

A.8.S.1.92.64

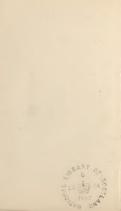

MION TALE OF FLODDEN FIELD

LIVERPOOL

EDWARD HOWELL . CHURCH ST MDCCCLIV

MARMION.

A TALE OF FLODDEN FIELD.

SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.

Alas! that Scottish Maid should sing The combat where her lover fell! That Scottish Bard should wake the string.

That Scottish Bard should wake the string, The triumph of our fees to tell! - Legifu.

LIVERPOOL:

EDWARD HOWELL, CHURCH-STREET.

TA

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
HENRY, LORD MONTAGUE,

&c. &c. &c.

THE AUTHOR.

ADVERTISEMENT.

Ir is hardly to be expected, that an Author, whom the Public has honoured with some degree of applause, should not be again a trespasser on their kindness. Yet the Author of Manation must be supposed to feel some anxiety concerning its success, since he is sensible that he hazards, by this second intrusion, any reputation which his first Poem but is called a Tale of Flodden field, because the hero's fate is connected with that memorable defeat. and the causes which led to it. The design of the Author was, if possible, to apprise his readers, at the outset, of the date of his Story, and to prepare them for the manners of the Age in which it is laid. Any Historical parrative, far more an attempt at Epis yet he may be permitted to hope, from the popularity of Tun Lay or Tun Lary Meyaymer, that an attempt to paint the manners of the feudal times, upon a broader scale, and in the course of a more interesting story, will not be unacceptable to the Public.

The Poem opens about the commencement of August, and concludes with the defeat of Floddom 4th September, 1513,

| CANTO | Pag |
|--------------------------------------|-----|
| Introduction to Canto I To WILLIAM | |
| STEWART ROSE, Esq | |
| I, THE CASTLE | 1 |
| Introduction to Canto II To the Rev. | |
| JOHN MARRIOT, M. A | 3 |
| 11. THE CONVENT | 4 |
| Introduction to Canto IIITo WILLIAM | |
| Rasking, Esq | 6 |
| III. THE HOSVEL, OR INN | 77 |
| Introduction to Canto IVTo James | |
| | 9 |
| SERNE, Esq | |
| IV. THE CAMP | 10 |
| Introduction to Canto V To GRORGE | |
| ELLIS, Esq | 12 |
| V. THE COURT | 13 |
| Introduction to Canto VI To RICHARD | |
| Нипин, Esq | 17 |
| VI. THE BATTLE | 171 |
| Notes to Canto First | 22 |
| | |
| Canto Second | 246 |
| Canto Third | 25 |
| Canto Fourth | 20 |
| Canto Fifth | 26 |
| | |

MARMION.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO

To WILLIAM STEWART ROSE, Esq.
Ashestiel, Ettricke Forest.

Novanama's sky is chill and drear, November's last i red and sear; Late, gazing down the steepy lim, That heme our little garden in, That heme our little garden in, You searce the rivulei might ken, So thick the tangled green-wood grew, So feeble trilled the streamled through: Now, numerating bones, and frequent seen Now, numerating bones, and in the present seen Now, numerating bones, and in the present seen Now, numerating bones, and request seen An angry brook, it sweeps the glade, Brawts over rock and wild cassade, And, foaning brown with doubled speed, Hurtries its waters to the Tweed.

No longer Autumn's glowing red Upon our Forest hills is shed;

48

MARNION,

Wo more, beneath the evening beam, Fair Tweed reflects their purple gleam ; Away hath passed the heather-bell, That bloomed so rich on Needpath-fell: Sallow his brow, and russet bare . Are now the sister-heights of Yare. The sheep, before the pinching heaven, To sheltered dale and down are driven, Where yet some faded herbage pines, And yet a watery sun-beam shines: The withered sward and wintry sky. And far beneath their summer hill. Stray sadly by Glenkinnon's rill : The shepherd shifts his mantle's fold. And wraps him closer from the cold : His does no merry circles wheel, But, shivering, follow at his heel; A cowering glance they often east. As deeper means the cathering blast-

My imps, though hardy, hold, and wild, As best belits the mountain child, Feel the sad influence of the hour, And wall the daisy's vanished flower; Their summer gambols tell, and mourn, And anxious ask,—Will spring return, And birds and lambs again be gay, And blossoms clothe the hawthorn spray?

Yes, prattlers, yes. The daisy's flower Again shall paint your summer bower;

Again the hawthorn shall supply The garlands you delight to tie; The lambs upon the lea shall bound, The wild birds earol to the round, And while you frolic light as they, Too short shall seem the summer day.

To mute and to material things New life revolving summer brings; The genial call dead Nature hears. And in her glory re-appears. But Oh! my country's wintry state What second spring shall renovate? What powerful call shall bid arise The buried warlike, and the wise; The mind, that thought for Britain's weal, The hand that grasped the victor steel? The vernal sun new life bestows Even on the meanest flower that blows : But vainly, vainly may be shine, Where glory weeps o'er NELSON'S shrine: And vainly pierce the solemn gloom, That shrouds, O PITT, thy hallowed tomb! Deep graved in every British heart,

O never let those names depart!
Say to your sons,—Lo, here his grave,
Who victor died on Gadite wave;
To him, as to the burning levin,
Short, bright, resistless course was given;
Where'er his country's foes were found,
Was heard the fated thunder's sound,

