whole, reafon to regret that determination.

§ 2. I fhall not trouble the reader with all the caufes which concurred to retard thefe expected affiltances for almoft a whole year; the chief of them were, the tedious languilhing illnefs of his affilted lady, through whole hands it was proper the papers fhould pafs; together with the confution into which the rebels had thrown them, when they ranfacked his feat at Bankton, where moft of them were deposited. But having now received fuch of them as have effequed their voracious handa, and could conveniently be collected and tranfmittad, I fet myleff with the greateft pleafure to perform what I effeem not merely a tribute of gratitude to the memory of my invaluable friend, (though never was the memory of any mortal man more precious and facred to me), but out of duty to God, and to my fellowcreatures; for I have a most cheerful hope, that the narrative I am now to write, will, under the divine bleffing, be a means of fpreading what of all things in the world every benevolent heart will most defire to fpread, a warm and lively fenfe of religion.

§ 3. My own heart has been fo much edified and animated by what I have read in the memoirs of perfons who have been eminent for wildom and piety, that I cannot but wilh the treafure may be more and more increafed; and I would hope the world may gather the like valuable fruits from the life I am now attempting; not only as it will contain very fingular circumflances, which may excite a general curiofity, but as it comes attended with fome other particular advantages.

§ 4. The reader is here to furvey a character of fuch eminent and various goodnefs, as might demand veneration, and infpire him with a define to imitate it too, had it appeared in the obfcureft rank; but it will furely command fome peculiar regard, when viewed in fo elevated and important a flation, efpecially as it shone, not in ecclesiastical, but military life, where the temptations are fo many, and the prevalency of the contrary character fo great, that it may feem no inconfiderable praife and felicity to be free from diffolute vice, and to retain what in most other profeffions might be effeemed only a mediocrity of virtue. It may furely, with the highest juftice, be expected, that the title and bravery of Colonel Gardiner will invite many of our officers and foldiers, to whom his name has been long honourable and dear, to perufe this account of him with fome peculiar attention : In confequence of which, it may be a means of increasing the number and brightening the character of those who are already adorning their office, their country, and their religion; and of reclaiming those who will fee rather what they ought to be, than what they are. On the whole, to the gentlemen of the fword, I would particularly offer thefe memoirs, as theirs by fo diffinguished a title; yet I am firmly perfuaded there are none whole office is fo facred, or whofe proficiency in the religigious life is fo advanced, but they may find fomething to demand their thankfulnefs, and

§ 5. Colonel James Gardiner, of whom we write, was the fon of Captain Patrick Gardiner, of the family of Torwood-head, by Mrs. Mary Hodge, of the family of Gladimuir. The captain, who was mafter of a handfome eftate, ferved many years in the army of King William and Queen Anne, and died abroad with the British forces in Germany, foon after the battle of Hochfledt, through the fatigues he underwent in the duties of that celebrated campaign. He had a company in the regiment of foot once commanded by Colonel Hodge, his valiant brother-in-law, who was flain at the head of that regiment, (my memorial from Scotland fays), at the battle of Steenkirk, which was fought in the year 1692. § 6. Mrs. Gardiner, our Colonel's mother, was a lady of a very valuable character : but the planed God to exercise the with very uncommon trials; for fhe not only loft her hufband and her bother in the fervice of their country, as before related, but alfo her eldeft fon, Mr. Robert Gardiner, on the day which completed the 16th year of his age, at the fiege of Namur in 1695. But there is great tree of no to believe, God bleffed thefe various and heavy afflictions, as the means of forming her to that eminent degree of piety, which will B iii render her memory honourable as long as it continues.

§ 7. Her fecond fon, the worthy perfon of whom I am now to give a more particular account, was born at Carriden in Linlithgowfhire, on the 10th of January, A. D. 1687-8, the memorable year of that glorious Revolution which the juftly effected among the happielt of all events; fo that, when he was flain in the defence of thofe liberties which God then, by fo gracious a providence, refeued from utter deffruction, i. e. on the 21ft of September 1745, he was aged fifty-feven years, eight months, and eleven days.

§ 8. The annual return of his birth-day was obferved by him, in the later and better years of his life, in a manner very different from what is commonly prachifed; for inflead of making it a day of feflivity, I am told, he rather diflinguifhed it as a facion of more than ordinary humilitation before God; both in commemoration of thofe mercies which he received in the firfl opening of life, and ander an affectionate fence, as well as of his long alienation from the Great Author and fupport of his being, and of the many imperfections which he lamented, in the beft of his days and fervices.

§ 9. I have not met with many things remarkable concerning the early years of his life, only that his mother took care to inftruch him with great tendernefs and affection, in the principles of true Chriftianity. He was allo trained up in human literature at the folool at Linlithgow, where he made a very confiderable progrefs in the languages. I remember to have heard him quote four paffages of the Latin claffics very pertinently; though his employment in life, and the various turns which his mind took under different impulfes in fucceeding years, prevented him from cultivating fuch fludies.

§ 10. The good effects of his mother's prudent and exemplary care were not 10 confpicuous as the willed and hoped, in the younger part of her fon's life; yet there is great reafon to believe, they were not entirely loft. As they were probably the occation of many convicitions, which in his younger years were overborne; fo I doubt not, that when religions imprefilons took that flrong hold of hileart, which they afterwards did, that flock of knowledge which had been fo early laid up in his mind, was found of confiderable fervice. And I have heard them make the obfervation, as am encouragement to parents and other pisous friends, to do their duty, and to hope for those good confequences of it which may not immediately appear.

§ 11. Could his mother, or a very religious aunt, (of whole good inftructions and exhortations I have often heard him fpeak with pleafure), have prevailed, he would not have thought of a military life; from which it is no wonder these ladies endeavoured to diffuade him, confidering the mournful experience they had of the dangers attending it, and the dear relatives, they had loft already by it. But it fuited his tafte ; and the ardour of his fpirit, animated by the perfuafions of a friend, who greatly urged it *, was not to be reftrained. Nor will the reader wonder, that, thus excited and fupported, it eafily overbore their tender remonstrances, when he knows, that this lively youth fought three duels before he attained to the flature of a man; in one of which, when he was but eight years old, he received, from a boy much older than himfelf, a wound in his right cheek, the fcar of which was -always very apparent. The falle fenfe of honour which inftigated him to it, might feem indeed fomething excufable, in these unripened.

• I fuppofe this to have been Brigadicr General Rue, who had from his childhood a peculiar affection for him.

years, and confidering the profefilion of his father; brother, and uncle; but I have often heard him mention this rafinefs with that regret which the reflection would naturally give to fo wife and good a man in the maturity of life. And I have been informed, that after his remarkable convertion, he declined accepting a challenge, with this calm and truly great reply, which in a man of his experienced bravery, was exceeding graceful: " I fear "finning, though you know I do not fear "finging."

§ 12. He ferved first as a Cadet, which must have been very early ; and then, at fourteen years old, he bore an Enfign's committion in a Scotch regiment in the Dutch fervice ; in which he continued till the year 1702, when (if my information be right) he received an Enfign's committion from Queen Anne, which he bore in the battle of Ramillies, being then in the nineteenth year of his age. In this ever-memorable action, he received a wound in his mouth by a mufket-ball, which hath often been reported to be the occasion of his conversion. That report was a mistaken one; but as fome very remarkable circumftances attended this affair, which I have had the pleafure of hearing more than once from his own mouth, I hope my reader will excufe me, if I give him fo uncommon a flory at large.

§ 13. Our young officer was of a party in the Forlorn Hope, and was commanded on what feemed almost a defperate fervice, to disposses the French of the church-yard at Ramillies, where a confiderable number of them were posted to remarkable advantage. They fucceeded much better than was expected ; and it may well be fuppofed, that Mr. Gardiner, who had before been in feveral encounters, and had the view of making his fortune to animate the natural intrepidity of his fpirit, was glad of fuch an opportunity of fignalizing himfelf, Accordingly he had planted his colours on an advanced ground; and while he was calling to his men, (probably in that horrid language which is fo peculiar a difgrace to our foldiery, and fo abfurdly common in fuch articles of extreme danger), he received a fhot into his mouth, which, without beating out any of his teeth, or touching the fore part of his tongue, went through his neck, and came out about an inch and an half on the left fide of the vertebræ. Not feeling at first the pain of the stroke, he wondered what was become of the ball; and in the wildness of his furprise, began to fufpect he had fwallowed it; but dropping foon after, he traced the paffage of it by his finger, when he could difcover it no other way, which I mention as one circumflance among many which occur to make it probable that the greater part of thofe who fall in battle by thefe inflruments of death, feel very little anguifh from the moft mortal wounds,

§ 14. This accident happened about five or fix in the evening, on the 23d day of May, in the year 1706; and the army purfuing its advantages against the French, without ever regarding the wounded, (which was, it feems, the Duke of Marlborough's conftant method). our young officer lay all night in the field, agitated, as may well be fuppofed, with a great variety of thoughts. He affured me, that when he reflected upon the circumftances of his wound, that a ball fhould, as he then conceived it, go through his head without killing him, he thought God had preferved him by miracle; and therefore affuredly concluded, that he fhould live, abandoned and defperate as his flate then feemed to be. Yet (which to me appeared very aftonifhing) he had little thoughts of humbling himfelf before God, and returning to him after the wanderings of a life folicentioufly begun. But expecting to recover, his mind was taken up with contrivances to fecure his gold, of which he had a good deal about him; and he had recourfe to a very odd expedient, which proved fuccefsful. Expecting to be ftripped, he first took out a handful of that clotted gore, of which he was frequently obliged to clear his mouth, or he would have been choaked; and putting it in his left hand, he took out his money (which I think was about 19 piftoles), and thutting his hand, and befmearing the back part of it with blood, he kept it in this polition till the blood dried in fuch a manner, that his hand could not eafily fall open, though any fudden furprife fhould happen, in which he might lofe the prefence of mind which that concealment otherwife would have required.

§ 15. In the morning, the French, who were mafters of the fpot, though their forces were defeated at fome diffance, came to plunder the flain; and feeing him to appearance almoft expiring, one of them was juft applying a fword to his breaft, to defroy the little remainder of life, when, in the critical moment upon which all the extraordinary events of fuch a life as his afterwards proved, were fufpended, a Cordeller, who attended the plunderers, interpoled, taking him by his drefs for a Frenchman ; and faid, " Do not kill that poor child." Our young foldier heard all that paffed, though he was not able to fpeak one word ; and, opening his eyes, made a fign for fomething to drink. They gave him a fup of fome fpiritous liquonr which happened to be at hand ; by which, he faid, he found a more fenfible" refreshment than he could remember from any thing he had tafted either before or fince. Then fignifying to the Friar to lean down his ear to his mouth, he employed the first efforts of his feeble breath in telling him, (what, alas ! was a contrived falfehood), that he was nephew to the governor of Huy, a neutral town in the neighbourhood; and that, if he could take any method of conveying him thither, he did not doubt but his uncle would liberally reward him. He had indeed a friend at Huy. (who, I think, was governor, and, if I miftake not, had been acquainted with the Captain his father), from whom he expected a kind reception ; but the relation was only pretended. On hearing this, they laid him on a fort of hand-barrow, and fent him by a file of mufqueteers towards the place ; but the men loft their way, and got into a wood towards the evening, in which they were obliged to continue all night. The poor patient's wound being flill undreffed, it is not to be wondered that by this time it raged violendy. The anguith of it engaged him earnefly to beg, that they would either kill him outright, or leave him there to die, without the torture of any farther motion; and indeed they were obliged to refl for a confiderable time, on account of their own wearinefs. Thus he fpent the fecond night in the open air, without any thing more than a common bandage to flaunch the blood. He hath often mentioned it as a moft aflonifhing providence, that he did not bleed to death; which, under God, he afcribed to the remarkable coldnefs of thefe two nights.

§ 16. Judging it quite unfafe to attempt carrying him to Huy, from whence they were now feveral miles diffant, his convoy took him early in the morning to a convent in the neighbourhood, where he was hofpitably received, and treated with great kindnefs and tendernefs. But the cure of his wound was committed to an ignorant barber-furgeon, who lived near the houfe; the beft fhift that could then be made, at a time when, it may eafly be fuppoled, perfons of ability in their profefilon had their hands full of employment. The tent which this artiff applied, was almoft like a peg driven into the wound; and gentlemen of skill and experience, when they came to hear of the manner in which he was treated, wondered how he could poffibly furvive fuch management. But, by the bleffing of God, on these applications, rough as they were, he recovered in a few months. The Lady Abbefs, who called him her fon, treated him with the affection and care of a mother; and he always declared, that every thing which he faw within these walls was conducted with the firsteft decency and decorum. He received a great many devout admonitions from the ladies there ; and they would fain have perfuaded him to acknowledge what they thought fo miraculous a deliverance, by embracing the Catholic Faith, as they were pleafed to call it. But they could not fucceed; for though no religion lay near his heart, yet he had too much the fpirit of a gentleman, lightly to change that form of religion which he wore (as it were) loofe about him, as well as too much good fenfe to fwallow those monstrous absurdities of poperv which immediately prefented themfelves to him, unacquainted as he was with the niceties of the controverfy.

§ 17. When his liberty was regained by an exchange of prifoners, and his health thoroughly eftablished, he was far from rendering unto the Lord according to that wonderful difplay of divine mercy which he had experienced. I know very little of the particulars of those wild, thoughtlefs, and wretched years, which lay between the 19th and the 30th of his life; except it be, that he frequently experienced the divine goodness in renewed inftances, particularly in preferving him in feveral hot military actions, in all which he never received fo much as a wound after this, forward as he was in tempting danger ; and yet, that all thefe years were fpent in an entire alienation from God, and an eager purfuit of animal pleafure, as his fupreme good. The feries of criminal amours in which he was almost inceffantly engaged during this time, must probably have afforded fome remarkable adventures and occurrences; but the memory of them is perifhed. Nor do I think it unworthy notice here, that amidft all the intimacy of this friendship, and the many years of cheerful as well as ferious converse which we spent together, I never remember to have heard him fpeak of any of these intrigues, otherwise than in the general with deep and folemn abhorrence. This I the rather mention, as it feemed a most genuine proof of his unfeigned repentance ; which, I think, there is great reafon to fufpect, when people feem to take a pleafure in relating and deferibing feenes of vicious indulgence, which yet they profefs to have difapproved and forfaken.

§ 18. Amidit all these pernicious wanderings from the paths of religion, virtue and happinefs, he approved himfelf fo well in his military character, that he was made a lieutenant in that year, viz. 17c6: and I am told, he was very quickly promoted to a cornet's commiffion in Lord Stair's regiment of Scotch Greys; and on the 31st of January 1714-15, was made captain-lieutenant in Colonel Ker's regiment of dragoons. He had the honour of being known to the Earl of Stair fome time before, and was made his aid de camp; and when, upon his Lordship's being appointed ambaffador from his late majefty to the court of France, he made fo fplendid an entrance into Paris, Captain Gardiner was his mafter of the horfe; and I have been told, that a great deal of the care of that admirably well adjufted ceremony fell upon him ; fo that he gained great credit by the manner in which he conducted it. Under the benign influences of his Lordfhip's favour (which to the laft day of his life he retained) a captain's commission was procured for him (dated July 22d, in the year 1715) in the regiment of dragoons commanded by Colonel Stanhope, (now Earl of Harrington); and, in the year 1717, he was advanced to the majority of that regiment; in which office he continued till it was reduced on November 10th 1718; when he was put out of commission. But then his Majefty King George I. was fo thoroughly apprifed of his faithful and important fervices, that he gave him his fign manual, entitling him to the first majority that should become vacant in any regiment of horfe or dragoons, which happened about five years after, to be in Croft's regiment of dragoons, in which he received a commission, dated 1st June 1724; and onthe 20th of July the fame year, he was made major of an older regiment, commanded by the Farl of Stair.

§ 19. As I am now fpeaking of fo many of his military preferments, I will difpatch the account of them, by obferving, that on the 24th January, 1739-30, he was advanced to the rank of Lieutenant. Colonel in the fameregiment, long under the command of Lord-Cadogan; with whole friendihip this brave and vigilant officer was alfo honoured for many years. And he continued in this rank and regiment, ill the 19th of April, 1743, when he received a Colonel's committion over a regiment of dragoons, lately commanded by Brigadier Bland; at the head of which he valiantly fell, in the defence of his fovereign and his country, about two years and a half after he received it.

§ 20. We will now return to that period of his life which paffed at Paris, the fcene of fuchremarkable and important events. He continued (if I remember right) feveral years under the roof of the brave and generous Earl of Stair ; to whom he endeavoured to approve himfelf by every inftance of diligent and faithful fervice : And his Lordship gave no inconfiderable proof of the dependence which he had upon him; when, in the beginning of the year 1715, he entrufted him with the important difpatches relating to a difcovery, which, by a feries of admirable policy, he had made of a defign which the French king was then forming for invading Great Britain, in favour of the Pretender; in which the French apprehended they were fo fure of fuccefs, that it feemed a point of friendship in one of the chief counfellors of that court, to diffuade a dependent of his from accepting fame employment under his Britannic Majefty, when propofed by his envoy there ; becaufe, it was faid, that in lefs than fix weeks there would be a revolution, in favour of what they called the family of the Stuarts. The Captain difpatched his journey with the utmoft fpeed; a variety of circumflances happily occurred to accelerate it; and they who remember how foon the regiments which that emergency required were raifed and armed, will, I doubt not, effect it a memorable inflance, both of the moft cordial zeal in the friends of the government, and of the gracious care of Divine Providence over the houfe of Hanover, and the British liberties, fo incomparably contected with is intereft.

§ 21. While Gaptain Gardiner was at London, in one of the journies he made upon this occafion, he, with that franknefs which was natural to him, and which in thofe days was not always under the moft prudent refirainty venured to predict, from what he knew of the bad flate of the French king's health, that he would not live fix weeks. This was nade known by fome fpies who were at St. James's and came to be reported at the court of Verfailles; for he received letters from fome friends at Paris, adviling him not to return thicher, unlefs he could reconcile himfelf to a lodg-ing in the Bafille. But he was foon free from that apprehension; for, if I mistake not, before half that time was accomplifhed, Lewis XIV. died *; and, it is generally thought, his death was haftened by a very accidental circumftance, which had fome reference to the Captain's prophecy : For the laft time he ever dined in public, which was a very little while after the report of it had been made there, he happened to difcover our British envoy among the fpectators. The penetration of this illustrious perfon was too great, and his attachment to the interest of his royal master too well known, not to render him very difagreeable to that crafty and tyrannical prince, whom God had fo long fuffered to be the difgrace of monarchy, and the fcourge of Europe. He at first appeared very languid, as indeed he was; but on caffing his eye upon the Earl of Stair, he affected to appear before him in a much better flate of health than he really was's and therefore, as if he had been awakened on a fudden from fome deep reverie, immediately put himfelf into an erect posture, called up a laboured vivacity into his countenance, and eat much more heartily than was by any means advifeable, repeating it two or three times to a nobleman (I think the duke of Bourbon), then in waiting, " Methinks I eat very well

"for a man who is to die fo foon *." But this inroad upon that regularity of living which he had for fome time oblerved, agreed fo ill with him, that he never recovered this male, but died in lefs than a fortnight. This gave occafion for fome humorous people to fay, that old Lewis, after all, was killed by a Briton. But if this flory be true, (which I think there can be no room to doubt, as the Colonel, from whom I have often heard it, though abfent, could fearce be mifnformed), though abfent, could fearce be mifnformed by his own vanity; in which view I thought it for remarkable, as not to be unworthy a place in thefe memoirs.

§ 22. The Captain quickly returned, and continued, with fmall interruptions, at Paris, at leaft till the year 1720, and how much longer I do not certainly know. The Earl's favour and generofity made him eafy in his affairs, though he was (as has been obferved above) part of the time out of commilion, by breaking the regiment to which he belonged, of which before he was major. This was, in all probability, the gayeft part of his life, and the moft criminal. Whatever wife and good he had the honour to refide, it is certain that the French court, during the regency of the Duke of Orleans, was one of the most diffolute under heaven. What, by a wretched abufe of language, have been called intrigues of love and gallantry, were fo entirely to the Major's then degenerate tafte, that, if not the whole bufinefs, at leaft the whole happinefs of his life confifted in them ; and he had now too much leifure for one who was fo prone to abufe it. His fine conftitution, than which perhaps there was hardly ever a better, gave him great opportunities of indulging himfelf in thefe excelles; and his good fpirits enabled him to purfue his pleafures of every kind, in fo alert and fprightly a manner, that multitudes envied him, and called him, by a dreadful kind of compliment, the happy rake.

§ 23. Yet fill the checks of confeience, and fome remaining principles of fo good an education, would break in upon his moth licentious hours; and I particularly remember, he told me, that when fome of his diffolute companions were once congratulating him on his diffinguithed felicity, a dog happening at that time to come into the room, he could not forbear groaning inwardly, and faying to himfelf, «'Oh that I were that dog !' Such was then his happinefs; and fuch perhaps is that of hundreds more, who bear themfelves higheft in the contempt of religion, and glory in that infamous fervitude which they affect to call liberty. But thefe remonfrances of reafon and conficience were in vain; and, in fhort, he carried things fo far in this wretched part of his life, that I am well affured, fome fober Englifth gentlemen, who made no great pretences to religion, how agreeable forver he might have been to them on other accounts, rather declined than fought his company, as fearing they might have been infnared and corrupted by it.

§ 24. Yet I cannot find, that in thefe moft abandoned days, he was fond of drinking. Indeed he never had any natural relift for that kind of intemperance, from which he ufed to think a manly pride might be fufficient to preferve perfons of fenfe and fpirit; as by it they give up every thing that diffinguifhes them from the meaneft of their fpecies, or indeed from animals the moft below it; fo that, if he ever fell into any exceffes of this kind, it was merely out of complaifance to his company, and that he might not appear fliff and fingular. His frank, obliging, and generous temper procured him many friends; and thefe principles which rendered him amiable to others, not being under the direction of true wifdom and piety, fometimes made him, in the ways of living he purfued, more uneafy to himfelf than he might perhaps have been if he could entirely have outgrown them; efpecially as he was never a fceptic in his principles, but still retained a fecret apprehension, that natural and revealed religion, though he did not much care to think of either, were founded in truth. And with this conviction. his notorious violations of the moft effential precepts of both, could not but occafion fome fecret mifgivings of heart. His continual neglect of the great Author of his being, of whole perfections he could not doubt, and to whom he knew himfelf to be under daily and perpetual obligations, gave him, in fome moments of involuntary reflection, inexpreffible remorfe; and this, at times, wrought upon him to fuch a degree, that he refolved he would attempt to pay him fome acnowledgments. Accordingly, for a few mornings he did it ; repeating in retirement fome paffages out of the Pfalms, and perhaps other fcriptures, which he ftill retained in his memory; and owning, in a few ftrong words, the many mercies and deliverances he had received, and the ill returns he had made for them.

§ 25. I find, among the other papers tranfmitted to me, the following verfes, which I have heard him repeat, as what had impedfed him a good deal in his unconverted flate : and as I fuppofe they did formething towards fetting him on this effort towards devotion, and might probably furnifh out a part of thefe orifons, I hope I need make no apology to my reader for inferting them, efpecially as I do not recollect that I have feen them any where elfe.

Attend, my foul! The early birds infpire My grov'ling thought with pure celefilal fire: They from their temp'rate fleep awake, and pay Their thankful anthems for the new-born day. See, how the tuneful lark is mounted high, And, poet-like, falutes the eaftern fky ? He warbles thro' the fragmant air his lays, And feems the beauties of the morn to praife. But man, more void of gratitude, awakes, And gives no thanks for the fweet reft he takes ; Looks on the glorious fun's new kindled flame, Without one thought of him from whom it came, The wretch unhallow'd does the day begin ; Shakes off his fleep, but flakes not of his fin.

§ 26. But these ftrains were too devout to continue long in a heart as yet quite unfancti-fied; for how readily foever he could repeat fuch acknowledgments of the divine power, prefence, and goodnefs, and own his own follies and faults, he was flopt flort by the remonftrances of his confcience, as to the flagrant ablurdity of confessing fins he did not defire to forfake, and of pretending to praife God for his mercies, when he did not endeavour to live to his fervice, and to behave in fuch a manner as gratitude, if fincere, would plainly dictate. A model of devotion, where fuch fentiments made no part, his good fenfe could not digeft ; and the use of fuch language before an heartfearching God, merely as an hypocritical form, while the fentiments of his foul were contrary to it, juftly appeared to him fuch daring profanenefs, that, irregular as the flate of his mind was, the thought of it ftruck him with horror. He therefore determined to make no more attempts of this fort ; and was perhaps one of the first that deliberatly laid afide prayer, from fome fenfe of God's omnifcience, and fome natural principle of honour and confcience.

§ 27. Thefe focret debates with himfelf, and ineffectual efforts, would fometimes return: but they were overborne again and again by the force of temptation; and it is no wonder, that in confequence of them his heart grew vet harder. Nor was it fostened or awakened by fome very memorable deliverances, which at this time he received. He was in extreme danger by a fall from his horfe, as he was riding poft, (I think, in the ftreets of Calais), when going down a hill, the horfe threw him over his head, and pitched over him ; fo that, when he rofe, the beaft lay beyond him, and almost dead. Yet, though he received not the leaft harm, it made no ferious impreffion on his mind. In his return from England in the packet boat, (if I remember right, but a few weeks after the former accident), a violent florm, that drove them up to Harwich, toffed them from thence for feveral hours in a dark night on the coaft of Holland, and brought them into fuch extremity, that the captain of the yeffel urged him to go to prayers immediately, if he ever intended to do it at all; for he concluded they would in a few minutes be at the bottom of the fea. In this circumftance he did pray, and that very fervently too; and it was very remarkable, that while he was crying to God for deliverance, the wind fell, and quickly after they arrived at Calais. But the major was fo little affected with what had befallen him. that when fome of his gay friends, on hearing the ftory, rallied him upon the efficacy of his prayers, he excufed himfelf from the feandal of being thought much in earneft, by faying, "that it was at midnight, an hour when his "good mother and aunt were alkep, or elfe "he fhould have left that part of the bufinefs it to them." A fyeech which I fhould not have mentioned, but as it flews in fo lively a view the wretched fituation of his mind at that time, though his great deliverance from the power of darknefs was then nearly approaching. He recounted thefe things to me with the greateft hungility, as thewing how utterly, unworthy he was of that miracle of divine grace by which he was quickly view throught.

§ 28. And now I am code to that aftonifiing part of his flory, the account of his convertion; which I cannot enter upon without affuring the reader, that I have fometimes been tempted to fupprefs many circumflances of it; not only as they may feem incredible to fomeand enthufficial to others, be: as I am very fenfible they are liable to great abutes; which was the reafon that he gave me for concealing the moft extraordinary from many perfons to whom he mentioned fome of the reft-And I believe it was this, together with the define of avoiding every thing that might look. Dii like offentation on this head, that prevented his leaving a written account of it; though I have often intreated him to do it; as I particularly remember I did in the very laß letter I ever wrote him; and pleaded the poffibility of his falling ansidil thofe dangers to which I knew his valour might in fuch circumfances naturally expofe him. I was not fo happy as to receive any anfwer to this letter, which reached him but a few days before his death; nor can I certainly fay, whether he had or had not complied with my requeft, as it is very poffible a papev of that kind, if it were written, might be loß amidß the ravages which ther ebels made whete the plundered Bankton.

§ 29. The flory, however, whs fo remarkable, that I had little reafon to apprehend I fhould ever forget it and yet, to guard againft all contingencies of that kind, I wrote it down that very evening, as I heard it from his own mouth: And I have now before me the memoirs of that converfation, dated Aug. r4. r739, which conclude with thefe words, (which I added, that if we fhould both have died that night, the world might not have loft this edifying and affecting hiftory, or have wanted any atteflation of it I was capable of giving), " N. B. I have written down this " account with all the exactness I am capable " of, and could fafely take an oath of it, " as to the truth of every circumftance, to " the beft of my remembrance, as the Colonel " related it to me a few hours ago." I do not know, that I had reviewed this paper fince I wrote it, till I fet myfelf thus publicly to record this extraordinary fact; but I find it punctually to agree with what I have often related from my memory, which I charged carefully with fo wonderful and important a fact. It is with all folemnity that I now deliver it down to posterity, as in the fight and prefence of God; and I choose deliberately to expose myself to those fevere centures, which the haughty, but empty fcorn of infidelity, or principles nearly approaching it, and effectually doing its pernicious work, may very probab'y dictate upon the occasion, rather than to fmother a relation, which may, in the judgment of my confcience, be like to conduce fo much to the glory of God, the honour of the gofpel, and the good of mankind. One thing more I will only premife, that I hope none who have heard the colonel himfelf speak fomething of this wonderful scene, will be furprifed if they find fome new circumftances here; because he affured me, at the time he first gave me the whole narration, (which was in the very room in which I now write), that he had never imparted it fo fully to any man living before. Yet, at the fame time, he gave me full liberty to communicate it to whomfoever I should in my confcience judge it might be useful to do it, whether before or after his death. Accordingly, I did, while he was alive, recount almost every circumstance I am now going to write, to feveral pious friends; referring them at the fame time to the Colonel himfelf, whenever they might have an opportunity of feeing or writing to him, for a farther confirmation of what I told them, if they judged it requifite. They glorified God in him; and I humbly hope, many of my readers will also do it. They will foon perceive the reafon of fo much caution in my introduction to this flory, for which therefore I fhall make no further apology *.

* It is no final fatisficion to me, fine I verse this, to have received a letter from the fice. Mc. Spens, misnifter of the golpel at Burntilland, dated Jan. ra, 17,667, in which he relates to me this whole (bary, as he had it from the Colonel's own mouth, about four years after he gave me the narration. There is not a fingle circumfance, in which either of our narrations didgree; and every one of the particulars in mine, which feer month alonihing, are attefted by this, and dometimes in fronger words; one only excepted, on which I fhall add a thort remark when I come to it. As this letter was written near Lady Frances Gardiner, at her defire, and attended with a pollforing from her own hand, this Fi, $ 30. This memorable event happened towards the middle of July 1719; but I cannot be exact as to the day. The Major had fpent the bath) in fome gay company, and had an unhappy affignation with a married woman, of what rank or quality I did not particularly inquire, whom he was to attend exactly at twelve. The company broke up about eleven; and not judging it convenient to anticipate the time appointed, he went into his chamber, to kill the tedious hour, perhaps with fome amufing book, or fome other way. But it very accidentally happened, that he took, up a religious book, which his good mother or aunt had, without his knowledge, flipped into his portmantau. It was called, if I remember the title exactly, The Christian Soldier, or Heaven taken by Storm ; and was written by Mr. Thon.as Watfon. Gueffing by the title of it, that he fhould find fome phrafes of his own profession spiritualized, in a manner vertion, he refolved to dip into it ; but he took no ferious notice of any thing he read in it : And yet, while this book was in his hand, an impreffion was made upon his mind, (perhaps God only knows how), which drew after it a train of the moft important and happy confequences.

§ 31. There is indeed a poffibility, that while he was fitting in this attitude, and reading in this carelefs and profane manner, he might fuddenly fall afleep, and only dream of what he apprehended he faw. But nothing can be more certain, than that, when he gave me this relation, he judged himfelf to have been as broad awake during the whole time, as he ever was in any part of his life; and he mentioned it to me feveral times afterwards as what undoubtedly paffed, not only in his imagination, but before his eyes  $\frac{1}{2}$ .

§ 32. He thought he faw an unufual blaze of light fall upon the book while he was reading, which he at first imagined might happen

• Mr. Spears, in the letter mentioned above, where he introduces the Colond telling his own flory, has thefe words : " All of a fudden, there was preferred, in a very lively man-" ner, to my view, or to my mind, a regredentiation of my glorinon, we remery, face, And this gendenman adds in the " glorinon, we remery and the second second second " cill, whether it was to his body eyes, or to their de his " mind," This makes me think, that what I had fail to imiton, rucher than attended with any certernal beliefd) had upon this as a video, whether is write hold to the imagiup mind, and the second with any certernal beliefd) had upon this as a video, whether is write hold to the eyes of a the mind, and not as a dram.

by fome accident in the candle. But lifting up his eyes, he apprehended, to his extreme amazement, that there was before him, as it were fufpended in the air, a visible reprefentation of the Lord Jefus Chrift upon the crofs, furrounded on all fides with a glory ; and was impreffed, as if a voice, or fomething equivalent to a voice, had come to him, to this effect. (for he was not confident as to the very words), "Oh finner ! did I fuffer this for thee, and are thefe thy returns ?". But whether this were an audible voice, or only a ftrong - imprefiion on his mind equally ftriking, he did not feem very confident; though, to the best of my remembrance, he rather judged it to be the former. Struck with fo amazing a phenomenon as this, there remained hardly any life in him; fo that he funk down in the arm-chair in which he fat, and continued, he knew not exactly how long, infenfible : (which was one circumftance that made me feveral times take the liberty to fuggeft, that he might poffibly be all this while afleep). But however that were, he quickly after opened his eyes, and faw nothing more than ufual.

§ 33. It may dafily be fuppoled, he was in no condition to make any obfervation upon the time in which he had remained in an in-fenfible flate ; nor did he, throughout all the remainder of the night, once recollect that criminal and deteftable affignation which had before engroffed all his thoughts. He role in a tumult of paffions not to be conceived, and walked to and fro in his chamber, till he was ready to drop down, in unutterable aftopifhment and agony of heart, appearing to himfelf the vileft monfter in the creation of God, who had all his lifetime been crucifying Chrift afresh by his fins, and now faw, as he affuredly believed, by a miraculous vision, the horror of what he had done. With this was connected fuch a view both of the majefty and goodnefs of God, as caufed him to lothe and abhor himfelf, and to repent as in duft and afhes. He immediately gave judgment against himfelf, that he was most justly worthy of eternal damnation. He was aftonifhed that he had not been immediately ftruck dead in the midft of his wickednefs; and (which I think deferves particular remark) though he affuredly believed that he fhould e'er long be in hell, and fettled it as a point with himfelf for feveral months, that the wifdom and juftice of God did almoft neceffarily require, that fuch an enormous finner fhould be made an example of everlafting vengeance, and a fpec-tacle as fuch both to angels and men; fo that he hardly durft prefume to pray for pardon; yet what he then fuffered was not fo much from the fear of hell, though he concluded it would foon be his portion,<sup>a</sup> as from a fear of that horrible ingratitude he had fikewn to the God of his life, and to that bleffed Redeemer who had been in fo affecting a manner fet forth as crucified before him.

