

THE

ADVENTURES

OF

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES.

BY

T. SMOLLETT, M.D.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

EDINBURGH:

PRINTED BY ALEX. JARDINE, Back of Gawin Loch's Land, Forrester's Wynd.

1804.

ADVENTURES

OF

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES.

CHAP. I.

In which certain Personages of this delightful History are introduced to the Reader's Acquaintance.

TT was on the great northern road from York to London, about the beginning of the month of October, and the hour of eight in the evening, that four travellers were, by a violent fhower of rain, driven for shelter into a little public-house on the fide of the highway, diffinguished by a tign which was faid to exhibit the figure of a Black Lion. The kitchen. in which they affembled, was the only room for entertainment in the house, paved with red bricks, remarkably clean, furnished with three or four Windfor chairs, adorned with fhining plates of pewter, and copper faucepans nicely fooured, that even dazzled the eyes of the beholder ; while a cheerful fire of fea-coal blazed in the chimney. Three of the travellers, who arrived on horfeback, having feen their cattle properly accommodated in the itable, agreed to pals the time, until the weather fhould clear up, over a bowl of rumbo, which was accordingly prepared : but the fourth, refufing to join their company, took his flation as the oppofice fide of the chinauey, and called for a pint of two-penny, with which he indulged himfelf apart. At a little diftance, on his left hand, there was another groupe, confilt.

A 2

ing of the landlady, a decent widow, her two daughters, the elder of whom feemed to be about the age of fifteen, and a country lad, who ferved both as waiter and oftler.

The focial triumvirate was composed of Mr Fillet, a country practitioner in furgery and midwifery. Captain Crowe, and his nephew Mr Thomas Clarke, an attorney. Fillet was a man of fome education, and a great deal of experience, fhrewd, fly, and fenfible. Captain Crowe had commanded a merchantfhip in the Mediterranean-trade for many years, and faved fome money by dint of frugality and traffic. He was an excellent feaman, brave, active, friendly in his way, and ferupuloufly honeft, but as little acquainted with the world, as a fucking child; whimfical, impatient, and fo impetuous, that he could not help breaking in upon the conversation, whatever it might be, with repeated interruptions, that feemed to burft from him by involuntary impulie : when he himfelf attempted to fpeak, he never finished his period ; but made fuch a number of abrupt tranfitions, that his difcourfe feemed to be an unconnected feries of unfinished featences, the meaning of which it was not eafy to decypher.

His nephew, Tom Clarke, was a young follow, whole goodnefs of heart, even the exercise of his profellion had not been able to corrupt. Before flrangers he never owned hinfelf an attorney, without bluftings, though he had no reafon to bluft for his own practice, for he conflantly refufed to engage in the caufe of any client whole character was equivocal, and was never known to add with fuch induitry as when concerned for the widow and orphan, or any other object that fued in forma paperin. Indered he was for replete with human kindnefs, that as often as an affecting flory or eircumflance was told

In his hearing, it overflowed at his eyes. Being of a warm complexion, he was very frideptible of paffon, and fornewhat likerine in his amours. In other refpects, he piqued himfelf on undertlanding the practice of the courts; and in private company he took pleafore in laying down the law; but he was an indifferent orator, and tedioufly circumflantial in his explanations: his flatpre was rather diminutive; but, upon the whole, he had forme tile to the character of a pretty, dapper, little fallow.

The folitary gueft had fomething very forbidding in his afpect, which was contracted by an habitual frown. His eyes were fmall and red, and fo deep fet in the fockets, that each appeared like the unextinguished snuff of a farthing candle, gleaming thro' the horn of a dark lanthorn. His nottrils were elevated in fcorn, as if his fenfe of fmelling had been perpetually offended by fome unfavoury odour; and he looked as if he wanted to fhrink within himfelf, from the impertinence of fociety. He wore a black periwig as fraight as the pinions of a raven, and this was covered with an hat flapped, and fastened to his head by a fpeckled handkerchief tied under his chin. He was wrapped in a great coat of brown frieze, under which he feemed to conceal a fmall bundle. His name was Ferret, and his character diftinguished by three peculiarities. He was never feen to fmile; he was never heard to fpeak in praife of any perfon whatfoever; and he was never known to give a direct answer to any queltion that was asked : but feemed, on all occafions, to be actuated by the most perverse spirit of contradiction.

Captain Crowe, having remarked that it was fqually weather, asked how far it was to the next market-town; and understanding that the distance was not lefs than fix miles, faid he had a good min to come to an anchor for the night, if fo be as could have a tolerable berth in this here harbour Mr Fillet, perceiving by his ftyle that he was a fe faring gentleman, obferved that their landlady w not used to lodge fuch company; and expressed for furprize, that he who had no doubt endured fo man ftorms and hardships at sea, should think much travelling five or fix miles on horfeback by mod light. "For my part, faid he, I ride in all weather and at all hours, without minding cold, wet, wine or darknefs. My conflitution is fo cafe-hardenee that I believe I could live all the year at Spitzberge With refpect to this road, I know every foot of fo exactly, that I'll engage to travel forty miles up on it blindfold, without making one falle ftep; and if you have faith enough to put yourfelves under m aufpices, I will conduct you fafe to an elegant inn where you will meet with the beft accommodation. " Thank you, brother, (replied the Captain :) w are much beholden to you for your courteous offer but howfomever, you muft not think I mind four weather more than my neighbours. I have worked hard aloft and alow in many a taught gale-but this here is the cafe, d'ye fee ; we have run down a long day's reckoning; our beafts have had a hard fpell and as for my own hap, brother, I doubt my bottom planks have loft fome of their fheathing, being an how I a'n't used to that kind of fcrubbing."

The doctor, who had practifed on hoard a man or were in his youth, and was perfectly well acquainted with the Captain's dialect, affured him, that if his bottom was damaged, he would new pay it with am excellent falve, which he always carried about hims, to guard againf tuch accidents on the road : but Tom Clarkey Woo fremed to have caft the eyes of af-faition upon the landlady's eldeft daughter, Dolty, objected to their proceeding farther without reft and refrehment, as they had already travelled fifty miles fince morning; and he was fure his under mult be fingued both in mind and body, from vexation as well as from a hard exercife, to which he had not been accuftomed. Fillet then defindet, faying, he was forry to find the Captain had any caufe for vexation; but he hoped it was not an incurable evil. This exprefilion was accompanied with a look of eutriofity, which Mr Clarke was glad of an occafion to gratify; for, as we have hinted above, he was a very communicative gentleman, and the affair which now ay upon his flomach intereffed him nearly.

" I'll affure you, Sir, (faid he) this here gentleman, Captain Crowe, who is my mother's own prother, has been cruelly ufed by fome of his relaions. He bears as good a character as any captain of a fhip on the Royal Exchange, and has undergone wariety of hardfhips at fea. What d'ye think, now, of his burfting all his finews, and making his eyes tart out of his head in pulling his fhip off a rock, whereby he faved to his owners."-Here he was inerrupted by the Captain, who exclaimed, " Belay, Tom, belay :- pr'y thee don't veer out fuch deal of aw. Clap a ftopper on thy cable, and bring thyfelf p, my lad .- What a deal of fluff thou haft pumped p concerning burfting, and flarting, and pulling hips: Laud have mercy upon us !- look-ye here, rother-look-ye here-mind thefe poor crippled daints ; two fingers on the flarboard, and three on ae larboard hand; crooked, d'ye fee, like the knees n a bilander .- I'll tell vou what, brother, you feem be a-fhip deep laden-rich cargoe-current feting into the bay-hard gale-lee fhore-all hands the beat-tow round the headland-felf pulling .

for dear blood, against the whole crew .- Snap go the finger braces-crack went the eye-blocks,---Bource day-light-flash star-light-down I foundered, dark as hell-whizz went my ears, and my head fpun like a whirligig .---- That don't fignify-I'm a Yorkshire boy, as the faying is-all my life at fea, brother, by reafon of an old grandmother and maiden aunt, a couple of old flinkingkept me thefe forty years out of my grandfather's eftate -Hearing as how they had taken their departure, came afhore, hired horfes, and clapped on all my canvas, fleering to the northward, to take poffeffion of my-But it don't fignify talking-thefe two old piratical-had held a palavar with a lawyer-an attorney, Tom, d'ye mind me, an attorney _____ and by his affiltance, hove me out of my inheritance :----that is, all, brother-hove me out of five hundred pounds a-year-that's all-what fignifies-but fuch windfalls we don't every day pick up along fhore. Fill about, brother-yes, by the Lord ! those two fmuggling harridans, with the affiftance of an attorney-an attorney, Tom-hove me out of five hundred a-ycar." "Yes, indeed, Sir, (added Mr Clarke) those two malicious old women docked the intail, and left the effate to an alien."

Here Mr Ferret thought proper to intermingle in the coverfaints with a " $P_{\rm th}$  what, do't taik of docking the intril? Do'ft not know that by the flatute Wellm. 2, 13; Ed. the will and intension of the donor mult be fulfilled, and the tenant in tail fhall not alien after iffue had, or before." "Give me leave, Sir, (replied "Don) I profume you are a practitioner in the law. Now you know that in the cafe of a contingent remainder, the intail may be defloyed by levying a fine, and fuffering a recovery i or otherwise defloying the particular clates, b.forc

the contingency happens. If feffer, who poficis an elate only during the life of a fon, where divers remaindare are limited over, make a feffmant in fee to him, by the feffmant all the future remaindare rare defltroyed. Indeed, a perfon in remainder may have a writ of intrufico, if any do introde after the death of a tenant for life; and the write seg gravel guereda lies to execute a dwife in remainder, after the ceath of a tenant in tail without illice."  $\longrightarrow$  Spoke like a true defciple of Geber;" (crise Ferret). "No, Sir, (replied Mr Clarke) councillor Caper is in the conveyancing way—I was clerk to ferjeant Croaker." "Ay, now you may fet up for yourielf (refumed the other) for you can prate as unintelligibly as the beft of them."

" Perhaps (faid Tom) I do not make myfelf underftood : if to be as how that is the cafe, let us change the polition ; and suppose that this here cafe is a tail after a possibility of issue extinct. If a tenant in tail, after a poffibility, make a feoffment of his land, he in reversion may enter for the forfeiture. Then we must make a diffinction between general tail and special tail. It is the word body that makes the intail :- there must be a body in the tail, devifed to heira male or female, otherwife it is a fee-fimple, becaufe it is not limited of what body. Thus a corporation cannot be feized in tail. For example : here is a young woman .- What is your name, my dear? " Dolly," answered the daughter, with a curtiey. " Here's Dolly-I feize Dolly in tail-Dolly I feize you in tail."-" Sha't then," cried Dolly, pouting. " I am feized of land and fee-I fettle on Dolly in tail."-

Dolly, who did not comprehend the nature of the illuftration, underflood him in a literal fenfe, and in a whimpering tone exclaimed, " Sha't then, I tell thee, curfed toad!" Tom, however, was fo transported with his fubject, that he took no notice of poor Dolly's miftake ; but proceeded in his harangue upon the different kinds of tails, remainders, and seisins, when he was interrupted by a noife that alarmed the whole company. The rain had been fucceeded by a ftorm of wind, that howled around the house with the most favage impetuosity ; and the heavens were overcaft in fuch a manner, that not one flar appeared. io that all without was darknefs and uproar. This aggravated the horror of divers loud forcams, which even the noife of the blaft could not exclude from the aftonished ears of our travellers. Captain Crowe called out, " Avaft, avaft !" Tom Clarke fat filent, ftaring wildly, with his mouth ftill open ; the furgeon himfelf feemed ftartled, and Ferret's countenance berrayed evident marks of confusion. The offer moved nearer the chimney, and the good woman of the house, with her two daughters, crept close to the company.

After some paufe, the Captain flarting up, " Thefe (faid he) are fignals of diffrefs. Some poor fouls in danger of foundering .- Let us bear up a-head, and fee if we can give them any affit ance." The landlady begged him, for Chrift's fake, not to think of going out; for it was a fpirit that would lead him aftray into fens and rivers, and certainly do him a mifchief, Crowe feemed to be flaggered by this remonstrance, which his nephew reinforced, observing, that it might bea firatagem of regues to decoy them into the fields, that they might rob them under the cloud of night. Thus exhorted, he refumed his feat ; and Mr Ferret began to make very fevere firichures upon the folly and fear of those who believed and trembled at the visitation of spirits, ghofts, and goblins. He faid, he would engage with twelve penny-worth of phosphorus to frighten a whole parifit out of their fenfes: then he expatiated on the pufillanimity of the nation in general; ridiculed the militia, centured the government, and dropped fome hints about a change of hands, which the Captain could not, and the Doctor would not, comprehend.

Tom Clarke, from the freedom of his difcourfe. concluded he was a ministerial fpy, and communicated his opinion to his uncle in a whifper, while this mifanthrope continued to pour forth his invectives with a fluency peculiar to himfelf. The truth is, Mr Ferret had been a party writer, not from principle, but employment, and had felt the rod of power; in order to avoid a fecond exertion of which, he now found it convenient to fkulk about in the country : for he had received intimation of a warrant from the fecretary of flate, who wanted to be better acquainted with his perfon. Notwithstanding the ticklish nature of his fituation, it was become fo habitual to him to think and fpeak in a certain manner, that even before ftrangers, whofe principles and connexions he could not poffibly know, he hardly ever opened his mouth, without uttering fome direct or implied farcafm against the government,

He had already proceeded a confiderable way in demonstrating, that the nation was bankrupt and beggared, and that thole who flood at the helm were fleering full into the golph of inevitable dell'utility, when his fecture was fuddenly fufpended by a violent knocking at the door, which threatened the whole houfe with immediate demolition. Capatin Crowe, believing they flould be inflantly boarded, unfleathed his hanger, and flood in a pollure of defence. Mr Filter armed himfelf with the poker, which happened to be red-hot; the older pulled down a rulty firelock, that hung by the roof, over a flich of base.

con. Tom Clarke, perceiving the landhady and hee children diffracted with terror, conducted them, out of mere compation, below flairs into the cellar; and as for Mr Ferret, he prudently withdrew into an adioning pantry.

But as a perfonage of great importance in this entertaining hillory was forced to remain fome time at the door, before he could gain admittance, fo much the reader wait with patience for the next chapter, in which he will fee the caufe of this diffurbance exeplained much to his comfort and edification.

CHAP. II.

In which the Hero of these Adventures makes his first Appearance on the Stage of Action.

"THE outward door of the Black Lion had already fulkined two/freedful flocks, but at the third it flow open, and in flaked an apparition, that finde the hearts of our travellers with fear and trepidation. It was the figure of a man armed eap-apire, bearing on his floulder a bundle dropping with water, which afterwards appared to be the body of a man, that feemed to have been drowned and filted up from the bottom of the neighboaring river.

Having deposited his burden carefully on the flour, he addrefied the company in thele words: "Be not furpriled, good people, at this usufual appearance, which I shall take an opportunity to explain; and forgive the rude and boilterous manner in which I have demanded, and indeed forced admittance; the violence of my intrusion was the effect of needfuy. In crofling the river my 'Iquire and his hole were fwept ways by the fireams; and with fome difficulty I have been able to drage him althore, though I ant ase.

fraid my afliftance reached him too late: for, fince I brought him to land, he has given no figns of life."

Here he was interrupted by a groan, which isfued from the cheft of the 'fquire, and terrified the fpectators as much as it comforted the mafter. After fome recollection, Mr Fillet began to undrefs the body, which was laid on a blanket on the floor, and rolled from fide to fide by his direction. A confiderable quantity of water being difcharged from the mouth of this unfortunate 'iquire, he uttered a hideous roar. and, opening his eyes, flared wildly around: then the furgeon undertook for his recovery ; and his mafter went forth with the offler in queft of the horfes, which he had left by the fide of the river. His back was no fooner turned than Ferret, who had been peeping from behind the pantry-door, ventured to rejoin the company, pronouncing with a fmile, or rather grin of contempt, " Hey-dey ! what precious mummery is this? What, are we to have the farce of Hamlet's ghoft ?" " Adzooks, (cried the captain) my kinfman Tom has dropped aftern-hope in God a has not bulged to, and gone to bottom." " Pifh, (exclaimed the mifanthrope) there's no danger ; the young lawyer is only feizing Dolly in tail."

Certain it is, Dolly fqueaked at that inftant in the cellar; and Clarke appearing foon after in fome confution, declared the had been frightened by a flath of lightning ; but this affertion was not confirmed by the young lady herfelf, who eyed him with a fullen regard, indicating difpleafure, tho' not indifference ; and when queftioned by her mother, replied, " A. doant maind what a-fays, fo a-doant, vor all his goalden jacket, then."

In the mean time the furgeon had performed the operation of phlebotomy on the 'fquire, who was VOL. I.

lifted into a chair, and supported by the landlady for that purpofe ; but he had not as yet given any fign of having retrieved the use of his fenses. And here Mr Fillet could not help contemplating with furprize. the ftrange figure and accoutrements of his patient, who feemed in age to be turned of fifty. His flature was below the middle fize: he was thick, fquat, and brawny, with a fmall protuberance on one fhoulder, and a prominent belly, which, in confequence of the water he had fwallowed, now ftrutted beyond its usual dimensions. His forehead was remarkably convex, and fo very low, that his black bufly hair descended within an inch of his nose; but this did not conceal the wrinkles of his front, which were manifold. His fmall glimmering eyes refembled those of the Hampfhire porker, that turns up the foil with his projecting fnout. His checks were fhrivelled and puckered at the corners, like the feams of a regimental coat as it comes from the hands of the contractor: his nofe bore a ftrong analogy in fhape to a tennis-ball, and in colour to a mulberry : for all the water in the river had not been able to quench the natural fire of that feature. His upper iaw was furnished with two long white sharp-pointed teeth or fangs, fuch as the reader may have obferved in the chaps of a wolf, or full-grown malliff, and an anatomilt would defcribe as a pre-ternatural elongation of the dentes canini. His chin was fo long, fo peaked, and incurvated, as to form in profile, with his impending forehead, the exact refemblance of a moon in the first quarter. With respect to his equipage, he had a leathern cap upon his head, faced like those worn by marines, and exhibiting in embroidery the figure of a crefcent. His coat was of white cloth faced with black, and cut in a very antique falhion ; and, in lieu of a waiftcoat, he wore a buff ierkin-

His feet were cafed with loofe bufking, which though they role almoft to his knee, could not hide that curvature, known by the appellation of bandy legs. A large firing of bandalers garnithed a broad belt that graced his floulders, from whence depn led an influment of war, which was fomething between a backflowed and a cutafs; and a cafe of pittols were flock in his gridle.

Such was the figure which the whole company now furveyed with admiration. After fome paufe, he feemed to recover his recollection. He rolled about his eyes around, and, attentively furveying every individual, exclaimed, in a ftrange tone, " Bodikins! where's Gilbert?" This interrogation did not fayour much of fanity, efoccially when accompanied with a wild flare, which is generally interpreted as a fure fign of a diffurbed understanding : nevertheles, the furgeon endeavoured to affift his recollection. " Come, (faid he) have a good heart .- How doft do, friend?" " Do! (replied the 'fquire) do as well as I can :--that's a lie too: I might have done better. I had no bufineis to be here." "You ought to thank God and your mafter (refumed the furgeon) for the providential escape you have had." " Thank my mafter ! (cried the 'louire) thank the devil!' Go and teach your grannum to crack filberds. I know who I'm bound to pray for, and who I ought to curfé the longest day I have to live."

Here the captain interpoling, "Nay, bother, (foid he) you are bound to pray for this here gentleman as your theet-anchor; for, if fo be as he had not cleared your flowage of the water you had taken in at your upper works, and lightened your veins, d'ye fee, by taking away fome of your blood, adud! you had dirign before the gale, and uver been brought up in this world again, d'ye fee?" "What; then you would perfuade me (replied the patient) that the only way to fave my life was to field my precious blood? Look ye, friend, it fhall not be lou blood to me.—I take you all to wincifs, that there furgeon, or apothecary, or farrier, or dog-doctor, or whatfoever he may be, has robbed me of the balfam of life:—he has not left fo much blood in my body as would fatten a flareed fiea.—O1 that there was a lawyer here to forve him with a interai."

Then fixing his eyes upon Ferret, proceeded. " An't you a limb of the law, friend ?- No, I cry you mercy, you look more like a fhewman or a conjurer."-Ferret, nettled at this address, answered, " It would be well for you that I could conjure a little common fenfe into that numbfcull of yours." " If I want that commodity, (rejoined the 'fquire) I must go to another market, I trow .- You legerdemain men be more like to conjure the money from our pockets, than fenfe into our fculls. -- Vor my own part. I was once cheated of vorty good fhilhugs by one of your broother cups and balls." In all probability he would have defcended to particulars, had he not been feized with a return of his naufea, which obliged him to call for a bumper of brandy. This remedy being fwallowed, the tumult in his ftomach fubfided. He defired he might be put to bed without delay, and that half a dozen ergs and a pound of bacon might, in a couple of hours, be dreffed for his fuoper.

He was accordingly led off the fcene by the landlady and her daughter; and Mr Ferret had juft time to obfere the filow was a composition, in which he did not know whether knave or fool moft preciominated, when the mafter returned from the flable. He had taken of his helmet, and now difplayed a very engaging countenance. His age did not feem to exceed thirty: he was tall, and feemingly robuft ; his face long and oval, his nofe aqualine, his mouthfurnished with a fet of elegant teeth white as the drifted fnow; his complexion clear, and his afpect poble. His chefnut hair loofely flowed in fort natural curls : and his grey eyes fhone with fuch viva-city, as plainly fhewed that his reason was a little difcomposed. Such an appearance prepoffeffed the greater part of the company in his favour ; he bowed round with the most polite and affable address; enquired about his 'fquire, and, being informed of the pains Mr Fillet had taken for his recovery, infitted upon that gentleman's accepting an handfome gratuity: then, in confideration of the cold-bath he had undergone, he was prevailed upon to take the poft of honour ; namely, the great chair fronting the fire. which was reinforced with a billet of wood for his comfort and convenience.

Perceiving his fellow-travellers either over-awed into filence by his prefence, or flruck dumb with adniration at his equipage, he accofted them in thefe words, while an agreeable finile dimpled on his eheek.

<sup>44</sup> The good company wonders, no doubt, to fet a mon caled in armour, fuch as hath bee for sohore a whole century difinfed in this and every other country in Europe; and perhaps they will be fill more forprifed when they hear that man profes himfed a novicine of that military order, which hath of old been ditinguithed in Great Britain, as well as thra' all Chriftendom, by the name of Knights Errant. Yes, gentlemen, in that pairful and thoray path of rol and danger I have begun my career, a candidate for homeft fung determined, as far as in me lits, to for homeft fung determined.

B 3

honour and affert the efforts of virtue, to combat vice In all her forms, redrefs injuries, chaftife opprefilion, protech the helplefs and forlown, relieve the indigent, exert my beft endeavours in the caufe of innocence and beauty, and declicate my talents, fuch as they are, to the fervice of my country."

** What I (aid Ferret) you (et up for a modern Don Quixote) — The foheme is rather too flade and extravagant. — What was an lumourous romance and well-timed fattire in Spain, near two hundred years ago, will make but a forry jell, and appear equally inšpid and abfurd, when really acted from affectation at this time of day, in a country like England."

The knight, eyeing this centure with a look of difdain, replied in a folemn lofty tone : " He that from affectation imitates the extravagancies recorded of Don Quixote, is an imposter equally wicked and contemptible. He that counterfeits madnefs, unlefs he diffembles like the elder Brutus, for fome virtuous purpofe, not only debafes his own foul, but acts as a traitor to heaven, by denying the divinity that is within him. - I am neither an affected imitator of Don Quixote, nor, as I truft in heaven, vifited by that (pirit of lunacy fo admirably difplayed in the fictitious character exhibited by the inimitable Cervantes. I have not yet encountered a windmill for a giant : nor miftaken this public-house for a magnificent caftle : neither do I believe this gentleman to be the confable : nor that worthy practitioner to be mafter Elizabat, the furgeon recorded in Amadis de Gaul : nor you to be enchanter Alquife, nor any other fage of hiftory or romance .- I fee and diffinguilt objects as they are difcerned and defcribed by other men. I reason without prejudice, can endure contradiction, and, as the company perceives, even bear impertinent cenfure without paffion or refentment.

I quarrel with none but the foces of virtue and decorum, againft whom I have declared perpetual war, and them I will every where attack as the natural enemies of mankind."

"But that war (faid the cynic) may foon be brought to a conclution, and your adventures clofe in Bridewell, provided your worthip as a vagant, according to the flature." If Eaven and earth ! (cried the itranger, flatting up and laying his hand on his for of 0 of live to har myielf included with fuch an opprobrious epithet, and refrain from trampling into dut the infoltent calumniator !"

The tone in which thefe words were pronounced, and the indignation that failed from the eyes of the freaker, initimidated every individual of the fociety, and reduced Ferret to a temporary privation of all his faculties. His eyes retired within their fockets his complexion, which was naturally of a copper hue, now fhirded to a leaden codours his teeth began to chatter; and all his limbs were agitated by a fudden paily. The knight obferved his condition, and refumed his feat, faying, "I was to blame: may vengeance mult be referved for very different objects-Friend, you have nothing to fear--the fudden guft of pailion is now blown over. Recollectly sourcief; and L will reafon saimly on the obfervation you have made."

This was a very factorable declaration to Mr Ferret, who opened his eyes, and wyred his forehead, while the other proceeded in thefe terms. " You fay I am in danger of being apprehended as a vagrant; I am not lo ignorant of the laws of my country, but that I know the defeription of thofe who fall within the legal meaning of this odious term, You mult give me leave to inform you, firend, that I am neither bearward, fencer, firoller, gipfey mount bank, nor mendicant; nor do I prodifie fubthe eraft to deceive and impofe upon the king's lieges; nor can I be held as an idle diforderly perfon, travellag from place to place, collecting monito by virtue of counterfeited patter, brief, and other faile pretences.--In what reiped: therefore an I to be decould a vagrant? Aniwer boldly, without fear or formple."

To this interrogation the mifanthrops replied, with a faultering accent. "I for not a vagrant, you indust the penalty for riding armed in affray of the peace (reformed the other). I ride in prefervation of the peace, and gentlemen are allowed by the law to wear armour for their delence. Some ride with bluddrbuffer, fome with pitols, fome with fwords, accordance to their various unclinations. Mice is to wear the a mour of my foreiathers: perhaps I ufe them for excert, in order to accultom myifd to faituge, and free giften my conflutions perhaps I affume them for a froite."

"But if you five aggregarmed and in diguite, affault me on the highway, or put me in be diy fear, for the fike of the jelt, the law will punih you in earnel," crited the other. " But my intention (anivered the knight) is carefully to avoid all thole occations of offences." "Then, faid Ferret, you may go unarmed, like other fober people." " Not fo, (anfwred the knight) as I propote to travel at all times, and in all places, mine armour may guard me againd the attempts of treachery; if may defend me autimeted, or have occasion to bring makefactors to justice."

" What, then (exclaimed the philosopher) you intend to co-operate with the honourable fraternity of "thief-takers ?" " I do propofe (faid the youth, eyeing him with a look of ineffable contempt) to act as a coadjutator to the law, and even to remedy evils which the law cannot reach; to detect fraud and treafon, abafe infolence, mortify pride, difcourage flander, difgrace immodefty, and ftigmatize ingratitude : but the infamous part of a thief-catcher's character I difclaim. Neither do I affociate with robbers and pickpockets, knowing them to be fuch, that, being intrufted with their fecrets, I may the more effectually betray them; nor fliall I ever pocket the reward granted by the legiflature to those by whom robbers are brought to conviction : but I shall always think it my duty to rid my country of that pernicious vermin, which preys upon the bowels of the commonwealth ---- not but that an incorporated company of licenfed thieves might, under proper regulations, be of fervice to the community."

Ferret, emboldened by the paffive tamenefs with which the flranger bore his laft reflection, began to think he had nothing of Hector but his outlide, and gave a loofe to all the acrimony of his party rancour-Hearing the knight mention a company of licenfed thieves, " What elfe, (cried he) is the majority of the nation? What is your flanding army at home, that eat up their fellow-fubjects? What are your mercenaries abroad, whom you hire to fight their own quarrels? What is your militia, that wife meafure of a fagacious ministry, but a larger gang of petty thieves, who fteal fheep and poultry through mere idlenefs; and were they confronted with an enemy would fleal themfelves away? What is your .... but a note of thieves, who pillage the nation under colour of the law, and enrich themfelves with the wreck of their country? When you confider the enormous debt of above an hundred millions, the intolerable load of taxes and impofitions under which we groan, and the manner in which that burden is yearly accumulating, to support two German electorates, without our receiving any thing in return but the fhews of triumph and fhadows of conqueft : I fay, when you reflect on these circumftances, and at the fame time behold our cities filled with bankrupts, and our country with beggars; can you be fo infatuated as to deny that the ministry is mad, or worke than mad ; our wealth exhaufted, our people miferable, our credit blafted, and our flate on the brink of perdition ? This profpect, indeed, will make the fainter impression, if we recollect that we ourfelves are a pack of fuch profligate, corrupted, pufillanimous rafcale, as deferve no falvation."

The ftranger, railing his voice to a loud tone, replied, " Such, indeed, are the intinuations, equally falle and infiduous, with which the defperate cmiffaries of a party endeavour to poilon the minds of his Majefty's fubjects, in defiance of common honefty and common fenfe. But he must be blind to all perception, and dead to candour, who does not fee and own that we are involved in a just and necessary war, which has been maintained on truly British principles, profecuted with vigour, and crowned with fuccefs ; that our taxes 'are eafy, in proportion to our wealth ; that our conquefts are equally glorious and important ; that our commerce flourifles, our people are happy, and our enemics reduced to defpair .- Is there a man who boafts a British heart, that repines at the fuccefs and profperity of his country? Such there are, O fhame to patriotifm, and reproach to Great Britain ! who act as the emiffaries of France. both in word and writing ; who exaggerate our neceffary burdens, magnify our dangers, extol the wer of our enemies, deride our victories, extenue our conquefts, condemn the measures of our vernment, and scatter the feeds of diffatisfaction rough the land. Such domeftic traitors are doubly e objects of deteftation; firft, in perverting truth; d fecondly, in propagating falfehood, to the predice of that community of which they have profied themfelves members. One of these is well nown by the name of Ferret, an old rancorous, inwrigible inftrument of fedition : happy it is for him at he has never fallen in my way; for notwithanding the maxims of forbearance which I have lopted, the indignation which the character of that itiff infoires, would probably impel me to fome t of violence, and I should crush him like an unateful viper, that gnawed the bofom which warm-

These latt words were pronounced with a wildness look, that even bordered upon pheenzy .- The mifthrope once more retired to the pantry for flielter, H the reft of the quefts were evidently difconcerted. Mr Fillet, in order to change the conversation. tich was likely to produce terious confequences, preffed uncommon fatisfaction at the remarks which knight had made, fignified his approbation of honourable office he had undertaken : declared infelf happy in having feen luch an accomplifhed Falier : and observed that nothing was wanting to der him a complete knight-errant, but fome celeted beauty, the miftrefs of his heart, whofe idea wht animate his breaft, and ftrengthen his arm to utmoft exertion of valour : he added, that love the foul of chivalry.

The Aranger flarted at this difcourfe. He turned eyes on the furgeon with a fixed regard: his atenance changed: a torrent of teas gufted down his checks: his head funk upon his bofom he heaved a profound figh; and remained in filenc. with all the external marks of uniterable forrow. The company were in fome meafure affected by hi defpondence; concerning the caufe of which, how were, they would not veature to inquire.

By this time the handlady, having difpofed of the figuries, defired to know, with many curtifys, if his honour would not chufe to put off his wet garments affuring him, that file had a very good feather-be at his fervice, upon which many gentlevolks of the virth quality had lain: that the fileets were well an et ; and that Dolly fhould warm them for his won fhip with a pan of coals.—This hofpitable offs, being repeated, he fermed to wake from a trane of grief; arole from his feat, and bowing courte ould to the company, withdrew.

Captain Crowe, whole faculty of fpeech had bee all the time abforbed in amazement, now borke int the converfation with a volley of interjections " Split my finite/block 1— Odd"s firkins 1—Split my old thoes! I—I have failed the fait feas, borche fince I was no higher than the Triton's taffred—eas welf, north, and fouth, as the faying in—Backs, I diana, Moors, Morattos, and Seaposi--but, Imi my tumbers! fuch a man of war-"

Here he was interrupted by his nephew Tec Clarke, who had difappeared at the knight's ficutrance, and now produced himfelf with an eagenefs in his look, while the tears flarted in his eyes-Lord blefs my fool! (cried he) I know that gent man and his fervant, as well as I know my or father.—I sm his own godion, uncle; he flood fi me when he was a boy—yes, indeed, Sir, my fath was fleward to the flate—I may fay I was bred in the family of Sir Evenard Grazave, who B been dead these two years—this is the only son, Sir Launcelot; the best natured, worthy, generous gentleman—I care not who knows it; I love him as well as if he was my own fielh and blood.—"

At this period Tom, whole heart was of the melting mooth began to fob and weep plenteoudle. from pure affection. Crove, who was not very (fubject to thefe tenderneffles, damned him for a chicken-hearted lubber; repeating; with much peevillne(s, "W' at do'll ery for t what do'll ery for, noddy?" The furgeon, impainten to know the floy of Sir Launcelot, which he had heard imperfectly recounted, beged that Mr Clarke would compole hind(f), and relate it as circumlantially as his memory could retain the particulars, and Tom wing his eyes, promiled to give him that fatisfation; which the reader, if he be fo minded, may partack in the next enhance.

CHAP. III.

Which the Reader, on Perusal, may wish were Chapter the last.

THE doftor preferibed a reptatur of the julep, and mixed the ingredients secundem attem; Tom Clarke hermed thries to clear his pipess whill the refi of the company, including Dolly and her mother, who had by this time administered to the knight, composed themfelves into earneft and hufhed attention. Then the young lawyer began his narration to this effed +-

"I tell ye what, gemmen, I don't pretend in this here cafe to flourifh and harangue like a-having never been called to-but what of that d'ye fee?--prenaps I may know as much as--facts are facts, as Vot. I. C the faying is.—I full tell, repeat, and relate a plain fory—matters of fack, dy effect, without reherric, oratory, ornament, or embellifhment; without repetition, nutology, circambeaution, or going about the bufn : facts which I thall aver, partly on the tellimony of my own knowledge, and partly from the information of refponsible evidences of good repute and credit, any circumAnaces known to the contrary notwithflanding; for, as the law fath, if fo be as how there is an exception to evidence, that exception is in its mattere but a denial of what is taken to be good by the other party, and exception in exception, firmat regalon, d'ye (c.—But howdonever, in regard to this here affair, we need not be fo ferupalous as if we were pleading before a judge rulente curina.—."

Ferret, whole curiofity was rather more eager than that of any other perfon in the audience, being provoked by this preamble, dashed the pipe he had juft filled in pieces agains? the grate; and after having pronounced the interjection pibl with an acrimony of alped altogether peculiar to bindelf, "If (faid he) imperimence and folly were felony by the flatute, there would be no want of unexceptionable evidence to hang fuch an eternal buble," "A nan, babler I (cried Tom, reddening with paffion, and farring up) Pd have you to know. Sir, that I can bite as well as bable; and that, if I am fo minded, I can ran upon the foot after my game without being in fault, se the fuying is; and, which is more, I can finke an uhl fox by the coilar."

How far this young lawyer might have proceeded to prove himfelf flaunch on the perion of the misathrope, if he had not been prevented, we fhall not determine; but the whole company were alarmed at his looks and expredions.—Dolly's roly checks affumed an affi-colour, while the ran between the diffutants, crying, ", Naay, naay—vor the love of God doast then, doant then ''. But Capation Crowe exerted a parental authority over his nephew, faying, " Avaft, Tom, avail 1—Snuge's the word—worll have no boarding, d'ye fee. — Haul forward thy chair again, take thy berth and proceed with thy flory in a direct courte, without yawing like a Duckh yanky."

Tom, thus tutored, recollected himfelf, refumed his feat, and, after fome paufe, plunged at once into the current of narration. " I told you before, gemmen, that the gentleman in armour was the only fon of Sir Everhard Greaves, who poffeffed a free eftate of five thousand a-year in our county, and was respected by all his neighbours, as much for his perfonal merit as for his family fortune. With refpest to his fon Launcelot, whom you have feen, I can remember nothing until he returned from the university-about the age of feventeen, and then I myfelf was not more than ten years old. The young gemman was at that time in mourning for his mother; though, God he knows, Sir Everhard had more caule to rejoice than to be afflicted at her death :- for, among friends, (here he lowered his voice, and looked round the kitchen) fhe was very whimfical, expensive, and illtempered, and, I'm afraid, a little-upon the flighty order-a little touched or to :- but mum for thatthe lady is now dead : and it is my maxim, de mortais nil nisi lonum. The young 'fquire was even then very handfome, and looked remarkably well in his weepes; but he had an aukward air, and fhambling gait, flooped mortally, and was fo fly and filent, that he would not look a ftranger in the face, nor open his mouth before company .---- Whenever he fpied a horfe or carriage at the gate, he would make his efcape into the garden, and from thence to the park ; 0.2

where many's the good time and often he has been found fitting under a tree, with a book in his hand, reading Greek, Latin, and other foreign linguas.

" Sir Everhard himfelf was no great fcholar, and my father had forgot his claffical learning; and fo the rector of the parish was defired to examine young Launcelot. It was a long time before he found an opportunity ; the 'fquire always gave him the flip. At length the parion catched him in bed of a morning, and, locking the door, to it they went tooth and nail. What paffed betwixt them the Lord in heaven knows; but, when the doctor came forth, he looked wild and haggard as if he had feen a ghoft, his face as white as paper, and his lips trembling like an afpen leaf. " Parfon, (faid the knight) what is the matter ?- how do'th find my fon? I hope he won't turn out a ninny, and difgrace his family." The doctor, wiping the fweat from his forehead, replied with fome hefitation, " He could not tell-he hoped the beft-the 'fquire was to be fure a very extraordinary young gentleman."-But the father urging him to give an explicit anfwer, he frankly declared, that in his opinion, the fon would turn out either a mirror of wildom or a monument of folly ; for his genius and his difposition were altogether preternatural. The knight was forely vexed at this declaration, and fignified his difpleafure by faying, the doctor, like a true prieft, dealt in mysteries and oracles, that would admit of different and indeed contrary interpretations. He afterwards confulted my father, who had ferved as fleward upon the effate for above thirty years, and acquired a confiderable fhare of his favour. " Will Clarke, (faid he, with tears in his eyes) what fhall I do with this unfortunate lad? I would to God he had never been born; for I fear he will bring my grey hairs with forrow to the grave. When I am gone, he will throw away the cflate, and bring hinfelf to infamy and ruin by keeping company withrouks and beggirs -- O Will 1 could forgive extravagance in a young man; but it breaks my heart to fee my only fon give fuch repeated proofs of a mean fpirit and fordid difpofinion !"

" Here the old gentleman fhed a flood of tears, and not without fome fhadow of reafon. By this time Launcelot was grown fo referved to his father, that he feldom faw him, or any of his relations, except when he was in a manner forced to appear at table, and there his bafhfulnels feemed every day to encreafe. On the other hand, he had formed fome very ftrange connexions. Every morning he vifited the ftable, where he not only converfed with the grooms and helpers, but foraped acquaintance with the horfes; he fed his favourites with his own hand, ftroaked, careffed, and rode them by turns; till at laft they grew to familiar, that, even when they were a-field at grafs, and faw him at a diftance, they would tofs their manes, whinny like fo many colts at fight of the dam, and galloping up to the place where he flood, fmell him all over.

"You muß know that I myfelf, though a child, was his companion in all the excernfons. He took a liking to me on account of my being his godfon, and gave me more money than I know what to do with : he had always plenty of call for the aking, as my father was ordered to fupply limit locally, the knight thinking that a command of money might help to raife his thoughts to a proper contderation of his own importance. He never could endure a common beggar, that was not either in a flate of infancy or of cld age; but, in other rejects, he made the guints aff in fluch a manner, as looked more like madnefs than generofity. He had no communication with your rich yeomen, but rather treated them and their families with fludied contempt, becaufe forfooth they pretended to affume the drefs and manners of the gentry.

- 3

"They kept their footmen, their faddle horfes, and chaifs: their wives and daughters appeared in their jewels, their filts and their fattins, their negligees and trollopees; their clumfy finaks, like fo many finis of beef, were cafed in filk-hole and embroidered flippers: their raw red fingers, groß as the pipes of a chamber organ, which had been employed in miking the cows, in twirling the mop or churafaff, being adorned with diamonds, were taught to thrum the pandola, and even to touch the keys of the harpfichroft: any, in every village they keep a rout, and fct up an alfembly; and in one place a hog-butcher was malter of the ceremonies.

<sup>64</sup> I have heard Mr Greaves ridicate them for their stanity and aukaward imitation is and therefore, J behieve, he avoided all concerns with them, even when they endeavoured to engage his attention. It was the lower fort of people with whom he chiefdy converfed, fuch as ploughmen, ditchers, and other daylaboures. To every cottager in the pairful he was a boanteous benefactor. He was in the literal fende of the word, a careful overfere of the poor; for he went from houfe to houfe, induftrioully exquiring into the diffrenties of the people. He repaired their thus, clothed their backs, alled their belles; and (upplied them with necefiaries for exercising their indufty and different occupations.

" I'll give you one inflance now, as a fpecimen of his character. Ite and I, firolling one day on the fide of a common, faw two boys picking hips and haws from the hedges, one feemed to be about five, and the other a year older; they were both barefoot and ragged, but at the fame time fat, fair, and in good condition. " Who do you belong to ?" (faid Mr Greaves). " To Mary Stile, (replied the oldeft) the widow that rents one of them housen." " And how do'ft live, my boy ? thou lookeft fresh and jolly ;" refumed the 'fquire. " Lived well enough till yefterday," answered the child. " And pray what happened yefterday, my boy ?" continued Mr Greaves. " Happened! (faid he) why, mammy had a couple of little Welch keawes, that gi'en milk enough to fill our bellies; mammy's, mine, and Dick's here, and my two little fifters at hoam : yefterday the 'fquire feized the keawes for rent, God rot'un ! Mammy's gone to bed fick and fulky : my two fifters be crying at hoam vor vood; and Dick and I be come hither to pick fome haws and bullies."

" My godfather's face grew red as fearlet; he took one of the children in either hand, and leading them towards the house, found Sir Everhard talking with my father before the gate. Inftead of avoiding the old gentleman, as usual, he brushed up to him with a fpirit he had never fhewn before, and prefenting the two ragged boys, " Surely, Sir, (faid he) you will not countenance that there ruffian your fteward, in oppreffing the widow and fatherlefs? On pretence of diffraining for the rent of a cottage, he has robbed the mother of these and other poor infant-orphaus of two cows, which afforded them their whole fuftenance. Shall you be concerned in tearing the hard-earned morfel from the mouth of indigence? Shall your name, which has been fo long mentioned as a bleffing, be now detefted as a curfe by the poor, the helplefs, and forlorn? The father of these babes was once your game-keeper, who died of a confumption caught in your fervice .- You fee they are almost naked — I found them plucking haws and floes, in order to appeale their hunger The wretched mother is flarving in a cold cottage, diffraded with the crics of the other two infantschamorous for food; and while her heart is bortling with anguifh and difpair, the invokes heaven to avenge the widow's caule upon the head of her unrelenting landlord !"

"This unexpected addrefs brought tears into the eyes of the good old gentleman. "Will Clarke (fish he to my father), how durit you abufe my authority at this rate? You who know I have been always a protector, not an opperflor of the needy and unfortunate, I charge you, go immediately and comfort this poor woman with immediate relief: indead of her own cows, let her have two of the beft mildh tommer, and be foldered with my hay in winter.— Bhe fhall fit rent free for life; and I will take care of thefe her poor orphans."

" This was a very alf-ching feene. Mr Lruneelds took his faher's hand and kilfed it, while the tears ran down his checks; and Sir Everhard embraced his fon with great tendernels, crying, " My dear boy 1 God be praield for having given you fuch a feeling heart." My faher himicht was moved, thei a practitioner of the law, and c nefquenthy ufe to didtrefea.— He declared, that he had given no directiona to didtains; and that the bailff mult have done it by his own authority.—" If that be the cafe (fuid the young 'iquirs) let the inhuman raical be turned out of cur fervice."

"Well, gemmen, all the children were immediates, ly clothed and fed, and the poor widow had welly nigh run diftracted with joy. The old knight, being of a humane temper himfelf, was pleafed to fee fuch proofs of his fon's generofity : he was not angry at his fpending his money, but at fouandering away his time among the dregs of the people. For you muft know, he not only made matches, portioned poor maidens, and fet up young couples that came together without money; but he mingled in every ruffic diversion, and bore away the prize in every contest. He excelled every fwain of that diffrict in feats of frength and activity; in leaping, running, wreftling, cricket, cudgel-playing, and pitching the bar; and was confelled to be, out of fight, the best dancer at all wakes and holidays: happy was the country-girl who could engage the young 'fquire as her partner ! To be fure it was a comely fight for to fee as how the buxom country laffes, fresh and fragrant, and blufhing like the role, in their beft apparel dight, their white hofe, and clean fhort dimity perticoats, their gaudy gowns of printed cotton; their top-knots and ftomachers, bedizened with bunches of ribbons of various colours, green, pink, and yellow ; to fee them crowned with garlands, and affembled on May-day, to dance before 'fquire Launcelot, as he made his morning's progress through the village. Then all the young peafants made their appearance with cockades, fuited to the fancies of their feveral fweethearts, and boughs of flowering hawthorn. The children fported about like flocks of frifking lambs, or the young fry fwarming under the funny bank of fome meandering river. The old men and women, in their holiday garments, flood at the doors to receive their benefactor, and poured forth bleffings on him as he paffed : the children welcomed him with their fhrill fhouts, the damfels with fongs of praife, and the young men with the pipe and tabor, marched before him to the May-pole, which was bedecked with flowers and bloom. There the rural dance began: a plentiful dinner, with oceans of good liquor, was befooke at the White Hart: the whole village was regaled at the ?fquire's expence; both the day and the night was fpent in mirth and pleafure.

" Lord belp you ! he could not reft if he thought there was an aching heart in the whole parish. Every paultry cottage was in a little time converted into a pretty, fnug, comfortable habitation, with a wooden porch at the door, glafs cafements in the windows, and a little garden behind, well flored with greens, roots, and fallade. In a word, the poor's rate was reduced to a mere trifle, and one would have thought the golden age was revived in Yorkfhire. But, as I told you before, the old knight could not bear to fee his only fon fo wholly attached to thefe lowly pleafures, while he industriously thunned all opportunities of appearing in that fuperior Iphere to which he was dignified by nature and by fortune. He imputed his conduct to meannels of fpirit, and advifed with my father touching the propereft expedient to wean his affections from fuch lowborn pursuits. My father counfelled him to fend the young gentleman up to London, to be entered as a fludent in the Temple, and recommended to the fuperintendance of fome perfon who knew the town. and might engage him infenfibly in fuch amufements and connexions, as would foon lift his ideas above the humble objects on which they had been hitherto employed. This advice appeared fo falutary, that it was followed without the leaft hefitation. The young 'fquire himfelf was perfectly well fatisfied with the proposal, and in a few days fet out for the great city : but there was not a dry eye in the parifh at his departure, although he prevailed upon his father to pay in his abfence all the penfions he had granted to thefe who could not live on the fruit of their own indulty. In what manner he fpent his time in London, it is none of my buffneft to enquire; thoff I know pretty well what kind of lives are led by gemmen of your lans of Court.— I myfelf once befonged to Serjeant's lan, and was perhaps as good a wit and a critic as any templar of them all. Nay, as for that matter, thof I defoile vanity, I can aver with a fafe confeience, that I had once the honour to belong to the fociety called the Town: we were all of us attorneys clerks, gemmen, and had our meetings at an ale-houfe in Butcher-row, where we regulated the diverfons of the theatre.

"" But to return from this digrefilms. Sir Evenhard Greaves did not feem to be very well pleafed with he conduct of his fon at London. He got notice of fome irregularities and ferapes into which he had allen; and the 'fquire feldom wrote to his father, vecept to draw upon him for money, which he did to faft, that in eighteen months the old gemman loft all patience.

" At this period 'Squire Darnel chanced to die, eaving an only daughter, a minor, heirefs of 3000l. year, under the guardianship of her uncle Anthony, whole brutal character all the world knows. The breath was no fooner out of his brother's body than he refolved, if poffible, to fucceed in parliament as eprefentative for the borough of Afhenton. Now you must know, that this borough had been for many cars a bone of contention between the families of Greaves and Darnel; and at length the difference was compromifed by the interpolition of friends, on condition that Sir Everhard and 'Squire Darnel hould alternately reprefent the place in parliament. They agreed to this compromife for their mutual onvenience; but they were never heartily reconciled. Their political principles did not tally; and their wives looked upon each other as rivals in fortune and magnificence: fo that there was no intercourfe between them, thof they lived in the fame neighbourhood. On the contrary, in all difputes, they conftantly headed the oppofite parties. Sir Everhard understanding that Anthony Darnel had begun to canvals, and was putting every iron in the fire, in violation and contempt of the pactum familia beforementioned, fell into a violent paffion, that brought on a fevere fit of the gout, by which he was difabled from giving perfonal attention to his own intereft. My father, indeed, employed all his diligence and addrefs, and fpared neither money, time, nor conftitution, till at length he drank himfelf into a confumption, which was the death of him. But, after all, there is a great difference between a fleward and a principal. Mr Darnel attended in propria persona, flattered and careffed the women, feafted the electors, hired mobs, made proceffings, and feattered about his money in fuch a manner, that our friends durft hardly fhew their heads in public.

" At this very critis our young 'lquire, to whom his father had written as account of the transfelion, arrived unexpeciedly at Greaveflury Hall, and had a long private conference with Sir Everhand. The news of his return forcad like wild-fire through all that part of the constry: benfires were made, and the bells fet a trigging in feveral towns and fleeplest and next morning above feven hundred people were siftenbild at the gate, with munic, flags, and freamers, to welcome their young 'lquire, and accompany him to the borough of Athenton. He fet out on foot with this returne, and entered one end of the towa, jult as Mr Darnel's men had come in at the market-place; but Mr Darnel, mounting fift into whe balcony of the town-houle, made a long fpeech to the people in favour of his own pretenfions, not without fome invidious reflections glanced at Sir Everhard, his competitor.

"We did not much mind the acclamations of his party, which we knew had been hired for the purpofe; but we were in fome pain for Mr Greaves, who had not been uled to fpeak in public. He took his turn however in the balcony, and, uncovering his head, bowed all round with the most engaging courtely. He was dreffed in a green frock trimmed with gold, and his own dark hair flowed about his ears in natural curls, while his face was overlpread with a bluth, that improved the glow of youth to a deeper crimfon, and I dare fay fet many a female heart a-palpitating. When he made his first appearance, there was just fuch a humming and clapping of hands, as you may have heard when the celebrated Garrick comes upon the ftage in King Lear, or King Richard, or any other top character. But how agreeably were we disappointed, when our young gentleman made fuch an oration as would not have difgraced a Pitt, an Egmont, or a Murray | While he fooke, all was hufhed in admiration and attention you could almost have heard a feather drop to the ground. It would have charmed you to hear with what modefly he, recounted the fervices which his father and grandfather had done to the corporation's with what eloquence he expatiated upon the fhameful infraction of the treaty fubfilling between the two families; and with what keen and foirited ftrokes of latire he retorted the farcalms of Darnel.

"He no fooner concluded his harangue, than there was fach a burt of applaufe, as feemed to rend the very fixy. Our muffic immediately flruck up; our Voas  $I_{\rm cons}$ ,  $D_{\rm cons}$ people advanced with their enfigns, and, as every man had a good cudgel, broken heads would have enfued, had not Mr Darnel and his party thought proper to retreat with uncommon difpatch. He never offered to make another public entrance, as he faw the torrent ran fo violently against him; but fat down with his lofs, and withdrew his opposition, though at bottom extremely mortified and incerfed. Sir Everhard was unanimoufly elected, and appeared to be the happielt man upon earth ; for, befides the pleafure ariting from his victory over his competitor he was now fully fatisfied that his fon, inftead of difgracing, would do honour to his family. It would have moved a heart of flone, to fee with what a tender transport of paternal joy he received his dear Launcelot, after having heard of his deportment and fuccefs at Afhenton ; where, by the bye, he gave a ball to the ladies, and difplayed as much elegance and politeness as if he had been bred at the court of Verlailles.

<sup>44</sup> This joyous feefon was of thort duration: In a little time all the happine's of the family was overcaft by a fad incident, which hath-left fach an unfortante imprefilm upon the mind of the yourg geuteman, as, I am afraid, will never be effaced. Mr Dannel's niece and ward, the great heirefs, whole name is Aurefia, was the most celebrated beauty of the whole country—if I faid the whole kingdom, or indeed all Europe, perhaps I fhould barely do her julice. I don't presend to be a limner, gemmens a nor does it become me to deliveate fuch excellence; but furty! I may prefume to repeat form the play—but furty!

" Oh ! fhe is all that painting can express,

" Or youthful poets fancy when they love."