Till burst the bolt on yonder shore, Rolled, blazed, destroyed,—and was no more,

Nor mourn ve less his perished worth. Who bade the conqueror go forth, And launched that thunderbolt of war On Egypt, Hafnia,* Trafalgar; Who, born to guide such high emprize, For Britain's weal was early wise; Alas! to whom the Almighty gave, For Britain's sins an early grave; His worth, who, in his mightiest hour, A bauble held the pride of power. Spurned at the sordid lust of pelf. And served his Albion for herself; Who, when the frantic crowd amain Strained at subjection's bursting rein, O'er their wild mood full conquest gained, The pride, he would not crush, restrained, Bhowed their fierce zeal a worthier cause, And brought the freeman's arm to aid the foroments laws

Had'st thou but lived, though stripp'd of power,

A watchman on the lonely tower,
Thy thrilling trump had roused the land,
When fraud or danger were at hand;
By thee, as by the beacon-light,
Our pilots had kept course aright;

Copenhagen.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO PIRST.

As some aroud column though slone Thystrength had propp'd the tottering thronc. Now is the stately column broke. The beacon-light is quenched in smoke, The trumpet's silver sound is still. The warder silent on the hill!

Oh, think, how to his latest day, When Death, just hovering claimed his prey With Palinure's unaltered mood, Firm at his dangerous post he stood: Each call for needful rest repelled, With dving hand the rudder held. Till, in his fall, with fateful sway, The steerage of the realm gave way ! Then, while on Britain's thousand plains, One unpolluted church remains. Whose peaceful bells ne'er sent around The bloody tocsin's maddening sound. But still, upon the hallowed day. Convoke the swains to praise and pray: While faith and civil peace are dear, Grace this cold marble with a tear,-He, who preserved them Prez lies here!

Nor yet suppress the generous sigh, Because his Rival slumbers nigh: Nor be thy requiescat dumb, Lest it be said o'er Fox's tomb. For talents mourn, untimely lost, When best employed, and wanted most;

Mourn genius high, and lore profound, And wit that loved to play, not wound: And all the reasoning powers divine, To penetrate, resolve, combine: And feelings keen, and fancy's glow .--They sleep with him who sleeps below: And, if thou mourn'st they could not save From error him who owns this grave, Be every harsher thought suppressed, And sacred be the last long rest. Here, where the end of earthly things Lays heroes, patriots, bards, and kings; Where stiff the hand, and still the tongue. Of those who fought, and spoke, and sung; Here, where the fretted aisles prolong The distant notes of holy song. As if some angel spoke agen. All peace on earth, good-will to men: If ever from an English heart, O here let projudice depart. And, partial feeling cast aside, Record, that Fox a Briton died ! When Europe crouched to France's voke, And Austria bent, and Prussia broke. And the firm Russian's purpose brave Was bartered by a timorous slave, Even then dishonour's peace he spurned, The sullied olive-branch returned, Stood for his country's glory fast, And nailed her colours to the mast, Heaven, to reward his firmness, gave A portion in this honoured grave;

And no'er held marble in its trust Of two such wonderous men the dust.

With more than mortal powers endowed. How high they soared above the crowd! Theirs was no common party race. Jostling by dark intrigue for place: Like fabled Gods, their mighty war Shook realms and nations in its jar; Beneath each banner proud to stand, Looked up the poblest of the land. Till through the British world were known The names of Prey and Fox alone. Spells of such force no wizard grave Though his could drain the ocean dry, And force the planets from the sky. These spells are spent, and, spent with these The wine of life is on the lees. Genius, and taste, and talent gone, For ever tombed beneath the stone, The mighty chiefs sleep side by side, Drop upon Fox's grave the tear. O'er Pury's the mournful requiem sound. And Fox's shall the notes rebound. The solemn echo seems to cry,-"Here let their discord with them die; "Speak not for those a separate doom, "Whom Fate made brothers in the tomb.

"But search the land of living men,
"Where wilt thou find their like agen?"

Rest, ardent Spirits! till the cries
Of dying Nature lid you rise;
Not even your Britain's groams can pierce
The leaden silence of your hearse:
Then, O how impotent and vain
This grateful tributary strain!
This grateful tributary strain!
Though not unmarked from northern clime,
Ye heard the Border Minstrel's rhyme:
His Gobile harp has o'er you rung;

The bard you deigned to praise, your deathless names has sung.

Stay yet, illusion, stay a while,

My withered fanny still begulle!
From this high thems how can I part,
Ere half unloaded is my heart!
Fer half with the even or work drew,
For all the tears even or work of we,
And all the leener cush of Mood,
That throbs through heard in bard-like mood,
Were here a tribute mean and low.
Though all their raingled streams could flow—
In one apring-tide of costacy—
I will not be—it may not hat—
The vision of enchantment's past:
Like frest-work in the morraling ray,

Each Gothle arch, memorial stone, And long, dim, lofty asia era gone, And, lingering last, deception dear, The choir's high sounds die on my ear. Now alow return the lonely down, The sitent pastures bleak and brown, The sitent pastures bleak and brown, The farm begirt with copse-wood with. The gambols of each fredie child, Mixing their shrill cries with the tone Of Tweed's dark waters reaking on Prompt on unequal tasks to run, Thun Nature disciplines her son: Moster, he says, for me to stary, Moster, he says, for me to stary, I have been a support of the says of the says of the top of the says of the says of the says of the Or stay that the saltiment of the says of With which the milkended rafe in. As from the falls, beneath her pall, Moster for me, by orable callen, The anchest desphere's fash to learn, The anchest desphere's fash to learn, Carlot and the says of the says of Least his old legends there he or of one, who, in his simple mind, May boost of book-learned taste refund.