§ 34. To this he refers in a letter, dated from Donglas, April r. 1725, communicated to me by his Lady *; but I know not to whom it was addreffed. His words are thefe: "One "thing relating to my converfion, and a re-"markable inflance of the goodnefs of God "to me, the chief of finners, I do not remem-

" N. B. Where I make any extracts, as from Colonel Gardiner's letters, they are either from originals, which I have me from perfons of undoubted credit, chiefly by the Right Honourable Lady Frances Gardiner, through the hands of the Rev. Mr. Webster, one of the ministers of Edinburgh, This I the rather mention, because fome letters have been brought to me as Colonel Gardiner's, concerning which I have not only been very dubious, but morally certain that they could not have been written by him. I have alfo heard of many who have been fond of affuring the world, that they were well acquainted with him, and were near him when he fell, whole reports have been most inconfistent with each other, as well as contrary to that teftimony relating to the circumftances of his death, which, on the whole, appeared to me beyond controverfy, the most natural and authentic; from whence therefore I shall take my account of that affecting fcene.

" ber that I ever told to any other perfon. It " was this; that after the aftonihing fight I " had of my bleffed Lord, the terrible condi-" tron in which I was, proceeded not fo much " from the terrors of the law, as from a fenfe " of having been fo ungrateful a monfler to " Him whom I thought I faw pierced for my " tranfgreffions." I the rather infert thefe words, as they evidently atteft the circumfance which may feem moft amazing in this affair, and contain fo exprefs a declaration of his own apprehenfion concerning it.

§ 35. In this view, it may naturally be fuppoled that he paffed the remainder of the night waking; and he could get but little reft in feveral that followed. His mind was continually taken up in reflecting on the divine purity and goodnefs; the grace which had been proposed to him in the gospel, and which he had rejected ; the fingular advantages he had , enjoyed and abufed ; and the many favours of providence which he had received, particularly in refcuing him from fomany imminent dangers of death, which he now faw muft have been attended with fuch dreadful and hopelefs deftruction. The privileges of his education, which he had fo much defpifed, now lay with an almost infupportable weight on his mind; and the folly of that career of finful pleafure, which he had fo many years been running with defperate eagerness and unworthy de_ light, now filled him with indignation against himfelf, and against the great deceiver, by whom (to use his own phrase) he had been " fo wretchedly and fcandaloufly befooled." This he used often to express in the ftrongeft terms, which I shall not repeat fo particularly, as I can recollect fome of them. But on the whole, it is certain, that by what paffed before he left his chamber the next day, the whole frame and difpolition of his foul was new-modelled and changed; fo that he became, and continued to the laft day of his exemplary and truly Chriftian life, the very reverse of what he had been before. A variety of particulars, which I am afterwards to mention, will illuftrate this in the most convincing manner. But I cannot proceed to them, without paufing a while to adore fo illustrious an instance of the power and freedom of divine grace, and intreating my reader ferioufly to reflect upon it, that his own heart may be fuitably affected; for furely, if the truth of the fact be admitted in the loweft views in which it can be placed, (that is, fuppofing the first impression to have paffed in a dream) it must be allowed to have been little, if any thing, lefs than miraculous. It cannot, in the courfe of nature, be imagined how fach a dream fhould arife in a mind full of the moft impure ideas and affections, and (as he himfelf often pleaded) more aliented from the thoughts of a crucified Saviour than from any other object that can be conceived; nor can we furely fappofe it fhould, without a mighty energy of the divine power, be effectual to produce, not only fome transfert flow of paffion, but fo cntire and fo permanent a change in character and conduct.

§ 36. On the whole, therefore, I muft beg leave to express my own fentiments of the matter, by repeating on this occafion what I wrote feveral years ago, in my eighth fermon on regeneration, in a paffage diclated chiefly by the circumfaatial knowledge whileh I had of this amazing flory, and, methinks, fufficiently vindicated by it, if it flood entirely alone; which yet, I mult take the liberty to fay, it does not: For I hope the world will be particularly informed, that there is at least a fecond, that very nearly approaches it, whenever the enablished church of England shall lofe one of its brighted living ornaments, and one of the moft uffeld members which that, or perhaps any other Christian communion, can boalt : In the mean time, may his exemplary life be long continued, and his zealous ministry abundantly profpered ! I beg my reader's pardon for this digreffion. The paffage I referred to above is remarkably, though not equally, applicable to both the cafes, as it flands in page 263 of the first edition, and page 160 of the fecond ; under that head where I am fhewing, that God fometimes accomplifhes the great work of which we fpeak, by fecret and immediate impreflions on the mind. After preceding illustrations, there are are the following words, on which the Colonel's conversion will throw the justeft light : "Yea, I have known those of diffin-" guifhed genius, polite manners, and great " experience in human affairs, who, after hav-" ing outgrown all the impreffions of a religi-" ous education, after having been hardened, " rather than fubdued, by the most fingular " mercies, even various, repeated, and afto-" nifhing deliverances, which have appeared " to themfelves no lefs than miraculous; after " having lived for years without God in the " world, notorioufly corrupt themfelves, and " labouring to the utmost to corrupt others, " have been flopt on a fudden in the full ca-E. iii

" reer of their fin, and have felt fuch rays of " the divine prefence, and of redeeming love, " darting in upon their minds, almost like " lightning from heaven, as have at once " rouzed, overpowered, and transformed them; " fo that they have come out of their fecret " chamber, with an irreconcileable enmity " to those vices to which, when they en-" tered them, they were the tamest and most " abandoned flaves; and have appeared from " that very hour the votaries, the patrons, the " champions of religion; and after a courfe " of the most resolute attachment to it, in " fpite of all the reafonings or the railleries, " the importunities or the reproaches of its " enemies, they have continued to this day " fome of its brighteft ornaments : A change " which I behold with equal wonder and de-" light, and which, if a nation fhould join in " deriding it, I would adore as the finger of " God."

§ 37. The mind of Major Gardiner continued from this remarkable time till towards the end of Odober, (that is, rather more than three months, but efpecially the two firft of them), in as extraordinary a fituation as one can well imagine. He knew nothing of the joys arifing from a fenfe of pardon; but, on the contrary, for the greater part of that time, and with very fhort intervals of hope toward the end of it, took it for granted, that he must, in all probability, quickly perifh. Neverthelefs, he had fuch a fenfe of the evil of fin, of the goodness of the Divine Being, and of the admirable tendency of the Chriftian revelation. that he refolved to fpend the remainder of his life, while God continued him out of hell, in as rational and as useful a manner as he could ; and to continue caffing himfelf at the feet of divine mercy, every day, and often in a day. if peradventure there might be hope of pardon, of which all that he could fay was, that he did not abfolutely defpair. He had at that time fuch a fenfe of the degeneracy of his own heart, that he hardly durft form any determinate refolution against fin, or pretend to engage himfelf by any vow in the prefence of God ; but was continually crying to him, that he would deliver him from the bondage of corruption. He perceived in himfelf a moft furprising alteration with regard to the difpofitions of his heart; fo that, though he felt little of the delights of religious duties, he extremely defired opportunities of being engaged in them; and those licentious pleafures, which had before been his heaven, were now abfolutely his averfion. And indeed, when I confider how habitual all those criminal indulgences were grown to him, and that he was now in the prime of life, and all this while in high health too, I cannot but be aftonished to reflect upon it, that he fhould be fo wonderfully fanctified in body, as well as foul and fpirit. as that, for all the future years of his life, he, from that hour, should find to constant a difinclination to, and abhorrence of, those criminal fenfualities to which he fancied he was before fo invincibly impelled by his very conftitution, that he was used ftrangely to think, and to fay, that Omnipotence itfelf could not reform him, without deftroying that body, and giving him another *.

* Mr. Spears expresses this wonderful circumstance in thefe remarkable words : " I was (faid the Colonel to me) " effectually cured of all inclination to that fin I was fo " frongly addicted to, that I thought nothing but fhooting " me through the head could have cured me of it ; and all de-" fire and inclination to it was removed, as entirely as if I had " been a fucking child: nor did the temptation return to this " day." Mr. Webfter's words on the fame fubject are thefe : " One thing I have heard the Colonel frequently fay, that " he was much addicted to impurity before his acquaintance " with religion ; but that, fo foon as be was enlightened " from above, he felt the power of the Holy Ghoft chang-" ing his nature fo wonderfully, that his fanctification in " this refpect feemed more remarkable than in any other." On which that worthy perfon makes this very reafonable reflection : " So thorough a change of fuch a polluted na-" ture, evidenced by the most unblemished walk and con-" verfation for a long courfe of years, demonstrates indeed " the power of the Higheft, and leaves no room to doubt of

§ 38. Nor was he only delivered from that bondage of corruption, which had been habitual to him for many years, but felt in his breaft fo contrary a difposition, that he was grieved to fee human nature, in those to whom he was almost entirely a stranger, prostituted to fuch low and contemptible purfuits. He therefore exerted his natural courage in a very new kind of combat; and became an open advocate for religion, in all its principles, fo far as he was acquainted with them, and all its precepts, relating to fobriety, righteoufnefs, and godlinefs. Yet he was very defirous and cautious, that he might not run into an extreme, and made it one of his first petitions to God, the very day after these amazing impreflions had been wrought in his mind, that he might not be fuffered to behave with fuch an affected ftrictnefs and precifenefs, as would lead others about him into miftaken notions

" its reality." Mr. Spaan fay this happened in three day time: Bus from what I can recoiled, all that the Colondcould mean by that experiion, if he ufed it, (as I concluded he did) was, that he began to make the obtarvation in the fpace of three days; whereas, during that time, his thoughts were fo taken up with the wonderful views prefinted to his mind, that he did not immediately attend to it. If he had within the firth three days any temparation to former fentualities, it is a circumshance he did not mention to me y and by whit I can recolled of the flrain of his difcourfs, he is a timuted, if he did not experies the contrary.

of religion, and expose it to reproach or fufpicion, as if it were an unlovely or uncomfortable thing. For this reafon, he endeavoured to appear as cheerful in conversation as he confcientioufly could; though, in fpite of all his precautions, fome traces of that deep inward fenfe which he had of his guilt and mifery, would at times appear. He made no fecret of it, however, that his views were entirely changed, though he concealed the particular circumitances attending that change. He told his most intimate companions freely, that he had reflected on the courfe of life in which he had fo long joined them, and found it to be folly and madnefs, unworthy a rational creature, and much more unworthy perfons calling themfelves Chriftians. And he fet up his ftandard, upon all occafions, against principles of infidelity and practices of vice, as determinately and as boldly as ever he difplayed or planted his colours, when he bore them with fo much honour in the field.

§ 39. I cannot forbear mentioning one flruggle of this kind, which he deferibed to me, with a large detail of circumflances, the firft day of our acquaintance. There was at that time in Paris a certain lady, (whofe name, then well known in the grand and the gay world, I must beg leave to conceal), who had imbibed the principles of Deifm, and valued herfelf much upon being an avowed advocate for them. The major, with his ufual franknefs, (though, I doubt not, with that politenefs of manners which was fo habitual to him, and which he retained throughout his whole life), anfwcred her like a man who perfectly faw through the fallacy of her arguments, and was grieved to the heart for her delution. On this fhe brifkly challenged him to debate the matter at large, and to fix upon a day for that purpofe, when he fhould dine with her, attended with any clergyman he might choofe, whether of the Protestant or Catholic communion. A fenfe of duty would not allow him to decline this challenge; and yet he had no fooner accepted it, but he was thrown into great perplexity and diffrefs, left being (as I remember he expressed it when he told me the ftory) only a Chriftian of fix weeks old, he fhould prejudife fo good a caufe, by his unfkilful manner of defending it. However, he fought his refuge in earnest and repeated prayers to God, that he who can ordain ftrength, and perfect praise out of the mouth of babes and fucklings, would gracioufly enable him, on this occafion, to vindicate his truths in a manner which might carry conviction along with it. He then endeavoured to marshal the arguments in his own mind as well as he could; and apprehending that he could not fpeak with fo much freedom before a number of perfons, efpecially before fuch whofe province he might in that cafe feem to invade, if he had not devolved the principal part of the discourse upon them, he eafily admitted the apology of a clergyman or two, to whom he mentioned the affair, and waited on the lady alone upon the day appointed. But his heart was to fet upon the bufinefs, that he came earlier than he was expected, and time enough to have two hours difcourfe before dinner ; nor did he at all decline having two young perfons nearly related to the lady prefent during accuftomed as he was to difcourfes of this nature, he had an unufual command both of thought and expression ; fo that he recollected and uttered every thing as he could have wifhed. The lady heard with attention ; and though he paufed, between every branch of the argument, the did not interrupt the courfe of it, till he told her he had finished his defign, and waited for her reply. She then produced fome of her objections, which he took up and canvalled in fuch a manner, that at length the burft out into tears, allowed the force of his arguments and replies, and appeared for fome time after fo deeply imprefied with the conversation, that it was observed by several of her friends : And there is reafon to believe, that the impreflion continued, at least fo far as to prevent her from ever appearing under the character of an unbeliever or a sceptic.

§ 40. The major opened it, with a view of fuch arguments for the Chriftian religion as he had digefield in his own mind, to prove that the apofiles were not miffaken themfelves, and that they could not have intended to impofe upon us in the accounts they give of the grand facts they atteft; with the truth or which facts that of the Chriftian religion is moft apparently connected. And it was a great encouragement to him to find, that, un-

§ 41. This is only one fpecimen among many, of the battles he was almost daily called out to fight in the caufe of religion and virtue; with relation to which I find him exprefing himfelf thus, in a letter to Mrs. Gardiner, his good mother, dated from Paris, the 25th January following, that is; 1719-20, in anfwer to one in which fhe had warmed him to expect fuch trials: "I have (fays he) al.

" ready met with them, and am obliged to " fight, and to difpute every inch of ground: " But all thanks and praife to the great Cap-" tain of my falvation; he fights for me; " and then it is no wonder that I come off " more than conqueror." By which laft exprefion I fuppofe he meant to infinuate, that he was firengthened and eftablished, rather than overborne by this opposition. Yet it was not immediately, that he gained fuch fortitude. He has often told me how much he felt in those days, of the emphasis of those well-chosen in which he ranks the trial of cruel mockings with fcourgings, and bonds, and imprifonments. The continual railleries with which he was received in almost all companies where he had been most familiar before, did often diftrefs him beyond meafure; fo that he has feveral times declared, he would much rather have marched up to a battery of the enemy's cannon, than have been obliged, fo continually as he was, to face fuch artillery as this. But, like a brave foldier in the first action wherein he is engaged, he continued refolute, though fuddering at the terror of the affault; and quickly overcame those impressions, which it is not perhaps in nature wholly to avo d. And therefore I find him, in the letter referred to above, which was written about half a year after his convertion, "quite alhamed to think "of the uneafneds which thefe things once "gave him." In a word, he went on, as every refolute Chriftian by divine grace may do, till he turned ridicule and oppolition into refpect and veneration.

§ 42. But this fenfible triumph over thefe difficulties was not till his Chriftian experience had been abundantly advanced, by the bleffing of God on the fermons he heard (particularly in the Swifs Chapel), and on the many hours which he fpent in devout retirement, pouring out his whole foul before God in prayer. He began, within about two months after his first memorable change, to perceive fome fecret dawnings of more cheerful hope, that vile as he faw himfelf to be, (and I believe no words can express how vile that was), he might neverthelefs obtain mercy through a Redeemer. And at length, (if I remember right, about the end of October 1719), he found all the burthen of his mind taken off at once, by the powerful impression of that memorable feripture upon his mind, Rom. iii. 25, 26. Whom God bath fet forth for a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness in the remission of fins,-that be might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jefus. He had used to imagine, that the juffice of God required the damnation of fo enormous a finner as he faw himfelf to be : But now he was might be not only vindicated, but glorified, in faving him by the blood of Jefus, even that blood which cleanfeth us from all fin. Then did he fee and feel the riches of redeeming love and grace, in fuch a manner, as not only engaged him, with the utmost pleasure and confidence to venture his foul upon it ; but even fwallowed up (as it were) his whole heart in the returns of love, which from that bleffed time became the genuine and delightful printiple of his obedience, and animated him with an enlarged heart, to turn the way of God's commandments. Thus, God was pleafed (as he himfelf ufed to fpeak) in an hour to turn his captivity. All the terrors of his former itate were changed into unutterable joy, which kept him almost continually waking for three nights together, and yet refreshed him as the nobleft of cordials. His exprefions, though naturally very firong, always feemed to be fwallowed up, when he would deferibe the feries of thought through which he now paffed, under the rapturous experience of that joy unfpeakable, and full of glory, which then feemed to overflow his very foul; as indeed there was nothing he feemed to fpeak of with greater relifh. And though the first ecftacies of it afterwards fubfided into a more calm and composed delight, yet were the impreflions fo deep and fo permanent, that he affured me, on the word of a Christian and a friend, wonderful as it might feem, that for about feven years after this, he enjoyed almost an heaven upon earth. His foul was fo continually filled with a fenfe of the love of God in Chrift, that it knew little interruption, but when neceffary converfe and the duties of his ftation called off his thoughts for a little time ; and when they did fo, as foon as he was alone, the torrent returned into its natural channel again ; fo that, from the minute of his awakening in the morning, his heart was rifing to God, and triumphing in him; and thefe thoughts attended him through all the fcenes of life, till he lay down on his bed again, and a fhort parenthefis of fleep (for it was but a very fhort one that he allowed himfelf) invigorated his animal powers for renewing them with greater intenfenefs and fenfibility.

§ 43. I shall have an opportunity of illuftrating this in the most convincing manner be-Fiii low, by extracts from feveral letters which he wrote to intimate friends during this happy period of times; letters which breather a fprint of fuch fublime and fervent piety, as I have feldom met with any where effec. In thefe eircumflances, it is no wonder that he was greatly delighted with Dr. Watts's imitation of the xa6th pfalm; fince it may be queflioned, whether there ever was a perfon to whom the following flanzas of it were more fuitable.

When God reveal'd his gracious name, And chang'd my mournful ftate, My rapture feem'd a pleafing dream; Thy grace appear'd fo great.

The world beheld the glorious change, And did thine hand confefs; My tongue broke out in unknown firains,

And fung furprifing grace.

" Great is the work," my neighbours cry'd, And own'd the pow'r divine :

" Great is the work," my heart reply'd ; " And be the glory thine."

The Lord can change the darkeft fkies, Can give us day for night; Make floods of facred forrow rife To rivers of delight.

Let those that fowin fadness, wait. Till the fair harvest come :

They fhall confess their fheaves are great, And shout the bleffings home.

§ 44. I have been fo happy as to get the fight of five original letters, which he wrote to his mother about this time, which do, in a very lively manner, illustrate the furprifing change made in the whole current of his thoughts, and temper of his mind. Many of them were written in the most hasty manner, just as the coufier who brought them was perhaps unexpectedly fetting out; and they relate chiefiv to affairs in which the public is not at all concerned : yet there is not one of them in which he has not inferted fome warm and genuine fentiment of religion. And indeed, it is very remarkable, that though he was pleafed to honour me with a great many letters, and I have feen feveral more which he wrote to others, fome of them on journies, where he could have but a few minutes at command, vet I cannot recollect, that ever I faw any one. in which there was not fome trace of piety. And the reverend Mr. Webfter, who was employed to review great numbers of them, that he might felect fuch extracts as he should think proper to communiacate to me, has made the fame obfervation *.

* His words are thefe: " I have read over a vaft number " of the colonel's letters, and have not found any of them

§ 45. The major, with great juffice, tells the good lady his mother, " that when fhe faw " him again, fhe would find the perfon indeed " the fame, but every thing elfe entirely " changed." And the might eafily have perceived it of herfelf, by the whole tenor of those letters, which every where breathe the unaffected fpirit of a true Chriftian. They are taken up fometimes with giving advice and directions concerning fome pious and charitable contributions ; (one of which I remember amounted to ten guineas, though, as he was then out of commission, and had not formerly been very frugal, it cannot be fuppofed he had much to (pare); fometimes in (peaking of the pleafure with which he attended fermons, and expected facramental opportunities; and at other times, in exhorting her, eftablished as fhe was in religion, to labour after a yet more exemplary character and conduct, or in recommending her to the divine prefence and bleffing, as well as himfelf to her prayers. What fatisfaction fuch letters as thefe muft give to a lady of her diffinguifhed piety, who had fo long wept over this dear and anniable fon as quite lolt to God, and on the verge of final defituaction, it is not for me to deforibe, or indeed to conceive. But haffily as thefe letters were written, only for private view, I will give a few fpecimens from them in his own words; which will five to illuftrate, as well as confirm, what I have hiated above.

§ 46. "I must take the liberty," fays he in a letter dated on the first day of the new year, or, according to the old ftyle, Dec. 21. 1719, " to intreat you, that you would receive no " company on the Lord's day. I know you " have a great many good acquaintance, with " whole difcourses one might be very well " cdified ; but as you cannot keep out and let " in whom you pleafe, the best way, in my " humble opinion, will be to fee none." In another, of Jan. 25. "I am happier than any " any one can imagine, except I could put " him exactly in the fame fituation with my-" felf ; which is what the world cannot give, " and no man ever attained it, unlefs it were " from above." In another, dated March 30. which was just before a facrament, " To-mor-" row, if it pleafe God, I fhall be happy,

" my foul being to be fed with the bread of " life, which came down from heaven. I shall " be mindful of you all there." In another. of Jan. 29. he thus expresses that indifference for worldly poffeffions which he fo remarkably carried through all the remainder of his life : " I know the rich are only flewards for the " poor, and must give an account of every " penny; therefore the lefs I have, the more " eafy will it be to render a faithful account " of it." And, to add no more from thefe letters at prefent, in conclusion of one of them, he has these comprehensive and folemn words: " Now that he who is the eafe of the afflict-" ed, the fupport of the weak, the wealth of " the poor, the teacher of the ignorant, the " anchor of the fearful, and the infinite re-" ward of all faithful fouls, may pour out " upon you all his richeft bleffings, shall al-" ways be the prayer of him who is entirely " your's, &cc."

§ 47. To this account of his correspondence with his excellent mother, I fhould be glad to add a large view of another, to which the introduced him, with that reverend and valuable perfon, under whole pathoral care the was placed, I mean the juftly celebrated Dr. Edmund Calamy, to whom the could not but early communicate the joyful news of her fon's conversion. I am not fo happy as to be poffeffed of the letters which paffed between them, which I have reafon to believe would make a curious and valuable collection : But I have had the pleafure of receiving, from my worthy and amiable friend, the Reverend Mr. Edmund Calamy, one of the letters which the Doctor his father wrote to the Major on this wonderful occasion. I perceive by the contents of it, that it was the first ; and indeed it is dated as early as the third of August 1710, which must be but a few days after his own account, dated August 4th, N. S. could reach England. There is fo much true religion and good fenfe in this paper, and the counfel it fuggefts may be fo feafonable to other perfons in circumftances which bear any refemblance to his, that I make no apology to my reader for inferting a large extract from it.

§ 48. " Dear Sir,—I conceive it will not " much furprife you to underfland that your " good mother communicated to me your let-" ter to her, dated August 4th, N. S. which " brought her the news you conceive would " be fo acceptable to her. I who have often " been a winefs to her concern for you on " a fpiritual account, can atteft with what " joy this news was received by her, and im-" parted to me as a fpecial friend, who fhe " knew would bear a part with her on fuch " an occasion. And indeed, if (as our Sa-" viour intimates, Luke xv. 7, 10. there is " in fuch cafes joy in beaven and among the " angels of God, it may well be fuppofed, " that of a pious mother, who has fpent fo " many prayers and tears upon you, and has " as it were travailed in birth with you again, " till Christ was formed in you, could not be " fmall. You may believe me if I add, that " I alfo, as a common friend of her's and " your's, and which is much more, of the Prince " of Light, whom you now declare you " heartily fall in with in opposition to that " of the dark kingdom, could not but be ten-" derly affected with an account of it under " your own hand. My joy on this account " was the greater, confidering the importance " of your capacity, interefts, and profpects; " which in fuch an age as this, may promife " most happy confequences, on your heartily " appearing on God's fide, and embarking in " the interest of our dear Redeemer. If I " have hitherto at all remembered you at the " throne of grace, at your good mother's de-

" fire, (which you are pleafed to take no-" tice of with fo much refpect) I can affure " I shall henceforth be led to do it, with " more concern and particularity, both by " duty and inclination. And if I were ca-" pable or giving you any little affiftance in " the noble defign you are engaging in, by " corresponding with you by letter, while " you are at fuch a diftance. I fhould do it " most cheerfully. And, perhaps, fuch a " motion may not be altogether unaccept-" able : For I am inclinable to believe, that " when fome, whom you are obliged to con-" verfe with, observe your behaviour fo dif-" ferent from what it formerly was, and ban-" ter you upon it as mad and fanciful, it may " be fome little relief to correspond with one " who will take a pleafure in heartening and " encouraging you. And when a great ma-" ny things frequently offer, in which con-" fcience may be concerned where duty may " not always be plain, nor fuitable perfons to 44 advife with at hand, it may be fome fatis-" faction to you to correspond with one, with " whom you may use a friendly freedom in 44 all fuch matters, and on whole fidelity you " may depend. You may therefore com-" mand me in any of these respects, and I

" fhall take a pleafure in ferving you .- One " piece of advice I shall venture to give you, " though your own good fenfe will make my " enlarging upon it lefs needful; I mean, " that you would, from your first fetting out, " carefully diftinguish between the effentials " of real religion, and those things which are " commonly reckoned by its profeffors to be-" long to it. The want of this diffinction " has had very unhappy confequences from " one age to another, and perhaps in none more " than the prefent. But your daily converfe " with your Bible, which you mention, may " herein give you great affiftance. I move " alfo, that fince infidelity fo much abounds, " you would, not only by clofe and ferious " confideration, endeavour to fettle yourfelf " well in the fundamental principles of reli-" gion, but alfo that, as opportunity offers, " you would converfe with those books which " treat most judiciously on the divine original " of Christianity, fuch as Grotius, Abadie, " Baxter, Bates, Du Pleffis, &c. which may " eftablish you against the cavils that occur in " almost all conversations, and furnish you " with arguments, which, when properly of-" fered, may be of use to make fome impref-46 fions on others. But being too much

"flatiened to enlarge at prefent, I can only "add, that if your hearty falling in with fe-"rious religion fhould prove any hindrance to your advancement in the world, (which "I pray God it may not, unlefs fuch advance-"ment would be a real fnare to you,) I hope "you will truft our Saviour's word, that it "fhall be no difadvantage to you in the final "iffue: He has given you his word for it, "Mat. xix. 29, upon which you may fafe-"I y depend; and I am fatisfied, none that ever "did fo, at laft repented of it. May you go "on and profper, and the God of all grace "and peace be with you!"

§ 49. I think it very evident from the contents of this letter, that the Major had not imparted to his mother the moft fingular circumflances attending his convertion : And, indeed, there was femething fo peculiar in them, that I do not wonder he was always cautious in fpeaking of them, and, efpecially, that he was at firft much on the referve. We may alfo naturally reflect, that there feems to have been fomething very providential in this letter, confidering the debate in which our illuftious convert was fo foon engaged; for it was written but about three weeks before his conference with the Lady above mentioned, in the defence of Chriftianity; or, at leaft, before the appointment of it. And as fome of the books recommended by Dr. Calamy, particularly Abadie and Du Pleffis, were undoubtedly within his reach (if our Englith advocates were not), this might, by the divine bleffing, contribute confiderably towards arming him for that combat, in which he came off with fuch happy fuecefs. And as in this inflance, fo in many others, they who will obferve the coincidence and concurrence of things, may be engaged to adore the wife conduct of Providence in events which, when taken fingly and by themfelves, have nothing very remarkable in them.

§ 50. I think it was about this time that this refolute and exemplary Chriftian entered upon that methodical manner of living, which he purfued through fo many fucceeding years of life, and I believe, generally, fo far as the broken flate of his health would allow it in his latter days, to the very end of it. He ufed conflantly to rife at four in the morning, and to fpend his time till fix, in the feeret exercifes of devotion, reading, meditation, and prayer; in which laft he contraded fuch a fervency of fpirit, as I believe few men living ever obtained. This certainly tended very much to ftrengthen that firm faith in God, and reverend animating fenfe of his prefence, for which he was fo eminently remarkable. and which carried him through the trials and fervices of life, with fuch fleadinefs, and with fuch activity; for he indeed endured, and acted as always feeing Him who is invifible. If at any time he was obliged to go out before fix in the morning, he role proportionably fooner; fo that when a journey or a march has required him to be on horfeback, by four, he would be at his devotions at fartheft by two. He likewife fecured time for retirement in an evening; and that he might have it the more at command, and be the more fit. to use it properly, as well as the better able to rife early the next morning, he generally went to bed about ten : And, during the time I was acquainted with him, he feldom eat any fupper, but a mouthful of bread with one glafs of wine. In confequence of this, as well as of his admirably good conflitution, and the long habit he had formed, he required lefs fleep than most perfons I have known: And I doubt not but his uncommon progrefs in. piety was in a great measure' owing to thefe refolute habits of felf-denial.

§ 51. A life any thing like this, could not, to be fure, be entered upon, in the midft. G iij of fuch company as he had been accuflomed to keep, without great oppolition: Efpecially as he did not entirely withdraw hindfelf from cheerful convertation; but, on the contrary, gave feveral hours every day to it, left religion fhould be reproached, as having made him morofe. He, however, early began a practice, which to the laft day of his life he retained, of reproving vice and prophanenefs; and was never afraid to debate the matter with any, under the conficienties of fuch fuperiority in the goodnefs of his caule.

§ 52. A remarkable inftance of this happened, if I miltake not, about the middle of the year 1720, though I cannot be very exact as to the date of the flory. It was, however, on his first return to make any confiderable abode in England after this remarkable change. He had heard, on the other fide of the water, that it was currently reported among his companions at home, that he was ftark mad : a report at which no reader who knows the wifdom of the world in these matters, will be much furprifed, any more than himfelf. He concluded therefore, that he fhould have many battles to fight, and was willing to difpatch the bufinels as faft as he could. And therefore, being to Ipend a few days at the country houfe of a perfon of diffinguished rank, with whom he had been very intimate, (whofe name I do not remember that he told me, nor did I think proper to inquire after it), he begged the favour of him, that he would contrive matters fo, that a day or two after he came down, feveral of their former gay companions might meet at his Lordship's table. that he might have an opportunity of making his apology to them, and acquainting them with the nature and reafons of his change. It was accordingly agreed to; and a pretty large company met on the day appointed, with previous notice that Major Gardiner would be there. A good deal of raillery passed at dinner, to which the Major made very little anfwer. But when the cloth was taken away, and the fervants retired, he begged their patience for a few minutes, and then plainly and ferioully told them, what notions he entertained of virtue and religion, and on what confiderations he had abfolutely determined, that by the grace of God he would make it the care and bufinefs of life, whatever he might lofe by it, and whatever cenfure and contempt he might incur. He well knew how improper it was in fuch company to relate the extraordinary manner in which he was awakened ; which they would probably have interpreted to a demonstration of lunacy, against all the gravity and folidity of his difcourfe: But he contented himfelf with fuch a rational defence of a righteous, fober, and godly life, as he knew none of them could with any fhadow of reafon conteft. He then challenged them to propofe any thing they could urge, to prove that a life of irreligion and debauchery was preferable to the fear, love, and worthip of the eternal God, and a conduct agreeable to the precepts of his gofpel. And he failed not to bear his teftimony from his own experience, (to one part of which many of them had been witneffes), that after having run the wideft round of fenfual pleafure, with all the advantages the beft conftitution and fpirits could give him, he had never tafted any thing that deferved to be called happinefs, till he had made religion his refuge and his delight. He teffified calmly and boldly the habitual ferenity and peace that he now felt in his breaft, (for the most elevated delights he did not think. fit to plead, left they fhould be effeemed enthufiafm), and the composure and pleafure with which he looked forward to objects, which the gayeft finner must acknowledge to be equally unavoidable and dreadful.

$ 53. I know not what might be attempted by fome of the company in answer to this; but I well remember he told me, the mafter of the table, a perfon of a very frank and candid difpolition, cut fhort the debate, and faid, " Come, let us all call another caufe: We " thought this man mad, and he is in good " earnest proving that we are fo." On the whole, this well judged circumftance faved him a great deal of trouble. When his former acquaintance obferved, that he was fiill converfable and innocently cheerful, and that he was immoveable in his refolutions, they defifted from farther importunity. And he has affured me, that inftead of lofing any one valuable friend by this change in his character, he found himfelf much more efteemed and regarded by many who could not perfuade themfelves to imitate his example.