" At that time the might be about feventeen; tall and fair, and fo exquifitely fhaped-you may talk of your Venus de Medicis, your Dianas, your Nymphe, and Galateas; but if Praxiteles, and Roubilliac, and Wilton, were to lay their heads together, in order to make a complete pattern of beauty, they would hardly reach her model of perfection .- As for complexion, poets will talk of blending the lily with the role, and bring in a parcel of fimilies of cowflips, carnations, pinks, and dailies .- There's Dolly, now, has got a very good complexion :---indeed, the's the very picture of health and innocence-you are, indeed, my pretty lafs ;- but paroa componere magnis. Mifs Darnel is all amazing beauty, delicacy, and dignity! Then the fofmels and exprelsion of her fine blue eyes; her pouting lips of coral hue; her neck that rifes like a tower of polifhed alabafter between two mounts of fnow .- I tell you what, gemmen, it don't fignify talking ; if e'er a one of you was to meet this young lady alone, in the midft of a heath or common, or any unfrequented place, he would down on his knees, and think he kneeled before fome fupernatural being. I'll tell you more: fhe not only relembles an angel in beauty, but a faint in goodness, and an hermit in humility ;- fo void of all pride and affectation; to foft, and fweet, and affable, and humane ! Lord ! I could tell fuch inftances of

" Since enough, fixe and Sir Launcelot were formed by nature for each other: howforcer, the cruel hand of fortune lash intervened, and fewered them for ever. Every foul that knew tiem both, faid it was a thonfand pitter but they fluide come together, and extinguifh in their happy union the mutual animolity of the two families, which had fo often embroiled the whole neighbourhood. Nothing was heard but the profiles of Mife Aarelia Darnel, and a Mr Launcela Greaves; and uo doubt the parties were propolified, by this applaule, in favour of each obler. At length Mr Greaves went one Sunday to a her parific-charch; but, though the greater part of the congregation watched their looks, they could no preverve that fit took the leaft notice of him; i or that he feemed to be fireck with her appearance. He afterwards had an opportunity of feeing her, more at kifue, at the York affembly, during the agood effect, becaule he had that fame day quartelled in with her unche on the turf.

) 2

" An old grudge, you know, genmen, is foor insimed to a fref rupture. It was thought Mr Darnel came on purpole to fhew his referament. They differed about a bet upon Mis Cleverlegs, and, in the confe of the dipture, Mr Darnel called him a petulant boy. The young 'Iquire, who was as hally as guapowder, told him he was man enough to chaftife him for his infelence; and would do it on the foor. In all probability they would have come to points immediately, had not the gentlemen interpoled i for that nothing further peffed, but abundance of foul language on the part of Mr Authony, and a repeated defance to a fingle combat.

"Mr Gresses, making a low bow, retired from the field; and in the evening danced at the sfembly with a young lady from the bithoprie, feeningly in good temper and fpirits, without having any words with Mr Dared, who alio was prefect. But in the morning he vifited that proad neighbour betimes; and they had almoft reached a grove of trees on the north. fide of the town, when they were fuddenly vortaken by half a dozen genttemen, who had watgh-ed their motious. It was in vain for them to dill mble their defign, which could not now take effect. They gave up their pittols, and a reconciliation was patched up by the prefling remonstrances of their common friends ; but Mr Darnel's hatred ftill rankled at bottom, and foon broke out in the fequel, About three months after this transaction. his niece Aurelia, with her mother, having been to vifit a lady in the chariot, the horfes being young, and not uled to the traces, were flartled at the braying of a jackafs on the common, and taking fright, ran away with the carriage like lightning. The coachman was thrown from the box, and the ladies fcreamed piteoufly for help. Mr Greaves chanced to be a horfeback on the other fide of an inclosure, when he heard their fhrieks; and riding up to the hedge, knew the chariot, and faw their difafter. The horfes were then running full speed in such a direction, as to drive headlong over a precipice into a ftone quarry, where they and the chariot, and the ladies, must be dashed in pieces.

43

<sup>44</sup> You may concrise, gemmen, what his thoughts were when he faw facts a fine young lady, in the flower of her sge, juft plunging into eccenity; when he flow the lorely Aurelia on the brink of being precisive tated among rocks, where her deliate limbs mult be for her could ride round by the gase, the tagedy would be inified. The fence was for thick and high, Ganked with a broad diret on the outflet, that he could not hope to clear it, although he was mounted on 5 join, bred out of Miss Gewuße, the tingely and his grandbire the famous Arabian Mutagha.

fon but the young 'fquire-Indeed I have heard my poor father fay-"

By this time Ferret's impatience was become fo outrageous, that he exclaimed in a furious tone,— "Damn your father, and his horfe, and his colt, into the bargain !"

Tom made no reply; but began to firp with great expedition. Captain Crowe was fo choaked with pation, that he could utter nothing but dijointed fentences: he role from his feat, brandithed his horlewhip, and feizing his nephew by the collar, cried, "Odd's heartlikins! firsh, I have a good mind—Derl fire your running tackle, you landlubber!——cannot you fteer without all this tacking hither and thither, and the Lord knows whither ?— Noint my block! I'd give thee a rope's end for thy forper, if it wart—?

Dolly had conceived a fneaking kindnefs for the young lawyer, and thinking him in danger of being roughly handled, flwt ob his relief. She twilfed her hand in Crowe's neckcloth without ceremony, crying, "Sha't then, I tell thee, old coger.--Who ken's a ug yor thy voolifh trantrums?"

While Crowe looked black in the face, and ran, ahe rifque of firangulation under the gripe of this amazon, Mr Clarke having dilengaged himfelf of his hat, wig, coat, and wailcoat, advanced in an elegant attitude of manual offecet towards a the mitanthrops, who facthed up a griditon from the chimney count, and Difcord icened is a cap her footy wings in expectation of battle.—But as the reader may have more than once already carfed the unconficientable length of this chapter, we multi polipone to the next opportunity the incidents that fuceeeded this denuascition of war.

¥2

CHAP. IV.

In which it appears that the Knight, when heartily set in for Sleeping, was not easily disturbed.

I hall probability, the kitchen of the Black Lion, from a domefic temple of fociety and good-fellow/hip, would have been converted into a fcene or flage of fanguinary difpate, had not Pullas or Differtion interpoled in the perfon of MF Fillet, and with the sfifthance of the offler, difarmed the combatanta, no only of their arms, but allo of their refeatment.

The impetuofity of Mr Clarke was a little checked at the fight of the gridiron, which Ferret brandifhed with uncommon dexterity: a circumftance from whence the company were, upon reflection, induced to believe, that before he plunged into the fea of politics, he had occafionally figured in the character of that facetious droll, who accompanies your itinerant phyficians, under the familiar appellation of Merry Andrew, or Jack Pudding, and on a wooden ftage, entertains the populace with a folo on the faltbox, or a fonata on the tongs and gridiron. Be that as it may, the young lawyer feemed to be a little difcomposed at the glancing of this extraordinary weapon of offence, which the fair hands of Dolly had fcoured, until it fhone as bright as the fhield of Achilles; or as the emblem of good old Engl fh fare, which hangs by a red ribbon round the neck of that thrice-honoured fage's head, in velvet bonnet cafed, who prefides by rotation at the genial board, diftinguifhed by the title of the Beef-steak Club : where the delicate rumps irrefiftibly attract the ftranger's eye, and, while they feem to cry, " Come, cut me ---- come, cut me," conftrain, by wondrous lympathy, each mouth to overflow ; where the obliging and humourous Jemmy B_____, the gentle Billy H_____d, replete with human kindnets, and the generous Johnny B____d, respected and beloved by all the world, attend as the priefls and minifiers of mirth, good cheer, and jollity, and affift with culinary art, the raw, unprachied, sukward gueft.

44

But, to return from this digreffive fimile ; the oftler no fooner flept betweenthole menacing antagonifts, than Tom Clarke very quietly refumed his clothes, and M: Ferret refigned the gridiron without farther queflion. The doctor did not find it quite fo eafy to release the throat of Captain Crowe from the maiculine grafp of the virago Dolly, whole fingers could not be difengaged until the honeft feamen was almost at the laft gafp. After fome paule, during which he panted for breath, and untied his neckcloth. " Damn thee for a brimftone galley ; (cried he) I was never fo grappled withal fince I knew a card from a compais .--- Adzooks; the jade has fo taughtened my rigging, d'ye fee, that I-Snatch my bowlines, if I come athwart thy hawfer, I'll turn thy keel upwards-or mayhap fet thee a-driving under thy bare poles-I will-I will, you hell fire faucy-I will."

Dolly made no reply, but feeing Mc Clarke fit down again with great composure, took her station likewie at the opposite side of the apartment. Thea Mr Filler requested the lawyer to proceed with his story, which, after three hems, he accordingly prolecuted in thefe word.

"I told you, germen, that Mr Greaves was mounted on Scipio, when he faw Mith Darrel and her mother in danger of being hurried over a precipice. Without reflecting a moment, he gave Scipio the fpur, and at one fpring he cleared five-and-tweanty feet over hedge and dicto, and every obflrufliog.

Then he rede full fpeed, in order to turn the coachhorfes; and finding them quite wild and furious, endeavoured to drive against the counter of the hitherhorfe, which he miffed, and flaked poor Scipio on the pole of the coach. The flock was fo great, that the coach-horfes made a full flop within ten yards of the quarry, and Mr Greaves was thrown forwards towards the coach-box, which mounting with admirable dexterity, he feized the reins before the horfes could recover of their fright. At that inftant the coachman came running up, and loofed them from the traces with the utmost dispatch. Mr Greaves had now time to give his attention to the ladies, who were well nigh diffracted with fear. He no fooner opened the chariot door, than Aurelia, with a wildnefs of look, forung into his arms, and, clasping him round the neck, fainted away. I leave you to guels, gemmen, what were his feelings at this inftant. The mother was not fo difcomposed, but that the could contribute to the recovery of her daughter, whom the young 'fquire ftill fupported in his embrace. At length the retrieved the ufe of her fenfes, and preceiving the fituation in which fhe was, the blood revificed her face with redoubled glow, while the defired him to fet her down upon the turf.

"<sup>44</sup> Mm Darnel, far from being fly or referred in her compliments of acknowledgments, killed Mr Launcelot without ceremony, the tears of gratitude running down her chrecks; fibe called him her dear fon, her generous deliverer, who, at the hazard of bis own life, had faved her and her child from the moft difinal fate that could be imagined.

"Mr Greaves was fo much transported on this occafion, that he could not help difclofing a paffion, which he had hitherto industriously concealed. "What I have done (faid he) was but a common office of humanity, which I would have performed for any of my follow-creatures; but, for the performation of Mits Aurelia Darnel, I would at any time facilies my life with pleafure?" The young lady did not hear this declaration unmoved : her face was again fluthed, and her eyas farakled with pleafure: not was the youth's confelion disguesable to the good lady her mother, who at one glance perceived the advantages of fuch an union between the two families.

" Mr Greaves propoled to fend the coachman to his father's ftable for a pair of fober horfes, that could be depended upon, to draw the ladies home to their own habitation ; but they declined the offer, and chofe to walk, as the diffance was not great. He then infifted upon his being their conductor; and, each taking him under the arm, he fupported them to their own gate, where fuch an apparition filled all the domeflics with aftonifhment. Mrs Darnel, taking him by the hand. led him into the room, where the welcomed him with another affectionate embraces and indulged him with an ambrofial kils of Aurelia. faying, " But for you, we had both been by this time in eternity. Sure it was heaven that fent you as an angel to our affiftance !" She kindly inquired if he had himfelf fuftained any damage in administering that defperate remedy to which they owed their lives. She entertained him with a fmall collation : and, in the course of the conversation, lamented the animofity which had to long divided two neighbouring families of fuch influence and character. He was not flow in fignifying his approbation of her remarks, and expreffing the moft eager defire of feeing all those unhappy differences removed : in a word, they parted with mutual fatisfaction.

" Juft as he advanced from the outward gate, on his return to Greaverbury Hall, he was met by Anthony Darnel on horfeback, who, riding up to him with marks of furprife and refentment, faluted him with, " Your fervant, Sir .- Have you any commands for me ?" The other replying with an air of difference, " None at all ;" Mr Darnel afked, what had procured him the honour of a vifit : the young gentleman, perceiving by the manner in which he fpoke, that the old quarrel was not yet extinguished, answered, with equal difdain, that the visit was not intended for him; and that if he wanted to know the caufe of it, he might inform himfelf by his own fervants. " So I shall (cried the uncle of Aurelia;) and perhaps let you know my fentiments of the matter."-"" Hereafter as it may be," faid the youth; who, turning out of the avenue, walked home, and made his father acquainted with the particulars of this adventure.

"The old gentleman chid him for his rafhnefs ; but feemed pleafed with the fuccels of his attempt, and ftill more for when he underflood his fentiments of Aurelia, and the deportments of the ladies.

<sup>45</sup> Next day the fon feat over a fervant with a compliment, to enquire about their health; and the mcl-3 fenger, being feen by Mr Darnel, was told that the ladies were indipoled, and did not chufe to betroubled with melfages. The mother was really feized with a fever, produced by the agitation of her fpirits, which every day became more and more viclent, waith the phyficians defpired of her life. Believing that her end approached, he fent a trully fervant to Me Greaves, dehing that the might fev him without delay; and he immediately fet out with the meffenger, who introduced him the dark?

"He found the old lady in bed, almost exhausted, and the fair Aurelia fitting by her, overwhelmed with grief; her lovely hair in the utmost diforder, and her charming eyes inflamed with weeping. The good lady beckoning Mr Launcelot to approach, and directing all the attendants to quit the room, except a favourite maid, from whom I learnt the ftory, fhe took him by the hand, and fixing her eyes upon him with all the fondness of a mother, shed fome tears in filence, while the fame marks of forrow trickled down his cheeks. After this affecting paufe, " My dear fon, (faid fhe) Oh! that I could have lived to fee you fo indeed ! you find me haftening to the goal of life."-Here the tender-hearted Aurelia, being unable to contain herfeif longer, broke out into a violent paffion of grief, and wept abud. The mother, waiting patiently till fhe had thus given vent to her anguith, calmly intreated her to refign herfelf fubmiffively to the will of heaven : then turning to Mr Launcelot, " I had indulged (faid fhe) a fond hope of feeing you allied to my family.-----This is no time for me to infift upon the ceremonies and forms of a vain world, ---- Aurelia looks upon you with the eyes of tender prepoffeffion." No fooner had the pronounced thefe words, than he threw himfelf on his knees before the young lady, and, preffing her hand to his lips, breathed the fofteft expressions which the most delicate love could fuggeft. " I know (refumed the mother) that your paffion is mutually fincere; and I fhould die fatisfied, if I thought your union would not be opposed ; but that violent man, my brother in-law, who is Aurelia's fole guardian, will thwart her wifhes with every obflacle that brutal refentment and implacable malice can contrive. Mr Greaves, I have long admired your virtues, and am confident that I can depend upon your honour .----- You shall give me your word, that, when I am gone, you will take no Reps in this affair with ut the concurrence of your father; and endeavour, by all fair and honourable means, to vanquift the prejudices, and obtain the confeat of her uncle; the reft we muft leave to the difpenfation of Providence."

<sup>14</sup> The 'fquire promifed, in the moft folema and forcent manner, to obey all her injunctions, as the laft distates of a parent whom he fhould never ceafe to honour. Then the favoured them both with a great deal of falutary advice, touching their conduct before and sitter marriage; and prefented him with a ring, as a monorial of her affection: a the fame time he pulled another off his finger, and made a tender of it as a pledge of his low to Aurelia, whom her mother permitted to receive this token. Finally, he took a laft forwel of the good old matron, and returned to his father with the particulars of this interview.

" In two days Mrs Darnel departed this life, and Aurclia was removed to the houfe of a relation, where her grief had like to have proved fatal to her confitution.

<sup>46</sup> In the mean time, the mother was no fooner committed to the earth, than Mr Greaves, mindful of her exhortations, began to take mealures for a recoulification with the guardian. He engaged feveral greations to interpoint their good offices; but they always met with the moft mortifying repulfes: and at laft Anthony Darrel declared, that bin barted to the houfe of Greaves was hereditary, habitual, and unconquerable. He fwore he would found is heart abload to perpetuate the quartel; and that, fooner than his piece fhould match with young Lauxeclot, the would freifice her with his own hand.

"The young gentleman, finding his prejudice for rancorous and invincible, left off making any further Vol. 1. E advances; and, face he found it impolfible to obtain his confent, refolved to cultivate the good graces of Aurelia, and wed her in defpight of her implacable guardian. He found means to eBablift a literary correspondence with her, as foon as her grief was a little abased 1 and even to effect an interview, after her return to her own howle: but he foon had reafon to repent of this indulgence. The uncle entertained fpics upon the young lady, who gave him an account of this meeting : in confequence of which the was fuddenly hurried to fome diffant part of the country, which we never could diffeover.

50

" Li was then we thought Mr Launchot a little difordered in his brain, his grief was fo wild, and his paffion fo impettous. He refuted all fuffenance, negleEded his perfena, renounced his anuffenents, rode out in the rain, fometimes barcheaded; throlled about the fields all night, and became to pervifit that none of the domefits durft fpeak to bina, without the hazard of broken bounes. Having played thefe praints for about three weeks, to the unfpeakable chaggin of his father, and the altonithment of all who knew him, he foldedly gree calm, and his good-homour returned. But this, as your fea-faring people fay, wis a deciriful solm, that foon uthered in a diredfolf form:

<sup>46</sup> He had long longth an opportunity to 'tanger with founce of the Darrel's creating, who may be hum of the place where Aurelia was confined; but there was not one about the family who could give him chas faitsfallong 'for the 'perform who accompanied her, remaised as a watch spon her motions, and none of the other dometlies were privy to the transfation. All attempts proving faulted, he could so longer reflaxing his impattence, but throwing himfelf in the way of the uncle, upbraided him in fach herdt terms, that a formah-challenge enforce." "Have agreed to decide their difference without witneffes; and one morning, before funrile, met on that very common where Mr Greaves had faved the life of Aurelia. The first piftol was fired on each fide without any effect : but Mr Darnel's fecond wounded the young 'fquire in the flank ; neverthelefs, having a piftol in referve, he defired his antagonift to afk his life. The other, inflead of fubmitting, drew his fword ; and Mr Greaves, firing his pittol in the air, followed his example. The conteff then became very hot, though of fhort continuance. Darnel being difarmed at the first onfet, our young 'fquire gave him back his fword, which he was bale enough to afe a fecond time against his conqueror. Such an inftance of repeated ingratitude and brutal ferocity divefted Mr Greaves of his temper and forbearance. He attacked Mr Anthony with great fury, and at the first lounge ran him up to the hilt, at the fame time feizing with his left hand the fhell of his enemy's fword, which he broke in difdain. Mr Darnel having fallen, the other immediately mounted his norfe, which he had tied to a tree before the engagement, and riding full fpeed to Afhenton, fent a furgeon to Anthony's affiftance. He afterwards ingebioufly coufeffed all these particulars to his father, who was overwhelmed with conflernation, for the wounds If Darnel were judged mortal; and as no perfon had ten the particulars of the duel, Mr Launcelot might lave been convicted of murder.

<sup>44</sup> On thefe confiderations, before a warrant could be ferved upon him, the old knight, by dint of the soft eager intreaties, accompanied with marks of borror and defpair, prevailed upon his fon to withraw himfelf from the kingdown, until fach time as the form thould be overblown. Had his heat heen unengaged, he would have chofe to travel; but at this period, when his whole foul was engroffed, and fo violently spitated by his paffion for Aurelia, nothing but his fear of feeing the old gentleman run altraited, would have induced him to defit from the purfuit of that young lady, far lefs quit the kingdom where file reliedd.

E2

"Well, then, gemmen, he repaired to Harwich, where he embarked for Holland, from whence he proceeded to Bruffels, where he procured a paffport from the French King, by virtue of which he travelled to Marfeilles, and there took a tartan for Genoa. The firft letter Sir Everhard received from him was dated at Florence. Mean-while the furgeon's prognoftic was not altogether verified. M- Darnel did not die immediately of his wounds ; but he lingered a long time, as it were in the arms of death, and even partly recovered ; yet, in all probability, he will never be wholly reftored to the enjoyment of his health ; and is obliged every fummer to attend the hot-wells at Briftol. As his wounds began to heal, his hatred to Mr Greaves feemed to revive with augmented violence; and he is now, if poffible, more than ever determined against all reconciliation.

"Mr Launcelot, after having endeavoured to amufe his imagination with a fucceffion of curious objects, in a tour of Italy, took up his refidence at a town called Pifa, and there fell into a deep melancholy, from which nothing could roule him but the news of his father's death.

"The old gentleman (God reft his foult) never held up his head after the departure of his darling Launcelot; and the dangerous condition of Darnel kept up his apprehention: this was reinforced by the obtlinate tilence of the youth, and certain accounts of his difordered mind, which he had received from fome of thofe perfons who take plesiure in communicating difagreeable tidings. A complication of all thefe grievances, co-operating with a levere fit of the gout and gravel, produced a fever, which is a few days brought Sir Everhard to his long home, after he had fettled his affairs with heaven and earth, and mide his peace with God and man. I'll affaire you, grammen, he made a moft edifying and Christian end: he died regretted by all his neighbours except Anthony, and might be faid to be embalmed by the teras of the poor, to whom he was always a bounteous benefactor.

"When the fon, now Sir Launcelot, came home, he appeared to meagre, wan, and hollow-eyed, that the fervants hardly knew their young mafter. His first care was to take polleffion of his fortune, and lettle accounts with the fleward who had focceeded my father. These affairs being difcuffed, he spared no pains to get intelligence concerning Mils Darnel: and foon learned more of that young lady than he delired to know; for it was become the common talk of the country, that a match was agreed upon between her and young 'Squire Sycamore, a gentleman of a very great fortune. Thefe tidings were propably confirmed under her own hand, in a letter which the wrote to Sir Launcelot. The contents' were never exactly known but to the parties themelves; neverthelefs, the effects were too vifible; for, from that bleffed moment, he fpoke not one word to my living creature for the fpace of three days: but was feen tome times to fhed a flood of tears, and fomeimes to burft into a fit of laughter. At laft he woke filence, and feemed to wake from his diforder. Ie became more fond than ever of the exercise of riding, and began to amufe himfelf again with acts of benevolence.

E3

" One inftance of his generofity and juffice deferves to be recorded in brafs or marble : you muft know, gemmen, the rector of the parifh was lately dead, and Sir Everhard had promifed the prefentation to another clergyman. In the mean time, Sir Launcelot chancing one Sunday to ride through a lane, perceived a horfe, faddled and bridled, feeding on the fide of a fence ; and cafting his eyes around, beheld on the other fide of the hedge an object lying extended on the ground, which he took to be the body a murdered traveller. He forthwith alighted, and leaping into the field, deferied a map at full length wrapped in a great coat, and writhing in agony. Approaching nearer, he found it was a clergyman, in his gown and caffock. When he enquired into the cafe, and offered his affiftance, the ftranger rofe up, thanked him for his courtefy, and declared that he was now very well. The knight who thought there was fomething mysterious in this incident, expreffed a defire to know the caufe of his rolling in the grafs in that manner; and the clergyman, who knew his perfon, made no feruple in gratifying his curiofity. "You must know, Sir, faid he, I ferve the curacy of your own parifh, for which the late incumbent paid me twenty pounds a-year; but this fum being fearce fufficient to maintain my wife and children, who are five in number, I agreed to read prayers in the afternoon at another church about four miles from hence : and for this additional duty I receive ten pounds more; as I keep a horfe, it was formerly an agreeable exercise rather than a toil; but of late years I have been afflicted with a supture, for which I confulted the most eminent operators in the kingdom ; but I have no caufe to rejoice is the effects of their advice, though one of them affured me I was completely cured. The malady is now more trouble/one then ever, and often comes upon me fo violently while I am on hor/eback, that I am forced to alight, and lie down upon the ground until the caule of the diforder cas, for the time, be reduced."

" Sir Launcelot not only condoled with him upon his misfortune, but defired him to throw up the fecond cure, and he would pay him ten pounds a-year out of his own pocket." " Your generofity confounds me, good Sir, (replied the clergyman); and yet I ought not to be furprifed at any inftance of benevolence in Sir Launcelot Greaves; but I will check the fulnels of my heart. I thall only obferve, that your good intentions towards me can hardly take effect. The gentleman, who is to fucceed the late incumbent, has given me notice to guit the premiles, as he hath provided a friend of his own for the curacy." "What (cried the knight) does he mean to take your bread from you, without alligning any other reafon?" " Surely, Sir, (replied the ecclefiaftic), I know of no other reafon. I hope my morals are irreproachable, and that I have done my duty with a conficientious regard ; I may venture an appeal to the parifhioners, among whom I have lived these seventeen years. After all, it is natural for every man to favour his own friends in preference to ftrangersi As for me, I propole to try my fortune in the great city, and I doubt not but Providence will provide for me and my little ones."

"To this declaration Sir Launcelot made no reply; but riding hame, fet on foot a first enquiry into the character of this man, whole rame was Jenkins. He found that he was a reputed felolar, equally remarkable for his modefly and good life; that he wilted he fields sfifted the reedy, compre-mifed difputes among his neighbours, and fprat his time in fuch a maner as would have done honour co any Chriftian divine. Thus informed, the knight fent for the gentleman to whom the living had been promifed, and accoiled him to this effect; " Me Toutle, I have a favour to alk of you. The perfon who feres the cane of this parith, is a man of good character, belowed by the people, and has a large family. I find be obliged to you if you will continue him in the curacy." The other told him he was forry he could not comply with his requeft, feeing that he al aready promided the curacy to a friend of his own." " No matter (replied Sir Launcelot) fince I have no rintereft with you, I will chdexour to provide for Mr Jeakins in fome other way."

$6

<sup>44</sup> That Iame afternoon he walked over to the enrate's houle, and told bim that he had fooken in his behajf to Dr Tootle, but the curacy was pre-engaged. The good man having-made a thouland acknowledgements for the trouble his honour had taken; "I have not intereft fulficient to make you curate (laid the knight), but I can give you the hiving itfelf, and that you fhall have." So faying, he retired, leaving Mr Jenkin's inexpable of uttering one elylable, fo powerfully was he fiftek with this unexpected turn of fortune. The preference was immediately made out, and in a few days Mr Jenkin's was put in polifefion of his benefice, to the inexprefibble joy of the compregation.

<sup>10</sup> Hitherto every thing went right, and every unprejudiced perfon commended the knight's couldel; but in a little time his generoity feemed to overleap the bounds of differentian, and even in fome cafes might be thought tending to a breach of the king's prese. For example, he compelled, vi et armin, as

Fich farmer's fon to marry the daughter of a cottager; whom the young fellow had debauched. Indeed it feems there was a promife of marriage in the cafe, though it could not be legally afcertained. The wench took on difmally, and her parents had recourfe to Sir Launcelot, who, fending for the delinquent, expoftulated with him feverely on the injury he had done the young woman, and exhorted him to fave her life and reputation by performing his promife, in which cafe he (Sir Launcelot) would give her three hundred pounds to her portion. Whether the farmer thought there was fomething intereffing in this uncommon offer, or was a little elevated by the confcioufnels of his father's wealth, he rejected the propofal with ruftic difdain, and faid, " If fo be as how the wench would fwear the child to him, he would fettle it with the parifit; but declared, that no 'fquire in the land fhould oblige him to buckle with fuch a cracked pitcher." This ref lution however he could not maintain; for, in lefs than two hours, the rector of the parish had direction to publish the banns, and the ceremony was performed in due courfe

" Now, though we know not precifely the nature of the arguments that were ufed with the farmer, we may fuppole they were of the minatory fpecies, for the young fellow could not, for fome time, look any perfon in the face.

"" The knight acted as the general redreffer of grierances. If a woman complained to him of being ill-treated by her hulband, he first equived into the foundation of the complaint, and if he found it juit, catechifed the defendant. If the warning had no effect, and the man proceeded to fresh acts of violence, then his judge took the execution of the part is in his own hand, and horfer-whipped the party.

Thus he involved hindf in feveral law-fuits, that dvained him of pretty large fums of moorey. He feemed particularly inceded at the leaft appearance of opperfilon; and fupported divers poor tennts againt the extortion of their landlords. Nay, he has been known to travel two hundred miles, as a volunteer, to offer his alfithance in the caule of a perion, who he heard was by chicanery and opperfilon wronged of a condiderable eithet. He accordinally took her under his protection, relieved her diffetfles, and was at a with expence is bringing the fuit to a determination t which being unfavourable to his clicnst, he refolved to bring an appeal into the Houle of Lords, and certainly would have executed his purpoffe, if the gentlewonan had not died in the interim."

At this period Ferrct interrupted the narrator, by obferving, that the faid Greaves was a common nuifance, and ought to be profecuted on the flatute of barretry.

" No, Sir, (refumed Mr Clarke), he cannot be convided of barretry, unlefs he is always at variance with fome perfon or other, a mover of fuits and quarrels, who diffurbs the peace under colour of law. "Therefore he is in the indictment flyled, Communit, malifactor, calumniator, et seminator flitum."

" Prythee truce with thy definitions (cried Ferret), and make an end of thy long-winded flory. Thou haft no title to be fo tedious, until thou comeft to have a coif in the Court of Common Pleas."

Tom finited contemptuous, and had juit opened bis mouth to proceed, when the company were difturbed by a hideous repetition of groans, that feemed to iffue from the chamber in which the body of the 'lquite was deposited. The landbay functhed the candle, and ran into the room, followed by the doctor and the refls and this accident naturally fuff-pended the narration. In like manner we shall conclude the chapter, that the reader may have time to preathe, and digest what he has already heard.

59

CHAP. V.

In which this Recapitulation draws to a Close.

W HEN the landlady entered the room from whence the groaning proceeded, the found he 'fquire lying on his back under the dominion of he night-mare, which rode him fo hard, that he not bly groaned and fnorted, but the fweat ran down is face in ftreams. The perturbation of his brain. ceafioned by this prefiu e, and the fright he had tely undergone, gave rife to a very terrible dream, which he fancied himfelf apprchended for a robery. The horror of the gallows was strong opon Im, when he was fuddenly awaked by a violent ock from the doctor; and the company broke in on his view. ftill perverted by fear, and bedimned flumber. His dream was now realized by a full rfuation that he was furrounded by the conflable. d his gang. The first object that prefented stfelf his difordered view, was the figure of Ferret, who ight very well have paffed for the finisher of the w; against him therefore the first effort of his deir was directed. He ftarted upon the floor, and ed a certain utenfil, that fhall be namelels, launchit at the mifanthrope with fuch violence, that, he not cautioufly flipped his head afide, it is fuped that actual fire would have been produced from collifron of two fuch hard and folid fubitances. future milchief was prevented by the ftrength agility of Captain Crowe, who, foringing upon affailant, pinioned his arms to his tider, 'crying,

60

" O ! damn ye, if you are for running a-head, I'll foon bring you to your bearings."

The 'lquire thus refirained, 'foon recollected himfelf, and gazing upon every individual in the apartment, " Wounds' (faid he) I've had an ugity dream I thought, for all the world, they were carrying me to Newgate, and that there was Jack Ketch coom to vich me before my taim."

Ferret, who was the perfon he had thus diffinguifh ed, eveing him with a look of the moft emphatie malevolence, told him, it was very natural for a knave to dream of Newgate ; and that he hoped to fee the day when this dream would be found a true prophecy, and the commonwealth purged of all fuel rogues and vagabonds: but it could not be expected that the vulgar would be honeft and confcientious while the great were diftinguished by profligacy and corruption. The 'fquire was disposed to make practical reply to this infinuation, when Mr Ferret prudently withdrew himfelf from the fcene of altercation. The good woman of the house perfuadely his antagonift to take out his nap, affuring him the the eggs and bacon, with a mug of excellent ability fhould be forthcoming in due fealon. The affair b ing thus fortunately adjusted, the guests returned and the kitchen, and Mr Clarke refumed his flory to the minals, whole cafes were attended with favourable circumflances, he would not infert the name of one who could not procure a guines for the fee; and the poor fellow, who had only fiele an hour-glafs out of a fhoe-maker's window, was actually executed after a long refpite, during which he had been permitred to go abroad, and earn his fubfiftence by his dially labour.

<sup>44</sup> You'll pleafe to take notice, promoen, that be fides the inflatores I have alleged of Sit Launchow extravgant benevalence, I could recount a proloadable vegezance he took of a convery lawyers. Pm forty that any fuch mifcreant floaid belong the profetible. He was clerk to the alize, gemme in a certain town, not a great way difant, and hung a blake parden lift by the judges for forme gina alterna parden lift by the judges for forme gime alterna parden lift by the judges for forme gime alterna parden lift by the judges for forme gime alterna parden lift by the judges for forme gime alterna parden lift by the judges for forme gime alterna parden lift by the judges for forme gime alterna parden lift by the judges for forme gime for the forme given basis of the given basis of th

<sup>44</sup> Sir Launcelot, bring informed of this harbrouw and of avaries, and having fonce ground that borderred on the lawyer's eflate, not only rendered him contemptible and infamous, by exposing him as often as help met on the grand jury, but allo, being welfed with the property of the grant tyrhes, proved fuch a troublefome neighbour, fonctimes by making wate hmong his hay and com, and fometimes by making wate and bins for, petty trefpaffics, that he was fairly cobliged to quit his habitation, and remove inio another part to the kingdom.

" All thefe avocatious could not divert Sir Launcelot from the execution of a wild fcheme, which has carried his extravagance to fuch a pitch, that I am afraid of a flutute-you underftand me, gemmenwere fued, the jury would- I don't chuse to explain myfelf farther on this circumstance. Be that as it may, the fervants at Greave bury Hall were not a little confounded when their matter took down from he family armoury a complete fuit of armour, which had belonged to his great-grandfather, Sir Marma-Juke Greaves, a great warrior, who loft his life in the lervice of his king. This armour being fcoured, epaired, and altered, fo as to fit Sir Launcelot, a certain knight, whom I don't chute to name, becaufe believe he cannot be proved compos mentis, came fown, feemingly on a vifit, with two attendants ; Voz. L.

and, on the eve of the feltival of St George, the amour being carried into the chapel, Sit Launcelon (Lord have mercy upon us!) remained all night is that difunal place alone, and without light, though i was confidently reported all over the country, that the place was haunted by the fpirit of his great-greas uncle, who being lunatic, had cut his threat from ear to ear, and was found dead on the communior table."

It was obferred, that while Mr Clarke rehearfee this circumfance his eyes begas to flare, and his teeth to chatter; while Dolly, whole looks were fixed invariably on this narrator, growing pale, aoc hiching he; joist flool naere the chimery, exclaimed in a frightuil tone, " Moother, moother, in the name of God look to 'un! how a quakes! as I am a precious fooul, a looks as if a faw fomething." Tom forced a finle, and thus proceeded.

"While Sir Launcelet tarried within the chapel. with the doors all locked, the other knight flaked round and round it on theoutfide with his fword drawn, to the terror of divers perions who were prefent at the ceremony. As foon as day broke, he opened one of the doors, and, going in to Sir Launcelot, read a book for fome time, which we did suppose to be the confitutions of knight-errantry : then we heard a loud flap, which echoed through the whole chapel, and the ftranger prohounce with an audible and folenan voice, " In the name of G.d. St Michael, and St George, I dub thee knight -be faithful, bold, and fortunate." You cannot imagine, gemmen, what an effect this firange ceremony had upon the people who were affembled. They gazed at one another in fifent horror; and when Sir Launcelot came forth completely armed, took to their heels in a body, and fied with the utmost precipitation. I myfelf was overturned in the crowd; and this was the cafe with that very individual perform who now ferves him as a fiquire. He was fo frightened that he could not vife, but lay roaring in fuch a manner, that the sance zerofs the flowlders, which routed him with a rengeance. For my own part, I freely own I was not altogether unmoved at leeing fuch a figure come kalking out of a church in the grey of the motinity; row it recalled to my remembrance the idea of the ghoft in Hamele, which I had fern added in Drary Lane, when I made my fird trip to London, and I had not yet got rid of the imprefilon.

64

"Sir Launcelot, attended by the other knight, proceeded to the stable, from whence, with his own hands, he drew forth one of his best horfes, a fine mettlefome fotrel, who had got blood in him, ornamented with rich trappings. In a trice, the two anights, and the other two ftrangers, who now appeared to be trumpeters, were mounted. Sir Launcelot's armour was lacquered black; and on his fhield was represented the moon in her first quarter, with the notto, Impleat orbem. The trumpets having founds d a charge, the ftranger pronounced with a loud voice, " God preferve this gallant knight in all his nonourable atchievements; and may he long continue o preis the fides of his now adopted fleed, which I lenominate Bronzomarte, hoping that he will rival in wiftnels and fpirk, Bavardo, Brigliadoro, or any other fleed of paft or prefent chivalry !" After anoher flourish of the sumpets, all four clapped spurs o their horfes, Sir Launcelot couching his lance, nd galloped to and fro, as if they had been mad, the terror and aftonifument of all the fpectators. "What fhould have induced our knight to choose this here man for his 'fquire, is not eafy to deter mine; for of all the fervants about the house, h was the leaft likely either to pleafe his mafter, or en gage in fuch an undertaking. His name is Timoth Crabihaw, and he acted in the capacity of whippene in to Sir Everhard. He afterwards married the daughter of a poor cottager, by whom he has feveral children, and was employed about the house as h ploughman and carter. To be fure the fellow has dry fort of humour about him ; but he was univer fally hated among the fervants for his abufive tonguis and perverle difpolition, which often brought hir into trouble; for though the fellow is as frong alk an elephant, he has no more courage naturally that a chicken-I fay naturally, becaufe, fince his beingh a member of knight errantry, he has done fom things that appear altogether incredible and preter natural.

64

" Timothy kept fuch a bawling, after he had received the blow from Sir Launcelot, that every bod the on the field thought fome of his bones were broken and his wife, with five bantlings, came fnivelling to the knight, who ordered her to fend her hufband directly to his houle. Tim accordingly went thither, groaning pitcoufly all the way, creeping a long with his body bent like a Greenland canoe As foon as he entered the court, the outward dool was fhut; and Sir Launcelot coming down flair with a horfewhip in his hand, afked what was the matter with him that he complained fo difmally To this queltion he replied, " That it was as come mon as duck-weed in his country, for a man to comp plain when his bones were broke." "What thoulow have broke your bones?" faid the knight. " I can not guels, (answered the other) unless it was that delicate fwitch that your honour in your mad prank handled fo dexteroully upon my carafe." Sir Lanucedot then told him, there was nothing fo good for a bruile as a (weat, and he had the remedy in his hand. Timothy eyeing the hord-awhing alkance, obferved, that there was another fill more fpeedy, to way, a moderate pill of lead, with a fufficient dole of guapowder. "No, racial (cricd the knights,) that mult be referved for your bettern!" So faying, he employed the informant to effectually that Crabhaw foor lorgot his fractured ribs, and capered about with great agility.

""When he had been difejplined in this manner to fome purpose, the knight told him he might redire, but ordered him to return next morning, when he fhould have a repetition of the medicine, provided he did not find bimelif engable of walking in an erect posture. The gate was no foorer thrown open, that Timothy ran hume with all the fpeed of a greyhound, and corrected his wite, by whole advice he had pretended to be fo grievically damaged in his perfon.

<sup>64</sup> No body dreamed that he would next day preleet himdelt at Greaveflury Hall + neverthelefs, he was there very early in the morning, and even cloneted a whole hour with Sir Launcelot. If e came suu making wry faces, and tevrait times flapped himelf on the forenead, crying, "Bodikins! thof he we creaty, I airt, that I aint!" When he was afterid what was the matter, he faid, he believed the derih had gut in him, and he fhould never be his own aman agen.

"That fame day the knight carried him to Afhnton, where he befpoke thofe accourtements which he now wears: and while thefe were making, it was hought the poor fellow would have run diffracted.

Heddinothing but growl, and curfe, and (weartohimfelf, run backwards and forwards between his own hun and Greavelbury Hall, and quarrel with the horfes in the flable. At length his wife and family were removed into a fing farm-house that happened to be empty, and care taken that they (hould be comfortably maintained.

" Thefe precautions being taken, the knight, one morning, at day-break, mounted Bronzomarte, and Crabshaw as his 'fquire, alcended the back of a clumfy cart-horfe, called Gilbert. This again was looked upon as an inftance of infanity in the faid Crabfhaw; for, of all the horfes in the ftable. Gilbert was the most stubborn and vicious, and had often like to have done mifchief to Timothy while he drove the cart and plough. When he was out of humour he would kick and plunge as if the devil was in him, He once thruft Crabshaw into the middle of a quickfet-hedge, where he was terribly torn ; another time he canted him over his head into a quagmire, where he fluck with his heels up, and must have perished if people had not been paffing that way : a third time he feized him in the ftable with his teeth by the rim of the belly, and fwung him off the ground, to the great danger of his life; and I'll be hanged if it was not owing to Gilbert that Crabshaw was now thrown into the river.

"Thus mouted and accoured, the keight and his figure fot out on their first accountion. They turned off from the common highway, and travelled all that day without meeting with any thing worth recounting : but, in the morning of the fection day, they were favoured with an alventure. The hunt, was upon a common, through which they travelled, and the hounds were in full cry after a fox, when Crabbas, prompted by his own mifcherous dipolition, and neglecting the order of his mafter, who called aloud to him to defift, rode up to the hounds, and croffed them at full gallop. The huntiman, who was not far off, running towards the 'fquire, beflowed upon his head fuch a memento with his pole, as made the landscape dance before his eyes; and in a twinkling he was forrounded by all the fox-hunters, who plied their whips about his ears with infinite agility. Sir Launcelot advancing at an eafy pace, inftead of affifting the difaftrous 'Iquire, exhorted his advarfaries to punish him feverely for his infolence, and they were not flow in obeying this injunction. Crabshaw finding himself in this disagreeable fituation, and that there was no fuccour to be expected from his mafter, on whole prowels he had depended. grew defperate; and clubbing his whip, laid about him with great fury, wheeling about Gilbert, who was not idle: for he, having received fome of the fayours intended for his rider, both bit with his teeth. and kicked with his heels: and at laft made his way through the ring that encircled him, though not before he had broke the huntiman's leg, lamed one of the beft horfes on the field, and killed half a fcore of the hounds.

"Crabhaw feeing bimfelf clear of the fray, did not tarry to take leave of his mafter, but made the bed of his way to Greavefbury Hall, where he appeared bardly with any veltige of the human countenance, fo much had he been defaced in this adventure. He did not fail to raife a great clamour againft. Sir Launcelot, whom he curfed as a coward in plain terms, fwearing he would never ferve him another day: but whether he altered his mind on cooler reif-fition, or was ledured by his wife, who well nuderflood her own intereft, he rofe with the copks, and went again in queb of Sir Launcelot.

whom he found on the eve of a very hazardous enterprize.

" In the midft of a lane the knight happened to meet with a party of about forty recruits, commanded by a ferjeant, a corporal, and a drummer, which laft had his drum flung at his back : but feeing fuch a ftrange figure mounted on a high-spirited horse, he was feized with an inclination to divert his company. With this view he braced his drum, and, hanging it in its proper polition, began to beat a point of wdr, advancing under the very note of Bronzomarte; while the corporal exclaimed, " D- my eyes, who have we got here? Old King Stephen, from the borfe armoury, in the Tower; or the fellow that rides arms ed at my Lord Mayor's fhew ?" The knight's fleed feemed at leaft as well pleafed with the found of the drum as were the recruits that followed it ; and fignified his fatisfaction in fome curvetings and capris oles, which did not at all difcompose the sider; who, addreffing himfelf to the ferjeant, " Friend, faid he; you ought to teach your drummer better manners. I would chaftife the fellow on the fpot for his infolence, were it not out of the respect I bear to his majetty's fervice." " Refpect mine a-! (cried the ferocious commander) what, d'ye think to frighten us with your pewter pifs-pot on your fcull, and your lacquered potlid on your arm? get out of the way and be damn'd, or I'll raife with my halbert fuch a clatter upon your target, that you'll remember it the longeft day you have to live.". At that inftant, Crabihaw arriving upon Gilbert, " So, rafcal, faid Sir Launcelot, you are returned. Go and beat in that fcoundrel's drumhead."

"The 'fquire, who faw no weapon of offence about the drammer but a fword, which he hoped the sweer durft not draw ; and being refolved to extra himfelf in making atonement for his defertion, advanced to execute his mafter's orders : but Gilbert. who' liked not the noife, refuled to proceed in the ordinary way. Then the 'fquire turning his tail to the drummer, he advanced in a retrogade motion, and with one kick of his heels, not only broke the drum into a thousand pieces, but laid the drummer in the mire, with fuch a blow upon his hip-bone, that he halted all the days of his life. The recruits, perceiving the difcomfiture their leader, armed themfelves with ftones; the ferjeant raifed his halbert in a pofture of defence, and immediately a fevere action enfued. By this time, Crabshaw had drawn his fword, and began to lay about him like a devil incarnate ; but, in a little time, he was faluted by a volley of ftones, one of which knocked out two of his grinders, and brought him to the earth, where he had like to have found no quarter; for the whole company crowded about him, with their cudgels brandished; and perhaps he owed his prefervation to their prefling fo hard that they hindered one another from uling their weapons.

" Sir Launcelot, leeing with indignation the unworthy treatment his liquire had received, and foornnigto flam his lance with the blood of plebeins, inflead of couching it in the reft, feized it by the midlet, and fetching one blow at the forjant, broke in twain the halbert which he had raifed as a quartertaff for his defence. The fecond froke encountered his pate, which being the hardeft part about him, fufthing of his ribs, he honoured the giver with immediate prolifation. The general being thus overthrown, Sir Launcelot advanced to the relief of Grabhaw, and handled his weapon fo effectually, hat the whole body of the enerw were diabled or routed, before one coulded had touched the caccade of the faller ("quire. As for the corporal, indeed of flanding by his commanding officer, he had overleaped the hedge, and run to the could had the order Crabflaw could be properly remounted, the peace-officer arrived with his polic, and, by the cocporal, was charged with Sir Launcelot and his 'fquire, as two highwaymen. The conflable, afloatined as the marrial figure of the knight, and intimidated at the harock he had made, contented hinfelf with landing at a difface, difplaying the badge of his office, and reminding the knight that he reprefented his majelk's perfore.

"Sir Lancelot, leeing the poor man is great agitation, affured him that his deling was to enjoice, not violate, the laws of his country; and that be and his require would attend him to the next jultice of peaces but, in the mean time, he; in his ture, otherged the peace-officer with the lergicant and drustmer, who had begun the fay.

"The judice had been a pettyfogger, and was a fycophan to a noblema in the neighbourhood, who had spoß at court. He therefore though the should oblige his patton, by thereing his refpect for the mittary; and ireated our knight with the most boor in infoldence; but refuted to admit him into his houle, until he had furendered all his weapons of offence to the conduble. Sin Launcelot and his 'fquire being bound the aggreffors, the judice infitted upon making out their mittimus, if they did not find bail immediately, and could hardly be prevailed upon to agree that they fhould remain at the houfe of the confable, who, being a publican, undertook to keep them in fafe cultody, until the kaight could write' to his fleward. Mean which he was bound over to?

the peace; and the ferjeant with his drummer were told they had a good action against him for affault and battery, either by information or indistment.

"They were noi, however, so fond of the law as the julice feemed to be. Their fertiments had taken a turn in favour of Sir Launcelot, during the courfe of his examination, by which it appeared that he was really a gentleman of failhout and fortune; and they refolved to compromife the affair without the intervention of his worthip. Accordingly, the ferjeant repaired to the confibel's hour, where the knight was lodged a and humbled himfelf before his honour, protefling with many oaths, that if he had known his quality, he would have beaten the drummer's brains about his ears, for prefuming to give his honour on his horfe the least diffurbance; that fue fellow, he believed, was fufficiently punified in being a cripple for life.

" Sir Launcelot admitted his apologies; and taking compatibo on the fellow, who had fuffered fo feverely for his folly, refolved to provide for his maintenance. Upon the repreferation of the parties to the julice, the warrant was next day difcharged; and the knight returned to his own houls, attended by the ferjoart and the drummer mounted on horfeback, the recruits being left to the comporal's charge; " The halberdier found the good effects of Sir Launcelorfs liberality; and his companion being rendered inits for his Majely's fervice by the hecls of Gibert, is now entertained at Greaverbury Hall, where he will probably remain for life.

"" As for Crabhaw, his maker gave him to underfland, that if he did not think 'him pretry well chaftifed for his prefumption and flight by the difcipline he had undergone in the two laft adventures, he would turn him out of his fervice with difgrate. Timothy faid, he believed it would be the greateft favour he could do him to turn him out of a fervice in which he knew he fhould be rib-roafted every day, and murdered at laft.

" In this fituation were things at Greaveflury Hall about a month ago, when I croffed the country to Ferry-bridge, where I met my uncles probably, this was the firfl incident of their fecond excurfors i for the dilance between this here hould and Sin Launcelus's eflate, does not exceed fourfcore or ninety miles."

CHAP. VI.

In which the Reader will perceive that in some Cases Madness is catching.

M R Clarke having made an end of his narrative, the furgeon thanked him for the entertainment he had received, and Mr Ferret fhrugged up his shoulders in filent disapprobation. As for Captain Crowe, who uled at fuch paufes to pour in a broadfide of difmembered remarks, linked together like chain fhot, he fpoke not a fyllable for fome time; but, lighting a fresh pipe at the candle, began to roll fuch voluminous clouds of fmoke, as in an inftant filled the whole apartment, and rendered himfelf invisible to the whole company. Though he thus fhrouded himfelf from their view, he did not long remain concealed from their hearing. They first heard a ftrange diffonant cackle, which the doctor knew to be a fea laugh, and this was followed by an cager exclamation of " Rare paftime, flrike my yards and top-mafts !- I've a good mind-why thouldn't -many a lofing voyage I've-finite my taffrel but 1 weol."-- by this time he had related for much in his funcration, that the tip of his nofe and one eye re-apeared; and as he had drawn his wig forwards fo as o cover his whole forehead, the figure that now faated their eyes was much more ferocious and terrinele than the fire-breathing chimars of the ancients. Notwithlanding this dreadful appearance, there was or indignation in his heart, but, on the contrary, an spreable curiofity, which he was determined to gralify.

Addreffing himfelf to Mr Fillet, " Prythee, docor (faid he) can't tell, whether a man, without beng rated a lord or a baron, or what d'ye call um,Pye fee, mayn't take to the highway in the way ofIrolie, d'ye (e2)—A dad I for my own part, broher, I'm refolved as how to cruize a bit in the wayif an arrat-if be as a I can't at once be comnander, mayhap I may be bore upon the books as asetty officer, or the like, d'ye fee."

" Now, the Lord forbid! (cried Clarke, with ears in his eyes) I'd rather fee you dead than brought to fuch a dilemma."-" Mayhap thou wouldft (anwered the uncle); for then, my lad, there would be mme picking-alia! doft thou tip me the traveller, iny boy ?" 'Tom affured him he foorned any fuch nercenary views: " I am only concerned (faid he) hat you should take any step that might tend to the lifgrace of yourfelf or your family; and I fay again, had rather die than live to fee you reckoned any stherwise than compos."-" Die and be damned ! ou fhambling, half-timber'd fon of a ----- (cried the cheleric Crowe); doit talk to me of keeping a eckoning and compafy!-I could keep a reckoning, ad box my compais long enough before thy keeltone was laid - Sam Crowe is not come here to afk Vol. I.

thy counfel how to fteer his courfe."-" Lord, Si (refumed the nephew) confider what people will fail -all the world will think you mad."-" Set the heart at eafe, Tom, (cried the feaman) I'll have trip to and again in this here channel. Madl what then? I think, for my part, one half of the nation i mad-and the other not very found-I don't fe why I han't as good a right to be mad as anothe man-But, doctor, as I was faving, I'd be bound t you, if you would direct me where I can buy that fame tackle that an arrant muft wear; as for th matter of the long pole headed with iron. I'd ne'e defire a better than a good boat-hook, and I coulmake a special good target of that there tin fconce that holds the candle-mayhap any blackfmith will hammer me a skull-cap, d'ye see, out of an old braf kettle: and I can call my horfe by the name of my thip, which was Mufti."

The furgeon was one of those wags who can laugh inwardly, without exhibiting the leaft outward marl of mirth or fatisfaction. He at once perceived the amufement which might be drawn from this flrange disposition of the failor, together with the most like ly means which could be used to divert him from fuch an extravagant purfuit. He therefore tipped Clarke the wink with one fide of his face, while the other was very gravely turned to the captain, whom he addreffed to this effect : " It is not far from hence to Sheffield, where you might be fitted completely in half a day-then you must wake your armour in church or chapel, and be dubbed. As for this laft ceremony, it may be performed by any perfon whatfoever. Don Quixote was dubbed by his landlord : and there are many inftances on record of errants obliging and compelling the next perfon they met to crofs their houlders, and dub them knights. I my-Fielf would undertake to be your godfather, and I have intereft cough to procent the keys of the pariful other that flands hard by; befides, this is the even of St Martin, who was himfelf a knight-errant, and therefore a proper parton to a novicita. I will we a could borrow Sir Launcelot's armour for the occafon."

75

Crowe being ftruck with this hint, flarted up; and a laying his fingers on his lips to enjoin filence, walked off foftly on his tiptoes, to litten at the door of our knight's apartment, and judge whether or not he was afleep. Mr Fillet took this opportunity to tell his nephew that it would be in vain for him to combat this humour wich reafon and argument; but the if most effectual way of diverting him from the plan of knight-errantry would be, to frighten him heartily while he should keep his vigil in the church. Tawards the accomplifhment of which purpose he cravd ed the affiftance of the mifanthrope, as well as the nephew. Clarke feemed to relifh the fcheme ; and obferved that his uncle, though endued with courage enough to face any human danger, had at bottom a throng fund of fuperitition, which he had acquired, or at leaft improved, in the course of a fea-life. Ferret, who perhaps would not have gone ten paces out of his road to have faved Crowe from the gallows, neverthelefs engaged as an auxiliary, merely in hopes of feeing a fellow-creature miterable; and even undertook to be the principal agent in this adventure. For this office, indeed, he was better qualified than they could have imagined : in the bundle which he kept under his great coat, there was, together with divers noftrums, a small phial of liquid phosphorus, fufficient, as he had already obferved, to frighten a whole neighbourhood out of their fenfes.

In order to concert the previous medfures with out being averheard, thele confederates retired with a candle and lanthorn into the flable I and their backs were fearce turned, when Captain Growccan in loaded with pieces of the knight's armony, whice he had conveyed from the apartment of Sir Launcelot, whom he had left fait alcep.