But thou, my friend, canst fitly tell, (For few have read romance so well)

How still the legendary lay O'er poet's bosom holds its sway : How on the ancient minstrel strain Time lays his palsied hand in vain: And how our hearts at doughty deeds, By warriors wrought in steely weeds, Still throb for fear and pity's sake : As when the Champion of the Lake Despising spells and demons' force. Holds converse with the unburied corse; Or when, Dame Ganore's grace to move. (Alas! that lawless was their love) He sought proud Tarquin in his den. And freed full sixty knights; or when, A sinful man, and unconfessed. He took the Sangreal's holy quest. And, slumbering, saw the vision high,

The mightlest chiefs of British song Scornel out such legents to prolong; They gleam through Spenser's ofth dream, And mix in Milton's beavenly there; And Dryden, in immortal strain, Had raised the Table Round again, But that a ribald king and court Eade him toll on, to make them sport, Demanded for their niggard pay, Fig for their souls, a looser lay, Licentious satire, song, and play; The world defrauded of the high design, Prophaned the God-given strength, and marred the lofty line.

Warmed by such names, well may we then, Though dwindled sons of little men, Essay to break a feeble lance In the fair fields of old romance: Or seek the moated castle's cell, Where long through talisman and spell. While tyrants ruled, and damsels wept, Thy Genius, Chivalry, bath slept; There sound the harpines of the North, Till he awake and sally forth, On venturous quest to prick again, In all his arms, with all his train, Shield, lance, and brand, and plume, and scarf, Fay, giant, dragon, squire, and dwarf, And wigard with his wand of might, And errant maid on palfrey white. Around the Genius weave their spells, Pure Love, who scarce his passion tells ; Mystery, half veiled and half revealed : And Honour, with his spotless shield : Attention, with fixed eve; and Fear, That loves the tale she shrinks to hear; And gentle Courtesy; and Faith, Unchanged by sufferings, time, or death; And Valour, lion-mettled lord. Leaning upon his own good sword.

Well has thy fair achievement shown, A worthy meed may thus be won; Ytene's * oaks - beneath whose shade Their theme the merry minstrels made. Of Ascapart, and Bevis bold. And that Red King, t who, while of old Through Boldrewood the chase he led. By his loved huntsman's arrow bled-Ytene's oaks have heard again Renewed such legendary strain; For thou hast sung, how He of Gaul, That Amadis so famed in hall. For Oriana, foiled in fight The Necromancer's felon might : And well in modern verse hast wove Partenopex's mystic love: Hear then, attentive to my lay.

A knightly tale of Albion's elder day,

CANTO FIRST.

THE CASTLE.

DAY set on Norham's castled steep, And Tweed's fair river, broad and deep, And Cheviot's mountains lone: The battled towers, the Donjon Keep, The loop-hole grates where captives weep,

^{*} The new forest in Hampshire, anciently so 4 William Bufus

The flanking walls that round it sweep.
In yellow lustre shone.
The warriors on the turrets high,
Moving athwart the evening sky,
Seemed forms of giant height:
Their armour, as it caught the rays.

Their armour, as it caught the rays, Flashed back again the western blaze, In lines of dazzling light.

In lines of dazzling light.

St George's banner, broad and gay, Now faded, as the fading ray Less bright, and less, was flung; The evening gale had scarce the power To wave it on the Donjon tower,

So heavily it hung.
The scouts had parted on their search,
The castle gates were barr'd;

The castle gates were parr q;
Above the gloomy portal arch,
Timing his footsteps to a march,
The warder kept his guard,
Low humming, as he paced along,

Some ancient Border gathering song.

III.

A distant trampling sound he hears;

He looks abroad, and soon appears,
O'er Horneliff-hill, a plump * of spears,
Beneath a pennon gay;

* This word properly applies to a flight of water fowl, but is applied, by analogy, to a body of horse.

There is a Knight of the North Country,
Which leads a lusty plump of spears.
Flosden Field,

A horseman, darting from the crowd. Like lightning from a summer cloud, Before the dark array. Beneath the sable palisade, That closed the castle barricade,

His bugle-horn he blew ; The warder hasted from the wall, And warned the Captain in the hall,

For well the blast he knew; And joyfully that Knight did call. To sewer, squire, and seneschal.

"Now broach ye a pipe of Malvoisie,

Bring pasties of the doc. And quickly make the entrance free, And bid my heralds ready be, And every minstrel sound his glee,

And all our trumpets blow ; And, from the platform, spare ye not To fire a noble salvo-shot:

Lord Marmion waits below."-Then to the Castle's lower ward

Sped forty yeomen tall, The iron-studded gates unbarred, Raised the portcullis' ponderous guard, The lofty palisade unsparred, And let the draw-bridge fall.

Along the bridge Lord Marmion rode. Proudly his red-roan charger trod,

His helm hung at the saddle-bow; Well, by his visage, you might know He was a stalworth knight, and keen, And had in many a battle been; The sear on his hrown check revealed A token true of Bosworth field; His eye-brow dark, and eye of five, Shewed spirit proud, and prompt to ive; Yet lines of thought now his check

Did deep design and counsel speak.

His forehead, by his casque worn bare,
His thick moustache, and curly hair,
Coal-black, and grizzled here and there,
But more through toll than age;

His square-turned joints, and strength r. limb,
Shewed him no carpet knight so trim.

Shewed him no carpet knight so trim, But, in close fight, a champion grim, In camps, a leader sage.