§ 54. I have not any memoirs of Colonel Gardiner's life, or of any other remarkable ewent befalling him nit, from the time of his return to England, till his marriage in the year 1726, except the extracts which have been font me from fome letters, which he wrote to his religious friends during this interval, and which I cannot pafs by without a more particular notice. It may be recolleded, that in confequence of the reduction of that regiment of which he was major, he was out of commission from Nov. 10th 1718, till June 1st 1724: And after he returned from Paris, I find all his letters during this period dated from London, where he continued, in communion with the Chriftian fociety under the paftoral care of Doctor Calamy. As his good mother alfo belonged to the fame, it is eafy to imagine, it must be an unspeakable pleasure to her to have fuch frequent opportunities of converfing with fuch a fon, of obferving in his daily conduct and difconries the bleffed effects of that change which divine grace had made in his heart, and of fitting down with him monthly at that facred feaft, where Chriftians fo frequently enjoy the divineft entertainments which they expect on this fide heaven. I the rather mention this ordinance, becaufe, as this excellent lady had a very high efteem for it, fo fhe had an opportunity of attending, but the very Lord's day immediately preceding her death, which happened on Thursday Oct. 7. 1725, after her fon had been removed from her almost a year. He had maintained her handfomely out of that very moderate income on which he fubfifted fince his regiment had been difbanded ;

and when the exprefied her gratitude to bim for it, he affured her, (I think, in one of the laft letters the ever received from him), "that " he efteemed it a great honour, that God " put it into his power to make" what he called " avery fmall acknowledgement of all her " care for him, and efpecially of the many " prayers the had offered on his account, " which had already been remarkably anfwer-" ed, and the benefit of which he hoped ever " to enjor,"

§ 55. I apprehend that the Earl of Stairs's regiment, to the majority of which he was promoted on the 20th of July 1724, was then . quartered in Scotland; for all the letters in my hand, from that time to the 6th of February 1726, are dated from thence, and particularly from Douglas, Stranzaer, Hamilton, and Avr; but I have the pleafure to find, from comparing these with others of an earlier date from London and the neighbouring parts, that neither the detriment which he must fuffer by being fo long out of commiffion, nor the hurry of affairs while charged with it, could prevent or interrupt that intercourfe with heaven which was his daily feaft, and his daily ftrength.

§ 56. These were most eminently the happy years of his life; for he had learned to estimate his happinefs, not by the increase of honour, or the poffession of wealth, or by what was much dearer to his generous heart than either, the converse of the nearest and worthieft human friends, but by nearnefs to God, and by opportunities of humble converfe with him, in the lively exercise of contemplation, praise, and prayer. Now, there was no period of his life in which he was more eminently favoured with thefe ; nor do I find any of his letters fo overflowing with transports of holy joy, as those which were dated during this time. There are indeed in fome of them fuch very fublimc paffages, that I have been dubious whether I fhould communicate then, to the public or not, left I should adminifter matter of profane ridicule to fome, who look upon all the elevations of devotion as contemptible enthufiafm. And it has alfo given me fome apprehenfions, left it fhould difcourage fome pious Chriftians, who after having fpent feveral years in the fervice of God, and in humble obedience to the precepts of his gofpel, may not have attained to any fuch heights as thefe. But, on the whole, I cannot fatisfy myfelf to fupprefs them, not only as I number fome of them, confidered in a devotional view, among the most extraordinary pieces of the kind I have ever met with ; but as fome of the most excellent and judicious perfons I any where know, to whom I have read them, have affured me, that they felt their hearts in an unufual manner imprefied, quickened, and

§ 57. I will therefore draw back the veil, and fhew my much honoured friend in his moft fecret receffes, that the world may fee what those fprings were, from whence iffued that clear permanent, and living ftream of wifdom, piety, and virtue, which fo apparently ran through all that part of his life which was open to public obfervation. It is not to be imagined, that letters written in the intimacy of Christian friendship, fome of them with the most apparent marks of haste, and amidst a variety of important public cares, fhould be adorned with any fludied elegance of expreffion, about which the greatness of his foul would not allow him to be at any time very folicitous; for he generally (io far as I could obferve) wrote as fast as his pen could move, which, happily both for him and his many friends, was very freely. Yet here the grandeur of his fubject has fometimes clothed his ideas with a language more elevated, than is ordinarily to be expected in an epiftolary cor-H respondence. The proud fcorners, who may deride fentiments and enjoyments like those which this truly great man fo experimentally and pathetically defcribes, I pity from my heart; and grieve to think how unfit they must be for the hallelujahs of heaven, who pour contempt upon the nearcft approaches to them : Nor shall I think it any misfortune to fhare with fo excellent a perfon in their profane derifion. It will be infinitely more than an equivalent for all that fuch ignorance and petulancy can think and fay, if I may convince fome who are as yet ftrangers to religion, how real, and how noble its delights are ; if I may engage my pious readers, to glorify God for fo illustrious an inflance of his grace ; and finally, if I may quicken them, and above all, may roufe my own too indulgent fpirit to follow with lefs unequal fteps an example, to the fublimity of which I fear few of us fhall after all be able fully to attain. And that we may not be too much difcouraged under the deficiency, let it be recollected, that few have the advantage of a temper naturally fo warm : few have an equal command of retirement; and perhaps hardly any one, who thinks himfelf moft indebted to the riches and freedom of divine grace, can trace interpolitions of it in all refpects equally aftonishing.

§ 58. The first of these extraordinary letters which have fallen into my hand, is dated near three years after his conversion, and addreffed to a lady of quality. I believe it is the first the Major ever wrote fo immediately on the fubject of his religious confolations and converse with God in devout retirement. For I well remember, that he once told me, he tual pride fhould mingle itfelf with the relation of fuch kind of experiences, that he concealed them a long time : But observing with how much freedom the facred writers open all the most fecret receffes of their hearts, efpecially in the Pfalms, his confcience began to be burthened, under an apprehenfion; that, for the honour of God, and in order to engage he ought to difclofe them. On this he fet himfelf to reflect, who among all his numerous acquaintance feemed at once the most experienced Chriftian he knew, (to whom therefore fuch things as he had to communicate might appear folid and credible), and who the humbleft. He quickly thought of the Lady Marchionels of Douglas in this view; and the reader may well imagine, that it ftruck my mind very flrongly, to think that now, more than 24 years after it was written, Providence fhould bring to my hands, (as it has done within thefe few days), what 1 affuredly believe to be a genuine copy of that very letter, which I had not the leaft reafon to expect I fhould ever have feen, when I learned from his own mouth, amidît the freedom of an accidental convertation, the occasion and circumfiances of it.

§ 59. It is dated from London, July 21. 1722; and the very first lines of it relate to a remarkable circumftance, which, from others of his letters, I find has happened feveral times. I mean, that when he had received from any of his Chriftian friends a few lines which particularly affected his heart, he could not ftay till the flated return of his devotional hour. but immediately retired to pray for them, and to give vent to those religious emotions of mind which fuch a correspondence raifed. How invaluable was fuch a friend ! and how great reafon have those of us who once poffeffed a large fhare in his heart, and in those retired and facred moments, to blefs God for fo fingular a felicity; and to comfort ourfelves in a pleafing hope, that we may yet reap future bleffings, as the harveft of those petitions which he can no more repeat.

" py as to receive your's just as I arrived; and and fought him whom my foul loveth. I fought him, and found him; and would I obtained ; but I Juppofe it was fomething " like that which the difciples got, as they " were going to Emmaus, when they faid, " Did not our hearts burn within us, &c. or " not tell whether he was in the body or out that God may deliver and preferve him. " not fuch an example before me as the man " and be glad : Now I am well fatisfied, that that is, of prayer above mentioned, "but I " fat down to admire the goodne's of my Godi " that he would vouchfafe to influence, by his

"free Spirit, fo undeferving a wretch as I, and "to make me thus to mount up with eagles "wings. And here I was loft again, and got "into an ocean, where I could find neither "bound nor bottom; but was obliged to cry "out with the apoft?, 'O the breadth, the "length, the depth, the heighth, of the love "of Chrift, which paffeth knowledge? But "if I give way to this frain, I fhall never "have done. That the God of hope may fill "you may abound in hope through the power "of the Holy Ghoft, fhall always be the "prayer of him, who is, with the greateft "fincerity and refpect, your Ladyfhip's, &cc."

§ 61. Another paffage to the fame purpole, I find in a memorandum, which he feems to have written for his own ufe, dated, Monday March 12, which, I perceive from many concurrent errcumflances, muft have been in the year 1722-3. "This day," fays he, "having been " to vifit Mrs. G. at Hamflead, I came home " about two, and read a fermon on thefe " words, Pfal. exxx. 4. But there is forgiven?" " with thee, that thou maye be feared ; about " the latter end of which there is a deforption " of the miferable condition of thofe that are " flighters of pardoning grace. From a fenfe of " the great obligations I lay under to the Al-

" mighty God, who hath made me to differ from " fuch, from what I was, and from the reft of " my companions, I kneeled down to praife his " holy name ; and I know not that in my life-" time I ever lay lower in the duft, never hav-" ing had a fuller view of my own unworthi-" nefs. I never pleaded more ftrongly the me-" rits and interceffion of him who I know is " worthy : never vowed more fincerely to be " the Lord's, and to accept of Chrift as he is " offered in the gofpel, as my king, prieft, and " prophet ; never had fo ftrong a defire to de-" part, that I might fin no more ; but-'my " grace is fufficient'-curbed that defire. I " never pleaded with greater fervency for the " Comforter, which, our bleffed Lord hath " promifed, shall abide with us for ever. For all " which I defire to afcribe glory, &cc. to Him " that fitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb."

§ 62. There are feveral others of his papers which fpeak much the fame language; which, had he kept a diary, would (I doubt not) have filled many fheets. I believe, my devout readers would not foon be weary of reading extracts of this kind. But that I may not exceed in this part of my narrative, I thall mention only two more, each of them dated fome years after; that is, one from Douglas, April 1. 1725; and the other from Stranarer, 25th May following.

§ 63. The former of thefe relates to the frame of his fpirit on a journey ; on the mention of which I cannot but recollect how often I have heard him fay, that fome of the moft delightful days of his life were days in which he travelled alone, (that is, with only a fervant at a distance); when he could, efpecially in roads not much frequented, indulge himfelf in the pleafures of prayer and praife ; in the exercife of which laft he was greatly affifted by feveral pfalms and hymns, which he had treafured up in his memory, and which he ufed not only to repeat aloud, but fometimes to fing. In reference to this, I remember the following paffage, in a letter which he wrote to me many years after, when, on mentioning my ever dear and honoured friend the Rev. Dr. Watts, he fays, " How often, in finging " fome of his pfalms, hymns, or lyrics, on " horfeback, and elfewhere, has the evil fpirit " been made to flee :

"Whene'er my heart in tune is found,

" Like David's harp of folemn found !""

§ 64. Such was the first of April above mentioned, in the evening of which he writes thus to an intinate friend: "What would I "have given this day upon the road, for papers "pen, and ink, when the Spirit of the Mole "High refled upon me! O for the pen of a."

" ready writer, and the tongue of an angel, to " declare what God hath done this day " for my foul ! But in flort, it is in vain to " attempt it : All that I am able to fay, is only " this, that my foul has been for fome hours " joining with the bleffed fpirits above, in giv-" ing glory, and honour, and praife, unto Him " that fitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb, " for ever and ever. My praifes began from " a renewed view of him, whom I faw pierc-" ed for my tranfgreffions. I fummoned the " whole hierarchy of heaven to join with me; " and I am perfuaded they all echoed back " praife to the Moft High. Yea, one would " have thought, the very larks joined me " with emulation. Sure then I need not make " use of many words, to perfuade you that " are his faints, to join me in bleffing and " praifing his holy name." He concludes, " May the bleffing of the God of Jacob reft " upon you all ! Adieu. Written in great " ftafte, late, and weary."

§ 65. Scarce can I here refrain from breaking out into more copious reflections on the exquite pleafures of true refligion, when rifen to fuch eminent degrees, which can thus feath the foul in its folitude, and refresh it on journies; and bring down fo much of heaven to earth as this delightful letter expresses. But the remark is fo obvious, that I will not enlarge upon it, but proceed to the other letter above mentioned, which was written the next month, on the Thurfday after a facrament day.

§ 66. He mentions the pleafure with which he had attended a preparation fermon, the Saturday before; and then he adds, " I took a " walk upon the mountains that are over a-" gainft Ireland ; and I perfuade myfelf, that " were I capable of giving you a defcription " of what paffed there, you would agree, that " I had much better reafon to remember my "God from the hills of Port Patrick, than " David from the land of Jordan, and of the " Hermonites from the hill Mizar." I fuppofe he means in reference to the clearer difcoveries of the gofpel with which we are favoured. " In fhort," fays he immediately afterwards, in that fcripture phrafe which was become fo familiar to him, " I wreftled fome hours " with the Angel of the covenant, and made " fupplications to him with floods of tears and " cries,-until 1 had almost expired : But he " ftrengthened me fo, that like Jacob, I had " power with God, and prevailed. This," adds he, " is but a very faint defcription : You " will be more able to judge of it by what you " have felt yourfelf upon the like occafions. " After fuch preparatory work, I need not tell "you how bleffed the folemn ordinance of the "Lord's fupper proved to me; I hope it was fo "to many. You may believe, I flouid have "been exceeding glad, if my gracious Lord "had ordered it fo, that I might have made "you a vifit, as I propofed: But I am now "glad it was ordered otherwife, fince he hath "caufed fo much of his goodnefs to pafs be-"fore me. Were I to give you an account of "the many favours my God hath loaded "me with, fince I parted from you, I muft "have taken up many days in nothing "but writing. I hope you will join with me "in praifes for all the goodnefs he has fhewn 'to your nuworthy brother in the Lord."

§ 67. Such were the ardorrs and elevations of his foul: But while I record thefe memorials of them, I an very fenfible, there are many who will be inclined to cenfure them, as the flights of enthusing in for which readon I muft beg leave to add a remark or two on the occafion, which will be illuftrated by feveral other extracts, which I shall introduce into the fequel of thefe memoirs. The one is, that he never protends, in any of the paffages cited above, or elfewhere, to have received any immediate revelations from God, which should raife him above the ordinary methods of influction, or difcover any thing to him, whether of doctrines or facts. No man was farther from pretending to predict future events, except it were from the moral prognoftications of caufes naturally tending to produce them ; in tracing of which he had indeed an admirable fagacity, as I have feen in fome very remarkable inftances. Neither was he at all inclinable to govern himfelf by fecret impulfes upon his mind, leading him to things for which he could allign no reafon but the impulfe itfelf. Had he ventured, in a prefumption on fuch fecret agitations of mind, to teach, or to do any thing not warranted by the dict ates of found fenfe, and the word of God, I should readily have acknowledged him an enthuliaft, unlefs he could have produced fome other evidence than his own perfuation, to have supported the authority of them. But these ardent expressions, which some may call enthusiasm, feem only to evidence a heart deeply affected with a fenfe of the divine prefence and perfections, and of that love which paffeth knowledge; efpecially as manifefted in our redemption by the fon of God, which did indeed inflame his whole foul. And he thought he might reafonably afcribe the ftrong impreffions, to which men are generally fuch ftrangers, and of which he had long been entirely deftitute, to the agency or influence of the Spirit of God upon his heart; and that in proportion to the degree in which he felt them, he might properly fay, God was prefent with bim, and he converted with God *. Now, when we confider the feriptural phrafes of walking with God, of having communion with the Father and his Son Jefus Chrift's coming to them that open the door of their hearts to him, and fupping with them, of God's fhedding abroad his love in the heart by his Spirit, of his coming with Jefus Chrift's and making his abode with any man that loves him, of his melting him that worketh rightcoufnefs, of his making us glad by the light of his countenance, and a variety of other equi-

" The ingenious and pious Mr. Grove (who I think was as little fufpected of running into end unaffical extremes as moth divines I could name), has a nohle paffage to this purpofe in the fixth volume of his pofthumous works, p. 40, 41. which refpect to the memory of both these excellent perfons inclines me to infert here. " How often are good thoughts fuggeft-"ed," (viz. to the pure in heart), " heavenly affections " kindled and inflamed ! How often is the Chriftian prompt-" ed to holy actions, drawn to his duty, reftored, quickened, " perfuaded, in fuch a manner, that he would be unjust to the " Spirit of God to question his agency in the whole ! Yes, " Oh my foul, there is a Supreme Being, who governs the " world, and is prefent with it. who takes up his more fpe-" cial habitation in good men, and is nigh to all who call " upon him, to fanctify and affift them ! Haft thou not feit " him, oh my foul, like another foul, actuating thy faculties, " exalting thy faculties, exalting thy views, purifying thy " paffions, exciting thy graces, and begetting in thee an ab-" horrence of fin, and a love of holinefs ? And is not all this " an argument of his prefence, as truly as if thou didit fee " him " valent expressions ;- I believe, we shall fee reafon to judge much more favourably of fuch expressions as those now in question, than perfons who are themfelves ftrangers to elevated devotion, and perhaps converfe but little with their bible, are inclined to do; efpecially if they have, as many fuch perfons have, a temper that inclines them to cavil and find fault. And I must farther obferve, that amidst all those freedoms, with which this eminent Chriftian opens his devout heart to the moft intimate of his friends, he flill fpeaks with profound awe and reverence of his heavenly father, and his faviour, and maintains (after the example of the facred writers themfelves), a kind of dignity in his expressions, fuitable to fuch a fubject ; without any of that fond familiarity of language, and degrading meannefs of phrafe, by which it is, especially of late, grown fashionable among fome, (who neverthelefs I believe mean well), to express their love and their humility.

§ 63. On the whole, if habitual love to God, firm faith in the Lord Jefus Chrift, a fleady dependence on the divine promifes, a full perfusion of the wildom and goodneis of all the difpentations of providence, a high effectm for the blefings of the heavenly worklead and a functive contempt for the vanities of this, can properly be called enthufiafm ; then was Colonel Gazdiner indeed one of the greateft enthufiafts our age has produced ; and in proportion to the degree in which he was fo. I muft efteem him one of the wifeft and happieft of mankind ; nor do I fear to tell the world, that it is the defign of my writing thefe memoirs, and of every thing elfe that I undertake in. life, to fpread this glorious and bleffed enthufiafm; which I know to be the anticipation of beaven, as well as the most certain way to it. § 69. But left any fhould poffibly imagine, that allowing the experience's which have been described above, to have been ever fo folid and important, yet there may be fome appearance of boafting in fo free a communication of them : I must add to what I have hinted in reference to this above, that I find in many of the papers before me very genuine expressions of the deepest humility and felf-abafement ; which indeed fuch holy converfe with God in prayer and praife does, aboye all things in the world, tend to infuireand promote. Thus, in one of his letters, he fays, "I am but as a beaft before him." In. another, he calls himfelf " a miferable hell-deferving finner :" And in another, he cries out, " Oh, how good a mafter do I ferve ! but alas, " how ungateful am 1 ! What can be fo after.

" nifning as the love of Chrift to us, unlefs it " be the coldnefs of our finful hearts towards " fuch a Saviour ?" With many other claufes of the like nature, which I fhall not fet myfelf more particularly to trace through the variety of letters in which they occur.

§ 70. It is a farther inflance of this unfeigned lumility, that when (as his lady, with her nfual propriety of language, expresses it, in one of her letters to me concerning him), " thefe divine joys and confolations were not " his daily allowance," he, with equal freedom, in the confidence of Christian friendship, acknowledges and laments it. Thus, in the first letter I had the honour of receiving from him. dated from Leicefter, July 9. 1739, when he had been mentioning the bleffing with which it had pleafed God to attend my laft address to him, and the influence it had upon his mind, he adds, " Much do I fland in need of every " help, to awaken me out of that fpiritual " deadnefs, which feizes me fo often. Once " indeed it was quite otherwife with me, and " that for many years:

"Firm was my health, my day was bright,
"And I prefum'd 'twould ne'er be night :
"Fondly I faid within my heart,
"Pleafure and peace fhail ne'er depart.

"" But I forgot : Thine arm was ftrong,

" Which made my mountain fland fo long :

" Soon as thy face began to hide,

" My health was gone, my comforts died.

" And here," adds he," lies my fin, and my folly.

§ 71. I mention this, that the whole matter may be feen just as it was, and that other Christians may not be difcouraged, if they feel fome abatement of that fervour, and of those holy joys, which they may have experienced during fome of the first months or years of their spiritual life. But with relation to the Colonel, I have great reafon to believe, that. tual deadnefs were not unanimated ; and that quickly after the date of this letter, and efpether revivings, as the joyful anticipation of those better things in referve, which were then nearly approaching. And thus Mr. Spears, in the letter I mentioned above, tells us he related the matter to him; (for he fludies as much as poffible to retain the Colonel's own words): " However," fays he, " after that " happy period of fenfible communion, though " my joys and enlargements were not fo over ---" flowing and fenfible, yet I have had habitual.

"real communion with God from that day to "this," the latter end of the year 1743; "and "I know myfelf, and all that know me fee, "that through the grace of God, to which I "afcribe all, my convertaion has been be "coming the gofpel; and let me die, when-"ever it fhall pleafe God, or wherever it "fhall be, I am fure, I fhall go to the man-"fifons of eternal glory, Sc." And this is perfectly agreeable to the manner in which he ufed to fpeak to me on this head, which we have taiked over frequendly and largely.

§ 72. In this connection I hope my reader will forgive my inferting a little ftory which I received from a very worthy minister in Scotland, and which I fhall give in his own words : " In this period," meaning that which followed the first feven years after his converfion, "when his complaint of comparative " deadnefs and languor in religion began, he " had a dream, which, though he had no turn " at all for taking notice of dreams, yet made " a very firong imprefion upon his mind. " He imagined that he faw his bleffed Rc-" deemer on earth, and that he was following " him through a large field, following him " whom his foul loved, but much troubled, " becaufe he thought his bleffed Lord did not " fpeak to him; till he came up to a gate " of a burying place, when, turning about, he

" finiled upon him, in fuch a manner as filled " his foul with the most ravisling joy; and " on after reflection animated his faith in be-" lieving that whatever florms and darknefs " he might meet with in the way at the hour 46 of death, his glorious Redeemer would lift " up upon him the light of his life-giving " countenance." My correspondent adds a circumftance, for which he makes fome apology, as what may feem whimfical, and yet made fome impression on himfelf; " that " there was a remarkable refemblance in the " field in which this brave man met death. " and that he had reprefented to him in the " dream." I did not fully understand this at first; but a paffage in that letter from Mr. Spears, which I have mentioned more than once, has cleared it. " Now obferve, Sir, " this feems to be a literal defcription of the " place where this Chriftian hero ended " his forrows and conflicts, and from which " he entered triumphantly into the joy of his " Lord. For after he fell in battle, fighting " glorioufly for his king and the caufe of his " God, his wounded body, while life was yet " remaining, was carried from the field of " battle by the east fide of his own inclosure, " till he came to the church yard of Tranent, " and was brought to the minister's house;

** where he foon after breathed out his foul in-** to the hands of his Lord, and was conducted ** to his preferee, where there is fullne(s of joy; ** without any cloud or interruption, forever."

§ 72. I well know, that in dreams there are diverse vanities, and readily acknowledge, that nothing certain could be inferred from this: Yet it feems at leaft to fhew which way the imagination was working even in fleep; and I cannot think it unworthy of a wife and good man fometimes to reflect with complacency on any images, which pating through his mind even in that flate, may tend either to exprefs or to quicken his love to the great Saviour. Those eminently pious divines of the church of England, Bifhop Bull and Bifhop Kenn, do both intimate it as their opinion, that it may be a part of the fervice of miniftering angels. to fuggeft devout dreams * : And I know, that the worthy perfon of whom I fpeak was wellacquainted with that midnight hymn of the latter of those excellent writers, which has thefe lines : .:

* Bilong Bull has their remarkable words : " Although A is an no doter on dream, yiel, verily believe, that fine " disease are monitory altwest he power of fancy, and im- " prefiel upon a by fons: inperior instructs. E you of fuely both facted and profare, and in one you age and distrust a both facted and profare, and in one you age and distrust 4 too. Nor fhall 16 value the langther of fospits, and 4 he fors? of the Epigurean's as to be admand to profest that 4 in myleff Jave had forme conjuning experiments infind".

" Lord, left the tempter me furprife,

" Watch over thine own facrifice !

" All loofe, all idle thoughts caft out ;

" And make my very dreams devout !"

Nor would it be difficult to produce other paffages much to the fame purpole *, if it would not be deemed too great a digreffion from our fubject, and too laboured a vindication of a little incident, of very fimall importance, when compared with moft of thofe which make up this narrative.

§ 74. I meet not with any other remarkable event relating to Major Gardiner, which can properly be introduced here, till the year 1726, when, on the 11th of July, he was married to the Right Honourable the Lady Francis Erfkine, daughter to the late Earl of Buchan, by whom he had thitteen children, five only of which furvived their father, two fons and three daughters; whom I cannot mention

* If I miftake not, the fame Bifhop Kenn is the author of a midnight hymn, concluding with thefe words :

" May my æthereal Guardian kindly fpread

" His wings, and from the tempter fcreen my head ;

" Grant-of celeffial light fome piercing beanis,

" To blefs my fleep, and fanchify my dreams !"

As he certainly was of those exactly parallel lines :

" Oh may my Guardian, while I fleep,

" Clofe to my bed his vigils keep;

" His love angelical inftill,

" Stop all the avenues of ill !

" May he celeftial joys rehearfe,

" And thought to thought with me converfe ."

without the moft forvent prayers to God for them, that they may always behave worthy the honour of being defeended from fuch parents ; and that the God of their father, and of their mother, may make them perpetually the care of his providence, and yet more eminently happy in the conflant and abundant influences of his grace !

§ 75. As her Ladyfahp is fill living, (and for the fake of her dear offspring and numerous friends, may he long be (pared) I shall not here indulge myfelf in faying any thing of her; except it be, that the Colonel affured me, when he had been happy in this infinite relation to her more than fourteen years, that the greateft imperfection he knew in her charæfter was, "that she valued and loved him " much more than he deferved." And little did he think, in the fimplicity of heart with which he fooke this, how high an encomium he was making upon her, and how lafting an honour fuch a telimony muß leave upon her name, long as the memory of it shall continue;

§ 76. As I do not intend in thefe memoirs a laboured effay on the character of Colonel Gardiner, digelled under the various virtues and graces which Chriftianity requires, (which would, I think, be a little too formal for a work of this kind, and would give it fuch an air of panegyric, as would neither fuit my defign, nor be at all likely to render it more ufeful); I shall now mention what I have either obferved in him, or heard concerning him, with regard to those domeflie relations, which commenced about this time, or quickly after. And here my reader will eafily conclude, that the refolution of Jofhua was from the first adopted and declared. " As for me and my house, we will ferve the " Lord." It will naturally be fuppoied, that as foon as he had a houfe, he crected an altar in it; that the word of God was read there, and prayers and praifes were conftantly offered. Thefe were not to be omitted, on account of any gueft; for he effected it a patt of due to take it for granted, they would look upon it as a very bad compliment, to imagine they would have been obliged, by neglecting the duties of religion on their account. As his family increated, he had a minister statedly refident in his house, who both discharged the office of a tutor to his children, and of a chanlain, and who was always treated with a becoming kindnefs and refpect. But in his abfence, the Colonel himfelf led the devotions of of the family; and they were happy who had an opportunity of knowing with how much folemnity, fervour and propriety he did it.

§ 77. He was contant in attendance upon public worthip, in which an exemplary care was taken, that the children and fervants might accompany the heads of the family. And how he would have refented the non-attendance of any member of it, may eafly be conjectured, from a free, but lively pallage in a letter to one of his intimate friends, on an occafion which it is not material to mention: Oh, Sir, " had a child of yours under my roof, but " once neglected the public worthip of God, " when he was able to attend it, I hould have " been ready to conclude he had been diftrad-" ed, and hould have thonght of fhaving his " head, and confining him in a dark room."

§ 78. He always treated his lady with a manly tendernefs, giving her the moit natural evidences of a cordial habitual effectm, and exprefing a most affectionate fympathy with her, under the infirmities of a very delicate conflitution, much broken, at least towards the latter years of their marriage, in confequence of fo frequent pregnancy. He had at all times a most faithful care of all her interefts, and elyeally those relating to the flate of religion in her mind. His convertation and his letters

Christianity fuggests ; to promote our fubmiffion to the will of God, to teach us to centre our happinels in the great Author of our being, and to live by faith in the invilible world. Thefe, no doubt, were frequently the fubjects of mutual difcourse ; and many letters; which her Ladyship has had the goodness to communicate to me, are most convincing evidences of the degree in which this noble and most friendly care filled his mind, in the days of their separation ; days, which fo entire a mutual affection must have rendered exceeding painful, had they not been fapported by fuch exalted fentiments of piety, and fweetened by daily communion with an ever prefent and ever gracious God.

§ 79. The necefity of being fo many months together dillant from his family hindered him from many of these condecending labours in cultivating the minds of his children in early life, which to a foul fo benevolent, fo wife, and to zealous, would undoubtedly have afforded a very exquifte pleafure. The care of his worthy confort, who well knew that it is one of the brighteft parts of a mother's character, and one of the modi important views in which the fex can be confidered, made him the eafler under fuch's circumflance: But when he was with them, he failed not to inftruct and admonifh them ; and the conftant deep fenfe with which he fpoke of divine things, and the real unaffected indifference which he always fhewed for what this vain world is most ready to admire, were excellent leffons of daily wifdom, which I hope they will recollect with advantage in every future scene of life. And I have feen fuch hints in his letters relating to them, as plainly fhew with how great a weight they lay on his mind, and how highly he defired above all things, that they might be the faithful defciples of Chrift; and acquainted betimes with the unequalled pleafures and bleffings of religion. He thought an excefs of delicacy and of indulgence one of the moft dangerous faults in education, by which he every where faw great numbers of young people undone : Yet he was folicitous to guard against a feverity, which might terrify or difcourage ; and though he endeavoured to take all prudent precautions to prevent the commiflion of faults, yet, when they had been committed, and there feemed to be a fenfe of them, he was always ready to make the moft candid allowances for the thoughtfulnefs of unripened years, and tenderly to cherifh every purpole of a more proper conduct for the time to come.

§ 80. It was eafy to perceive, that the openings of genius in the young branches of his family gave him great delight, and that he had a fecret ambition to fee them excel in what they undertook. Yet he was greatly cautious over his heart, left it fhould be too fondly attached to them; and as he was one of the most eminent proficients I ever knew in the bleffed fcience of refignation to the divine will, fo there was no effect of that refignation which appeared to me more admirable than what related to the life of his children. An experience, which no length of time will ever efface out of my memory, has fo fenfibly taught me, how difficult it is fully to fupport the Chriftian character here, that I hope my reader will pardon me, (I am fure at least the heart of wounded parents will), if I dwell a little longer upon fo interefting a fubject.

§ 81. When he was, in Hereford-fhire, in the month of July, in the year 1734, it pleated God to vifit his little family with the fmall pox. Five days before the date of the letter I am juft going to mention, he had received the agreeable news, that there was a profpect of the recovery of his fon, then under that awful vifitation; and he had been exprefiling, bis thankfulnefs for it, in a letter which hus had fent away but a few hours before he was informed of his death ; the furprife of which, in this connection, mult naturally be very great. But behold (favs the reverend and worthy perfon from whom I received the copy) his truly filial fubmiffion to the will of his heavenly Father, in the following lines, addreffed to the dear partner of his affliction : " Your refignation to the will of God under " this difpensation gives me more, joy, than " the death of the child has given me forrow. "He, to be fure, is happy; and we shall go " to him, though he shall not return to us. " Oh that we had our latter end always in " view !--- We fhall foon follow ; and oh what " reafon have we to long for that glorious " day, when we fhall get quit of this body of " fin and death, under which we now groan, " and which renders this life fo wretched ! I " defire to blefs God, that ---- [another of " his children ] is in fo good a way : But I " have refigned her. We must not choose for " ourfelves ; and it is well we muft not ; for " we should often make a very bad choice. Aud " therefore it is our wildom, as well as our " duty, to leave all with a gracious God, who " hath promifed, that all things fhall work " together for good to those that love him : " And he is faithful that hath promifed, who " will infallibly perform it, if our unbelief " does not fland in the way."

§ 82. The greatest trial of this kind that he ever bore, was in the removal of his fecond. fon, who was one of the most amiable and promising children that has been known. The dear little creature was the darling of all that knew him; and promifed very fair, fo far as a child could be known by its doings, to have been a great ornament to the family, and bleffing to the public. The fuddennefs of the ftroke muft, no doubt, render it the more painful; for this beloved child was inatched away by an illnefs which feized him but about fifteen hours before it carried him off. He died in the month of October 1733, at near fix years old. Their friends were ready to fear, that his affectionate parents would be almost overwhelmed, with fuch a loss : But the happy father had fo firm a perfusion, that God had received the dear little one to the felicities of the celefial world ; and at the fame time, had fo ftrong a fenfe of the divine goodnefs, in taking one of his children, and that too one who lay fo near his heart, fo early to kimfelf, that the forrows of nature were quite fwallowed up in the fublime joys which thefe confiderations administered. When he reflected what human life is; how many its fnares and temptations are ; and how frequently children, who once promifed very well, are infenfibly corrupted, and at length undone ; with Solomon, he bleffed the dead already dead more than the living who were yet alive, and felt an unfpeakable pleafure in looking after the lovely infant, as fafely and delightfully lodged in the houfe of its heavenly Father. Yea, he affured me, that his heart was at this time fo entirely taken up with thefe views, that he was afraid, they who did not thoroughly know him might fufpect that he was deficient in the natural affections of a parent; while thus borne above the anguith of them, by the views which faith administered to him, and which divine grace fupported in his foul.