Understanding that the reft of the company wer gone out for a moment, he could not refift the in clination he felt of communicating his intention to the landlady, who, with her daughter, had been too much engaged in preparing Crabshaw's supper to know the purport of their conversation. The good woman, being informed of the captain's defigr to remain alone all night in the church, began to oppole it with all her thetoric. She faid it was fetting his Maker at defiance, and a wilful running into temptation. She affured him that all the country knew that the church was haunted by fpirits and hobgoblins; that lights had been feen in every corner of it ; and a tall woman in white had one night appeared upon the top of the tower; that dreadful fbrieks were often heard to come from the fouth aifle, where a murdered man had been buried ; that fhe herhad feen the crofs on the fteeple all a fire; and one evening as the paffed a-horfeback close by the file at the entrance into the church-yard, the horfe flood ftill, fweating and trembling, and had no power to proceed until the had repeared the Lord's Prayer.

Their remarks made a firong imprefion on the imagination of Crowe; who alked, in fome confufion, if fhe had got that fame prayer in print. She made no anfwer, but reaching the prayer-book from a fielf, and turning up the leaf, put it into his hand i then the captain, having adjuited his fpectacles, began to ready or rather fpell, aloud, with equal eagerinefs and folemnity. He had refrefied his memory to well as to remember the whole, when the doctor, treturning with his companions, gave him to underidand that he had procured the key of the chancel, where he might watch his armour as well as in the body of the church; and that he was ready to conduct him to the foot. Crowe was not now quite fo forward as he had appeared before to atchieve this adventure: he began to flast objections with refrect to the borrowed armour; he wanced to flipulate the comforts of a can of flip, and a candle's end, during hiv vigil; and whited fomething of the damage he might furthan from your malicious imposed farknets.

The doctor told him, the conflicutions of chivalry abfolutely required that he should be left in the dark alone, and faiting, to fpend the night in pious media tations ; but if he had any fears which diffurbed his confcience, he had much better defift, and give up all thoughts of knight-enantry, which could not confift with the leaft fhadow of apprehention. The capa tain, flung by this remark, replied not a word ; but gathering up the the armour into a bundle, threw it on his back, and fet out for the place of probation, preceded by Clarke with the lanthorn. When they arrived at the church, Fillet, who had procured the key from the fexton, who was his patient, opened the door, and conducted our novice into the middle of the chancel. wherethe armour was depolited. Then bidding Crowe draw his hanger, committed him to the protection of Heaven, affuring him he would come back, and find him either dead or alive by day-break, and perform the remaining part of the ceremony. So faying, he and the other affociates flook him by the hand and took their leave, after the furgeon had tilted up the lanthorn to take a view of his vifage, which was pale and haggard.

G 3

Before the door was locked upon him, he called aloud, " Hilloa! doctor, hip ---- another word, d'ye he wanted, and found him already in a fweat. " Heark ye, brother (faid he, wiping his face) I do fuppole as how one may pals away the time in whiftling the Black Joke, or finging Black-ey'd Sufan, or fome fuch forrowful ditty,"-" By no means (cried the doctor), fuch paftimes are neither fuitable to the place, nor the occasion, which is altogether a religious exercife. If you have got any pfalms by heart, you may fing a flave or two, or repeat the Doxology." ---- " Would I had Tom Laverick here, (replied our noviciate) he would fing you anthems like a fea-mew-a had been clerk ashore-many's the time and often I've given him a rope's end for finging pfalms in the larboard watch-would I had hired the fon of a bitch to have taught me a caft of his office-but it cannot be holp, brother-if we can't go large, we muft haul upon a wind, as the faying is-if we can't fing, we must pray." The company again left him to his devotion, and returned to the public-houfe, in order to execute the effential part of their project.

CHAP. VII.

. In which the Knight resumes his Importance.

OCTOR Fillet hving borrowed a couple of theets from the landlady, dreffed themisfanthrope and Tom Clarke in ghofly apparel, which was reinforced by a few drops of liquid phofphorus, from Ferret's phila, rubbed on the foreheads of the two adventurers. Thus equipped, they returned to the church with their conductor, who entered with them fofly at an aille which was oppoint to a place where the novice kept warch. They field superceived through the body of the church; and though it was fo dark that they could not diffinguifi the captain with the eye, they heard the found of his fleps, as he walked backwards and forwards on the pawement with uncommon expedition, and an ejsculation now and then efcape in a murmur from his lips.

The triumvirate having taken their flation, with a large pew in their front, the two ghofts uncovered their heads, which, by the help of the pholphorus, exhibited a pale and lambent flame, extremely difmal and ghaftly to the view; then Ferret, in a fqueaking tone, exclaimed, " Samuel Crowe! Samuel Crowe !" The captain hearing himfelf accofted in this manner, at fuch a time, and in fuch a place, replied, " Hilloa!" and turning his eyes towards the quarter whence the voice feemed to proceed, beheld the terrible apparition. This no tooner faluted his view. than his hair briftled up, his knees began to knock, and his teeth to chatter, while he cried aloud, " In the name of God, where are you bound, ho ?" To this hail the mifanthrope answered, " We are the spirits of thy grandmother Jane and thy aunt Bridget."

At mention of thefe names, Crowe's terrors began to give way to his refeatment, and he pronounced a quick tone of furprife, mixed with indignation, "" What d'ye want? what d'ye want, ho?" The fpi-"it repited, "We are feat to warn the of thy fate?" --" From whence, ho?" cried the captain, whole choler had by this time well nigh triumphed over his fear. "From Heaven," faid the voice. "Ye lie, ye b --- s of hell 1 (did our novice exclaim) ye are damed for heaving me out of my right for lathous and a blif by the lead, in burning brimflone. Don't I fee the blue flames come out of your hawfe-boles-mayhap you may be the den't himdelf, for aught I know--but I truft in the Lord, d'ye fee--I never diftated a kindman, d'ye fee, fo don't come alongfide of me--put about on the other tack, d'ye fee-you need oot clap hard a-weather, for you'll foon get to hell again with a flowing fall."

So faving, he had recourfe to his Paterpofter; but perceiving the apparitions approach, he thundered out, " Avaft-avaft-fheer off, ye babes of hell, or I'll be foul of your fore-lights." He accordingly fprung forwards with his hanger, and very probably would have fet the fpirits on their way to the other world, had he not fallen over a pew in the dark, and entangled himfelf fo much among the benches, that he could not immediately recover his footing. The triumvirate took this opportunity to retire; and fuch was the precipitation of Ferret in his retreat, that he encountered a post, by which his right eye fuftained confiderable damage; a circumftance which induced him to inveigh bitterly against his own folly, as well as the impertinence of his companions, who had inveigled him into fuch a troublefome adventure. Neither he nor Clarke could be prevailed upon to revifit the novice. The doctor himfelf thought his difeafe was desperate ; and, mounting his horse, returned to his own habitation.

Ferret, finding all the beds in the public-houle were occupied; compoled himfelf to fleep in a Windfor chair at the chinney corner; and Mr Clarke, whole difpolition was extremely amorous, refolved to renew bis practices on the heart of Dolly. He had reconnoitered the spartments in which the bodies of the knight and his 'fquire were depolited; and difovered, clofe by the top of the flairecide; a fort of clofet or hovel, just large enough to contain a trucklebed, which, from fome other particulars, he fuppofed to be the bed chamber of his beloved Dolly, who had by this time retired to her repole. Full of this idea, and infligated by the demon of defire, Mr Thomas crept foftly up flairs, and lifting the latch of the closet-door, his heart began to palpitate with joyous expectation ; but before he could breathe the gentle effutions of his love, the supposed damiel flarted up. and feizing him by the collar with an Herculean gripe, uttered in the voice of Crabshaw, " It wa'n't for nothing that I dreamed of Newgate, firrah; but I'd have thee to know, an arrant 'Iquire is not to be robbed by fuch a peddling thief as thee-here I'll hold thee vaft, and the devil were in thy doublethelp! murder! vire! help!"

It was impoffible for Mr Clarke to difengage himfelf, and equally impracticable to fpeak in his own vindication : fo that here he flood trembling and half throttled, until the whole house being alarmed, the landlady and her offler ran up flairs with a candle. When the light rendered objects vifible, an equal allonishment prevailed on all fides; Crabshaw was confounded at the fight of Mr Clarke, whole perfon he well knew; and releafing him inftantly from his grafp, " Bodikins! (cried he) I believe as how this house is haunted-who thought to meet with Meafter Laayer Clarke at midnight, and fo far from hoam !" The landlady could not comprehend the meaning of this encounter; nor could Tom conceive how Crabshaw had transported himfelf thither from the room below, in which he faw him quietly repoled. Yet nothing was more easy than to explain this myflery; the apartment below was the chamber which the hoftefs and her daughter referved for their own convenience; and this particular having been intimated to the 'fquire while he was at fupper, here had refigned the bed quirely, and had been conducted hither in the ablence of the company. Tom, recollecting hindelf as well as he could, profefied himfelf of Crabinaw's opinion, that the houfe was haunted, declaring, that he could not well account for him being there in the dark; and leaving thole that were alfembled to difcufs this knotty point, retired downs fairs, in hope of meeting with his charmer, witoms accordingly he found in the kitchen juft rifen, and wrapped in a loode difnabile.

The noife of Crabshaw's cries had awakened and arouzed his mafter; who rifing fuddenly in the dark, Inatched up his fword that lay by his bed fide, and haftened to the fcene of tumult, where all their mouths were opened at once to explain the caufe of their diffurbance, and make an apology for breaking his bonour's reft. He faid nothing; but taking the candle in his hand, beckoned to his 'fquire to follow him into his apartment, refolving to arm and take horfe immediately. Crabshaw understood his meaning : and while he fhuffled on his clothes, yawning hideoufly all the while, withed the lawyer at the devil for having vifited him fo unfeafonably; and even curfed himfelf for the noife he had made, in confequence of which he forefaw he fhould now be obliged p to forfeit his night's reft, and travel in the dark, expofed to the inclemencies of the weather. " Pox rot thee, Tom Clarke, for a wicked laayer! (faid he to himfelf) hadft thou been hanged at Bartlemy-tide, I should this night have flept in peace, that I should -an I would there was a blitter on this plaguy tongue of mine for making fuch a halloobaloo that I do !- five gallons of cold water has my poor belly been drenched with fince night fell, fo as my reins and my liver are all one as if they were turned into tice, and my whole harflet fnakes and fnivers like a phial of quickfilver. I have been dragged, half drowned, like a rotten ewe, from the bottom of a niver; and who knows but I may be next dragged quite dead from the bottom of a coal-pii---if to be as I am. I fnall go to hell, to be fure, for being condarned like in my own moorder, that I will, fo I will, dfor a plaque on it, I had no bufinefi with the vagasies of this crazy peated meafter of mine; a pox an him, fay I!?

He had just finished this foliloquy as he entered the apartment of his mafter, who defired to know what was become of his armour. Timothy under-Randing that it had been left in the room when the knight undreffed, began to fcratch his head in great perplexity; and at laft declared it as his opinion, that it must have been carried off by witchcraft. Then he related his adventure with Tom Clarke : who, he faid, was conveyed to his bedfide he knew not how; and concluded with affirming they were , no better than Papifies who did not believe in witchcraft. Sir Launcelot could not help fmiling at his fimplicity ; but affuming a peremptory air, he commanded him to fetch the armour without delay, that he might afterwards faddle the horfes, in order to profecute their journey.

Timothy retired in great tribulation to the kitchen; where finding the mifasthrops, whom the noife had suffo difurbed, and fill imprefield with the notion of bis being a conjuter, he offered him a fhilling if he would cait a figure, and let him know what was berome of his mafter's armour.

Ferret; in hope of producing more mifchief, informed him without hefitation, that one of the comany had conveyed it into the chancel of the church, where he would now find it deposited; at the fame time prefenting him with the key, which Mr Fillet had left in his cuftody.

The 'fquire, who was none of those who fet hoggoblins at defiance, being afraid to enter the church alone at these hours, bargained with the offler to accompany and light him with a lanthorn. Thus attended, he advanced to the place, where the armour lay in a heap, and loaded it upon the back of his attendant without molettation, the lance being fhouldered over the whole. In this equipage they were just going to retire, when the offler hearing a noife at fome diftance, wheeled about with fuch velocity, that one end of the fpear faluting Crabshaw's pate, " the poor 'fquire meafured his length on the ground; and crushing the lantern in his fall, the light was extinguished. The other, terrified at these effects of his own fudden motion, threw down his burden; and would have betaken himtelf to flight, had not Crabfhaw laid fait hold on his leg, that he himfelf might not be deferted. The found of the pieces clattering on the pavement, rouzed Captain Crowe from a trance or flumber, in which he had lain fince the apparition vanished ; and he hallooed, or rather bellowed, with valt vociferation. Timothy and his friend were for intimidated by this terrific flrain, that they thought no more of the armour, but ran home arm in arm, and appeared in the kitchen with all the marks of horror and conflernation.

When Sir Launcelot earne forth wropped in hiscloak, and demanded his arms, Crab/haw declared that is the devil had them in polfeffion; and this affertion was confirmed by the oiller, who pretended to know a the devil by his roar. Ferret fait in his corree, maintaining the moft mortifying filence, and enjoying the impatience of the knight, who in wain requested an a explanation of this myftery. At length this eyes began to lighten; when feizing Crabhaw in one hand, and the offler in the other, he fwore by Heaven he foundation, if they did not inflantly diffelofe the particulars of this transfelion. The good woman fell on her knees, protefling, in the name of the Lord, that the was innocent as the child unborn, thof the had lent the captain a prayer-book to learn the Lord's Prayer, a candle and lantern to light him to the church, and a couple of clean fluets for the uffe of the other gentlemen. The knight was more and more puzzled by this declaration; when Mr Clarke coming into the kitchen, prefented himfelf with a how obsificate to his old parton.

Sir Launcelot's anger was immediately converted into furprife. He fet at liberty the 'fquire and the offler; and firetching out his hand to the lawyer; "' My good friend, Clarke (faild he), how came you hither? Can you folve this knotty point which hath involved us all in fuch confution?"

Tom forthwith began a very circumflantial recapitulation of what had happend to his uncle j in what manner he had been difapointed of the effate; how he had accidentally free his honours, heen enamoured of his character, and become ambitious of following his example. Then he related the particulars of the plan which had been haid down to divert him from his defign; and coacluded with affuring the knight, that the capatin was a very honefly man, sthough he feemed to be a little difordered in his intellefts. "I believe if (replied Sir Launcel of); madnets and bonefly are not incompatible—indeed, 1 fed it by experience."

Tom proceeded to alk pardon, in his uncle's name, for having made to free with the knight's armour; and begged his honour, for the love of God, would use his authority with Crowe that he might quit al thoughts of knight-errantry, for which he was by ne means qualified ; for being totally ignorant of the laws of the land, he would be continually committing trefpaffes, and bring himfelf into trouble. He faid in cafe he should prove refractory, he might be ap prehended by virtue of a friendly warrant, for having felonioufly carried off the knight's accoutrements " Taking away another man's moveables (faid he), and perfonal goods, against the will of the owner, is furium, and felony according to the flatute: different. indeed, from robbery, which implies putting in feat on the king's highway, in alta via regia violenter en felonice captum et asportatum, in magnum terrorem, Ec. for if the robbery be laid in the indictment as done in quadam via pedestri, in a foot path, the offender will not be outled of his clergy. It must be in alta via regia; and your honour will pleafe to take notice, that robberies committed on the river Thames, are adjudged as done in alta via regia ; for the king's high-ftream is all the fame as the king's high-way."

VOL. I.

Sir Launcelot could not help fmiling at Tom's learned invelligation. He congratulated him on the progrefs he had made in the fludy of the law. He expreffed his concern at the flrange turn the explain had taken, and promided to use his influence in perfunding him to defift from the prepofterous defign he had formed.

The lawyer, thus affored, repaired immediately to the church, accompanied by the 'fquire, and held a parley with his uncle; who when he underflood that the knight in perfon defired a conference, furrendered up the arms quietly, and returned to the publichoufe.

Sir Launcelot received the honelt feaman with his fual complacency; and perceiving great difcompoure in his looks, faid, he was forry to hear he had haffed fuch a difagreeable night to fo little purpofe. Crowe, having recruited his fpirits with a bumper of randy, thanked him for his concern, and obferved, hat he had paffed many a hard night in his time, that fuch another as this he would not be bound to reather for the command of the whole British navy. I have feen Davy Jones in the fhape of a blue ame, d'ye fee, hopping to and fro on the fpritfail ard-arm; and I have feen your Jacks o' the Lanthorn ind Wills o' the Wifp, and many fuch fpirits, both y fea and land; but to-night I've been boarded by Il the devils and damned fouls in hell, fqueaking and qualling, and glimmering and glaring. Bounce ackle-white-fheeted ghofts dancing in one corner by the glow-worm's light-black devils hobbling in another-Lord have mercy upon us !- and I was ailed, Tom-I was-by my grandmother Jane, and ay aunt Bridget, d'ye fee-a couple of damn'd ----- : but they're roafting ; that's one comfort, my lad." When he had thus difburdened his confcience, ir Launcelot introduced the fubject of the new ocupation at which he afpired. " I understand, faid e, that you are defirous of treading in the paths of trantry, which I affure you, are thorny and troublemme. Neverthelefs, as your purpole is to exercife our humanity and benevolence, fo your ambition is mmmendable. But towards the practice of chivalry there is fomething more required than the virtues of purage and generofity. A knight-errant ought to nderstand the sciences, to be master of ethics or porality, to be well verfed in theology, a complete afuilt, and minutely acquainted with the laws of his H 2

country. He finuld not only be patient of coldhunger, and fatigue; righteous, juit, and valiant bat allo chafle, religious, temperate, polite, and converfable; and have all his paffions under the rein, except lore, whole empire he fhould fibmilifiedy aciknowledge." He faid, this was the very efficace of chiralry; and no man had ever made forch a profeffion of arms, without having firft placed his affection upon fome beauteous object, for whofe honour, and at whofe command, he would cheerfully encounter the molt dreadful perils.

He took notice that nothing could be more irregular, than the manner in which Crowe had attempted to keep his 'nigil, for he had never ferved his novicitate—he had not prepared bindfd with ablitances for the ceremony of dubbing—he had no arour of his own to wake; but, on the very threfhold of chivalry, which is the perfection of juffice, had unjuffly purloined the arms of another knight; that this was a mere mockery of a religious inflitution, and therefore unpleafing in the fight of Heaven purints the demons and holgeblins that were permitted to diffurk and tommet him in his trial.

Crowe having liftened to thefe remarks with earneft attotion, replict, after fome heftation, "I am bound to you, brother, for your kind and Chriftian counfiel-1 doubt as how I've freered by a wrong clart, d'ye fee-As for the matter of the feiences to be fure, I know plain-failing and Mercator; and an an indifferent good feaman, thof I fay it that fhould not fay it: but as to all the reft, no better than the viol-block or the geer-capitan. Religion I han't much overhauled; and we tare laugh at youn polite convertation--thof, mayhap, we can chaunt a few ballads to keep the hands awake in the night.

watch: then for chaftity, brother. I doubt that's not to be expected in a failor juft come afhore after a long voyage-fure all those poor hearts won't be damned for fleering in the wake of nature. As for a fweetheart. Bet Mizen, of St Catharine's, would fit me to a hair-fhe and I are old meffmates ; and what fignifies talking, brother; fhe knows already the trim of my veffel, d'ye fee!" He concluded with faying, he thought he wa'n't too old to learn : and if Sir Launcelot would take him in tow. as his tender, he would fland by him all weathers, and it should not colt his confort a farthing's expence. The knight faid, he did not think himfelf of confequence enough to have fuch a pupil, but should always he ready to give him his beft advice ; as a specimen of which, he exhorted him to weigh all the circumitances, and deliberate calmly and leifurely before he actually engaged in fuch a boifterous profession ; affuring him, that if, at the end of three months, his refolution, fhould continue, he would take upon himfelf the office of his inftructor. In the mean time, he gratified the hoftels for his lodging; put on his armour; took leave of the company; and, mounting Bronzomarte, proceeded fouthernly, being attended by his 'fquire, Crabshaw, grumbling on the back of Gilbert.

CHAP. VIII.

Which is within a Hair's Breadth of proving highly, interesting.

L EAVING Captain Crowe and his nephew for the prefent, though they, and even the mifanthrope, will re-appear in due feafon; we are now H a obliged to attend the progress of the knight, who proceeded in a fouthernly direction, infenfible of the ftorm that blew, as well as of the darkness, which was horrible. For fome time Crabshaw ejaculated curfes in filence; till at length his anger gave way to his fear, which waxed fo ftrong upon him, that he could no longer refift the defire of alleviating it, by entering into a conversation with his mafter. By way of introduction, he gave Gilbert the fpur, directing him towards the flank of Bronzomarte, which he encountered with fuch a fhock, that the knight was almost difmounted. When Sir Launcelot, with fome warmth, afked the realon of this attack, the 'fquire .replied in thefe words : " The devil (God blefs us) mun be playing his pranks with Gilbert too, as fure as I'm a living foul !- I'fe wage a teafter, the foul fiend has left the feaman, and got into Gilbert, that he has-when a has paffed through an als and a horfe. I'fe marvel what beaft a will get into next."-" Probably into a mule (faid the knight): in that cafe, you will be in fome danger-but I can at any time difpoffels you with a horfewhip."-" Aye, aye, answered Timothy, your honour has a mortal good hand at giving a flap with a fox's tail, as the faying is-'tis a wonderment you did not try your hand on that there wifeacre that fole your honour's harnefs, and wants to be an arrant, with a murrain to 'un .- Lord help his fool's head, it becomes him as a fow doth a cart-faddle." -----" There is no guilt in infirmity, faid the knight; I punifh the vicious only."-" I would your honour would punish Gilbert, then, cried the 'iquire, for 'tis the most vicious tuoad that ever I laid a leg overbut as to that fame fea-faring man, what may his diftemper be ?"-" Madnefs," anfwered Sir Launcelot. " Bodikins ! exclaimed the 'fquires I doubt has how other volks are leame of the fame leg-but a'n't vor fuch fmall gentry as he to be mad; they mun leave that to their besters." "You feem to hint at me, Crabihaw: do you really think I am mad ?"-" I may fay as how I have looked your honour in the mouth ; and a forry dog fhould I be, If I did not know your humours as well as I know e'er a beatt in the steable at Greavesbury Hall." " Since you are fo well acquainted with my madnels, faid the knight, what opinion have you of yourfelf, who ferve and follow a lunatic?" " I hope I ha'n't ferved your hononr for nothing, but I fhall inherit tome of your caft vagaries-when your honour is pleafed to be mad, I should be very forry to be found right in my fenfes. Timothy Crabshaw will never wat the bread of unthankfulnefs-it shall never be faid of him, that he was wifer than his meafter : as for the matter of following a madman, we may fee your honour's face is made of a fiddle; every one that looks on you, loves you." This compliment the knight returned by faying, " If my face is a fiddle, Drabshaw, your tongue is a fiddle flick that plays upon it-yet your mufic is very dilagreeable-you don't keep time." " Nor you neither, mealter, cried Timothy, or we fhou'dn't be here wandering about under cloud of night, like theep-ttealers, or evil pirits with troubled confciences,"

Here the diffourie was interrupted by a fudden. diffatter, in confequence of which the 'djuire' utered in inarticulate roar that flartled the knight himfelf, who was very little fueject to the fendation of fear; but his largrife was changed into vexation when he bereeived Gilbert without a rider, pating by, and koking his heels with great agility. He forthwith urand his fited; and riding back a few paces, found Drabfhaw 'ting from the ground. When he akked what was become of his horfe, he anfwred, in a whimpering tone, "Horfe! would I could once fee him fairly carrica for the hounds—for my part, I believe as how "this no horfe, but a devil incarnate; is and yet I have been worfe mounted, that I have— I'd like to have rid a horfe that was foaled of an acorn."

This accident happened in a hollow way overfhadowed with trees, one of which the ftorm had blown down, fo that it lay over the road ; and one of its boughs projecting horizontally, encountered the 'Iquire as he trotted along in the dark. Chancing to hitch under his long chin, he could not difengage himfelf, but hung fufpended like a flitch of bacon; while Gilbert, pufhing forward, left him dangling, and, by his aukward gambols, feemed to be pleafed with the joke. This capricious animal was not retaken without the perfonal endeavours of the knight; for Crabshaw abfolutely refusing to budge a foot from his honour's fide, he was obliged to alight, and faften Bronzomarte to a tree ; then they fet out together, and with fome difficulty found Gilbert, with his neck firetched over a five-barred gate, fnuffing up the morning air. The 'fquire, however, was not remounted, without having first undergone a fevere reprehension from his master, who upbraided him with his cowardice, threatened to chaftife him on the fpot, and declared that he would divorce his daftardly foul from his body, fhould he ever be incommoded or affronted with another inftance of his bafe-born apprehenfion.

<sup>1</sup> Though there was fome rifuge in carrying on the altercation at this juncture, Timothy having bound up his jaws, could not withfland the inclination he had to confute his mafter. He therefore, in a muttering accent, proteifed, that if the knight would rigive him leave, he fhould prove that his honour had tied a knot with his tongue, which he could not untie with all his teeth, "How, caitiff, cried Sir Launcelot, prefume to contend with me in argument !" " Your mouth is fcarce fhut, faid the other, fince you declared that a man was not to be punified for madnefs, becaufe it was a diftemper : now I will maintain, that cowardice is a diffemper as well as madnels; for nobody would be afraid if he could help it." " There's more logic in that remark, refumed the knight, than I expected from your clodpate, Crabshaw : but I muft explain the difference between cowardice and madnefs. Cowardice, though fometimes the effect of natural imbecility, is generally a prejudice of education, or bad habit contracted from mifinformation or milapprehenfion, and may certainly be cured by experience and the exercise of reason : but this remedy cannot be applied in madnefs, which is a privation or diforder of reafon itfelf." " So is cowardice, as I'm a living foul, exclaimed the 'fquire ; don't you fay a man is frightened out of his fenfes? for my peart, meafter, I can neither fee nor hear, much lefs argufy, when I am in fuch a quandary ; wherefore, I do believe, odds bodikins ! that cowardice and madnels are both diftempers, and differ no more than the hot and cold fits of an ague. When it teakes your honour, you're all heat and fire and fury, Lord blefs us ! but when it catches poor Tim, he's cold and dead-hearted ; he fheakes and fhivers like an afpen-leaf, that he does." " In that cafe, answered the knight, I shall not punish you for the diftemper which you cannot help, but for engaging in a fervice exposed to perils, when you knew your own infirmity ; in the fame manner as a man deferves punithment, who enlifts himfelf for a foldier, while he labours under any fecret difeafe." " At that rate, faid the 'fquire, my bread is likely to be arely buttered o'both fides, i'faith' But I hope, as by the bleffing of God I have run mad, fo I fhall in good time grow valiant, under your honour's precept and example."

h.

By this time a very difagreeable night was fuc-ceeded by a fair bright morning, and a market-town appeared at the diffance of three or four miles; when Crabfhaw, having no longer the fear of hobgoblins before his eyes, and being moreover cheared by the fight of a place where he hoped to meet with comfortable entertainment, began to talk big, to expatiate on the folly of being afraid, and finally fet all danger at defiance; when all of a fudden he was prefented with an opportunity of putting in practice those new-adopted maxims. In an opening between two lanes, they perceived a gentleman's coach flopped by two highwaymen on horfeback, one of whom advanced to reconnoitre and keep the coaft clear, while the other exacted contribution from the travellers in the coach. He who acted as centinel, no fooner faw our adventurer appearing from the lane, than he rode up with a piftol in his hand. and ordered him to halt on pain of immediate death.

To this peremptory model the knight made no other reply than charging him with fuch impetuofity, that he was unhorfed in a twinking, and lay frawling on the ground, feemingly fore bruiled with his fall. Sir Launcelat, commanding Timothy to alight and (coure the priforer, couched his lance, and rode full (peed at the other highwayman, who was not a little diffurbed at fight of fuch an apparition. Neverthelefs, he fired his plifol without effect; and, elapping fpurst to his horfe. field way at full galloy. The knight purfued him with all the fpeed that Broazomatre could exert; but the robber being mounted on a fwift hunter, kept him at a diftance : and, after a chace of feveral miles, efcaped through a wood fo entangled with coppice, that Sir Launcelot thought proper to defift. He then, for the first time. recollected the fituation in which he had left the other thief; and remembering to have heard a female Thrick as he paffed by the coach-window, refolved to return with all expedition, that he might make a proffer of his fervice to the lady, according to the obligation of knight-errantry. But he had loft his way ; and after an hour's ride, during which he had traverfed many a field, and circled divers hedges, he ound himfelf in the market-town before-mentioned. Here the first object that prefented itfelf to his eyes was Crabshaw on foot, furrounded by a mob, tearing ais hair, ftamping with his feet, and roaring out in manifest distraction, " Shew me the mayor, (for the ove of God !) fhew me the mayor !-- O Gilbert, Gilbert! a murrian take thee, Gilbert! fure thou walt foaled for my deftruction !"

From these exclamations, and the antic dress of he 'iquire, the people, not without reason, concluded hat the poor foul had loft his wits; and the beadle was just going to fecure him, when the knight interofed, and at once attracted the whole attention of he populace. Timothy, feeing his malter, fell down h his knees, crying, " The thief has run away with Filbert-you may pound me into a peaft, as the ying is: but now I'fe as mad as your worthip, "nt afeard of the devil and all his works." Sir auncelot defiring the beadle to forbear, was inftantr obeyed by that officer, who had no inclination to ut the authority of his place in competition with he power of fuch a figure, armed at all points, jounted on a fiery fleed, and ready for the combat. de ordered Crabshaw to sttend him to the next inn, where he alighted; then taking him into a feparate apartment, demanded an explanation of the uncon nected words he had uttered.

The 'fquire was in fuch agitation, that, with infil nite difficulty, and by dint of a thousand differen queftions, his mafter learned the adventure to thi effect. Crabihaw, according to Sir Launcelot's com mand, had alighted from his horfe, and drawn hill cutlafs, in hope of intimidating the difcomfited rob ber into a tame furrender, though he did not at all relifh the nature of the fervice ; but the thief was nei ther fo much burt, nor fo tame as Timothy had imal gined. He flarted on his feet, with his piftel fti in his hand; and prefenting it to the 'fquire, fwor with dreadful imprecations, that he would blow him brains out in an inftant. Crabshaw, unwilling the hazard the trial of this experiment, turned his back and fled with great precipitation ; while the robber whofe horfe had run away, mounted Gilbert, and rode off across the country. It was at this period that two footmen belonging to the coach, who had flaid behind to take their morning's whet at an in where they lodged, came up to the affiftance of the ladies, armed with blunderbuffes; and the carriag proceeded, leaving Timothy alone in diffraction and defpair. He knew not which way to turn; and was afraid of remaining on the fpot, left the robbelle fhould come back and revenge themfelves upon him for the difappointment they had undergone. In this diftrefs, the first thought that occurred, was to male the beft of his way to the town, and demand the ale fiftance of the civil magiftrate, towards the retrievil of what he had loft ; a defign which he executed in fuch a manner, as jully entailed upon him the in putation of lunacy.

While Timothy flood fronting the window, and answering the interrogations of his mafter, he fuddenly exclaimed, " Bodikins! there's Gilbert !" and forung into the fireet with incredible agility, There finding his firayed companion brought back by one of the footmen who attended the coach, he imprinted a kifs on his forchead; and hanging about his neck, with the tears in his eyes, hailed his return with the following falutation : " Art thou come back, my darling ! Ab ! Gilbert, Gilbert ! A pize upon thee! Thou hadft like to have been a dear Gilbert to me 1 How couldit thou break the heart of thy old friend, who has known thee from a colt ? Seven years next grafs have I fed thee and bred thee : provided thee with fweet hay, delicate coro, and frefh litter, that thou mought lie warm, dry, and comfortable. Ha'n't I curry combed thy carcafe till it was as fleek as a floe, and cherifhed thee as the apple of mine eye? For all that thou haft played me an hundred dog's tricks; biting, and kicking, and plunging, as if the devil was in thy body; and now thou couldit run away with a thief, and leave me to be flayed alive by my meafter. What canft thou fay for thyfelf, thou cruel, hard-hearted, unchriftian avoad?" To this tender expostulation, which afforded much entertainment to the boys, Gilbert anfwered not one word; but feemed altogether infenfible to the careffes of Timothy, who forth with led him into the ftable. On the whole, he feems to have been an unfocial animal; for it does not appear that ever he contracted any degree of intimacy, even with Bronzomarte, during the whole courte of their acquaintance and fellowship : on the contrary, he has been more than once known to fignify his averfion, by throwing out behind, and other eruptive marks of contempt for that elegant charger, who excelled VOL. L.

him as much in perfonal merit, as his rider Timothy was outfhone by his all-accomplifhed mafter.

While the 'fquire accommodated Gilbert in the flable, the knight fent for the footman who had brought him back ; and having prefereted him with a liberal acknowledgment, defired to know in what manner the horfes had been retrieved.

The franger fatisfied him in this particular, by giving him to underfland, that the highwayman, perceiving himfelf purfued acrofs the country, plied Gibbert fo feverely with whip and fpur, that the animal refented the ufage; and being, befides, perhaps a little fluck with remorfe for having left his old friend Crabbaw, foldenly halted, and flood flock fill, notwithlanding all the flripes and tortures he underwent; or, if he moved at all, it was in a retrograde direction. The thief, feeing all his endeavous ineffectual, and himfelf in danger of being overtaken, wifely quitted his acquifition, and fled into the bofom of a neighbouring wood.

Then the keight enquired about the fituation of the lady in the coach, and officed himfelf as her guard and conductor; but was told that fike was already fairly lodged in the houfe of a gentleman at fome dilance from a her coad. He likewife learned that fike was a perion diffected in her fense, under the care and tuition of wildow lady her relation, and that in a day or two they fhould parfue their journey northward to the place of the tabilitation.

After the footman had been fometime difmified, the knight recollected that he had forgot to afte the name of the perfon to whom he belonged; and began to be unestly about this omifilion, which indeed was more intercelling than he could imagine: for an explanation of this nature woold, in all likelihood; have led to a differenza woold; in all likelihood;

no other than Mifs Aurelia Darnel, who feeing him unexpectedly in fuch an equipage and attitude as he paffed the coach (for his helmet was off) had fereamed with furprife and terror, and fainted away. Neverthelefu, when the recovered from her (woon, the coacealed the real caufe of her agitation, and none of her attendants were acquainted with the perfon of Sir Launcelot.

The circumfusces of the diforder under which afthe was fait to labour, full be revealed in due courte. In the mean time our adventure, though unaccountably afficiled, never dreamed of fuch an occurrence; but being very much fatigued, refolved to indemnify himfelf for the loss of lait night's repole; and this happened to be one of the few things in which Crabhaw felt an ambition to follow his malter's example.

CHAP. IX.

Which may serve to shew, that true Patriotism is of no Party.

THE knight had not enjoyed his repole above wariety of notics as might have dicomposed a brain of the fuelt texture. The rumbing of carriages, and the ratiling of hories feet upon the pavement, were intermingled with load mouts, and the notic of middle, French-horn, and bag-pipe. A load peal was heard ringing in the church tower at fome difmance, while the inn refounded with clamour, confasifion, and uproar.

Sir Launcelot being thus alarmed, ftarted from his bed; and running to the window, beheld a ca-valcade of perfons well mounted, and diffinguifhed by blue cockades. They were generally attired like iockies, with gold-laced hats and buck-fkin breeches: and one of them bore a ftandard of blue filk, inferibed, in white letters, with, " LIBERTY AND THE LANDED INTEREST." He who rode at their head was a jolly figure, of a florid complexion and round belly, feemingly turned of fifty, and, in all appearance, of a choleric difpolition. As they approached the market-place, they waved their hats, huzza'd, and cried aloud, " No FOREIGN CONNECTIONS !- OLD ENG-LAND FOR EVER !" This acclamation, however, was not fo loud or universal, but that our adventurer could diffinctly hear a counter cry from the populace, of " No SLAVERY-No POPISH PRETENDER." An infinuation fo ill-relified by the cavaliers, that they began to ply their horfewhips among the multitude ; and were, in their turn, faluted with a difcharge or volley of ftones, dirt, and dead cats; in confequence of which fome teeth were demolifhed, and many fortouts defiled.

Our adventuer's attention was foon called offfrom this focus to contemplate another proceeding of people on foot, advened with bunches of orange ribbands attended by a regular band of mulic, playing, "God rane great Gorge our ling;" and headed by a thin, fwarthy perionage, of a fallow alpeet and large goggling eyes, arched over with two thick femicircles of hair, or rather brilles, jet black, and froway. His apparel was very gorgeous, though his addrefs was very aukward: he was accompanied by the mayor, recorder, and heads of the corporation, in their formalities. His entiges were known by the infeription, "Libery of Concinence, and the Prostitum Successing;" and the people falted him as he paified with repeated cheres, that feemed to prognoficate by fuccefs. He had particularly ingratiated himfelf with the good women who lined the fireet, and fent forth many ejaculatory petitions in his favour.

Sir Launcelot immediately comprehended the meaning of this folemnity: he perceived it was a prelude to the election of a member to reprefeat the county in parliament: and he was feized with an eager defire to know the names and characters of the competitors.

In order to gratify this defire, he made repeated application to the bell-rope that depended from the ceiling of his apartment; but this produced nothing except the repetition of the words, " Coming, Sir," which echoed from three or four different corners of the houle. The waiters were fo diffracted by a variety of calls, that they flood motionlefs, in the flate of the floodman's als between two bundles of hay, incapable of determining where they floodd firft offer their attendance.

Our knight's patience was almoßt exhaufted, when Grabfhaw entered the room in a very flrange equipage: one half of his face appeared clofe fhaved, and the other covered with lasher, while the blood trickled in two rivules from his nois, upon a barber's cloth that was stucked under his chin; he looked grim with indignation; and, under his left rarn carried his cutlafs untheathed. Where he had acquired fo much of the profellion of knight-errantry, we fhall not pretend to determine; but, certain it is, he fell on his knees before Sir Launcelot, crying, with an accent of grife add diffraction, sti In the name of St George for England, I beg a boon, Sir Knight, and thy compliance I demand, before the peacock and the ladier.

Sir Launcelot, aftonifhed at this addrefs, replied, in a lofty frain, "Valiant 'fquire, thy boon is grant-cd, provided it doth not contravene the laws of thes land, and the conflictuions of chivalry." "Then I crave leave, anfwered Crabhaw, to challenge and defy to mortal combat, that caitif barber, who hath left me in this pitcous condition ; and I vow by the peacock, that I will not thave my beard, until I have thaved his head from his thoulders: Io may I thrive in the occupation of an arrant 'fquire.

I3

Before his malter had time to enquire into particulars, they were joined by a decent man in boots, who was likewife a traveller, and had feen the rife and progress of Timothy's difatter. He gave the knight to underftand that Crabshaw had sent for a barber, and already undergone one half of the operation, when the operator received the long-expected mellage from both the gentleman who flood candidates at the election. The double fummons was no fooner intimated to him, than he threw down his balon, and retired with precipitation, leaving the 'fquire in the fuds. Timothy, incenfed at this defertion, followed him with equal celerity into the ftreet, where he collared the fhaver, and infifted upon being entirely trimmed, on pain of the baftinado. The other finding himfelf thus arrefted, and having no time to fpare for altercation, lifted up his fift, and discharged it upon the fnout of Crabshaw with fuch force, that the unfortunate aggreffor was fain to bite the ground; while the victor haftened away, in hope of teaching the double wages of corruption.

The knight being informed of thefe circumflances, tod Timothys, with a finale, that he fhould have liberty to defy the barber; but, in the mean time, he ordered him to faddle Bronzomarte, and prepare for immediate fervice. While the figurie was thus employed, his malter engaged in convertition with the franger, who hoppend to be a London dealer travelling for orders, and was well acquainted with the particulars which our adventurer wanted to know.

It was from this communicative tradefman he learned that the competitors were Sir Valentine Quickfet and Mr Ifaac Vanderpelft; the first a mere fox-hunter, who depended for fuccefs in this election upon his interest among the high-flying gentry; the other a flock-jobber and contractor, of foreign extract, not without a mixture of Hebrew blood, immenfely rich, who was countenanced by his Grace of , and fuppofed to have diffributed large fums in fecuring a majority of votes among the yeomanry of the county poffeffed of fmall freeholds, and copyholders, a great number of which laft refided in this borough. He faid these were generally diffenters and weavers; and that the mayor, who was himfelf a manufacturer, had received a very confiderable order for exportation ; in confequence of which it was believed he would fupport Mr Vanderpelft with all his influence and credit.

Sir Launcelot, rouzed at this intelligence, called for his armour; which being buckled on in a hurry, he mounted his fleed, attended by Crabflaw on Gilbert, and rode immediately into the midfl of the multitude by which the huftings were furrounded, juid as Sir Valentine Quickfet began to harangue the people from an occafional theatre formed of a plank dupported by the upper-board of the public flocks: and an inferior rib of a wooden cage, pitched allo for the accommodation of petty delinquent.

Though the fingular appearance of Sir Launcelot at first attracted the eyes of all the spectators, yet they did not fail to yield attention to the speech of his brother knight, Sir Valentine, which ran in the following strain: "Gentlemen weehoulders of this here cosmy, I flant' pretend to meake a vine vlourishing speech .- I'm a plain spoken man, as you all know. I hope I shall always speak my maind with-out year or vayour, as the zaying is. 'Tis the way of the Quickfets-we are no upftarts, nor vorreigners, nor have we any Jewish blood in our veins-we have lived in this here neighbourhood time out of maind, as you all know : and poffels an effate of vive thoufand clear, which we fpend at whoam, among you, in old English hospitality-All my vorevathers have been parliament-men, and I can prove that ne'er a one o'um gave a fingle vote for the court fince the Revolution. Vor my own peart, I value not the miniftry three fkips of a loufe, as the zaying is-I ne'es knew but one minister that was an honeft man; and vor all the reft I care not if they were hanged as high as Haman, with a pox to'un-I am, thank God, a vreeborn, true-hearted Englishman, and a loyal, thof unworthy, fon of the church-vor all they have done vor H-----r, I'd fain know what they have done vor the church, with a vengeance -- vor my own peart, I hate all vorreigners, and vorreign meafurcs, whereby this poor nation is broken-backed with a difmal load of debt; and taxes rife fo high that the poor cannot get bread. Gentlemen vreehoulders of this county, I value no minister a vig's end, d'ye fee; if you will vavour me with your votes and intereft, whereby I may be returned, I'll engage one half of my effate that I never cry yea to your fhillings in the pound, but will crofs the minifter in every thing, as in duty bound, and as becomes an boneft vreeholder in the ould intereft-but, if you fell your votes and your country vor hire, you will be detefted in this here world, and damned in the next to all eternity; fo I leave every man to his own confeience."

This eloquent oration was received by his own friends with load peals of applaufe; which, however, did not difcourage his competitor, who, confident of his own ftrength, alcended the roftrum, or, in other words, an old cafk fet upright for the purpofe. Having bowed all round to the audience with a imile of gentle condescension, he told them how ambitious he was of the honour to reprefent this county in parliament; and how happy he found himfelf in the encouragement of his friends, who had fo unanimoully agreed to fupport his pretentions. He faid, over and above the qualification he poffeffed among them, he had fourfcore thousand pounds in his pocket, which he had acquired by commerce, the fupport of the nation, under the prefent happy eftablishment, in defence of which he was ready to fpend the laft farthing. He owned himfelf a faithful fubject to his majefty King George, fincerely attached to the Proteflant fuccefsion, in detestation and defiance of a Popish, an abjured, an out-lawed pretender : and declared that he would exhault his fubstance, and his blood, if neceffary, in maintaining the principles of the glorious Revolution. " This (cried he) is the folid balis and foundation upon which I ftand."

Thefe fail words had fearce proceeded from his mouth, when the head of the barrel or puncheon on which he flood, being frail and initrm, gave way; fo that down he went with a crafth, and in a twinkling difappeard from the eyes of the altonithed beholders. The fox-hunters perceiving his difailer, exclaimed, in the phrafe and accent of the chace, "Stole away! Role away!" and, with hideous vociferation, joined in the folyan chorus which the hunters halloo when the hounds are at fault.

The dilafter of Mr Vanderpelft was foon repaired by the affiduity of his friends, who difengaged him from the barrel in a trice, holfted him on the fhoulders of four fitong weavers; and refenting the unmannerly exultation of their antagonift, began to form themfelves in order of battle.

An obflinate fray would have undoubtedly enfued, had not their mutual indignation given way to their curiofity, at the motion of our knight, who had advanced in the middle between the two fronts: and waving his hand, as a fignal for them to give attention, addreffed himfelf to them with graceful demeanor, in these words : " Countrymen, friends, and fellow-citizens, you are this day affembled to determine a point of the utmost confequence to yourfelves and your pofterity; a point that ought to he determined by far other weapons than brutal force and factious clamour. You, the freemen of England, are the balis of that excellent conflictution, which hath long flourished the object of envy and admiration. To you belongs the ineftimable privilege of chooling a delegate properly qualified to reprefent you in the high court of parliament. This is your birth right, inherited from your anceftors, obtained by their courage, and fealed with their blood. It is not only your birth-right, which you fhould maintain in defiance of all danger, but alfo a facred truft, to be executed with the moft fcrupulous care and fidelity. The perfon whom you truft ought not only to be endued with the most inflexible integrity, but should likewife poffefs a fund of knowledge that may enable him to act as a part of the legiflature. He must be well acquainted with the hiftory, the conflication, and the laws of his country ; he must understand the forms of bufinefs, the extent of the royal prerogative, the privilege of parliament, the detail of government, the nature and regulation of the finances, the different branches of commerce, the politics that prevail, and the connexions that fubfilt among the different powers of Europe ; for on all these subjects the diliberations of a Houfe of Commons occasionally turn : but thefe great purposes will never be answered by electing an illiterate favage, fcarce qualified, in point of underflanding, to act as a country justice of peace; a man who has fcarce ever travelled beyond the excurfions of a fox-chafe : whole convertation never rambles farther than his ftable, his kennel, and his barnyard ; who rejects decorum as degeneracy ; miftakes rufficity for independence; afcertains his courage by leaping over gates and ditches, and founds his triumph on feats of drinking ; who holds his eftate by a factious tenure ; professes himself the blind flave of a party, without knowing the principles that gave it birth, or the motives by which it is acsuated; and thinks that all patriotifm confilts in railing indifcriminately at ministers, and obstinately oppoling every meafure of the administration. Such man, with no evil intentions of his own, might be uled as a dangerous tool in the hands of a desperate faction, by fcattering the feeds of diffaffection, emparrafling the wheels of government, and reducing the whole kingdom to anarchy."

Here the knight was interrupted by the fhouts and acclamations of the Vanderpelfites, who cried doud, "Hear him! hear him! Long life to the ironvafed orator." This clamour fubfiding, he profecued his harangue to the following effect.

••• Such a man as I have deficited may be dangefsus from ignorance; bat is neither fo milchievous ior fo detellable as the wretch who knowingly berays his truß, and fues to be the hireling and protitute of a weak and workhlefs miniter; a fordid tase, without honour or principle; who belongs to io family, whole example can reproach him with regeneracy; who has no country to command his refpect, no friends to engage his affection, no religion to regulate his morals, no conference to reflrain his inigiaity, and who workings no god but Mammon. An infinuating mifereaus, who undertakes for the diriteft work of the vielf a daminitarian (a who practifes national ufury, receiving by wholefale the rewards of venality, and diffributing the wages of corruption by retail.<sup>20</sup>

"When fuen a caitiff prefents himfelf to you, like the devil, with a temptation in his hand, avoid him as if he were in fact the devil-it is not the offering of difinterested love : for what should induce him, who has no affections, to love you, to whole perfons he is an utter ftranger ? Alas! it is not a benevolence, but a bribe. He wants to buy you at one market, that he may fell you at another. Without doubt, his intentions is to make an advantage of his purchafe ; and this aim he cannot accomplifh, but by facrificing, in fome fort, your intereft your independency, to the wicked defigns of a minister, as he cam expect no gratification for the faithful discharge of his duty. But, even if he fhould not find an opportunity of felling you to advantage, the crime, the fhame, the infamy, will fill be the fame in you, who, bafer than the moft abandoned profitutes, have fold yourse felves and your posterity for hire-for a paltry price, to be refunded with intereft by fome minifter, who will indemnify himfelf out of your own pockets : for, after all, you are bought and fold with your own money-the miferable pittance you may now receive

Is no more than a pitcher full of water thrown in to modifien the facker of that pump which will drain you to the bottom. Let me therefore adviled and exhort you, my comityming, to avoid the oppolite extremes of the ignorant clown and the defiguing courtier; and chufe a man of honefly, intelligence, and moderation, who will—"

The doctrine of moleration was a very unpopular dubjeć in fuch an affembly; and accordingly they weicked it as one man. They began to think the diffranger wanted to fet up for him/elf; a fuppofition what could not fail to incenfe both fides equally, as they were both scaloully engaged in their refpective causes. The whigs and the tories joined again this intruder, who being neither, was treated like a monstler, or chimmar in politics. They hiled, they hooted, and they hallooed; they amonged him with milliles of dirt, fitcks, and thouse; they enfect they threatened, and reviled, till at length his patience was exstandird.

"Ungrateful and abandoned milfereants! (he cried) I fooke to you as men and Christians, as treeboth Britons and fellow-civizens; but I perceive you are a pack of venal, infamous focuadrels, and I will treat you accordingly." So faying, he benatilited his lance; and riding into the thickeff of the concourfe, laid about him with fuch dexterity and effect, that the multitude was immediately difperfed, and he preired without farther molectation.

The fame good fortune did not attend 'lquire Ortoblaw in his retreat. The ludicross fingularity of his features and the hall-mown crop of hair that obritted from one lide of his constreamer, invited fome wags to make metry at his expense. One of them chapped a furze buch under the tail of Gibbert; who, Yot, I.

feeling himfelf thus filmulated a poteriori, kickee, and lunged, and espered, in fuch a manner, tha Timothy could hardly keep the faddle. In this con motion he loft his cap and his perwig; while th rabble pelted him in fuch a manner, that, before hi could join his mafter, he looked like a pillar, or ra ther a pillory of mud.

CHAP. X.

Which she weth that he who plays at Bowls will some times meet with Rubbers.

S RE Launcelot, boiling with indignation at the had harangued to fo little purpole, retired with the molt deliberate difdain towards one of the gates o. the town, on the outfide of which his curiofity wan attracted by a concourfe of people, in the midt o. whom flood Mr Ferret, mounted upon a flood, with a kind of fatchel hanging round his neck, and a phia difplayed in his right hand, while he held forth to the audience in a very vertement flrais of elocation.

Crabfhaw thought himfelf happily delivered when he reached the fuburbs, and proceeded without halting; but his mafter mingled with the crowd, and heard the orator express himfelf to this effect.

"Very likely, you may undervalue me and myr medicine, becaufe I don't apperar upon a lage of rotten boards, in a fhabby veleet coat and tye-periwig, with a foolifit fellow in a motely coat, to make you laugh by making wry faces; but I foorn to ule thefe dirty arts for engaging your attention. Thefe paltry tricks, ad captandum walger, can hwe no effect but on ideots; and if you are ideott, I don't defire a you fixed be my cufformers. Take notics; I don'ts

address you in the flyle of a mountebank, or a High German Doctor; and yet the kingdom is full of mountebanks, empyrics, and quacks. We have quacks in religion, quacks in physic, quacks in law, quacks in politics, quacks in patriotifm, quacks in government ; High German quacks, that have bliftered, fweated, bled, and purged the nation into an atrophy. But this is not all; they have not only evacuated her into a confumption, but they have intoxicated her brain until file is become delirious; fhe can no longer purfue her own intereft, or, indeed, rightly diffinguish it : like the people of Nineveh, the can hardly tell her right-hand from her left; but, as a changeling, is dazzled and delighted by an ignis fatuus, a Will o' the Wife, an exhalation from the vileft materials in nature, that leads her aftray through Weftphakan bogs and deferts, and will one day break her neck over fome barren rocks, or leave her flicking in fome H____n pit or quagmire. For my part, if you have a mind to betray your country, I have no objection. In felling yourfelves and your fellow-citizens, you only dispole of a pack of rafcals who deferve to be fold-If you fell one another, why fhould not I fell this here elixir of long life, which, if properly ufed, will protract your days till you shall have feen your country ruined ? I shall not pretend to difturb your underftandings, which are none of the ftrongeft, with a botch potch of unintelligible terms, fuch as Ariftotle's four principles of generation, unformed matter, privation, efficient and tinal caufes. Ariftotle was a pedantic blockhead, and still more knave than fool. The fame cenfure we may fafely put on that wife-acre Diofcorides, with his faculties of fimples, his leminal, specific, and prinpal virtues; and that crazy commentator Galen, K 2 with his four elements, elementary qualities, his eigh complexions, his harmonics and diffords. Nor fhat I expatiate on the alkaheft of that foundrel Paracel fus, with which he pretended to reduce flints into falt; nor the archaus, or spiritus rector, of that vision ary Van Helmont, his fimple, elementary water, hi gas, ferments, and transmutations; por shall I enlarge upon the falt, fulphur, and oil, the acidum wagum, the mercury of metals, and the volatilized vitriol of other modern chymifts; a pack of ignorant, conceited knavifh rafcals, that puzzle your weak heads with fuch jargon, just as a Germanized m-r throws duft in your eyes, by lugging in and ringing the changes on the balance of power, the protestant religion, and your allies on the continent; acting like the juggler, who picks your pockets, while he dazzlea your eyes, and amufes your fancy with twirling his fingers, and reciting the gibberifh of bocus pocus; for, in fact, the balance of power is a mere chimera: as for the protestant religion, nobody gives himfelf any trouble about it; and allies on the continent we have none, or at leaft none that would raife an hundied men to fave us from perdition, unlefs we paid an extravagant price for their affiltance. But to return to this here elixir of long life; I might embellith it with a great many high-fourding epithets; but I difdain to fellow the example of every illiterate vagabond, that from idlencis turns quack, and advertifes his nostrum in the public papers. I am neither a felonious dry-falter returned from exile, an hofpital flump-turner, a decayed flay-maker, a bankrupt printer, or infolvent debtor releafed by act of parliament. I did not pretend to administer medicines without the leaft tincture of letters, or fuborn wretches to periure themfelves in falfe affidavits of cures that were never performed; nor employ a let of led-captains to harangue in my praife at all public places. I was bred regularly to the profession of chymiltry, and have tried all the proceffes of alchymy; and I may venture to fay, that this bere elixir is, in fact, the hebruseon pepuromenon ek puros, the vifible, glorious, fpiritual body, from whence all other beings derive their existence, as proceeding from their father the fun, and their mother the moon; from the fun, as from a living and fpiritual gold, which is mere fire; confequently, the common and universal firft-created mover, from whence all moveable things have their diffinct and particular motions; and alfo from the moon, as from the wife of the fun, and the common mother of all fublunary things: and forafmuch as man is, and muft be the comprehenfive end of all creatures, and the microcofm, he is counfelled in the Revelations to buy gold that is thoroughly fired, or rather pure fire, that he may become rich, and like the fun ; as. on the contrary, he becomes poor when he abules the arfenical poifon; fo that his filver, by the fire, must be calcined to a caput mortuum, which happens when he will hold and retain the menftruum, out of which he partly exifts, for his own property, and doth not daily offer up the fame in the fire of the funthat the women may be clothed with the fun, and become a fun, and thereby rule over the moon; that is to fay, that he may get the moon under his feet. Now this here elixir, fold for no more than fixpence a phial, contains the effence of the alkaheft, the archæus, the catholicon, the menstruum, the fun, moon; and, to fum up all in one word, is the true, genuine, unadulterated, unchangeable, immaculate, and specific chruseon pepuromenon ek puros,"

III

The audience were varioufly affected by this learnnied oration. Some of those who favoured the preterflows of the whig candidate, were of opinion that he ought to be pundhed for his perfumption in reflecting fo fourriloufly on minifers and meafores. Of this feutiment was our adventurer; though he could not help admiring the courage of the orator, and owning within binfelf that he had mixed fome melancholy truths with his fourrility.