Well was he armed from head to heel, In mail, and plate, of Milan steel; But his strong helm, of mighty cost, Was all with burnish'd gold emboss'd;

Was all with burnish'd gold embogs'd; Amid the plumage of the crest, A falcon howered on her nest, With wings outspread, and forward breast; E'en such a falcon, on his shield, Soared sable in an azuro field; 'The solden lecend bore aright,

"WHO CHECKS AT ME, TO DEATH IS DIG T."

Blue ribbons decked his arching mane : The knightly housing's ample fold Was velvet blue, and trapp'd with gold.

Behind him rode two gallant squires, Of noble name, and knightly sires; They burned the gilded spurs to claim; For well could each a war-horse tame, Could draw the bow, the sword could sway, And lightly bear the ring away ; Nor less with courteous precepts stored. Could dance in hall, and carve at board, And frame love ditties passing rare. And sing them to a lady fair.

Four men-at-arms came at their backs, With halbard, bill, and battle-axe: They have Lord Marmion's lance so strong. And led his sumpter mules along. And ambling palfrey, when at need Him listed case his battle-steed. The last, and trustiest of the four, On high his forky pennon bore; Like swallow's tail, in shape and hue, Eintter'd the streamer clossy blue. Where, blazoned sable, as before, The towering falcon seemed to soar. Last, twenty yeomen, two and two. In hosen black, and jerkins blue,

With falcons incident on each breast, Attended on their lord's belast, Each, chosen for an archer good, Knew hunting-earth by lies or wood; Each one a six-foot how could bend, And far a cloth-yard shaft could send; Each seld a boar-spear tough and strong, And at their bests their quivers rung. Their dusty palfreys, and arway, Shewed they had marched a weary way.

IX.
'Tis meet that I should tell you now,

How fairly armed, and ordered how, The soldiers of the guard, With musquet, pike, and morion, To welcome noble Marmion,

To welcome noble Marmion, Stood in the castle-yard; Minstrels and trumpeters were there, The cupper held his linstock yare.

For welcome-shot prepared:—
Entered the train, and such a clang,
As then through all his turrets rang,
Old Norham payer heard.

X.

The guards their morrice-pikes advanced, The trumpets flourished brave, The cannon from the ramparts glanced, And thundering welcome gave. A blythe salute, in martial sort, The minstrels well might sound. For, as Lord Marmion crossed the court. He scattered angels round.

"Welcome to Norham, Marmion! Stout heart, and open hand ! Well dost thou brook thy gallant roan.

Thou flower of English land!"-

XI. Two pursulvants, whom tabards deck,

With silver scutcheon round their neck, Stood on the steps of stone, By which you reach the Donion gate.

They halled Lord Marmion: They hailed him Lord of Fontenave, Of Tamworth tower and town:

And he, their courtesy to requite. Gave them a chain of twelve marks weight. All as he lighted down.

"Now largesse, largesse, " Lord Marmion, A blazon'd shield, in battle won,

Ne'er guarded heart so bold."-

They marshall'd him to the castle-hall. Where the guests stood all aside,

^{*} The cry by which the heralds expressed their thanks for the bounty of the nobles.

T GAMES PIRST - THE CASTLE. And loudly flourished the trumpet-call, And the heralds loudly cried. -" Room, lordings, room for Lord Marmion,

With the crest and helm of gold!

Full well we know the trophies won

In the lists at Cottiswold:

There, vainly Ralph de Wilton strove 'Gainst Marmion's force to stand :

To him he lost his ladye-love, And to the king his land.

Ourselves behold the listed field. A sight both sad and fair;

We saw Lord Marmion pierce his shield, And saw his saddle bare;

We saw the victor win the crest, He wears with worthy pride:

And on the gibbet-tree, reversed, His foeman's scutcheon tied.

Place, nobles, for the Falcon-Knight Room, room, ye gentles gay, For him who conquered in the right,

Marmion of Fontenaye !"-

Then stepped to meet that noble lord. Sir Hugh the Heron bold, Baron of Twisell, and of Ford.

And Captain of the Hold. He led Lord Marmion to the deas, Raised o'er the payement high.

And placed him in the upper place-They feasted full and high ;

The whiles a Northern harper rude Chaunted a rhyme of deadly feud,

" How the florce Thirwalls and Ridleus all Stout Willimondswick

And Hard-riding Dick. And Hughie of Hawdon, and Will o'

the Wall.

Have set on Sir Albany Featherstonkaugh, And taken his life at the Deadman's shaw."_...

Scantly Lord Marmion's car could brook The harper's barbarous lay;

Yet much he praised the pains he took, And well those pains did pay:

For lady's suit, and minstrel's strain. By knight should ne'er be heard in vain.

XIV. "Now, good Lord Marmion," Heron says, " Of your fair courtesy,

I pray you bide some little space. In this poor tower with me.

Here may you keep your arms from rust, May breathe your war-horse well; Seldom hath pass'd a week, but giust Or feat of arms befell

The Scots can rein a mettled steed, And love to couch a spear :--

[.] The rest of this old ballad may be found in the

CANTO FIRST - THE CASTLE.

8t George! a stirring life they lead, That have such neighbours near. Then stay with us a little space,

Then stay with us a little space, Our nothern wars to learn; I pray you for your lady's grace."—

Lord Marmion's brow grew stern.

XV.

The Captain mark'd his altered look,

And gave a squire the sign;
A mighty wassell bowl he took,

And crown'd it high with wine.
"Now pledge me here, Lord Marmion.