§ 83. So much did he, on one of the moft trying occafions of life, manifelt of the temper of a glorided faint; and to fuch happy purpofes did he retain thofe leffons of fubmillion to God, and acquiefeence in him, which I remember he once inculated in a letter he wrote to a lady of quality, under the apprechaficanof a breach in her family, with which providence feemed to threaten her; which I am willing to infert here, though a little out of what might feem its moft proper place, rather than entirely omit it. It is dated from London, June 16. 1722, when, fpeaking of the dangerous illnefs of a dear relative, he has thefe words : " When my mind runs hither," that is, to God, as its refuge and ftrong defence, (as the connection plainly determines it), " I think I can bear any thing, the lofs " of all, the lofs of health or relations, on ". whom I depend, and whom I love, all that " is dear to me, without repining or mur-" muring. When I think, that God orders, dif-" pofes, and manages all things according to the " council of his own will; when I think of the " extent of his providence, that it reaches to the " minuteft things; then, though a ufeful friend " or dear relative be fnatched away by death, " I recal myfelf, and check my thoughts with " thefe confiderations : Is he not God, from " everlafting and to everlafting? And has he " not promifed to be a God to me? A God " in all his attributes ; a God in all his per-" fons : a God in all his creatures, and provi-"dences ? And shall I dare to fay, What " fhall I do ? Was not he the infinite caufe of " all I met with in the creatures ? and were " not they the finite effects of his infinite love " and kindnefs ? I have daily experienced, that " the inftrument was and is what God makes " it to be; and I know, that this God hath " the hearts of all men in his hands, and the " earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof. " If this earth be good for me, I shall have it; " for my Father hath it all in poffettion. If " favour in the eyes of men be good for " me, I shall have it; for the fpring of every " motion in the heart of man is in God's " hand. My dear - feems now to be dying; " but God is all-wife; and every thing is " done by him for the beft. Shall I hold back " any thing that is his own, when he requires " it ? No ; God forbid ! When I confider the " excellency of his glorious attributes, I am " fatisfied with all his dealings." I perceive, by the introduction, and by what follows, that moft, if not all of this, is a quotation from fomething written by a lady; but whether from fome manufcript or printed book, whether exactly transcribed, or quoted from memory, I cannot determine : And therefore I thought proper to infert it, as the Major (for that was the office he bore then), by thus interweaving it with his letter, makes it his own; and as it feems to exprefs, in a very lively manner, the principles which bore him on to a conduct fo truly great and heroic, in circumftances that have overwhelmed many an heart, that could have faced danger and death with the greateft intrepidity.

§ 84, I return now to confider his character in the domeflic relation of a mafter, on which I shall not enlarge. It is, however, proper to remark, that as his habitual meeknefs and command of his paffions prevented indecent fallies of ungoverned anger towards those in the lowest state of subjection to him, (by which fome in high life do ftrangely debaie themfelves, and lofe much of their authority), fo the natural greatness of his mind made him folicitous to render their inferior flations as eafy as he could ; and fo much the rather, becaufe he confidered all the children of Adam as ftanding upon a level before their great Creator, and had alfo a deeper fenfe of the dignity and worth of every immortal foul. how meanly foever it might chance to be lodged, than most perfons I have known. This engaged him to give his fervants frequent religious exhortations and instructions, as I have been affured by feveral who were fo happy as to live with him under that character. One of the first letters after he entered on this Chriftian courfe expresses the fame disposition ; in which, with great tendernefs, he recommends a fervant, who was in a bad flate of health, to his mother's care, as he was well acquainted with her condefcending temper; mentioning, at the fame time, the endeavours he had ufed to promote his preparations for a better world, under an apprehefion that he would not continue long in this. And we shall have an affeching inflance of the prevalency of the fame difpolition in the clofing feene of his life, and indeed in the laft words he ever fpoke, which exprefied his generous folicitude for the fafety of a faithful fervant who was then near him.

§ 85. As it was a few years after his marriage that he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, in which he continued till he had a regiment of his own, I shall for the future fpeak of him by that title ; and may not perhaps find any more proper place in which to mention what it is proper for me to fay of his behaviour and conduct as an officer. I shall not here enlarge on his bravery in the field, though that was very remarkable, as I have heard from others : I fay from others, for I never heard any thing of that kind from himfelf; nor knew, till after his death, that he was prefent at almost every batcle that was fought in Flanders, while the illustrious Duke of Marlborough commanded the allied army there. I have also been affured from feveral very oredible perfons, fome of whom were eye-witnefies, that at the fkirmifh with the rebels at Prefton in Lancashire, (thirty years before that engagement at the other Prefton, which deprived us of this gallant guardian of his country), he fignalized himfelf very particularly; for he headed a little body of men, I think about twelve, and let fire to the barricado of the rebels, in the face of their whole army, while they were pouring in their flot. by which eight of the twelve that attended him fell. This was the laft action of the kind in which he was engaged, before the long peace which enfued : And who can express how happy it was for him, and indeed for his country, of which he was ever fo generous, and in his latter years fo important a friend, that he did not fall then ; when the profanenefs which mingled itfelf with his martial rage, feemed to rend the heavens, and fhocked fome other military gentlemen, who were not themfelves remarkable for their caution in this refpect.

§ 86. But I infil not on things of this nature, which the true greatneds of his foul would hardly ever permit him to mention, unlefs when it tended to illuftrate the divine care over him in these extremities of danger, and the grace of God, in calling him from for abandoned a flate. It is well known, that the characler of an officer is not only to be apgroved in the day of combat. Colonel Garproved in the day of combat. Colonel Gardincr was truly fenfble, that every day bronght its duties along with it; and he was conflantly careful, that no pretence of amufement, friendfhip, or even devotion itfelf, might prevent their being difcharged in their feafon.

. § 87. I doubt not, but the noble perfous in whofe regiment he was Lieutenant-Colonel, will always be ready to bear an honourable and grateful teftimony to his exemplary diligence and fidelity in all that related to the care of the troops over which he was fet, whether with regard to the men or the horfes. He knew, that it is incumbent on those who have the honour of prefiding over others, whether in civil, ecclefiaftical, or military offices, not to content themfelves with doing only fo much as may preferve them from the reproach of grofs and vifible neglect ; but ferioufly to confider, how much they can poffibly do, without going out of their proper fphere, to ferve the public, by the due infpection of those committed to their care. The duties of the closet and of the fanctuary were fo adjusted, as not to interfere with those of the parade, or any other place where the welfare of the regiment called him. On the other hand, he was folicitous not to fuffer thefe things to interfere with religion; a due attendance to which he apprehended to be the fureft method of attaining all defirable fuccefs in every other intereft and concern in life. He therefore abhorred every thing that fhould look like a contrivance to keep his foldiers employed about their horfes and their arms at the feafons of public worthip; (an indecency which I wifh there were no room to mention :) Far from that, he used to have them drawn up just before it began; and from the parade they went off to the houfe of God. He underflood the rights of confcience too well to impofe his own particular profession in religion on others. or to use those who differed from him in the choice of its modes the lefs kindly or refpectfully on that account. But as most of his own company, and many of the reft, chole (when in England) to attend him to the diffenting chapel, he used to march them thither in due time, fo as to be there before the worship began. And I must do them justice to fay, that, fo far as I could ever difcern, when I have feen them in large numbers before me, they have behaved with as much reverence, gravity, and decorum during the time of divine fervice as any of their fellow-worthippers.

§ 88. That his remarkable care to maintain good discipline among them (of which we fhall afterwards fpeak), might be more effectual, he made himfelf on all proper occafions acceffible to them, and expressed a great concern for their interefts, which being fo genuine and fincere, naturally difeovered itfelf in a variety of inftances. I remember I had once occafion to vifit one of his dragoons in his laft illnefs at Harborough, and I found the man upon the borders of eternity ; a circumstance, which, as he apprehended it himfelf, muft add fome peculiar weight and credibility to his difcourfe. And he then told me, in his Colonel's abfence, that he queffioned not but he fhould have everlafting reafon to blefs God on Colonel Gardiner's account; for he had been a father to him in all his interefts, both temporal and fpiritual. He added, that he had vifited him almost every day during his illnefs, with religious advice and inftruction, as well as taken care that he fhould want nothing that might conduce to the recovery of his health. And he did not fpeak of this as the refult of any particular attachment to him, but as the manner in which he was accuftomed to treat those under his command. It is no wonder that this engaged their affection to a very great degree. And I doubt not, that if he had fought the fatal battle of Preftonpans at the head of that gallant regiment, of which he had the care for fo many years, and which is allowed by moft unexceptionable judges to be one of the fineft in the Britifh fervice, and confequently in the world, he had been fupported in a very different manner, and had found a much greater number who would have rejoited in an opportunity of making their own breafts a barrier in the defence of his.

§ 89. It could not but greatly endear him. to his foldiers, that fo far as preferment lay in. his power, or were under his influence, they were distributed according to merit : which he knew to be as much the dictate of prudence as of equity. I find by one of his letters before me, dated but a few months after his. happy change, that he was folicited to improve his intereft with the Earl of Stair, in favour of one whom he judged a very worthy perfon ; and that it had been fuggefted by another who recommended him, that if he fucceeded, he might expect fome handfome acknowledgment. But he anfwers with fome degree of indignation, " Do you imagine I am. " to be bribed to do juffice ?" for fuch, it feems, he effeemed it, to confer the favour which was asked from him on one fo defervving. Nothing can more effectually tend to. humble the enemies of a flate, than that fach-maxims flould univerfully prevail in it: And if they do not prevail, the worthieft men in an army or fleet may he funk under repeated difcouragements, and the bafeft exalted, to the infamy of the public, and perhaps to its ruin.

§ 90. In the midft of all the gentlenefs which Colonel Gardiner exercifed towards his foldiers, he made it very apparent, that he knew how to reconcile the tendernefs of a real faithful and condescending friend, with the authority of a commander. Perhaps hardly any thing conduced more generally to the maintaining of his authority than the firict decorum and good manners with which he treated even the private gentlemen of his regiment; which has always a great efficacy towards keeping inferiors at a proper diftance, and forbids, in the leaft offenfive manner, familiarities which degrade the fuperior, and enervate his influence. The calmnefs and fleadinefs of his behaviour on all occafions did alfo greatly tend to the fame purpofe. He knew how of his n en, as to fall into fuch transports before them ; well knowing that perfons in the loweit rank of life are aware how unfit they felves. He was also fensible how necessary it is in all who prefide over others, and cfpecially in military officers, to check irregularities when they first begin to appear; and that he might be able to do it, he kept a ftrict inspection over his foldiers ; in which view it was obferved, that as he generally chofe to refide among them as much as he could, (though in circumfrances which fomctimes occafioned him to deny himfelf in fome interests which were very dear to him), fo, when they were around him, he feldom staid long in a place, but was frequently walking the ftreets, and looking into their quarters and flables, as well as reviewing and exercifing them himfelf. It has often been observed, that the regiment of which he was fo many years Lieutenant-Colonel, was one of the most regular and orderly regiments in the public fervice; fo that perhaps none of our dragoons were more welcome than they to the towns where their character was known. Yet no fuch bodies of men are fo blamelefs in their conduct, but fomething will be found, efpecially among fuch confiderable numbers, worthy of centure, and fometimes of punifhment. This Colonel Gardiner knew how to inflict with a becoming refolution, and with all the feverity which he judged neceffary :. L iii.

A feverity the more awful and imprefing, as it was always attended with mecknefs; for he well knew, that when things are done in a paffion, it feems only an accidental circumfance that they are afts of juffice, and that fuch indecencies greatly obfirudt the ends of punilhment, both as it relates to reforming offenders, and to deterring others from an imitation of their faults.

§ q1. One inflance of his conduct, which happened at Leicefter, and was related by the perfon chiefly concerned, to a worthy friend from whom I had it, I cannot forbear inferting. While part of the regiment was encamped in the neighbourhood of that place. the Colonel went incognito to the camp in the middle of the night; for he fometimes lodged at his quarters in the town. One of the centinels then on duty had abandoned his poft; and on being feized, broke out into fome oaths and profane execrations against those that difcovered him ; a crime of which the Colonel had the greateft abhorrence, and on which he never failed to animadvert. The man afterwards appeared much ashamed and concerned for what he had done. But the Colonel ordered him to be brought early next morning to his own quarters, where he had prepared a piquet, on which he appointed him a private fort of penance; and while he was put upon it, he difcourfed with him ferioully and tenderly upon the evils and aggravations of his fault; admonished him of the divine difpleafure which he had incurred; and urged him to argue from the pain which he then felt, how infinitely more dreadful it must he to fall into the hands of the living God, and indeed to meet the terrors of that damnation which he had been accuftomed impioully to call for on himfelf and his companions. The refult of this proceeding was, that the offender accepted his punifhment, not only with fubmiffion, but with thankfulnefs. He went away with a more cordial affection for his Colonel than ever he had before ; and fpoke of it fome years after to my friend, in fuch a manner, that there feemed reafon to hope, it had been inftrumental in producing not only a change in his life, but in his heart.

§ 92. There cannot, I think, be a more proper place for mentioning the great reverence this excellent officer always exprefiled for the name of the bleffed God, and the zeal with which he endeavoured to fupprefs, and if pofible to extirpate, that deteftable fin of fwearing and curfing which is every where fo common, and efpecially among our military men. He often declared his fentiments with respect to this enormity at the head of his regiment; and urged his captains and their fubalterns to take the greateft care, that they did not give the fanction of their example to that which, by their office, they were obliged to punish in others. And indeed his zeal on thefe occafions wrought in a very active, and fometimes in a remarkably fuccefsful manner, not only among his equals, but fometimes among his fuperiors too. An inftance of this in Flanders I shall have an opportunity hereafter to produce ; at prefent I shall only mention his conduct in Scotland a little before his death, as I have it from a very valuable young minister of that country, on whole testimony I can thoroughly depend ; and I wish it may excite many to imitation.

§ 93. The commanding officer of the king's forces then about Edinburgh, with the other colonels, and feveral other gentlemen of rank in their refpective regiments, favoured him with their company at Bankton, and took a dinner with him. He too well forefaw what might happen amidlf fuch a variety of tempers and characters; and fearing left his confeience might have been enfaired by a finful filence, or that, on the other hand, he might feem to paß the bounds of decency, and infringe upon the laws of hofpitality, by animadverting on.

guefts fo juftly entitled to his regard ; he happily determined on the following method of avoiding each of these difficulties. As foon as they were come together, he addreffed them with a great deal of refpect, and yet at the fame time with a very frank and determined air; and told them, that he had the honour in that diffrict to be a justice of the peace, and confequently that he was fworn to put the laws in execution, and, amongst the rest, those against fwearing : That he could not execute them upon others with any confidence, or by any means approve himfelf as a man of impartiality and integrity to his own heart, if he fuffered them to be broken in his prefence by perfons of any rank whatfoever : And that therefore he intreated all the gentlemen who then honoured him with their company, that they would pleafe to be upon their guard ; and that if any oath or curfe fhould efcape them, he hoped they would confider his legal animadverfion upon it as a regard to the duties of his office and the dictates of his confcience, and not as owing to any want of deference to them, The commanding officer immediately fupported him in this declaration, as entirely becoming the flation in which he was, affuring him, that he would be ready to pay the penalty, if he inadvertently tranfgreffed ; and when Coloncl

Gardiner on any occasion stepped out of the room, he himfelf undertook to be the guardian of the law in his abfence ; and as one of of the inferior officers offended during this time, he informed the Colonel; fo that the fine was exacted, and given to the poor *, with the universal approbation of the company. The ftory fpread in the neighbourhood ; and was perhaps highly applauded by many who wanted the courage to go and do likewife. But it may be faid of the worthy perfon of whom 1 write, with the utmoft propriety, that he feared the face of no man living, where the honour of God was concerned. In all fuch cafes he might be juftly faid, in fcripture phrafe, to fet his face like a flint; and I affuredly believe, that had he been in the prefence of a fovereign prince who had been guilty of this fault, his looks at least would have testified his grief and furprife, if he had apprehended it unfit to have borne his testimony any other way.

§ 94. Lord Cadogan's regiment of dragoons, during the years I have mentioned, while he was lieutenant-colonel of it, was guartered in. a great variety of places, both in England and Scotland, from many of which I have letters before me; particularly from Hamilton, Ayr, Carlifle, Hereford, Maidenhead, Leicefter, Warwick, Coventry, Stamford, Harborough, Northampton, and feveral other places, efpecially in our inland parts. The natural confequence was, that the Colonel, whole character was on many accounts fo very remarkable, had a very extensive acquaintance ; And I believe I may certainly fay, that wherever he was known by perfons of wildom and worth, he was proportionably refpected, and left behind him traces of unaffected devotion, humility, benevolence, and zeal for the fupport and advancement of religion and virtue.

* It is obfervable, that the money which was f-rfitted on this account by his own officers, whom he never (pared, or by any others of his foldiers, who rather choice to ray than to fubnit to corporal punifiment, was by the Colouel's erder laid by in a bank, till found of the private men fill fick, and then it was laid out in providing them with preper help and accommodations in their diffres.

§ 95. The equitable tenor of his mind in thefe refpects is illuftrated by his letters, from feveral of thefe places; and though it is but comparatively a fmall number of them which I have now in my hands, yet they will afford fome valuable extrades, which I shall therefore here lay before my reader, that he shay the better judge as to his real characher, in particulars of which I have already difcourfed, or which may hereafter occur.

§ 96. In a letter to his lady, dated from Carlifle, Nov. 19. 1733, when he was on his journey to Herefordshire, he breathes out his grateful and cheerful foul in these words : ".I " blefs God, I was never better in my life-" time ; and I wifh I could be fo happy as to " hear the fame of you; or rather (in other " words) to hear that you had obtained an " entire truft in God. That would infallibly " keep you in perfect peace ; for the God of " truth hath promifed it. Oh, how ought we " to be longing to be with Chrift, which is " infinitely better than any thing we can pro-" pofe here ! to be there, where all complaints " fhall be for ever banifhed ; where no moun-" tains shall separate between God and our " fouls : And I hope it will be fome addition " to our happinefs, that you and I shall be " feparated no more; but that, as we have " joined in finging the praifes of our glorious "Redeemer here, we fhall fing them in a " much higher key through an endless eter-" nity. Oh eternity, eternity ! What a " wonderful thought is eternity ?"

§ 97. From Leicefler, Auguft 6. 1739, he writes thus to his lady: "Yeflerday I was at "the Lord's table, where you and the chil-"dren were not forgotten: But how won-"derfully was I affilted when I came home, "to plead for you all with many tears!" And then, fpeaking of fome intimate friends, who were impatient (as I fupple by the connection), for his return to them, he takes occafino to olicerve the neceffity "of endeavouring "to compofe our minds, and to fay with the "Pialmith, "My foul, wait thou only upon "God." Afterwards, fpeaking of one of his "children, of whom he heard that he made a "commendable progrefs in learning, he exprefies his fatisfaction in it, and adds, "But "how much greater joy would it give me to "hear, that he was greatly advanced in the "folool of Chrift 'O that our children may "but be wife to falvation, and may grow in "grace as they do in fature !"

§ 98. Thefe letters, which to fo familiar a friend evidently lay open the heart, and thew the ideas and affections which were lodged deepeft there, are fometimes taken up with an account of formons he had attended, and the imprefilion they had made upon his mind. I thall mention one only, as a fpecimen of many more, which was dated from a place called Cohorn, April 15. " We hild here a " minitler from Wales, who gave us two ex-" cellent difcourfes on the love of Chrift to " us, as an argument to engage our love to " him. And indeed, next to the grateness of " his love to us, methinks there is nothing

" fo aftonifhing as the coldnefs of our love to " him. Oh that he would filed abroad his " his love upon our hearts by his Holy Spi-" rit, that ours might he kindled into a finance! " May God enable you to truft in him, and " then you will be kept in perfect peace!" -

§ 99. We have met with many traces of that habitual gratitude to the bleffed God, as his heavenly Father and conftant friend, which made his life probably one of the happieft that ever was fpent on earth. I cannot omit one more, which appears to me the more worthy of notice, as being a fhort turn in as hafty a letter as any I remember to have feen of his, which he wrote from Leicefter in June 1739. " I am now under the deepeft fonfe of the " many favours the Almighty has bestowed " upon me : Surely you will help me to cele-" brate the praifes of our gracious God and " kind benefactor." This exuberance of grateful affection, which, while it was almost every hour pouring itfelf forth before Gcd in the most genuine and emphatical language, felt itself still as it were straitened for want of a fufficient vent, and therefore called on others to help him with their concurrent praifes, appears to me the most glorious and happy flate in which a human foul can find itfelf on this fide heaven.

§ 100. Such was the temper which this excellent man appears to have carried along with him through fuch a variety of places and circumftances; and the whole of his deportment was fuitable to thefe imprefions. Strangers were agreeably ftruck with his first appearance; there was fo much of the Chriftian, the well-bred man, and the universal friend in it; and as they came more intimately to know him, they discovered more and more the uniformity and confiftency of his whole temper and behaviour; fo that, whether he made only a vifit for a few days to any place, or continued there for many weeks or months, he was always beloved and effeemed, and fpoken of with that honourable teftimony from perfons of the moft different denominations and parties, which nothing but true fterling worth (if I may be allowed the expression) and that in an eminent degree, can fecure.

§ 101. Of the juffice of this tellimony, which I had fo often heard from a variety of perfons, I myfelf began to be a witnefs, about the time when the lait mentioned letter was dated. In this view I believe I shall never forget that happy day, June 13. 1730, when I firft met him at Leicefter. I remember I happened that day to preach a lefture from Pfalm.

cxix. 158. I beheld the tran greffors, and was grieved, becaufe they kept not thy law. I was large in defcribing that mixture of indignation and grief (ftrongly imprefied by the original word there) with which the good man looks on the daring tranfgreffors of the divine law ; and in tracing the caufes that grief, as arifing from a regard to the divine honour, and the intereft of a Redeemer, and a compaffionate concern for the mifery fuch offenders bring on themfelves, and for the mifchief they do to the world about them. I little thought how exactly I was drawing Colonel Gardiner's character under each of these heads ; and I have often reflected upon it as a happy providence, which opened a much fpeedier way than I could have expected, to the breaft of one of the most amiable and useful friends which I ever expect to find upon earth. We afterwards fung a hymn, which brought over again fome of the leading thoughts in the fermon, and ftruck him fo ftrongly, that on obtaining a copy of it, he committed it to his memory, and used to repeat it with fo forcible an accent, as fhewed how much every line expreffed of his very foul. In this view, the reader will pardon my inferting it; especially, as I know not when I may get time to publish a valume of these ferious, though art-lefs composures, which I fent him in manufoript fome years ago, and to which I have fince made very large additions:

Arife, my tender'ft thoughts, arife, To torrents melt my ftreaming eyes! And thou, my heart, with anguifh feel Thofe evils which thou canft not heal !

See human nature funk in fhame ! See fcandals pour'd on Jefus's name ! The Father wounded thro' the Son ! The world abus'd, the foul undone !

See the fhort courfe of vain delight Clofing in everlafting night ! In flames that no abatement know, The briny tears for ever flow.

My God, I feel the mournful fcene; My bowels yearn o'er dying men : And fain my pity would reclaim, And fnatch the fire-brands from the flame.

But feeble my compafion proves, And can but weep where moft it loves : Thine own all-faving arm employ, And turn thefe drops of grief to joy !

§ 102. The Colonel, immediately after the conclution of the fervice, met me in the veftry/ M iii and embraced me in the most obliging and affectionate manner, as if there had a long friendship between us; affured me, that he had for fome years been intimately acquainted with my writings; and defired, that we might concert measures for fpending fome hours together, before I left the town. I was fo happy as to be able to fecure an opportunity of doing it; and I must leave it upon record, that I cannot recollect I was ever equally edified by any conversation I remember to have enjoyed. We paffed that evening and the next morning together; and it is impoffible for me to defcribe the imprefiion which the interview left upon my heart. I rode alone all the remainder of the day; and it was my unfpeakable happinefs that I was alone, fince I could be no longer with him; for I can hardly conceive what other company would not then have been an incumbrance. The views which he gave me even then, (for he began to repose a most obliging confidence in me, though he concealed fome of the most extraordinary circumftances of the methods by which he had been recovered to God and happinefs), with those cordial fentiments of evangelical piety and extensive goodness, which he poured out into my bofom with fo, endearing a freedom, fired my very foul, and I hope

I may truly fay (what I wifh and pray many of my readers may alfo adopt for themfelves) that I glorified God in him. Our epitholary correspondence immediately commenced upon my return; and though, through the multiplicity of bufinefs on both fides, it fuffered many interruptions, it was in fome degree the blefling of all the following years of my life, til he fell by thofe unreafonable and wicked men, who had it in their hearts with him to have deftroyed all our glory, defence, and happinefs.

§ 103. The first letter I received from him was fo remarkable, that fome perfons of eminent piety, to whom I communicated it, would not be content without copying it out, or making fome extracts from it. I perfuade myfelf, that my devout reader will not be difpleafed, that I infert the greatest part of it here, efpecially as it ferves to illustrate the affectionate fenfe which he had of the divine goodnefs in his conversion, though more than twenty years had paffed fince that memorable event happened. Having mentioned my ever dear and honoured friend Dr. Ifaac Watts, on an occasion which I hinted at above, (§ 70.) he adds, " I have been in pain these feveral " years, left that excellent perfon, that fweet " finger in our Ifrael, fhould have been called " to heaven before I had an opportunity of " letting him know how much his works have " been bleffed to me, and of courfe, of return-" ing him my hearty thanks : For though it " was owing to the operation of the Bleffed. I defire to blefs God for the-" good news of his recovery, and intreat you. " to tell him, that although I cannot keep " pace with him here in celebrating the high " praifes of our glorious Redeemer, which is " the greateft grief of my heart, yet I am per-" fuaded, that when I join the glorious com-" pany above, where there will be no draw-" backs, none will outfing me there, becaufe " I shall not find any that will be more in-" debted to the wonderful riches of divine " grace than I.

" Give me a place at thy faints feet, " Or fome fall'n angel's vacant feat ; " I'll ftrive to fing as loud as they, " Who fit above on brighter day.

" I know it is natural for every one, who has felt the almighty power which raifed.

" our glorious Redeemer from the grave, to " believe his cafe fingular: But I have made " every one in this refpect fubmit, as foon as " he has heard my flory. And if you feem-" ed to be furprifed at the account which I " gave you, what will you be when you hear " it all? ~

" Oh if I had an angel's voice, " And could be heard from pole to pole; " I would to all the lift'ning world " Proclaim thy goodnefs to my foul,"

He then concludes, after fome exprelions of endearment, (which, with whatever pleafure I review them, I muft not here infert); "If " you knew what a natural averfion I have " to writing, you would be altonified at the " length of this letter, which is, I believe, " the longeft I ever wrote. But my heart " warms when I write to you, which makes " my pen move the eafer. I hope it will " pleafe our gratious God long to preferve " you, a blefied infrument in his hand of do " in great good in the church of Chrift ; and " that you may always enjoy a thriving foul " in a healthy body, final, be the continuat " prayer of, &c."

§ 104. As our intimacy grew, our mutual affection increased; and "my dearest friend," was the form of address with most of his epiftles of the laft years were begun and ended. Many of them are filled up with his fentiments of those writings which I published during these years, which he read with great attention, and of which he fpeaks in terms which it becomes me to fupprefs, and to impute in a confiderable degree to the kind prejudices of fo endeared a friendfbip. He gives me repeated affurances, " that he was " daily mindful of me in his prayers ;" a circumftance which I cannot recollect without the greatest thankfulnefs; the loss of which I should more deeply lament, did I not hope that the happy effect of these prayers might ftill continue, and might run into all my remaining days.

§ 103. If might be a pleafure to me, to make feveral extracts from many others of his letters: But it is a pleafure which I ought to fupprefs, and rather to reflect with unfeigned humility, how unworthy I was of fuch regards from fuck a perfon, and of that divine goodnefs which gave me fuch a friend in him. I fhall therefore only add two general remarks, which offer themfelves from feveral of his letters. The one is, that there is in fome of them, as our freedom increafed, an gereeable vein of humour and pleafantry ; which flews how eafy religion fat upon him, and how far he was from placing any part of it in a gloomy melancholy, or ftiff formality. The other is, that he frequently refers to domeftic circumftances, fuch as the illnefs or recovery of my children, &c. which I am furprifed how a man of his extensive and important bufinefs could fo diffinctly bear upon his mind. But his memory was good, and his heart was yet better; and his friendfhip was fuch, that, nothing which fenfibly affected the heart of one whom he honoured with it, left his own but flightly touched. I have all imaginable reafon to believe, that in many inftances his prayers were not only offered for us in general terms, but varied as our particular fituation required. Many quotations might verify this; but I decline troubling the reader with an enumeration of passages, in which it was only the abundance of friendly fympathy that gave this truly great, as well as good man, fo cordial a concern.

§ 106. After this correspondence, carried on for the space of about three years, and some interviews which we had enjoyed at different places, he came to spend fome time with us at Northampton, and brought with thim his lady and his two eldest children. I had here an opportunity of taking a much nearer view of his charafter, and furveying it in a much greater variety of lights than before; and my effect for him increafed, in proportion to thefe opportunities. What I have wrote above, with refpect to his conduct in relative life, was in a great meafure drawn from what I now faw: And I fhall mention here fome ether points in his behavour, which particularly fruck my mind; and likewife fhall touch on his fentiments on fome topics of importance, which he freely communicated to me, and which I remarked on account of that wildom and propriety which I apprehended in them.

§ 107. There was nothing more openly obfervable in Colonel Gardiner, than the exemplary gravity, composer, and reverence with which he attended public worfhip. Copious as he was in his ferret devotions, before he engaged in ik, he always began them fo early as not to be retarded by them when he fhould réfort to the honfe of God. He, and all his foldiers whoe choke to worfhip with him, were generally there (as I have already hinted) before the fervice began, that the entrance of many at once might not diffurb the congregation already engaged in devotion, and that there might be-the better opportunity for pringing the mind to a becoming attention, and preparing it for converfe with the divine Being. While acts of worfhip were going on, whether of prayer or finging, he always flood up; and whatever regard he might have for perfons who paffed by him at that time, though it were to come into the fame pew, he never paid any compliment to them : And often has he expressed his wonder at the indecorum of breaking off our address to God, to bow to a fellow-creature, which he thought a much greater indecency, than it would be, on a little occafion and circumftance, to interrupt an addrefs to our prince. During the time of preaching, his eye was commonly fixed upon the minister, though fometimes turned round upon the auditory, where, if he obferved any to trifle, it filled him with just indignation. And I have known inftances, in which, upon making the remark, he has communicated it to fome friend of the perfons who were guilty of it, that proper application might be made to prevent it for the time to come.

§ 108. A more devout communicant at the table of the Lord has perhaps feldom been any where known Often have I had the pleafure to fee that manly countenance foftened to all the marks of humiliation and contrition, on this occasion; and to differn, in fpite of all his efforts to conceal them, ftreams of tears flowing down from his eyes, while he has been directing them to those memorials of his Redeemer's love. And fome, who have converfed intimately with him after he came from that ordinance, have obferved a vifible abstraction from furrounding objects, by which there feemed reafon to imagine, that his foul was wrapped up in holy contemplation. And I particularly remember, that when we had once fpent great part of the following Monday in riding together, he made an apology to me for being to abfent as he feemed, by telling me, " that his heart was flown, upwards, " before he was aware, to him whom not hav-" ing feen he loved "; and that he was rejoic-" ing in him with fuch unfpeakable joy, that " he could not hold it down to creature-con-

§ 109. In all the offices of friendship he was remarkably ready, and bad a most fiveet and engaging manner of performing them, which greatly heightened the obligations he conferred. He seemed not to fet any high value upon any benefit he beflowed; but did it without the least parade, as a thing which in those circumdiances came of courfe, where he had profelled love and refpect; which he was not over forward to do, though he treated drangers and thofe who were molt his inferiors very courtcoulfy, and always feemed; becaufe he in truth always was, glad of any opportunity of doing them good.

§ 110. He was particularly zealous in vindicating the reputation of his friends in their absence; and though I cannot recollect that I had ever an opportunity of obferving this immediately, as I do not know that I ever was prefent with him when any ill was fpoken of others at all; yet by what I have heard him fay, with relation to attempts to injure the character of worthy and useful men, I have reafon to believe, that no man living was more fenfible of the bafenefs and infamy, as well as the cruelty of fuch a conduct. He knew and defpifed the low principles of refentment for unreasonable expectations disappointed, of perfonal attachment to men of fome croffing interefts, of envy, and of party-zeal, from whence fuch a conduct often proceeds; and was particularly offended, when he found it (as he frequently did) in perfons that fet up for the greatest patrons of liberty, virtue, and candour. He looked upon the murtherers of reputation and ulefalnels as fome of the vileft peffs of fociety; and plainly flowed, on every proper occafion, that he thought it the part of a generous, benevolent, and courageous man, to exert himfelf in tracing and hunting down the flander, that the authors or abettors of it might be lefs capable of doing mifchief for the future.

§ III. The most plausible objection that I ever heard to Colonel Gardiner's character is. that he was too much attached to fome religious principles, eftablished indeed in the churches both of England and Scotland, but which have of late years been much difputed, and from which, it is at least generally fuppofed, not a few in both have thought proper to depart; whatever expedients they may have found to quiet their confciences, in fubferibing those formularies, in which they are plainly taught. His zeal was efpecially apparent in opposition to those doctrines which feemed to derogate from the divine honours of the Son and Spirit of God, and from the freedom of divine grace, or the reality and neceffity of its operations in the conversion and falvation of finners.