K 3

Mr Ferret would not have flood fo long in his roftrum unmolefted, had not he cunningly chofen his flation immediately without the jurifdiction of the town, whole magistrates therefore could not take cognizance of his conduct: but application was made to the conftable of the other parish, while our noftrum-monger proceeded in his fpeech, the conclufion of which produced fuch an effect upon his hearers, that his whole cargo was immediately exhaufted. He had just stepped down from his stool, when the conftable, with his ftaff, arrived, and took him under his guidance. Mr Ferret on this occasion attempted to intereft the people in his behalf, by exhorting them to vindicate the liberty of the fubject againft fuch an act of oppreffion ; but finding them deaf to the tropes and figures of his elocution, he addreffed himfelf to our knight, reminding him of his duty to protect the helplefs and the injured, and earneftly foliciting his interpolition.

Sir Laurcelor, without making the leaft reply to his entreates, refolved to lee the end of this adventure; and, being joined by his 'fquire, followed the priloner at a dilance, measuring back the ground he had travelled the day before, until he reached another fmall borough, where Ferret was houled in the common prilon.

While he fat a-horfeback, deliberating on the next flep he fhould take, he was accofted by the voice of Tom Clarke; who called, in a whimpering tone, thro'

a window grated with iron, "For the lowe of God, Sir Launcelot! do. dear Sir, be fo good as take the trouble to alight and come up flairs—I have fomething to communicate of confequence to the community in general, and you in particular—Pray do, dear Sir Knipht. I beg a boon in the name of St Michael and St Goroge for England."

Our adventurer, not a little furprised at this addrefs, difmounted without belitation, and being admitted to the common gaol, there found not only his old friend Tom, but also the uncle, fitting on a bench with a woollen night cap on his head, and a pair of fpectacles on his note, reading very earneftly in a book, which he afterwards underftood was intituled, " The Life and Adventures of Valentine and Orfon." The captain no fooner faw his great pattern enter, than he arole and received him with the falutation of "What cheer, brother ?" and before the knight could answer, added these words : " You see how the land lies-here have Tom and I been fast ashore thefe four-and-twenty hours; and this berth we have got by attempting to tow your galley, brother, from the enemy's harbour. Adds bobbs ! if we had this here fellow whorefon for a confort, with all our tackle in order, brother, we'd foon fhew 'em the topfail, flip our cable, and down with their barricadoes. But howfomever, it don't fignify talking-patience is a good ftream-anchor, and will hold, as the faying isbut, damn my-as for the matter of my bol fprit .--Hearkye, hearkye, brother, damn'd hard to engage with three at a time, one upon my bow, one upon my quarter, and one right a-head, rubbing and drubbing, lying athwart hawfe, raking fore and aft, battering and grappling, and lafhing and claffing-adds heart, brother; crash went the boltsprit-down came the round top-up with the dead lights-I faw no. thing but the flars at noon, loft the helm of my feven fenfes, and down I broached upon my broadfide."

As Mr Clarke rightly conceived that his uncle would need an interpreter, he began to explain thefe hints by giving a circumfantial detail of his own and the captain's difafter.

He told Sir Launcelot, that notwithftanding all his perfuation and remonstrances, Captain Crowe infifted upon appearing in the character of a knight-errant ; and with that view had fet out from the publichouse on the morning that fucceeded his vigil in the church ; that upon the highway they had met with a coach, containing two ladies, one of whom feemed to be under great agitation : for, as they paffed, fhe ftruggled with the other, thruft out her head at the window, and faid fomething which he could not diftinctly hear; that Captain Clowe was flouck with admiration at her unequalled beauty; and he ('Tom), no fooner informed him who fhe was, than he refoleed to fet her at liberty, on the fuppofition that fhe was under reftraint, and in diffres ; that he accordingly unfheathed his cutlafs, and riding after the coach, commanded the driver to bring to, on pain of death: that one of the fervants believing the captain to be an highwayman, prefented a blunderbufs, and in all probability would have fhot him on the fpot, had not he (the nephew) rode up, and affured them the gentleman was non compos; that, notwithflanding his intimation, all the three attacked him with the butt ends of their horfe-whips, while the coach drove on; and although he laid about him with great fury, at laft brought him to the ground by a ftroke on the temple ; that Mr Clarke himfelf then interpofed in defence of his kiniman, and was also feverely beaten; that two of the fervants, having applied to a juffice of the peace refiding near the field of battle, he had granted a warrant, against the captain and his nephew, and, without examination, committed them as idle vagrants, after having feized their horfes and their money, on pretence of their being fulpected for highwaymen. " Bot, as there was no just caufe of fuspicion, added he, I am of opinion, the justice is guilty of a trefpafa, and may be fued for falsum imprisonamentum, and confiderable damages obtained ; for you will pleafe to obferve, Sir, no justice has a right to commit any perfon till after due examination ; befides, we were not committed for an affault and battery; audita querela, nor as wandering lunatics by the flatute; who, to be fure, may be apprehended by a juffice's warrant, and locked up, and chained, if neceffary, or be fent to their laft legal fettlement ; but we were committed as vagrants and fu-Spected highwaymen. Now we do not fall under the defcription of vagrants; nor did any circumftance appear to fupport the fulpicion of robbery : for, to conflitute robbery, there must be fomething taken : but here nothing was taken but blows, and they were upon compulsion. Even an attempt to rob, without any taking, is not felony, but a mildemeanor. To be fure, there is a taking in deed and a taking in aw : but ftill the robber muft be in poffeffion of a hing ftolen; and we only attempted to fteal ourfelves away-My uncle, indeed, would have releafed the young lady vi et armis, had his ftrength been equal to his inclination ; and in fo doing, I would have willingly lene my affiftance, both from a defire to erve fuch a beautiful young creature, and also in regard to your honour, for I thought I heard her call apon your name.

"Ha! how! what! whole name? fay, fpeakneaven and earth!" (cried the knight, with marks of the most violent emotion.) Clarke, terrified at

When Tom told him that the coach guitted the poft-road, and ftruck away to the right at full fpeed, Sir Launcelot was feized with a penfive fit; his head funk upon his breaft, and he mufed in filence for feveral minutes, with the most melancholy expression on his countenance ; then recollecting himfelf, he affumed a more composed and chearful air, and afked feveral queftions with respect to the arms on the coach, and the liveries worn by the fervants. It was in the courfe of this interrogation, that he difcovered he had actually converfed with one of the footmen who had brought back Crabshaw's herfe ; a circumflance that filled him with anxiety and chagrin, as he had omitted to enquire the name of his mafter, and the place to which the coach was travelling ; though, in all probability, had he made thefe enquiries, he would have received very little fatisfaction. there being reafon to think the fervants were enjoined fecrecy.

The knight, in order to meditate on this unexpected adventure, fat down by his old friend, and entered into a reverie, which lafted about a quatter of an hour, and might have continued longer, had it not been interrupted by the voice of Crabhaw; who bawled aloud, "Look to it, my makeri-as you brew you mult drink--this fhall be a dear day's work to fome of you; for my part, I fay nothing-the braying afe eats a little grafa--one barber fhaves not fo clofe, but another finds a few flubble--you wanted to catch a capon, and you've flole a cat-he that takes up his lodgings in a flable, mult be contende to lie upon litter."

The knight, defirous of knowing the caufe that prompted Timothy to apothegmatize in this manner, looked through the grate, and perceived the 'fquire fairly fet in the flocks, furrounded by a mob of people. When he called to him, and asked the reason of this difgraceful reftraint, Crabshaw replied, " There's no cake, but there's another of the fame make-who never climbed, never fell-after clouds comes clear weather. 'Tis all along of your honour I've met with this preferment : no defervings of my pwn, but the intereft of my mafter. Sir Knight, if you will flay the juffice, hang the conftable, releafe your quire, and burn the town, your name will be famous in ftory; but if you are content, I am thankful. Two hours are foon fpent in fuch good company. In the mean time, look to'un, gaoler, there's a frog in the flocks."

Sir Launcelot, incenfed at this affront offered to ins fervan, advanced to the prifon dowr, but found t fat locked; and when he called to the turnkey, we was given to underfland that he himfelf was priorer. Enraged at this intimation, he demanded at whole fuit; and was anfwered through the wicket, e At the fuit of the king, in whole name I will hold you fall, with God's affilmace.<sup>37</sup>

The knight's looks now began to lighten, he rolled his egres around, and fnatchine up an oaken hench, which three ordinary men could (zorce have lifted from the ground, he, in all likelihood, would have flattered the door in pieces, had not he bern redrained by the interpolition of Mr Clarke, who entreated him to have a little patience, all ring him he would funger! a plan that would avenge him lef amply on the julice, without any breach of the peace. " I far, the julice (alded Toms) breaute it mult be his dong. He is a little petulant fort of a fellow, ignoration of the law, guilty of numberlef in regularties; and, if properly managed, may, for this here set) of any there y not only cell in a (swinging fum, but even turned out of the commified with digrate."

This was a very facionable kint; in confequence of which the bench was foitly replaced, and Captan Crowe deposited the poker, with which he had arms et himidi to lecond the efforts of Sir Launcelot. They now, for the first time, perceived that Ferret had dilappeared; and, upon enquiry, found that he was in fact the occation of the knight's detention and the 'fquire's diffrace.

CHAP. XI.

Description of a modern Magistrate.

BEFORE the knight would take any refolution for extricating himfelf from his prefeat embarradiment, he defired to be better acquainted with the character and circumflances of the jultice by whom we he had been confined, and likewite to underthand the meaning of his own detention. To be informed in this laft particular, he renewed his dialogue with the turnkey; who told him through the grate, that Force to foorer perceived him in the gaol, without his offculve-arms, which he had left below, than he defined to be sorried before the juffice, where he had given information againt the knight, as a violator of the public-peace, who fitrolled about the country with unlawful arms, rendering the highways unfafe, encreaching upon the freedom of relefines, putting his majefty's liege fubjects in fear of their lives, an', in all probability, harbouring more dangerous defigns under an affected cloak of lumary. Ferret, upon this information, had been releafed and entertained as an evidence for the king ; and Crabfhaw was put into the focks, as an idle broller.

<sup>6</sup> Sir Launcelot being failand in thefe particulars, addreffed himfelf to his fellow prifoners, and begged they would communicate what they knew refpecting the worthy magiltrate, who had been fo premature in the execution of his office. This request was no foner fignified, than a crew of naked wretches crowded around him; and, like a congregation of rooks, opened their throats all at once, in accufation of Jultice Gobble. The knight was moved at this feene, which he could not help comparing, in his own mind, to what would appear upon a mach more awful occafion, when the crise of the widow and the orphan, the injured and opprefied, would be uttered at the tribunal of an unerring Judge, againt the villanous and infolent authors of their calamity.

When he had, with fome difficulty, quieted their clamours, and confined his interrogation to one perfono of a tolerably decent appearancy, he learned that Juftice Gobble, whole father was a tailor, had for fome time ferved as a journeyman holier in London, where he had picked up fome law terms, by converting with hackney-writers and attorneys clerks of the Vot. 1.

loweft order; that, upon the death of his mafter, he had infinuated himfelf into the good graces of the widow, who took him for her hufband : fo that her became a perfon of fome confideration, and faved money apace; that his pride increating with his fubftance, was reinforced by the vanity of his wife, who perfuaded him to retire from bufinefs, that they might live genteelly in the country ; that his father dying, and leaving a couple of houfes in this town, Mr Gobble had come down with his lady to take poffeffion, and liked the place fo well, as to make a more confiderable purchase in the neighbourhood ; that a certain peer being indebted to him in the large way of his bufinefs, and either unwilling, or unable to pay the money, had compounded the debt, by inferting his name in the commission ; fince which peried, his own infolence, and his wife's oftentation, had exceeded all bounds; that, in the exertion of his authority, he had committed a thoufand acts of cruelty and injuffice against the poorer fort of people, who were unable to call him to a proper account; that his wife domineered with a more ridiculous, though lefs pernicious ufurpation, among the females of the place ; that, in a word, fhe was the fubject of continual mirth, and he the object of universal deteftation.

Our adventurer, though extremely well difforde to believe what was faid to the prejudice of Gobble, would not give entire credit to this defeription, with out firlt enquiring into the particulars of his conduct. If the therefore atked the fpeaker, what was the caute of his particular compaint. "For my own part, (faid he) I lived in repute, and kept a hhop in this here town, well furnified with a great variety of articles. All the people in the place were my outarticles. All the people in the place were my outformers but what I and many others chiefly depena led upon, was the extraordinary fale at two annual uftomary fairs, to which all the country people in the neighbourhood reforted to lay out their money. I had employed all my flock, and even engaged my credit, to procure a large affortment of goods for Lammas Market; but having given my fote, in the election of a veftry-clerk, contrary to the interest of Justice Gobble, he refolved to work ny ruin. He suppressed the annual fairs, by which great many people, efpecially publicans, earned the welt part of their fubliftence. The country people reforted to another town. I was overflocked with load of parishable commodities; and found myfelf reprived of the beft part of my home-cultomers by he ill-nature and revenge of the juffice, who employd all his influence among the common people, makng use of threats and promises, to make them defert by fhop, and give their cuftom to another perfon, whom he fettled in the fame bufinels under my nofe. Being thus difabled from making punctual payments, by commodities fpoiling, and my wife breaking her eart, I grew negligeot and carelefs, took to drinkag, and my affairs went to wreck. Being one day In liquor, and provoked by the fleers and taunts of he man who had fet up against me, I ftruck him at is own door; upon which I was carried before the affice, who treated me with fuch infolence, that I ecame desperate, and not only abused him in the Recution of his office, but also made an attempt to y violent hands upon his perfon. You know, Sir. then a man is both drunk and desperate, he cannot fuppofed to have any command of himfelf. I as fent hither to gaol. My creditors immediately ized my effects; and, as they were not fufficient discharge my debts, a statute of bankruptcy was L2 taken out againft me; fo that here I muft lie until they think proper to fign my certificate, or the parliament thall pleafe to pafs an act for the relief of infolvant debtors,"

The next perfon that prefented himfelf in the crowd of accufers was a meagre figure, with a green apron; who told the knight that he had kept a public-houfe in town for a dozen years, and enjoyed a good trade ; which was, in a great measure, owing to a skittle ground, in which the best people of the place diverted themfelves occafionally ; that Juffice Gobble being difobliged at his refuting to part with a gelding which he had bred for his own use, first of all that up the fkittle ground ; but finding the publican ttill kept his house open, he took care that he should be deprived of his licence, on pretence that the number of ale-houfes was too great, and that this man had been bred to another employment. The poor publican, being thus deprived of his bread, was obliged to try the flay-making bufinefs, to which he had ferved an apprenticeship; but being very ill qualified for this profession, he foon seil to decay, and contracted debts; in confequence of which he was now in prifon, where he had no other fupport but what arole from the labour of his wife, who had gone to fervice.

The next perfon who preferred his complaint againft the unrightenus judge was a poacher, at whole prachices Jultice Gobble had for lone years connived, for as even to: fercen him from punihment, in confideration of being fupplied with game gratist, till at length he was difapointed by accident. His lady had invited guetts to an entertainment, and helpoke a hare, which the poacher undertook to furnish. He laid his fnares accordingly over night, but they were difcovered and taken away by solved by descand of the gentleman to whom the ground belonged. All the executes the poacher could make proved ineffectual in appealing the refeatment of the julice and his wife at being thus difeoncerted. Meafures were taken to detect the delinquent in the exercife of his illicit occupation; he was committed to fafe cuftody; and his wife, with five bantlings, was pafied to her hufband's fettlement in a different part of the country.

A flour, fquat fellow, ratiling with chains, had juft taken up the ball of accufation, when Sir Launtechot was flartled with the appearance of a woman, whole looks and equipage indicated the moß pitcons utilitrefs. She feemed to be turned of the middle age, was of a lofty carriage, tall, thin, weather-beaten, and wetchedly attired; her eyes were inflamed with weeping, and her looks diplayed that wildnefs and peculiarity which denote difraction. Advancing to Sir Launeclot, fle fell upon her knees; and elaping her hands together, uttered the following rhapfody, piu the moß vehement tone of affliction.

<sup>10</sup> Thrice potent, generous, and auguft emperor, here let my kness cleave to the carth, until thou fhalt do me juftice on that inhuman caitiff Gobble. Let him difgorge my fubliance which he hath devoured; let him reflort to my wildowed arms my child, my boy, the delight of my eyes, the prop of my life, the thaf of my Unfeance, whom he hath com from my embrace, fuolen, betrayed, fent into captivity, and murdered '-Behold thefe bleeding wounds upon his lovely breaf! See how they mangle hislifiels corfe! Hororel give me my child, barbarias 1 his head fhall le upon his Suky's bofom—fhe will embalm him with her tear.— Hal pluoge inim in the deep! fhall my boy then float in a watery tomb !-----Jufice, moît mighty emperor ! jufice upon the villan who hath ruined as all !---May Heaven's dreadful vengeance overtake him ! May the keen form of adverfity fittip him of all his leaves and fruit. May peace forfake his mind, and reft he banifhed from his pillow; fo that all his days flul he filled with reproach and forrow, and all his nights be haunted with horror and remorfel. May he be flung by jealouly without caufe, and maddened by revenge without the means of execution ! May all his offippring be blighted and confured, like the mildewed ears of corn, except one, that fhall grow up to curfe his old age, and bring his hoary head with forrow to the grave, as he himfelf has proved a curfe to me and mine !"

L3

THE ADVENTUR . ...

ġ,

ĥò

117

The refl of the prifoners, perceiving the knight extremely "hocked at her milery and horid imprecations, removed her by force from his prefence, and conveyed her to another room; while our adventurer underwent a violent agritation, and could not, for fome minutes, compole himfelf fo wells: to enquire into the nature of this wetched creature's columity.

The flopkeeper, of whom he demanded this fatifaction, gave him to underfland that flow was hore a gentlewoman, and had been well educated; that flo married a curate, who did not long furvice has nuprials; and afterwards became the wife of one Oakley, a farmer in opulent circumflances; that, after twenty years cohabitation with her hubband, he fulfained fuch loffers by the difference ramong the cattle, as he could not repair, and that this reverfe of fortune was fuppoled to have haltened his death; that the widow being a woman of fpirit, determined to keep up and manage the farm, with the afiliance of an only fon, a very promising youth, who was already contracted in muringe with the daughter of another wealthy farmer. Thus the mother had a prospect of retrieving the affairs of her family, when all her hopes were dashed and destroyed by a ridiculous pique which Mrs Gobble conceived against the young farmer's fweet-heart, Mrs Sufan Sedgemore. This young woman chancing to be at a country affembly, where the grave-digger of the parifh acted as malter of the ceremonies, was called out to dance before Mils Gobble, who happened to be there prefent alfo with her mother. The circumstance was construed into an unpardonable affront by the juffice's lady, who abufed the director in the molt opprobrious terms for his infolence and ill-manners; and, retiring in a form of paffion, vowed revenge against the faucy minx who had prefumed to vie in gentility with Mils Gobble. The juffice entered into her refentment. The grave-digger loft his place; and Suky's lover, young Oakley, was preffed for a foldier. Before his mother could take any fteps for his discharge, he was hurried away to the East Indies, by the industry and contrivance of the jultice. Poor Suky wept and pined until the fell into a confumption. The torlorn widow, being thus deprived of her fon, was overwhelmed with grief to fuch a degree, that fhe could no longer manage her concerns. Every thing went backward; the ran in arrears with her landlord: and the prospect of bankruptcy aggravated her affliction. while it added to her incapacity. In the midft of these difattrous circumftances, n. ws arrived that her fon Greaves had loft his life in a fea-engagement with the enemy; and thefe tidings almost instantly deprived her of reation. Then the landlord feized for his rent, and the was arrefted at the fuit of Jultice Gobble, who had bought up one of her debts in order to diffress her, and now pretended that her madpels was feigned.

When the name of Greaves was mentioned, our adventurer flarted and changed colour : and, now the ftory was ended, afked, with marks of eager emotion. if the name of the women's first husband was not Wilford. When the prifoner answered in the affirmative, he rofe up, and firiking his breaft, " Good Heaven ! (cried he) the very women who watched over my infancy, and even nourifhed me with her milk her - She was my mother's humble friend .- Alas! poor Dorothy! how would your old miftrefs grieve to fee her favourite in this miferable condition !" While he pronounced thefe words, to the aftonifhment of the hearers, a tear ftole foftly down each check. Then he defired to know if the poor lunatic had any intervals of reafon ; and was given to underftand that fhe was always quiet, and generally fuppofed to have the ule of her fenfes, except when the was dilturbed by fome extraordinary noife, or when any perfon touched upon her misfortune, or mentioned the name of her oppreffor ; in all which cafes fhe flarted out into extravagance and frenzy. They likewife imputed great part of the diforder to the want of quiet, proper food, and neceffaries, with which the was but poorly fupplied by the cold hand of chance-charity. Our adventurer was exceedingly affected by the diftrefs of this woman, whom he refolved to relieve: and in proportion as his commiferation was excited, his refentment arole against the milcreant, who feemed to have infinuated himfelf into the commiffion of the peace on purpole to harrafs and opprefs his fellow.

Thus animated, he entered into confultation with Mr Thomas Clarke concerning the fleps he@fhould take, firft for their deliverance; and then for profeenting and punifhing the juffice. In refult of this conference, the knight called aloud for the galers and demanded to fee a copy of his commitment, that be might know the carf of his impriforment, and offer bail; or, in cafe that he fhould be refuted, move for a writ of Habeas Corpus. The gaoler told him he copy of the writ fhould be forthcoming ; but stire he had waited for fome time, and repared the demand before winciffes, it was not yet produced. Mr Clarke then, in a folern tone, gave the gaoler to undertand, that an officer refuting to deliver a strue copy of the commitment-warrant, was liable to the forier ture of one hundred pounds for the first diffence, and for the fecond to a forfeiture of twice with furn, befides being difabled from executing hus office.

Indeed, it was no eafy matter to comply with Sir Launcelot's demand; for no warrant had been granted, nor was it now in the power of the juffice to remedy this defect, as Mr Ferret had taken himfelf away privately, without having communicated the name and defignation of the prifoner: a circumstance the more mortifying to the gaoler, as he perceived the extraordinary respect which Mr Clarke and the captain paid to the knight, and was now fully convinced that he would be dealt with according to law. Difordered with thefe reflections, he imparted them to the juffice, who had in vain caufed fearch to be made for Ferret, and was now extremely well inclined to fet the knight and his friends at liberty, though he did not at all suspect the quality and importance of our adventurer. He could not, however, refift the temptation of displaying the authority of his office, and therefore ordered the prifoners to be brought before his tribunal, that, in the capacity of a magistrate, he might give them a fevere reproof, and proper caution with respect to their future behaviour. They were accordingly led through the ftreet in proceffion, guarded by the conftable and his gang, followed by Crabshaw, who had by this time been its releafed from the flocks, and furrounded by a crowd of people attracted by curiofity. When they arrived at the juffice's houle, they were detained for fome time in the paffage; then a voice was heard, commanding the conftable to bring in the prifoners, and they were introduced to the hall of audience, where Mr Gobble fat in judgment, with a crimfon-velvet night-cap on his head; and on his right hand appeared his lady, puffed up with the pride and infolence of her hufband's office, fat, frowzy, and not over-clean, well firicken in years, without the leaft veftige of an agreeable feature, having a rubicond nole, ferret eyes, and imperious afpect. The justice himfelf was a little affected, pert prig, who endeavoured to folemnize his countenance by affuming an air of confequence, in which pride, impudence, and folly were ftrangely blended. He afpired at nothing to much as the character of an able fpokefman; and took all opportunities of holding forth at veftry and quarter-feffions, as well as in the administration of his office in private. He could not, therefore, let flip this occasion of exciting the admiration of his hearers: and, in an authoritative tone thus addreffed our adventurer.

130

"The laws of this land bas provided—I fays as how provifion is made by the laws of this here land, in reverence to the delinquens manefactors, whereby the king's peace is upholden by we magifirates, who reprefents his majchy's perion, better than in e'era contagious nation under the fun; but, howfonewer, that there king's peace, and this here magifirate's authority, cannot be adequably and indentically upheld, if fo be as how criminals efcape unpunified. Now, friend, you mult be confidentions in your own mind, as you are a notorious criminal, who have trefpaffied agains the haw an divers occasions and importunities; if I had a mind to exercife the rigour of the law according to the authority wherewith I am welled, you and your companious in iniquity would be fewerely pusified by the flatue; but we magifirates has a power to litigate the fewerity of uffice; and fo I am contented that you should be parericially deal withal, and even difmilled."

To this harangue the knight replied, with a folemn and deliberate accent, " If I understand your meaning bright, I am accufed of being a notorious criminal; but, neverthelefs, you are contented to let me escape with impunity. If I am a notorious criminal, it is the duty of you, as a magistrate, to bring me to ondign punifhment; and if you allow a criminal to " fcape unpunished, you are not only unworthy of a lace in the commiftion, but become acceffory to his juilt, and, to all intents and purpoles, socius criminis. With refpect to your proffered mercy, I fhall decline he fayour ; nor do I deferve any indulgence at your ands; for, depend upon it, I shall shew no mercy you in the fleps I intend to take for bringing you juffice. I underftand that you have been long ackneyed in the ways of opprefilion, and I have feen ome living monuments of your inhumanity-of that ereafter. I myfelf have been detained in prifon without caufe affigned. I have been treated with dignity, and infulted by gaolers and conftables; d through the fireets like a felon, as a spectacle to he multitude; obliged to dance attendance in your A affage, and afterwards branded with the name of biorious crimical .- I now demand to fee the inforation in confequence of which I was detained in Filon, the copy of the warrant of commitment or tainer, and the face of the perfon by whom I was accufed. I infit upon a compliance with thefe demands, as the privileges of a Britifh fubject; and, i it is refufed, I fhall feek redrefs before a higher tri bunal."

The julice fermed to be not a little diffurbed at this peremptory declaration; which, however, han no other effect upon his wife, but that of enragingher choler and inflaming her countenance. "Sirrah firrah! (cried the) do you dares to influit a worfhip tul magilitate on the beach?—Can you deny that you are a vagram, and dilatory fort of a perfon? Hon? the man with the fatchel made an affadavit of it?— If I was my hufbaud, I'd lay you faft by the heel for your refumption; and ferk you with a primineer ry in o the bargain, unlefs you could give a bette account of yourfeli—I would."

Gobble, encouraged by this fillip, refumed his pe a tulance, and proceeded in this manner :- Heark ye friend, I might, as Mrs Gobble juftly obferves trounce you for your audacious behaviour; but fcoru-to take fuch advantages: howfomever I fhal make you give an account of yourfelf and com panions; for I believes as how you are in a gaug, anall in a flory, and perhaps you may be found one da in a cord .- What are you, friend ? What is you fte tion and degree :" " I am a gentleman," replie the knight. " Aye, that is English for a forry fe low, (faid the juffice). Every idle vagabond. wh has neither home nor habitation, trade nor profession defigns himself a gentleman. But I must know ho you live " " Upon my means." " What are you means ?" " My eftate." " Whence doth it arife? " From inheritance." " Your eftate lies in braf and that you have inherited from nature; but d you inherit lands and tenements ?" " Yes." " Be they are neither here nor there, I doubt, Come, com.

friend, I (hall bring you about prefently." Here the examination was interrupted by the arrival of Mr Fillet the furgeon; who chaicing to país, and feeing a crowd about the door, went in to fatisfy his curiofity.

CHAP. XII.

Which shews there are more Ways to kill a Dog than banging:

M R Fillet no fooner appeared in the judgment-chamber of Juffice Gobble, than Captain Crowe feizing him by the hand, exclaimed, " Body o'me ! Doctor, thou'rt come up in the nick of time to lend us a hand in putting about. We're a litcle I in the flavs here-but, howfomever, we've a good pilot who knows the coalt, and can weather the point. bas the faying is. As for the enemics veficl, the has had a fhot or two already athwart her forefoot ; the next, I do suppose, will firike the hull, and then wou'll fee her taken all a-back." The de ftor, who perfectly underflood his dialect, affured him he might depend upon his affiftance; and, advancing to the knight, accofted him in thefe words: " Sir Launcelot Greaves, your most humble fervant-when I faw a crowd at the door, I little thought of finding you within, treated with fuch indignity-vet I can't help being pleafed with an opportunity of proving the efteem and veneration I have for your perfon and character :--- you will do me a particular pleasure in commanding my beft fervices."

Our adventurer thanked him for this inflance of his riendfhip, which, he told him, he would use without hefitation; and defired he would procure imme-Vot. I. M diate bail for him and his two friends, who had been a imprifoned contrary to law, without any caufe affigned.

134

During this fort dialogue, the juffice, who had heard of Sir Launcelot's family and fortune, though an utter ftranger to his perfon, was feized with fuch pangs of terror and compunction, as a grovelling mind may be supposed to have felt in such circumflances ; and they feemed to produce the fame unfavoury effects that are fo humouroufly delineated by the inimitable Hogarth in the print of Felix on his tribunal, done in the Dutch ftyle. Neverthelefs, feeing Fillet retire to execute the knight's commands. he recollected himfelf fo far as to tell the prifoners there was no occafion to give themfelves any further trouble, for he would release them without bail of mainprize. Then difcarding all the infolence from an his features, and affuming an afpect of the most bi humble adulation, he begged the knight ten thousand pardons for the freedoms he had taken, which were in entirely owing to his ignorance of Sir Launcelot's quality. "Yes, I'll affure you Sir, (faid the wife) he my hufband would have bit off his tongue rather than fay black is the white of your eye, if fo be he had known your capacity .- Thank God, we have been it ufed to deal with gentlefolks, and many's the good he pound we have loft by them; but what of that? Sure we know how to behave to our betters. Mr Gobble, thanks be to God, can defy the whole world to prove that he ever faid an uncivil word, or did a they. rude thing to a gentleman, knowing him to be a perfon of fortune. Indeed, as to your poor gentry and riff-raff, your tag-rag and bobtail, or fuch vulgar fcoundrelly people, he has always behaved like a magistrate, and treated them with the rigger of authority." " In other words (faid the knight), he has tyrannized over the poor, and connived at the vices of the rich: your hußband is little obliged to you for this confellion, woman." "Woman! (cried Mirs Gobble, impurpled with wrath, and fixing her hands on her fides, by way of defance? I foorn your words.—Marry come up, woman! quoths; no more a woman than your workhip." Then burthing into tears, "Hußband (continued he) if you had the foul of a loufe, you would not fuffer me to be abufed at this rate; you would not fuffer me to be abufed at this rate; you would not fuffer me to be abufed at this rate; you would not fuffer me to be abufed at this rate; you would not fuffer me to be abufed at this rate; you would not fuffer me to be abufed at this rate; you would not fuffer me to a bard hear your (poufe called (uch contemptible epithets.— Who cares for his tille and his knighthip? You and I, hußband, knew a tailor that was made a knight; but, thank God, I have noblemen to fland by me with their privileges and beroguetifs."

At this inflam Mr Fillet returned with his friend, a practitioner in the law, who freely offered to join in bailing our adventurer and the other two priloners for any lum that thould be required. The jultice perceiving the sfair began to grow more and more derious, declared that he would difcharge the warmants, and diminis the priloners.

Here Mr Clarke interpoling, obfered, that againft the knight no warrant had been granted, nor any information (worn top confequently, as the jultice hed not complied with the form of proceeding directed by flatute, the imprilonment was corum non jultice yold. "Right, Sir, (faid the other lawyer), if a jultice commits a felon for trial without binding over the profecutor to the affizes, he fhall be fined."— "And, aggin, (cried Clarke) if a jultice iffuse a warrant for commitment where there is no acculation, action will be againt the jultice." "Morever (replied the fitranger) if a juffice for peace is guilty of any mildementor in his office, isformation lies again him in Bano Regit, where he fhall be purified by fine and impriloanent." "And befides, (refumedthe accurate Tom), the fame contr will grant an information against a jultice of peace, on motion, for fending even a fervant to the house of correction on common gaal without fufficient caufe." "True (exclaimed the other limb of the law) and, for contempt of law, attachment may be had againit jultices of peace in Bano Regit: a jultice of the peace was fined a thouland merks for corrupt practices."

136

With thefe words, advancing to Mr Clarke, here fhook him by the hand, with the appellation of brother; faying, " I doubt the juffice has got into a curfed bovel." Mr Gobble himfelf feemed to be of the fame opinion : he changed colour feveral times during the remarks which the lawyers had made at and now, declaring that the gentlemen were at liberty begged, in the most humble phrase, that the company would eat a bit of mutton with him, and after dinner the affair might be amicably compromifed. To this propofal our adventurer replied, in a grave and refolute tone. " If your acting in the commiffion as a juffice of the peace concerned my own particular only, perhaps I would wave any farther enquiry, and refent your infolence no other way but by filene contempt. If I thought the errors of your adminiftration proceeded from a good intention, defeated by want of underftanding, I should pity your ignorance, and, in compaffion, advife you to defift from acting a part for which you are fo ill qualified ; but the prepoft-rous conduct of fuch a man deeply affects the intereft of the community, efpecially that part of it, which, from it's helplefs fituation, is more entitled to our protection and affiftance. I am, moreover, convinced that your milconduct is not fo much ... the confequence of an uninformed head, as the poi-fonous iffue of a malignant heart, devoid of humanity, inflamed with pride, and rankling with revenge. The common prifon of this little town is filled with the miferable objects of your cruelty and opprefion. Infread of protecting the helplefs, reftraining the hands of violence, preferving the public tranquillity, and acting as a father to the poor, according to the intent and meaning of that inftitution of which you are an unworthy member, you have diffreffed the widow and the orphan, given a loofe to all the infolence of office, embroiled your neighbours by fomenting fuits and animofities, and played the tyrant among the indigent and forlorn. You have abufed the authority with which you were invefted, entailed a reproach upon your office; and, inftead of being revered as a bleffing, you are detefted as a curle among your fellow creatures. This, indeed, is generally the cafe of low fellows, who are thruft into the magistracy without fentiment, education, or capacity. Among other inflances of your iniquity, there is now in prifon an unhappy woman, infinitely your fuperior in the advantages of her birth, feofe, and education, whom you have, even without provocation, perfecuted to ruin and diffraction, after having illegally and inhumanly kidnapped her only child, and expoled him to a violent death in a foreign land. Ah, caitiff ! if you were to forego all the comforts of life, diftribute your means among the poor, and do the feverest penance that ever priest-craft preferibed for the reft of your days, you could not atone for the ruin of that helplefs family! a family through whole fides you cruelly and perfidioufly flabbed the heart of an innocent young woman, to gratify the pride and diabolical malice of that wretched, low-bred woman, who now fits at your right hand as the allo-

M 3

cine of power and prefumption. Oh! if fuch a defpicable reptile fhall annoy mankind with impunity; if fuch a contemptible mifereant fhall have it in his power to do fuch deeds of inhumanity and opprefilion, what awails het law? Where is our admired coultitution, the freedom, the fecurity of the fubject, the bandle humanity of the British nation? Sacred Heaven! if there was no human inflitution to take cognizance of fuch stroncions crimes, I would litten to the diclates of eternal julice; and, arming myfelf with the tight of nature, exterminate fuch villains from the face of the carth."

Thefe laft words he pronounced in fuch a firsto, while his eyes lightened with indignation, that Gobble and his wife underwent the moft violent agitation is the conflable's teeth chattered in his head, the galder trembled, and the whole audience was overwhelmed with confernation.

After a fhort paufe, Sir Launcelot proceeded in a midter frain: "I Thank Heaven, the laws of this country have exempted me from the difagreeable talk of fuch an execution. To them we shall have immediate recouries, in three (eparate actions against) you for falls impriforment; and any other perform who has been injured by your arbitrary and wicked proceedings, in the hall find a warm protect r, until you shall be expanged from the estimistion as your circumtances will silve for the wrongs you have done the community."?

In order to complete the mortification and terror of the jultice, the lawyer, whole name was Fenton, declared that, to his certain knowledge, thefe adions would be reinforced with divers profecutions for corrupt practices, which had lain dormant until fome performs of courage and influence fhoult take lead againit Juffice Gobble; who was the more dreaded, as he acted under the patronage of Lord Sharpiogton. By this time fear had deprived the juffice and his help-mate of the faculty of fpeech. They were, indeed, almoft petrified with difmay, and made mo effort to fpeak; when Mr Fillet, in rear of the knight, as he retired with Mis company, took his leave of them in thefe words: "And now, Mr Juffice, to dimer, with what appetite you may."

Our adventurer, though warmly invited to Mr Fenton's houle, repaired to a public inn, where he thought he hould be more at his eafe; fully determined to punih and depofe Gobble from his magifrates; to effect a general gaoledivery of all the debtors whom he had found in confinement; and, in particular, to refeue poor Mrs Oakley from the miterable circumfaces in which the was involved.

In the mean time, he infifted upon entertaining his friends at dinner; during which many fallies of fea-wit and good-humour paffed between Captain Crowe and Dr Fillet; which laft had juft returned from a neighbouring village, whither he was fummoned to fifh a man's yard-arm which had fnapped in the flings. Their enjoyment, however, was fuddenly interrupted by a loud fcream from the kitchen; whither Sir Launcelet immediately fprung, with equal eagerness and agility. There he faw the landlady, who was a woman in years, embracing a man dreffed in a failor's jacket; while the exclaimed, " It is thy own fl-fh and blood, fo fure as I am a living foul. Ah ! poor Greaves, poor Greaves; many a poor Leart has grieved for thee !" To this falutation the youth replied, " I am forry for that, miftrefs. How does poor mother? How does Suky Sedgemore ?"

The good woman of the house could not help fhed.

ding tears at the fe interrogations; while Sit Lanneelot interpofing, faid, not without emotion, "I perceive you are the fon of Mrs Oakley. Your mother is in a bad flate of health, but in me you will find a real parent." Perceiving that the young man eyed him with attonilment, be gave him to underfland that his name was Launcelot Greave.

Oakley no fooner heard thefe words pronounced, than he fell upon his knees; and feizing the kright's hand, kiffed it eagerly, crigng, "God for ever bles your honour; I am your name-fon, fure enough 1---But what of that? I can earn my bread without being beholden to any man."

When the knight raifed him up, he turned to the woman of the houfe, faying, " I want to fee mothers I'm afraid as how times are hard with her, and I have faved fome money for her ufe." This inftance of filial duty brought tears into the eyes of our adventurer, who affured him his mother fhould be carefully attended, and want for nothing; but that it would be very improper to fee her at prefent, as the furprife might flock her too much, confidering that the believed him dead. " Ey, indeed ! (cried the landlady) we were all of the fame opinion, being, as the report went, that poor Greaves Oakley was killed in battle." " Lord! miftrels (faid Oakley), there wa'n't a word of truth in't, I'll affure you. What, d'ye think I'd tell a lie about the matter? Hurt I was, to be fure ; but that don't fignify ; we gave 'em as good as they brought, and fo parted. Well, if fo be I can't fee mother, I'll go and have fome chat with Suky. What d'ye look fo glum for? She an't married, is fhe ?"-" No, no, (replied the woman) not married, but almost heart-broken. Since thou waft gone, fhe has done nothing but fighed, and wept, and pined herfelf into a decay. I'm afraid thou haft come too late to fave her life."

Oakley's heart was not proof againft this information. Burfling into tears, he exclaimed, "O my dear, fweet, pentle Suky ! Have I then lived to be the death of her whom I loved more than the whole world !" He would have gone inflantly to her fathers's houfe, but was reflrained by the knight and his company, who had now joined him in the kitchen.

The young man was feated at table : and gave them to understand, that the ship to which he belonged having arrived in England, he was indulged with a month's leave to fee his relations; and that he had received about fifty pounds in wages and prize-money. After dinner, just as they began to deliberate upon the measures to be taken against Gobble, that gentleman arrived at the inn, and humbly craved admittance. Mr Fillet, ftruck with a fudden idea, retired to another apartment with the young farmer; while the juffice, being admitted to the company, declared that he came to propole terms of accommodation. He accordingly offered to alk pardon of Sir Launcelot in the public papers, and pay fifty pounds to the poor of the parish, as an atonement for his mifbehaviour, provided the knight and his friends would grant him a general releafe. Our adventurer told him, he would willingly wave all perfonal conceffions; but as the cafe concerned the community, he infifted on his leaving off acting in the commiffion, and making fatisfaction to the parties he had injured and oppreffed. This declaration introduced a difcuffion, in the courfe of which the juffice's petulance began to revive; when Fillet, entering the room, told them he had a reconciling meafure to propole, if Mr Gubble would for a few minutes withdraw. He role up immediately, and was fhewn into the room which Fillet had prepared for his reception. While he fat muting on this untoward adventure, fo big with difgrace and difappointment, young Oakley according to the inftructions he had received, appeared all at once before him, pointing to a ghaffly wound which the doctor had painted on his forehead. The apparition no fooner prefented itfelf to the eyes of Gobble, than, taking it for granted it was the fpirit of the young farmer whole death he had occafioned, he roared aloud, " Lord have mercy upon us !" and fell, infenfible, on the floor. There being found by the company, to whom Fillet had communicated his contrivance, he was conveyed to bed, where he lay fome time, before he recovered the perfect use of his fenses, Then he earneftly defired to fee the knight; and affured him he was ready to comply with his terms, inalmuch as he believed he had not long to live. Advantage was immediately taken of this falutary disposition. He bound himself not to act as a juffice of the peace in any part of Great Britain, under the penalty of five thousand pounds. He burned Mrs. Oakley's note ; paid the debts of the fhopkeeper ; undertook to compound those of the publican, and to fettle him again in bufinefs; and, finally, difcharged them all from prifon, paying the dues out of his own pocket. Thefe fteps being taken with peculiar eagernefs, he was removed to his own houfe, where he affured his wife he had feen a vision that prognoflicated his death : and had immediate recourse to the curate of the parish for spiritual consolation.

The most intereiting part of the tafk that now remained, was to make the widow Oakley acquainted with her good fortune, in fuch a manuer as might leaft difurb her fpirits, already but too much difcompoled. For this purpole they choic the landlady; who, after having received proper directions how to regulate her conduct, vifited her in perfon that fame evening. Finding her quite calm, and her reflection quite reftored, the began with exhorting her to put her truft in Providence, which would never forfake the cause of the injured widow and fatherless; she promifed to affift and befriend her on all occasions, as far as her abilities would reach; fhe gradually turned the conversation upon the family of the Greaves; and by degrees informed her, that Sir Launcelot, having learned her fituation, was determined to extricate her from all her troubles. Perceiving her aftonished, and deeply affected at this intimation, the artfully thifted the difcourfe, recommended refignation to the Divine Will, and observed, that this circumftance feemed to be an earnest of farther happinefs, " O I'm incapable of receiving more !- (cried the difconfolate widow, with ftreaming eyes)-Yet I ought not to be furprifed at any blefling that flows from that quarter. The family of Greaves were always virtuous, humane, and bencvolent. This young gentleman's mother was my dear lady and benefactrefs-he himfelf was fuckled at these breafts .- O he was the fweetest, comeliest, beft conditioned babe !- I loved not my own Greaves with greater affection-but he, alas! is now no more !" " Have patience, good neighbour, (faid the landlady of the White Hart) that is more than you have any right to affirm-all that you know of the matter is by common report, and common report is commonly Ffalfe; befides, I can tell you I have feen a lift of the men that were killed in admiral P----'s fhip, when the fought the French in the East Indies, and your fon was not in the number." To this intimation the replied, after a confiderable paufe, " Don't, my good neighbour, don't feed me with falle hope,

My poor Greaves too certainly perified in a foreign land-yet he is happy-Hah he lived to for ene in this condition, grief would foon have put a period to his dys." "I tell you, then, (cried the viltant) he is not dead. I have fern a letter that mentious his helm well fince the battle. You thall come along with me; you are no longer a prioner, but fhall live at my houle comfortably, till your affairs are fettled to your with."

The poor widow followed her in filent aftonifhment, and was immediately accommodated with neceffaries,

Next morning her holfels proceeded with her in the fame cautious manner, until fhe was affured that her fon had returned. Being duly prepared, file was bleffed with the fight of poor Greaves, and fainted away in his arms.

We fhall not dwell upon this tender fcene, becaufe it is but of a fecondary concern in the hiftory of our knight-errant: let it fuffice to fay, that their mutual happinels was unspeakable. She was afterwards vifited by Sir Launcelot; whom the no fooner beheld, than fpringing forwards with all the eagerness of maternal affection, fhe clasped him to her breaft, crying; " My dear child ! my Launcelot ! my pride ! my darling ! my kind benefactor ! This is not the firlt time I hugged you in thefe arms! O you are the very image of Sir Everhard in his youth; but you have got the eyes, the complexion, the fweetnels and complacency, of my dear and ever-honoured lady !" This was not in the firain of hireling praile, but the genuine tribute of effeem and admiration : as fuch, it could not but be agrecable to our hero, who undertock to procure Oakley's difcharge, and fettle him in a comfortable farm on his own effate.

In the mean time, Greaves went with a heavy heart to the house of farmer Sedgemore, where he found Suky, who had been prepared for his reception, in a transport of joy, though very weak, and greatly emaciated. Nevertheles, the return of her (weetheart had such an happy effect on her conflitution, that in a few weeks her health was perfectly reflored.

145

This adventure of our knight was crowned with every happy circumfrance that could give pleafure to a generous mind. The priloners were releafed, and reinflated in their former occupations. The julice performed his articles from fear, and afterwards turned over a new leaf from remorfe. Young Oakley was married to Suky, with whom he received a confiderable portion. The new-married couple found a farm ready flocked for them on the knight's effact; and the mentre enjoyed a happy rearreat in the charafter of the houfe-keeper at Greavelhury Hall.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

THE

ADVENTURES

OF

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES.

BY

T. SMOLLETT, M.D.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. II.

EDINBURCH:

PRINTED BY ALEX. JAEDINE, Back of Gavin Locb's Land, Forrester's Wynd.

1804.

THE

ADVENTURES

OF

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES.

CHAP. I.

In which our Knight is tantalized with a transient Glimpse of Felicity.

"HE fuccels of our adventurer, which we have particularized in the latt chapter, could not fail of enhancing his character, not only among those who knew him, but also among the people of the town, to whom he was not an utter ftranger. The populace furrounded the house, and teffified their pprobation in loud huzzas. Captain Crowe was more than ever infpired with veneration for his admired patron, and more than ever determined to purwe his footfteps in the road of chivalry. Fillet, and his friend the lawyer, could not help concriving an ffection, and even a profound effecm, for the exaled virtue, the perion, and the accomplifhments of the knight, dashed as they were with a mixture of extravagance and infanity. Even Sir Launcelot himfelf was elevated to an extraordinary degree of elf-complacency on the fortunate iffue of his advenure; and became more and more perfuaded that a pight-erraut's profession might be exercised, aven in England, to the advantage of the community. The aly perfon of the company who feemed unanimared with the general fatisfaction was Mr Tiromas Clarke.

He had, not without good reafon, lind it down as a maxim, that kinght-errantyr and madneds were fynoninous terms; and that madnefs, though exhibited in the most advantagoous and agreeshle light, could not change its nature, but maß continue a perverfion of fenfe to the end of the chapter. He perceived the additional imprefilm which the brain of his uncle land fullamed from the happy manner in which the benevolence of Sir Launcelot had lo lately operated; and begun to fear it would be, in a little time, quite neeffary to have recourfs to a commifion of lunaxy, which might not only difgrace the family of the Crowes, but allo tend to invalidate the fettlement which the captain had already made in favour of our young lawyer.

Perplexed with thefe cogitations, Mr Clarke appealed to our adventurer's own reflection. He expatiated upon the bad confequences that would attend his uncle's perfeverance in the execution of a foheme fo foreign to his faculties; and entreated him for the love of God, to divert him from his purpofe, either by arguments or authority; as, of all mankinds, the knight had gained fuch an afcendancy over his (pirite, that he would liften to his exhortations with refpect and fubmifico.

Our adventurer was not for mad, but that he faw and owned the rationality of thefer remarks. He readily undertook to employ all his influence with Growe to diffuade him from his extravagant defigs ; diaf defized the first opportunity of being alone with the aptain, to fignify his featiments on this fobject. "A Captain Conve (faid he), you are, then, determined to proceed in the courfe of knight-errantry?" "I any (crolied the feature) with God's help, d'ye fee, and the affiftance of wind and weather—'' v What, doff thou tak for wind and weather (crited the knight, in an elevated tone of asceted tranfport) : without the help of Heaven, indeed, we are all vanity, imbecility, weaknefs, and wretchednefs; but if thou art refolved to embrace the life of an errant, let me not hear thee fo much as whifper a doubt, a wifh, a hope, or fentiment, with respect to any other obftacle which wind or weather, fire or water, fword or famine, danger or difappointment, may throw in the way of thy career .---- When the duty of thy profession calls, thou must fingly rush upon innumerabe hofts of armed men; thou must florm the breach in the mouth of batteries loaded with death and deftruction; while, every ftep thou moveft, thou art exposed to the horrible explosion of subterranean mines, which, being fprung, will whirl thee aloft in the air, a mangled corfe, to feed the fowls of heaven : thou muft leap into the abyls of difmal caves and caverns, replete with poilonous toads and hiffing ferpents; thou must plunge into feas of burning fulphur ; thou muft launch upon the ocean in a crazy bark, when the foaming billows roll mountains high, when the lightning flashes, the thunder roars, and the howling tempeft blows, as if it would commix the jarring elements of air and water, earth and fire, and reduce all nature to the original anarchy of chaos. Thus involved, thou muft turn thy prow full against the fury of the ftorm, and ftem the boifterous furge to thy defined port, though at the diffance of a thousand leagues-thon must-"

"Avaft, avaft, brother1 (exclaimed the impatient Crowe) you've got into the high latitude, d'ye feel-ml fo be as you fpank it away at that rate, adad, I caanot continue in tow-we muft eaft off the rope, or 'ware timbers.—As for your 'offs and breeches, and hurling aloft, d'ye fee, your caves and cavera, w<sup>3</sup>filling tuends and ferpents, burning biniflone and forming billows, we muft take our haj t I value 'em not a rotten ratine-bur, as for folling in the wind's eye, brother, you muft give me leavepo offence, I hope-I pretend to be a thorough-bred fearman, d'ye fee-and I'll be dammed if you, or e'er an arrant that broke bieuti, ever failed in a threemalt veffel within five points of the wind, allowing for variation and leavery.-No, no, brother, nome of your ticks upon travellers-I a'n't now to learn my compais.<sup>20</sup> " Tick-I (cried the knight, flarting up, and laying his hand on the pummel of his foord) what! I fuffeed my honour!"

A 2

Crows, fuppoing him to be really incenfed, intermiped him with prate termichaels, faying, "Nayldon't—What apize1—Adds buntlines1—I did'n't go to give you the lye, brother, finite my lindus: I only faid as how to fail in the wind'e eye was impolfble." "And I fay unto thee, (refirmed the knight) nothing is impefible to a true knight-errant, infiried with and animated by love." "And I fay unto thee, (halloo'd Crowe) if to be as how love pretends to turn his haw(choles to the wind, he's no feaman, d'ye fee, but a fnotr-noted, labberly boy, that knows not a reat from a caplian—as don't."

<sup>44</sup> [At that does not believe that love is an infallible pllot, muth not embask upon the voyage of chivalay is for, next to the protection of Heaven, it is from love that the knight derives all hist proxefs and glory. The bare name of his miltrefs invigorates his arm; the remembrance of her brauy infales in his breat the molt heroic featurents of course; while the idea of her chaffity hedges him round like a charm, and renders him inviherable to the force of hist annegonifi. A knight witheat a milfrefs is a mere non-entity, or at leak a monfier in nature, as pilot without compals, a fhip without rudder, and muft be driven to and fro upon the waves of difcomfiture and difgrace."