But first I pray thee fair,
Where hast thou left that page of thine,

That used to serve thy cup of wine, Whose beauty was so rare?

When last in Raby towers we met, The boy I closely eved.

The boy I closely eyed, And often marked his cheeks were wet

With tears he fain would hide: His was no rugged horse-boy's hand, To hurnish shield, or shornen heard

To burnish shield, or sharpen brand, Or saddle battle-steed; But meeter seemed for lady fair.

But meeter seemed for lady fair, To fan her cheek, or curl her hair, Or through embroidery, rich and rare, The slender silk to lead:

His skin was fair, his ringlets gold, His bosom—when he sigh'd, The russet doublet's rugged fold

Could scarce repel its pride.

Say hast thou given that lovely youth To serve in lady's bower?

Or was the gentle page, in sooth, A gentle paramour ?"-

Lord Marmion ill could brook such jest;

He rolled his kindling eye. With pain his rising wrath suppressed.

Yet made a calm reply : "That boy thou thought'st so goodly fair,

He might not brook the northern air.

More of his fate if thou would'st learn, I left him sick in Lindisfarn :

Enough of him .- But, Heron, say,

Why does thy lovely lady gay Disdain to grace the hall to-day? Or has that dame, so fair and sage, Gone on some pious pilgrimage ?"-He spoke in covert scorn, for fame

Whispered light tales of Heron's dame. XVII.

Unmarked, at least unrecked, the taunt, Careless the Knight replied, " No bird, whose feathers gayly flaunt, Delights in case to bide: Norham is grim, and grated close. Hemmed in by battlement and fosse,

And many a darksome tower; And better loves my lady bright, To sit in liberty and light.

In fair Queen Margaret's bower.

We hold our greyhound in our hand, Our falcon on our glove; But where shall we find leash or band, For dame that loves to rove? Let the wild falcon soar her swing, She'll stoop when she has tired her wing."-

"Nay, if with Royal James's bride The lovely lady Heron bide. Rehold me here a messenger, Your tender greetings prompt to bear; For to the Scottish court addressed. I journey at our king's behest. And pray you, of your grace, provide For me, and mine, a trusty guide. I have not ridden in Scotland since James backed the cause of that mock prince. Warbeck, that Flemish counterfeit, Who on the gibbet paid the cheat. Then did I march with Surrey's power, What time we razed old Ayton tower." --

"For such like need, my lord, I trow, Norham can find you guides enow: For here be some have pricked as far On Scottish ground, as to Dunbar; Have drunk the monks of St Bothan's ale, And driven the beeves of Lauderdale: Harried the wives of Greenlaw's goods, And given them light to set their hoods."-- 24 MARMION.

X

"Now, in good seed," Jorel Marmion cried,
"Were In washibitate to rick,
"Were In washibitate to rick,
"Were In washibitate to rick,
"A better guard I would not lask;
But, as in form of peace I go,
A friendry messenger, to know,
Why through all iscolated, near and far,
Their king is unsatiring troops for war,
Their king is unsatiring troops for war,
Their king is unsatiring troops for war,
And deady fread, or thirst of spell,
Break out in some unseemly broil;
A herald were my fitting guide;
O'r triar, sworm in peace to lide;

KXI.

The Capital mucol. A little space. And passed his lund, seven his face.

— Fain would I find the guide you want, but I may space a pursuit want.

The only men that afte can ride Mine errands on the Scottlish ade.

Then, though a histop built this foret, Few hoty brethers here resort;

Even our good chaplain, as I ween, Silience our last alege, we have not seen:

The mass he might not sing or say, Jupon one sittled male a day;

So, safe he sat in Durham aisle. And prayed for our success the while, Our Norham vicar, woe betide, Is all too well in case to ride. The priest of Shoreswood -he could rein The wildest war-horse in your train: But then, no spearman in the hall Will sooner swear, or stab, or brawl. Friar John of Tillmouth were the man: A blithesome brother at the can. A welcome guest in hall and bower. He knows each castle, town, and tower, In which the wine and ale is good, 'Twixt Newcastle and Holy-Rood. But that good man, as ill befalls, Hath seldom left our castle walls. Since on the vivil of St Bede, In evil hour, he crossed the Tweed, To teach Dame Alison her creed. Old Bughtrig found him with his wife: And John, an enemy to strife, Sans frock and hood, fled for his life, The jealous churl hath deeply swore, That, if again he ventures o'er, He shall shrieve penitent no more. Little he loves such risques. I know: Yet, in your guard, perchance will co "---

Young Selby, at the fair hall-board, Carved to his uncle, and that lord,

And reverently took up the word. "Kind uncle, woe were we each one, If harm should hap to Brother John. He is a man of mirthful speech. Can many a game and gambol teach ; Full well at tables can be play. And sweep at bowls the stake away. None can a lustier carol hawl. The needfullest among us all, When time hangs heavy in the hall, And snow comes thick at Christmas tide, And we can neither hunt, nor ride A foray on the Scottisb side. The vowed revenge of Bughtrig rude, May end in worse than loss of hood, Let Friar John, in safety, still In chimney-corner snore his fill, Roast hissing crabs, or flaggons swill: Last night, to Norham there came one. Will better guide Lord Marmion."-"Nephew," quoth Heron, "by my fay, Well bast thou spoke: say forth thy say."-

"Here is a boly Palmer come, From Salem first, and last from Rome; One, that hath kissed the blessed tomb. And visited each boly shrine, In Araby and Palestine: On hills of Armenie hath been, Where Noah's ark may yet be seen;

By that Red Sea, too, he hath trod, Which parted at the prophet's red; In Sina's wilderness he saw The Mount, where Israel heard the law, Mid thunder dint, and flashing levin, And shadows, mists, and darkness, given. He shews Saint James's cockles-hell, Of fair Monterrat, too, can tell; And of that Grot where Olives nod, From all the verb of Sear and cys, Saint Rosalie retired to God.