§ 112. With relation to thefe, I muft obferve, that it was his moft fleadfall perfuafion, that all those notions which represent our bleffed Redeemer and the Holy Spirit as mere creatures, or which fet afide the atonement of the former, or the influence of the latter, do fap the very foundation of Chriffianity, by rejecting the most glorious doctrines peculiar to it. He had attentively obferved (what indeed is too obvious) the unhappy influence which the denial of these principles often has on the character of minifters, and on their fuccefs; and was perfuaded, that an attempt to fubilitute that mutilated form of Christianity which remains, when these effentials of it are taken away, has proved one of the most fuccessful methods which the great enemy of fouls has ever taken in these latter days, to lead men by infenfible degrees, into deifm, vice, and perdition. He alfo fagacioufly observed the artful manner in which obnoxious tenets are often maintained or infiduated, with all that mixture of zeal and addrefs with which they are propagated in the world, even by those who had most folemnly professed to believe, and engaged to teach the contrary: And as he really apprehended, that the glory of God and the falvation of fouls was concerned, his piety and charity made him eager and firenuous in oppofing what he judged to be errors of fo pernicious a nature. Yet I muft declare, that according to what I have known of him,, iii.N. and gentrout transferes of temperat

(and I believe he opened his heart on thefe topics to me with as much freedom as to any man living) he was not ready, upon light fufpicions, to charge tenets which he thought fo pernicious on any, efpecially where he faw the appearances of a good temper and life, which he always reverenced and loved in perfons of all fentiments and profeffions. He feverely condemned caufeless jealoufies, and evil furmifings of every kind; and extended that charity in this refpect, both to clergy and laity, which good Bifhop Burnet was fo ready, according to his own account, to limit the latter " of believing every man good till he " knew him to be bad, and his notions right " till he knew them wrong," He could not but be very fenfible of the unhappy confequences which may follow on attacking the characters of men, efpecially of those who are minifters of the gofpel: And if, through a mixture of human frailty, from which the beft of men, in the beft of their meanings and intentions, are not entirely free, he has ever, in the warmth of his heart, dropped a word which might be injurious to any on that account, (which I believe very feldom happened) he would gladly retract it on better information ; which was perfectly agreeable to that honeft and generous franknefs of temper in which I never knew any man who exceeded him.

§ 113. On the whole, it was indeed his deliberate judgment, that the Arian, Socinian, and Pelagian doctrines were highly difhonourable to God, and dangerous to the fouls of men; and that it was the duty of private Chriftians to be greatly on their guard againft those ministers by whom they are entertained. left their minds flould be corrupted from the fimplicity that is in Chrift. Yet he fincerely abhorred the thought of perfecution for confcience fake ; of the abfurdity and iniquity of which, in all its kinds and degrees, he had as deep and rational a conviction as any man I could name. And indeed the generofity of his heroic heart could hardly bear to think, that those glorious truths, which he fo cordially loved, and which he affuredly believed to be capable of fuch fair fupport, both from reafon and the word of God, should be difgraced by methods of defence and propagation. common to the most impious and ridiculous falfehoods. Nor did he by any means approve of paffionate and furious ways of vindicating the most vital and important doctrines of the gofpel : For he knew, that to maintain the most benevolent religion in the world by fuch malevolent and infernal methods, was deftroying the end to accomplish the means; and that it was as impoffible that true Chriftianity shall be supported thus, as it is that a man fhould long be nourifhed by eating his own flefh. To difplay the genuine fruits of Christianity in a good life, to be ready to plead with meeknefs and fweetnefs for the doctrines it teaches, and to labour by every office of humanity and goodnefs to gain upon them that oppofe it, were the weapons with which this good foldier of Jefus Chrift faithfully fought the battles of the Lord. Thefe weapons will always be victorious in his caufe ; and they who have recourfe to others of a different temperature, how ftrong foever they may feem, and how fharp foever they may really be, will find they break in their hands when they exert them most furioufly, and are much more likely to wound themfelves than to conquer the enemies they

§ 114. But while I am fpeaking of Colonel Gardiner's charity in this refpect, I mult not omit that of another kind, which has indeed ingroffed the name of charity much more than it ought, excellent as it is; I mean almfgiving, for which he was very remarkable. I have often wondered how he was able to do fo many generous things this way-

But his frugality fed the fpring. He made no pleafurable expence on himfelf ; and was contented with a very decent appearance in his family, without affecting fuch an air of grandeur as could not have been fupported without facrificing to it fatisfactions far nobler, and to a temper like his far more delightful. The lively and tender feelings of his heart in favour of the diffreffed and afflicted, made it a felf-indulgence to him to relieve them : and the deep conviction he had of the vain and transitory nature of the enjoyments of this world, together with the fublime view he had of another, engaged him to difpenfe his bounties with a very liberal hand, and even to feek out proper objects of them : And above all, his fincere and ardent love to the Lord Jefus Chrift, engaged him to feel, with a true fympathy, the concerns of his poor members. In confequence of this, he honoured feveral of his friends with commissions for the relief of the poor; and particularly, with relation to fome under my paftoral care, he referred it to my differention, to fupply them with what I flould judge expedient ; and frequently preffed me in his letters to be fure not to let them want. And where perfons flanding in need of his charity happened, as they often did, to be perfons of remarkably religious difuofitions.

it was eafy to perceive, that he not only loved, but honoured them, and really effecemed it an honour which providence conferred upon him, that he fhould be made, as it were, the almoner of God for the relief of fuch.

§ 115. I cannot forbear relating a little ftory here, which, when the Colonel himfelf heard it, gave him fuch exquifite pleafure, that I hope it will be acceptable to feveral of my readers. There was in a village about three miles from Northampton, and in a family which of all others near me was afterwards most indebted to him, (though he had never then feen any member of it) an aged and poor, but eminently good woman, who had, with great difficulty, in the exercise of much faith and patience, diligence and humility, made fhift to educate a large family of children, after the death of her hufband, without being chargeable to the parifh ; which, as it was quite beyond her hope, fhe often fpoke of with great delight. At length, when worn out with age and infirmities, the lay upon her dying bed, the did in a most lively and affecting manner, express her hope and joy in the views of approaching glory. Yet, amidit all the triumph of fuch a profpect, there was one remaining care and diffrefs which lay heavy on her mind; which was, that as her journey and her flock of provisions were both ended together, she feared that she must either be buried at the parifh expence, or leave her moft dutiful and affectionate daughters the houfe ftripped of fome of the few moveables which remained in it, to perform the laft office of duty to her, which, the had reafon to believe, they would do. While the was combating with this only remaining anxiety, I happened, though I knew not the extremity of her illnefs, to come in, and to bring with me a guinea, which the generous Colonel had fent by a fpecial meffage, on hearing the character of the family, for its relief. A prefent like this, (probably the most confiderable they had ever received in their lives) coming in this manner from an entire ftranger, at fuch a crifis of time, threw my dying friend (for fuch, amidft all her poverty. I rejoiced to call her) into a perfect transport of joy. She efteemed it a fingular favour of providence, fent to her in her laft moments, as a token of good, and greeted it as a special mark of that loving kindnefs of God which fhould attend her for ever. She would therefore be raifed up in her bed, that the might blefs God for it upon her knees, and with her laft breath pray for her kind and generous benefactor, and for him who had been the inflrument of directing his bounty into this channel. After which the foon expired, with fuch tranquillity and fiveetnefs, as could not but moft fenfibly delight all who beheld her, and occafioned many who knew the circumflances, to glorify God on her behalf.

§ 116. The Colonel's last refidence at Northampton was in June and July 1742, when Lord Cadogan's regiment of dragoons was quartered here: And I cannot but observe. that wherever that regiment came, it was remarkable not only for the fine appearance it made, and for the exactness with which it performed its various exercifes, (of which it had about this time the honour to receive the most illustrious testimonials), but also for the great fobriety and regularity of the foldiers. Many of the officers copied after the excellent pattern which they had daily before their eyes ; and a confiderable number of the private men feemed to be perfons not only of ftrict virtue, but of ferious piety. And I doubt not but they found their abundant account in it, not only in the ferenity and happiness of their own minds, which is beyond comparison the most important confideration; but alfo, in fome degree, in the obliging and refpectful treatment which they generally met with in their quarters. And I mention this, becaufe

I am perfuaded, that if gentlemen of their profefilion knew, and would reflect, how much more comfortable they make their own quarters, by a fober, orderly, and obliging conduct, they would be regular out of mere felt-love, if they were not influenced, as I heartily with they may always be, by a nobler principle.

§ 117. Towards the latter end of this year he embarked for Flanders, and fpent fome confiderable time with the regiment at Ghent, where he much regretted the want of those religious ordinances and opportunities which had made his other abodes delightful. But as he had made fo eminent a progrefs in that divine life which they are all intended to promote, he could not be unactive in the caufe of God. I have now before me a letter dated from thence, October 16. 1742, in which he writes, " As for me, I am indeed in a dry " and barren land, where no water is. Ri-"vers of waters run down mine eyes, " because nothing is to be heard in our So-" dom, but blafpheming the name of my " God ; and I am not honoured as the inftru-" ment of doing any great fervice. 'Tis true, " I have reformed fix or feven field officers of " fwearing. I dine every day with them, " and have entered them into a voluntary con-

" trach, to pay a fhilling to the poor for eve-"ry oath; and it is wonderful to obferve " the effect it has had already. One of them " told me this day at dinner, that it had " really fuch an influence upon him, that be-" ing at cards laft night, when another officer " fell a fwearing, he was not able to bear it, " but rofe up and left the company. So " you fee, refraints at firft arifing from a " low principle may improve into fomething " better."

§ 118. During his abode here, he had a great deal of bufinefs upon his hands; and had alfo in fome marches, the care of more regiments than his own: And it has been very delightful to me to obferve, what a degree of converse with heaven, and the God of it, he maintained, amidft thefe fcenes of hurry and fatigue, of which the reader may find a remarkable specimen in the following letters, dated from Litchwick in the beginning of April 1743, which was one of the laft I received from him while abroad. which begins with thefe words: "Yefterday, " being the Lord's day, at fix in the morning, " I had the pleafure of receiving your's at " Nortonick ; and it proved a fabbath day's " bleffing to me. Some time before it reach-" ed.me," (from whence, by the way it may be observed, that his former custom of rifing fo early to his devotion was ftill retained) " I had been wreftling with God with many " tears; and when I had read it, I returned " to my knees again, to give hearty thanks "to him for all his goodnefs to you and " your's, and alfo to myfelf, in that he hath " been pleafed to ftir up fo many who are " dear to him, to be mindful of me at the " throne of grace." And then, after the mention of fome other particulars, he adds, " Blef-" fed and adored for ever be the holy name " of my heavenly Father, who holds my foul " in life, and my body in perfect health ! " Were I to recount his mercy and goodnefs " to me even in the midft of all these hurries, " I fhould never have done .--- I hope your " Mafter will ftill encourage you in his work. " and make you a bleffing to many. My dear-" eft friend, 1 am much more your's than I " can express, and shall remain to while I " am J. G."

§ 119. In this correspondence I had a farther opportunity of difcovering that humble refignation to the will of God which made so aniable a part of his charadler, and of which before I had feen so any inflances. He speaks, in the letter from which I have just been giving an extract, of the hope he had expreffed in former letters, of feeing us again that winter; and he adds, " To be fure, it would " have been a great pleafure to me; but we " poor mortals form projects, and the Al-" mighty Ruler of the univerfe difpofes of all " as he pleafes. A great many of us were " getting ready for our return to England, " when we received an order to march to-"wards Frankfort, to the great furprife of " the whole army : neither can any of us com-" prehend what we are to do there ; for there " is no enemy in that country, the French ar-" my being marched into Bavaria, where I " am fure we cannot follow them. But it is " the will of the Lord ; and his will be done ! " I defire to blefs and praife my heavenly-Fa-" ther, that I am entirely refigned to it. It " is no matter where I go, or what becomes " of me, fo that God may be glorified in my " life or my death. I fhould rejoice much to " hear, that all my friends were equally re-" figned."

§ 120. The mention of this article reminds me of another, rélating to the views which he had of obtaining a regiment for himfelf. He endcavoured to deferve it by the moft faithful fervices, fome of them indeed beyond what the frength of his conflution would well bear; for the weather in fome of thefe marches proved exceeding bad, and yet he would be always at the head of his people, that he might look to every thing that concerned them with the exafteft care. This obliged him to negleft the beginnings of a feverifh illnefs, the natural confequence of which was, that it grew very formidable, forced a long confinement upon him, and gave animal nature a thock which it never recovered.

§ 121. In the mean time, as he had the promise of a regiment before he quitted England, his friends were continually expecting an occasion of congratulating him on having received the command of one. But ftill they were difappointed; and on fome of them the difappointment feemed to fit heavy. As for the Colonel himfelf, he feemed quite eafy about it; and appeared much greater in that eafy fituation of mind, than the highest military honours and preferments could have made him. With great pleafure do I at this moment recollect the unaffected ferenity, and even indifference, with which he expresses himfelf upon this occafion, in a letter to me; dated about the beginning of April 1743. "+ The disappointment of a regiment is nos-O iii

<sup>49</sup> thing to me; for I am fatisfied, that had it <sup>40</sup> been for God's glory, I fhould have had it; <sup>41</sup> on any other terms. My heavenly Father <sup>44</sup> has beflowed upon me infinitely more than <sup>44</sup> if he had made me emperor of the whole <sup>44</sup> world."

§ 122. I find feveral parallel expressions in other letters; and those to his lady about the fame time were juft in the fame ftrain. In an extract from one which was written from Aix la Chapelle, April 21, the fame year, I meet with these words: " People here imagine I " must be fadly troubled, that I have not got " a regiment, (for fix out of feven vacant are " now disposed of ) : but they are ftrangely " mistaken; for it has given me no fort of " trouble : My heavenly Father knows what " is beft for me; and bleffed and for ever " adored be his name, he has given me " an entire refignation to his will : Befides, I " don't know that ever I met with any dif-" appointment fince I was a Chriftian, but it " pleafed God to difcover to me, that it was " plainly for my advantage, by beftowing " fomething better upon me afterwards : " Many inftances of which I am able to pro-" duce ; and therefore I should be the great-" eft of monfters, if I did not truft in him."

§ 123. I fhould be guilty of a great omiffion, if I were not to add, how remarkable the event corresponded with his faith on this occafion. For, whereas he had no intimation or expectation of any thing more than a regiment of foot, his Majefty was pleafed, out of his great goodnefs, to give him a regiment of dragoons, which was then quartered just in his own neighbourhood. And it is properly remarked by the reverend and worthy perfon through whofe hands this letter was transmitted to me, that when the Colonel thus expreffed himfelf, he could have no profpect of what he afterwards fo foon obtained, as General Bland's regiment, to which he was advanced, was only vacant on the 19th of April; that is, two days before the date of this letter, when it was impoffible he should have any notice of that vacancy. And it alfo deferves obfervation, that fome few days after the Colonel was thus unexpectedly promoted to the command of these dragoons. Brigadier Cornwallis's regiment of foot, then in Flanders, became vacant. Now, had this happened before his promotion to General Bland's, Colonel Gardiner, in all probability, would only bave had that regiment of foot, and fo have continued in Flanders. When the affair was iffued, he informs Lady Francis of it, in.

a letter dated from a village near Frankfort, May 3. in which he refers to his former of the 21ft April, obferving how remarkably it was verified, "in God's having "given him" (for fo he exprefies it, agreeably to the views he continually maintained of the univerfal agency of divine providence) " what he had no expectation of, and what " was fo much better than that which he had " miffed, a regiment of dragoons quartered " at his own door," § 124. It appeared to him, that by this remarkable event, Providence called him home. Accordingly, though he had other preferments offered him in the army, he chofe to return ; and, I believe, the more willingly, as he did not expect there would have been any action. Just at this time it pleafed God to give him an awful inftance of the uncertainty of human profpects and enjoyments, by that violent fever which feized him at Ghent in his way to England; and perhaps the more feverely for the efforts he made to puth on his journey, though he had for fome days been much indifpofed. It was, I think, one of the first fits of fevere illness he had ever met with ; and he was ready to look upon it as a fudden call into eternity : But it gave him no painful alarm in that view. He committed.

himfelf to the God of his life ; and in a few weeks he was fo well recovered, as to be capable of purfuing his journey, though not without difficulty : And I cannot but think it might have conduced much to a more perfect recovery than he ever attained, to have allowed himfelf a longer repofe, in order to recruit his exhaufted ftrength and fpirits. But there was an activity in his temper not eafy to be reftrained ; and it was now fiimulated. not only by a defire of feeing his friends, but of being with his regiment; that he might omit nothing in his power to regulate their morals and their difcipline, and to form them for public fervice. Accordingly, he paffed through London about the middle of June 1743, where he had the honour of waiting on their Royal Highneffes the Prince and Princefs of Wales, and of receiving from both the most obliging tokens of favour and effeem. He arrived at Northampton on Monday the 20th of June, and fpent part of three days here. But the great pleafure which his return and preferment gave us was much abated by obferving his countenance fo fadly altered, and the many marks of languor and remaining diforder which evidently appeared : fo that he really looked ten years older than he had done ten months before. I had how.

ever a fatisfaction fufficient to counterbalance much of the concern which this alteration gave me, in a renewed opportuity of obferving, indeed more fenfibly than ever, in how remarkable a degree he was dead to the enjoyments and views of this mortal life. When I congratulated him on the favourable appearances of Providence for him in the late event, he briefly told me the remarkable circumflances that attended it, with the moft genuine impreffions of gratitude to God for them; but added, " that as his account was " increased with his income, power, and in-" fluence, and his cares were proportionably " increased too, it was, as to his own perfon-" al concern, much the fame to him, whe-" ther he had remained in his former flation, " or been elevated to this : but that if God " fhould by this means honour him, as an " inftrument of doing more good than he " could otherwife have done, he should re-" joice in it."

§ 125. I perceived that the near views he had of eternity, in the illness from which he was then fo imperfectly recovered, had not in the leaft alarmed him; but that he would have been entirely willing, had fuch been the determination of God, to have been cut fhort in a foreign land, without any earbly friend near him, and in the midft of a journey undertaken with hopes and profpects fo pleafing to nature ; which appeared to me no inconfiderable evidence of the ftrength of his faith. But we shall wonder the lefs at this extraordinary refignation, if we confider the joyful and affured profpect which he had of an happinels infinitely fuperior, beyond the grave ; of which that worthy minister of the church of Scotland, who had an opportunity of converfing with him quickly after his return, and having the memorable ftory of his conversion from his own mouth, (as I have hinted ahove) writes thus in his letter to me, dated Jan. 14. 1746-7. "When he came to review " his regiment at Linlithgow in fummer " 1743, after having given me the wonder-" ful ftory as above, he concluded in words " to this purpofe :---- Let me die whenever " it shall pleafe God, or wherever it shall be, " I am fure I shall go to the manfions of eter-" nal glory, and enjoy my God and my Re-" deemer in heaven for ever."

§ 126. While he was with us at this time, he appeared deeply affected with the fad flate of things as to religion and morals, and fermed to apprehend, that the rod of God was hanging over fo finful a nation. He obferved a great deal of difaffection, which the enemies of the government had, by a variety of artifices, been raifing in Scotland for fome years; and the number of Jacobites there, together with the defencelefs ftate in which our ifland then was, with refpect to the number of its forces at home, (of which he fpoke at once with great concern and aftonifhment) led him to expect an invation from France, and an attempt in favour of the Pretender, much fooner than it happened. I have heard him fay, many years before it came fo near being accomplifhed, " that a few thousands " might have a fair chance for marching from " Edinburgh to London uncontrouled, and " throw the whole kingdom into an aftonifh-" ment." And I have great reafon to believe, that this was one main confideration which engaged him to make fuch hafte to his regiment, then quartered in those parts; as he imagined there was not a fpot of ground where he might be more like to have a call to expose his life in the fervice of his country; and perhaps, by appearing on a proper call early in its defence, be inftrumental in fupprefling the beginnings of most formidable mifchief. How rightly he judged in thefe things, the event did too evidently thew.

$ 127. The evening before our last feparation, as I knew I could not entertain the invaluable friend who was then my gueft more agreeably, I preached a fermon in my own houfe, with fome peculiar reference to his cafe and circumftances, from those ever-memorable words, than which I have never felt any more powerful and more comfortable: Pfalm xci. 14, 15, 16. " Becaufe he hath fet his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will fet him on high, becaufe he hath known my name : He shall call upon me, and I will answer him : I will be with him in trouble ; I will deliver him, and honour him : With long life, (or length of days) will I fatisfy him, and fhew him my falvation." This feripture could not but lead our meditations to furvey the character of the good man, as one who to knows the name of the bleffed God, (has fuch a deep apprehenfion of the glories and perfections of his nature), as determinately to fet his love upon him, to make him the fupreme object of his most ardent and conftaut affection. And it fuggested the most fublime and animating hopes to perfons of fuch a character ; that their prayers shall be always acceptable to God; that though they may, and muil, be called out to their fhare in the troubles and calamities of life, yet they may affure themfelves of the divine prefence in all ; which shall iffue in their deliverance, in their exaltation, fometimes to diffinguished honour and effeem among men, and, it may be, in a long courfe of ufeful and happy years on earth; at leaft, which shall undoubtedly end in feeing, to their perpetual delight, the complete falvation of God, in a world where they shall enjoy length of days for ever and ever, and employ them all in adoring the great Author of their falvation and felicity. It is evident, that thefe natural thoughts on fuch a fcripture were matters of univerfal concern. Yet had I known that this was the laft time I fhould ever addrefs Colonel Gardiner, as a minister of the gofpel; and had I forefeen the fcenes through which God was about to lead him, I hardly know what confiderations I could have fuggefted with more peculiar propriety. The attention, elevation, and delight with which he heard them, was very apparent; and the pleafure which the obfervation of it gave me continues to this moment. And let me be permitted to digrefs fo far, as to add, that this is indeed the great fupport of a Chriftian minifter, under the many difcouragements and difappointments which he meets with in his attempts to fix upon the profligate or the thoughtlefs part of mankind a deep fenfe of religious truth ; that there is another important part of his work, in which he may hope to be more generally fuccefsful; as by plain, artlefs, but ferious difcourfes, the great principles of Christian duty and hope may be nourifhed and invigorated in good men, their graces watered as at the root, and their fouls animated both to perfevere, and improve in holinefs. And when we are effectually performing fuch benevolent offices, fo well fuiting our immortal natures, to perfons whole. hearts are cemented with others in the bonds. of the most endearing and facred friendship, it is too little to fay it overpays the fatigue of our labours; it even iwallows up all fenfe of it, in the most rational and fublime pleafore.

§ 128. An incident occurs to my mind, which happened that evening, which at leaft for the oddnefs of it, may deferve a place in thefe memoirs. I had then with me one Thomas Porter, a poor, but very honeft and religious man, (now living at Hatfield Broadoak in Eflex) who is quite unacquainted with letters, fo as not to be able to diffinguif one from another; yet is mailer of the contents of the Bible, in fo extraordinary a degree, that he has not only fixed an immenfe number of texts in his memory, but merely by hearing them quoted in fermons, has registered there the chapter and verfe in which thefe passages are to be found ; This is attended with a marvellous facility in directing those that can read to turn to them, and a most unaccountable talent of fixing on fuch as fuit almost every imaginable variety of circumstances in common life. There are two confiderations in his cafe, which make it the more wonderful : The one, that he is a perfon of a very low genius, having befides a flammering which makes his fpeech almost unintelligible to ftrangers, fo wild and aukward a manner of behaviour, that he is frequently taken for an idiot, and feems in many things to be indeed fo: The other, that he grew up to manhood in a very licentious courfe of living, and an entire ignorance of divine things, fo that all these exact impressions on his memory have been made in his riper years. I thought it would not be difagreeable to the Colonel, to introduce to him this odd phenomenon, which many hundreds of people have had a curiofity to examine: And among all the ftrange things I have feen in him, I never remember any which equalled what paffed on this occasion. On hearing the Colonel's profetiion, and receiving fome hints of his religious character, he ran through a vaft variety of fcriptures, beginning at the Pentateuch, and going on to the Revelation, relating either to the dependence to be fixed on God for the fuccels of military preparations, or to the inflances and promifes occurring there of his care of good men in the moft imminent dangers, or to the encouragement to defpife perils and death, while engaged in a good caufe, and fupported by the views of a happy immortality. I believe he quoted more than twenty of these passages ; and I must freely own that I know not who could have chofe them with greater propriety. If my memory do not deceive me, the last of this catalogue was that from which I afterwards preached on the lamented occafion of this great man's fall : " Be thou faith-" ful unto death, and I will give thee a crown " of life." We were all aftonished at fo remarkable a fact; and I queftion not, but that many of my readers will think the memory of it worthy of being thus preferved.

§ 179. But to return to my main fubject : The next day, after the fermion and converfation of which I have been fpeaking, I took. my laft leave of my incilimable friend, after: attending him fome part of his way northward. The first stage of our journey was to the cottage of that poor, but very religious family, which I had occafion to mention above, as relieved, and indeed in a great meafure fubfifled, by his charity. And nothing could be more delightful, than to obferve the condefcenfion with which he converfed with thefe his humble penfioners. We there put up our laft united prayers together; and he afterwards expressed, in the ftrongeft terms I ever heard him ufe on fuch an occasion, the fingular pleafure with which he had joined in them. Indeed, it was no fmall fatisfaction to me, to have an opportunity of recommending fuch a valuable friend to the protection and bleffing, with that particular freedom and enlargement on what was peculiar in his circumftances, which hardly any other fituation, unlefs we had been quite alone, could fo conveniently have admitted. We went from thence to the table of a perfon of diffinction in the neighbourhood, where he had an opportunity of fhewing in how decent and graceful a manner he could unite the Chriftian and the gentleman, and give conversation an improving and religious turn, without violating any of the rules of polite behaviour, or faying or doing any thing which looked at all conftrained or affected. Here we took our laft embrace, committed each other to the care of the God of heaven; and the colonel purfued his journey to the north, where he fpent all the remainder of his days.

§ 130. The more I reflect upon this appointment of Providence, the more I diftern of the beauty and wifdom of it : not only as it led directly to that glorious period of life with which God had determined to honour him, and in which, I think, it becomes all his friends to rejoice, but alfo, as the retirement on which he entered could not but have a happy tendency to favour his more immediate and complete preparation for fo fpeedy a remove; to which we may add, that it muft probably have a very powerful influence to promote the interefts of religion (incomparably the greatest of all interests) among the members of his own family; who must furely edify much by fuch daily leffons as they received from his lips, when they faw them illuftrated and enforced by fo admirable an example, and this for two complete years. It is the more remarkable, as I cannot find from the memoirs of his life in my hands, that he had ever been fo long at home fince he had a family, or indeed from his childhood, ever fo long at a time in any one place.

§ 131. With how clear a luftre his lamp thone, and with what holy vigour his loins were girded up in the fervice of his God, in thefe his latter days, I learn in part from the letters of feveral excellent perfons in the miniftry, or in fecular life, with whom I have fince converfed or corresponded. And in his many letters, dated from Bankton during this period, I have ftill farther evidence, how hapby he was, amidit those infirmities of body which his tendernefs for me would feldom allow him to mention; for it appears from them, what a daily intercourfe he kept up with heaven, and what delightful communion with God crowned his attendance on public ordinances, and his fweet hours of devout retirement. He mentions his facramental opportunities with peculiar relifh, crying out as in a holy rapture, in reference to one and arother of them, " Oh how gracious a Mafter " do we ferve ! how pleafant is his fervice ! " how rich the entertainment of his love ! " yet, oh how poor and cold are our fervices !" But I will not multiply quotations of this fort, after those I have given above, which may be a fufficient fpecimen of many more in the fame ftrain. This hint may fuffice to fhew, that the fame ardour of foul held out in a great measure to the last ; and indeed it feems, that:

towards the clofe of life, like the flame of a lamp almost expiring, it fometimes exerted an unufual blaze.

§ 132. He fpent much of his time at Bankton in religious folitude; and one most intimately conversant with him affures me, that the traces of that delightful converse with God which he enjoyed in it, might eafily be difcerned in that folemn, yet cheerful countenance, with which he often came out of his closet. Yet his exercises there mult fometimes have been very mournful, confidering the melancholy views which he had of the flate of our public affairs. " I fhould be glad," fays he, (in a letter which he fent me, about the close of the year 1743), " to hear what wife " and good people among you think of the " prefent circumflances of things. For my " own part, though I thank God I fear no-" thing for myfelf, my apprehenfions for the " public are very gloomy, confidering the de-" plorable prevalency of almost all kinds of wickedness amongst us; the natural confequence of the contempt of the gofpel. I am " daily offering my prayers to God for this " finful land of ours, over which his judge-" ment feems to be gathering; and my " ftrength is fometimes fo exhausted with " those firong cries and tears, which I pour

" out before God on this occafion, that I am " hardly able to fland when I arile from my " knees." If we have many remaining to fland in the breach with equal fervency, I hope, crying as our provocations are, God will lill be intreated for us, and fave us.

§ 133. Mold of the other letters I had the pleafure of receiving from him after our laft feparation, are either filled, like thole of former years, with tender expressions of affectionate folicitude for my domesite comfort and public usefulness, or relate to the writings I publiched during this time, or to the affairs of his eldeft fon, then under my care. But thefe are things which are by no means of a nature to be communicated here. It is enough to remark in the general, that the Christian was fill mingled with all the care of the friend and the parent.

§ 134. But I think it incumbent upon me to obferve, that during this time, and for fome preceding years, his attention, ever wakeful to fuch concerns, was much engaged by fome religious appearances, which happened about this time both in England and Scotland; of which fome may be curious to know his fentiments. He communicated them to me with the moft unreferved freedom; and I cannot apprehend myfelf under any engagements to conceal them, as I am perfuaded that it will be no prejudice to his memory that they fhould be publicly known.

§ 135. It was from Colonel Gardiner's pen that I received the first notice of that evermemorable fcene which was opened at Kilfyth, under the ministry of the Rev. Mr. M'Culloch, in the month of February, 1741-2. He communicated to me the copy of two letters from that eminently favoured fervant of God, giving an account of that extraordinary fuccefs which had within a few days accompanied his preaching ; when, as I remember, in a little more than a fortnight, a hundred and thirty fouls, who had before continued in long infenfibility under the faithful preaching of the gofpel, were awakened on a fudden to attend to it, as if it had been a new revelation brought down from heaven, and attefted by as aftonifhing miracles as ever were wrought by Peter or Paul; though they heard it only from a perfon under whofe ministry they had fat for feveral years. Struck with a power and majefty in the word of God, which they had never felt before, they crowded his houle night and day, making their applications to him for fpiritual direction and affiftance, with an earneftnefs and folicitude, which floods of tears and crics, that fwallowed up their own words and his, could not fufficiently express. The Colonel mentioned this at first to me, " as " matter of eternal praife, which he knew " would rejoice my very foul :" And when he faw it fpread in the neighbouring parts, and obferved the glorious reformation which it produced in the lives of great multitudes, and the abiding fruits of it for fucceeding months and years, it increased and confirmed his joy. But the facts relating to this matter have been laid before the world in fo authentic a manner, and the agency of divine grace in them has been fo rationally vindicated, and fo pathetically reprefented, in what the reverend and judicious Mr. Webster has written upon that fubject, that it is altogether fuperfluous for me to add any thing farther than my hearty prayers, that the work may be as extensive as it was apparently glorious and divine.

§ 136. It was with great pleafure that he received any intelligence of a like kind from England; whether the clergy of the elablidhed church or diffenting minifters, whether our own countrymen or foreigners, were the inflruments of it. And whatever weakneffes or errors might mingle themfelves with valuable qualities in fuch as were active in fuch a work, he appeared to love and honour them in proportion to the degree he faw reafor to believe their hearts were devoted to the fervice of Chrift, and their attempts owned and fucceeded by him. I remember, that mentioning one of these gentlemen who had been remarkably fuccefsful in his ministry, and seemed to have met with fome very unkind usage, he fays, "I " had rather be that defpifed perfecuted man, " to be an inftrument in the hand of the Spi-" rit, in converting fo many fouls, and build-" ing up fo many in their holy faith, than I " would be emperor of the whole world." Yet this fleady and judicious Christian, (for fuch he most affuredly was), at the fame time that he effeemed a man for his good intention and his worthy qualities, did not fuffer himfelf to be hurried away into all the fingularity of his fentiments, or to admire his imprudences or excelles. On the contrary, he faw and lamented that artifice which the great father of fraud has fo long and fo fuccefsfully been practifing; who, like the enemies of Ifrael, when he cannot entirely prevent the building of God's temple, does as it were offer his affiftance to carry on the work, that he may thereby get the most effectual opportunities of obstructing it. The Colonel often expressed his aftonifhment at the wide extremes into which fome, whom, on the whole, he thought very worthy men, were permitted to run in many doctrinal and fpeculative points; and difcerned how evidently it appeared from hence, that we cannot argue the truth of any doctrine from the fuccefs of the preacher; fince this would be a kind of demonstration. (if I may be allowed the expression) which might equally prove both parts of a contradistion. Yet when he observed, that an high regard to the atonement and righteoufnels of Chrift, and to the free grace of God in him, exerted by the operation of the Divine Spirit, was generally common to all who had been peculiarly fuccefsful in the conversion and reformation of men, (how widely foever their judgments might differ in other points, and how warmly foever they might oppofe each other in confequence of that diverfity;) it tended greatly to confirm his faith in thefe principles, as well as to open his heart in love to all of every denomination, who maintained an affectionate regard to them. And though what he remarked as to the conduct and fuccels of minifters of the moft opposite firains of preaching, confirmed him in thefe fentiments ; yet he always effeemed and loved virtuous and benevolent men, even where he thought them most mislaken in the notions they formed of religion, or in the methods by which they attempted to ferve it.