"An that be all, (replied the failor) I told you before as how I've got a fweetheart, as true a hearted girl as ever fweing in canvas—What thof the may have flarted a hoop in rolling—that fignifies nothing —I'll warran ther tight as a nut field."

"She muft, in your opinion, be a paragon either of beauty or virtue. Now, as you have given up the laft, you muft uphold her charms unequalled, and her perfon without a parallel." "I do, I do uphold the will fail upon a parallel as well as e'er a frigate that was rigged to the northward of fifty."

"At that "rate the mult rival the attractions of her whom I adore; I but that, I Gay, is impossible; the perfections of my Aurelia are altogether fupernatural; and as two fune canoot thine together in the fame fphere with equal fplewdor, fo I affirm, and will prove with my body, that your miltrefs, in comparifon with mine, is as a glow-worm to the meridian fun, a rufhlight to the full moon, or a flale mackar-l's eye to a pearl of orient." "Heark ye, brother, you might give good words, however: an once we fall ajawing, d'ye lee, I can heave out as much bilge-water a another; and face you befmear my fweetheart Beficia, I can as well bedau's your miltrefs Aurelia, whom I value no more than old junk, pork-flath, or finking flock-fih."

"Enough, enough—fuch blafphemy full not pgf unchaftifed. In confideration of our having fed from the fame table, and maintained together a friendly, though fhort intercourfe, I will not demand the combat before you are duly prepared. Proceed to the first great town, where you can be furnished with A 3 horfe and aarenflag, with arms offenfive and defenfive; provide a truly 'quire; a filme a motto and device-declare yourfelf a ton of chivalry; and proclaim the excellence of her who rules your heart. I final fetch a compasis; and whereforer we may chance to meet, let us engage with equal arms in mortal combar; that thall decide and determine this dilpute."

So faying, our adventure falked with great folemnity into another apartment, while Crowe, being fufficiently irritated, faapped bis fagers in token of definee. Honelt Crowe thought hinefdi formet yould by a maw whom he had cultivated with fuch humility and veneration; and, after an incoherent cigatulation of fas-oaths, went in queft of his nephew, in order to make him acquainted with this unlucky transfation.

In the mean time Sir Launcelot having ordered fupper, retired into his own chamber, and gave a loofe to the most tender emotions of his heart. He recollected all the fond ideas which had been excited in the courfe of his correspondence with the charming Aurelia. He remembered with horror the cruel letter he had received from that young lady, containing a formal renunciation of his attachment, fo unfuitable to the whole tenor of her character and conduct. He revolved the late adventure of the coach, and the declaration of Mr Clarke, with equal cagernefs and aftonishment; and was feized with the most ardent defire of unravelling a mystery fo interefting to the predominant paffion of his heart .---All thefe mingled confiderations produced a kind of ferment in the economy of his mind, which fubfided into a profound reverie, compounded of hope and trickling over his nofe, and flood before him without speaking. When the knight asked whole livery was that he wore : he replied, " 'Tis your honour's own livery-I received it on your account, and hope as you will quit the fcore." Then he proceeded to inform his mafter, that two officers of the army having come into the kitchen, inlifted upon having for their fupper the victuals which Sir Launcelot had befooke; and that he, the 'lquire, objecting to the propofal, one of them had feized the poker, and bafted him with his own blood; that when he told them he belonged to a knight-errant, and threatened them with the vengeance of his matter, they curfed and abufed him, calling him Sancho Pan'za, and fuch dog names; and bade him tell his matter. Don Quixote, that, if he made any noife, they would confine him to his cage, and lie with his miftrefs Dulcinea. " To be fure, Sir, (faid he) they thought you as great a nincompoop as your 'iquire-trim tram; like matter, like man-but I hope as how you will give them a Rowland for their Oliver."

From this trance he was awaked by the arrival of his 'fquire, who entered the room with the blood

<sup>6</sup> "M. Greant 1: (cried the knight) you have provoked the cynchmene with yoar inpertinence, and they have chaftied you as you deferve. I tell they, Crabihaw, they have fased me the trubble of punifhing thee with my own hands, and well it is for they, funer as thou art, that they themfolves have performed the effect ior, had they complianed to me of thy infolence and rulicity, by Heaven, I would have made these an example to all the impudent lequires upon the face of the earth. Hence, then, havaunt, caitling-Let his majely's afficers who perhaps are fatigued with hard dary in the fervice of their country, comfort themfolves with the fupper which was intended for me, and leave mey undilutived, to my own mediations."

Timothy did not require a repetition of this command, which he forthwith obeyed, growling within himfelf, thenceforward he fhould let every cuckdd wear his own horns; but he could not help entertaining fome doubts with refpect to the courage of his mafter, who, he fuppofed, was one of thole Hectors who have their fighting days, but are not at all times equally prepared for the combat.

The knight, having taken a flight repart, retired to his repole; and had for forms time enjoyed a very agreeable flumber, when he was flartled by a knocking at his chamber.door. "I beg your honour" pardon, (faid the landlady) but there are two uncivil perfons in the kitchen, who have well nigh turned my whole hould to topy-tury. Not contented with laying violent hands on your honour's fupper, they want to be rude to two yourg ladies who are jult arrived, and have called for a poft-chaife to go on. They are afficiat to open their chamber-door to get out—and the young layer is like to be murdered for taking the ladies' part."

Sit Lainneelot, though he refufed to take notice of the influt which had been offreed to binneld, no fooner heard of the diftrefs of the ladies, than he flarted up, huddled on his clothes, and, girding his word to his loins, advanced with a delberate pace to the kitchen, where he preceived Thomas Clarke warnly engaged in altereation with a cupeling and of arrogance and forcity; treated him with great infolence and contempt. Tom was endeavouring to perfunde them, that, in the continution of England the military was always fulforeireit to the civil power; and that their behaviour to a couple of helplefs young women was not only unbecoming gendement.

but expressly contrary to the law, inafmuch as they might be fued for an affault on an action of damages.

To this remonfirance the two heroes in red replied, by a volley of dreadful oaths, intermingled with threats, which put the lawyer in fome pain for his ears.

While one thus endeavoured to intimidate honeft Tom Clarke, the other thundered at the door of the apartment to which the ladies had retired, demanding admittance, but received no other answer than a loud Briek. Our adventurer advancing to this uncivil champion, accofted him thus in a grave and folema tone : " Affur dly I could not have believed, except upon the evidence of my own fenfes, that perfons who have the appearance of gentlemen, and bear his majefty's honourable commiffion in the army, could behave fo wide of the decorum due to fociety, of a proper refpect to the laws, of that humanity which we owe to our fellow-creatures, and that delicate repard for the fair-fex, which ought to prevail in the breaft of every gentleman, and which, in particular, dignifies the character of a foldier. To whom fhall that weaker, though more amiable part of the creation, fly for protection, if they are infulted and outraged by those whose more immediate duty it is to afford them fecurity and defence from injury and violence? What right have you, or any man upon earth, to excite riot in a public inn, which may be dremed a temple facred to hofpitality ; to diffurb the quiet of your fellow-guelts, fome of them perhaps exhaulted by fatigue, fome of them invaded by diftemper; to interrupt the king's lieges in their courfe of journeying upon their lawful occafions? Above all, what motive but wanton barbarity could prompt yon to violate the apartment, and terrify the tender hearts of two helplefs young ladies, travelling, no doubt, upon fome cruel emergency, which compele them, unattended, to encounter in the night the dangers of the highway."

"" Heark ye, Don Bethlem, (faid the captain, frutting up, and cocking his hat in the face of our adventurer) you may be as mad as e'er a frawcrowned monarch in Moorfields, for aught I care hut damme! don't you be fauer, otherwife I final dab your worthip with a good flick aerols your fhoulders." " How, petuatan boy, (cried the koight) fince you are fo ignorant of urbanity, I will give you a leion that you final not calify forger." So faying, he unflicathe bis (word, and called upon the foldier to draw in his defence.

The reader may have feen the phyfiognomy of a flock-holder at Ionathan's, when the rebels were at Derby, or the features of a bard when accofted by a bailiff, or the countenance of an alderman when his banker ftops payment; if he has feen either of thefe phenomena, he may conceive the appearance that was now exhibited by the vifage of the ferocious captain, when the naked fword of Sir Launcelot glanced before his eyes. Far from attempting to produce his own, which was of unconfcionable length, he ftood h motionlefs as a flatue, flaring with the most ghaftly look of terror and aftonishment. His companion, who partook of his panic, feeing matters brought to a very ferious crifis, interpoled with a creft-fallen countenance, affuring Sir Launcelot they had no intention to quarrel, and what they had done was only for the fake of the frolic.

" By fuch frolics, (cried the knight) you become nuifances to fociety, bring yourfelves into contempt, and difgrace the corps to which you belong. I now perceive the truth of the obfervation, that cruelty always refides with cowardice. My contempt is hanged into compafion; and as you are probably f good families, 1 muft infit upon this young man's rawing his fword, and acquitting himfelf in fuch a nanner as may fereen him from the moft infamous enfure which an officer can undergo..." (Lackay, Sir! (faid the other) we are no officers, but prentices to two London haberdafhers, travellers for irders: Coptain is a good travelling name, and we ave dreffed ourfelves like officers, to procure more effect upon the road."

The knight faid he was very glad, for the honour f the fervice, to find they were imposfors, though hey deferved to be chalified for arrogating to themlives an honourable character which they had not pirit to fuffain.

Thefe words were fearce pronounced, when Mr Clarke approaching one of the bravadoes who had hreatened to crop his ears, beflowed fuch a benedicion on his jaw, as he could not receive without imnediatehumiliation; while Timothy Crabhaw, finartag from his broken head and his want of fapper, fated the other with a Yorkhire hug, that laid him crofs the body of his companion. In a word, the wo freud-officers were very roughly handled for heir prefumption in pretending to ach characters for hich they were foil qualified.

While Clarke and Crabhaw were thus Indably mployed, the two young ladies paffed though the itchen fo fuddenly, that the knight had only a tranent glimple of their backs, and they disppeared bere he could pollibly make a tender of his fervices. The truth is, they disaded nothing fo much as their sing diffeowered, and took the first opportunity of liding into the chaifs, which had been for fome time sitting in the paffage.

Mr Clarke was much more difconcerted than our adventurer by their fudden efcape. He ran with great eagernels to the door; and perceiving they were flown, returned to Sir Launcelot, faying, " Lord blefs my foul, Sir! didn't you fee who it was ?"-" Hah! how! (exclaimed the knight, reddening with alarm ), who was it ?" " One of them, (replied the lawyer) was Dolly, our old landlady's daughter at the Black Lion .- I knew her when first fhe lighted, notwithstanding her being neatly dreffed in a green joleph, which, I'll affure you, Sir, becomes, her remarkably well-I'd never defire to fee a prettier creature. As for the other, fhe's a very genteel woman, but whether old or young, ugly or handfome, I cap't oretend to fay, for the was marked .- I had just time to falute Dolly, and alk a few quettionsbut all the could tell me was, that the marked lady's name was Mils Meadows; and that fhe, Dolly, was, hired as her waiting woman."

When the name of Mifs Meadows was mentioned. Sir Launcelot, whole fpirits had been in violent commotion, became fuddenly calm and ferene; and be began to communicate to Clarke the dialogue which had paffed between bim and Captain Crowe; when the hoftefs addreffing herfelf to our errant, " Well, (faid fhe) I have had the honour to accommodate many ladies of the first fashion at the White Hart, both, h young and old, proud and lowly, ordinary and handtome ; but fuch a miracle as Mifs Meadows I rever yet did fee. Lord! let me never thrive, but I think the is of fomething more than a human creature !-O had your honour but fet eyes on her, you would have faid it was a vision from heaven, a cherubim of beauty-for my part, I can hardly think it was any thing but a dream-then fo fweet, fo mild, fo good- a natured and generous! I fay, bleffed is the youngwoman who tends upon fuch a heavenly creature-and, poor dear young lady ! fie feems to be under grief and affiction, for the tears fiele down her ovely cheeks, and looked, for all the world, like prient pearl."

Sir Launcelot liftened attentively to the defoription, which reminded him of his dear Aurelia; and, fighing bitterly, withdrew to his own apartment.

CHAP. II.

Which shews, That a Man cannot always sip When the Cup is at his Lip.

HOSE who have felt the doubte, the jealoufies, the refentments, the humiliations, the hopes, the defpair, the impatience, and, in a word, the infinite difquiets of love, will be able to conceive the fea of agitation on which our adventurer was toffed all night long, without repose or intermiffion. Sometimes he refolved to employ all his indultry and address in discovering the place in which Aurelia was fequeftered, that he might refeue her from the supposed reft aint to which the had been fubjected. But, when his heart beat high with the anticipation of this exploit, he was fuddenly invaded, and all his ardour checked by the remembrance of that fatal letter, written and figned by her own hand, which had divorced him from all hope, and first unfettled his understanding. The emotions waked by this remembrance were fo ftrong, that he leaped from the bed; and, the fire being ftill burning in the chimney, lighted a candle, that he might once more banquet his fpleen by reading the original billet, which; together with the ring he had received from Mila VOL. II. ...B

Darnel's mother, he kept in a fmall box, carefully deposited within his portmanteau. This being in itantly unlocked, he unfolded the paper, and recited the contents in thele words.

46 SIR.

"OBLIGED as I am by the paffion you profefs, and the eagerness with which you endeavour to give me the most convincing proof of your regard, I feel fome reluctance in making you acquainted with a circumfance which, in all probability, you will not learn without fome difquiet. But the affair is become for interefting, I am compelled to tell you, that however agreeable your propofals may have been to those whom I thought it my duty to please by every reafonable conceffion, and howfoever you may have been flattered by the feeming complacency with which I have heard your addreffes, I now find it abfolutely neceffary to fpeak in a decifive thrain, to affure you that, without facrificing my own peace, I cannot admit a continuation of your correspondence; and that your regard for me will be beft fhewn by your defift, ing from a purfuit, which is altogether inconfiftent with the happinefs of

AURELIA DARNEL."

Having pronounced aloud the words that compod this dimitions, he haltly replace the credit forult and being too well acquainted with the hand to harhour the leaft doubt of it's being genuine, threw himfelf into his bed in a transfort of delpair mingled with refeatment; during the predominancy of which, he determined to proceed in the career of adventure, and endeavour to forget the unkindnefs of his militref andft the avocations of knight-errantry.

Such was the refolution that governed his thoughts. When he arole in the morning, he ordered Crabshaw

b faddle Bronzomarte, and demanded a bill of his prence. Before thefe orders could be executed, he good woman of the houfe entering his spartment, held him, with masks of concern, that the poor ump lady, Mife Masdows, had drop ther pocketp-k in the next chamber, where it was found by he ohdfefs, who now prefented it unopened.

Our knight having called in Mrs Oakley and her in as witneffes, unfolded the book without reading he fyllable of the contents, and found in it five bankotes, amounting to two hundred and thirty pounds. erceiving at once that the lofs of this treafure might attended with the molt embarraffing confequences the owner, and reflecting that this was a cafe hich demanded the immediate interpolition and al-Stance of chivalry, he declared that he himfelf would onvey it fafely into the hands of Mifs Meadows: nd defired to know the road fhe had purfued, that e might fet out in queft of her without a moment's elay. It was not without fome difficulty that this formation was obtained from the post-boy, who had ten enjoined fecrecy by the lady, and even gratified ith a handlome reward for his promifed diferetion. he fame method was used to make him difgorge his uft : he undertook to conduct Sir Launcelot, who red a post-chaife for difpatch, and immediately dearted, after having directed his 'fquire to follow his ack with the horfes.

Yet, whatever balls he made, it is a biolately neflary, for the reader's fariliaction, that we flouid utflip the chaifs, and vifit the ladies before his arval. We fhall, therefore, without circumlocution, emile, that Mifs Meadows was no other than that iragon of beauty and goodnet's, the all-accomplifu-Mifs Aurelin Darnel. She had, with that meeknels of relignation peculiar to herelf, for fome years in fubmitted to every frecies of opprefilon which her uncle's tyranny of dipolition could plan, and his unlimited power of guardianflip execute, till at length it arole to fuch a pitch of defoptifm as the could not endure. He had projected a match between his in nicce and one Philip Sycamore, Efg. a young man who polf field a pretty confiderable eflate in the north country : who liked Aurelia's perfon, but was enamour'd of her fortune, and had offered to purchafe Anthony's intereft and alliance with certain concelhons, which could not but be agreeable to a man of hos. A principles, who would have found it a difficult tafk to fettle the accounts of his wardhio.

According to the prefent effimate of matrimonial felicity, Sycamore might have found admittance, as a future fon-in-law, to any private family of the kingdom. He was by birth a gentleman, tall, ftraight, and mulcular; with a fair, fleek, unmeaning face, that promifed more fimplicity than ill-nature. His education had not been neglected, and he inherited an eftate of five thouland a-year. Mifs Darnel, however, had penetration enough to difcover and defpile him, as a ftrange composition of rapacity and profufion, abfurdity and good-fenfe, bafhfulnefs and impudence, felf-conceit and diffidence, aukwardnefs and oftentation, infolence and good nature, rafhnels and timidity. He was continually furrounded and preyed upon by certain vermin called led captains and buffoons, who shewed him in leading-strings like a fucking giant, rifled his pockets without ceremony, ridiculed him to his face, traduced his character, and exposed him in a thousand ludicrous attitudes for the diversion of the public ; while, all the time, he knew their knavery, faw their drift, detefted their morals, and despised their understanding. He was fo infatuated by indolence of thought, and communication with folly, that he would have rather folfered himfelf to be led into a ditch with company, than be at the pains of going over a bridge alone; and involved himfelf into a thoufand difficulties, the natural confequences of an error in the first concochion, which, though he plaioly faw its, he had not refolution enough to avoid.

18.

Such was the character of 'Squire Sycamore, who profeffed himfelf the rival of Sir Lanncelot Greaves in the good graces of Mils Aurelia Darnel. He had in this purfuit perfevered with more conftancy and fortitude than he ever exerted in any other inftance. Being generally needy from extravagance, he was ftimulated by his wants, and animated by his vanity, which was artfully inftigated by his followers, who hoped to fhare the fpoils of his fuccefs. Thefe motives were reinforced by the inceffant and eager exhortations of Anthony Darnel; who feeing his ward in the last year of her minority, thought there was no time to be loft in fecuring his own indemnification, and fnatching his niece forever from the hopes of Sir Launcelot, whom he now hated with redoubled animofity. Finding Aurelia deaf to all remonftrances, proof against ill-ufage, and refolutely averfe to the proposed union with Sycamore, he endeavoured to detach her thoughts from Sir Launcelot, by forging tales to the prejudice of his conftancy and moral character; and, finally, by recapitulating the proofs and inftances of his diffraction, which he particularized with the moft malicious exaggerations.

In fpite of all his arts, he found it impracticable to furmount her objections to the purpofed alliance, and therefore changed his battery. Inflesd of tranfferring her to the arms of his friend, he refolved to detain her in his power by a legal claim, which would inseft him with the uncortocale management of her affairs. This was a charge of lunacy, in confequence of which he looped to obtain a commilion, to lecure a jury to his with, and be appointed fole committee of her perfon, as well as fleward on her eflate, of which he would then be heir-apparent.

As the firft fleps towards the execution of this boneft follence, he had fubjected Aurelia to the fuperintendency and direction of an old duenna, who had been formerly the procurefs of his pleafures; and hired a new fet of fervants, who were given to underfland, at their firft admillion, that the young lady was difordered in her brain.

An imprefition of this nature is cally preferred among ferenary, when the matter of the family thinks his intereff is concerned in fupporting the impoflure. The melaneboly produced from her confinement, and the vixative of her refeatment moder ill-ladare, were; by the addrefs of Anthony, and the prepoffetion of his domellics, perretred into the effects of infanity, and the fame interpretation was firained upon her moft indifferent words and addions.

The tidings of Mifs Darnel's diforder were carefully circulated in whifers, and foom reabed the cara of Mr Sycamore, who was not at all platfed with the information. From his knowledge of Anthony's difpolition, he fufpedt d the truth of the report; and, unwilling to ice fuch a prize awilhed, as it were; from his grapping, hes with the advice and adfiance of his myrmidons, refolved to fet the captive at liberty, in full hope of turning the advicentre to his own advantage: for he argued in this manner; "If the is in fall compared adjust from the villany of har uncle. the prefibered adjust from the villany of har uncle.

If the is really difordered, it will be no great difficulty to deceive her into marriage, and then I become ther truftee of courfe."

The plan was well conceived, but Sycar.ore had not diferction enough to keep his own counfel. From weakness and vanity he blabbed the defign, which in a little time was communicated to Anthony Darnel, and he took his precautions accordingly. Being infirm in his own perfor, and confequently unfit for oppofing the violence of fome defperadoes, whom he knew to be the fatellites of Sycamore, he prepared a private retreat for his ward at the houfe of an old gentleman, the companion of his youth, whom he had imposed upon with the fiction of her being difordered in her understanding, and amufed with a ftory of a dangerous defign upon her perfon. Thus cautioned and inftructed, the gentleman had gone with his own coach and fervants to receive Aurelia and her governaute at a third houfe, to which the had been privately removed from her uncle's habitation; and in this journey it was that fhe had been fo accidentally protected from the violence of the robbers by the interpolition and prowels of our adven-

As he did not wear his helmet in that exploit, fhe recognized his features as he paffed the coach; and, fluck with the apparition, fhricked aloud. She had been allured by her guardian, that his defign was to convey her to her own houtes; but, perceiving in the fequid, that the carriage flucks of upon a different read, and finding herielf in the hands of flerangere, the began to dread a mach more dilacreeable fate, and to conceive doubts and itses that filled her tender heart with horror and alliction. When the expollulated with the duenna, fine was treated like a changeling, admonified to be quiet, and reminded that file was under the direction of thofe who would manage her with a tender regard to her own welfare and the honour of her family. When file addreffed herefil to the old gentleman, who was not much fubjeft to the contions of humanity, and, befides, firmly perfuaded that file was deprived of her reason; he made no answer, but laid his finger on his mouth, by way of enjoining filence.

This myltrious behaviour aggravated the fears of the poor haplefs young lady; and her terrors waxed fo ftrong, that when the faw Tom Clarke, whole face fine knew, the called about for affiliance, and even pronounced the name of bin patron, Sir Launcelot Greaves, which the imagined might fitmulate him the more to attempt fomething for her deliverance.

The reader has already been informed in what manner the endeavours of Tom and his uncle mifcarried. Mifs Darnel's new keeper having in the courfe of his journey halted for refreshment at the Black Lion, of which being landlord, he believed the good woman and her family were entirely devoted to his will and pleafure, Aurelia found an opportunity of fpeaking in private to Dolly, who had a very prepoffeffing appearance. She conveyed a purfe of money into the hands of this young woman; telling her, while the tears trickled down her cheeks, that fhe was a young lady of fortune, in danger, as the apprehended, of affaffination. This hint, which the communicated in a whifper while the governante flood at the other end of the room, was fufficient to intereft the compaffionate Dolly in her behalf. As foon as the coach departed, the made her mother acquainted with the transaction; and, as they naturally concluded that the young lady expected their affiftance, they refolved to approve themfelves worthy of her confidence.

D.lly having enlifted in their defign a trufty countryman, one of her own profeffed admirers, they fet out together for the house of the gentleman in which the fair priloner was confined, and waited for her in fecret at the end of a pleafant park, in which they naturally concluded fhe might be indulged with the privilege of taking the air. The event juffified their conception; on the very first day of their watch they faw her approach, accompanied by her duenna. Dolly and her attendant immediately tied their horfes to a flake, and retired into a thicket, which Aurelia did not fail to enter. Dolly forthwith appeared; and, taking her by the hand, led her to the horfes, one of which the mounted in the utmost hurry and trepidation, while the countryman bound the duenna with a cord prepared for the purpole, gagged her mouth, and tied her to a tree, where he left her to her own meditations. Then he mounted before Dolly, and through unfrequented paths conducted his charge to an inn on the poft-road, where a chaife was ready for their reception.

As he refufed to proceed farther, left his abfence, from his own houd creats fulpicion, A urelia rewarded him liberally, but would not part with her finishful Dolly, who indeed had no inclusation to be difcharged; fuch an affection and attachment had fite already acquired for the amiable fugitive, though the knew neither her flory nor her true name. A worlia thought proper to conceal both, and affuned the fictitious appellation of Meadows, until the fhould be better acquainted with the diffortion and differention of her new attendant.

The first resolution fine could take, in the preferct flutter of her fpirits, was to make the best of her way to London, where the thought fine might find an afylum in the house of a female relation, married to an eminent phylician, known by the name of Kawdle. In the execution of this hafty refolve, the travelled at a violent rate from ftage to ftage, in a carriage drawn by four horfes, without halting for neceffary refreshment or repole, until she judged herfelf out of danger of being overtaken. As the appeared overwhelmed with grief and confternation, the good-natured Dolly endeavoured to alleviate her diffrefs with diverting difcourfe; and, among other lefs interefting flories, entertained her with the adventures of Sir Launcelot and Captain Crowe, which fhe had feen and heard recited while they remained at the Black Lion ; nor did the fail to introduce Mr Thomas Clarke in her narrative, with fuch a favourable reprefentation of his perfon and character. as plainly difcovered that her own heart had received a rude flock from the irrefiftible force of his qualifications.

The hiftory of Sir Launcelot Greases was a theme which effectually fixed the attention of Aurelia, ditracked as her ideas muft have been by the circumflances of her prefent fituation. The particulars of his conduct fince the correspondence between him and her had ccafed, the heard with equal concern and athonithment ; for, how far fover: find element herefiel detached from all pofibility of future connection with that young gentleman, the was not made of fuch indifferent fluff, as to learn, without emotion, the calasmitous diforder of an accomplified youth, whole extraordinary vitues the could not but revere.

As they had deviated from the poft-road, taken progrefs that they were now within one day's journey of London; the careful and affectionate Dolyfeering her dare lady quite exhaulted with fallyor, ufed all her natural relatoric, which was very powerful, mingled with tears that flowed from the heart,

In perfoading Aurelia to enjor fome repole; and fo far funceded in the attempt, that for one night the toil of travelling was intermitted. This receips from incredible fatigue was a paule that afforded our adventurer time to overtake them before they reached the metropolis, that walt labyrinth, in which Aurelia might have been for ever lolt to his inquiry.

It was in the afternoon of the day which fucceedfed his departure from the White Hart, that Sir Launcelot arrived at the inp, where Mifs Aurelia Darnel had befpoke a difh of tea, and a post-chaife for the next ftage. He had, by inquiry, traced her a confiderable way, without ever dreaming who the perfon really was whom he thus purfued ; and now he defired to speak with her attendant. Dolly was hot a little furprifed to fee Sir Launcelot Greaves, of whole character the had conceived a very fublime dea from the narrative of Mr Thomas Clarke ; but he was ftill more furprifed when he gave her to anderftand that he had charged himfelf with the pocket-book, containing the bank-notes which Mils Meadows had dropped in the houfe where they had been threatened with infult. Mils Darnel had not et discovered her difafter, when her attendant, runbing into the apartment, prefented the prize which he had received from our adventurer, with his compliments to Mifs Meadows, implying a request to be a idmitted into her prefence, that he might make a berfonal tender of his beft fervices.

It is not to be fuppofed that the amiable Aurelia of eard, unmoved, fuch a melfage from a perfon whom or maid discovered to be the identical Sir Launcedo at Greaves, whole flory the had to lately related : of ut, as the enfoing feene requires frefh attention in the reader, we fhall defer is till another opportunity.

when his fpirits shall be recruited from the fatigue of this chapter.

CHAP. III.

Exlibiting an Interview, which, it is to be hoped, will interest the Curiosity of the Reader.

HE mind of the delicate Aurelia was ftrangely agitated by the intelligence which fhe received, with her pocket-book, from Dolly. Confounded as fhe was by the nature of her fituation, fhe at once perceived that fhe could not, with any regard to the distates of gratitude, refuse complying with the requeft of Sir Launcelot; but, in the first hurry of her emotion, fhe directed Dolly to beg, in her name, that the might be exculed for wearing a malk at the interview which he defired, as the had particular realous, which concerned her peace, for retaining that difguife. Our adventurer fubmitted to this preliminary with a good grace, as he had nothing in view but the injunctions of his order, and the duties of humanity; and he was admitted without farther preamble.

When he entered the room, he could not help being flruck with the preferce of Aurelia. Her flature was improved fince he had feen her; her flature exquittely formed; and the rescived him with a nair of dignity, which imprefiel him with a very fubline idea of her perfon and charafer. She was no lefa feed at the fight of our adventure, who, though enfed in armour, appeared with his head uncoveredly and the exercise of praveling had thrown fuch a glow of health and vivacity on his feature, which were gaturally elegant and exprefive, that we will vere ure to fay, there was not in all Engined a couple

That excelled this aniable pair in perfonal besuty and recomplithments. Aurelia finone with all the fabled graces of nymph or goddeis; and to Sir Launeelornight be applied what the divine poet Ariolto fays if the prince Zerbino:

"Natura il fece e poi ruppe la stampa." When Nature ftamp'd him, fhe the dye deftroy'd."

Our adventurer having made his obeifance to this uppofed Miks Mradows, told her, that athongh he hought himleff highly honoured in being admitted o her prefence, and allowed to pay his referes to cer, as fuperior beings are adored, unleen; yet his leafure would receive a very confiderable addition, fine would be pleafed to withdraw that invidious with that he might have a glimpfe of the divisity bich it concealed. Aucella immediately to is off rer make, faying, with a faultering accent; "I cantot be con ugrateful as to deny fuch a famil favourne a gentleman who has laid me under the moft imiortant obligations."

The unexpected apparition of Mife Aurelia Darnel, caming with all the emantions of ripened beauty, hubing with all the graces of the moli lovely confution, could not but produce a violent effect upon the inid of Sir Lanneeld Creaves. He was, indeed, vertwhelmed with a mingled transfort of atomindent, administion, afficient, and awe. The colour uplifted from his checks, and he flood graing upon erf, in filence, with the molt emphatic expression of unetenance.

Aurcla was infected by this difurder: In the began by tremble, and the roles fluctuated on her free. I cannot forget, (faid flue) shat I owe my life to be courage and humanity of Sir Launcelot Greaves, You. II.

and that be, at the fame time, refcued from the moft dreadful death a dear and venerable parent." "Would to Heaven the fill furvived! (cried our adventurer with emotion): the was the great friend of my youth, the kind patroneds of my felicity! My guardian angel forfook me when the expired! Her fall injunctions are deep engreaven on my heart!"

While he pronounced the words the lifted her bundkerchief to her fair eyes; and, after forme paule, proceeded, in a tremalous tone, "I hope, Sir me, Sir, I cannot reflect upon fusch an interefling fubject unmoved——" Here file fetched a deep figh, that was accompanied with a flood of tears; while the knight continued to bend his eyes upon her with the utinof esgereness of attention.

Having recollected herieff a little, the endeavoured to thift the convertaints " You have been abroad fince I had the plefuture to fee you-I hope you were agreeably amufed in your travels." " No, Madam, (isid our hero, drooping his head) I have been unfortunate." When the, with the moft enchanting weetings of benevolence, experified her concern to hear he had been unhappy, and her hope that his winfortunes were not palt encedy; he flifted up his cycs, and fixed them upon her again with a look of tender dejection: " Cut off (faid he f) from the poffellion of what my foul held moft dear, I withed for death, and was vifted by diffraction I-I have been abandoned by my realon-my youth is for ever blafted."

The tender heart of Aurelia could bear no moreher knees began to totter; the luftre vanifhed from her eyes, and the fainted in the arms of her attendant. Sir Launcelot aroufed by this circumfance, afflited Dolly in (staing her mifters on a couch, where the foon recovered, and faw the knight on his knees before her. " I am ftill happy (faid he) in being able to move your competition, shough I have been held unworthy of your efterm." "Do me juftice, (fhe replied); my beft efterm has been always infeparably connected with the character of Sir Launcelot Greaves."-" Is it poffible? (cried our hero); then furely I have no reafon to complain. If I have moved your compatiion, and poffels your efteem, I am but one degree fhort of fupreme happinels-that, however, is a gigantic ftep .- O Mils Darnel ! when I remember that dear, that melancholy moment -----"" So faying, he gently touched her hand, in order to prefs it to his lips, and perceived on her finger the very individual ring which he had prefented in her mother's prefence, as an interchanged teftimony of plighted faith. Starting at the well-known object, the fight of which conjured up a ftrange confusion of ideas, " This (faid he) was once the pledge of fomething ftill more cordial than efteem." Aurelia, blufhing at this remark, while her eyes lightened with unufual vivacity, replied, in a feverer tone, "Sir, you beft know how it loft it's original fignification." " By Heaven! I do not, Madam! (ex-claimed our adventurer). With me it was ever held a facred idea throned within my heart, cherifhed with fuch fervency of regard, with fuch reverence of affection, as the devout anchorite more unreafonably pays to those fainted relics that conftitute the obfect of his adoration." " And, like those relice, (anfwered Mifs Darnel) I have been infenfible of my votary's devotion. A faint I must have been, or fomething more, to know the fentiments of your heart by infpiration." " Did I forbear, (faid he) to express, to repeat, to enforce the distates of the pureft paffion that ever warmed the human breaft. until I was denied accefs, and formally difcarded by that cruel difmiffion." - - " I muft beg your pardon, Sir, (cried Aurelia, interrupting him haftily), I know not what you mean."-"" That fatal fentence, (faid he), if not pronounced by your own lips, at leaft written by your own fair hand, which drove me out an exile for ever from the paradife of your affection."-" I would not (the replied) do Sir Launcelot Greaves the injury to suppose him capable of imposition; but you talk of things to which I am an utter ftanger. I have a right, Sir, to demand of your honour, that you will not impute to me your breaking off a connection, which ---- I would ------ I rather wifh-had never-" " Heaven and earth! what do I hear? (cried our impatient knight) have I not the baleful letter to produce ? What elfe but Mifs Darnei's explicit and express declaration could have deftroyed the fweetest hope that ever cheared my foul; could have obliged me to refigh all claim to that felicity for which alone I wished to live; could have filled my bofom with unutterable forrow and defoair : could have even divefted me of reafon, and driven me from the fociety of men, a poor, forlorn, wandering lunatic, fuch as you fee me now profirate at your feet : all the bloffoms of my youth withered, all the honours of my family decay-

C 2

Autelia looking wiftfolly at her lover, "Sir, (faid file) you over wheim me with amazement and anxiety 1 you are imposed upon, if you have received any luch letter: you are deceived, if you thought Aurelia Darnel could be fo infentible, ungrateful, and—inconfant."

This laft word fhe pronounced with fome hefitation, and a downcaft look, while her face underwent a total fuffufion, and the knight's heart began to palpitate with all the violence of emotion. He eagerly imprinted a kifs upon her hand, exclaiming, in interrupted phrafe, " Can it be poffible?—Heaven grant——Sore this is no illufool ——O, Madam 1 thall I call you my Anerlia? My heart is burfling with a thotafad food thoughts and prefages. You fhall fee that dire paper which hath been the fource of all my wore—it is the conflant companion of my travela—laft night I nourified my chagrin with the perulal of it's horrid contents."

Aurelia expressed great impatience to view the cruel forgery, for fuch fhe affured him it muft be : but he could not gratify her defire till the arrival of his fervant with the portmanteau. In the mean time, tea was called. The lovers were feated; he looked and languished, she flushed and faultered ; all was doubt and delirium, fondness and flutter. Their mutual diforder communicated itfelf to the kindhearted fympathizing Dolly ; who had been witnefs to the interview, and deeply affected with the difclofure of the scene. Unspeakable was her furprife when she found her mistrefs, Miss Meadows, was no other than the celebrated Aurelia Darnel, whole eulogium fhe had heard fo eloquently pronounced by her sweetheart Mr Thomas Clarke; a discovery which itill more endeared her lady to her affection. She had wept plentifully at the progress of their mutual explanation; and was now to difconcerted, that the fcarce knew the meaning of the orders the had received : fhe fet the kettle on the table, and placed the tea-board on the fire. Her confusion, by attracting the notice of her miltrefs, helped to relieve her from her own embarraffing fituation. She, with her own delicate hands, rectified the mittake of Dolly, who ftill continued to fob, and faid, "Yaw may think, my Leady Darnel, as haw l'aive yeaten hoolcheefe; but it y'an't foa-1'fe think, vor mai peart, as haw l'aive bean bewitched."

C 3

Sir Launcelot could not help fmiling at the fimment Aurelia did not fail to extol, as foon as her back was turned. It was in confequence of this commendation, that, the next time the entered the room, our adventurer, for the firit time, confidered her face, and fermed to be fruck with her features. He shed her form queftions, which the could not answer to his fastisficility applied her regard for her lady, and affured her of his friendfhip and protection. He now begged to know the caule that obliged his Anspage, and the informed him of the fearties when we have already communicated to the reader.

Sir Launcelot glowed with refentment when he understood how his dear Anrelia had been oppreffed by her perfidious and cruel guardian. He bit his nether-lip, rolled his eves around, ftarted from his feat, and flriding acrois the room, " I remember (faid he) the dying words of her who now is a faint in Heaven."____" That violent man, my brother-'n-law, who is Aurclia's fole guardian, will thwart her wifhes with every obflacle that brutal refeatment and implacable malice can contrive."------What followed, it would ill become me to repeat ; but fhe concluded with these words :- " The reft we mult leave to the difpentations of Providence." ----- " Was it not Providence that fent me hither, to guard and protect the injured Aurelia?" 'Then turning to Mifs Darnel, whole eyes ftreamed with tears, he added, " Yes, divine creature! Heaven, careful of your fafety, and in compellion to my fufferings, hath guided me hither in this myfterious manuer, that I might defend you from violence, and enjoy this tranfition from madnefs to deliberation, from defpair to felicity."

So faying he approached this aniable mourner, this fagrant flower of beauty, glittening with the dew-drops of the moraing; this fweeted, and gentleft, lovelieft ornament of human naturel. He gazed upon her with locks of love ineffable: he fat down by her; he prefied her folt hand in his; he began to fear that all he faw was the flattening wilon of a diftempered brain. He looked and fighed; and turning up his eyes to heaven, breathed, in broken murnurs, the chafte rappures of his foul. The tendernels of this communication was too painful to be long endured. Aurelia induffroully interpoled other fulfyeds of difcourte, that his attention might not be dangerouffy overcharged, and the afternoon paffed infendibly away.

Though he determined, in his own mind, never more to quit this idol of his foul, they had not yet concerted any plan of conduct, when their happinels was all at once interrupted by a repetition of cries, denoting horror; and a fervant coming in, faid, he believed fome rogues were murdering a traveller on the highway. The supposition of fuch diffress operated like gunpowder on the disposition of our adventurer; who, without confidering the fituation of to think on her, or any other fubject, for the time being, ran directly to the ftable, and mounting the first horfe which he found faddled, iffued out in the twilight, having no other weapon but his fword. He ran full fpeed to the fpot whence the crics feemed to proceed ; but they founded more remote as he advanced. Neverthelefs he followed them to a con-

34

fiderable diftance from the road, over fields, ditches, and hedges; and at laft came fo near, that he could plainly diffinguifh the voice of his own 'fquire, Timothy Crabshaw, bellowing for mercy, with hideous vociferation. Stimulated by this recognition, he redoubled his career in the dark, till at length his horfe plunged into a hole, the nature of which he could not comprehend; but he found it impracticable to difengage him. It was with fome difficulty that he himfelf clambered over a ruined wall, and regained the open ground. Here he groped about, in the utmoft impatience of anxiety, ignorant of the place, mad with vexation for the fate of his unfortunate 'fquire, and between whiles invaded with a pang of concern for Aurelia, left among ftrangers, unguarded and alarmed. In the midft of this emotion, he bethought himfelf of hallooing aloud, that, in cafe he should be in the neighbourhood of any inhabited place, he might be heard and affifted. He accordingly practifed this expedient, which was not altogether without effect ; for he was immediately answered by an old friend, no other than his own Reed Bronzomarte, who, hearing his master's voice, neighed Arenuoufly at a fmall dittance. The knight being well acquainted with the found, heard it with aftonifhment; and, advancing in the right direction, found his noble charger fastened to a tree. He forthwith untied and mounted him; then laying the reins upon his neck, allowed him to chufe his own path, in which he began to travel with equal fleadiness and expedition. They had not proceeded far when the knight's ears were again faluted by the cries of Crabfhaw; which Bronzomarte no fooner heard than he pricked up his ears, neighed, and quickened his pace, as if he had been fenfible of the 'fquire's diftrefs, and haftened to his relief. Sir Launcelot, notwithftanding his own difquiet, could not help obferving and admiring this generous fenfibility of his horfe: he began to think himfelf fome hero of romance mounted upon a winged fleed, infpired with reafon, directed by fome humane inchanter, who pitied virtue in diftrefs. All circumflances confidered, it is no wonder that the commotion in the mind of our adventurer produced fome fuch delirium. All night he continued the chace; the voice, which was repeated at intervals, fill retreating before him, till the morning began to appear in the eaft; when, by divers piteous groans, " he was directed to the corner of a wood, where he beheld his miferable 'fquire ftretched upon the grafs, and Gilbert feeding by him altogether unconcerned, the helmet and the lance fufpended at the faddle bow, and the portmanicau fafely fixed upon the crupper.

The knight, riding up to Crabshaw, with equal furprife and concern, afked him what had brought him there; and Timothy, after fome paufe, during which he furveyed his mafter with a rueful afpect, anfwered, " The devil !" " One would imagine, indeed, you had fome fuch conveyance, (faid Sir Launcelot). I have followed your cries fince laft evening I know not how, nor whither, and never could come up with you till this moment. But, fay, what damages have you fullained, that you lie in that wretched pofture, and groan fo difmally ?" " I can't guels, (replied the 'fquire) if it bean't that mai hoole carcafe is drilled into oilet bools, and my fleih pinched into a jelly."-" How ! wherefore ? (cried the knight )----- who were the mifcreants that treated you in fuch a barbarous manner? Do you know the suffians ?" " I know nothing at all, (answered the prevish 'fquire) but that I was tormented by vive hundred and vifty thouland legions of devils, and there's an end oon't !" "Well, you muth have a little patience, Crabihaw-there's a false for every fore." "Yaw mought as well tell ma, for every zow there's a zir exerence." "For a man in your condition, methicks you talk very much at your rafe. —Try if you can get up and mount Gilbert, that you may be conveyed to fome place where you can have proper alfifance.—So-well done !-chearly !"—

36

Timothy advally made an effort to rife, but fell down again, and uttered a difnal yell. Then his mafter exhorted him to take advantage of a parkwall by which he lay, and raife himfelf gradually upon it. Crabfhaw, eyeing him skance, faid, by way of reproach, for his not alighting and affilting him is perfon, "Thatch your house with t---d, and you'll have more teachers than reachers." Having pronounced this incleagant adage, he made fhit to fland upon his legs 1 and now, the knight lending a hand, was mounted upon Gilbert, though not without a world of Oh's! and Ah's! and other ejaculations of pain and impatience.

As they jogged on logether, our adventurer endeavoured to learn the particulars of the difater which had betallen the fugure; but all the information he could obtain amounted to a very imperfed? Retch of the adventure. By dint of a thouring in the preceding evening, concountered by three perfons on horfeback with Venetian mafls on their faces, which he miflowk for their natural features, and was ternifed accordingly: that they not only prefence pitfuls to his breath, and led his horfe out of the highway, but pricked him with goads, and pinched him from time to time, till he fercamed with the torture; that he was led through unfrequented places acrois the country, fometimes at an eafy trot, ometimes at full gallop; and tormented all night by hofe hideous demons, who vanified at day-break, and left him lying on the fpot where he was found by his maiter.

This was a mystery which our hero could by no means unriddle; it was the more unaccountable, as he 'fquire had not been robbed of his money, horfes, ind baggage. He was even difpofed to believe that Crabihaw's brain was difordered, and the whole account he had given no more than a chimera. This pinion, however, he could no longer retain, when he rrived at an inn on the post-road, and found, upon xamination, that Timothy's lower extremities were overed with blood, and all the reft of his body fpecked with livid marks of contusion. But he was still nore chagrined when the landlord informed him that e was thirty miles diftant from the place where he ad left Aurelia; and that his way lay through crofspads, which are almost impassable at that feafon of he year. Alarmed at this intelligence, he gave diections that his 'fquire should be immediately coneved to bed in a comfortable chamber, as he comlained more and more; and indeed was feized with a ver, occafioned by the fatigue, the pain, and terror, e had undergone. A neighbouring apothecary beg called, and giving it as his opinion that he could ot for fome days be in a condition to travel, his hafter deposited a sum of money in his hands, defirng he might be properly attended till he should hear arther. Then mounting Bronzomarte, he fet out with a guide for the place he had left, not without thousand fears and perplexities, arising from the rerecipitation.

CHAP. IV.

Which it is be hoped the Reader will find an agreeable Melody of Mirth and Madness, Sense and Absurdity.

I T was not without reafon the our adventurer aff. fiked himslift his farse were but too prophetic. When he alighted at the inn, which he had left fo abuptly the preceding evening, he ran directly in Aurelia's company; but her he faw not-all was foliary. Turning to the woman of the houle, who had followed him into the room, "Where is the lady "' cried he, in a tone of impatience. Mine holder forewing up her features into a very demure afpech, faid, the faw for maty ladies the could not pretend to know who he mease. "I tell they, woman, (exclaimed the knight, in a louder accent), thou never fawett foch another-1 mean, that minade of bacuty --"

"Very like, (replied the dame, as fhe retired to the room-door). Hufband, here's one as axes concerning a miracle of beauty; hi, hi, hi. Can you give him any information about this miracle of beauty?----O la! hi, hi, hi," Inftead of anfwering this queftion, the innkceper advancing, and furveying Sir Launcelot, " Friend, (faid hc) you are the perfon that carried off my horfe out of the ftable." " Tell me not of a borfe-Where is the young lady?" "Now I will tell you of the herfe, and I'll make you find him too, before you and I part." "Wretched animal! how dareft thou dally with my impatience ?- Speak, or defpair .- What is become of Mils Meadows ?- Say .. did the leave this place of her own accord, or was theha-! fpeak-anfwer; or, by the powers above-" " I'll anfwer you flat-fhe you call Mifs Meadows is in very good hands-fo you may make your-

If eafy on that foor--" "Sacred Heaven I eslain your meaning, mifercant, or I'll make you a readful example to all the infolent publicans of the read." So sying, he fizzed him with one and; and dahing him on the floor, fet one foot m his belly, and kept him trembling in that profarate titude. The offler and waiter flying to the affidmence of their mafter, our adventurer unfheathed his word, declaring he would difinifis their fools from their bodies, and externinate the whole family from whe face of the earth, if they would not immediately with him the faitsfalton he required.

The hoftefs being by this time terrified almost but of her fenfes, fell on her knees before him, beging he would fpare their lives, and promifing to delare the whole truth. He would not, however, remove his foot from the body of her hufband, until he told him, that in less than half an hour after he had fallied out upon the fuppofed robbers, two chaifes Frived, each drawn by four horfes; that two men med with pillols alighting from one of them, laid fiolent hands upon the young lady; and, notwithand ing her ftruggling and fbricking, forced her not the other carriage, in which was an infirm gen-Feman, who called himfelf her guardian; that the maid was left to the care of a third fervant, to follow with a third chaife, which was got realy with all moffible difpatch, while the other two proceeded at will speed on the road to London. It was by this mommunicative lacquey the people of the house were offormed that the old gentleman, his mafter, was Squire Darnel, the young lady his niece and ward. and our adventurer a needy fharper, who wanted to make a prey of her fortune.

The knight, fired even almost to franzy by this in-Vo1. II. D timation, fpurned the carcale of his hoft; and his eye gleaming terror, ruthed into the yard, in order to mount Bronzomarte and purfue the ravilher, when he was diverted from his purpole by a new incident.

One of the politions, who had driven the chain in which Dolly was conveyed, happened to arrive at that iniliart; when, feeing our hero, he ran up to him cap in hand, and prefenting a letter, accolic him in their words: "Pleafe your noble honour, it your honour be Sir Launcelot Greaves of the Weft Ridling; here's a letter from a gentlewoman, that promide to deliver into your honour's own hand."

The knight, fnatching the letter with the utmost avidity, broke it up, and found the contents couched in these terms.

" HONOURED SIR,

40

"The man az gi'an me leave to lat you knaw my dear leady is going to Loondon with her unkle 'Squire Darnel—Be not conzaraed honoured Sir, yor I'fe take it on mai laif to let yaw knaw wheare we be zetted, if zo be I can wind wheare you loadge in Loondon. The man zays yaw may put it in the pooble prints. I houp the barcheir will be honeft enuff to deliver this forowl; and that your honour will pardon

Your umbil fervaunt to cummand,

" DOROTHY COWSLI

"P. S. Picafe my kaind farvice to Laayer Clarke. 'Squire Darnel's man is very civil for fartain; but l'ave no thoughts on him 1'll affure yaw.-Marry hop, worfe ware may have a better chap, as the zaying goes.'

Nothing could be more featonable than the delivery of this billet; which he had no fooner perufed than his reflection returned, and he entered into a ferious deliberation with his own heart. He confidered hat Aurelia was by this time far beyond a poffibiliy of being overtaken, and that by a precipitate puruit he flould only expose his own infirmities. He onfided in the attachment of his miftrefs, and in the delity of her maid, who would find opportunities of ommunicating her fentiments, by means of this lacney, of whom he perceived by the letter the had already nade a conqueft. He therefore refolved to bridle his inpatience, to proceed leifurely to London; and inlead of taking any rafh flep which might induce Anthony Darnel to remove his niece from that city, main in feeming quiet until the thould be fettled, and her guardian returned to the country. Aurelia had mentioned to him the name of Ductor Kawdle, and from him he expected in due time to receive the most interesting information.

Thefe reflections had an inflattaneous effect upon bur hero, whole rage immediately fubfided, and whole wings gradually refuned it's natural caft of courtely and good humour. He forthwith gratified the poitilion with fued a remuneration as tent him dancing into the kitchen, where he did not fail to extol the generolity and immenfe fortune of Sir Launelot Greaves.

Our adventuer's next flep was to fee Bronzomarte properly accommodated; then le ordered a refrechment for him/elf, and retired into an apartment, where mine holt, with his wife, and all the fervants, waited on him, to befeech his hanour to forgive their imprefinence, which was owing to their ignorance of his honour's quality, and the falfe information they had received from the gentleman's fervant. If had too much maganalimity to retain the falte referentent againdf such inconfiderable obj-dts. He not only pardoned them without hefistion, but a faltred the Iandlord he would be accountable for the honfer which, however, was that fame evening brought home by a countryman, who found him pounded, as it were, within the walls of a rained cottage. As the knight had been greatly fatigued, without enjoying any refl for eight-and-forty hours, he refolved to indulge himfelf with one night's report, and then to return to the place where he left his 'fquire indifipofed'; for by this time even his concern for Timothy had recurred.

Dz

On a candid feruiting of his own heart, he found himfelf much lefs unhappy than he had been before his interview with Aurelia; for, inflead of being, as formeily, tormented with the pages of defparing love, which had actually unfettled his underflanding, he was now happily convinced that he had infpired the tender brealt of Aurelia with mutual affection; and though the was invisionally functhed from his embrace, in the midd for fuch endearments as had wound up his foul to extafy and transport, he did not doubt of being able to refeue her from the power of an inhuman kinfman, whofe guardianting would for of courte expire; and in the mean since herefled with the moß perfect dependence ou her conflancy and wittue.

As he next day croffed the country, ruminating on the difatter that had befallen his 'quiere, and could now compare circumliances coully, he esfly comprehended the whole faheme of that adventure, which was no other than an artifice of Anthony Durnel and his emiffairies to draw him from the inn, where he propold to execute his defign upon the innovent Aurelia. He took it for granted that the uncle, having been made acquaisted with his nicce's elopement, had followed her track by the help of fuch haformation as he received from one flage to another; and that, receiving more particulars at the White start touching Sir Launcelut, he had formed the scheme in which Crabhaw was an involuntary indrument towards the feduction of his malter.

Amufing himfelf with thefe and other cogitations, ur hero in the afternoon reached the place of his effination; and entering the inn where Timothy had been left at fick-quarters, chanced to meet the pothecary retiring precipitately, in a very unfavoury bickle, from the chamber of his patient. When he moquired about the health of his 'fquire, this retailer of medicine, wiping himfelf all the while with a napzin, answered, in manifelt confusion, that he appremaended him to be in a very dangerous way, from an forflamination of the pia mater, which had produced a most furious delirium. Then he proceeded to ex-Blain, in technicel terms, the method of cure he had followed; and concluded with telling him the poor funite's brain was to outrageoufly difordered, that he had rejected all administration, and juft thrown an urinal in his face.

The knight's humanity being alarmed at this inelligence, the reloved that Crabibaw mould have the sensitive of farther advice; and aliced if there was not sphylicianj a the place. The apothecary, after forme mergicfilms of petitation, owned there was a do-don the willage, an odd fost of a humourid; but he selieved he had not much to do in the way of his profilion, and was not much ufed to the forms of refeription. Heways counted a fcholar, to be fare: out as to his midical capacity—he would not take upon him to foy—" No matter, (cried Sir Luusclot) it may licke out fome licky thought for the predict of the patient, and I defire y u will call him adoubty"—

While the apothecary was ablent on this fervice, our adventurer took it into his head to queflion the landlord about the character of this phylician, which had been fo unfavourably reprefented + and received the following information.