"To stout Saint George of Norwich merry, Saint Thomas, too, of Canterbury, Cuthbert of Durban and Saint Belea, For his sint' partion that he prayed. He knows the passes of the North-Italian of the Saint's partial was and And drinks but of the stream or lake. This were a guide o'er moor and dale; Just, when our John hath qualful his ale, As little as the wind that blows, Knus he, or care, which was he pose."

XXV

[&]quot;Gramercy!" quoth Lord Marmion, "Full loth were L that Friar John,

That venerable man, for me,
Were placed in fear, or Jeopardy.
If this same Palmer will me lead
From hence to Holy-Rood,
Like his good saint, I'll pay his meed,
Instead of coelde-shell, or bead,
With angels fair and good.

With angels fair and good.

I love such hely ramblers; still
They know to charm a weary hill,
With song, romance, or lay:
Some jovial tale, or glee, or jest,
Some jovial tale at the least.

Some jovial tale, or gloe, or jest, Some lying legend at the least, They bring to cheer the way."—

XXVI.

"All noble Sir," young Selby said,
And finger on his lip he laid,
'This man knows much, perchance o'en more
Than he could learn by holy be.
Still to himself he's muttering,
And shrinks as at some timesen thing,
Last night we listened at his cell;
Strange sounds we heard, and, sooth to tell,
He murmured on till morn, howe'er

He murmured on till morn, howe'er No living mortal could be near. Sometimes I thought I heard it plain, As other voices spoke again. I cannot tell—I like it not—

Friar John hath told us it is wrote, No conscionce clear, and void of wrong, Can rest awake, and pray so long.

CANTO PIDST -- THE CASTLE

Himself still sleeps before his boads

Liave marked ten aves and two creeds."-

"Let pass," quoth Marmion; "by my fay, This man shall guide me on my way. Had sworn themselves of company; So please you, gentle youth, to call This Palmer to the castle-hall."--The summoned Palmer came in place;

In his black mantle was he clad.

With Peter's keys, in cloth of red, The scallop shell his cap did dock t

The crucifix around his neck Was from Loretto brought;

His sandals were with travel tore, Staff, budget, bottle, scrip, he wore: The faded palm-branch in his hand, Shewed pilgrim from the Holy Land.

When as the Palmer came in hall, Nor lord, nor knight, was there more tall. Or had a statelier step withal, Or looked more high and keen:

For no saluting did he wait, But strode across the hall of state. And fronted Marmion where he sate, As he his poor had been.

But his gaunt frame was worn with toil; His cheek was sunk, alas the while! And when he struggled at a smile, His eye looked haggard wild.

His eye looked haggard wild.

Poor wretch! the mother that him bare,
If she had been in presence there,
In his wan face, and sun-burned hair,

She had not known her child.

Danger, long travel, want, or woe,
Soon change the form that best we know—

Soon change the form that best we know— For deadly fear can time outgo, And blanch at once the hair;

Hard toll can roughen form and face, And want can quench the eye's bright grace, Nor does old age a wrinkle trace, More deeply than despair.

Happy whom none of these befall, But this poor Palmer knew them all.

XIX.

Lord Marmion then his boon did asl; The Palmer took on him the task, 80 he would march with morning tide, To Scottish court to be his guide. —"But I have solemn vows to pay, And may not linger by the way, To fair Saint Andrew's bound,

Within the ocean-cave to pray,
Where good Saint Rule his holy lay,
From midnight to the dawn of day,
Sung to the billows' sound.

sung to the billows sound,

Whose spring can frenzied dreams dispel, And the crazed brain restore :-Saint Mary grant, that cave or spring Could back to peace my bosom bring, Or bid it throb no more!"-

And now the midnight draught of sleep, Where wine and spices richly steep, In massive bowl of silver deep, The page presents on knee-Lord Marmion drank a fair good rest,

The Captain pledged his noble guest, The cup went through among the rest, Who drained it merrily; Alone the Palmer passed it by,

Though Selby pressed him courteously. This was the sign the feast was o'er; It hushed the merry wassel roar, The minstrels ceased to sound.

Soon in the castle nought was heard, But the slow footstep of the guard, Pacing his sober round.

With early dawn Lord Marmion rose: And first the chapel doors unclose; Then, after morning rites were done, (A hasty mass from Friar John.) And knight and squire had broke their fast, On rich substantial repast.

Lord Marmion's bugles blow to horse, Then came the stirrup-cup in course: Between the Baron and his host. No point of courtesy was lost: High thanks were by Lord Marmion paid, Solemn excuse the Captain made, Till, filing from the gate, had past That noble train their Lord the last Then loudly rung the trumpet-call; Thundered the cannon from the wall. And shook the Scottish shore: Around the castle eddied, slow, Volumes of smoke as white as snow, And hid its turrets hoar:

Till they rolled forth upon the air, And met the river breezes there.

Which gave again the prospect fair.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO TO THE REV. JOHN MARRIOT, M. A.