§ 137. While I thus reprefent what all who knew him muft foon have observed of Colonel Gardiner's affectionate regard to these peculiar doctrines of our holy religion, it is neceffary that I should also inform my reader, that it was not his judgment that the attention of minifters or their hearers fhould be wholly ingroffed by thefe, excellent as they are; but that all the parts of the fcheme of truth and duty fhould be regarded in their due connection and proportion. Far from that diftempered tafte, which can bear nothing but cordials, it was his deliberate judgment that the Taw fhould be preached, as well as the gofpel; and hardly any thing gave him greater offence than the irreverent manner in which fome, who have been ignorantly extolled as the moft zealous evangelical preachers, have fometimes been tempted to fpeak of the former; much indeed to the fcandal of all confiftent and judicious Chriftians. He delighted to be inftructed in his duty, and to hear much of the inward exercifes of the fpiritual and divine life. And he always wished, fo far as I could obferve, to have thefe topics treated in a rational, as well as a fpiritual manner, with folidity and order of thought, with perfpicuity and weight of expreffion; as well knowing that religion is a most reasonable service ; that God has not chosen idiots or lunatics as the inftruments, or nonfenfe as the means of building up his church; and that, though the charge of enthufiafin is often fixed on Christianity and its ministers, in a wild, undeferved, and indeed (on the whole) enthusiaftical manner, by fome of the loudeft or most folemn pretenders to reafon ; yet there is really fuch a thing as enthuliafm, against which it becomes the true friends of the revelation to be diligently on their guard, left Christianity, instead of being exalted, fhould be greatly corrupted and debafed, and all manner of abfurdity, both in doctrine and practice, introduced, by methods, which (like perfecution) throw truth and falfehood on a level, and render the groffeft errors at once more plaufible and more incurable. He had too much candour and equity. to fix general charges of this nature; but he was really (and I think, not vainly) apprebenfive, that the emifiaries and agents of the moft corrupt church that ever diffionoured the Chriftian name, (by which, it will eafily be underftood, I mean that of Rome), might very poffibly infinuate themfelves into focieties, to which they could not otherwife have accefs, and make their advantage of that total refignation of the underflanding, and contempt of reafon and learning, which nothing but ignorance, delirium, or knavery can dictate, to lead men blindfold whither it pleafed, till it fet them down at the foot of an altar, where tranfublanticiton itfelf is conferrated.

§ 138. I know not where I can more properly introduce another part of the Colonel's character, which, obnoxious as it was. I have not yet touched upon ; I mean his tendernefs to those who were under any spiritual distress, wherein he was indeed an example to miniflers, in a duty, more peculiarly theirs. I have feen many amiable inftances of this myfelf; and I have been informed of many others: One of which happened about the time of that awakening in the western parts of Scotland. which I touched upon above, when the Rev. Mr. M'Laurin of Glafgow found occafion to witnefs to the great propriety, judgment, and felicity of manner with which he addreffed fpiritual confolation to an afflicted foul, who applied to the professor at a time when he had not an opportunity immediately to give audience to the cafe. And indeed, as long ago as the year 1726, I find him writing to a friend in a ftrain of tendernefs in this regard, which might well have become the most affectionate.

and experienced paftor. He there congratulates him on fome religious enjoyments lately received, (in part, it feems, by his means), when among others he has this modeft expreffion : " If I have been made any way the " means of doing you good, give the whole " glory to God, for he has been willing to " fhew, that the power was entirely of him-" felf, fince he has been pleafed to make ufe " of fo very weak an inftrument." In the fame letter he admonifhes his friend, that he should not be two much furprized, if after having been (as he expresses it), upon the mount, he should be brought into the valley again; and reminds him that " we live by faith, and " not by fenfible affurance ;" reprefenting, that there are fome fuch full communications from God as feem almost to fwallow up the actings of faith, from whence they take their rife : " Whereas, when a Chriftian who walks " in darkneis, and fees no light, will yet hang " (as it were) on the report of an abfent le-" fus, and," as one expresses it, in allufion to the flory of Iacob and Jofeph, " can put him-" felf as on the chariot of the promifes, to be " born on to him, whom now he fees not; " there may be fublimer and more acceptable " actings of a pure and ftrong faith, than in ** moments which afford the foul a much " more rapturous delight." This is the fubflance of what he fays in the excellent letter. Some of the phrafes made ufe of might not perhaps be intelligible to feveral of my readers, for which reafon I do not exactly tranforibe them all: But this is plainly and fully his meaning, and moft of the words are his own. The fentiment is furely very juft and important; and happy would it be for many excellent perfons, who, through wrong notions of the nature of faith (which was never more mifreprefented than now among fome), are perplexing themfelves with moft groundlefs doubts and feruples, if it were more generally underdood, admitted, and confidered.

§ 139. An endeared friend, who was moft intimately converfant with the Colonel during the two laft years of his life, has favoured me with an account of fome little circumflances relating to him, which I effeem as precious fragments, by which the confiftent tenor of his charafter may be farther illufrated. I fhall therefore infert them here, without being very folicitous as to the order in which they are introduced.

§ 140. He perceived himfelf evidently in a very declining flate from his firft arrival in-Britain, and feemed to entertain a fixed apprehenfion, that he flould continue but a little while longer in life. " He expected death." fays my good correspondent, " and was de-" lighted with the prospect," which did not grow lefs amiable by a nearer approach. The word of God, with which he had as intimate an acquaintance as most men I ever knew, and on which (efpecially on the New Teftament), have heard him make many very judicious and accurate remarks, was ftill his daily ftudy ; and it furnished him with matter of frequent conversation, much to the edification and comfort of those that were about him. It was recollected, that among other paffages he had lately fpoken of the following, as having made a deep imprefion on his mind : My foul, wait thou only upon God ! He would repeat it again and again, only, only, only ! So plainly did he fee, and fo deeply did he feel, the vanity of creature.confidences and expectations. With the ftrongeft atteftation would he often mention those words in Ifaiah, as verified by long experience : " Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whofe mind is flayed on thee, becaufe he truffeth in thee." And with peculiar fatisfaction would he utter thefe heroic words in Habakkuk, which he found armour of proof against every fear and every contingency : " Though the fig-tree shall not bloffom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive fhall fail, and the fields fhall yield no meat; the flocks shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls : Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my falvation." The 145th pfalm was alfo fpoken of by him with great delight, and Dr. Watt's vertion of it; as well as feveral other of that excellent perfon's poetical composures. My friend who tranfmits to me this account, adds the following words, which I defire to infert, with the deepeft fentiments of unfeigned humility and felf-abafement before God, as most unworthy the honour of contributing in the leaft degree to the joys and graces of one fo much my fuperior in every part of the Chriftian character : " As the joy with which " good men fee the happy fruits of their la-" bours, makes a part of the prefent reward " of the fervants of God and the friends of " Jefus, it must not be omitted, even in a let-" ter to you, that your fpiritual hymns were " among his moft delightful and foul-impro-" ving repafts ; particularly those on behold-" ing tranfgreffors with grief, and Chrift's " meffage." What is added concerning my book of the Rife and Progrefs of Religion. and the terms in which he expressed his effeem of it, I cannot fuffer to pais my pen; only defire most fincerely to blefs God, that efpecially by the laft chapters of that treatife, I had an opportunity at fo great a diffance of exhibiting fome offices of Chriftjan friendfhip to this excellent perfon in the clofing fcenes of life; which it would have been my greateft joy to have performed in perfon, had Providence permitted me then to have been near him.

§ 141. The former of thole hymns my correspondent mentions, as having been to agreeable to Colonel Gardiner. I have given the reader above, at the end of feft. 101. The latter, which is called Chrift's Meflage, took its rife from Luke iv. 18. & feq. and is as follows:

Hark ! the glad found ! The Saviour comes, The Saviour promis'd long ! Let ev'ry heart prepare a throne, And ev'ry voice a fong.

> On him the Spirit largely pour'd Exerts its facred fire : Wildom, and might, and zeal, and love, His holy breaft infpire.

He comes the prifoners to releafe In Satan's bondage held : The gates of brafs before him burft, The iron fetters yield.

He comes, from thickeft films of vice, To clear the mental ray, And on the eye-balls of the blind To pour celeftial day *.

He comes, the broken heart to bind, The bleeding foul to cure ; And with the treasures of his grace T' inrich the humble poor.

His filver trumpets publish loud The jub'lee of the Lord; Our debts are all remitted now, Our heritage restor'd.

Our glad hofannahs, Prince of Peace, Thy welcome fhall proclaim; And heaven's eternal arches ring With thy beloved name.

§ 142. There is one hymn more I thall beg leave to add, plain as it is, which Colonel Gardiner has been heard to mention with particular regard, as exprcfling the inmoff entiments of his foul; and they were undoubtedly for, in the last rational moments of his expiring life. It is called, *Chrift precious to the Belie*var; and was compoded to be fung after a fermon on 1 Peter II. 7.

. This flanza is mostly borrowed from Mr. Pope.

Jefus! I love thy charming name, 'Tis mufic to my ear : Fain would I found it out fo loud, That earth and heaven thould hear.

 Yes, thou art precious to my foul, My trainfport, and my truft : Jewels to thee are gaudy toys, And gold is fordid duft.

All my capacious powers can with, In thee moft richly meet : Nor to my eyes is life fo dear, Nor friendship half fo fweet.

All my capacious pow'rs can wifh, In thee moft richly meet : Nor to my eyes is life fo dear, Nor friendship half fo fweet.

Thy grace fill dwells upon my heart, And fheds its fragrance there; The nobleft balm of all its wounds, The cordial of its care.

I'll fpeak the honours of thy name With my laft lab'ring breath ; Then fpeechlefs, clafp thee in my arms, The antidote of death.

§ 143. Those who were intimate with Colonel Gardiner must have observed how ready he was to give a devotional turn to any fubject that occurred. And in particular, the fpiritual and heavenly disposition of his foul discovered itself in the reflections and improvements which he made, when reading hiftory; in which he took a great deal of pleafure, as perfons remarkable for their knowledge of mankind, and obfervation of providence, generally do. I have an inftance of this before me, which, though too natural to be at all furprifing, will, I dare fay, be pleafing to the devout mind. He had been just reading in . Rollin's extract from Xenophon, the anfwer which the Lady of Tigranes made, when all the company were extolling Cyrus, and expreffing the admiration with which his appearance and behaviour ftruck them. The queftion being afked her, What fhe thought of him ? fhe anfwered, I don't know, I did not obferve him. On what then, faid one of the company, did you fix your attention? On him, replied the, (referring to the generous fpeech which her hufband had juft made), who faid he would give a thousand lives to ranfon my liberty. " Oh," cried the Co'onel, when reading it, " how ought we to fix our " eyes and hearts on Him, who, not in offer, " but in reality, gave his own precious life " to ranfom us from the molt dreadful flave-

" ry, and from eternal defruction " But this is only one inflance among a thoufand. His heart was fo habitually fet upon divine things, and he had fuch a permanent and overflowing fenfe of the love of Chrift, that he could not forbear connecting fuch reflections, with a multitude of more diftant occafions occurring in daily life, where lefs advanced Chriftians would not have thought of them : And thus, like our great mafter, he made every little incident a fource of devotion, and an influrment of holy zeal.

§ 144. Enfectbled as his confliction was, he was fill intent on improving his time to fome valuable purpofes: And when his friends expolulated with him, that he gave his body fo little refl, he ufed to anfwer "It will refl oneenough in the grave."

§ 145. The July before his death, he was perfuaded to take a journey to Scarborough for the recovery of his health; from which he was at leaft encouraged to expect fome little revival. After this he had thoughts of going to London, and defigned to have fpent part of September at Northampton. The expectation of this was -mutually agreeable; but providence faw fit to difcoucert the fcheme. His love for his friends in thefe parts occafioned manded back : And I am pretty confident, from the manner in which he expressed himfelf in one of his laft letters to me, that he had fome more important reafons for withing an opportunity of making a London journey just at that crifis ; which, the reader will remember, was before the rebellion broke out. But as Providence determined it otherwife he acquiefced; and I am well fatisfied, that could he have diffinctly forefeen the adproaching event, fo far as it concerned his own perfon, he would have effeemed it the happieft fummons he ever received. While he was at Scarborough, I find by a letter dated from thence, July 26, 1745, that he had been informed of the gaiety which fo unfeafonably prevailed at Edinburgh, where great multitudes were then fpending their time in balls, affemblies, and other gay amufements, little mindful of the rod of God which was then banging over them ; on which occasion he hath this expression : "I am greatly furprised that " the people of Edinburgh fhould be employ-" ed in fuch foolish diversions when our fitu-" ation is at prefent more melancholy than " ever I faw it in my life. But there is one " thing which I am very fure of, that comhim to express fome regret on his being com-

§ 146. Quickly after his return home, the flame burft out, and his regiment was ordered to Stirling. It was in the caffle there that his lady and eldeft daughter enjoyed the laft happy hours of his company ; and I think it was about eight or ten days before his death, that he parted from them there. A remarkable circumftance attended that parting, which hath been touched upon by furviving friends in more than one of their letters to me. His Lady was to affected when the took her laft leave of him. that the could not forbear burfting out into a flood of tears, with other marks of unufual emotion. And when he asked her the reafon, fhe urged the apprehension fhe had of lofing fuch an invaluable friend, amidft the dangers to which he was then called out, as a very fufficient apology. Upon which fhe took particular notice, that whereas he had generally comforted her on fuch occasions, by pleading with her that remarkable hand of providence which had fo frequently, in former inftances, been exerted for his prefervation, and that in the greateft extremity, he faid nothing of it now ; but only replied, in his fententious manner, " We have an eternity to " fpend together."

§ 147. That heroic contempt of death, which had often difcovered itfelf in the midft of former dangers, was manifested now in his discourse with feveral of his most intimate friends. I have referved for this place one genuine expression of it many years before, which I thought might be mentioned with fome advantage here. In July 1725, he had been fent to fome place, not far from Hamilton, to quell a mutiny among fome of our troops. I know not the particular occasion; but I remember to have heard him mention it as fo fierce a one, that he fcarce ever apprehended himfelf in a more hazardous circumftance. Yet he quelled it by his prefence alone, and the expostulations he used ; evidently putting his life into his hand to do it. The particulars of the flory flruck me much; but I do not fo exactly remember them, as to venture to relate them here. I only obferve, that in a letter, dated July 16. that year. which I have now before me, and which evidently refers to this event, he writes thus : " I have been very buly, hurried about from " place to place ; but, bleffed be God, all is " over without bloodfhed. And pray let me " afk, What made you fhew fo much concern-" for me in your last? Were you afraid II

"fhould get to heaven before you? Or can any evil befall those who are followers of that which is good *?"

§ 148. And as the fewere his fentiments in the vigour of his days, foneither did declining years and the infirmities of a broken conflitution on the one hand, our any defires of enjoying the honours and profits of fo high a flation, or (what was much more to him) the converfe of the moft afficitionate of wives and fo many amiable children and friends on the other, cnervate his fpirits in the leaft: East as he had in former years often expredied it to me, and feveral others, as his defire, "that if "i twere the will of God, he might have "fome honourable call to factifice his life in "defice of religion and the liberties of his "c country;" fo when it appeared to him

* I doubt not but this will remind 6me of my readers of that noble fpech of Zuingulia, when (according to the uiage of that country) attending his flock to a battle, in which their religion and thereins were all at fluke, on his receiving a moral wound by a bullet, of which he foor expired, while his friends were and the first attoulment of grief, he baveby faid as he was dying, "& Sequid hoc infortunit?"<sup>16</sup> is this would have celebrated tobh a femence, if i had some from the lip of an ancient Roman? A Strange, that he more kind followers fhould be defined for his fluk? but foi it is, and followers fhould be defined for his fluk? but foi it is, conseling confirmed by those that fluxies most to overthrow it.

most probable that he might be called to it immediately, he met the fummons with the greateft readinefs. This appears in part from a letter which he wrote to the Rev. Mr. Adams of Falkirk, just as he was marching from Stirling, which was only eight days before his death ; " The rebels, fays he, " are " advancing to crofs the Frith ; but I truft in " the Almighty God, who doth whatfoever " he pleafes, in the armies of heaven, and a-" mong the inhabitants of the earth." And the fame gentleman tells me, that a few days after the date of this, he marched through Falkirk with his regiment; and though he was then in fo languifhing a flate, that he needed his affiftance as a fecretary to write for fome reinförcement, which might put it in his power to make a stand, (as he was very defirous to have done), he expressed a most genuine and noble contempt of life, when to be exposed in the defence of a worthy cause.

§ 149. Thefe featiments wrought in him to the laft in the moft effectual manner; and he feemed for a while to have infufed them into the regiment which he commanded: For they expressed fuch a fpirit in their march from Stirling, that I am affured the Colonel was obliged to exert all his authority to prevent their making incurfions on the rebel army, which then lay very near them ; and had it been thought proper to fend him the reinforcement he requefted, none can fay what the confequence might have been : But he was ordered to march as fast as possible to meet Sir John Cope's forces at Dunbar ; which he did. And that hafty retreat, in concurrence with the news which they foon after received of the furrender of Edinburgh to the rebels. (either by the treachery or weakness of a few, in opposition to the judgment of by far the greater and better part of the inhabitants), ftruck a panic into both the regiments of dragoons, which became vilible in fome very apparent and remarkable circumfrances in their behaviour, which I forbear to relate. This affected Colonel Gardiner fo much, that on the Thursday before the fatal action at Preftonpans, he intimated to an officer of confiderable rank and note, (from whom I had it by a very fure channel of conveyance), that he expected the event would be, as in fact it was. In this view, there is all imaginable reafon to believe he had formed his refolution as to his own perfonal conduct, which was, " that he would not, in cafe of the flight of " those under his command, retreat with " them ;" by which, as it feemed, he was reafonably apprehenfive he might have flained

the honour of his former fervices, and have given fome occasion for the enemy to have fpokca reproachfully. He much rather chofe, if Providence gave him the call, to leave in his death an example of fidelity and bravery, which might very probably be (as in fact it feems indeed to have been) of much greater importance to his country, than any other fervice, which in the few days of remaining life he could expect to render it. I conclude thefe to have been his views, not only from what I knew of his general character and temper, but likewife from fome intimations which he gave to a very worthy perfon from Edinburgh, who vifited him the day before the action; to whom he faid, " I cannot influence " the conduct of others, as I could with, but " I have one life to facrifice to my country's " fafety, and I shall not spare it;" or words to that effect.

§ 150. I have heard fuch a multitude of inconfiltent reports of the circunflances of Colonel Gardiner's death, that I had almoft defpaired of being able to give my reader any particular fatisfaction concerning fo interefling a forem. But, by a happy accident, I have very lately had an opportunity of being exactly informed of the whole, by that brave man Mr. John Fofler, his faithful fervant, (and worthy of the honour of ferving fuch a mafer), whom I had feen with him at my houfe fome years before. He attended him in his lath hours, and gave me the narration at large; which he would be ready, if it were requilite, to attelf upon oath. From his mouth I wroce it down with the utmoft exactnefs, and could eafily believe, from the genuine and affectionate manner in which he related the particulars, that, according to his own firking exprefilion, " his eye and his heart were always upon his " honourde mafter during the whole time *."

§ 151. On Friday, September 20. (the day before the battle which transmitted him to his immortal crown), when the whole army was drawn up. I think about noon, the Colonel rode through all the ranks of his own regiment, addreffing them at once in the mol refrefetful and animating manner, both as foldiers and as Chriftians, to engage them to exert themfelves courageoufly in the fervice of their country, and to neglech nothing that might have a tendency to prepare them for whatever event might happen. They feemed much affected with the addrefs, and expressed a very ardent defire of attacking the enemy immediately : A defire, in which he and another very gallant officer of diftinguilhed rank, dignity, and character, both for bravery and conduct, would gladly have gratified them, if it had been in the power of either. He earneftly prefied it on the commanding officer, both as the foldiers were then in better fpirits than it could be fuppofed they would be after having paffed the night under arms; and alfo as the circumftance of making an attack would be fome encouragement to them, and probably fome terror to the enemy, who would have had the difadvantage of flanding on the defence: A diladvantage with which those wild barbarians (for fuch most of them were) perhaps would have been more ftruck than better difciplined troops, efpecially when they fought against the laws of their country too. He alfo apprehended, that by marching to meet them, fome advantage might have been fecured with regard to the ground; with which, it is natural to imagine, he must have been perfectly acquainted, as it lay just at his own door, and he had rode over it fo many hundred times. When I mention thefe things

• Jude as I am putting the 1st hand to thefe memoirs, March a. 136-7, I have met with a corporation in Colord Lafedley's regiment, whe was allo an eye witned to what have been as the second the second second second second and the second second have been been been been model particular is for castly greenable to the model particular is for castly greenable to the model particular is for a starty greenable to the model particular is for a starty greenable to the second second second second second second second his tellimony, if there were not for many other confiderations to render it convincing.

I do not pretend to be capable of judging how far this advice was on the whole right. A variety of circumftances, to be unknown, might make it otherwife. It is certain, however, that it was brave. But it was over-tuled in this refpect, as it also was in the difposition of the cannon, which he would have had planted in the centre of our finall army, rather than just before his regiment, which was in the right wing ; where he was apprehenfive that the horfes, which had not been in any engagement before, might be thrown into fome diforder by the difcharge fo very near them. He urged this the more, as he thought the attack of the rebels might probably be made on the centre of the foot, where he knew there were fome brave men, on whofe flanding he thought under God the fuccefs of the day depended. When he found, that he could not carry either of these points, nor fome others, which, out of regard to the common fafety, he infifted upon with fome unufual earneftnefs, he dropped fome intimations of the confequences which he apprehended, and which did in fact follow; and fubmitting to Providence, fpent the remainder of the day in making as good a difpolition as circumftances would allow *

* Several of these circumflances have fince been confirmed by the concurrent testimony of another very credible

§ 152. He continued all night under arms, wrapped up in his cloak, and generally fheltered under a rick of barley which happened to be in the field. About three in the morning, he called his domeitic fervants to him, of which there were four in waiting. He difmiffed three of them, with a most affectionate Chriftian advice, and fuch folemn charges relating to the performance of their duty and the care of their fouls, as feemed plainly to intimate, that he apprehended it at leaft very probable he was taking his laft farewell of them. There is great reafon to believe. that he fpent the little remainder of the time, which could not be much above an hour, in those devout exercises of foul, which had fo long been habitual to him, and to which fo many circumstances did then concur to call him. The army was alarmed by break of day, by the noife of the rebels approach, and who was a volunteer at Edinburgh just before the rebels entered the place, who faw Colonel Gardiner come from in a chaife, being (as from that circumftance he supposed) of riding on horfeback. He obferved Colonel Gardiner in difcourfe with feveral officers the evening before the engagement ; at which time, it was afterwards reported; he gave he afterwards faw the Colonel walk by himfelf in a very pepfive manner.

the attack was made before fun rife, yet when it was light enough to difcern what paffed. As foon as the enemy came within gun-fhot, they made a furious fire; and it is faid that the dragoons, which conflituted the left wing, immediately fled. The Colonel, at the beginning of the onlet, which in the whole lafted but a few minutes, received a wound by a bullet in his left breaft, which made him give a fudgen fpring in his faddle; upon which his fervant, who had led the horfe, would have perfuaded him to retreat; but he faid, it was only a wound in the flefh; and fought on, though he prefently after received a fhot in his right thigh. In the mean time it was difcerned, that fome of the enemies fell by him, and particularly one man who had made him a treacherous vifit but a few days before, with great professions of zeal for the prefent eftablifhment.

§ 153. Events of this kind paß in lefs time than the defoription of them can be written, or than it can be read. The Colonel was for a few moments fupported by his men, and particularly by that worthy perfon Lieutenaut Colonel Whitney, who was fhot through the arm here, and a few months after fell nobly in the battle of Falkirk, and by Lieutenaut Weft, a man of diffinguified bravery, as allo

by about fifteen dragoons, who flood by him to the laft. But after a faint fire, the regiment in general was feized with a pannic; and though their Colonel and fome other gallant officers, did what they could to rally them once or twice. they at laft took a precipitate flight : And juft in the moment when Colonel Gardner feemed to be making a paufe, to deliberate what duty required him to do in fuch a circumftance, an accident happened, which muft, I think, in the judgment of every worthy and generous man, be allowed a fufficient apology for exposing his life to fo great hazard, when his regiment had left him *. He faw a party of the foot, who were then bravely fighting near him, and whom he was ordered to fupport, had no officer to head them ; upon which he faid eagerly, in the hearing of the perfon from whom I had this account, " Those brave " fellows would be cut to pieces for want of " a commander ;" or words to that effect. Which while he was fpeaking, he rode up to them, and cried out aloud, " Fire on, my lads, " and fear nothing." But just as the words were out of his mouth, an Highlander advaned towards him with a feythe fastened to a long pole, with which he gave him fuch a deep wound on his right arm, that his fword dropped out of his hand; and at the fame time feveral others coming about him, while he was thus dreadfully intangled with that cruel weapon, he was dragged off from his horfe. The moment lie fell, another Highlander, who, if the king's evidence at Carlifle may be credited, (as I know not why they fhould not, though the unhappy creature died denying it) was one M'Naught, who was executed about a year after, gave him a ftroke, either with a broad-fword or a Lochaber-axe. (for my informant could not exactly diffinguifh), on the tal blow. All that his faithful attendant faw farther at this time was, that as his hat was fpeak, " Take care of yourfelf :" Upon which the fervant retired.

§ 154. It was reported at Edinburgh on the day of the battle, by what feemed a confiderable authority, that as the Colonel lay in his wounds, he faid to a chief of the opposite fide. " You are fighting for an earthly crown ; I am " going to receive an heavenly one ;" or fomething to that purpofe. When I preached the fermon, long fince printed, on occafion of his death, I had great reafon to believe this report was true; though, before the publication of it, I began to be in doubt. And on the whole, after the most accurate inquiry I could possibly make at this distance, I cannot get any convincing evidence of it. Yet I must here obferve, that it does not appear impossible that fomething of this kind might indeed be uttered by him ; as his fervant teftifies, that he fpoke to him after receiving that fatal blow, which would feem most likely to have taken away the power of fpeech ; and as it is certain, he lived feveral hours after he fell. If, therefore, any thing of this kind did happen, it must have been just about this instant. But as to the ftory of his being taken prifoner and carried to the pretended Prince, (who by the way afterwards rode his horfe, and entered.

upon it into Derby), with feveral other circumflances which were grafted upon interview, there is the most undoubted evidence of its falfehood : For his attendant mentioned above affures me, that he himfelf immediately fled to a mill, at the diffance of about two miles' from the fpot of ground on which the Colonel fell ; where he changed his drefs, and, difguifed like a miller's fervant, returned with a cart as foon as poffible ; which yet was not till near two hours after the engagement. The hurry of the action was then pretty well over, and he found his much-honoured mafter, not only plundered of his watch, and other things of value, but also ftripped of his upper garments and boots, yet still breathing. And adds, that though he were not capable of fpeech, yet on taking him up, he opened his eyes; which makes it fomething queftionable, whether he were altogether infenfible. In this condition, and in this manner, he conveyed him to the church of Tranent, from whence he was immediately taken into the minister's house and laid in bed; where he continued breathing and frequently groaning, 'till about eleven in the forenoon, when he took his final leave of pain and forrow, and undoubtedly rofe to those diffinguished glories which are referved for those who have been so eminently and remarkably faithful unto death.

§ 155. From the moment in which he fell, it was no longer a battle, but a rout and carnage. The cruelties which the rebels (as it is generally faid, under the command of Lord Elcho) inflicted on fome of the king's troops after they had afked quarter, are dreadfully legible on the countenances of many who furvived it. They entered Colonel Gardiner's houfe, before he was carried off from the field; and notwithstanding the strict orders which the unhappy Duke of Perth (whofe conduct is faid to have been very humane in many inftances), gave to the contrary, every thing of value was plundered, to the very curtains of the beds, and hangings of the rooms. His papers were all thrown into the wildeft diforder, and his houfe made an hofpital for the reception of those who were wounded in the action.

§ 156. Such was the clofe of a life which had been to zealoufly devoted to God, and filled up with fo many honourable fervices. This was the death of him who had been fo highly favoured by God, in the method by which he was brought back to him after fo long and fo great an eftrangement, and in the progrefs of fo many years, during which (in the exprefive phrafe of the moft ancient of writers), he had walked with him ;--to fall as God threatened the people of his wrath that they should do, " with tumult, with should, and with the found of the trumpet," Amos ii. 2. Several other very worthy, and fome of them very eminent perfons, fhared the fame fate; either now in the battle of Preflonpans, or quickly after in that of Falkirk *: Providence, no doubt, permitting it, to effablish our faith in the rewards of an invisible world, as well as to teach us, to ceafe from man, and fax our dependence on an almighty arm.

§ 157. The remains of this Chriftian hero, (as I believe every reader is now convinced he may juftly be called), were interred the Tucfday following, September 24. at the parith church at Tranent; where he had ufual attended divine fervice with great folemnity.

• Of their none were more memorable than those illustrices have been so it reasons and be. I thought of adding from socuent of their maryrs in the caule of liberty and religion in this place; but having had the pleafure of receiving from fome very cedible and worthy perform, is whom they were well known, a larger account of them and their family, than can coveniently be comprehended in a note, I chooft to make it a diffunct article in the supperdix, No. III, by which I querion not but I fhall oblyge every intelligent and generous reader; and I think myfdl very happy to have it in my power to do it.

His obfequies were honoured with the prefence of fome perfors of difliction, who were not afraid of paying that laft piece of refpect to his memory, though the country was then in the hands of the enemy. But indeed there was no great hazard in this; for his character was fo well known, that even they themfelves fpoke honourably of him, and feemed to join with his friends in lamenting the fall of fo have and fo worthy a man.

§ 158. The remoteft pofterity will remember, for whom the honour of fubduing this unnatural and pernicious rebellion was referved, and it will endear the perfon of the illuftrious Duke of Cumberland, to all but the open or fecret abettors of it in the prefent age, and confectate his name to immortal honours among all the friends of religion and liberty who fhall arife after us. And I dare fay, it will not be imagined, that I at all derogate from his glory, in fuggefting, That the memory of that valiant and excellent perfon whofe memoirs I am now concluding, may in fome measure have contributed to that fignal and complete victory with which God was pleafed to crown the arms of his Royal Highnefs : For the force of fuch an example is very animating, and a painful confcioufnefs of having deferted fuch a commander in fuch extremity, muft at leaft awaken, where there was any fpark of generofity, an earneft defire to avenge his death on thofe who had facrificed his blocd, and that of fo many other excellent perfons, to the views of their ambition, rapine, or bigotry.

§ 159. The reflections I have made in my funeral fermon on my honoured friend, and in the dedication of it to his worthy and moft afflicted Lady, fuperfede many things which might otherwife have properly been added here. I conclude therefore, with humbly acknowledging the wifdom and goodnefs of that awful providence, which drew fo thick a gloom around him in the last hours of his life, that the luftre of his virtues might dart through it with a more vivid and obfervable ray. It is abundant matter of thankfulnefs, that fo fignal a monument of grace, and ornament of the Christian profession, was raifed in our age and country, and fpared for fo many hopourable and ufeful years. Nor can all the tendernefs of the moft affectionate friendfhip, while its forrows bleed afresh in the view of fo tragical a fcene, prevent my adoring the gracious appointment of the great Lord of all events, that when the day in which he mult have expired without an enemy appeared fo very near, the laft ebb of his generous blood fhould be poured out, as a kind of facred libation, to the liberties of his country, and the honour of his God ! that all the other virtues of his character, embalmed as it were by that precious fream, might diffufe around a more extensive fragrancy, and be transfmitted to the most remote pofterity, with that peculiar charm, which they cannot but derive from their connection with fo gallant a fall : An event (as that bleftd apoftle, of whole fpirit he fo deeply drank, has exprefied it), " according to his earneft expectation, and his hope, that in him Chrift might be glorified in all things, whether by his life, or by his death."

APPENDIX.

No. I.

RELATING TO THE COLONEL'S PERSON.

In the midft of fo many more important articles, I had really forgot to fay any thing of the perfon of Colonel Gardiner, of which neverthelefs it may be proper here to add a word or two. It was, as I am informed, in younger life, remarkably graceful and amiable : and I can eafily believe it, from what I knew him to be when our acquaintance began; though he was then turned of fifty, and had gone through fo many fatigues as well as dangers, which could not but leave fome traces on his countenance. He was tall, (I fuppofe fomething more than fix feet), well proportioned, and firongly built; his eyes of a dark grey, and not very large; his forehead pretty high; his nofe of a length and height no way remarkable, but very well fuited to his other features; his cheeks not very prominent; his mouth moderately large, and his chin rather a little inclining (when I knew him) to be peaked. He had a firong voice and lively accent, with an air very intrepid, yet attempered with much gentlencies: And there was fomething in his manner of addrefs more perfectly eafy and obliging, which was in a great meafure the refult of the great candour and benevolence of his natural temper; and which, no doubt, was much improved by the deep humility which duvine grace had wrought into his heart; as well as his having been accuitomed from his early youth to the company of perfons of diltinguished rank and poite behaviour.

The picture of him, which, is given at the beginning of thefe memoirs, was taken from an original done by Van, Deeth, (a Dutchman brought into Scotland by General Wade), in the year 1727, which was the 40th of his age, and is faid to have been very like him then, though far from being an exact refembince of what he was when I had the happinels of being acquainted with him. Perhaps he would have appeared to the greatest advantage of all, could he have been exaltly drawn on horfeback; as many very good judges, and among the refit the celebrated Monf. Faubert himfelf, have fpoken of him as one of the completed horiemen that has ever been known: And there was indeed fomething fo fingularly graceful in his appearance in that attitude, that it was fufficient (as what is very eminent in its kind generally is) to flrike an eye not formed on any critical rules.

POETICAL PIECES ON THE DEATH OF COLO-NEL GARDINER.

So animating a fubject as the death of fuch a man, in fuch circumftances, has occafioned a great deal of poetry. Some of this has already been published ; especially one large compofition, faid to be done by a worthy clergyman in Lincolnfhire, in which there are many excellent lines and noble fentiments : But I rather choole to refer to the piece itfelf, than to infert any extracts from it here. It may be more expedient to oblige my reader with the following copy of verfes, and an elegiac poem, composed by two of my valuable friends, whole names are annexed. I could not prefume to attempt any thing of this kind myfelf ; becaufe I knew, that nothing I was capable of writing could properly express my fence of his worth, or deferibe the tendernets of my friendfhip; the fentiments of which will (as I afarcelly believe) mingle themfelves with the laft ideas which pafs through my mind in this world, and perhaps with fome of the firft which may open upon it in that which is to come.