" For my peart, meafter, I knows nothing amils of the doctor-he's a quiet fort of an inoffenfive man; uses my house fometimes, and pays for what he has, like the reft of my cuftomers. They fay he deals very little in physic fluff, but cures his patients with fafting and water-gruel, whereby he can't expect the pothecary to be his friend. You knows, measter, one must live, and let live, as the faying is. I must fay, he, for the value of three guineas, fet up my wife's conflictution in fuch a manner, that I have faved within thefe two years, I believe, forty pounds in pothecary's bills. But what of that? Every man mult eat, tho'f at another's expence ; and I should be in a deadly hole myfelf, if all my cuftomers fhould take it in their heads to drink nothing but watergruel, becaufe it is good for the constitution. Thank God, I have as good a conflitution as e'er a man in England ; but for all that, I and my whole family bleed and purge, and take a diet drink twice a-year, by way of ferving the pothecary, who is a very honelt man, and a very good neighbour."

Their convertation was interrupted by the return of the apothecary with the doftor, who had very little of the faculty in his appearance. He was deeffed remarkably plain; feemed to be turned of fifty; had a careled air, and a farcaftical turn in his countenance. Before he entered the fack man's chamber, he afted fome queftions concerning the diffact; and when the apothecary, pointing to his own head, faid, "It lies all here;" the doftor, turning to Sir Launcellst, spelicd, "If that be all, there's nothing in it."

Upon a more particular inquiry about the fymp. toms, he was told that the blood was feemingly vifcous, and falt upon the tongue; the urine remarkably acrolaline; and the faces atrabilious and foctid. When the doctor faid he would engage to find the fame phenomena in every healthy man of the three kingdoms, the apothecary added, that the patient was manifeftly comatous, and moreover afflicted with griping pains and borborygmata .-... " A f-t for your borborygmata! (cried the phyfician), What has been done ?" To this queftion he replied, that vene-fection had been three times performed; that a vencatory had been applied inter scapulas ; that the patient had taken occasionally of a cathartic apozem; and, between whiles, alexipharmic bolufes and neutral draughts .---- " Neutral, indeed! (faid the doctor); to neutral, that I'll be crucified if ever they declare either for the patient or the difeafe." So faying, he brushed into Crabshaw's chamber, followed by our adventurer, who was almost fuffocated at his firft entrance. The day was close; the window-fhutters were fastened; a huge fire blazed in the chimney; thick harateen curtains were close drawn round the bed, where the wretched 'fquire lay extended under an enormous load of blankets. The nurfe, who had all the exteriors of a bawd given to drink, fat flewing in this apartment like a damued foul in fome infernal bagnio; but rifing when the company entered, made her curtiles with great decorum. "Well, faid the doctor, how does your patient, nurfe ?"-Bleffed be God for it, I hope in a fair way-to be fure his apozem has had a bleffed effect-five-and-twenty ftools fince three o'clock in the morning .---- But then a'would not fuffer the blifters to be put upon his thighs .-- Good lack ! a'has been mortally obffropolous, and out of his feafes all this bleffed day.

"You lie! (cried the 'fquire); I a'a't out of my feven fenfcs, thof I am half mad with vexation."

The doctor having withdrawa the curtain, the haplefs 'fquire appeared very pale and ghafily ; and having furveyed his mafter with a rueful afpect, addreffed him in thefe words : " Sir Knight, I beg a boon ; be pleafed to tie a flone about the neck of the apothecary, and a halter about the neck of the nurfe, and throw the one into the next river, and the other over the next tree; and in fo doing you will do a charitable deed to your fellow-creatures ; for he and fhe do the devil's work in partnership, and have fent many fcore of their betters home to him before their time."-" Oh! he begins to talk fenfibly." " Have a good heart, (faid the phyfician). What is your dionder?" • Paptic." • What do you chiefly complain of?" • The doctor." • Does your head ache?" • Yes, with imperinence." • Have you a pain in your back ?" • Yea, where the blifter lies." "Are you lick at flomach?" "Yes, with hunger." " Do you feel any thivefings ?" " Always at the fight of the apothecary." "Do you perceive any load in your bowels?" "I would the apothecary's confcience was as clear." " Are you thirity?" " Not enough to drink barley-water." " Be pleafed to look into his fauces, (faid the apothecary): he has got a rough tongue, and a very foul mouth, I'll affure you." " I have known that the cafe with fome limbs of the faculty, where they flood more in need of correction than of phyfic .- Well, my honeit friend, fince you have already undergone the proper purgations in due form, and fay you have no other difeafe than the doctor, we will f. t you on your lege again without farther queftion. H re, nurfe, open that window, and throw these phials into the freet. Now, lower the curtain, without flutting the cafe-

ment, that the man may not be fiffed in his own fram. In the next place, take off two-thirds of hefe coals, and one-third of thefe blankets...-How do'ft feel now, my heart i'' "I fhould feel heartwhole if fo be as yaw would throw the noorfe a're the bottles, and the pothecary a'ter the noorfe; and border me a pound of chops for my dinner; for I be to honopry, I could est a horfe behind the faddle."

The apothecary, feeing what paffed, retired of his own accord, holding up his hands, in fign of aftonifhment. The nurle was difmiffed in the fame breath. Crabshaw arole, dreffed himfelf without affistance. and made a hearty meal on the first eatable that preented itfelf to view. The knight paffed the evening with the phylician ; who, from his first appearance, concluded he was mad; but, in the courfe of the converfation, found means to refign that opinion, withbut adopting any other in lieu of it, and parted with him under all the impatience of curiofity. The knight, on his part, was very well entertained with the witty farcafms and erudition of the doctor, who appeared to be a fort of cynic philosopher, tinctured with mifanthropy, and at open war with the whole body of apothecaries; whom, however, it was by no means his interest to disoblige.

Next day, Crabhaw being, to all appearance, perfelly recovered, our adventurer recknowed with the nonheary, paid the landlord, and fet out on his reruns for the London road, refolving to lay afide his symour at fome diltance from the metropolis; for, ver fince his interview with Aurelia, his fonded's or clivially had been greadually abairing. As the orrest of his delpair had difordered the current of nis fober refection; fo now, as that delpair fublicda, high thoughts began to flow deliberately in their amtient channel. All day long he regaled his imagination with plans of consubial happinefs, formed on the polfeflion of the incomparable Aurelia; the mined to wait with patience, until the law fhould fuperfede the authority of her guyrdian, rather than adopt any violent expedient, which might hazard the intereft of his pafilion.

He had for fome time travelled in the turnpike road, when his reverie was fuddenly interrupted by a confused noife; and when he lifted up his eyes, he beheld, at a little diffance, a rabble of men and women varioufly armed, with flails, pitch-forks, poles, and mulkets, acting offenfively against a strange figure on horfeback, who, with a kind of lance, laid about him with incredible fury. Our adventurer was not fo totally abandoned by the fpirit of chivalry, to fee without emotion a fingle knight in danger of being overpowered by fuch a multitude of adverfaries. Without flaying to put on his helmet, he ordered Crabshaw to follow him in the charge against those plebeians: then couching his lance, and giving Bronzomarte the fpur, he began his career with fuch impetuofity, as overturned all that happened to be in his way : and intimidated the rabble to fuch a degree, that they retired before him like a flock of fheep, the greater part of them believing he was the devil in propria persona. He came in the very nick of time to fave the life of the other errant, againft whom three loaded mulquets were actually levelled, at the very inftant that our adventurer began his charge. The unknown knight was fenfible of the feafonable interpolition, that riding up to our hero, " Brother, (faid he) this is the fecond time you have holp me off when I was bump afhore .---- Befs Mizzen, I must fay, is no more than a leaky bum boat, in comparison of the glorious galley you want to man. I defire that henceforth we may cruize in the fame latitudes, brother; and I'll be damned if I don't fland by you as long as I have a flick flanding, or can carry a rag of canvas."

By this address our knight recognized the novice Captain Crowe, who had found means to accommodate himfelf with a very ftrange fuit of armour. By way of helmet, he wore one of the caps used by the light-horfe, with ftraps buckled under his chin, and contrived in fuch a manner as to conceal his whole vilage, except the eyes .- Inflead of cuirals, mail, greaves, and other pieces of complete armour, he was caled in a postilion's leathern jerkin, covered with thin plates of tinned iron : his buckler was a pot-lid, his lance a hop-pole fhod with iron, and a balket-hilt broad fword, like that of Hudibras, depending by a broad buff belt that girded his middle, His feet were defended by jack-boots, and his hands by the gloves of a trooper. Sir Launcelot would not lofe time in examining particulars, as he perceived fome mifchief had been done, and that the enemy had rallied at a diflance; he therefore commanded Crowe to follow him, and rode off with great expedition; but he did not perceive his 'fquire was taken prifoner ; nor did the captain recollect that his nephew, Tom Clarke, had been difabled and fecured in the beginning of the fray. The truth is, the poor captain had been fo belaboured about the pate, that it was a wonder he remembered his own name.

CHAP. V.

Containing Adventures of Chivalry equally new and surprising.

THE knight, Sir Launcelot, and the novice Crap- retreated with equal order and expedition, to the diffance of half a league from the field of battle; where the former halting, proposed to make a lodgment in a very decent houle of entertainment, diftinguished by the fign of St George of Cap. padocia encountering the dragon ; an atchievement in which temporal and fpiritual chivalry were happily reconciled. Two fuch figures alighting at the inn gate, did not pais through the yard unnoticed and unadmired by the guefts and attendants; fome of whom fairly took to their heels, on the fuppolition that these outlandish creatures were the avant couriers or heralds of a French invation. The fears and doubts, however, of those who ventured to flay, were foon difpelled, when our hero accofted them in the English tongue, and, with the most courteous demeanor, defired to be fhewn into an apartment.

Had Captain Crowe been fpokefman, perhaps their fulpicions would not have fo quickly fubfided; for he was, in reality, a very extraordinary novice, not only in chivalry, but alfo in his external appearance, and particularly in those dialects of the English language which are used by the terreftrial animals of this kingdom. He defired the offler to take his horfe in tow, and bring him to his moorings in a fafe riding. He ordered the waiter, who shewed them into a parlour, to bear-a-hand, ship his oars, mind his helm, and bring along-fide a fhort allowance of brandy or grog, that he might cant a flug into his bread-room: for there was fuch a heaving and pitching, that he believed he fhould fhift his ballaft. The fellow underflood no part of this address but the word brandy, at mention of which he difappeared. Then Crowe, throwing himfelf into an elbow-chair, " Stop my hawfe-holes, (cried he) I can't think what's the matter, brother; but, egad, by head fings and fimmers like a pot of chowder. My eye-fight aws to and again, d'ye fee: then there's fuch a walpping and whufning in my hold—fmite my—Lord ave mercy upon us!—Here, you (wab! ne'er sind a glafs—band me the noggin."

The fatter part of this addrefs was directed to the miter, who had returned with the quarters of brany; which Crowe fnatching eagerly, flarted into his read-room at one cant. Indeed, there was no time be loth; insimuch as he feemed to be on the verge f fainting away when he fwallowed this cordial, by which he was inflantaneoully revieed.

He then defired the fervant to unbuckle the firaps f his helmet; but this was a talk which the drawer hould not perform, even though affilted with the good flices of Sir Launcelot; for the head and jaws were much fwelled with the dicipline they had undertone, that the firaps and buckles lay buried, as it were, in pits formed by the tumefaction of the adjawent parts.

Fortunately for the novice, a neighbouring furgeon affed by the door on horfeback; a circumstance which the waiter, who faw him from the window, o fooner difclofed, than the knight had recourfe to is affiltance. This practitioner having viewed the whole figure, and more particularly the head of Crowe, in filent wonder, proceeded to feel his pulfe; and then eclared, that as the inflammation was very great, and in joing on with violence to its akme, it would be necefmary to begin with copious phlebotomy, and thea to mpty the inteffinal canal. So faying, he began to rip the arm of the captain; who perceiving his aim, Avalt, brother ! (cried he); you go the wrong way to work-you may as well rummage the afterold when the damage is in the fore-callle. I shall "ght again when my jaws are unhooped."

With thefe words he drew a clafp-knife from hi procket; and advancing to a glafa, applied if to vigo roully to the leather flraps of his head piece, that the Gordinarknot was cut without any other damage t his face than a moderate fearification, which, addeto the tumefaction of features, naturally flrong, and a whole week's growth of a very buffly beard, pro duced, on the whole, a moft hideous caricators after all, there was a neeffity for the adminification of the furgeon, who found divers contufions on differ ent parts of the fkull, which even the tin cap has not been able to protect from the weapons of the ruftics.

Thefe being flaved and dreffed zeundam arten and the operator dimified with a proper acknowledgment, our knight detached one of the poft-boys to the field of aftion, for intelligence concerning Mi Clarke and "Squire Timothy; and, in the interim, defired to know the particulars of Crowe's advecture face he parted with him at the White Har.

A connected relation, in plain English, was what he had little reafon to expect from the novice; who, neverthelefs, exerted his faculties to the uttermolt, for his fatisfaction. He gave him to underftand, that in fleering his courfe to Birmingham, where he thought of fitting himfelf with tackle, he had fallen in by accident, at a public-houfe, with an itinerant tinker, in the very act of mending a kettle-that feeing him do his bufinels like an able workman, he had applied to him for advice; and the tinker, after having confidered the fubject, had undertaken to make him fuch a fuit of armour as neither fword nor lance fhould penetrate-that they adjourned to the next town, where the leather coat, the plates of tinned iron, the lance, and the broad fword, were purchafed, together with a copper fauce-pan, which the article as now at work upon, in converting it to a fhield ; at, in the mean time, the captain being impatient begin his career of chivalry, had accommodated mfelf with a pot-lid, and taken to the highway, twithstanding all the entreaties, tears, and remontances, of his nephew Tom Clarke ; who could t, however, be prevailed upon to leave him in the ingerous voyage he had undertaken-that this beg the fecond day of his journey, he deferied five or men on horleback, bearing up full in his teeth ; bon which he threw his fails a-back, and prepared r action-that he hailed them at a confiderable Rance, and bade them bring to; when they came ong-fide, notwithstanding his hail, he ordered them clew up their courfes, and furl their top-fails, oerwife he would be foul of their quarters-that aring this falute, they luffed all at ouce, till their oth fhook in the wind; then he ballooed, in a loud sice, that his fweetheart Beffelia Mizzen, wore the oad pendant of beauty ; to which they must firike eir top-fails, on pain of being fent to the bottomat after having eyed him for fome time with aftofhment, they clapped on all their fails, fome of them inning under his ftern, and others athwart his foreot, and got clear off-that, not fatisfied with runmg a-head, they all of a fudden tacked about; and e of them boarding him on the lee-quarter, gave in fuch a drubbing about his upper works, that the this danced in his lanterns-that he returned the lute with his hop-pole fo effectually, that his aggrefr broached to in the twinkling of an handfpike ; id then he was engaged with all the reft of the eney, except one, who sheered off, and soon returned th a molqueto fleet of fmall craft, who had done m confiderable damage; and, in all probability, would have made a prize of him, hadn't be beët brought off by the knight's gallantry. He faid, that in the beginning of the conflict, Tom Clarke rode up to the foremost of the enemy, as he did fuppofe, in order to prevent holdities; but before he got up to him near enough to hold difcourfe, he was pooped with a fee that almost fent him to the bottom, and then towed off he knew aow whither.

Ez

Crowe had Carce finithed his narration, which confided of broken hints and unconnected exploitons of featerms, when a gentleman of the neighbourhood, who acked in the committion of the peace, arrived at the gate, attended by a couldable, who had in enflody the b-dies of Thomas Clarke and Timothy Crabfhaw, furrounded by five men on botfeack, and an innumerable polic of men, women, and children, on foot. The captain, who always kept good lookout, no foomer deferied this cavaleade and procefilion, than he gave-notice to Sir Launcelot, and advifed that they fhould croud away with all the cloth they could carry. Our adventure was of another opinion, and determined at any rate, to procure the ealargement of the priloner.

The juffice, ordering his attendants to flay without the gate, lent his complements to Sit Launcelot Grazves, and defired to fpeak with him for a few minates. He was immediately admittedy and could not help flaring at fight of Crowej, who, by this time, had no remains of the human phylognomy; fo much was the fwelling increafed and the likin difficioured. The gentleman, whole name was Elmy, having made a polite apology for the liberty the had taken, proceeded to unfold his bufinels. He faid, information had been lodged with him, as a juffice of the peace, againd two armed men on horfeback, who had flopped for farmers on the king's highway, put them in Lear Ind danger of their lives, and even affaulted, maimed, and wounded divers periods, contrary to the king's seace, and in violation of the flatute : that, by the effortion, he fuppoled the knight and his compation to be the perions agains whom the complaint and been lodged: and underflanding his quality from Mr Clarke, whom he had known in London, he was some to wait upon him, and, if poffible, effect an acformmodation.

Our adventurer, having thanked him for the polite and the obliging manner in which he proceeded. rankly told him the whole ftory, as it had been juft related by the captain; and Mr Elmy had no reafon to doubt the truth of the narrative, as it confirmed every circumftance which Clarke had before reported. Indeed, Tom had been very communicative to this gentleman, and made him acquainted with the whole history of Sir Launcelot Greaves, as well as with the whimfical refolution of his uncle Captain Crowe. Mr Elmy now told the knight, that the perfons whom the captain had ftopped were farmers, returning from a neighbouring market : a fet of people naturally boorifh, and at that time elevated with ale to an uncommon pitch of infolence : that one of them in particular, called Prickle, was the moft quarrelfome fellow in the whole country; and fo litigious, that he had maintained above thirty law-fuits, in eight-and-twenty of which he had been condemned in cofts. He faid, the others might be eafily influenced in the way of admonition ; but there was no way of dealing with Prickle, except by the form and authority of the law : he therefore propoled to hear evidence in a judicial capacity; and his clerk being in attendance, the court was immediately opened in the knight's apartment.

E 3

By this time Mr Clarke had made fuch good ule of his time in explaining the law to his audience, and difplaying the great wealth and unbounded liberality of Sir Launcelot Greaves, that he had actually brought over to his fentiments the conftable and commonalty, tag, rag, and bob-tail; and even ftaggered the majority of the farmers, who at first had breathed nothing but defiance and revenge. Farmer Stake being first called to the bar, and fworn touching the identity of Sir Launcelot Greaves and Captain Crowe, declared, that the faid Crowe had ftopped him on the king's highway, and put him in bodily fear; that he afterwards faw the faid Crowe, with a pole of weapon, value threepence, breaking the king's peace, by committing affualt and battery against the heads and thoulders of his majefty's liege fubjects, Geoffroy Prickle, Hodge Dolt, Richard Bumpkin, Mary Fang, Catharine Rubble, and Margery Litter; and that he faw Sir Launcelot Greaves, baronet, aiding, affifting, and comforting the faid Crowe, contrary to the king's peace, and againft the form of the flatute.

Being affect, if the defendant, when he floped them, demanded their money, or threatneed violence? he an(wered, he could not fay, inafmuch as the defendant flopke in an unknown language. Being interropated, if the defendant did not allow them to pafs without ufing any violence, and if they did not pafs unnoldied? the deponent replied in the affirmative. Being required to tell for what reaion they returned, and if the defendant Crowe, was not affaulted before he began to ufe his weapon ; the deponent made no anfower. The depofition of farmer Bumphin and Marggins, as well as of Madge Litter and Mary Fang, were taken to much the fame pupple; and his worfhip earnelly exhorted them to an accommodation ; obferving, that they threnglers were; in fach, the ag-greffors, and that Captain Crowe had done no more than exerted himfelf in his own defence.

They were all pretty well disposed to follow his advice, except Farmer Prickle, who entering the court with a bloody handkerchief about his head. declared that the law fhould determine it at next fize; and, in the mean time, infilted that the defendants fhould find immediate bail, or go to prifon, or be set in the stocks. He affirmed, that they had been guilty of an affray, in appearing with armour and weapons, not ufually worn, to the terror of others, which is in itself a breach of the peace; but that they had, moreover, with force of arms, that is to fay, with iwords, flaves, and other warlike inftruments, by turns, made an affault and affray. to the terror and diffurbance of him and divers subjects of our lord the king then and there being, and to the evil and pernicious example of the liege people of the faid lord the king, and against the peace of our faid lord the king, his crown and dignity.

The peakint had purchaled a few law-terms at a condiderable expense, and he though the had a right to turn his knowledge to the anonyance of all his neighbours. Mr Elmy, finding him oblitanctly derf to all propofals of accommodation, held the defendants to very moderate bail, the landlord and the catrace of the partial freedy offering themfleves as furction. Mr Clarke, with Timothy Crabhaw, againt Wanon nohing appeared, were now fer at liberry; when the tarmer, advancing to his working, gave information againt Geoffroy Prickle; and declared upon oath, that he had feen him alfault Captain Crowe without any provacion a and when he, the deponent, interpoled to prevent farther michief, the faid Prickle and likewise affultet and wounded him the deponence.

and detained him for fome time in falle imprifonment, without warrant or authority.

In confequence of this information, which was corroborated by divers evidences felected from the mob at the gate, the tables were turned upon Farmer Prickle, who was given to understand that he must either find bail, or be forthwith imprisoned. This honest boor, who was in epulent circumftances, had made fuch popular use of the benefits he poffeffed, that there was not an house-keeper in the parish who would not have rejoiced to fee him hanged. His dealings and connections, however, were fuch, that none of the other four would have refufed to bail him, had not Clarke given them to underftand, that, if they did, he would make them all principals and parties, and have two feparate actions against each. Prickle happened to be at variance with the inu-keeper; and the curate durft not difoblige the vicar, who at that very time was fueing the farmer for the small tythes. He offered to deposit a fum equal to the recognizance of the knight's bail; but this was rejected, as an expedient contrary to the practice of the courts. He lent for the attorney of the village, to whom he had been a good cuftomer, but the lawyer was hunting evidence in another county. The excifeman prefented himfelf as a furety ; but he not being an houfekeeper, was not accepted. Divers cottagers, who depended on Farmer Prickle, were fucceffively refufed, becaufe they could not prove that they had paid foot and lot and parish taxes. The farmer, finding himfelf thus forlorn, and in

In carmer, meaning inner two originations, and in imminent danger of withing the influed of a prifery, was feized with a paroxyfm of rage; during which he inveighed againit the bench; reviled the two adventurers errant; declared that he believed, and would lay a wager of twenty guineas, that he had more moncy in his pocket, than err a man in the company; and, in the [pace of a quarter of an bour, wore forty onthe, which the juffice did not fail to number. "Before we proceed to other matters; (faid Mr Elmy), I order you to pay forty fillingue for the onthe you have (wore, otherwait I will caule you to be fet in the flocks without farther ecremony.

Prickle, throwing down a couple of guineas, with two execrations more to make up the fum, declared that he could afford to pay for fwearing as well as e'er a juffice in the county ; and repeated his challenge of the wager; which our adventurer now ac. cepted, protesting at the fame time that it was not a ftep taken from any motive of pride, but entirely with a view to punish an infolent plebeian, who could not otherwife be chattifed without a breach of the peace. Twenty guineas being deposited on each fide in the hands of Mr Elmy, Prickle, with equal confidence and dispatch, produced a canvas bag, containing two hundred and feventy pounds; which, being fpread upon the table, made a very formidable fhew, that dazzled the eyes of the beholders, and induced many of them to believe he had infured his conquest.

Our adventuer adking if he had any thing farther to offer, and being anfwered in the negative, drew forth, with great deluberation, a pocket-book, in which there was a confiderable parcel of bank noics, from which he felckfed three of one hundred pounds each, and exhibited them upon the table, to the aft influence of all prefers. Pricekle, mand with his overthrow and lofs, find it might be neceffary to make him prove the notes were honefully come by: and Sir Launcelot flarted up in order to take vengeance upon lim for this infult, but was witheld by the arms and renonfrances of Mr Elmy, who affured him that Prickle defired nothing fo much as another broken head, to lay the foundation of a new profecution.

60

'The knight, calmed by this interpolition, turned to the addince, faving, with the mod faffible deportment, "Good people, do not imagine that I intend to pocket the fpoil of fuch a contempsible rafcal. I fhall begt the favour of this worthy genleman to take up thefe twenty guiness, and dikribute them as he fhall think proper among the poor of the parifit, but, by this benefaction, I do not hold myfelf acquitted for the thare I had in the brailes fome of you have received in this unlucky fray; and therefore I give the other twenty guinesas to be divided among the fufferers, to each according to the damage he or fide full appear to have furthaned; and 1 fhall confider it as an additional obligation if Mr Elmy will likewife (uperimend this retribution."

At the clofe of this addrefs, the whole yard and gateway rung with acclamations, while honef Crowe, whole generofity was not inferior even to that of the accomplified Greaves, pulled out his purfe, and declared, that, as he had began the engagement, he would at leaft go fhare and fhare alike in new-caulking their fearma and repairing thir timbers. The knight, rather than enter into a difpute with his novice, told him he confidered the twenty guiness as given by them both in conjurction, and that they would confer together on that fubje thereafter.

This point being adjufted, Mr Elmy affumed all the folemnity of the magilirate, and addreffed himfelf to Prickle in thefe words: "Farmer Prickle, I am both forty and afhamed to fee a man of your years and circumflances fo little refpected that you cannot find fufficient bail for forty pounds; a fure teftimony that you have neither cultivated the friendflip nor defereed the good-will of your neighbours. I have head of your quarrels and your riots, your infolence and litipious difpolition, and often wilhed for an opportunity of giving you a proper tafte of the law's correction. That opportunity now offers-you have, in the hearing of all these people, poured forth a torrent of abule against me, both in the character of a gentleman and of a magistrate; your abusing me perfonally, perhaps I should have overlooked with the contempt it deferves; but I fhould ill vindicate the dignity of my office as a magistrate, by fuffering you to infult the bench with impunity. I fhall therefore imprison you for contempt, and you shall remain in paol until you can find bail on the other profecutions." Prickle, the first transports of his anger having "Iublided, began to be pricked with the thorns of compunction. He was, indeed, extremely mortified at the profpect of being fent to gaol fo difgracefully. His countenance fell; and, after a hard internal a ftruggle, while the clerk was employed in writing the mittimus, he faid, he hoped his worship would not fend him to prifon. He begged pardon of him and our adventurers for having abuled them in his paffion; and obferved, that as he had received a broken head, and paid two-and twenty guineas for his folly, he could not be faid to have escaped altogether without punishment, even if he the plaintiff hould agree to exchange releafes.

Sir L'anacelot feeing this fubbon rullie effectually humbled, beenne an alvocate in his forwur with Mr is Elmy and Tom Clarke, who forgave him at his reaquelt ; and a mutuai releafe being exceuted, the farmer was permitted to depart. The populace were regaled at our adventure? expence; and the mon, women, and children, who had been wounded or bruifed in the battle, to the aumher of ten or a didozen, very defired to wait upon Mr Elmy in the morning, to receive the knight's bounty. The juftice was prevailed upon to fread the evening with Sir Launcelot and his typo companions, for whom furper was befocks; but the first hing the cook prepated, was a poultice for Crowe's head, which was now callaged to a monflecous exhibition. Our knight, who was all kindnefs and complacency, flock MC Clarke by the hand, exprelling his fatisfaction at meeting with biseld friends agains; and told him foftly, that he had compliance a for him from Mrs Dolly Cowflip, who now lived with his Aurelia.

Clarke was confounded at this intelligence ; and, after fome hefitation, " Lord blefs my foul 1 (cried he) I'll be fhot, then. if the pretended Mils Meadows wa'n't the fame as Mifs Darnel !" He then declared himfelf extremely glad that poor Dolly had got into fuch an agreeable fituation, paffed many warm encomiums on her goodnels of heart and virtuous inclinations, and concluded with appealing to the knight whether fhe did not look very pretty in her green joleph. In the mean time he procured a plaifter for his own head, and helped to apply the poultice to that of his uncle, who was fent to bed betimes with a moderate dole of fack-whey to promote perfpiration. The other three paffed the evening to their mutual fatisfaction ; and the justice in particular grew enamoured of the knight's character, dashed as it was with extravagance.

 Let us now leave them to the edjoyment of a fober and rational convertation, and give forme account, of other guefts who arrived late in the evening, and here fixed their night-quarters.—Dut as we have already trefpatified on the reader's patience, we fhall give him a flort refpite until the next chapter makes it's appearnce.

CHAP. V.

In which the Rays of Chivalry shine with renovated Lustre.

Durk hero little dreaded that he had a formidable rival in the perfon of the knight, who arrived hout eleven at the fign of the St George, and, by he noife he made, gave intimation of his importance. This was no other than 'Squire Sycamore' who haing received advice that Mifa Aurelia Darnel had loped from the place of her retreat, immediately ack the field in queft of that lovely fugitive, hoping hat, fhould he have the good fortune to find her in are prefent differs, his good offices would not be reexcited. He had followed the chace fo clofe, that immediately after our adventure's departure, he arighted at the inn from whence Aurelia had been inversed, and where he learned the particulars which we have related above.

Mr Sycamore had a great deal of the childifh ronantic in his disposition; and, in the course of his mours, is faid to have always taken more pleasure in he pursuit than in the final poffeffion. He had heard of Sir Launcelot's extravagance, by which he was in ome measure infected : and he dropped an infinuaion that he could ecliple his rival even in his own unatic fohere. This hint was not loft upon his combanion, countellor, and buffoon, the facetious Davy Dawdle, who had fome humour, and a great deal of milchief in his composition. He looked upon his patron as a fool, and his patron knew him to be both knave and fool; yet the two characters fuited each other fo well, that they could hardly exift alunder." Davy was an artful fycophant, but he did not flatter V.L. Il.

in the ufual way; on the contrary, he behaved en cavalier, and treated Sycamore, on whole bounty he fublitted, with the most farcaftic familiarity. Neverthelefs, he feafoned his freedom with certain qualifying ingredients that fubdued the bitternefs of it; and was now become fo necellary to the 'fquire, that he had no idea of enjoyment with which Dawdle was not fome how or other connected. There had been a warm diffoute betwixt them about the fcheme of conteffing the prize with Sir Launcelot in the lifts of chivalry. Sycamore had infinuated, that if he had a mind to play the fool, he could wear armour, wield a lance, and manage a charger, as well as Sir Launcelot Greaves. Dawdle, fuatching the hint, " I had fometime ago (faid he) contrived a fcheme for you, which I was afraid you had not address enough to execute-It would be no difficult matter, in imitation of the Bachelof Sampfon Carrafco, to go in quelt of Greaves as a knight errant, defy him as a rival, and cflablifh a compact by which the vanquifhed fhould obey the injunctions of the victor." ---- " That is my very idea," (cried Sycamore). "Your idea, (replied the other); had you ever an idea of your own conception?"---- Thus the difpute began, and was maintained with great vehemence; until, other arguments failing, the 'fquire offered to lay a wager of twenty guineas. To this propofal Dawdle answered by the interjection Publ which inflamed Sycamore to a repetition of the defiance .- " You are in the right (faid Dawdle) to use fuch an argument, as you know is by me unanswerable; a wager of twenty guineas will at any time overthrow and confute all the logic of the moft able fyllogift who has not got a fhilling in his pocket.D

Sycamore looked very grave at this declaration ;

nd, after a fhort pause, faid, " I wonder, Dawdle, hat you do with all your money !" " I am furfifed you should give yourfelf that trouble ____ I ver alk what you do with yours." ---- " You have b occasion to ask; you know pretty well how it pes." "What! do you upbraid me with your faburs ?---- 'tis mighty well, Sycamore."-" Nay, awdle, I did not intend to affront."-" Z---- 8, front ! what d'ye mean !"-" I'll affure you, Davy, bu do not know me, if you think I could be fo, agenerous as to-a-to"-" I always thought hatever faults or foibles you might have, Sycamore, at you was not deficient in generofity-though, to e fure, it is often very abfurdly difplayed."-" Aye, at's one of my greateft foibles; I can't refufe even fcoundrel when I think he is in want .- Here, lawdle, take that note."_" Not I, Sir-what d'ye ean?-What right have I to your notes?"-" Nay, nt Dawdle-come."-" By no means-it looks ke the abufe of good-nature-all the world knows bu are good-natured to a fault."-" Come, dear avy, you shall-you must oblige me."-Thus ured, Dawdle accepted the bank-note with great relucnce, and reftored the idea to the right owner.

A fuit of armost being brought from the garret armoury of his ancetors, he gave orders for varing the pieces focured and furbilited up; and is heart dilated with joy, when he reflected upon as fuperb figure he fhould make when caled in comtet feel, and armed at all points for the combat.

When he was fitted with the other parts, Dawdle fifted on his buckling on his helmet, which weigh-I fifteen pounds; and the head-piece being adjufted, aide fuch a clatter abont his cars with a cudgel, that is eyes had almost flarted from their fockets. His voice was loft within the vifor; and his friend affected not to underfland his meaning when he made figus with his gauntlets, and endeavoured to clofe with him, that he might wrelt the codgel from his hand. At length he defined, diving, "I "I warrant the helmet found by its ringing I" and taking it off, found the 'querie in a cold weat. He would have atchived his first exploit on the foot, had his ftrength permitted him to affluit Dawlle; but, what with want of air, and the dicipline he had undergone, he had well nigh freoned away; and before he retrievd the uic of his members, he was appealed by the apologies of his companion, who protefled he meant nothing more than to try if the helmet was free of cracks, and whether or not it would prove a good proteflon for the head it covered.

His excufes were accepted; the armour was packed up; and next morning Mr Sycamore field to ut from his own houfe, accompanied by Dawdle, who undertook to perform the part of his "fquire at the approaching combat. He was also attended by a fervant on horicback, who had charge of the armour, and anotice who blowed the trumpet. They no fooner underflood that our here was houled at the George, than the trumpeter found a charge, which alarmed Sir Launcelot and his company, and diffurdet honeff Captian Crowe in the middle of his full fleep. Their next flep was to pen a challenge; which, when the franger departed, was by the trumpeter delivered with great ceremony into the hands of Sir Launcelot, who read it in theif words.

"TO THE KNIGHT OF THE CRESCENT, GREETING. "WHRERES I am informed you have the prefumption to lay claim to the heart of the peerle's Aurelia Darnel, I give you notice, that I can admit of no

. 67

rivalify in the affection of that paragon of beauty; and I expect that you will either relign your pretentions, or make it appear in fingle combat, aco-rding to the law of arms and the inflitutions of chivalry, that you are worthy to difpate her favour with him of the Griffin. POLYDER."

Our adventurer was not a little furprifed at this addrefs; which, however, he pocketed in filence, and began to reflect, not without mortification, that he was treated as a lunatic by fome perfon who wanted to amufe bimfelf with the infirmities of his fellow-creatures. Mr Thomas Clarke, who faw the beremony with which the letter was delivered, and The emotions with which it was read, hied him to the kitchen for intelligence, and there learned that the firanger was 'Squire Sycamore. He forthwith comprehended the nature of the billet; and in the apprehention that bloodfhed would enfore, refolved to alarm his uncle, that he might affift in keeping the peace. He accordingly entered the apartment of the captain, who had been waked by the trumpet; and now pecvifhly afked the meaning of that damned piping, as if all hands were called upon deck. Clarke having imparted what he knew of the transaction, together with his own conjectures, the captain faid, he did not suppose as how they would engage by candle-light; and that, for his own part, he should turn out in the larboard watch long enough before any figuals could be hove out for forming the line. With this affurance the lawyer retired to his neft, where he did not fail to dream of Mrs Dolly Cow-Nip ; while Sir Launcelot paffed the night awake, in ruminating on the firange challenge he had received. He had got notice that the feuder was Mr Sycamore, and hefitated with himfelf whether he fhould not punifh him for his impertinence; but when he reflected on the nature of the difpute, and the ferious confequences it might produce, he refolved to decline the combat, as a trial of right and merit founded upon absurdity. Even in his maddeft hours, he never adopted those maxims of knight-errantry which related to challenges. He always perceived the folly and wickedness of defying a man to mortal fight, becaufe he did not like the colour of his beard, or the complexion of his miftrefs; or of deciding, by homicide, whether he or his rival deferved the preference, when it was the lady's prerogative to determine which fhould be the happy lover. It was his opinion, that clivalry was an ufeful inftitution while confined to it's original purpofes of protecting the innocent, affifting the friendlefs, and bringing the guilty to condign punishment; but he could not conceive how these laws should be answered by violating every fuggeftion of reafon, and every precept of humanity.

68

Captain Crowe did not examine the matter fo philolophically. He took it for granted, that in the morning the two knights would come to action, and flept found on that supposition. But he arose before it was day, refolved to be fomehow concerned in the fray; and underftanding that the ftranger had a companion, fet him down immediately for his own antagonilt. So impatient was he to eftablish this fecondary conteft, that by day-break he entered the chamber of Dawdle, to which he was directed by the waiter, and rouzed him with a hilloah that might have been heard at the diffance of half a league. Dawdle, ftartled by this terrific found, fprung out of bed, and flood upright on the floor, before he opened his eyes upon the object by which he had been fo dreadfully alarmed. But when he beheld the head of Crowe fo fwelled and fwathed, fo livid, hideous, and griefly, with a broad-fword by his fide, and a cafe of piftols in his girdle, he believed it was the apparition of fome murdered man; his hair briftled up, his teeth chattered, and his knees knocked; he would have prayed, but his tongue denied it's office. Crowe, feeing his perturbation, " Mayhap, friend, faid he, you take me for a buccaneer ; but I am no fuch perfon .---- My name is Captain Crowe .--- I come not for your filver nor your gold, your rigging nor your flowage; but hearing as how your friend intends to bring my friend Sir Launcelot Greaves to action, d'ye fee ! I defire, in the way of friendship, that, while they are engaged, you and I, as their feconds, may lie board and board for a few glaffes, to divert one another, d'ye fee!" Dawdle hearing this requeft, began to retrieve his faculties; and throwing himfelf into the attitude of Hamlet when the gholt appears, exclaimed in theatrical accent-

" Angels and minifters of grace defend us !

" Art thou a fpirit of grace, or goblin damn'd?"

As he feemed to bend his eye on vacancy, the captain began to think that he really faw fonething preternatural, and flared wildly around. Thes addreffing himsfelf to the terrified Dawdle, "Damvil' (kink he) for what fhould I be damvil' 2 If you are afeard of goblins, brother, put your truft in the Lord, and he'll prove a fheet anchor to you." The other having by this time recollected himsleft perfectly, continued notwithlanding to fpout tragedy; and, in the words of Maxbeth, pronounced.---

" What man dare, I dare;

** Approach thou like the rugged Ruffian bear, 6* The arm<sup>3</sup>d rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tyger; ** Take any fhape but that, and my firm nerves ** Shall never tremble;" ""Ware names, Jack 1 (cried the impatient mariner); if fo be as how you'll bear a hand and rig yourielf, and take a fhort trip with me into the offing, we'll overhaul this here affair in the turning of a capitan."

At this juncture they were joined by Mr Syca-more, in his night-gown and flippers. Diffurbed by Crowe's firft falute, he had fprung up, and now ex. preffed no imall aftonifhment at first fight of the novice's countenance. After having gazed alternately at him and Dawdle, " Who have we got here? faid he, Raw-head and Bloody-bones?" When his friend, flipping on his clothes, gave him to underftand that this was a friend of Sir Launcelot Greaves, and explained the purport of his errand, he treated him with more civility. He affured him that he fhould have the pleafure to break a fpear with Mr Dawdle, and fignified his furprife that Sir Launcelot had made no answer to his letter. It being by this time clear day-light, and Crowe extremely interofied in this affair, he broke, without ceremony, into the knight's chamber, and told him abruptly that the enemy had brought to, and waited for his coming up, in order to begin the action. " I've hailed his confort, faid he, a fhambling, chattering fellow : he took me first for a hobgobling then called me names, a typer, a wrynofeo'rofs, and a Perfian bear ; but egad, if I come athwart him, I'll make him look like the bear and ragged ftaff before we part-I wool."-----

This intimation was not received with that alacrity which the captain expected to find in our adventurer; who told him, in a peremptory tone, that he had no defign to come to action, and defired to be left to his repole. Crowe forthwith retired creffallen, and muttered fomething which was never diftinctly heard.

About eight in the morning Mr Dawdle brought im a formal meffage from the knight of the Griffin, efiring he would appoint the lifts, and give fecurity If the field. To which requeft he made answer, in very composed and folemn accent, " If the perfon who fent you thinks I have injured him, let him, without difguife, or any fuch ridiculous ceremony, xplain the nature of the wrong, and then I shall vive fuch fatisfaction as may fuit my confeience and py character. If he hath beftowed his affection upon any particular object, and looks upon me as a favourd rival, I shall not wrong the lady fo much as to ake any ftep that may prejudice her choice, efpecislly a ftep that contradicts my own reafon as much is it would outrage the laws of my country. If he who calls himfelf Knight of the Griffin is really dea frous of treading in the paths of true chivalry, he will not want opportunities of fignalizing his valour n the caufe of virtue. Should he, notwithstanding shis declaration, offer violence to me in the courfe of ny occafions, he will always find me in a pofture of defence : or, fhould he perfift in repeating his imporunities, I shall, without ceremony, chastife the mef-"enger." His declining the combat was interpreted a nto fear by Mr Sycamore, who now became more. infolent and ferocious, on the fuppolition of our knight's timidity. Sir Launcelot, meanwhile, went to breakfaft with his friends; and having put on his armour, ordered the horfes to be brought forth. Then he paid the bill; and walking deliberately to the gate, in prefence of 'Squire Sycamore and his t attendants, vaulted, at one fpring, into the faddle of Bronzomarte, whole neighing and curveting proclaimed the joy he felt in being mounted by his acre pomplifhed mafter.

Though the knight of the Griffin did not think proper to infult his rival perforally, his friend Dawide dia not fill to erack fome jokes on the figure and horfemanfhip of Crowe, who again declared he fhould be glad to fall in with him upon the voyage: nor did Mc Clarke's black patch and rurful countenance pafs unnoticed and unridiculed. As for Timothy Crahfhaw, he bheld his borcher 'fiquire with the contempt of a veteran, and Gilbert paid him his compliments with his heels at parting; but where our adventurer and his returns were clear of the inn, Mr Sycamor ordered his trumpeter to found a retreat, by way of trumph over his natagonif.

72.

Perhaps he would have contented himfelf with this kind of victory, had not Dawdle farther inflamed his envy and ambition by launching out in praife of Sir Launcelot. He observed, that his countenance was open and manly ; his joints ftrong knit, and his form unexceptionable; that he trod like Hercules, and vaulted into the faddle like a winged Mercury ; nay, he even hinted, it was lucky for Sycamore that the knight of the Crefcent happened to be fo pacifically difpoled. His patron fickened at these praifes, and took fire at the laft observation. He affected to undervalue perforal beauty, though the opinion of the world had been favourable to himfelf in that particular : he faid he was at leaft two inches taller than Greaves; and as to fhape and air, he would make no comparifons; but with refpect to riding, he was fure he had a better feat than Sir Launcelot, and would wager five hundred to fifty guineas that he would unhorfe him at the first encounter .- " There is no occasion for laying wagers, replied Mr Dawdle; the doubt may be determined in half an hour-Sir Launcelot is not a man to avoid you at full gallop." Sycamore, after fome befitation, declared he would follow and provoke him to battle, on condition that Dawdle would engage Crowe; and this condition was accepted; if or, though Davy had no flomach to the trial, he could not readily find an excule for declining it; befalse, he had difcovered the captain to be a very bad horfennan, and refalved to exk out his own fcanty valour with a border of ingenuity. The fervants were immediately ordered to impack the armour; and, in a little time, Mr Sycamore made a very formidable appearance. But the locan that followed is tooimportant to be huddled in at the end of a chapter ; and therefore we shall refere. it for a more configuous place in the fee menoirs.

CHAP. VII.

Sontaining the Achievements of the Knights of the Griffin and Crescent.

R Sycamore, (alias the knight of the Griffin, fo denominated from a Griffin painted on his finicld) being armed at all points, and his friend Dawle provided with a certain implement which he attered hinfelf would enfure a vickory over the nonice Crowe; they fet out from the George, with their ittendants, in all the elevation of hope, and pranced olong the highway that led towards London, that being the road which our adventurer purfued. As hey were extremely well mounted, and proceeded it a round pace, they in left than two hours came up with Sir Launcelot and his company: and Sycamore ent another formal defiance to the knight by his rumpeter; Dawdle having, for good reafons, declined that office.

Our adventurer hearing himfelf thus addreffed, and reeing his rival, who had passed him, posted to obtruct his progres, armed cap-a-pie, with his lance in the r:ft, determined to give the futification that was required, and defired that the regulations of the combat might be effablished. The Knight of the Griffin propoled, that the vanquilhed party fhould refign all pretenflors to Mifs Aurelia Darnel in favour of the victor; that will the principals were engaged, his fixed Dawle fhould run a tilt with Captain Crowe; that 'Squire Crabhaw and Mr Syscamore's forcut fhould keep themfoles in readines to affit their refpective matters occationally, second, object the motions of the trumpeter whole province was to found the charge to battle.

74

Our knight agreed to these regulations, notwithflanding the earnest and pathetic romonstrances of the young lawyer; who, with tears in his eyes, conjured all the combatants, in their turns, to refrain from an action that might be attended with bloodfhed and murder, and was contrary to the laws both of God and man. In vain he endeavoured to move them by tears and entreaties, by threatening them with profecutions in this world, and pains and penalties in the next : they perfifted in their refolution ; and his uncle would have began hoftilities on his carcafe, had he not been prevented by Sir Launcelot, who exhorted Clarke to retire from the field, that he might not be involved in the confequences of the combat. He relified this advice fo well, that he had actually moved off to fome diffance ; "but his apprehenfions and concern for his friends co-operating with an infatiable curiofity, detained him in fight of the engagement.

The two krights having fairly divided the ground, and the fame precaution being taken by the feconda on another part of the field, Sycamore began to be invaded with fome feruples, which were probably toindered by the marial appearance and well-known marcher of bis antagonii. The confidence which is had derived from the reluciance of Sir Launcet to be wasifield, becaule it plainly appeared, that the might's backwardnels was not owing to perfonal tiidity; and he forefaw that the profection of this ke might be attended with very ferious configuenas to his own life and reputation. He therefore fired a party, in which he obfered his affection or Mifs Darnel was of fuch a delicate nature, that ould the difcomfuture of bis rival contribute to nake her unhappy, his vichory mult render him the off miferable wretch upon carth. He propoled, perefore, that her featiments and choice flouid-be

Sir Launcelot declared that he was much more fraid of combating Autelia's inclination than of profing the knight of the Griffin in arms; and hat if he had the leaft reafon to think Mr Sycamore any other perfon, was diffingnifhed by her preferi.ce, he would inftantly give up his fuit as defper. te. At the fame time, he obferved, that Sycamore ad proceeded too far to retrad ; that he had infukd a gentleman ; and not only challenged, but even burfued him, and blocked up his piffage in the pu-Hie highway; outrages which he (S.r Launcelot) would not fuffer to pais unpunished. Accordingly, e infilted on the combat, on pain of treating Me ycamore as a craven or a recreant. This declaraion was reinforced by Dawdle ; who told him, that hould he now decline the engagement, all the world would look upon him as an infamous poltroon.

Thefe two obfervations gave a needfary fillip'to he courage of the challenger. The parties took heir flations: the trumpers founded to charge, and Voz. 11. G the combatants began their career with great impetuofity. Whether the gleam of Sir Launcelot's arms affrighted Mr Sycamore's fleed, or fome other object had an unlucky effect on his eye fight, certain it is he flarted at about midway, and gave his rider fuch a violent shake, as discomposed his attitude, and difabled him from using his lance to the beft advantage. Had our hero continued his career, with his lance couched, in all probability Sycamore's arm ur would have proved but a bad defence to his carcafe ; but Sir Launcelot perceiving his rival's fpear unrefted, had just time to throw up the point of his own, when the two horfes closed with fuch a shock, that Sycamore, already wavering in the faddle, was overthrown, and his armour crafhed round him as he fell.

The victor, feeing him lie without motion, alighted immediately, and began to unbuckle his helmet, in which office he was affifted by the trumpeter. When the head-piece was removed, the haplefs knight of the Griffin appeared in the pale livery of death, though he was only in a fwoon, from which he foon recovered by the effect of the fresh air, and the afperfion of cold water, brought from a small pool in the neighbourhood. When he recognized his conqueror doing the offices of humanity about his perfon, he closed his eyes from vexation; told Sir Launcelot that his was the fortune of the day, though he himfelf owed his mifchance to the fault of his own horfe : and obferved that this ridiculous affair would not have happened, but for the milchievous infligation of that fcoundrel Dawdle, on whole tibs he threatened to revenge his milhap.

Perhaps Captain Crowe might have faved him the trouble, had the wag honeurably adhered to the inflitutions of chivalry, in his conflict with our novice; at on this occasion his ingenuity was more comendable than his courage. He had provided at he inn a blown bladder, in which feveral fmooth the were inclosed : and this he fluty fixed on the ead of his pole, when the captain obeyed the figal of battle. Inftead of bearing the brunt of the becoun er, he turned out of the thraight line, fo as avoid the lance of his antagonift, and rattled as bladder with such effect, that Crowe's horfe ricking up his cars, took to his heels, and fled arofs fome ploughed land with fuch precipitation. hat the rider was obliged to quit his fpear, and lay A hold on the mane, that he might not be thrown ut of the faddle. Dawdle, who was much better nounted, feeing his condition, rode up to the unpriunate novice, and belaboured his fhoulders withint fear of retaliation.

Mr Clarke (eeing his kinfman fo roughly landled, orgot his fears, and flew to his affiltance; but, beore he came up, the argreffor lad retired; and now erceiving that fortune had declared againth his friend and patron, very honourably abandoned him in his iftrefs, and went off at full fpeed for London.

Nor was Timothy Crabhaw without his finare in the noble achievements of this propitious day. He do by this time imbibed fuch a tincture of errantry, nat he firmly believed himfelf and his mafter equally vincible; and this belied operating upon a pervetic ipolition, rendered him as quarrellome in his fibere a his mafter was mild and forbearing. As he fat on oriefback, in the place affigued to him and Sycanore's lacquey, he managed Gilbert in fach a manner a to invide with his heels the pofferiors of the other's orfer; and this niule produced form alteration, shich ended in mutual affault. The forman hand led the butt-end of his horfewhip with great dexterier by about the head of Crabhaw, who declured afterwards, that it fung and fimmered like a kettle of codfifts is but the "figurite, who underthood the nature of long lafkes, as having been a carter from his infancys found means to twice his thong about the neck of his antagonik, and pull him off his horfe half (trangled, at the very inflant his mafter was thrown by Six Launcelot Greav-s.

Having this obtained the victory, he did not much a regr dit he punchilies of chivalry, but taking it for hyyrantage, refolved to carry off the spolia opima. Alighting with great agility, "Brother, (cried he) i think as haw yawr bean't a butcher's horfe, a doan't carry calves well.—I'l'e make yaw knaw your churning days, I wooll.—What yaw look as if yaw was crow-trodeen, you do-...Now, you thall pay the foore you have been running on my pate, you ha

So faying, he rified his peckets, ftripped bim of his hat and coat, and took poli-film or his malter's portmartena. But he did not long enjoy his plumders for the lacquey complianing to Sir Lannecleu of his having been defpoiled, the knight commanded the 'tquireto reland, not without meases of fubjeching him to the few refit chaliftement, for his injutice and rapacity.— T'imothy reprefented, with yreat whemence, that he had won the fpoils in fair battle, at the expense of his head as d fioulders, which he immediately uncovered to prove his allegation: but his remonstrance having no efficit upon his malter, "Wannads! (cried h-) an I mun get thee back the pig, I'fe get thee back the poke allo; I'm a dtubbing full in thy debr."

With those words, he made a most furious attack upon the plaintiff, with his horsewhip, and before the inight could interpofe, repayed the lacquary with inereft. As an appurtenance to Sycamore and Daw-Ile, he ran the rifk of another affault from the novice Prowe, who was fo trausported with rage, at the difgreeable trick which had been played upon him by his fugitive antagonift, that he could not for fome ime prouounce au articulate found, but a few broken interjections, the meaning of which could not be fcertained. Snatching up his pole, he ran towards he place where Mr Sycamore fat on the grafs, jupnorted by the trumpeter, and would have finished what our adventurer had left undone, if the Knight of the Crefcent, with admirable dexterity, had not warded off the blow which he aimed at the Knight of the Griffin, and fignified his displeasure in refolute tone; then he collared the lacquey, who was juft difengaged from the chaftifing hand of Crabhaw, and fwinging his lance with his other hand, ncountered the 'iquire's ribs by accident.

Timothy was not flow in returning the falutation, with the weapon which he fill wielded, Mr Clarke, unning to the affiltance of his uncle, was oppofed by ne lacquey, who feemed extremely defirous of feeing he encary revenge his quartel, by falling foul of one mother.——Clarke, thus imperied, commenced huffliries againit the footman, while Crowe grappled with Crabhaw: a battle ryalenfued, and was mainined with great vigour and iome blood/hed on all ties, until the southority of Sir Launcels, reinforce d by forme weighty remonitrances applied to the figure, put an end to the confielt. Crabhaw immeniately defitted, and ran roaring to commonicate bis rivance to Gibert, who feemed to fynopablize very title with hi ditlefa. The lacquey took to his heels: Mr Clarke wiped his bloody nofe, declaring he had a good mind to put the aggreffor in the Crown-office, and Captain Crowe continued to ejaculate unconnected oaths, which, however, feemed to imply that he was almolf fick of his new profetion. "D—n my eyes, if you call this_____farm y timbers, brother____look ye, d'ye (fee_____a loufy, lubberly, cowardly fon of a_____among the breakers, d'ye fee_____off my fleerage way_____ fplit my binnacle; haul away_____O! dann all arrantry_____ive me a tight refield, d'ye fee, bro-____ the room and a fpanking gale____odd's heart, Pil hold a whele yea's_____imite my limbs : it don't fignify talking."

G 3

Our hero confoled the novice for his difafter, by obferving, that if he had got fome blows, he had loft no honour. At the fame time he observed, that it was very difficult, if not impoffible, for a man to fucceed in the paths of chivalry, who had paffed the better part of his days in other occupations; and hinted, that as the caufe which had engaged him in this way of life no longer exifted, he was determined to relinquifh a profession, which, in a peculiar manner, expofed him to the most difagreeable incidents. Crowe chewed the cud upon this infinuation, while the other perfonages of the drama were employed in catching the horfes, which had given their riders the flip. As for Mr Sycamore, he was fo bruifed by his fall, that it was neceffary to procure a litter for conveying him to the next town, and the fervant was difpatched for this convenience; Sir Launcelot flaying with him until it arrived.