Achestiel, Ettricke Forest. THE seenes are desert now and bare Where flourished once a forest fair, [lined, When these waste glens with copse were And peopled with the hart and hind. You thorn-perchance whose prickly spears. Have fenced him for three hundred years, While fell around his green compeers-A thousand mingled branches made: How clung the rowan * to the rock, And through the foliage shewed his head, With parrow leaves, and berries red;

" Here, in my shade," methinks he'd say, " The mighty stag at poontide lay: The wolf I've seen, a flercer game, (The neighbouring dingle bears his name,) And stop against the moon to howl; Then oft, from Newark's riven tower,

And I night see the youth Intent, Guard ever pass with cross-how bent; And through the brake the rangers stall, And through the brake the rangers stall, And fals nears both the ready hawk; And fabresters in green-wood trim, And forseters in green-wood trim, And forseters in green-wood trim, Parketter, and bentachet's "buy." From the dark covert drove the gray. From the dark covert drove the gray. The startled quarry bounds amain, The startled quarry bounds amain, Whiles the travel from the lower. Answers the harquebous below; "Answers the harquebous below; "Answers the harquebous below;" To hoof-clang, hound, and hunters' gray. And bugber inging lighttomaty, "——

Of such prend huntings, many tales Yet linger in our lonely dade, Up pathless Ettricke, and on Yarrow, Up pathless Ettricke, and on Yarrow, Where ext the Outlaw drew his arrow. But not more blythe that gylvan court, Than we have been at humbles sport; Though small our pomy, and mean our gam our mirth, dear Married, was the same. Remember'st thou my grey-hounds true? O've holt, or hill, there never faw, From slip, or leash, there never sprang, Krom slip, or leash, there never fange.

* Slow-hound.

Nor dull, between each merry chase, Passed by the intermitted space; For we had fair resource in store, In Classic, and in Gothic lore: We marked each memorable scene, And held poetic talk hetween; Nor hill, nor brook, we paced along, But had its legend, or its song. All silent now-for now are still Thy howers, untenanted Bowhill! No longer, from thy mountains dun. The yeoman hears the well-known gun, And, while his honest heart glows warm, At thought of his paternal farm, Round to his mates a brimmer fills. And drinks, "The Chieftain of the Hills!" No fairy forms, in Yarrow's bowers, Trip o'er the walks, or tend the flowers, Fair as the elves whom Janet saw. By moonlight, dance on Carterhaugh; No youthful baron's left to grace The Forest-Sheriff's lonely chase. The majesty of Oberon: And she is gone, whose lovely face Is but her least and lowest grace: Though if to Sylphid Queen 'twere given, To shew our earth the charms of heaven,

She could not glide along the air. With form more light, or face more fair. No more the widow's deafened ear Grows quick, that lady's step to hear:

At noontide she expects her not, Nor busies her to trim the cot: Pensive she turns her humming wheel, Or pensive cooks her orphans' meal; Yet blesses, ere she deals their broad, The gentle hand by which they're fed.

From Yair,-which hills so closely bind, Scarce can the Tweed his passage find, Though much be fret, and chafe, and toil. Till all his eddying currents boil,-And left us by the stream alone, Just at the age 'twist hoy and youth. When thought is speech, and speech is truth, They pressed to hear of Wallace wight, When, pointing to his airy mound, I called his ramparts holy ground! Kindled their brows to hear me speak: And I have smiled, to feel my cheek, Despite the difference of our years, Return again the glow of theirs, Ah, happy boys! such feelings pure, You may not lineer by the side

* There is on a high mountainous ridge above the farm of Ashesticl, a force called Wallace's Trench,

For Fate shall thrust you from the shore, And Passion by the sail and one. And Passion by the sail and one. Yet chrish the remembrance still, Of the lone mountain, and the vill; For trust, dear boys, the time will come, When firever transport shall be dumb, And you will think right frequently, But, well I hope, without a sigh, On the free hours that we have spent, Tosether, on the brown hill? bent.

When, musing on companions gone, We doubly feel ourselves alone, Something, my friend, we yet may gain, There is a pleasure in this pain: It soothes the love of lonely rest, Deep in each centler heart impressed. 'Tis silent amid worldly toils, And stifled soon by mental broils: But, in a bosom thus prepared, Its still small voice is often beard. Whispering a mingled sentiment, 'Twixt resignation and content, Oft in my mind such thoughts awake, By lone St Mary's silent lake ; Thou know'st it well,-nor fen, nor sedge, Pollute the pure lake's crystal edge : Abrupt and sheer, the mountains sink At once upon the level brink; And just a trace of silver sand Marks where the water meets the land.

For in the mirror bright and blue Each hill's huge outline you may view; Shaggy with heath, but lonely bare, Nor tree, nor bush, nor brake is there, Save where, of land, you slender line Bears thwart the lake the scattered pinc. And aids the feeling of the hour : Nor thicket, dell, nor copse you spy, Where living thing concealed might lie; Nor point, retiring, hides a dell. Where swain, or woodman lone, might dwell; There's nothing left to fancy's guess. You see that all is loneliness: And silence aids-though these steep hills Send to the lake a thousand rills: In summer tide, so soft they weep. The sound but lulls the ear asleen

Nought living meets the eye or ear, But well I ween the doad are near; For though, in feudal strife, a foe-Hath laid Our Lady's chapel low, Yet still, beneath the hallowed soil, The peasant rests him from his toll, And, dying, bids his bones be laid, Where erst his simple fathers prayed.

Your horse's hoof-tread sounds too rude, So stilly is the solitude.