VERSES ON THE DEATH OF COLONEL GARDINER.

BY THE REV. MR. BENJAMIN SOWDEN.

Quis Defiderio fit Pudor, aut Modus, Tam chari Capitis ? Hon.

Courb piety perpetuate human breath, Or fhield one mortal from the fhafts of death, Thou ne'er, illuftrious man't hou ne'er hadft been A paild corpfe on Preflon's fatal plain. Or could her hand, though impotent to fave Confummate worth, redeem it from the grave, Soon would thy unr refign its facred truft, And recent life re-animate thy duft.

But vain the wilk.—The favage hand of war.— Oh how fhall words the mournful tale declare ! Too foon the news afflicted friendfhip hears, Too foon, alas ! confirm?d her boding fears.

Struck with the found, unconfcious of redrefs, She felt thy wounds, and wept fevere diffrefs. A while diffolv'd in trucelefs grief the lay, Which left thee to relentle's rage a prey.

At length kind Fame fufpends our heaving fighs,

And wipes the forrows from our flowing eyes; Give us to know, thine exit well (upply'd Thofe blooming laurels victory deny'd. When thy great foul fupprefs'd each timid moan, And foar'd triwmphant in a dying groan, Thy fall, which rais'd, now calms each wild complaint.

Thy fall, which join'd the hero to the faint.

As o'er th' expiring lamp the quivering flame Collects its luftre in a brighter gleam, Thy virtues, gliamn'ring on the verge of night, Through the dim flade diffus'd celefital light; A radiance death or time can ne'er deftroy, Th' aufpicious omen of eternal joy.

Hence ev<sup>7</sup>ty unavailing grief ! No more As haple's thy removal we deplore. Thy guthing veins, in every drop they bleed, . Of patriot warriors that the fruitle's feed. Soon thall the ripen'd harveft rife in arms To cruth rebellion's infolent alarms.

While profp'rous moments footh'd through life his way,

Conceal'd from public view the hero lay : But when affiiction clouded his decline. It not eclips'd, but made his honours thine : Gave them to beam confpicuous from the gloom, And plant unfading trophies round his tomb.

So ftars are loft, amidft the blaze of day ; But when the fun withdraws his golden ray, Refulgent thro' th' etherial arch they roll. And gild the wide expanse from pole to pole.

An ELEGY on the Death of the truly pious, and brave Colonel JAMES GARDINER, who was flain by the Rebel-Forces, September 21, 1745, in the fatal action at Preftonpans. BY THE REV. MR. THOMAS GIBBONS.

CASIMIRA

Come, Melancholy, from the flony cave The fcoop of time for thee has made. Under the broad cliff's fhade. Upon the naked fhore, Where warring tempefts roar In concert with the hoarfe refounding wave : Come, but with folemn gait, With trickling eyes, And heavy fighs, And all the 'fcutcheon'd pomp of fate; And bring with thee the cyprefs, and the yew, All bath'd and dropping with the mortal dew, To this fequefter'd bow'r ; And let the midnight hour Be hung in deeper glooms by thee,. And bid each gay idea flee : While all the baleful images of woe. That haunt the marble buft, Or hover round fepulcher'd duft, With confcious horrors all my foul o'erflow-For 'tis no vulgar death Urania means to mourn ; But in a doleful ftrain She bids the harp complain, And hangs the fun'ral wreath On Gard'ner's awful urn.

> Gard'ner, what various fame For ever crowns thy name?

Nor is it pollible to lay, Or if the faints, or hero's ray Shone brighted in that blended blaze, That form'd thine ample round of praife-Like Moles on the facred hill, How haft thou flood with pleading eyes, Outfretching hands, and fervent cries, Unwearied wreftler with the fkies ! Till heav'n, refponsive to thy will, Would all thy larged willes fill; Till the high-brandiff'd bolt afide was fill the high-brandilh'd bolt ande was thrown,

And the full bleffing ftream'd in filver murmurs down.

Nor lefs a Johua, than a Mofes, thou ; For oft in Liberty's high firife

Haft thou expos'd thy gen'rous life, And with impatient ardors on thy brow, Rush'd foremost in the horrid van of fight, Driving the troops of tyranny to flight, Unshaken in the noble cause, To pluck her bloody fangs, and break her iron jaws.

> When Anna fent her chofen chief, Victorious Marlborough, To Europe's groans to give relief. In Bourbon's overthrow ; Renown'd Ramilia's tented field, Where Gallia dropt her idle fhieldy.

And to the British flandard kneel'd, Beheld young Gard'ner there. Young Gard'ner, where the combat mow'd

The falling ranks, and widely ftrow'd

Deftruction and defpair,

Wielded ferene his youthful arms,

And, kindling at the dire alarms, Enjoy'd the raging war:

But here, (for fteel and flying fhot

Fall chiefly to the hero's lot),

Swift thro' his lips the glancing bullet rung, His lips, on which the unfinish'd oath was hung :

nung;

Nor ftopt its wing'd impetuous force, Till through the neck it plough'd its angry

Amazing thought! that they who life expole, Where all the thunder of the battle glows,

Who fee pale Death triumphant ride

Upon the crimfon's furging tide, In blafphemy and proud contempt fhould rife And hurl their mad defiance to the fkics;

Whither a moment may convey Their fouls, diflodging from their quiv'ring clay.

To take their laft inexorable doom, Big with immortal wrath, and dire defpair to come.

> Such, Gard'ner, was in early youth; And while the warrior's ray

Beam'd round his head, celeftial Truth

He fpurn'd, and fcorn'd her ways: And, though th' Almighty arm was near, Made his endanger'd life its care,

And heal'd the burning fcores ; . Yet Vice, collecting with his friength, Soon, foon burns out in wilder length,

And like a torrent roars. Now in the wide enchanting bowl The hero melts his manly foul : And now he blots the fundes of night With blacker focenes of lewd delight : Anon in fport he litts his brow to heaving.

And fwears by the Eternal name; Afks that the bolt may on his head be driv'n,

And courts the lagging flame. So Pharaoh, when the fev'rifh blains

No more embofs'd his flefh, Nor fhot infection through his yeins,

Affum'd his rage a-frefh ;

And hard, grew harder ftill,

And propp'd on his wild will, Set up the flandard of his pride, Curs'd Ifr'el's God and King, and all his plagues defy'd.

> But, Mule, in fofter notes relate, For fofter notes upon thee wait, How Gard'ner, when his youth had rang'd

Thele guilty feenes, to heav'n eftrang'd, Paus'd in his mid career, and was divinely chang'd. That God, whole piercing radiance darts,

O'er all our ways, and all our hearts,

The bold tranfgreffor from his throne furvey'd.

And thus in accents breathing mildnefs faid : "Go Mercy, charg'd with my fupreme com" mand,

" Thou, fairest daughter, thron'd at my right " hand,

" Go, wing thy downward race,

" And ftop that rebel in his furious way ; " His heart shall thy victorious call obey,

" And take the willing ftamp of grace :

" For never fhall thy call fuccefslefs prove, " And thou lament thy baffled aim, " If thou but dart thy chofen flame,

" Arm'd with the Saviour's energy of love." He fpoke; and gave the Almighty nod, The fanction of th' eternal God:

At once the joyful news is propagated round,

Loud anthems from the golden roofs rebound, And Heav'ns high chryftal domes re-murmur with the found.

Mercy obeys; and from the empyrial height Precipitates her glitt'ring flight; A flarty circle fparkl'd round her head, And a wide rainbow o'er her progrefs fpread. Mufe, fing the wondrous plan,

And fing the wond'rous hour, In which the Sov'reign pow'r Th' Almighty work began, And fignaliz'd her arm, and triumph'd o'er the man. Bent on adult'rous fhame The finner fhe beheld : His bofom burnt with guilty flame, And at the future joy in fecret raptures fwell'd : Enrag'd, he curs'd the lazy moon In her nocturnal tower. That thought his blifs would come too foon, And clogg'd the midnight hour. 'Twas then, when luft's malignant fway Had ftifl'd confcience' pang, and fmother'd reafon's ray. That mercy flept between Th' adult'rer and his finful fcene ; And painted on his mental fight, Drefs'd round in beams divinely bright. The Saviour firetch'd upon the tree, In purple fweets, and dying agony : (Such was the vision, and the blaze the fame, That Saul, intent on murders, faw, When Jefus, speaking from the radiant flame, O'erwhelm'd his confcious foul with awe). Then thus a voice arrefts his ear . " See, Gard'ner, fee thy Saviour here ! " And was this wood " Ting'd in my blood, 228 " And did I languith in these woes for thee.

" And can'ft thou plunge thefe recent wounds " in me !" O'erpow'r'd with vaft furprize, A prifoner of the fkies The fwooning champion falls, And fear, that never yet his foul had flook, Bedews his limbs, glares wild upon his look, And all his foul appalls : But half the agony was unfulfill'd, Till mercy from her chryftal urn inftill'd Fierce on his heart three burning drops, Drops that from Sinai came, From Sinai, where th' Almighty thunderer His shafted lightnings, and his bolted storms, And from whofe boiling tops The wild fulphureous furge lies down in liquid flame : Stung with th' unfufferable fmart. That fester'd at his heart, Gard'ner awakes, and round he throws His ghaftly eyes, and fcarce he knows Or if he lives in nature's midnight gloom, Or, clos'd in hell's unfathomable womb, Black o'er his head eternal horrors roll, And the keen gnawing worm devours his immoft foul.

Himfelf a tenant of the ground,

Still, fill his confeience felt the flaming wound. Sudden before his profpect glows

The everlafting gulph of woes;

From the o'er-hanging brink he feems to bend,

(The brink that crumbled as he flood, And nodded o'er the dreadful flood),

And down in headlong ruin to defcend To the broad burning waves, and pains that never end.*

ror wears.

He turns : but ah ! no friendly hand,

Nor fpark of glimm'ring hope, appears, Amidfi the raging torment of his fears; But outlaw'd from th' realme of fhining blifs, He thinks he feels the unextinguish'd fires, A waving wafte of blue afcending fpires, And plunges in the bottomlefs abyfs : For, oh't his fins in crowding numbers fland, And each tempts vengeance from th' Almighty hand;

But fiercer o'er the reft ingratitude appears, That fcorn'd the Saviour's love, and flaming hor-

> But while in fad confusion tofs'd, And tortur'd with defpair, He doom'd his foul for ever loft, The bright ethercal fair, (For 'twas her kind defign Not to deftroy, but to refine),

. See Milton's Paradife Loft, b. xi. l. 416.

Amidît the darknefs and the florms Her facred embalfy performs; For guit difplay'd in all its frightful dyes, And erimfon'd over with redeeming blood, Draws out the tolling anguith from his eyes, And all his flubborn foul with low fubmifion bow'd.

"Tis done: O miracle of love ! Not minds below, nor minds above, Great God ! can trace thy myflic ways, And pay the equal note of praife. "Tis done. And now with outflretch'd wings

Back to the fkies the radiant Pow'r withdrew, And, as her mounting path fhe fprings, The filver trump' of victory fhe blows,

In ftronger dyes her arch refulgent glows, And a far-ftreaming glory tracks th' ethereal blue.

At once abjuring all his fine, Gard'ner the heav'nly life begins, And pleads the hoours of his God With irrefiftible defence Againft the colour'd arts of eloquence, Tho' clouded with his Maker's frown, and crufh'd beneath his rod. But quickly a celefinl ray Shot o'er his foul unclouded day, And balmy dews, and blooming life were giv'n,

The early antepast of heav'n.

And now what equal words thall paint How Gard'ner, freed from tyrant lufts, Nor longer tofs'd in paffion's gufts, Felt, fpoke, and acted all the faint ! That holy name, which he prophan'd before, Behold him now with fuppliant knee adore, At morn and ev'n his warm de otions rife, Like clouds of 'nc nfe, fragrant to the fkies :

> No more the grape's netlareous juice Could tempt beyond a prudent ufe; No wanton fpeech defil'd his tongue; No deed defign'd his neighbour wrong : But the fair ftreams of innocence,

And unconfin'd benevolence, O'er all his life uninterrupted ran, And thro' their chrystal mirrors shew'd the man.

The num'rous characters he bore, With a diftinguith'd praife he wore, And fubject, foldier, hufband, parent, friend, He blended, and ennobled to the end.

Now with feraphic transports fir'd,

The pinions of his zeal afpir'd, Scarce patient till he broke the mortal fhell, And bid this empty fcene, and dufky globe, farewell.

Heav'n was his home, and to his home he bent, And e'er the rounds of fatal life were (pent, Thither his paffions would divinely roll, The fwift-wing'd heralds of his coming foul.

Peace at his tent would often light, and fing, And fhed the dewy bleffings from her wing ; And rills, devolving from the fourt above, Pour o'er his heart extatic life and love.

Thus Gard'ner liv'd; till from the gloomy north Rebellion, grafping targe and fteelly arms, Rufh'd, like a mountain-boar, impetuous forth. And shook our realms with horrible alarms : Rebellion, aiming at one wafteful fway, To firike the diadem from Brunfwick's head, Tear Liberty, and all her mounds away. And Popery's o'erwhelming horrors fpread. The news to Gard'ner came. And fapp'd the noble flame. Which pure religion, heav'n-born liberty. And dauntless fortitude had rais'd : And as the gath'ring terrors thunder'd nigh. With a redoubled ftrength the mounting fervors blaz'd What tho' diffemper had fubdu'd his limbs. And age defrauded half the purple ftreams. That bloom'd his features o'er. When in rebellion's florm before, He, rifing in the glorious caufe Of George's rights, and Britain's laws, Swept down the trait'rous files, and Prefton fwam - with gore ; Yet his unbroken foul difdains Age's dull load of cramps and pains ;

His youthful rage returns, And for the battle burns : Then, firinging from Francifa's tender arms, Difoldv'd in flowing tears, O'erwhelm'd with boding fears, And only folac'd with the view That heav'n their friendflup would renew; He, in th' unfickaen confidence of pray't, Sways the keen flame of his revenging fword For his eternal, and his earthly lord, Serenely meets the danger's wild alarms, Plants his embattl'd force, and waits the rufhing war. So Michael *, bent on glorious fight,

So Michael *, bent on glorious fight, Against Satanic rage and might,

Came tow'ring to the field; Unconfcious of a quiv'ring fear, He faw the foe his dufky horrors rear, Wave his broad flaming fword, and heave his moony fhield.

Not far from where Edina lifts

Her tow'rs into the fikies, Or where the ocean-bounding cliffs In clouded fummits rife, Prefton extends her humbhe cots, Long, long unknown to Fame ; But flying routs, and purple fpots Have flamp'd th' eternal finame. U a

Here, here, (oh could Time's brazen pen Dafh the reproach away, Or, as the day returns again, Might midnight choak its ray !) Britannia's troops in vain Oppos'd the rebel-hoft, And fled inglorious o'er the plain, Their courage wither'd, and their flandards loft. Mufe, paint the doleful fcene With fighs and tears between ; For fighs and tears fhould rife From ev'ry Britifh heart, and gufh from all our Swift on the loyal van The yellow furies ran, Like the wild ocean that has rent Its fhores, and roars along the Continent ; Or in the wing'd light'ning's livid glare, Darting along th' immeafur'd fields of air. Confounded at the flock, The yielding fquadrons broke : And now, (for hell infpir'd the throng), The gloomy murd'rers rufh'd along ; And fierce the fteelly blade Its horrid circles play'd, Till hideous cries, Quiv'ring fighs, Hopelels foreams, Batter'd limbs. Bloody Areams,

And univerfal rout deform'd the ground, Laid waift the Britifh firength, and the wide champaign drown'd.

" Come on, come on !" mad Elcho cries, And for his murders thanks the ficer. (While the Italian from afar, Too foft a foul to mix in war, Enjoying all the guilt, beheld His bloody harpies tear the field).

" Ply, ply the thirfty fteel,

- " Round the full vengeance wheel; " Each heretic muft yield his breath
- " That for the Hanoverian brood " Or lifts a fword,
  - " Or fpeaks a word,
- " Come, gorge your fouls with death.
- " And drown your steps in blood :
- " Think, think, what blifsful periods roll be-" hind,
- " Let London's mighty plunder fill your "mind,

" When boundlefs wealth fhall be with bound-" lefs empire join'd."

Gard'ner, with mind elate Above the rage of fate, His country's bulwark flood "Midft broken lines of death, and rifing waves of blood. His foul difdains retreat, Though urg'd by foul defeat.

Now to his fcatt'ring friends he calls, To wheel again and charge the foe; Now hurls the wide-deftroying balls, Now deals the 'vengeful blow. Forfaken and alone, And torn with gathing wounds, He hears the treas'nous fhout, he hears the loyal groan : But nought the purpole of his foul confounds; And ftill with new delight He tempts the midmoft fight. Propp'd on his facred caufe and courage of his own, Th' embattled ranks of foot he fpies Without a leading chief, And like a fhooting ray, he flies To lend his brave relief. Here the broad weapon's forceful fway. Swung with tempestuous hand, Plough'd through his flefh its furious way, And ftretch'd him on the ftrand.

Welt'ring in gore, with fiery fiends befet, The dying Gard'ner lyes; No gentle hand to wipe the mortal fweat, And clofe his fwimming eyes.

The unrelenting crew The hero difarray'd; But flruck at his majeftic view, Their fouls were half difmay'd;

And, had not hell inftamp'd its hate,

Their flony eye-balls o'er his fate

Had fiream'd with human woe; for, heavenly mild,

He o'er their gloomy forms the Christian pardon fmil'd.

But not a tear must bathe, or garment shield His mangled limbs from fight,

Down-trodden in the fight : While his fair manfion, that o'er-tops the field, The naked murther fces, and trembles from its height. Still the departing flame of life

Wav'd languithing in doubtful flrife; Till, fuch his fervant's faithful care, (May heav'n's diftinguith'd goodnefs crown The goodnefs to his mafter flrewn!)

The wheels flow-moving, from the fceries of war, To Tranent bore th' expiring chief,

In fullen founds remurm'ring to his grief, ' Urania, mark the melancholy road, And with thy tears efface the featt'ring blood; Nor flopt, till on the late repoint bed

(Oh! rather 'tis the fun'ral bier !) You fee the hero's pallid body fpread, And his lat anguith hear. Half choak'd with clotted gore, He draws the hollow moan ; Flitting his palfe, and fix'd his eyes, All pale and motionlefs he lies,

And feems to breathe no more. Oh ! that's the life-difolving groan :--Farewell, dear man! for in that pang thy mind Soars to its God, and leaves the clog behind.

Gard'ner is dead !- The bloody trump of Fame Proclaim'd the mighty death ; In ev'ry look the pofting rumour came. And flew on ev'ry breath. The widow'd partner of his life The doleful tidings hears, And, filent in ftupendous grief, Her eyes refuse their tears : Opprefs'd beneath th' immeafurable weight, Her fpirit faints away. As, fympathetic with the hero's fate, It meant to guit its clay. The pledges of his love Their filial duty prove. And each with tender hands uprears, With hands all cover'd o'er in tears, Their mother's finking head ; And groan refounds to groan ; For, oh ! the best of husbands gone, The beit of fathers dead ! But Gard'ner's death is more than private woe; Wide and more wide th' increasing forrows run ; O'er British lands unlimited they go, And fly across the feas, and travel with the fun. Religion, that from heav'n had bow'd, To watch the fcale of fight,

When holy Gard'ner fell, Who lov'd, and who adon'd her caufe fo well, Retir'd behina a crimfor cloud, Nor could fuftain the fight, Britannia, where the fat Upon the fea-beat flore, To eye the battle's fate, Her filver manule tore: Then thus, her blichting honours wann'd, Her feeptre quiv'ring in her hand. Her laurels wither'd, and her head declin'd, Teen thoufand terrors boding in her mind.

She to the deep in bitter wailings griev'd, While her fall'n helm the trickling drops receiv'd:

> " What havock of my martial force " Has this fad morn beheld,

" Torn, gafh'd, and heap'd without remorfe " Upon the naked field !

" But Gard'ner's death afflicts me moft,

" Than whom a chief I could not boaft

" More faithful, vigilant, and brave ; " And fhould acrofs his grave

" An hecatomb of Highland brutes be flain, " They could not recompenfe his injur'd ghoft, " Nor fully quench my rage, and wipe away my " flain,"

> But fee, in fplendid ftate Cherubic convoys come,

And waft the hero from his fate To his celettial home. Now, now he fails along. Encircl'd with their throng. (The throng, that clap their mantling wings, And to loud triumphs ftrike their ftrings), Through liquid feas of day Ploughing the azure way, Till to the flarry tow'rs the fquadrons rife. The flarry tow'rs, thick fown with pearl and gold. Their adamantine leaves unfold, And fhew the entrance to th' empyreal fkics : Through them our hero mark'd his road, And through the wheeling ranks of heav'n An unobstructed wath was giv'n, Till he attain'd th' eternal throne of God; A throne that blaz'd in uncreating beams,

And from its footflool guth'd unnumber'd ftreams, Streams, that is everlafting currents roll, And pour the boundlefs joy o'er all th' expanded foul.

Well haft thou done, th' Almighty Father fpoke; Well haft thou done, th' exatted Jefus cry'd; Well haft thou done, (all heav'n the Euge took), The faints and angels in their foigs reply'd.

And now a robe of fpotlefs white, But where the Saviour's flowing vein Had blufh'd it with a fanguine flain, Invefts him round : In various light (For fuch was the divine command),

Refulgent on his brows a crown was plac'd; And a triumphal palm his better hand

With golden bloffoms grac'd. Nigh to the feat of blifs His manfion was affign'd; Sorrow and fin forfook his breaft, His weary foul was now at reft, And life, and love, and ecflacies Unbound his fecret pow'rs, and overflow'd his mind.

Nor has thy life, heroic man, been fpilt Without a wrath proportion'd to thy guilt : Enkindl'd by the cries that rofe

From thy dear facred blood, with those That fhriek'd for vengeance from the brave

Munroes,

Who fell a martyr'd facrifice

To cool remorfeles butcheries, Heav'n fends its angel righteously fevere, And from the foe exacts the last arrear.

For when the barb'rous bands, Thick as the fwarms that blacken'd Egypt's flrands.

And furious as the winter's ruthing rains Impell'd by whirlwinds through the plains,

Had o'er our country roll'd, Young William rofe, (aufpicious name, Sacred to Liberty and Fame !) And their mad rage controll'd.

Back to their hills and bogs they fled. (For terror wing'd their nimble fpeed), And howl'd for help in vain : William purfu'd, and launch'd his vengeful ire. (As o'er the ftubble runs the crackling fire) Upon the grov'ling train : Shuddring with horror and defpair, With bell'wing pain they rend the air, Till Cuiloden's illustrious moor Groan'd with the heaps of flain, and fmoak'd with rebel-gore. Then, Mufe, fupprefs thy rifing fighs, And wipe the anguish from thine eyes ; Sing, how Rebellion has receiv'd its doom. How Gard'ner dwells in his'eternal home, And in each British heart has rais'd a lafting tomb.

An Account of fome Remarkable Particulars concerning the Ancient Family of the Munroes of Fowlis.

WHILE I was endeavouring to do juffice to the memory of that excellent man, and moft beloved friend, whole memoirs I have now concluded, and was mentioning, in the courfe of my narration, the tragical confequenceswhich the unnatural rebellion, by which he fell, had drawn along with it, and the many other valuable perfons of which it had alfo deprived us, I could not but particularly reflect on the awful cataftrophe of Sir Robert Munro, and his two brothers, the Captain and the Doctor, who all, within the compass of eight months, and in lefs than twelve after the death of Colonel Gardiner, (with whom they were well acquainted, and to whom they were allied in the bonds of a virtuous and honourable friendship), fell a facrifice to the rage and cruelty of the fame favage deftrovers. I was defirous of interweaving fo remarkable a piece of hiftory, with a fubject, to which it was, alas ! fo nearly connected : And therefore I applied myfelf to a perfon of high rank moft nearly related to them, on whofe information I was fure I might entirely depend, intreating the favour of fuch an account of these three excellent brothers, and of the circumflances of their death, as I might fafely and properly offer to the view of the public.

This honourable perfon referred me to a gentleman weil acquainted with the hiftory of the family of the Munroes of Fowlis, and poffeffed of a diffinct historical account of it, taken from the annals which have been kept of that family for many ages pall, and from the old writs, charters, and other authentic deeds belonging to it, which are the vouchers of thefe annals.

This gentleman was pleafed to favour me with a pretty large hiftorical account of this family, beginning it much higher, and carrying it through a much wider extent than I could have expected from the particular view with which I first requested information .----I next obtained inftructions on the fame fubiect from a gentleman at London. I was then furnifhed with a particular relation from another gentleman, a pious minister of the Church of Scotland, with whom I have the happinels of being well acquainted. And as all thefe are perfons of fuch a character, that none who know them can queftion the veracity and teftimony of each, fo they were each of them happy in a most intimate acquaintance with all the three deceased brothers, after whom I inquired. And laft of all, I received from a fourth gentleman an historical account of this family from the most early times; which, by the date it bears, was compiled a great many years ago, and which, it feems, was intended to have been published in an historical account of fome of the ancient families of Scotland; which work became abortive through the death of the author.

When I compared thefe feveral accounts,as I received them from time to time, it gave me great fatisfaction to find them all agree, and tally fo exactly, in their accounts of this family, and of the three excellent brothers last deceased. On an attentive perusal of thefe informations, I found they contained what was too curious and important to be loft. and yet too long to be inferted in the memoirs of Colonel Gardiner, without breaking the unity of defign in a manner that would have proved inconvenient. I concluded, therefore, that (efpecially as those memoirs were finished before fome of these papers came to my hands) it would be beft to prefent it to the world in a diffinct piece, connected by way of Appendix to the former. And I feel a most fenfible pleafure in the addition I am hereby making to the work, as it is paying fome little debt of gratitude to the illustrious dead : and at the fame time doing a just honour to the furviving branches of a family from whence fo many heroes have fprung, and of which there are ftill (though after much fad! defolation made in it) most worthy remains ... #### APPENDIX TO THE

And I hope, that it may not only entertain my readers with fome remarkable facts worthy of commemoration, but excite in their breafls fomething of the fame generous fpirit, to which nothing can more powerfully infligate the mind than the view of fuch glorious examples.

The family of the Munroes of Fowlis is among the most ancient and honourable families in the north of Scotland, and has generally been remarkable for a brave, martial, and heroic fpirit. It is mentioned by Buchanan with a memorable teftimony *, when, after fpeaking of the difficulties in which Mary Oueen of Scots was involved at Invernefs, he adds, " That as foon as they heard of their 44 Sovereign's danger, a great number of the " ancient Scots poured in around her, efpeci-" ally the Frafers and Munroes, which (fays " he) were efteemed among the most valiant " of the clans inhabiting those countries." And how well the latter have ever fince continued to deferve that character, the following memoirs, brief as they are, may in fome degree fhew.

. The Munroes of Fowlis have, in every one of their generations, been intermarried with many of the beft families of nobility and gentry in the north of Scotland. And it is yet more for their honour, that they were among the first in those parts that embrac'd the Reformation, and have ever fince been zealous affertors of it. And many of them have not only given great countenance and encouragement to the ministers of the gospel in the parifhes.under their influence, in confequence of which a great harvest of most eminent Chriftians hath been produced there ; but also have themfelves been fignal examples of true piety, and a behaviour in all its branches most ornamental to a Christian profession .- I fear there have been few families to which fuch a character can be univerfally applied : But it is certain, that fo far as it is the cafe, it is the most illustrious of all hereditary honours, and therefore feems to have been mentioned with the utmost propriety by my feveral correspondents in this connection.

According to Buchanan, it was in the beginning of the eleventh century, and about the time of the conquefin England, when Malcolm, the fecond of that name, King of Scots, firft diffiributed, or, as it is exprefied, fened out or feed the lands of Scotland to the great families thereof, on account of their eminent fervices in his many battles with the Danes, until he forced them quite out of his kingdom. And according to tradition, it was on that occafion that the country betwixt the borough of Dingwall and the water of Alnefs, in the fhire of Rofs, was given to Donald Munro; and which is therefore to this day ealled Ferrindonald, that is, Donald's Land. And part of thefe lands were afterwards by the king erected into a barony, called the barony of Fowlis.

I fhall not follow the annals of this family fo far, as to entertain the public with a detail of the barons of Fowlis in their feveral generations through thefe early ages; but fhallbegin my particular narration of them only from the time they became proteflants, whentheir brave behaviour and example will afford us more inflruction, and the facts concerning . them may be depended on with more certainty. And therefore I fhall only before that time obferve,

That George, ninth baron * of Fowlis, (in a direct lineal defcent from the above Donald,

 It is to be obferved, 1R. That Baron in Scotland does not import Nobility, as it does now in England? For as the time the lands of Scotland were clivided as above, there were then no nobility in that nation; but the great familiet?

the first baron), was flain at the memorable battle of Bannockburn, fought by King Robert Bruce of Scotland against King Edward II. of England, in the year 1314. George, tenth baron of Fowlis, and fon of the former, was alfo flain, with a great many of his name, at the battle of Halydon Hill, near Berwick ; in which battle the Scots were defeated by the English, and a great number of them killed, on the 22d of July, A. D. 1333. Robert Munro, feventeenth baron of Fowlis, was flain at the battle of Pinkie near Edinburgh, with many of his name, where the Scots were again defeated by the English, and a great number of them killed, A. D. 1:47 .- I mention the fall of these three gentlemen, with their friends and followers fighting valiantly in the caufe of their country, as illustrating the va-

had their effaste erecked into baronies, with a jurididition over all the validals senants, and opficifies thereoids which was the origin and fupport of the Class in Scotland, thefe being the only military force in that kingdom, until, upon the union of the two crowns in the perform of King Janese VI. of Scotland, regular troops were introduced into that kingdom.....To this I would add, adly. That the annuls of this family contain a genealogical account of all the Darous of Fowins, from the above Donald Minnee, to this perform time. Swerzh of they can only be transmitted to there it full evidence of the family binners. It have, from the old writes, charters, and decks in the family of Fowling and even fereral others of them whom. Is have not mentioned, are taken notice of in thef of write, lour and bravery of this tamily in their differeat generations, and thewing how jully they merited the character which Buchannan gives them in the place before cited. How long this brave fpirit has continued, as it were, hereditary to them, will appear from what follows.

The first protestant of this family was Robert Munro, the eighteenth baron of Fowlis, fon to Robert last mentioned, and the fame who came to the affiitance of Mary Queen of Scots upon the occasion before cited, A. D. 1:62. He embraced the Protestant religion quickly after : and being a wife and good man, he left an opulent eftate to the family, and died A. D. 1588. He was fucceeded by his fon Robert Munro, nineteenth baron of Fowlis, who died the fame year with his father. The next to him was his brother Hector Munro, twentieth baron of Fowlis, who died A. D. 1603. Robert Munro, his fon, fucceeded him, the twenty-first baron of Fowlis, who flourithed when Guftavus Adolphus, that juffly celebrated King of Sweden, (whofe religion and valour were fo diffinguished among his many religious and valiant cotemporaries), was en aged in a Protestant war against the Emperor Ferdinand II. in defence of the civil as well as facred liberties of Germany. The generous heart of this worthy gentleman was fo ftruck with a regard to the common caufe, in which he himfelf had no concern but what piety and virtue gave him, that he joined Guftavus with a very great number of his friends, who bore his own name. Many of them gained great reputation in this war; and that of Robert their leader was fo eminent, that he was made Colonel of two regiments at the fame time. the one of horfe and the other of foot, in that fervice; in which he acquitted himfelf with fo much fidelity and zeal, that he died of the wounds which he received in croffing the Danube, and was buried at Uline, in the month of March 1633.

He was fucceeded by Sir Henry Munro, twenty-fecond baron of Fowlis, the next male heir of the family *, who was alfo Colonel of a regiment in the fame fervice; and upon his coming over to Britain, was created a baronet in June 1633. Returning afterwards to Germany, he died at Hamburgh in April 1635. His fon, Sir Hector Munro, was twenty-third

† It was formerly the cuftom in Scotland, and is fo fill among ancient families, to entail the fuecefilion of their family effate to the nearefit male relation of the deceafed, paffing by the females, thereby to preferve their effates in their own name and family. baron of Fowlis, who died without iffue in the year 1651, at feventen years of age. Sir Robert Munro, twenty-fourth baron of Fowlis, fucceeded as the neareft male heir, being grandfon to George Munro of Obfdale, who was third fon to Robert Munro, the eighteenth baron of Fowlis.

My information imports, that in the before mentioned annals of this family, there is a well atteled lift of officers, (of which I have a copy in the memorial laft fent me), wherein there are three generals, eight colonels, five lieutenant-colonels, eleven majors, and above thirty Captains, all of the name of Munro; befides a great number of fubalterns. Mon of thele were in that religious war under the great Gullavus Adolphus; and fome of the defcendants of this family are at this day in pofieffion of confiderable military commands in Sweden, and various parts of Germany.

General Robert Munro (who was uncle to Sir Robert, the twenty-fourth baron of Fowlis) publiched, in the year 1644, an account of this religious war under Guftwus Adolphus, in a folio volume, initiled, "Military dicipaline learned from the valiant Swede." A book, of which (though I never happened to fae it) I have heard a high charafter. I an informed that it contains an exact journal of that expedition into Germany for the relief of the diffreffed protestants; and it is faid to be filled with most excellent observations on military affairs, delivered in a strain of piety, which feems to breathe the fpirit of its brave and worthy author. And indeed, by what I have heard of that inftructive hiftory, it is hard to fay, when there has been, even in the Chriftian world, fo religious and well difciplined an army as this; at the head of which, a mysterious providence permitted that royal hero and martyr, the great Guftavus, to fall. Would to God, the time might at length come. when our commanders shall take their lesions from it; at least fo far as to learn from the example of fome of the braveft and greateft of men, to maintain in the military bodies under their command, the authority of the Lord of Hofts ; and particularly, that reverence for his name, and for his day, which was there to beautifully and glorioufly confpicuous !