When he was fafely deposited in the carriage, our hero took leave of him in these terms: "I shall not infit upon your submitting to the terms you yourself propoled before this renconnter.—I give you free leave to use all your advantages, in an honourable way, for promoting your fuit with the young lady, of whom you profels yourfelf enamoured. Should you have recourts to finither practices, you will find Sir Launcelot Greaves ready to demand an account of your conduct, not in the character of a lunatic knight-errant, but as a plain English genteman, jcalous of his honours, and refolute in his purpole."

To this addrefs Mr Sycamore made no rcply, but with a fullen afpect, ordered the carriage to proceed; and it moved accordingly to the right, our hero's road to London lying in the other direction.

Sir Launcelot had already exchanged his armour for a riding coat, hat, and boots; and Crowe parting with his skull-cap and leathern jerkin, regained in fome respects the appearance of a human creature. Thus metamorphofed, they purfued their way at an eafy pace, Mr Clarke endeavouring to amufe them with a learned differtation on the law, tending to demonstrate that Mr Sycamore was, by his behaviour, of that day, liable to three different actions, befides a commission of lunacy; and that Dawdle might be profecuted for having practifed fubile craft, to the annoyance of his uncle, over and above an action for affault and battery; becaufe, for why? The faid Crowe having run away, as might be eafily proved, before any blows were given, the faid Dawdle by purfuing him even out of the high road, putting him in fear, and committing battery on his body, became, to all intents and purposes, the aggreffor; and an indictment would lie in Banco Regis.

The Captain's pride was fo fhocked at thefe obfervations, that he exclaimed with equal rage and impatience, "You lie, you dog, in Bilkum Regiyou lie, I fay, you lubber, I did not run away; nor

In the evening they reached the town of Bugden, without any farther adventure, and paffed the night in great tranquillity.

Next morning, even after the holfe were ordered to be faddled, Mr Clarke, withont c removy, entered the apartment of Sir Lunacelot, leading in a female, who proved to be the identical Mis Dally Cowlip, This young woman advancing to the knight, cried, " O, Sir Launeelor! my dear leady! my dear leady !" — but was hindered from proceeding by a fload of tears, which the tender-hearted lawyer inngled with a plential flower of fympathy.

Our adventurer flatting at this exclamation, "O H-avens! (cried he) where is my Aurelia? Speak? Where did you leave that jewel of my foul? Aufwer me in a moment-I am all terror and impatience?"

Dolly having recollected hertelf, rold him that MP Darneh had logged his nices in the New Buildings by May Fairs, that on the fecond night after there arrival, a very warm expollulation had palfed between Aurelia and her uncle, who next moraing cilimfield Dolly, without permitting her to take lawe of her milterfs; and that fame day moved to another part of the town, as the afterward-learned of the landlady, though the could not inform her whither they were gone. That when the was turned away, John Clump, one of the footmen, who precended to have a kind.

such for her, had faithfully promified to call upon her, and let her know what paffed in the family; but as be did not keep his word, and the was an utter tranger in London, without friends or fettlement, the had refolved to return to her mother, and travelled of far on foor fince yellenday, morning.

Our knight, who had expected the moft difmal edings from her lamentable preamble, was pleaded to find his prefaging forst difapointed; though he was far from being fattisfield with the difmillion of Dolly, from whole attachment to his interest, joined to her influence over Mr Clump, he had hoped to cap fuch intelligence as would guide him to the aven of his d fires. After a minute's reflection, we faw it would be expedient to carry back Mra Dowlip, and lodge her at the place where Mr Clump and promifed to vifit her with intelligence; for, in all probability, it was not for want of inclination hat he had not kept his promife.

Dolly did not express any aversion to the scheme of returning to London; where the hoped once more o rejoin her dear lady, to whom, by this time, the was attached by the throngest ties of affection ; and ner inclination in this respect was affilted by the conideration of having the company of the young lawer, who, it plainly appeared, had made ftrange haoc in her heart ; though it must be owned, for the lonour of this blooming damfel, that her thoughts ad never once deviated from the paths of innocence and virtue. The more Sir Launcelot furveyed this greeable maiden, the more he felt himfelf difpofed to b take care of her fortune; and, from this day, he regan to ruminate on a scheme which was afterwards onfummated in her favour .---- In the mean time, he laid his injunctions on Mr Clarke to conduct his ddreffes to Mrs Cowflip according to the rules of honour and decorum, as he valued his countenance and friendship. His next step was to procure a faddle horfe for Dolly, who preferred this to any other fort of carriage, and thereby gratified the will of her admirer, who longed to fee her on horfeback in her green joseph. The armour, including the accoutrements of the novice and the 'fquire, were left in the care of the inn-keeper; and Timothy Crabihaw was fo metamorphofed by a plain livery-frock, that even Gilbert wich difficulty recognized his perfon. As for the novice Crowe, his head had almost refumed it's natural dimensions; but then his whole face was to covered with a livid fuffution, his note appeared fo flat, and his lips fo tumified, that he might very well have paffed for a Caffre or Æthiopean. Every circumstance being now adjusted, they departed from Bugden in a regular cavalcade, dined at Hatfield, and in the evening arrived at the Bull and Gate Inn in Holborn, where they eftablished their quarters for the night.

CHAP. VIII.

In which our Hero descends into the Mansions of the damned.

THE first flep which Sir Launcelot took in the morning that fucceeded his arrival in London, was to text Mn Dolly Cowlip in lodgings, at the honfe where John Clump had promified to vifit her; an he did not doubt, that though the vifit was delayed, it would fore time or other be performed, and in that each he might obtain forme intelligence of Aurelin. Mr Thomas Clurke was permitted to take up his habitation in the fame houte, on he carnelity defring he might be caruted with the office of conveys ng information and infraction between Dolly and our diventurer. The knight himfelf refolved to live reired until he fhould receive fome tidings relating to Mifs Darnel that would influence his conduct; but is propofed to frequent places of public refort ucognio, that he might have fome chance of meeting, y accident, with the mifters of his heart.

Taking it for granted that the oddities of Crowe would help to amufe him in his hours of folitude and isappointment, he invited that original to be his such, at a fmall house which he determined to hire, eady furnished, in the neighbourhood of Golden square.' The captain thanked him for his courtefy, nd frankly embraced his offer, though he did not nuch approve of the knight's choice in point of fiuation. He faid he would recommend him to a pecial good upper-deck, hard by St Catharine's, in Wapping ; where he would be delighted with the rospect of the ftreet forwards, well frequented by saffengers, carts, drays, and other carriages; and having backwards an agreeable view of Alderman Parfon's great brew-houle, with two hundred hogs ceding almost under the window. As a farther inucement, he mentioned the vicinity of the Tower juns, which would regale his hearing on days of fautation; nor did he forget the fweet found of moorng and unmooring fhips in the river; and the pleafing bjects on the other fide of the Thames, difplayed the cozy docks and cabbage gardens of Rotherithe. Sir Launcelot was not infenfible to the eauties of this landscape; but his purfuit lying anoher way, he contented himfelf with a lefs enchanting untion, and Crowe accompanied him out of pure

At night Mr Clarke arrived at our hero's houfe ith tidings that were by no means agreeable. He told bim that Clump had left a letter for Dolly, informing her that his mafter, 'Squire Darad, was to fet out easi' in the morning for Yorkhine's bit he could give no account of her lady, who had the day before been conveyed, he knew not whither, in a hackney coach, attended by her uncle and an illlooking fellow, who had much the appearance of a bailiff or turkey; fo that he ferred the wasin trouble,

Sir Luancelor was deeply affected by this intimation. His apprehension was even rouzed by a fulpicion that a man of Darnel's violent temper, and anprincipled heart, might have practified upon the life of his lovely nicce; but, upon recollection, he could not tappofe that he had recourfe to fuch infamous expedients; knowing, as he did, that an account of her would be demanded at his hands, and that it would be easily proved he had coaveyed her from the lodging in which he refuled.

His first feers now gave way to another fuggellion; that Anthony, in order to intimidate her into a compliance with his propolals, had tramped up a fpurious chim againt her; and, by vitue of a write, confined her in fome prifon or fpurging-houle. Puffilded with this idea, he defired Mr Clarke to fauch the firstflw office in the morning, that he might know whether any fash writ had been granted; and he bindel redioved to make a tour of the great prifons belonging to the metropols, to inquire if perclance from give to be confined under a borrowed unme-Finally, he determined; if polible, to appress her of his place of abode by a paragraph in all the daily papers, fignifying that Sir Launcelot Greaves had arrived a this houle near Golden Signace.

All thefe refolutions were punctually executedno fuch writ had been taken out in the theriff's effice and, therefore, our hero fet out on his goal expedi-

on, accompanied by Mr Clarke, who had contracted me acquaintance with the commanding officers in the garrifons, in the courfe of his clerk/hip and radiice as an attorney. The firft day they fpent in rofecuting their inquiry through the Clate HJufe, leet, and Marfhalfea. The next they allotted to be King's Bench, where they underflood threr was great variety of prifoners. There they propoled make a munte fortuiny, by the help of Mr. Norin, the deputy-marthal, who was Mr Clarke's intirate friend, and had nothing at all of the galer eiter in his appearance or in his diffortion, which was remarkably humane and benevolent towards all fis fellow-creatures.

The knight having bespoke dinner at a tavern in he Borough, was, together with Captain Crowe, onducted to the prifon of the King's Bench, which fituated in St George's Fields, about a mile from he end of Weftminister Bridge; and appears like a eat, little, regular town, confifting of one ftreet, brrounded by a very high wall, including an open niece of ground, which may be termed a garden, where the prifoners take the air, and amufe themfelves with a variety of diversions. Except the entrance, where the turnkeys keep watch and ward, there is nothing in the place that looks like a gaol, or bears The leaft colour of reftraint. The firset is crowded with paffengers. Tradefmen of all kinds here exerbile their different professions. Hawkers of all forts re admitted to call and vend their wares, as in any uppen ftreet of London. Here are butchers ftanda, whandlers fhops, a furgery, a tap-houfe well frequened; and a public kitchen, in which provisions are foreffed for all the prifoners gratis, at the expence of he publican. Here the voice of milery never com-Vol. H. H plains; and, indeed, little elfe is to be heard but the founds of mirth and jollity. At the farther end of the fitteet, on the right hand, is a little paved court leading to a feparate building, confilting of twelw large apartments, called flate rooms, well furnilhed and fitted up for the reception of the better for of crown-prifoners; and, on the other fide of the fitteet, facing a feparate division of the ground called the Common Side, is a range of rooms occupied by prifoners of the loweft order, who flate the profits of a begging-box; and are maintained by this practice, and fome ethbliched funds of charity. We ought alfo to obferve, that the gaol is provided with a next chapel; in which a dergyman, in confideration of a certain filary, performs divine fervice every Sunday.

Our adventurer having fearched the books, and perufed the defeription of all the female prifouses who had been for fome weeks admitted into the gaol, obtained not the leaft intelligence of his concesled charmer, but refolved to alleviate his difappointment by the gratification of his corriolity.

Under the suffices of Mr Norton, he made a tour of the prifon; and in particular withed the kitchen, where he faw a sumber of fpits loaded with a variety of providion, confiding of butcher meat, poultry, and game. He could not help exprefing his sitonithment with uplifted hands, and congratulating hinfielf in fecret upon his being a member of that community which had provided fuch a comfortable afjlum for declaring he was fast for to the lodge, configred our hero to the care of one Mr Felton, a prifoner of a very decent appearment, which also comforta with a good grace, and invited the company to repole them fives in his appriment, which was large, commodious, d well furnifhed. When Sir Launcelot afked the ufe of that uproar, he told him, that it was the elude to a boxing-match between two of the ifoners, to be decided in the ground or garden of e place.

Captain Crowe expreffing an eager curiofity to fee e battle, Mr Felton affured him there would be no ort, as the combatants were both reckoned dunglle. " But in half an hour (faid he) there will be battle of fome confequence between two of the deagogues of the place, Dr Crabclaw and Mr Tapley; e first a physician, and the other a brewer. You aft know, gentlemen, that this microcolm, or repuic in miniature, is, like the great world, fplit into ctions. Crabclaw is the leader of one party, and e other is headed by Tapley; both are men of arm and impetuous tempers; and their intrigues ve embroiled the whole place, infomuch, that it as dangerous to walk the fireet on account of the intinual skirmishes of their partizans. At length, me of the more fedate inhabitants having met and liberated upon fome remedy for these growing difders, proposed that the dispute should be at once cided by fingle combat between the two chiefs, bo readily agreed to the proposal. The match is accordingly made for five guineas; and this very y and hour appointed for the trial, on which conlerable fums of money are depending. As for Mr brton, it is not proper that he fhould be prefent, feem to countenance fuch violent proceedings, hich, however, it is neceffary to convive at, as conmient vents for the evaporation of those humours, nich being confined, might accumulate and break t with great fury, in confpiracy and rebellion." The kuight owned he could not conceive by what means fuch a number of licentious prople, amounting, with their dependants, to above five hundred, were reflexined within the bounds of any tolerable difcipline, or prevented from making their eleape, which they might at any time accomplish, either by fleaht or open violence, as it could not be fuppofed that one or two trankeys, continually employed in opening and flutting the door, could refift the efforts of the whole multitude.

" Your wonder, good Sir, (faid Mr Felton) will vanish, when you confider it is hardly possible that the multitude fhould co-operate in the execution of fuch a fcheme; and that the keeper perfectly well understands the maxim, divide et impera. Many prifoners are reftrained by the dictates of gartitude towards the deputy-marshal, whose friendship and good offices they have experienced; fome, no doubt, are actuated by motives of diferetion. One party is an effectual check upon the other; and I am firmly perfuaded that there are not ten prifoners within the place that would make their efcape if the doors were laid open. This is a ftep which no man would take unless his fortune was altogether desperate, because it would oblige him to leave his country for life, and expecte him to the most imminent risk of being retaken, and treated with the utmoft feverity. The majority of the prifoners live in the moft lively hope of being releafed by the affiftance of their friends, the compafiion of their creditors, or the favour of the legiflature. Some, who are cut of from all thele propofals, are become naturalized to the place, knowing they cannot subsist in any other fituation. I myself am one of thefe. After having refigned all my effects for the benefit of my creditors, I have been detained these nine years in prilon, because one person refuses. to fign my certificate. I have long outlived all my iends from whom I could expect the leaft countenace of favour: I am grown old in confinement; a d lay my account with ending my days in gaol, as ne merey of the legiflature in favour of infolvant extense, is never extended to uncertified bankrupts aken in execution. By dint of indultry, and the polt rigid economy, I make fhit to live independent to this retreat. To this feene my faculty of fubfikag, as well as my body, is peculiarly confined. Had an opportunity to efcape, where fhould I go? All ty views of fortune have been long blafted. I have to friends nor connexions in the word. I mult therefore flave in fome fequefered corner, or be respirated, and confined for ever to clope prion, detrived of the indulgencies which I now enjoy."

Here the conversation was broke off by another proar; which was the fignal to battle between the toctor and his antagonitt. The company immediatey adjourned to the field, where the combatants were Iready undreffed, and the flakes deposited. The Boctor feemed of the middle age and middle flature, Aive and alert, with an atrabilious afpect, and a mixture of rage and difdain expressed in his counteance. The brewer was large, raw-boned, and round is a butt of beer; but very fat, unwieldy, fhortwinded, and phlegmatic. Our adventurer was not little furprifed when he beheld, in the character of econds, a male and a female ftripped naked from the waift upwards, the latter ranging on the fide of the hyfician; but the commencement of the battle preented his demanding of his guide an explanation of this henomenon. The doctor, retiring fome paces backwards, threw himfelf into the attitude of a battering am, and rufhed upon his antagonift with great impeuolity, forefeeing that, fhould he have the good fortune to overturn him in the first affault, it would not be an eafy tafk to raife him up again, and put him in a capacity of offence. But the momentum of Crabclaw's head, and the concomitant efforts of his knuckles, had no effect upon the ribs of Tapley, who flood firm as the Acroceraunian promontory; and ftepping forward with his projected fift, fomething fmaller and fofter than a fledge-hammer, flruck the phylician to the ground. In a trice, however, by the affiltance of his female fecond, he was on his legs again; and grappling with his antagonift, endeavoured to tip him the fall; but, inftead of accomplifhing his purpofe, he received a crofs-buttock; and the brewer throwing himfelf upon him as he fell, had well nigh fmothered him on the spot. The Amazon flew to his affiftance ; and Tapley flewing no inclination to get up, fhe fmote him on the temple till he roared. The male fecond, haftening to the relief of his principal, made application to the eyes of the female, which were immediately furrounded with black circles; and fhe returned the falute with a blow which brought a double ftream of blood from his nostrils, greeting him at the fame time with the opprobrious appellation of a loufy fon of a b-h. A combat more furious than the first would have enfued, had not Felton interpofed with an air of authority, and infifted on the man's leaving the field ; an injunction which he forthwith obeyed, faying, "Well, damme, Felton, you're my friend and commander; I'll obey your order-but the b-h will be foul of me before we fleep -... Then Felton advancing to his opponent, " Madam, (faid he) I'm very forry to fee a lady of your rank and qualifications expofe yourfelf in this manner. For God's fake, behave with a little more decorum, if not for the fake of your own family, at leaft for the credit of your lex

H 3

s general." "Hark ye, Felton, (fuid fie) deconfin founded upon a delicacy of fentiment and deportent, which cannot confil with the difyraces of a nol and miferies of indigence.--But I fee the diftice is now terminated, and the money is to be rank: if you'll dine with us, you fhall be welcomeg. By this time the doftor had given out, and allowed be brewer to be the better man; yet he would not ponour the feltival with his prefence, but retired to his namber, exceedingly mortified at his defeat. Our row was reconducted to MF Feltion's ap utment, where g fat fometime without opening his mouth, fo affofined was he at what he had feen and heard.

I perceive, Sir, (faid the prifoner) you are furrifed at the manner in which I accofted that unappy woman; and perhaps you will be more furrifed when you hear that, within these eighteen ionths, fhe was actually a perfon of fashion, and her pponent (who by the bye is her hufband) universalrespected as a man of honour and a brave officer." I am, indeed, (cried our hero) overwhelmed with mazement and concern, as well as ftimulated by an ager curiofity to know the fatal caufes which have roduced fuch a deplorable reverfe of character and ortune. But I will reftrain my curiofity till the fternoon, if you will favour me with your company t a tavern in the neighbourhood, where I have beooke a dinner: a favour which I hope Mr Norton ill have no objection to your granting, as he him-If is to be of the party." The prifoner thanked im for his kind invitation ; and they adjourned imnediately to the place, taking up the deputy-marshal their puffage, through the lodge or entrance of he prifon.

CHAP. IX.

Containing farther Anecdotes relating to the Children of Wretchedness.

DINNER being chearfully difcuff.d, and our adventurer exprefing an eager defire to know the hiftory of the male and female who had acted as 'fquires or feconds to the champious of the King's Bench, Felton gratified his curiofity to this effect :

" All that I know of Captain Clewline, previous to his commitment, is, that he was commander of a floop of war, and bore the reputation of a gallant officer ; that he married the daughter of a rich merchant in the city of London, against the inclination. and without the knowledge of her father, who renounced her for this act of difobedience; that the captain confoled himfelf for the rigour of the parent with the poffeffion of the lady, who was not only remarkably beautiful in perfon, but highly accomplished in her mind, and amiable in her difpolition. Such, a few months ago, were those two perfons, whom you faw acting in fuch a vulgar capacity. When they first entered the prifon, they were undoubtedly the handfomeft couple mine eyes ever beheld, and their appearance won univerfal refpect, even from the most brutal inhabitants of the gacl,

"The captain having unwarily involved himdef as a fecurity for a man to whom he had lain under obligations, became liable for a confiderable fum; and his own father-in-law being the fole creditor of the bankrupt, took this coportunity of wreaking vengeance upon him for having efpouled his daughter. He watched an opportunity until the captain had actually itepped into the poft-chaife with his hely for Portfmouth, where his hip lay, and caufed him be arrefted in the most public and shameful maner. Mrs Clewline had like to have funk under the aft transports of her grief and mortification; but hele fubliding, the had recourfe to perfonal folicitalon. She went with her only child in her arms (a ovely boy) to her father's door; and being denied. dmittance, kneeled down in the ftreet, imploring is compassion in the most pathetic ftrain; but this ard-hearted citizen, inflead of recognizing his child, nd taking the poor mourner to his bofom, infulted er from the window with the moit bitter reproach ; aying, among other flocking expressions, . Strumpet, take yourfelf away with your brat, otherwife I hall fend for the beadle, and have you to Bridewell." "The unfortunate lady was cut to the heart by his ufage, and fainted in the ftreet ; from whence he was conveyed to a public-houfe, by the charity of fome paffengers. She afterwards attempted to foften the barbarity of her father by repeated letters. and by interefting fome of his friends to intercede with him in her behalf; but all her endeavours proving ineffectual, the accompanied her hufband to the prifon of the King's Bench, where fhe muft have felt, in the fevereft manner, the fatal reverfe of circumftance to which fhe was exposed.

"The captain being difabled from going to fea, was fuperfeeded; and he faw all his hopes balted in the midt of an active war, at a time when he had the faireft propects of fame and fortune. He faw himfelf reduced to extreme poverty, cooped up, with the tender partner of bis heart, in a wretched hovel, amidd the reduce of bis heart, in a wretched hovel, amidd the reduce of bis heart, in a wretched hovel, amidd the reduce of bis heart, in a wretched hovel, amidd the result of the bis of the the bis of wanting the common neceffaries of life. The mind of man is ever ingenious in finding refources. He comforted his lady with vain hopes of having friends who would effect his deliverance; and repeated affirances of this kind fo long, that fhe at length began to think they were not altogether void of foundation.

" Mrs Clewline, from a principle of duty, recollected all her forticude, that fhe might not only bear her fate with patience, but even contribute to alleviate the woes of her hufband, whom her affection had ruined. She affected to believe the fuggeftions of his pretended hope; fhe interchanged with him affurances of better fortune; her appearance exhibited a calm, while her heart was torn with anguish. She affifted him in writing letters to former friends, the last confolation of the wretched prifoner; she delivered those letters with her own hand ; and underwent a thousand mortifying repulses, the most shocking circumftances of which fhe concealed from her hufband. She performed all the menial offices in her own little family, which was maintained by pawning her apparel; and both the hufband and wife in fome measure sweetened their cares, by prattling and toying with their charming little boy, on whom they doated with an enthusiasm of fondness. Yet even this pleafure was mingled with the most tender and melancholy regret. I have feen the mother hang over him with the most affecting expression of this kind in her afpect, the tears contending with the fmiles upon her countenance, whilft fhe exclaimed, Alas, my poor prifoner! little did your mother once think the thould be obliged to nurfe you in a gaol." The captain's paternal love was dashed with impatience : he would fnatch up the boy in a transport of grief, prefs him to his breaft, devour him as it were with kiffes, throw up his eyes to heaven in the moft emphatic filence ; then convey the child haftily to his mother's arms, pull his hat over his eyes, flalk out in the common walk; and, finding himfelf alone. break out into tears and lamentation.

" Ah! little did this unhappy couple know what wrther griefs awaited them ! The fmall-pox broke ut in the prifon, and poor Tommy Clewline was inected. As the eruption appeared unfavourable, you ay conceive the confternation with which they were verwhelmed. Their diffres was rendered inconkivable by indigence ; for, by this time, they were deflicute, that they could neither pay for common tendance, nor procure proper advice. I did, on hat occasion, what I thought my duty towards my fllow-creatures. I wrote to a phyfician of my acuaintance, who was humane enough to vifit the poor ittle patient: I engaged a careful woman prifoner a nurfe, and Mr Norton fupplied them with money Ind necefiaries. These helps were barely fufficient b preferve them from the horrors of defpair, when hey faw their little darling panting under the rage I a loathfome, peftilential malady, during the excefwe heat of the dog-days; and ftruggling for breath the noxious atmosphere of a confined cabbin, where ley fearce had room to turn on the most necessary calions. The eager curiofity with which the momer eyed the doctor's looks as often as he vifited the lioy ; the terror and trepidation of the father, while re defired to know his opinion; in a word, the whole Enor of their diftrefs, baffled all defcription,

"At length, the phyfician, for the fake of his own harafter, was obliged to be explicit; and returning tilt the capatin to the common walk, told him, in y hearing, that the child could not puffilly recoer. This fenence feemed to have petrified the unneturate parent, who flood motionlefs, and feemingbereft of fenfe. I teld him to my apartment, where e fat a full hour in that flate of flupefaction: then e began to groan hideoully; a flower of tears burfh own his eyes; he three himfelf on the floor, and uttion his eyes; he three himfelf on the floor, and uttered the most pitcous lamentation that ever was heard. Meanwhile, Mrs Norton being made aequainted with the doctor's prognostic, visited Mrs. Clewline, and invited her to the lodge. Her prophetic fears immediately took the alarm. "What ! (cried fhe, flarting up, with a frantic wildness in her looks) then our cafe is defperate ____ I fhall lofe my dear Tommy !---- The poor prifoner will be relieved by the hand of Heaven!-Death will convey him to the cold grave !" The dying innocent, hearing this exclamation, pronounced thefe words : " Tommy won't leave you, my dear mama-If Death comes to take Tommy, papa shall drive him away with his fword !" This address deprived the wretched mother of all refignation to the will of Providence; the tore her hair, dashed herself on the pavement, fhrieked aloud, and was carried off in a deplorable flate of diffraction.

" That fame evening the lovely babe expired. and the father grew frantic. He made an attempt on his own life; and being with difficulty reftrained, his h agitation funk into a kind of fullen infenfibility, which feemed to abforb all fentiment, and gradually vulgarized his faculty of thinking. In order to diffipate the violence of his forrow, he continually fhifted the fcene from one company to another, contracted abundance of low connections, and drowned his cares in repeated intoxication. The unhappy lady underwent a long feries of hyfterical fits, and other complaints, which feemed to have a fatal effect on her brain as well as conflitution. Cordials were adminiftered to keep up her fpirits; and fhe found it neceffary to protract the use of them, to blunt the edge of grief by overwhelming reflection, and remove the fense of uneafinese, ariting from a diforder in her ftomach. In a word, fhe became an habitual dram-brinker; and this practice expoled her to fuch comnunication, as debauched her reafon, and perverted ter fense of decorum and propriety. She and her ufband gave a loofe to vulgar excels, in which they vere enabled to indulge, by the charity and intereft of ome friends, who obtained half pay for the captain. " They are now metamorphofed into the flocking creatures you have feen; he into a riotous plebeian, and the into a ragged trull. They are both drunk every day, quarrel and fight one with another, and often infult their fellow-prifoners. Yet they are not wholly abandoned by virtue and humanity. The captain is ferupuloufly honeft in all his dealings; and pays off his debts punctually every quarter, as foon as he receives his half pay. Every prifoner in dif-trefs is welcome to fhare his money while it laits; and his wife never fails, while it is in her power, to relieve the wretched; fo that their generofity, even in this miferable difguife, is univerfally refpected by their neighbours. Sometimes the recollection of their former rank comes over them like a qualm, which they difpel with brandy, and then bumouroufy rally one another on their mutual degeneracy. She often flops me in the walk; and, pointing to the captain, lays, " My hufband, though he is become a blackguard gaol-bird, muft be allowed to be a handfome fellow ftill." On the other hand, he will frequently defire me to take notice of his rib, as the chances to pafs .- " Mind that draggle tailed, drunken d ab, (he will fay) what an antidote it is !-yet, for all that, Felton, the was a fine woman when I married her .- Poor Befs! I have been the ruin of her, that is certain: and deferve to be damned for bringing her to this pals !"

"Thus they accommodate themfelves to each o-Vor. II. I ther's infimities, and pass their time, not withour fome tafte of plebeian enjoyment—but, name their child, they never fail to burft into tears, and ftill feel a return of the molt poignant forrow."

Sir Launcelot Greaves did not hear this fory unmoved. Tom Clarke's cheeks were bedewed with the drops of fympathy : while, with much fobbing, he declared his opinion, that an action would lie againft the lady's father.

Captain Grove having liftened to the flory with uncommon attention, exprefied his concern that an hond' feaman flouid be to taken in flays, but he imputed all his calamities to the wife, "I for why' (faid he) a fear-faring man may have a fweet-heart in every port; but he fhould fleer clear of a wife as he would avoid a quick fand.—You fee, brother, how this here Clewline lags aftern in the wake of a firvling b—; otherwife he would never make a weft in his enfige for the lofs of a child—Odd's heart I he could lawe done no more if he had fprung atopmaß, or flatted a timber."

The knight d-claing that he would take another view of the prion in the afternoon, Mr Felton infited upon his doing him the lonour to drink a dift of tea in his apartment, and Sir Launcelot accepted his invitation. Thither they accordingly repaired, after having made another circuit of the gool, and the tea things were produced by Mis Felton, when the ta things were produced by Mis Felton, when the he units of the door; and, in a few minutes, returning, communicated fometing in a whilper to her huiband. He changed colour, and repaired to the flair cafe, where he was heard to talk aloud in an any tone.

When he came back, he told the company he had been teazed by a very importunate beggar. Addreffing himfelf to our adventurer, "You took notice faid he) of a fine lady flaunting about our walk in il the frippery of the fashion -She was lately a gay oung widow, that made a great figure at the court. and of the town; the diffinguished herfelf by her plendid equipage, her rich liveries, her brilliant afemblies, her numerous routes, and her elegant tafte in drefs and furniture. She is nearly related to fome of the beft families in England; and, it must be owned, miftrefs of many fine accomplifhments But being deficient in true delicacy, the endeavoured to hide that defect by affectation. She pretended to a housand antipathies which did not belong to her nature. A breaft of veal threw her into mortal agonies. If the faw a fpider, the fcreamed; and, at fight of a moufe, the fainted away. She could not, without horror, behold an entire joint of meat ; and nothing but fricaffees, and other made-diffes, were feen upon her table. She caufed all her floors to be lined with green baize, that fhe might trip along them with more eafe and pleafure. Her footmen wore clogs, which were deposited in the hall; and both they and her chairmen were laid under the throngeft injunctions to avoid porter and tobacco. Her jointure amounted to eight hundred pounds per annum, and the made thift to fpend four times that fum. At length it was mortgaged for nearly the entire value; but, far from retrenching, the feemed to increase in extravagance, until her effects were taken in execution, and her perfon here deposited in fafe cuftody.

When one confiders the abrupt transition the underwent, from her fpecious apartments to an bovel fearce eight feet (quare; from funptuous furniture to bare benches; from mag-incence to meannefs; from affluence to extreme poverty; one would imagine the muft have been totally overwhelmed by fucha fudden gufh of mifery. But this was not the cafe in fhe has, in fact, no delicate feelings. She forthwith accommodated herfelf to the exigency of her fortune vet the flill affects to keep flate amidft the miferies of a gaol; and this aff chation is truly ridiculous, She lies a bed till two o'clock in the afternoon. She maintains a female attendant, for the fole purpole of dreffing her perfon. Her cabin is the leaft cleanly in the whole prifon. She has learned to eat bread and cheefe, and drink porter; but the always appeara once a day dreffed in the pink of the fashion. She has found means to run in debt at the chandler's fhop, the baker's, and the tap-house, though there is nothing got in this place but with ready-money. She has even borrowed fmall fums from divers prifoners, who were themselves on the brink of flarving. She takes pleasure in being furrounded with duns; observing, that by fuch people a person of fashion is to be diffinguished. She writes circular letters to her former triends and acquaintance; and by this method has raifed pretty confiderable contributions ; for the writes in a moft elegant and irrefiftible ftyle. About a fortnight ago the received a fupply of twenty guineas; when, inflead of paying ker little gaol debts, or withdrawing any part of her apparel from pawn, fhe laid out the whole fum in a fashionable suit and laces; and next day borrowed of me a shilling, to purchafe a neck of mutton for her dinner .- She feems to think her rank in life intitles her to this kind of affistance. She talks very pompoully of her family and connections; by whom, however, she has been long renounced. She has no fympathy nor compaffion for the distreffes of her fellow-creatures; but fhe is perfectly well-bred : fhe bears a repulse the beft of any woman I ever knew ; and her temper has never once been ruffled fince her arrival at the King's Bench.—She now entreated me to lend her half a guinea, for which, fhe faid, fhe had the moft prefing loccation, and promited, upon her honour; it fhould be repaid to-morrow; but I lent a deaf ear to her requeft, and told her, in plain terms, that her honour was already bankrupt."

Sir Launcelot thurfting his hand mechanically into his pocket, pulled out a couple of guineas, and defired Felton to accommodate her with that triffe in his own name; but he declined the proposal, and refused to touch the money. "God forbid (faid he) that I should attempt to thwart your charitable in-I tention; but this, my good Sir, is no object-fhe has many refources. Neither fhould we number the clamourous beggar among those who really feel diftrefs; he is generally gorged with bounty milapplied. The liberal hand of charity should be extended to modeft want, that pines in filence, encountering cold, Inakedneis, and hunger, and every species of dittrefs. Here you may find the wretch of keen fentations blafted by accident in the bloffom of his fortune, thivering in the folitary recels of indigence, difdaining to beg, and even afhamed to let his mifery be known. Here you may fee the parent, who has known happier times, furrounded by his tender offfpring, naked and forlorn, demanding food which his circumftances cannot afford.

" That man of decent appearance and melancholy afpech, who litted his hat as you paffed him in the yards, is a perion of uablemifted character. He was a reputable tradefman in the city, and failed through invertable loids. A committion of barkruptcy was taken out againsh him by his fole creditors a Quakers, who refuiced to fight his certificate. He has lived thefe three years in prifon, with a wife and five fmal. children. In a little time after his commitment, he had friends who offered to pay ten fhillings in the pound of what he owed, and to give fecurity for paying the remainder in three years, by inftalments. The honeft Quaker did not charge the bankrupt with any difhoneft practices; but he rejected the propofal with the most mortifying indifference, declaring that he did not want his money. The mother repaired to his house ; and kneeling before him with her five lovely children, implored mercy with tears and exclamations. He flood this fcene unmoved : and even feemed to enjoy the profpect, wearing the looks of complacency while his heart was feeled with rancour. "Woman, (faid he) thefe be hopeful babes, if they were duly nurtured. Go thy ways in peace ; I have taken my refolution." Her friends maintained the family for fome time : but it is not in human charity to perfevere : fome of them died ; fome of them grew unfortunate; fome of them fell off; and now the poor man is reduced to the extremity of indigence, from whence he has no profpect of being retrieved. 'The fourth part of what you would have bettowed on the lady, would make this poor man and his family fing with joy."

He had fairce prosonneed thefe words, when our hero defired the man might be called; and in a few minutes he entered the apartment with a low obeifance. " Mir Goleby, (taid the knight) I have heard how cruelly you have been uted by your creditor, and bey you will accept this trilling prefent, if it can be of any fervice to you is your dittreft." So faying, he put five guiness into his hand. The poor man was to contounded at firth an un-looked for a equifition, that he flood motionlefs and filent, unable to thank the dence; and MF Telon converd him to the door, obferving that his heart was too full for utterance. But, in a little time, his wife, burding into the room with her five children, looked around, and going up to Sir Launcelot, without any direction, exclaimed, " This is the angel fent by Previdence to fuccour me and my poor innocents!" Then falling at his feet, file prefied his hand, and bathed it with her tears—heraifed her up with that complaeency which was natural to his difpoition. He kiffed all her children, who were remarkably handfome, and neatly kept, though in homely apparel; and, giving her his direction, affared her file might always apply to him in her diffref.

After her departure, he produced a bank-note of twenty pounds, and would have depolited it in the hands of Mr Felton, to be diffributed in charities among the objects of the place; but he defired it might be left with Mr Norton, who was the proper perfon for managing his benevolence; and he promiled to afflit the deputy with his advice in laying it out.

CHAP. X.

In which Captain Crowe is sublimed into the Regions of Astrology.

THREE whole days had our adventure profecured his inquiry about the amiable Aurelia, whom he lought in every place of public and of private entertainment on refort, without obtaining the leaft fairladory intelligence; when he received one evening, from the hands of a porter, who inflantly vanifhed, the following biller:---

" IF you would learn the particulars of Mifa Darnel's fate, fail not to be in the fields by the

Founding Hofpital, precifely at feven o'clock this evening, when you shall be met by a perfon who will give you the fatisfaction you defire, together with his reafon for addreffing you in this myllerious manner.<sup>2</sup>

Had this intimation concerned any other fulpicely, perlaps the knight would have deliberated with him. Idel in what manner he fhould take a hint to darkly communicated: but his eagerne's to retrieve the jewel he had lot divelted him of all his caution. The time of alignation was already at hand; and neither the captain nor his nephew could be found to accompany him, had he been difpoled to make use of their attendance. He, therefore, after a moment's hoftation, repaired to the place appointed, in the tumof, agiustion and anxiety, left the hour fhould be elapled before his arrival.

Crowe was one of those defective fpirits who cannot fubfift for any length of time on their own bottoms. He wanted a familiar prop, upon which he could difburden his cares, his doubts, and his humours; an humble friend, who would endure his caprices, and with whom he could communicate free of all referve and reftraint. Though he loved his nephew's perfon, and admired his parts, he confidered him often as a little petulant jackanapes, who prefumed upon his fuperior underftanding; and as for Sir Launcelot, there was fomething in his character that overawed the feaman, and kept him at a dilagrecable diftance. He had, in this dilemma, caft his eyes upon Timothy Crabshaw, and admitted him to a confiderable fhare of familiarity and fellowship. These companions had been employed in Imoaking a focial pipe at an alchoufe in the neighbourhood, when the knight made his excurfion; and returning to the house about supper-time, found Mr Clarke in waiting.

The young lawyer was alarmed when he heard the hour of ten without feeing our adventurer, who had heen ufed to be extremely regular in his economy; and the captain and he fupped in profound filence. Finding, upon inquiry among the fervants, that the knight went out abruptly, in confequence of having received a billet, Tom began to be vinted with the apprehenfon of a duel; and fat the beft part of the night by his uncle, foresting with the expectation of fecing our hero brought home a breathlefs corple: but no tidings of him arriving, he, about two in the morning, repaired to his own lodging, refoled to publish a deforption of Sir Launcelot in the newfpapers, if he fhould not appear the next day.

Crowe did not pals the time without uncafinefs. He was extremely concerned at the thought of forme milchief having befallen his friend and patron; and he was terrified with the apprehenfions, that in cafe Sir Launcelot was murdered, his fpirit might come, and give him notice of his fate. Now he had an infuperable averfion to all correspondence with the dead; and taking it for granted that the fpirit of his departed friend could not appear to him except when he should be alone, and a-bed in the dark, he determined to pais the remainder of the night without going to bed. For this purpole his first care was to wifit the garret, in which Timothy Crabihaw lay faft afleep, fnoring with his mouth wide open. Him the excaptain with difficulty rouzed, by dint of promifing to regale him with a bowl of 1um punch in the kitchen, where the fire, which had been extinguished, was foon rekindled. The ingredients were fetched from a public houfe in the neighbourhood ; for the captain was too proud to use his interest in the knight's family, efpecially at thefe hours, when all the reft of the ferrants had retired to their repole; and he and Timothy drank together until day-break, the converfation turning upon hobgoblins, and God's revenge againft murder.

The cook-maid lay in a little apartment contiguous to the kitchen; and whether diffurbed by thefe horrible tales of apparitions, or titillated by the favoury fteams that illued from the punch bowl, the made a virtue of neceffity, or appetite ; and dreffing herfelf in the dark, fuddenly appeared before them, to the no fmall perturbation of both. Timothy, in particular, was fo flartled, that in his endeavours to make an hafty retreat towards the chimney-corner, he overturned the table, the liquor was fpilt, but the bowl was faved by falling on a heap of afhes. Mrs Cook having reprimanded him for his foolifh fear. declared the had got up betimes in order to fcour her faucepans; and the captain proposed to have the bowl replenished, if the materials could be procured. This difficulty was overcome by Crabshaw; and they fat down, with their new affociate, to difcufs the fecond edition.

The knight's fudden difappearing being brought upon the carpet, their female companion gave it as her opinion, that nothing would be fo likely to bring this affair to light, as going to a cunning man, whom the had lately confulted about a filter froon that was miflaid; and who told her all things that fhe ever did, and ever would happen to her, through the whole courfe of her life.

Her two companions pricked up their cars at this intelligence; and Crowe afked if the fpoon had been found. She anfwered in the affirmative; and faid, the comming man deferibed to a hair the perion that fould be her true lover and her wedded hufband;

what he was a fea-faring man; that he was prety well kricken in years; a little paffionate or fo; and that he went with his fingers clenched-like, as it were. The haptain began to fweat at this defcription, and mechahically thruft his hands into his pockets: while Crabhaw, pointing to him, told her, he believed fhe had ot the right fow by the ear. Crowe grumbled, that nayhap, for all that, he fhould not be brought up by uch a grappling neither. Then he afked if this cuning man dealt with the devil; declaring, in that cafe he would keep clear of him; for why? becaufe he muft have fold himfelf to Old Scratch; and being a ervant of the devil, how could he be a good fubject to his majefty ? Mrs Cook affured him the conjurer was good Chriftian, and that he gained all his knowedge by converting with the flars and planets. Thus atisfied, the two friends refolved to confult him as oon as it should be light; and being directed to the place of his habitation, fet out for it by feven in the norning.

They found the house forfaken ; and had already eached the end of the lane on their return, when they were accofted by an old woman, who gave them to understand, that if they had occasion for the advice of a fortune-teller, as the did fuppofe they had, from heir flopping at the house where Dr Grubble lived, he would conduct them to a perfon of much more eminence in that profession. At the fame time the informed them, that the faid Grubble had been lately fent to Bridewell; a circumstance which, with all his art, he had not been able to forefee. The captain, without any fcruple, put himfelf and his companion under the convoy of this beldame, who, hrough many windings and turnings, brought them to the door of a ruinous house, flanding in a blind alley : which door having opened with a key drawn from her pocket, the introduced them into a parlour, where they faw no other furniture than a naked bench, and fome frightful figures on the bare walls, drawn, or rather forawled, with charcoal.

Here the left them locked in, until the thould give the doctor notice of their arrival; and they amufed themfelves with decyphering these characters and hieroglyphics. The first figure that engaged their attention was that of a man hanging upon a gibbet, which both confidered as an unfavourable omen, and each endeavoured to avert from his own perfon. Crabshaw observed, that the figure fo fuspended was clothed in a failor's jacket and trowfers; a-truth which the captain could not deny; but, on the other hand, he affirmed, that the faid figure exhibited the very nofe and chin of Timothy, together with the hump on one fhoulder. A warm difpute enfued; and being maintained with much acrimonious altercation. might have diffolved the new cemented friendship of those two originals, had it not been interrupted by the old fybil, who, coming into the parlour, intimated that the doctor waited for them above. She likewife told them that he never admitted more than one at a time. This hint occasioned a fresh conteft : the captain infifted upon Crabfhaw's making fail a-head, in order to look out afore: but Timothy perfitted in refuting this honour, declaring he did not pretend to lead, but would follow, as in duty bound. The old gentlewoman abridged the ceremony, by leading out Crabshaw with one band, and locking up Crowe with the other.

The former was dragged up flairs like a bear to the flake, not without relectance and terror; which did not at all abate at the fight of the conjurer, with whom he was immediately flut up by the conductrefy, after the had told him, in a whitper, that he muß deposit a shilling in a little black coffin, supported by a human fkull and thigh bones croffed, on a ftool covered with black baize that flood in one corner of the apartment. The 'fquire having made this offering with fear and trembling, ventured to furvey the objects around him, which were very well calculated to augment his confution. He faw divers skeletons hung by the head, the ftuffed fkin of a young alligator, a calf with two heads, and feveral fnakes fufpended from the ceiling, with the jaws of a fhark, and a starved weafel. On another funeral table be beheld two fpheres, between which lay a book open, exhibiting outlandifh characters and mathematical diagrams. On one fide ftood an ink-fland with paper ; and behind this defk appeared the conjurer himfelf in fable veftments: his head fo overshadowed with hair. that, far from contemplating his features, Timothy could diffinguish nothing but a long white beard, which, for aught he knew, might have belonged to a four-legged goat, as well as to a two-legged aftrologe.

I IO

This apparition, which the 'fquire' did not 'eye without manifedt difcompolare, extending a white ward, made certain erolations over the head of Timothy ; and having muttered an ejaculation, commanded bin, in a hollow tone, to come forward and declare his name. Crabihaw, thus adjured, advanced to the altar; and whether from defign, or (which is more probable) from confuinn, andwered, "Samuel Crowe." The conjurer taking up the pen, and making a few (fratches on the paper, exclaimed, in a terrific accent, "How! millereant! attempt to impole upon the flaw 2-You look more like a crab than a crow, and was born under the fign of Cancer." The "Quire, almout annihilated by this exclamation, feu upon the flaw 2-You look by the schamation, feu von the schemation, feu

III

Here he was interrupted by the conjurer, who exhorted him to fit down and compose himfelf till he should caft a figure. Then he forawled the paper ; and waving his wand, repeated abundance of gibberifh concerning the number, the names, the houses, and revolutions of the planets, with their conjunctions, oppofitions, figns, circles, cycles, trines, and trigons. When he perceived that this artifice had it's proper effect in diffurbing the brain of Crabshaw, he proceeded to tell him, from the ftars, that his name was Crabshaw, or Crabsclaw; that he was born in the Eaft Riding of Yorkshire, of poor, yet honest parents, and had fome skill in horfes; that he ferved a gentleman whole name began with the letter G. which gentleman had run mad for love, and left his family; but whether he would return alive or dead, the tars had not yet determined.

Poor Timothy was thunder-flruck to find the conjurer acquainted with all thefe circumflances; and begged to know if he mought be fo bauld as to ax a queficion or two about his awn fortune. The allrologer pointing to the little coffin, our "fquire underood the hiut, and deposited another shilling. The see had recourde to his book, erect-d another (cheme, erformed once more his airy evolutions with the and; and having recited another myfical preamble, xpounded the book of fate in thefe words:

"You shall neither die by war nor water, by hunger r by thirft, nor be brought to the grave by old age ir diftemper; but, let me fee-ave, the ftars will ave it fo-you thall b -- exalted-hah !- aye, that hanged for horfe-ttealing."---- " O, good my ord conjurer! (roared the 'fquire) I'd as lief give brey fullings as be hanged."-" Peace, firrah ! cried the other) would you contradict or reverse he immutable decrees of fate? Hanging is your def-iny; and hanged you fhall be-and comfort yourfeif with the reflection, that as you are not the firft, b neither will you be the laft to fwing at Tyburniree." This comfortable affurance composed the mind of Timothy, and in a great measure reconciled him to the prediction. He now proceeded, in a whining tone, to afk, whether he fhould fuffer for the high fact ; whether it would be for a horfe or a mare." and of what colour ; that he might know when his hour was come. The conjuter gravely answered, that he would fteal a dappled gelding on a Wednefday, be cast at the Old Bailey on a Thursday, and suffer on a Friday; and he ftrenuoufly recommended it to him to appear in the cart with a nolegay in one hand, and the Whole Duty of Man in the other. " But if in cafe it fhould be in the winter, (faid the 'fquire) when a nolegay can't be had ?" " Why, then, (replied the conjurer) an orange will do as well."

Thefe material points being adjuited to the entire fatisfaction of Timothy, he declared he would beflow another fhilling to know the fortune of an old com-K z.

III

114

panion, who truly did not deferve fo much at his hands; but he could not help loving him better than ever a friend he had in the world. So faving, he dropped a third offering in the coffin, and defired to know the fate of his herfe Gilbert. The aftrologer having again confulted his art, pronounced that Gilbert would die of the flaggers, and his carcafe be given to the hounds : a fentence which made a much deeper impreffion upon Crabshaw's mind than than did the prediction of his own untimely and difgraceful fate. He shed a plenteous shower of tears, and his grief broke forth in fome paffionate expreffions of tendernels. At length he told the aftrologer, he would go and fend up the captain, who wanted to confult him about Margery Cook, becaufe as how fhe had informed him, that Dr Grubble had defcribed just fuch another man as the captain for her true love : and he had no great flomach to the match, if fo be as the ftars were not bent upon their coming together.

Accordingly the 'fquire being difmitfield by the conjurer, defeended to the parlour with a rucful length of face: which being perceived by the captain, he demanded, "What cheer, ho?" with fome figne of apprehenfione. Crabbinaw making no return to this falute, he afteed if the conjuter had taken an obfervation, and told him any thing. Then the other replied, he had told him more than he defired to know. "Why, an that be the cafe (faid the feaman) I have no occasion to go aloft this trip, horther.""

This evation would not ferre his turn, Old Tiliphone was at hand, and led him up, growling, into the hall of audience, which he did not examine without trepidation. Having been directed to the coffin, where he prefeated half a crown, in hope of rendering the fates more propilions, the ulual ceremony as performed; and the doctor addreffed him in thefe ords :- " Approach, Raven." The captain adancing, " You an't much millaken, brother (faid e) heave your eye into the binnacle, and box your pinpafs, you'll find I'm a Crowe, not a Raven; to'f, indeed, they be both fowls of a feather, as the lying is." ---- " I know it (cried the conjurer) thou it a northern crow-a fea crow; not a crow of rey, but a crow to be preyed upon-a crow to be lucked-to be flayed-to be bafted-to be broiled y Margery upon the griditon of matrimony ____. "he novice changing colour at this denunciation, "I do underftand your fignals, brother (faid he); nd if it be fet down in the log-book of fate that we auft grapple, why then 'ware timbers. But as I now how the land livs, d'ye fee, and the current of ny inclination fets me off, I shall haul up close to he wind, and mayhap we fhall clear Cape Margery. But, howfomever, we fhall leave that reef in the foreop-fail .- 1 was bound upon another voyage, d'ye ee-to look and to fee, and to know, if fo be as how could pick up any intelligence along fhore concernhg my friend Sir Launcelst, who flipped his cable " all night, and has loft company, d'ye fee." What! exclaimed the cunning man) art thou a crow, and ah'ft not fmell carrion? If thou would't grieve or Gieaves, behold his naked carcale lies unburied o feed the kites, the crows, the gulls, the rooks, and avens."___ " What, broach'd to !" " Dead ! as boil'd lobfter." " Odd's heart, friend, thefe are he heaviest tidings I have heard thefe feven long gears-there must have been deadly odds when he owered his top-fails-Smite my eyes! I had rather the Musti had foundered at fea, with mysclf and K 3 .

flower of the would! Had honeth Sam Crowe been within hall—but what fignifies palavering ?" Here the tears of unaffected forrow flowed plentifolly down the furrows of the feaman's checks—then his grief giving way to bia indignation, "Heark ye, brother, conjurer (faid he) you can fay foul weather before it comes; dama your eyes! why did you not give us warning of this here (qual)? Blaft my limbs! [Pli make youngive an account of this here damned, horvid, confounded murder, d'ye fee.—Mayhap yourfelf was concerned, d'ye fee.—Eor my own part, brother, I put my turl in God, and fleer by the compafs, and I value not your paw-wawing, and your conjuration of a rope's end, d'ye fee."—

The conjurer was by no means pleafed either with the matter or the manner of this address : he therefore began to foothe the captain's choler, by reprefenting that he did not pretend to omnifcience, which was the attribute of God alone; that human art was fallible and imperfect, and all that it could perform, was to difcover certain partial circumftances of any particular object to which it's inquiries were directed : that being queffioned by the other man concerning the caufe of his matter's dilappearing, he had exercifed his fkill upon the fubject, and found reafon to believe that Sir Launcelot was affaffinated; that he should think himfelf happy in being the inflrument of bringing the murderers to justice, though he forefaw they would of themfelves fave him that trouble, for they would quarrel about dividing the ipoil, and one would give information against the other.

The profpect of this fatisfaction appealed the refeotment, and in fome measure mitigated the grief of Captain Crowe, who took his leave without much certmeny; and being jointd by Crabihaw, proceeded with a heavy heart to the houfe of Sir Launcelot, where they found the domefiles at breakfaft, without exhibiting the leaft fymptom of concern for their abfent mafter. Crowe had been wife enough to conceal from Crubhaw what he had learned of the knight's fate. This fatal intelligence he referred for the ear of his nephew Mr Clarke, who did not fail to attend him in the forenoon.

As for the 'fquire, he did nothing but ruminate in runful filence upon the dappled gelding, the unofgay, and the predicted fate of Gilbert: him he forthwith vifited in the tlable, and faluted with the kilo of peace. Then he bemaned his fortune with tears; and, by the found of his own lamentation, was lulled alfeep among the litter.

CHAP. XI.

In which the Clouds that cover the Catastrophe begin to disperse.

When the nut now leave Captain Crowe and his whenence about the fatal intelligence obtained from the conjurcr, and perstrate at once the veil that concealed our hero. Know, then, reader, that Sir Launcelot Greaves repairing to the place defiribed in the billet which he had received, was accould by a perfog multiled in a cloak, who began to amufe him with a Teigned floay of Arcelia; to which, while he littened with great attention, he found himfelf fuddenly furrounded by arms, took away his fword, and conveyed him by force into a hackney coach provided for the purpole. In wain he expofulated on this violence with three perfors who accompanded him in the vehicals' he could not extort one word by way of reply a mid, from their globary alphecia, he begran to be apprehentive of affaffination. Had the carriage palled utrough any frequence block, he would have endeavourd to alarm the lababilitatic; but it was already clear of the town, and his conductors took care to avoid all willages and inabilite houles.

After having travelled about two miles, the cosch flopped at a large iron gate; which being opened, our adventure was led in flinee through a fpecious houfe into a tolerably decent apartment, which he underflood was intended for his be chamber. In a few minutes after his arrival, he was vifited by a man of no very prepofferiling appearance, who endeavoured to fmoothe his countenance, which was naturally flern; wele med our adveature to his houfe, exhorted him nothing, and defired to know what he would chule for fupper.