This worthy General, in the year 164r, was appointed by King Charles I. major.general of the Seots forces, that were fent to Ireland to fupprefs the infamous and defiruetive rebellion there. It is not my bufinefs here to infil on thofe unhappy circumflances which fo long retarded their march, and fo greatly obstructed their fuccefs. I find, however, that he had at length the honour to be in the number of those by whom God gave blood to drink to those miscreants, who had rendered themfelves to eminently worthy of it by a feries of outrages, which the most fanguinary and deteftable faction on earth, (I mean that of Popery), has feldom been enabled to exceed. For in the year 1644, this illuftrious commander, at the head of 14,000 of the Scots and English protestants, fought and defeated 22,000 of the Irifh in Ulfter, killed and took many thousands of them, and feized on a great quantity of cattle and other provifions of which the Protestants were then in great want.

The General was a great favourer of the Prefbyterian interefl, and among the first who chabilified it in Ireland. He fat in their Prefbyteries and Synods, and adhered to the intereft of the Parliament till he apprehended they were carrying matters to an exceffive height against the King; on which he accepted of a committion from him, and acted under the Duke of Ormond; to which he was perfueded by his nephew Sir George Munro, (of whom afterwards), who had always adhered to the intereft of Charles I. as he afterwards did to that of Charles II.

In the year 1645, the General was furprized by Colonel Monk, before he could draw out his men from their quarters; and he and they were by that means taken prifoners: but he continued not long in their hands; for death came and fet him at liberty foon after.

It is worthy of our notice by the way, that in the year 1644, we find Monk imprifoned by the parliament, for having accepted a commiffion from the King, and acted in confequence of it, though before that, he had acted by commission from the Parliament : And again, in the year 1648, we find him fighting for the Parliament against the King : And his furprifing and taking General Munro, was the first thing that brought him into favour with the Parliament. For in that reeling time, we find men of a much better charafter than Monk, changing fides again and again, as they apprehended the one party or the other to be in the right, from the many different demands, refufals, and conceffions, which then happened between them.

The General was fucceeded in his command by Sir George Mnnro, brother to the lattmentioned Sir Robert, and both of them nephews to General Robert by his brother Colonel John Munro of Obfdale, in the Swedifh fervice : Sir George was also bred in that fervice with his uncle, and afterwards ferved with him in Ireland, where he arrived to the rank of a Colonel. He was made Major-General by King Charles II. and had a body of forces under his command at Kendal, when James Duke of Hamilton was defeated by Cromwell at Lancaster, A. D. 1648. Upon this defeat Sir George returned to Scotland and defeated the Earl of Argyle : and afterwards, his forces being difbanded by order of the States of Scotland, he went to Holland and joined King Charles II.; after whole reftoration he was made Lieutenant-General and Commander in Chief in Scotland.

Sir John Munro, twenty-fifth baron of Fowlis, fucceeded bis father Sir Robert, A. D. 1668. He was a member of the Convention of the Effstes of Scotland at the revolution, and a very zealous promoter of that happy event. He was no lefs firenuous in a diferting Prefbytery, and, on that account, being alio remarkable for a large and corpulent flature, he was nick-named the Prefbyterian mortarpiece. His eminent piety and zeal had expofed him to great fufferings in the caufe of religion, in thefe unhappy and infamous days, when the beff friends to their country were treated as the worff enemies to the governent; and when to be confeientionally folicitous to depart from evil, made fo many thoufands a prey. Sir John fuffered greatly among many others of whom the world was not worthy: His perfon was doomed to long imprifonment, for no pretended caufe but what was found againft him in the matters of his God : And his eflate, which was before confiderable, was harraffed by fevere fines and confifcations, which reduced it to a diminution, much more honourable indeed than any augmentation could have been, but from which it has not recovered even to this day. He died A. D. 1596, and was fucceeded by his fon.

Sir Robert Munro, twenty-fixth baron of Fowlis, who fuceeeded his father, was alfo a pious and benevolent man, and for fome time a Captain; but it pleafed God early to deprive him of his fight, and to continue him in that condition during the remainder of his life. Under this calamity, he calmly fubmitted himfelf to that God, who can fhed abroad a far more cheering light on the foul, than thefe bodily eyes can admit. Providence was pleafed to blefs him with children, in whom he could not but find the higheff fatisfacion; and whofe amiable characters in general leave no room to doubt of the tendernefs and refpeft with which they would treat fo worthy a parent, under a diffrefing calamity, which would naturally move compafilon even in fhrangers. There were four of them who all reached maturity of age, and were the beirsof many blefings, though Providence fuffered three of them to fall almost at once by most unjuft and barbarous hands, Sir Robert, Captain George Munro, and the Doctor, whofe Chriftian name was Duncan : Their only fifter, married to Mr. Gordon of Ardoch, fill furvives; an example of profound fubmilion and fortitude, mingled with the most tender fenfibility of temper.

Sir Robert Munro, twenty-feventh baron of Fowlis, fucceeded his father, A. D. 1739. He went early from the univerfity to the camp, where he ferved feven years in Flanders, being fome time Captain in the Royal Scots, before that fatal ceflation of arms, A. D. 1712, as his late Majefly with fo much propriety publicly called it; to which therefore I fhall not prefume to give either a milder or a feverer name. It was here that Sir Robert contracted that acquaintance and Arith friendflip with good Colonel Gardiner, which ran through the remainder of their iyees, and of which each was fo worthy. On

Sir Robert's return from Flanders, he was reduced, on account of his inflexible oppofition in Parliament (of which he was then a member), to the meafures which the miniftry were then taking to fubvert the fucceffion in the prefent Royal Family, and with it, no doubt, the Proteflant religion, of which that family was and is under God the firmeft barrier.

My correspondent observes, concerning Sir Robert, "That he was noted for the counte-"nance he gave to divine workhip, both in "public and his family, and for the regard "which he always expressed to the word of "God, and its ministers;" and then adds, "That he was fincere in his friendhip, and "full of compassion even to the meaned of "those around him: And that he was re-"markable, above most, for his activity in "the difcharge of any office of friendhip, "where he had professed it, and for his great "exaches in the performance of his promi-"fes."

His military fervices are particularly worthy of being mentioned here. In the year 1715, he, with his clan, in conjunction with the Earl of Sutherland, kept the Earl of Seaforth, with 3000 men under his command, from joining the rebel camp at Perth, for near two months, and thereby prevented the Earl of Marr from.

croffing the Forth, till the Duke of Argyle had gathered ftrength fufficient to oppofe him-In confequence of this Sir Robert exposed his own country to the herceft refentments of the rebels, by whom it was plundered and deftroyed; while others, who yet pretended to be friends to the goverment, faved themfelves and their lands by capitulations with the enemy. Being then made Governor of Invernefs, Sir Robert kept 400 of his name there, during the reft of that rebellion, regularly paid and regimented : And thefe, together with fome other clans, well- affected to the intereft of the prefent Royal Family, kept poffellion of that important pais, whereby the rebels were hindered from making a ftand there, when they were diflodged from Perth by the Dake of Argyle.

He was, in the year 1716, made a commiffioner of inquiry into the forfeited effates of the rebels; in which he firenuoufly exerted himfelf in procuring a number of parifles to be erected through the rebel countries, and provided with fuitable flipends out of the conficated lands; whereby the gofpel was preached in places where it had not been preached fince the Reformation : So that fome new prefbyteries were formed in countries where the difcipline and worfhip of Proteflant churches.

had before no footing. And fuch was the compafiton and humanity which attempered his high courage, that by his intereft with the government, he did eminent fervice to the unfortunate widows and children of fuch as had, to the ruin of their families, been engaged in the rebellion.

Sir Robert was thirty years a member of Parliament by his family intereft ; during which time he always maintained the firmeft attachment to the fervice of his Majefty and his Royal Father, and to the religion and liberties of his country. His fidelity and zeal for these did not need to be purchased, folicited, or quickened, by perfonal favours : It continued through all this period unfhaken and active, though, from the ending of his commiffion of inquiry in 1724, till the year 1740, he had no poft under the government. He then found the nation was to be involved in a foreign war, the neceffity of which was generally apprehended and acknowledged: And therefore, though his friends thought his merit and experience might have pretended to fomething more, as he had been in the rank of a Lieutenant Colonel twenty-five years, his heart was too generous and too warm, not to accept of the fame commission, which was then given him in the Highland regiment. This regiment, when first formed out of independent Highland companies, was under the command of the Earl of Crawford as its Colonel, who, all the while he flood in that relation to it, was abroad, confined by the wounds he had received as a volunter againfi the Turks. During this time Sir Robert Munro was his Lordfhip's Lieutenant-Colonel. Before it went to Flanders, Lord Semple was its Colonel; but he alfo being generally abfent, and Sir Robert an old experienced officer, the regiment during the war was left under his care, and the manner in which he modelled and conducted it, will remain in many refpects an immortal honour to his name.

It is indeed furprifing, that a regiment, composed of Highlanders, who are generally used to for apacious a life at home, hould yet by difcipline have been brought to fo good a behaviour, as that they fhould be judged the moft trufky guards of property; and that, when the people in Flanders were allowed a protection for their goods, they fhould chufe to have fome of this regiment, among others of the British foldiers, appointed to protect them. This may indeed fem hardly credible !* yet my informer, affures me, that he had it from an officer of their own of unqueflionable credit; who added farther, that it was but feldom he had obferved a man among them drunk, and as feldom heard any of them fwear. This is very agreeable to the high character which I heard of this regiment from an English gentleman then in Flanders, whose veracity is undoubted, and who cannot, I am fure, be fuspected of any prejudice here. And among Sir Robert's papers there is ftill exifting a copy of a letter from the Elector Palatine to his Envoy at London, defiring him to thank the King of Great Britain, in his name. for the excellent behaviour of the Highland regiment while they were in his territories, " which," as he fays expressly, " was owing " to the care of Sir Robert Munro, their " Lieutenant Colonel, for whofe fake (he " adds) he fhould always pay a regard to a " Scotchman for the future,"

+ A very worthy perfon, to whole infpection this Appendix has been committed fince it was finished, observes

I the rather mention these particulars, not only as they do an honour to Sir Robert, and here, That though the Highlanders are much addified to dependitions on their neighborn, yet the very aclore scene in them are generally as faithful to their truft as any fer of pople whatever. And that if his officer threaves but any degree of eivility and kindneff to one of their peeple, the first of disologing him has a general minute that hat of remark I thought proper to infer here, that the reprefen tation of this affirm right here as immediate remarking as possible.

his worthy brother, through whole intereft, and that of the other officers, with the private men, this great reformation was effected ; but. likewife as they feem to fhew, in a very convincing manner, of how great importance it is, that fome methods be ferioufly thought of for breaking the other uncultivated inhabitants of these countries into useful men, by bringing them at once under the protection and difcipline of the laws, and inforcing their obedience to them, by teaching them the principles of religion, and the arts of peace and commerce. This is a happy effect, which, methinks, we may naturally hope for from the late rebellion, pernicious as it has in many refpects been, confidering how much it has reduced them to the power of the government, and how juftly obnoxious it has made the chiefs of many fierce and barbarous clans.

According to my beft information, from perfons who are most thoroughly acquainted with affairs in the North, the two great fprings of rebellion amongft the inhabitants of thefe Highland countries, are, their idlenefs and their ignorance. The former fubjects them to a flavili dependence on their mafters, and is allo the caufe of their being fo addicted to flealing; and the latter makes them a prey to Popih pricits and millionaries from Rome, who are conftantly, and in great numbers, trafficking among them. It has been very juftly remarked, that the fuccefs they have in feducing these poor ignorant people, is occafioned in a great measure by the wast extent of parifhes in those Highland countries ; fome of them being betwixt 30 and 40 miles in length, and 20 and 30 in breadth, full of great mountains, rapid rivers, and arms of the fea; and those parishes which are more moderate in their extent, are about 20 miles in length, and 10 or 12 in breadth : and it is every where to be observed through these parishes, that around the place of the minifter's refidence, the inhabitants are almost all Protestants, but in the corners which are remote from his refidence, they are generally all Papifts.

Now, it is evident, that thele poor people can only be cured of idlenefs, by teaching them manufactures, to which they are wholly flrangers. And it is hard to imagine how they can be refued from Poplih ignorance, until there are feveral new parifues ereded in thofe extensive countries. It would ill become me to pretend to direct the government of Britain on fuch an occafion; but I know it to be the opinion of many perfons in thofe parts, of diffinguished wildom and experience, that if it should be thought fit to employ the produce of the eftates confifcated by the late rebellion, for thefe valuable purpofes, this, with the thousand pounds of his Majesty's royal bounty annually beftowed, would go a good way towards remedying thefe two great evils. with their train of miferable confequences which we have of late fo deeply felt. And who would not rejoice to fee all thefe poor people fharing with us fully in all the privileges and advantages of Chriftians and of Britons ? I pray God to guide and profper every fcheme for this purpofe ! And in this connection. I cannot but mention, and recommend, the fociety for propagating the knowledge of religion, and with it the principles of loyalty, in thefe Highland countries; a defign, in which fo many worthy perfons, both in the northern and fouthern parts of our ifland, are incorporated. But their flock is by no means equal to the purpofes here mentioned; and, by their conflitution, they are confined to the fupport of fchools, which are indeed going on with great fuccefs, as far as the revenue will allow them.

But to return from this natural, and therefore, I hope, very pardonable digrefilion, the behaviour of Sir Robert Musro, and this regiment, at the battle of Fontenoy, was heard through all Britain. He had obtained leave of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, to allow them their own way of fighting. They were early in the field, and were ordered to attack the main battery of the French at the village from which the battle derives its name ; which they did, and drove the enemy from it : but finding the body of the French forces deeply intrenched behind the battery, they did not give over the charge, but bravely drew up to attack them. Sir Robert, according to the ufage of his countrymen, ordered the whole regiment to clap to the ground on receiving the French fire; and inftantly, as foon as it was difcharged, they fprung up, and coming close to the enemy, poured in their fhot upon them, to the certain deftruction of multitudes, and drove them precipitately through their own lines; then retreating, they drew up again, and attacked them a fecond time after the fame manner. "These attacks they repeated feveral times that day, to the furprize of the whole army.

Sir Robert was every where with his regiment, notwithflanding his great corpulency; and when in the trenches, he was hauled out again by the legs and arms by his own men.

Zij

And it is obferveable, that when he commanded the whole regiment to clap to the ground, he himfelf alone, with the colours behind him, flood upright, receiving the whole fire of the enemy; and this, becaufe, as he faid, though he could eafily lie down, his great bulk would not fuffer him to rife fo quickly.

His prefervation that day was the furprife and aftonifiment, not only of the whole army, but of all that heard the particulars of the action; and my information relates, that a most eminent perfon in the army was heard to fay upon the occasion, " That it was est nough to convince one of the truth of the " doctrine of predefination, and to juftify " what King William of glorious memory " had been used to fay, that every bullet has " its billet, or its particular direction and " commission where it should lodge." It is added, that on the retreat of our army, the Highland regiment was in the rear, and a great body of the French horfe being ordered to purfue, Sir Robert made his regiment face about, and gave them a general fire, fo full and effectual, that a great number of them being brought to the ground, the reft wheeled about and rode off.

But to clofe what relates to Sir Robert Munro; as an acknowledgement for his brave fervices at Fontenoy, as well as on former occafions, his Majefty was pleafed to appoint him to fucceed General Ponfonby, who was fain there, in the command of his regiment, which was among the troops that arrived at Newcaftle during the rebellion, and made a 'part of General Wade's army. They were afterwards ordered to Scotland; and being upon the left wing at the battle of Falkirk, on that fatd day, the rythof January 1745-6, they fhamefully left their brave Colonel and Lieutenant-Colonel with five or fix more of their officers, to be cut in pieces.

By the accounts which the rebels themfelves give of Sir Robert, he defended himfelf againfix for them with his halt-pike, and killed two of their number; upon which, a feventh came up, and (as they expressed him immediately to the ground. In this dreadful moment, in the midd of all this extremity, his brother, Dr. Munao, whom the warmell inflances of his friends could not divert from exposing his perfon in defence of his country, and who was near at hand, raa. to him to fupport him, attended by his fervant and the furgeon of the regiment; but they were all murdered on the fpot, in the moft barbarous manner by thofe cruel men.

Sir Robert's body was the next day fought out; and his face was fo cut and mangled by thefe favages, after he fell, that it could fearce be known. He was found and buried honourably in the church-yard of Falkirk by the Macdonalds, who, though engaged in rebellion againft their lawful Sovereign, could not but pay fome public regard to the memory of fo valiant a man; the principal perfons among the rebels attending him all the way to the grave.

And thus fell thefe two brave brothers, for the Doclor undoubtedly deferves that title with Sir Robert, who, though profelling the peaceful art of medicine, adventured himfelf amidif the moft vilible danger, fired with love to his illuftrious brother; and attempting in vain to bring him fome sid in his laft extremities, amidf armed enemies, expired with him, no lefs lamented than he by all that intimately knew him. How juft that lamentation was, will appear from the accounts which. I have had of the Doclor's character from his moft intimate frieads, which I here fullpin.

He was a gentleman of an excellent underflanding, and had a brightnefs and folidity in his genius, which are not often united; but which, when they concur, do greatly illuftrate each other. He had been bred up to the fludy of medicine and furgery, which in Scotland are frequently joined, as they have fogreat an affinity. " He had a large flock of " knowledge, not only in his own profession, " but in most parts of polite literature. But " thefe (adds my correspondent) I hold cheap " when compared to the goodnet's of his heart. " His greateft fludy was to know himfelf; " and I verily believe, that fince the early " ages of Christianity, there has not appear-" ed a more upright perfon."

He fpent a great many years in the Eaft-Indies, and had moft accurately and diligently inquired into the manners, cuffons, arts, and manufactures of the natives, and into the produce and commodities of the county : So that he was much more capable of giving eatertainment to perfons of curiofity in fuchthings, than travellers commonly are; and his veracity was fuch, that all who knew him sould entirely depend upon whatever he reported as on his own knowledge. To all thefe adwantages was added, a memory remarkably temacious of every circumflance-with which he charged it: But perhaps it was a lofs to the world that it was fo, as it hindered him from committing many extraordinary things to writing, which might have afforded improvement, as well as delight, to the public.

The want of fuch memoirs from fo able an hand is the more to be regretted, as his remarkable modelty did not permit him totalk much in company. One might fpend a good deal of fime with him, without perceiving by any hints from him, that he had ever been out of Britain : But when bis friends feemed defirous of information on any of thefe topies, as they fell in his way, he communicated his obfervations upon them with the utmoft freedom, and gave them the greatell fatifaction imaginable; of which fome remarkable inflauces happened at the houfes of perfons of very confiderable rank, who paid him that refpect which he fo well deferved.

It was the more to be defired, that he fhould have leit behind him fome written memoirs of his own remarks and adventures, as he wasa moft attentive obferver of divine providence, and had experienced many fingular inflances of it. One is fo remarkable, that it claims a place here, brief as thefe hints muft neffarily be......After he had continued eight or 'tem years in the Eafl Indies, he was filipwrecked on the Malabarian coaft, as he was on his paffage home : He faved his life on a plank, but loft all his effects, except a fmall parcel of diamonds. This ruinous calamity, as it feemed to be, obliged him to return to Fort St. George, where he experienced, far beyond what he could have expected, the extraordinary friendship of feveral English gentlemen of that fettlement; and felt the folid effects of it, as by their affiftance he acquired much more in fix or feven years following, (for his whole flay in that country was about fixteen years) than he had loft by fhipwreck : And when he left the fettlement, he had all fort of encouragement offered him to induce him to flay; but his health and other circumstances obliged him to return home.

This return (which happened, if I miftake not, about the year 1736) was a happy provividence to many: for as he was remarkably fuccefsful in both the branches of the peculiar profefion, he took great pains in both : And as he did this without fee or reward, when he was fatisfied the circumflances of the affliched meeded fuch affiltance, he was an infrument of faving many limbs and many lives, which muft otherwife in all probability have been keft.

APPENDIX TO THE

To this account I must beg leave to add what another of my correspondents writes to me concerning the Doctor, in the following words: " As we were often by ourfelves, I " ftill found him inclined to turn our dif-" courfe to fpiritual fubjects, concerning God " and religion, the offices of the great Re-" deemer, and the power of God's Spirit in " converting and fanctifying the fouls of men, " and the hope of eternal life through Chrift." I transcribe the paffage thus particularly concerning this pious phyfician, as I efteem it, in one view, a peculiar honour to him, and permit me to fay, in another, to the profession itfelf: Bleffed be God, that though it is fo rare a cafe, yet there are those of that learned body, who are not ashamed of the gospel of Chrift ; but who, knowing it to be true on incontestable evidence, and having felt (what one would imagine every rational creature who believes it to be true, must immediately fee,) its infinite importance, have fleadily determined to fubmit to its influence, and to maintain its honours in the midft of all the fcorn and derifion of their infidel brethren ; a determination, which requires no lefs courage, especially in some tempers, than that generous inftance of fraternal love which will entail fuch lafting glory on the memory of Doctor Munro.

There yet remained one valiant brother of this family, whom providence referved for a few months, before he shared the fate of the other two. The perfon I mean was Captain George Munro of Culcairn, Efg. of whom I have conceived fuch an idea from the account of him which has been put into my hands, that I cannot forbear withing the world were bleffed with a much larger narrative of his life and character than my inftructions will furnish out, or than I should have room to infert in fuch an appendix as this. Much do I regret, that providence never favoured me with an opportunity of being perfonally acquainted with him, efpecially as I have reafon to believe, from what my friends in the north write, that he had the like difpolition towards forming a friendship with me, as produced fo quick a growth of it in the breaft of Colonel Gardiner, whom, on the whole, Captain Munro feems to have refembled almost in every part of his character, taking it as it was fince that happy change, which I have fo largely defcribed in the foregoing memoirs : But what was wanting in my perfonal knowledge, is fupplied by a large and animated account from my correspondents, who had the best opportunity of knowing him, and upon whole information I can fafely depend.

Captain George Munro was the fecond brother of the family, the Doctor being the youngeft fon. He, like the other gentlemen, had the advantage of a very liberal education, and foon difcovered marks of a good genius, which might have qualified him for making a figure under any character in the learned world. Befides the other branches of literature, common to all the professions, he acquired a stock of theological knowledge ; and before he was feventeen years old, he was well acquainted with ecclefiaffical hiftory, fo as to be able to give a good account of the advance and decline of the Christian interest in various ages and countries, and the degrees and manner by which the corruption and reformation of the church had been introduced, eftablished, or obstructed. I the rather mention this, as it feems to be an accompliftment of great importance ; on which account, I much wonder, that the generality of young gentlemen fhould think it fo little worth attending to: And I wifh I could fay, that all who are intended for the ministry were fo careful in purfuing it, as its usefulness and its absolute necessity to them might demand,

But his tafte and talents particularly lay for a military life; and in the year  $t_7 t_5$ , he behaved himfelf with great courage and addivity during the whole courfe of that rebellion; and after the differion of the rebels, he was employed in reducing the inhabitants of those Highland countries, and the adjacent idles, to a fubmillou to the government.

In the year 1719, when, on occasion of the invalion from Spain, General Wightman, with the troops under his command, had waited long at Inverness for a body of Highlandmen, to conduct the troops through the mountains to Glenshiel, where the Spaniards and rebels were encamped; and when many promifes of fuch affiftance made to the general had failed, Sir Robert Munro being then out of the country, his brother the Gaptain (of whom we now fpeak) affembled, in a most expeditious manner, a body of the Munro clan, and marched with the regular troops to Glenshiel, where they diftinguished themfelves by the gallantry of their behaviour, driving the enemy before them in a fharp action, in which many of them were killed, and more wounded ; and among the reft the Captain himfelf in a very dangerous manner. He had, however, the fatisfaction to fee thefe foreign invaders, and their rebel abettors, totally routed and difperfed on the Pretender's birth day, June 10. And though his confliction fuffered much by the lofs of his blood on this occafion, yet it pleafed God to recover him for further fervice to his contry.

As he still continued vigorous and active in the fervice of the government, he obtained the command of one of the independent companies then in the national pay: And when they were afterwards regimented and fent to Flanders, he attended them thither, and continued in the public fervice till the year 1744, when he became fo exceedingly afthmatic that he could not breathe in the Flanders air : On which General Wade not only allowed him to fell his commiffion, but, out of compafion to his diffrefs, joined his brother Sir Robert in obliging him to do it, and to return home ; to which at length he fubmitted, though not without regret ; and thereupon returned to his domeftic feat at Newtown in Rofs-fhire, in the views of fpending his days with his family and friends in a peaceful retreat. But Providence determined otherwife, and had referved for him fome farther labours of a military life, in which it had appointed him glorioufly to toil and fall, after fervices which might have done an honour to his most vigorous and active days.

The late wicked and unnatural rebellion broke out foon after his arrival; and the danger of his country and its religious and civil conditution gave him at once a new flock of life and fpirits.

When General Cope came to Invernefs, and had been affured of being joined by a number of Highlanders to conduct him and his fmall army through the rebel countries between that town and Aberdeen, Captain Munro, with 200 of his brother's clan, were indeed the only perfons that were found willing to perform the promifes that were made by feveral others. He marched with the General directly to Aberdeen, from whence he was ordered to return home : In which return he was under a neceffity of marching through a great number of the rebels under the command of Gordon of Glenbucket, who lay on the road to attack the Captain and his party ; but Glenbucket finding that the Cantain was determined to difpute every inch of ground with him, retired, and allowed him to proceed without disturbance to Invernefs.

Not long after that, the Earl of Loudon fent Captain Munro, in conjunction with the Laird of Macleod, with a body of men, to relieve the city of Aberdeen, and the neighbouring country, then greatly opprefied by the outrages committed upon them by Lord Lewis Gordon and the rebels under his command. Accordingly the Captain and Macleod proceeded as far as Inverury, a fmall town a few miles welt of Aberdeen, where they halted to receive intelligence; and from the narrownefs of the place, they were obliged to quarter a great number of their men in diffant places through the adjacent country. In the mean time, a confiderable reinforcement from the main body of the rebel army, which then lay at Perth, was fent under the command of a French officer. fupported by their picquets and Irifh brigades ; by the affiftance of which, Lord Lewis attempted to furprife and cut off the Captain and his whole party. In this view they were moving towards Inverury, in the dufk of the evening, after Captain Munro and Macleod had fent their men through the country to their quarters : but though there was not fuch good intelligence provided as might have been wilhed, they were providentially difcovered at fuch a diffance, that Capt. Munro and the Laird of Macleod had time to draw up the men they had in the town of Inverury, in fo regular a manner, that, in confequence of it, they gave the enemy fuch a warm reception, attacking them at once in the front and flank, that many of them were left dead in the field. The brave Captain and his affociate continued very fedate, intrepid, and active, during the heat of the fkirmifh, till at laft being overpowered by far fuperior numbers, they thought it adviseable to retire, and brought off their party fafe and in good order, excepting fome few who had been killed or taken prifoners. Among the latter was Mr. Adam Gordon of Ardoch, nephew to Captain Munro, who was feized by the 'rebels, and treated with a deal of rigour and feverity for a confiderable time, while detained in their power. But they did not prefume to purfue the reft; and the young gentleman at length made his escape, to the great joy of the family, being, I hope, referved by Providence to tread in the fteps of his hereic uncles, and to blefs his country with fome confiderable future fervices.

Upon the retreat of the rebels northward before his Royal Highnefs the Duke of Cumberland, the Earl of Loudon had not fufficient firength to maintain his pofieffion of Inwernefs againft them; whereupon he, with the Lord Prefident and Captain Munro, re-A a ij treated to the fhire of Sutherland, proposing to defend themfelves there, until the feafon allowed his Royal Highness to march the troops to Invernefs. But in this interval, the rebels having fpread themfelves through the fhires of Invernefs, Murray, and Rofs, they got poffeffion of a great many boats ; by the help of which they transported a great part of their body to the Sutherland coaft, under the covert of a very thick fog : Upon which, the Earl of Loudon, with the Lord Prefident and the Captain, were obliged to retreat through the weftern parts of Rofs into the ifle of Sky, where they continued until the rebel army was broke and difperfed at the battle of Culloden.

I have been the more particular in this narrative of the Captain's conduct during the rebellion, as it gives fome light into the fituation and tranfactions of the friends of our eonflitution in those parts at that time: And my information silfures me, that the facts are taken from perfons of undoubted veracity, who were prefent with the Captain in his march to Aberdeen with General Cope, and in his return from it; and who were with him in the fkirmißh at Inveraray, and were afterwards witneffes of his death.

LIFE OF COLONEL GARDINER. 28

Upon his return from the ifle of Sky, he was confantly employed in expeditions through the rebel countries of great extent, to reduce them to a fubmiflion to the government, which he performed with diligence and zeal, but fill with the greatest humanity. This the rebels themfelves must acknowledge, as he never did the leaft injury to any man, and in all that vaft circuit which he made through these distant countries, he neither himfelf feized, nor allowed those under his command to feize, any thing but arms ; and yet, notwithitanding all this humanity, his diligence and zeal had been fuch in the whole of this rebellion, as rendered him obnoxious to the rage and revenge of the rebels, who had vowed his deftruction upon the first opportunity; and becaufe they had not courage to face him, they had recourfe to the bafe method of affaffination, which was effected on the Lord's day, the 31ft of August 1746. He was then on a long and neceffary march at the head of 500 men, on the fide of Locharkey. amongft the wild rocks of Lochaber, where, as he was paffing by the fide of a wood, between the advanced guard and the main body of his men, he was fhot dead by a villain who concealed himfelf behind the trees and rocks in the wood, and who, by the advantages of that fituation, got off without being difcovered, and has never fince been found out: A m event to the Captain, no doubt, moft happy, and a bleffed kind of inflantaneous tranflation to the regions of endlefs peace and triumphant joy 5 but to all who loved the public, not to be mentioned without the tendereff fenfibility and deepedt regret.

One of my correspondents on this occasion, concludes his account of the deaths of Sir Robert, the Doctor, and the Captain, in these words : " Thus died thefe three worthy men, " to the irreparable lofs of the country in " which they lived, all of them remarkable " for a brave fpirit, full of love to their na-" tive land, and of difinterefted zeal for re-" ligion and liberty; faithful in their pro-" mifes, fledfaft in their friendship, abundant " in their charity to the poor and diffreffed; " moderate in their refentments, and eafy to " be reconciled; and efpecially, remarkable " for their great and entire love to each other; " fo that one foul feemed, as it were, to actu-" ate all the three "." To which it might have been added, bleffed with a fifter, not unworthy to make a fourth perfon in fuch a friendihip.

+ The intimacy of their friendflip, though chiefly founded on a fimiliarity of character, much perhaps be further promoted, by their being fo nearly of the fame age; for Sir Robert was born Augult 24, 1684; the Capitan, September 18, 1685; and the Dockor, September 19, 1687; Sir Robert therefore was flains in his firty-fitched year; the Capital in his firty-fitch, and the Dockor in his firty-mitched partial in his firty-fitch, and the Dockor in his firty-mitched

My other correspondent, in his character of the Captain, fpeaks in this manuer : " The great foundation of all his other virtues was laid in a most fincere and stedfast re-" gard to the Supreme Being. He carefully ftudied the great doctrines of our holy re-66 ligion, which he courageoully profeffed, and as it was requifite, defended, in what-" ever company he might be caft : He did 66 this with the greater freedom, as his practice was always agreeable to it ; and in par-66 "ticular, his regard, both to the book and to the day of God. He had from his infancy been trained up in an acquaintance with the Scriptures, and he daily perufed it with " pleafure, and doubtlefs with advantage. 66 And though the natural cheerfulnefs of his 6.6 temper inclined him on other days to face-66 tious turns in conversation, yet on the Sab-" hath he was not only grave and devout, but carefully attentive, that all his fpeech 66 might tend to edification, and as far as pof-" fible minifter grace to the hearers. He was " exemplary in the focial virtues, temperate " in the use of food and sleep, and role early " for devotion, (wherein, as in many other " refpects, he remarkably refembled his be-" loved friend Colonel Gardiner). He was " alfo thoroughly fenfible, how much a faith-" ful discharge of relative duties is effential " to the character of a Christian. He appro-" ved himfelf therefore as a brave and vigi-" lant officer, a most active and faithful fer-" vant of the crown, and a true patriot to " his country in the worft of times ; and in " domeftic life was exemplary as a hufband, " a father, and a mafter. He was a moft af-" fectionate brother, a faithful friend, a con-" ftant benefactor, and a fure patron of the " opprefied ; and, to crown all, was at laft in " effect, a martyr in the caufe of that religion " he had to eminently adorned, and of those " liberties he had fo long and fo bravely dese fended "

It muft give a fenfible pleafure to every reader, who enters into thefe things with a becoming fipirit, to refect, That notwithflanding thefe unparallelled and irreparable loffes, this family, which has been long celebrated for fo many worthy branches, is not yet extind; but that both Sir Robert Munro and the Captain have left thofe behind them, who may not only bear up the name, but if they and/ver the hopes which in the opening. of life they give to their country, may add new honours to it.

I hope the reader will not lay down this narrative, which is now brought to a clofe, without deriving fome ufeful leffons from the remarkable train of providence, which this Appendix, as well as the preceding Memoirs, offer to his observation. And the more he enters into these leffons, the more will he be difposed to lift up his withes and prayers to God for those valuable remains, both of Sir Robert Munro's and of Colonel Gardiner's family, which may yet be within the reach of fuch addreffes ; that God may gracioufly fupport them in their forrows, and that all the virtues and graces of the illustrious dead may live in them, and in their remotest posterity. Amen !