Sir Launcels, in andmer to this civil addrefs, begged he would explain the nature of his confinement, and the reafons for which his arms were tid like thofe of the work malefactor: the other pollpond fill co-morrow the explanation he demanded; but, in the mean time, unbound his fetters, and as he declined eating, left him abone to his report. He took dere, however, in retiring, to double lock the door of the room, whole windows were grated on the outfile with room.

The knight being thus abandoned to his own mediations, begin to raminate on the prefeat adventure with equal farprize and concern; but the more be revolved Greumfances, the more was he preflexed in sits conjectures. According to the flate of the mind, a very fuble philofopher is o'ren puzzled by a very plein propofition; and this was the cafe of our denturer. What made the ftrongeft imprefilon upon is mind, was a oution that he was apprehended on infpicion of treafonable practices, by a warrant from he fecretary of flate, in confequence of fome falle, nalicious information: and that his prifon was no sther than the houfe of a mellenger, fet apart for the iccommodation of fulpereful perions. In this opinin he comforted hindleft by recollecting his own concious innocence, and reflecting that he fhould be initled to the privilege of losbear corpus, as the act in-ducing that inclimable jewel was happily not fulpented at that time.

Confoled by this felf-affurance, he quietly refigned himself to flumber; but beføre he fell afleep, he was very difagreeably undeceived in his conjecture. His ears were all at once faluted with a noise from he next room, conveyed in diffinct bounces againft the wainfcot; then an boarfe voice exclaimed. " Bring up the artillery-let Brutandorf's brigade adrance-detach my black huffars to ravage the country -let them be new-booted-take particular care of the Ipur-leathers-make a defart of Lufatia-bombard the fuburbs of Pera-go, tell my brother Henry to pals the Elbe at Meiffen with forty battalions and fifty squadrons-So ho, you Major General Dondor, why don't you finish your fecond parallel?-fend hither the engineer Schittenbach-I'll lay all the hoes in my shop, the breach will be practicable in four-and-twenty hours-don't tell me of your works -you and your works may be damn'd !"

"Affuredly, (cited another voice from a different quarter) he that thinks to be faved by works is in a flate of utter reprobation—I myfelf was a prophane weaver, and trufted to the rottennels of works —I kept my journeymen and 'prentices at confant works, and my heart was fet upon the riches of this world, which was a wicked work—but now I have got a glimple of this new light—I feel the opperations of grace—I am of the new birth—I shohor good works—I deteft all working but the w rking of the Spirit—Avaunt, Saton!—O! how I third for communication with our filter Jolly !"

"The communication is already open with the Marche, (faid the firft); but as for thee, thou caitiff, who halt prefumed to difparage my works, I Il have ther earmed into a mortar with a double charge of powder, and thrown into the enemy's quarters."

This dialogue operated like a train upon many orther inhabitants of the place; one four he was within three vibrations of finding the longitude, when this nofic confounded his scaladitation; a focond, in broken English, complained he was diffurped in the momeut of de profinction; a third, in the character of his holfners, denounced interediction, excommunication, and mathemas; and fource by Sr Peter's keyr, help floud how it en thouland years in purgatory, without the benefit of a fingle mafs. A fourth hegan to halloo in all the vocification of a fox-hunter in the chare; and, in an initiant, the whole houfe was in an upport.

The clamotr, however, was of a floort duration. The different chambers being opened fuccefively, every individual was effectually filenced by the found of one exhalitical word, which was no other than guiltant is charm which at once coved the King of P____, difpoffeffed the fanatic, dumb-founded the mathematician, difmayed the alchemit, depoide the pope, and deprived the 'djurie of all utchance.

Our adventurer was no longer in doubt concerning the place to which he had been conveyed; and the more he reflected on his fituation the more he was derewhelmed with the moll perplexing chagrin. He sould not couerive by whole means he had been immured in a mad-houle; but he beatify repented of his knight-errantry, as a frolie which might have very ferious confequences with relpect to his future life and fortune. After mature deliberation, he recolved to demean himfelf with the utmoft circumfection, well knowing that every violent transfort would be interpreted into an undeniable fympton of infanity. He was not without hope of being able to move his goaler by a due administration of that which is gemerally more efficacious than all the flowers of clocution; but hwen he arofe in the morning, he found his pockets had been carefully examined, and emptied of all his papers and cafh.

The keeper entering, he inquired about thefe particulars; and was given to underfland, that they were all faiely deposited for his use, to be forthcoming at a proper featon: but, at prefent, as he floadd want for unthing, he had no occasion for money. The knight acquireded in this declaration, and eat his breakfall n quiet.

About elven, he received a vific from the phyfician, who contemplated his looks with great folemniity; and having examined his pulle, fhook his head, faying, "Well, Sir, how d'ye do2-Come, don't be dejected--every thing is for the bell-you are in very good hands, Sir, I affure you; and I dare fay, will refufe nothing that may be thought conducive to the recovery of your health."

"Doctor, (hid our hero) if it is not an improper genetion to ad, I flowid be glad to know your opinion of my diforder." — "OI Sir, as to that, (replied the phyfician) your diforder is a—kind of a— Sir, 'this very common in this country—a for to a—" "Do you think my diftemper is madnefs, doctor !" "O Lordd Sir—not, ashoute madnefs—no—mot madnefs—you have heard, no doubt, of what is called a weaknefs of the nerves, Sir--though that is a very inaccurate exprefines; for this phrafe, denoting a morbid excels of fendiaton, ferm to imply, that fendation itfelf is owing to the loofe cohefion of thole material particles which conflictute the nervous fubfames, inalmost as the quantity of every effect mult be proportionable to it's caufe; now you'll pleafe to take notice, Sir, if the cale were really what theffe words feem to import, all bodies whole particles do not cohere with too great a degree of proximity, would be nervour; that is, endued with fendation— Sir, I final order fome cooling things to kery you in due temperature; and you'll do very well—Sir, your humble ferent."

So faying, he retired; and our adventurer could not but think it was very hard that one man should not dare to afk the most ordinary questions without being reputed mad, while another should talk nonefous by the hour, and yet be effected as an oracle.

The malter of the houfe finding Sir Launcelor for tame and tradable, indulated him after diamet with a walk in a little private garden, under the eye of a fervant, who followed him at a diffance: here he was followed by a brother prifoner, a man feemingly turned of thirty, tall and thin, with flaring eyes, a hook mofe, and a face covered with pimples.

The ufual compliments having paif-d, the firancer, without farther ecremony, alked if he would oblige him with a chew of tobacco, or could fpare him a mouthful of any fort of cordial, declaring he had not taffed brandy face he came to the houfe. The knight affared him it was not in his power to comply with him request; and begap to alk fonce questions relating to the character of their handlord, which the franger repredented in your undavorable collours,

Ie defcribed him as a ruffian, capable of undertaing the darkeft fchemes of villany. He faid, his oufe was a repolitory of the most flagrant iniquities; hat it contained fathers kidnapped by their children, vives confined by their hufbands, gentlemen of forune fequeftered by their relations, and innocent perons immured by the malice of their adverfaries. He affirmed this was his own cafe; and afked if our hero had never heard of Dick Diffich, the poet and atireft. " Ben Bullock and I (faid he) were confilent against the world in arms-did you never fee his Ode to me, beginning with, " Fair blooming south ?" We were fworn brothers, admired and brailed, and quoted each other, Sir; we denounced war against all the world, actors, authors, and critics : and having drawn the fword, threw away the fcabbard-we pushed through thick and thin, hacked and hewed, helter-skelter, and became as formidable to the writers of the age as the Bosotian band of Thebes. My friend Bullock, indeed, was once rolled in the kennel; but foon

He vig'rous role, and from the effluvia ftrong, Imbib'd new life, and fcour'd and ftunk along.

Here is a fatire, which I wrote in an alchoufe when I was drunk—I can prove it by the evidence of the landlord and his wife: I fancy you will own I have fome right to fay, with my friend Horace,

Qui me commorit, melius non tangere clamo; Flebit et insignis toto cantabitur urbe.

The knight having perufed the papers, declared bis opinion, that the werfes were tolerably good; but at the fame time obferved, that the author had reviled, as ignorant dences, feveral perfons who had . Voz. 14. L writ with reputation, and were generally allowed to have genius: a circumftance that would detract more from his candour than could be allowed to his capacity.

"Dama their genius! (cried the fatirift) is pack of impertinent rafcals! I tell you, Sir, Ben Bullock and I had determined to cruth all that were not of our own party-befides, I faid before, this piece was witten in drike." "Was you drowk too when it was printed and publified?" "Yes; the printerfhallmake affidarit that I was never otherwife than drunk or maudlin, till my enemies, on pretence that my brain was turned, conveyed me to this inferral anafion."

" They feem to have been your best friends, (faid the knight) and have put the most tender interpretations on your conduct ; for waving the plea of infanity, your character muft fland as that of a man who hath fome fmall fhare of genius, without an atom of integrity. Of all those whom Pope lashed in his Dunciad, there was not one who did not richly deferve the imputation of dulnefs; and every one of them had provoked the fatirift by a perfonal attack. In this refpect the English poet was much more honeft than his French pattern Boileau; who ftigmatized feveral men of acknowledged genius; fuch as Quinault, Perrault, and the celebrated Lulli; for which reason every man of a liberal turn muft, in spite of all his poetical merit, despise him as a rancorous knave. If this difingenious conduct cannot be forgiven in a writer of his superior genius, who will pardon it in you, whole name is not half emerged from obfcurity ?"

"Heark ye, friend, (replied the bard) keep your pardon and your counfel for thole who afk it; or, if you will force them upon people, take one piece of advice in return. If you don't like your prefenu fluation, apply for a cammittee without defay; ey'll find you too much a fool to have the leaft neture of madnefs; and you'll be releafed without rther (cruple: in that cafe I fihall rejoice in your eliverance; you will be freed from confinement, and fhall be happily deprived of your convertation."

So faying, he flew off at a tangent, and our knight build not help finiling at the peculiar virulence of is difpolition. Sir Launcelot then endeavoured to inter into conversation with his attendant, by asking . . long Mr Diffich had refided in the honfe ; but e might as well have addreffed himfelf to a Turkish ute : the fellow either pretended ignorance, or repled an anfwer to every queftion that was propoled. le would not even disclose the name of his landlord, or inform him whereabouts the houfe was fituated. Finding himfelf agitated with impatience and inignation, he returned to his apartment; and the por being locked upon him, began to review, not ithout horror, the particulars of his fate. " How ittle reafon (faid he to himfelf) have we to boaft of ie bleffings enjoyed by the British subject, if he plds them on fuch a precarious tenure : if a man of nk and property may be thus kidnapped, even in e midt of the capital; if he may be feized by offians, infulted, robbed, and conveyed to fuch a rilon as this, from which there feems to be no puffility of elcape; fhould I be indulged with pen, ink, d paper, and appeal to my relations, or to the magisates of my country, my letters would be interceptby those who superintend my confinement. Should try to alarm the neighbourhood, my cries would neglected as those of fome unhappy lugatic under eceffary correction. Should I employ the force hich Heaven has lent me, I might imbrue my inds in blood ; and, after all, find it impossible to I. 2 elcape through a number of fucceffive doors, locks bolts, and centinels. Should I endeavour to tamper W with the fervant, he might discover my defign, and then I should be abridged of the little comfort I enjoy. People may inveigh againft the Baffile in France, and the Inquifition in Portugal; but I would afk, if a either of these be in reality fo dangerous or dreadful as a private mad-house in England, under the direction of a ruffian? The Baftile is a ftate-prifon, the Inquifition is a fpiritual tribunal ; but both are under the direction of government. It feldom, if ever, happens, that a man entirely innocent is confined in ci-it ther ; or, if he fould, he lays his account with a legal trial before eftablished judges. But in England, the most innocent perfon upon earth is liable to be immured for life, under the pretext of lunacy; fequeftered from his wife, children, and friends ; robbed of his fortune; deprived even of neceffaries; and fubjected to the most brutal treatment from a lowbred barbarian, who raifes an ample fortune on the mifery of his fellow-creatures, and may, during his whole life, practife this horrid oppreffion without queftion or controul,"

This uncomfortable reverie was interrupted by a very unexpected found that leends to influe from the other fide of a thick party-wall. If was a fitain of vocal mufic, more plaintive than the widowed turble's mean, more forest and raviling than Philomet's lovewarbledlong. Through his car is inflandly pieced into the heart; for at once he recognized it to be the voice of his adored Aurelia. Heavens! what was the agitation of his foul, whenhe made this difcovery! How did every nerve quiver! How did his heart throb with the moft violent emotion! He ran round the room in diftraction, foaming like a lion in the toil—then he placed his ear clofe to the partition, and liftend a if his whole foul was exerted in his fenfe of hearing. When the found cealed to vibrate on his ear, he harew himfelf on the bed, he groaned with anguith, he exclasimed in broken accents ; and, in all probability, his heart would have burth, had not the violence of his forrow found wat in a flood of tears.

These first transports were fucceeded by a fit of impatience, which had well nigh deprived him of his forste in good earnedt. His furprife at finding his loft Aurelia in fuch a place, the feeming impollibility of relieving hers, and his untpeakable experted to contrive fome ficheme for profiting by the interefling nifeowery he had made, concerred in brewing up a fecond exta/y, during which he acted a thousand extravagancies, which it was well for him the fareau that be did not enter while the paroxyfim prevailed y had this been the cafe, he might have met with the fate of Lychas, whom Hercules in his frenzy deflroyred.

Before the cloth was laid for fupper, he was calm enough to conceal the difference of him ind : but he complained of the head-ache, and defired he might be next day vifited by the phyfician ; to whom he refolved to explain himfell in luch a manner as fhould make an imprefino upon him, provided he was not allogether defitute of concilence and humanity.

CHAP. XII.

The Knot that puzzles buman Wisdom, the Hand of Fortune sometimes will untie familiar as her Garter.

W HEN the doctor made his next appearance in Sir Launcelot's apartment, the knight ad-

L3

10

dreffed him in these words : " Sir, the practice of medicine is one of the most honourable professions exercifed among the fons of men; a profession which hath been revered at all periods, and in all nations, and even held facred in the most polished ages of antiquity. The fcope of it is to preferve the being, and confirm the health of our fellow-creatures; of confequence to fuftain the bleffings of fociety, and crown life with fruition. The character of a physician, therefore, not only supposes natural fagacity and acquired erudition, but it also implies every delicacy of fentiment, every tendernels of nature, and every virtue of humanity. That these qualities are centred in you, doctor, I would willingly believe; but it will be fufficient for my purpole, that you are poffeffed of common integrity. To whole concern I am indebted for your vifits, you beft know; but if you understand the art of medicine, you must be fenfible, by this time, that with refpect to me your prefcriptions are altogether unneceffary-Come, Sir, you cannot-you don't believe that my intellects are difordered. Yet, granting me to be really under the influence of that deplorable malady, no perfon has a right to treat me as a lunatic, or to fue out a commiffion, but my neareft kindred .- That you may not plead ignorance of my name and family, you shall underftand that I am Sir Launcelot Greaves of the county of York, Baronet; and that my nearest relation is Sir Reginald Meadows, of Chefhire, the eldeft fon of my mother's fifter-that gentleman, I am fure, had no concern in feducing me, by falle pretences, under the clouds of night, into the fields, where I was furprifed, overpowered, and kidnapped by armed ruffians. Had he really believed me infane, he would have proceeded according to the dictates of honour, humanity, and the laws of his country. Situated as I ann, I have a right, by making application to the lord-chancellor, to be tried by a jury of honeft men -But of that right I cannot avail myfelf while I remain at the mercy of a brutal militerant, in whole houle I am incloid, unlik you contribute your aificance. Your alfilhance, therefore, I demand, as you are a gendeman, a Chrilian, and a fellow-thojed; who, though every other motive fhould be overlooked, ought to intereft himfelf in my cafe as common concern ; and concorr, with all your power, towards the punifhment of thole who dare commit fuch outrages againd the liberty of your courty."

The doctor feemed to be a little diffeoncerted; but, after fome recollection, refumed his air of fofficiency and importance, and affured our adventurer, he would do him all the fervice in his power; but, in the mean time, advided him to take the potion he had preferibed.

The knight's eyes lightening with indignation, " I am now convinced, (cried he) that you are an accomplice in the villany that has been praclifed upon me; that you are a fordid wretch, without principle or feeling, a difgrace to the faculty, and reproach to human nature-yes, firrah, you are the most perfidious of all affaffins-you are the hireling minifter of the worft of all villains; who, from motives even bafer than malice, envy, and revenge, rob the innocent of all the comforts of life, brand them with the imputation of madnels, the most cruel fpecies of flander, and wantonly protract their milery, by leaving them in the most shocking confinement ; a prey to reflections, infinitely more bitter than death-but I will be calm-do me juffice at your peril. I demand the protection of the legislature -if I am refuled-remember, a day of reckoning will come-you and the reft of the milercants who have combined againft me, mufit, in order to cloak your treachery, have recourfe to muider; an expedient which I believe you very capable of embracine, er a man of my rank and character cannot be much longer concealed------Tremble, cuitifi, at the thoughts of my releafe-----in the mean time, be gone, leaft my juft referitment impel me to dath out your brains apon that marble---Away -----'

The honeft doctor was not fo firmly perfused of his patient's lunacy as to reject his advice; which he made with what hafte he could to follow, when an unexpected accident intervened.

That this may be properly introduced, we muft return to the knight's brace of trufty friends, Capsain Crowe and Lawyer Clarke, whom we left in forrowful deliberation upon the fate of their patron. Clarke's genius being rather more fruitful in refources than that of the feaman, he fuggefted an advertifement which was accordingly inferted in the daily papers ; importing, that, "Whereas a gentleman of confiderablerank and fortune had fuddenly difappeared, on fuch a night, from his houfe near Golden Square, in confequence of a letter delivered to him by a porter; and there is great reason to believe fome violence hath been offered to his life; any perfon capable of giving fuch information as may tend to clear up this dark transaction, shall, by applying to Mr Thomas Clarke, attorney, at his lodgings in Upper Brook Street, receive proper fecurity for the reward of one hundred guiness, to be paid to him upon his making the difcovery required."

The porter who delivered the letter appeared accordingly, but could give no other information except that it was put into his hand, with a fhilding, by a man muffied up in a great coat, who flopped him for the purpole, in his paffing through. Queen Street. It was necessary that the advertisement fhould produce an effect upon another perfon, who was no other than the hackney coachman who drove our hero to the place of his imprifonment. This fellow had been enjoined fecrecy, and, indeed, bribed to hold his tongue, by a confiderable gratification; which, it was supposed, would have been effectual, as the man was a mafter coachman in good circumftances, and well known to the keeper of the mad-houfe, by whom he had been employed on former occations of the fame nature. Perhaps his fidelity to his employer, reinforced by his hope of many future jobs of that kind, might have been proof against the offer of fifty pounds; but double that fum was a temptation he could not refift. He no fooner read the intimation in the Daily Advertifer over his morning's pot at an alehoufe, than he entered into confultation with his own thoughts; and having no reason to doubt that this was the very fare he had conveyed, he refolved to earn the reward, and abstain from all fuch adventures in time coming. He had the precaution. however, to take an attorney along with him to Mr Clarke, who entered into a conditional bond ; and, with the affiftance of his uncle, deposited the money, to be forthcoming when the conditions should be fulfilled. These previous measures being taken, the coachman declared what he knew, and discovered the house in which Sir Launcelot had been immured. He, moreover, accompanied our two adherents to a judge's chamber, where he made oath to the truth of his information ; and a warrant was immediately granted to fearch the houfe of Barnard Shackle, and fet at liberty Sir Launcelot Greaves, if there found.

Fortified with this authority, they engaged a confable with a formidable poffé; and embarking them in coaches, repaired, with all poffible expedition, to the houfe of Mr Shackle, who did not think proper to difpute their claim ; but admitted them, though not without betraying evident fymptoms of conflernation. One of the fervants directing them, by his mafter's order, to Sir Launcelot's apartment, they hurried up flairs in a body, occafioning fuch a mife as did not fail to alarm the phyfician, who had juft opened the door to retire, when he perceived their irruption. Captain Crowe conjecturing he was guilty, from the confusion that appeared in his countenance, made no fcruple of feizing him by the collar as he endeavoured to retreat; while the tender-hearted Tom Clarke, maniag up to the knight with his eyes brimful of joy and affection, forgot all the forms of diftant respect, and throwing his arms around his neck, blubbered in his bofom,

Our hero did not receive this proof of his attache ment unmoved. He firained him in his embrace, honoured him with the title of his deliverer, and afked him by what miracle he had difcovered the place of his confinement. The lawyer began to unfold the various fteps he had taken, with equal minutenefs and felf-complacency; when Crowe, dragging the doctor fill by the collar, flook his old friend by the mand, protefting he was never to overjoyed fince he got clear of a Sallee Rover on the coaft of Barbary ; and that two glaffes ago he would have flarted all the money he had in the world, in the hold of any man who would have fhewn Sir Launcelot fafe at his moorings. The knight, having made a proper return to this fincere manifeftation of good-will, defired him to difmifs that worthlefs fellow, meaning the doctor; who, finding himfelf releafed, withdrew with some precipitation.

Then our adventurer, attended by his friends, walked with a deliberate pace to the outward gate; which he found open; and getting into one of the coaches, was entertained by the way to his own houfe with a detail of every measure which had been purfued for his release.

In his own parlour he found Mrs Dolly Cowflip, who had been waiting with great fear and impatience for the iffue of Mr Clarke's adventure. She now fell upon her knees, and bathed the knight's hands with tears of joy ; while the face of this young woman, recalling the idea of her miftrefs, rouzed his heart to ftrong emotions, and ftimulated his mind to the immediate achievement he had already planned. As for Crabshaw, he was not the last to fignify his fatisfaction at his mafter's return. After having kiffed the hem of his garment, he retired to the flable, where he communicated thefe tidings to his friend Gilbert, whom he faddled and bridled : the fame office he performed for Bronzomarte; then putting on his 'fquire-like attire and accoutrements, he mounted one, and led the other to the knight's door; before which he paraded, uttering, from time to time, repeated fhouts, to the no fmall entertainment of the populace, until he received orders to houfe his companions. Thus commanded, he led them back to their stalls, refumed his livery, and rejoined his fellow-fervants, who were refolved to celebrate the day with banquets and rejoicings.

Their mafter's hear way not fufficiently at eafe to fhare in their ferlivity. - He held a conductation with his friends in the parlour, whom he acquainted with the readons he had to believe Mils Darnel was confined in the fame house which had been his prifory a circumstance which filled them with equal plerfore and attooithment. Dolly, in partchalar, weeping plentifully, conjured him to deliver her dear lady without delaw. - Nothing now remained but to concert the plan for her deliverance. As Aurelia had informed Dolly of her connection with Mrs. Kawdle, at whofe houfe the proposed to lodge before the was overtaken on the road by her uncle, this particular was now imparted to the council, and fruck a light which feemed to point out the direct way to Mids Damel's enlargement.

Our hero, accompanied by Mrs Cowflip and Tom Clarke, fet out immediately for the house of Dr. Kawdle, who happened to be abroad; but his wife received them with great courtefy. She was a wellbred, fenfible, genteel woman, and ftrongly attached to Aurelia by the ties of affection as well as confanguinity. She no fooner learned the fituation of her coufin, than the expressed the most impatient concern for her being fet at liberty; and affured Sir Launcelot fhe would concur in any fcheme he fhould propofe for that putpole. There was no room for besitation or choice; he attended her immediately to the judge, who, upon proper application, iffued another fearch-warrant for Aurelia Darnel. The conftable and his poffé were again retained, and Sir Launcelot Greaves once more croffed the threshold of Mr Barnard Shackle. Nor was the fearch-warrant the only implement of juffice with which he had furnished himself for this visit. In going thither, they agreed upon the method in which they fhould introduce themfelves gradually to Mifs Darnel, that her tender nature might not be too much fhocked by their fudden appearance,

When they arrived at the houfe, therefore, and produced their credentials, in confequence of which a female attendant was directed to flow the lady's apartment, Mrs Dolly first entered the chamber of the accompliched. Aurelia: who, lifting up her eyes, loceaned aboud, and flew into the arms of her faithful Cowflip. Some minutes elapfed before Dolly to could make fhift to exclaim, " Am coom to live and daai with my beloved leady !" " Dear Dolly ! (cried her mittrefs) I cannot express the pleafure I have in feeing you again .- Good Heaven ! what folitary hours of keen affliction have I paffed fince we parted !- But tell me, how did you difcover the place of my retreat ?- Has my uncle relented ?- Do I owe your coming to his indulgence ?"

135

Dolly answered in the negative ; and by degrees gave her to underftand, that her coufin, Mrs Kawdle, was in the next room. That lady immediately appeared, and a very tender scene of recognition passed between the two relations. It was the who, in the courfe of conversation, perceiving that Aurelia was perfectly composed, declared the happy tidings of her approaching deliverance. When the other eagerly infifted upon knowing to whole humanity and addrefs fhe was indebted for this happy turn of fortune, her coufin declared the obligation was due to a young gentleman of Yorkshire, called Sir Launcelot Greaves. At mention of that name, her. face was overfpread with a crimfon glow, and her eyes beamed redoubled fplendor. "Coufin, (faid fhe with a figh) I know not what to fay-that gentleman-Sir Launcelot Greaves, was furely born-Lord blefs me !. I tell you, coufin, he has been my guardian angel____"

Mrs Kawdle, who had maintained a correspondence with her by letters, was no ftranger to the former part of the connection fublifting between those two lovers, and had always favoured the pretentions of our hero, without being acquainted with his perfon. She now obferved, with a fmile, that as Aurelia had effeemed the knight her guardian angel, and he adored Vol. II.

136

her as a demi-deity, nature feemed to have intended them for each other; for fuch fublime ideas exalted them both above the fphere of ordinary mortals. She then ventured to intimate, that he was in the house, impatient to pay his respects in person. At this declaration the colour vanished from her cheeks. which, however, foon underwent a total fuffution. Her heart panted, her bolom heaved, and her geotle frame was agitated by transports rather violent than uppleasing. She foon, however, recollected herfelf. and her native ferenity returned ; when, rifing from her feat, the declared the would fee him in the next apartment, where he flood in the most tumuliuous fulpence, waiting for permiffion to approach her perfon. Here the broke in upon him, arrayed in an elegant white undrefs, the emblem of her purity, beaming forth the emanations of amazing beauty. warmed and improved with a glow of gratitude and affections His heart was too big for utterance; he ran towards her with rapture; and throwing himfelf at her feet, imprinted a respectful kils upon her lily hand. " This, divine Aurelia, (cried he) is a foretafte of that ineffable blifs which you was born to beflow !- Do I then live to fee you fmile again ? To fee you reflored to liberty, your mind at eafe, and your health unimpaired !" " You have lived, (faid fhe) to fee my obligations to Sir Launcelot Greaves accumulated in fuch a manner, that a whole life fpent in acknowledgment will fcarce fuffice to demonstrate a due feute of his goodnels." " You greatly over-rate my fervices, which have been rather the duties of common humanity, than the efforts of a generous paffion, too noble to be thus evincedbut let not my unfeasonable transports detain you a moment longer on this detefted fcene-Give me leave to hand you into the coach, and commit you to the care of this good lady, attended by this honeft young gentleman, who is my particular friend." So faying, he prefented Mr Thomas Clarke, who had the honour to falute the fair hand of the ever-amiable Aurelia.

The ladies being fafely coached under the efcort of the lawyer, Sir Launcelot affured them, he should wait on them in the evening at the house of Dr Kawdle ; whither they immediately directed their courfe. Our hero, who remained with the conftable and his gang, inquired for Mr Barnard Shackle, upon whofe perfon he intended to ferve a write of confpiracy, over and above a profecution for robbery, in confequence of his having difincumbered the knight of his money, and other effects, on the first night of his confinement. Mr Shackle had diferetion enough to avoid this encounter, and even to anticipate the Indictment for felony, by directing one of his fervants to reftore the cafh and papers; which our adventurer accordingly received before he quitted the houfe.

In the profecution of his fearch after Shackle, he chanced to enter the chamber of the bard, whom he found in difhabille, writing at a table, with a bandage over one eye, and his head covered with a nightcap of baize. The knight having made an apology for this intrusion, defired to know if he could be of any fervice to Mr Diffich, as he was now at liberty to use the little influence he had for the relief of his fellow fufferers. The poet having eyed him for fome time askance, " I told you (faid he) your stay in this place would be of thort duration - I have fultained a small difatter in my left-eye, from the hands of a rafcally cordwainer, who pretends to believe himfelf the King of Pruffia; and I am now in the very act of galling his majefty with keen iambics-If you can -M-2 help me to a roll of tobacco and a bottle of geneva, fo---if you are not fo inclined, your humble fervant, I fhall fhare in the joy of your deliverance."

138

The knight declined graftfying hum in thefe particulars, which he apprehended might be prejudicial to his health; but offered his affiltance in reforefling his grivences, provided he laboured under any cruel treatment of incorvenience. "I comprehend the full extent of your generofity, (replied the faitrift); you are willing to affit me in every thing, except the only circumflances in which affiftance is required— God b'w'yc—If you fee Ben Bullock, tell him I with he would not dedicate any more of his works to me—Dama the fellow, he has changed his note, and begins to fivel—For my part, I fick to my former maxim, defy all the world, and will die hard, wen if death hould be preceded by dammetion."

The keight finding him incorrigible, left him to the flender chance of being one day comforted by the dram-bottle; but reidved, if polifible, to fet on, foot an accurate inquiry into the concomy and tranfactions of this private inquirkino, that ample jultice might be done in favour of every injured individual confined within it's walls.

In the afternoon he did not fail to vifit his Aurelia ; and all the proteflations of their mutual paffiom were once more interchanged. He now produced the letter which had caufed fuch fatal diquiet in his boiom; and Mifs Darrel no foomer eyed the paper, than the recollected it was a formal difmition, which the had intended and directed for Mr Sycamore. This the uncle had intercepted, and cunningly inclofed in another cover, addreffed to Sir Launcelot Graves, who was now aftonithed beyood measure to fee the myfiltery fo esify unfolded. The joy that now dify fuded itfelf in the hearts of our lovers is more cafily conceived than deferibed; but, in order to give a flability to this mutual fatisfication, it was needfary that Avecha thould be feewred from the tyratny of her ancle, whole power of guardianthip would not other while for fome months expire.

139

Dr Kasedle and his hady having entered into their deliberations on this fubjech, it was agreed that Mile Darnel fhould have recourfe to the protection of the lord-chancellor; but fuch application was rendered unnecediary by the unexpected arrival of John Clump, with the following letter to Mis Kawdle, from the fleward of Anthony Darnel, dated at Aurelia's howle in the county.

L MADAM.

" Ir hath pleafed God to affliet Mr Darnel with a fevere ftroke of the dead patfy-He was taken yefterday, and now lies infentiole, feemingly at the point of death. Among the papers in his pockets I found the inclosed, by which it appears that my honoured young lady, Mils Darnel, is confined in a private mad houfe. I am afraid Mr Darnel's fate is a juft judgment of God upon him for his crucity to that excellent perfon. I need not exhort you, Madam, to take; immediately upon the receipt of this, fuch meafures as will be neceffary for the enlargement of my poor young lady. In the mean time, I that do what is needful for the prefervation of her property in this place, and fend you an account of any farther alteration that may happen; being very refpectfully, Madam, vonr molt obedient, humble fervant, RALPH MATTOCKS."

Clump had pofted up to London with this intimation on the wings of love; and being covered with clay from the heels to the eyes upwards, he appeared in fuch an unfavourable light at Dr Kawdle's doors that the footman refused him admittance. Neverthelefs, he pufhed him afide, and fought his way up flairs into the dining-room, where the company was not a little aftonished at such an apparition. The fellow himfelf was not lefs amazed at feeing Aurelia, and his own fweetheart Mrs Dolly Cowflip. He forthwith fell upon his knees, and in filence held out the letter, which was taken by the doctor, and piefented to his wife, according to the direction. She did not fail to communicate the contents, which were far from being unwelcome to the individuals who composed this little fociety Mr Clump was honoured with the approbation of his young lady, who commended him for his zeal and expedition; bestowed upon him a handfome gratuity in the mean time, and defired to fee him again when he fhould be properly refreshed after the fatigue he had undergone.

Mr Thomas Clarke being confuted on this occafon, gave its a his opioion, that Mifs Dared fhould, without delay, chule another guardian for the few mgathet hat remained of her minority. The opinion was confirmed by the advice of fome eminent lawyers, to whom immediate recourfe was had; and Dr Kawdle being the perfon pitched upon for this office; the necesfary forms were executed with all pofible difpatch.

The first ufe the doctor made of his guardianthip was to fign a powers, confittuing Mr Ralph Mattocks his attorney, pro tempore, for managing the effate of Mils Aurelia Darnel; and this was forwarded to the fleward by the bands of Cluson, who fet out with it for the feat of Darnel Hill, though not without a heavy heart, occationed by fome intimation he had received concerning the connection between his dear Dolly and Mr Clarke the lawyre.

CHAPTER THE LAST.

Which, it is to be hoped, will be, on more Accounts than one, agreeable to the Reader.

S IR Launcelot having vindicated the liberty, confirmed the fafety, and fecured the heart of his charming Aurelia, now found leifure to unravel the confirmacy which had been executed againft his perfon; and, with that view, commenced a law-fuit againft the owner of the houfe where he and his miltrefs had been feparately confined. Mr Shackle was, notwithflanding all the fubmiffions and atonement which he offered to make, either in private or in public, indicked on the flatute of kidnapping, tried, convided, punifhed by a fevere fine, and flanding in the pillory. A judicial writ, ad inguirendum, being executed, the prifons of his inquifition were laid open, and feveral innocent captives enlarged.

In the courfe of Shackle's trial, it appeared, that the knight's confinement was a feheme executed by bis trial Mr Sycamore, according to the device of his councillor. Dawdle, who, by this contrivance, had reconciled himfelf to his patron, after having deferted him in the day of battle. Our hero was fo incenied at the difcovery of Sycamore's treachers and ingratitude, that he went in queft of him immediateby, to take vengennce on his perfon, accompanied by Captan Crowe, who wanted to blance accompand with Mr Dawdle. But thofe gentlemen had wilely avoided the impending florm, by retiring to the continent, on pretence of travelling for improvement.

Sir Launcelot was not now fo much of a knighterrant as to leave Aurelia to the care of Providence, and purfue the traitors to the fartheft extremities of the catth. He practifed a much more caty, certain, and efficitual method of revenge, by infinituing a procefs againd them; which, after write of copies, alian a pharies, had been repeated, fabjeched them both to outlawey. Mr Sycamore and his friend being thus deprived of the benefit of the law by their own neglech, would likewife have forfeited their goods and chattels to the king, had not they made tuch fabmiffions as appeafed the wrath of Sir Launcelot and Captain Crowe; then they recurred to return, and, by dint of interfl, obtained a reverfal of the outlawery. But this grace they did not enjoy till long after our adventure was happily effablished in life.

While the knight waited impatiently for the expiration of Aurelia's minority, and in the mean time confoled himfelf with the imperfect happiness arising from her conversation, and those indulgencies which the most unblemished virtue could bestow; Captain Crowe projected another plan of vengeance against the conjurer, whole lying oracles had coft him fuch a world of vexation. The truth is, the captain began to be tired of idlenefs, and undertook this adventure to keep his haud in ufe. He imparted his defign to Crabshaw, who had likewife fuffered in fpirit from the predictions of the faid offender, and was extremely well disposed to affift in punishing the false prophet. He now took it for granted that he should not be hanged for flealing a horfe; and thought it very hard to pay fo much money for a deceitful prophecy. which, in all likelihood, would never be fulfilled.

Actuated by thefe motives, they fet out together for the houfe of confultation; but they found it hut, up and abandoned; and, upon inquiry in the neighbourhood, learned that the conjurce had moved his quarters that very day on which the captain had reconife to his art. This was actually the cafe: he knew the fate of Shr Lauxeclow would foon econe to light, and he did not chuse to wait the confequence. He had other motives for decamping. He had run a fcore at the public-houfe, which he had no mind to discharge; and wanted to disengage himself from his female affociate, who knew too much of his affairs to be kept at a proper diffance. All these purposes he had answered by retreating softly, without beat of drum, while his fybil was abroad running down prey for his devouring. He had not, however, taken his measures to cunningly, but that this old hag had difcovered his new lodgings, and, in revenge, gave information to the publican. This creditor took out a writ accordingly; and the bailiff had just fecured his perfon as Captain Crowe and Timothy Crabshaw chanced to pass by the door, in their way homewards, through an obscure ftreet near the Seven Dials.

The conjurer having no (ubterfuge left, but a great many particular reasons for avoiding an explanation with the judice, like the man between the devil and the deep fea, of two evils chock the leaft; and beckoning to the captain, called him by his name. Crower, thus addreffed, replace from whence he was hailed, at once recognized the necromancer. Without farther befitation, he forang across the firest; and collaring Albumazar, exclaimed, "Aha! old boy, is the wind in that corner 2—cl thought we fhould grapple one day—now will I bring you up by the head, though all the devils in hell were blowing abait the beam."

not furrender him without a warrant from the lord folie fulfice. The whole groupe adjourning into the parlour, the conjurer defired to know of Crose whether Sir Launcelot was found. Being anfwretd, "Ey, cy, fafe enough to fee you made fall in the biblose, brother!" he told the captain he had fomething of configuence to communicate for his divantager and propoled that Crowe and Croßhaw fhould ball the editon, which lay only for a debt of three pounds.

Crowe ftormed, and Crabshaw grinned, at this modeft propofal; but when they underftood that they could only be bound for his appearance, and reflected that they need not part with him until his body thould be furrendered unto juffice, they confented to give bail; and the bond being executed, conveyed him directly to the houfe of our adventurer. The boilterous Crowe introduced him to Sir Launcelot with fuch an abrupt, unconnected detail of his offence, as the knight could not underftand without Timothy's annotations. Thefe were followed by fome queftions put to the conjurer; who, laying afide his black gown, and plucking off his white beard, exhibited to the altonifhed spectators the very individual countenance of the empyrical politician Ferret, who had played our hero fuch a flippery trick after the electioneering adventure.

<sup>44</sup> I perceive (faid he) you are preparing to expollulate, and upbraid me for having given a falle information againft you to the country juftice. I look upon markind to be in a flate of nature, a truth which. Hobbes hath fumbled upon by accident. I think every man has a right to avail himfelf of his telents, even at the expence of his fellow-creatures; juft aw even at other seminals of the creation, devouring one another.—I found the juffice but one degree-removed from idloting and knowing that he would be appreciated on the seminational of the creation.

commit fome blunder in the execution of his office, which would lay him at your mercy. I contrived to make his folly the inftrument of my escape-I was difmiffed without being obliged to fign the information I had given; and you took ample vengeance for his tyranny and impertinence. I came to London, where my circumftances obliged me to live in difguife. In the character of a conjurer, I was confulted by your follower Crowe, and your 'Squire Crabshaw. I did little or nothing but echo back the intelligence they brought me, except prognoficating that Crabshaw would be hanged; a prediction to which I found myfelf fo irrefittibly impelled, that I am perfuaded it was the real effect of infpiration. I am now arrefted for a paultry fum of money ; and, moreover, liable to be fent to Bridewell as an impofter-Let those answer for my conduct whose cruelty and infolence have driven me to the neceffity of using fuch fubterfuges-I have been oppreffed and perfecuted by the government for fpeaking truthyour omnipotent laws have reconciled contradictions. That which is acknowledged to be the truth, in fact, is conflued falfhood in law; and great reafon we have to boaft of a conftitution founded on the bafis of abfurdity. But, waving these remarks, I own I am unwilling to be either imprifoned for debt, or punished for imposture-I know how far to depend upon generofity, and what is called benevolence; words to amufe the weak-minded-I build upon a furer bottom-I will bargain for your affiftance-it is in my power to put twelve thousand pounds in the pocket of Samuel Crowe, that there fea-ruffian, who by his good-will would hang me to the yard's

There he was interrupted by the feaman, " Damn your rat's eyes! none of your-hang thee! fifh my topmäß! If the rope was faitly recerd, and the tackle found, dive fee..." Wh Clarke, who was prefent, began to flare; while the knight affared Ferrei, Irowe in asy thing effential, he floud be amply rewarded. In the mean time he difcharged the debt, and affigaed him an apartment in his own houfe. That fame day, Crowe, by the advice of Sir Launcelot and his nephew, entered into conditional articles with the cynic, to allow him the intereft of fifteen hundred pounds for life, provided by his meann the captian floudd obtain polf-fiften of the effate of Flobby Hole, in Yorkhire, which had belonged to his grandfather, and of which he was heir by blood.

This bond being executed, Mr Ferret discovered that he himfelf was the lawful hufband of Bridget Maple, aunt to Samuel Crowe, by a clandeftine marriage; which, however, he convinced them he could prove by undeniable evidence. This being the cafe, the, the faid Bridget Maple, alias Ferret, was a coverte femme ; confequently, could not tranfact any deed of alienation without his concurrence ; ergo, the docking of the entail of the effate of Hobby Hole was illegal and of none effect. This was a very agreeable declaration to the whole company, who did not fail to congratulate Captain Crowe on the profpect of his being reftored to his inheritance. Tom Clarke, in particular, protefied, with tears in his eyes, that it gave him unfpeakable joy; and his tears trickled the fafter, when Crowe, with an arch look, fignified, that, now he was pretty well victualled for life, he had fome thoughts of embarking on the voyage of matrimony.

But that point of happinefs to which, as the north pole, the courfe of their adventures hath been invariably directed, was full unattained; we mean, the indiffuthle units of the accomplified Sir Launceba

147

Freaves and the enchanting Mils Darnel. Our hero low discovered in his mistress a thousand charme. which hitherto he had no opportunity to contemplate. Ie found her beauty excelled by her good fenfe, and her virtue fuperior to both. He found her untainted by that giddinefs, vanity, and affectation, which di-Ringuish the fashionable females of the present age. He found her uninfected by the rage for diversion and lifupation; for noife, tumult, gewgaws, glitter, and extravagance. He found her not only railed, by understanding and tafte, far above the amufements of Wittle vulgar minds, but even exalted by uncommon genius and refined reflection, fo as to relifh the more fublime enjoyments of rational pleafure. He found her poffeffed of that vigour of mind which conflitutes true fortitude, and vindicates the empire of reafon. He found her heart incapable of difguife or diffimulation; frank, generous, and open; fufceptible of the moft tender impreffions; glowing with a keen fenfe of honour, and melting with humanity. A youth of his feofibility could not fail of being deeply affected by fuch attractions. The nearer he approached the centre of happinels, the more did the velocity of his paffion increase. Her uncle ftill remained infenfible, as it were, in the arms of death. Time feemed to linger it's lapfe, till the knight was inflamed to the moft eager degree of impatience. He communicated his diffrefs to Aurelia; he preffed her, with the most pathetic remonstrances, to abridge the torture of his fuspence. He interefted Mrs Kawdle in his behalf: and, at length, his importunity fucceeded. The banns of marriage were regularly published; and the ceremony was performed in the parifh-church, in the prefence of Dr Kawdle and his lady, Captain Crowe. Lawyer Clarke, and Mrs Dolly Cowflip. Vol. II. N

7.4

The bride, instead of being difguised in tawdry fuffs of gold or filver, and fweating under a harnefs of diamonds, according to the elegant tafte of the times, appeared in a negligee of plain blue fattin, without any other jewels than her eyes, which far outfhose all that ever was produced by the mines of Golconda. Her hair had no other extraneous ornament, than a fmall fprig of artificial roles; but the dignity of her air, the elegance of her fhape, the fweetnels and fenfibility of her countenance, added to fuch warmth of colouring, and fuch exquisite fymmetry of features, as could not be excelled by human nature, attracted the eyes, and excited the admiration of all the beholders. The effect they produced in the heart of Sir Launcelot, was fuch a rapture as we cannot pretend to defcribe. He made his appearance on this occasion in a white coat and blue fattio veft, both embroidered with filver : and all who faw him could not but own that he alone feemed worthy to poffefs the lady whom Heaven had defined for his confort. Captain Crowe had taken off a blue fuit of cloaths, flrongly guarded with bars of broad gold lace, in order to honour the nuptials of his friend : he wore upon his head a bag wig a la pigeon, made by an old acquaintance in Wapping : and to his fide he had girded a huge plate-hilted fword, which he had bought of a recruiting ferjeant. Mr Clatke was dreffed in pompadour, with gold buttons; and bis lovely Dolly in a imart checked luteflying, a prefent from her miftrefs.

The whole company dimed, by invitation, at the hoofs of Dr Kawdle; and here it was that the two mold deferring lovers on the face of the earth attained to the confurmation of all earthly felicity. The captain and his mephew had a hint to retire in ductime. Mrs Kawdle conducted the aminble Aurelia rembling, to the marriage bed; our hero, glowing with a bridegroom's ardour, claimed the hufband's privilege: Hymen lighted up his brighteit torch at Virtue's lamp; and every flar fled it's happiell inluence on their Heaven-directed union.

Instructions had been already dispatched to prepare Greavefbury Hall for the reception of it's new miltrefs; and for that place the new-married couple fet out next morning, according to the plan which had been previoufly concerted. Sir Launcelot and Lady Greaves, accompanied by Mrs Kawdle, and attended by Dolly, travelled in their own coach, drawn by fix dappled horfes. Dr Kawdie, with Captain Crowe, occupied the doctor's poft chariot, provided with four bays; Mr Clarke had the honour to beftride the loins of Bronzomarte; Mr Fertet was mounted upon an old bunter ; Crabshaw stuck elofe to his friend Gilbert; and two other hoffemen completed the retinue. There was not an aching heart in the whole cavalcade, except that of the young lawyer, which was by triens invaded with hot defires and chilling feruples. Though he was fond of Dolly to diffraction, his regard to worldly reputation, and his attention to worldly intereft, were continually raifing up bars to a legal gratification of his love. His pride was ftartled at the thought of marrying the daughter of a poor country publican; and he moreover dreaded the refentment of his uncle Crowe, fhould he take any ftep of this nature without his concurrence. Many a a wifhful look did he caft at Dolly, the tears ftanding in his eyes, and many a wooful figh did he utter.

Lady Greaves immediately perceived the fituation of his heart; and, by quefitioning Mrs Cowflip, difcovered a mutual paffion between the lovers. She confulted her dear knight on the fubject, and he ca- $N \propto N^{-1}$

be b

techifed the lawyer, who pleaded guilty. The captain being founded as to his opinion, declared he would be fteered in that, as well as every other courfe of life, by Sir Launcelot and his lady, whom he verily revered as being of an order fuperior to the ordinary race of mankind. This favourable response being obtained from the failor, our hero took an opportunity on the road, one day after dinner, in prefence of the whole company, to accoft the lawyer in thefe words: "My good friend Clarke, I have your hap-pinefs very much at heart—Your father was an honeft man, to whom my family had manifold obligations. I have had thefe many years a perfonal regard for yourfelf, derived from your own integrity of heart and goodnels of difpolition-I fee you are affected, and shall be brief-Belides this regard, I am indebted to your friendship for the liberty-what shall I fay ?- for the ineftimable happinefs I now enjoy, in poffeffing the moft excellent-But I understand that fignificant glance of my Aurelia-I will not offend her delicacy-The truth is, my obligation is very great, and it is time I should evince my gratitude-If the flewardship of my eftate is worth your acceptance, you shall have it immediately, together with the house and farm of Cockerton in my neighbourhood. I know you have a paffion for Mrs Dolly; and believe fhe looks upon you with the eyes of tender prepoffeffion-Don't blufh, Dolly-Befides your agreeable perfon, which all the world must approve, you can boast of virtue, fidelity, and friendfhip. Your attachment to Lady Greaves, neither fhe or I shall ever forget-If you are willing to unite your fate with Mr Clarke, your mistrefs gives me leave to affure you, the will stock the farm at her own expence ; and we will celebrate the wedding at Greavefbury Hall,

By this time the hearts of these grateful lovers had pverflowed. Dolly was fitting on her knees, bathing her lady's hand with her tears; and Mr Clarke apbeared in the fame attitude by Sir Launcelot. The uncle, almost as much affected as the nephew by the generofity of our adventurer, cried aloud, " I pray God, that you and your glorious confort may have fmooth feas and gentle gales whitherfoever you are bound-As for my kiniman, Tom, I'll give him a thousand pounds to fet him fairly afloat; and if he prove not a faithful tender to you his benefactor, I hope he will founder in this world, and be damned in that which is to come." Nothing now was wanting to the completion of their happiness but the confent of Dolly's mother at the Black Lion, who they did not fuppofe could have any objection to fuch an advantageous match for her daughter; but in this particular they were miltaken.

In the mean time, they arrived at the village where the knight had exercifed the duties of chivalry; and there he received the gratulations of Mr Fullet, and the attorney, who had offered to bail him before Julice Gobble. Matual civilities having paffed, they gave him to underfland that Gobble and his wife were turned methodila. All the reft of the prifoners whom he had delivered, came to tellify their gratitude, and were hofpitably entertained. Next day they halted at the Black Lion, where the good woman was overjoyed to fce Dolly fo happily preferred; but when Sir Launcelot unfolded the propoled marriage, the interrupted him with a fercam, "Chrit Jetus forbid I--Marry and amen ! Match with her own brother !"

At this exclamation Dolly fainted; her lover flood with his ears erect, and his mouth wide open; Crowe

ftared, while the knight and his lady expressed equal furprife and concern. When Sir Launcelot intreated Mrs Cowflip to explain this mystery, the told him, that about fixteen years ago, Mr Clarke, fenior, had brought Dolly, then an infant, to her houfe, when fhe and her late hufband lived in another part of the country; and as fhe had then been lately delivered of a child which did not live, he hired her'as nurfe to the little foundling. He owned the was a love-begotten babe, and from time to time paid handfomely for the board of Dolly, who, he defired, might pais for her own daughter. In his laft illnefs he affured her, he had taken care to provide for the child; but fince his death fhe had received no account of any fuch provision. She, moreover, informed his honour, that Mr Clarke had deposited in her hands a diamondring, and a fealed paper, never to be opened without his order, until Dolly fhould be demanded in marriage by the man fhe fhould like; and not then, except in the prefence of the clergyman of the parifh. " Send for the clergyman this inftant ! (cried our hero, reddening; and fixing his eyes on Dolly); I hope all will yet be well."

The vicar arriving, and being made acquainted with the nature of the cafe, the landhady produced the paper; which being opened, appeared to be an authentic certificate, that the perfon commonly known by the name of Dorothy Cowlip, was in fact Dorothea Greaves, daughter of Jonathan Greaves, Elq. by a young gentle-woman who had been fome years decenfed.

"The remaining part of the myflery I myfelf can unfold (exclaimed the knight, while he ran and embraced the altonithed Dolly, as his kinfwoman). Jonathan Greaves was my uncle, and died before he came of ages 16 that he could make no fettlement

In his child, the fruit of a private amour, founded on promife of marriage of which this ring was a token. If Clarke, being his confident, difpoled of the child; and at length finding his conflictution decay, revealed he feoret to my father, who, in his will, bequeathed ne bundred pounds a-year to this agreeable founding, but as they both died while I was abroad, and one of the memorandms touching this tranfaction probably were millaid, I never till now could difeover where or how my pretty coulfs was fittated. I finall recompense the good woman for her care and fidelity, undtake pleadureinbring ghis affairtonhappy filme."

The lovers were now overwhelmed with transports of joy and gratitude, and every countenance was lighted up with fatisfaction. From this place to the habitation of Sir Launcelot, the bells were rung in every parifb, and the corporation, in their formalities, congratulated him in every town through which he passed. About five miles from Greavesbury Hall he was met by above five thousand perfons of both fexes and every age, dreffed out in their gayeft apparel, headed by Mr Ralph Mattocks from Darnel Hill, and the rector from the knight's own parish. They were preceded by mulic of different kinds, ranged under a great variety of flags and enfigns; and the women, as well as the men, bedizened with fancy-knots and marriage-favours. At the end of the avenue, a felect bevy of comely virgins, arrayed in white, and a separate band of choice youths, difiting uifhed by garlands of laurel and holly interweaved, fell into the proceffion, and fung in chorus a ruftic epithalamium composed by the curate. At the gate they were received by the venerable houfekeeper. Mrs Oakley, whole features were to brightened by the occasion, that, with the first glance, fire made a conquest of the heart of Captain Crowe; and this connection was improved afterwards into a legal conjunction.

Meanwhile, the houfes of Greavefbury Hall and Darnel Hill were fet open for the entertainment of all comers, and both echoed with the founds of feftivity. After the ceremony of giving and receiving vifits had been performed by Sir Launcelot Greaves and his lady, Mr Clarke was honoured with the hand of the agreeable Mifs Dolly Greaves; and the captain was put in poffeffion of his paternal eftate. The perfect and uninterrupted felicity of the knight and his endearing confort, diffufed itfelf through the whole adjacent country, as far as their example and influence could extend. They were admired, efteemed, and applauded, by every perfon of tafte, fentiment, and benevolence; at the fame time beloved, revered, and almost adored by the common people, among whom they fuffered not the mercilefs hand of indigence or mifery to feize one fingle facrifice.

Ferret, at firfh, fermed to enjoy his eafy circumflances; but the novelty of this fituation fixon wore off, and all his mifanthropy returned. He could not bear to fee his fellow-creatures happy around him; and fignified his diguit to Sir Launcelot, declaring his intention of returning to the metropolis, where he knew there would be always food fufficient for the ravenous appetite of his fpleen. Before he departed, the knight made him partake of his bourty, hough he could not make him tafte of his happinefs, which foon received a confiderable addition in the birth of a fon, defined to be the heir and reprefenttive of two worthy families, whole mutual animofity the union of his parents had to happily extinguinged.

FINIS.

Alex. Jardine, ? Printer.