If age had tamed the passions' strife, And fate had cut my ties to life, Here, have I thought, 'twere sweet to dwell, And rear again the chaplain's cell, Where Milton longed to spend his age. Twere sweet to mark the setting day, On Bourhope's lonely top decay; And, as it faint and feeble died. On the broad lake, and mountain's side, To say, "Thus pleasures fade away; Youth, talents, beauty, thus decay, And leave us dark, forlorn, and grey ;"-Then gaze on Dryhope's ruined tower. And when that mountain-sound I heard, Which bids us be for storm prepared, The distant rustling of his wings, As up his force the Tempest brings, To sit upon the Wizard's grave; That Wizard Priest's, whose bones are thrust On which no sun-beam ever shines... Thence view the lake, with sullen roar, And mark the wild swans mount the gale. Spread wide through mist their snowy sail. And ever stoop again, to lave Then, when against the driving hail No longer might my plaid avail.

Back to my londy home retire,
And light my lemp, and trim my fire:
There ponder of er some mystic lay,
Till the wild tale had all the sway,
Till the wild tale had all its sway,
And, in the luttern's distant shriek,
I heard unacutily violences speak,
And thought the Wisard Priest was come,
To dain again his anderet home?
To dain again his anderet home?
And bade my buny fancy range,
And bade my buny fancy range,
And bade my buny fancy range,
And my long the state of the

But chief, 'twere sweet to think such life, ('Though but escape from fortune's strife,) Something most matchless good, and wise, A great and grateful sacrifice; And deem each hour, to musing given, A step upon the road to heaven.

Yet him, whose heart is ill at ease, Such paceard solitude displaces: He he received the received her her he had been at He leves to drown his besom's jar Amid-the chemental war: Act any black Palmer's check had been Add my black Palmer's check had been Add my black Palmer's check had been Like that which frowns round dark Loch-There eagles scream from isle to shore; Down all the rocks the torrents roar; O'er the black waves incessant driven, Dark misst locket the summer heaven;

Through the rude barriers of the lake, Away its hurrying waters break, Faster and whiter dash and curl, Till down you dark abyss they hurl. Rises the fog-smoke white as snow, Some demon's subterranean cave, Who, prisoned by enchanter's spell, Shakes the dark rock with groan and yell. Had suited with the stormy scene, Just on the edge, straining his ken To view the bottom of the den, Where, deep deep down, and far within. Toils with the rocks the roaring linn ; Then, issuing forth one foamy wave, And wheeling round the Giant's Grave, White as the snowy charger's tail. Drives down the pass of Moffatdale.

Marriot, thy harp, on Isis strung, To many a Border theme has rung: Then list to me, and thou shalt know Of this mysterious Man of Woe.

CANTO SECOND.

THE CONVENT.

T.

THE breeze, which swept away the smoke, Round Norham Castle rolled; When all the loud artillery spoke,

When all the loud artillery spoke, With lightning-flash, and thunder-stroke,

As Marmion left the Hold.

It curled not Tweed alone, that breeze;
For, far upon Northumbrian seas.

For, far upon Northumbrian seas, It freshly blew, and strong, Where, from high Whitby's cloistered pile,

Where, from high Whitby's cloistered p Bound to Saint Cuthbert's Holy Isle, It bore a bark along.

Upon the gale she stooped her side,
And bounded o'er the swelling tide,
As she were dancing home;

As she were dancing home; The merry seamen laughed, to see Their gallant ship so lustily

Furrow the green sea-foam.

Much joyed they in their honoured freight;

For, on the deck, in chair of state,

The Abbess of Saint Hilda placed,

With five fair nuns, the galley graced.

E.

'Twas sweet to see these holy maids, Like birds escaped to green-wood shades, Their first flight from the eage, How timid, and how curious too, For all to them was strange and new, And all the common sights they view, Their wonderment engage.

Their wonderment engage.

One eyed the shrouds and swelling sail,

With many a benedicite;
One at the rippling surge grew pale,
And would for terror pray;

And would for terror pray; Then shrieked, hecause the sea-dog, nigh, His round black head, and sparkling eye, Reased o'er the feaming spray; And one would still adjust her veil, Disordered by the summer gale, Perchance lets some more worldly eye Her dedicated charms night spy; Perchance, because such action graced Her fait-turned arm and slender waist. Light was each simple bosom then, Save two, who ill might pleasure share, The Abbes, and the Novice Chare.

The Abbess was of noble blood, But early took the veil and hood, Bru early took the veil and hood, Cre knew the world that she forsook. Fair too ahe was, and kind had been As she was fair, but ne'er had seen For her a timil lover sigh. Nor knew the influence of her speq, Love, to her car, was but a nanc. Combined with vanity and shanne;

Her hopes, her fears, her Joys, were all Bounded within the cloister well: The deadliest in her mind could reach, Was of monastic rule the breach; And her ambiton's highest Jam. To emulate Saint Hilda's fame. For this side gave her ample dower, To raise the convent's enstern tower; For this, with carving rare and qualnt, She decked the chapel of the saint, And gave the relioue-shrine of cost.

For this, with carving rare and quair She decked the chapel of the saint, And gave the relique-shrine of cost, With ivery and gems embost. The poor her convent's bounty blest, The pilgrim in its halls found rest.

IV.

Black was her garb, her rigid rulo
Reformed on Benedictine school;
Her cheek was pale, her form was spare,
Vigils, and penitence austere,

Vigits, and pentience austere, Had early quenched the light of youth, But gentle was the dame in sooth; Though vain of her religious sway, She loved to see her maids obey, Yet nothing stern was she in cell, And the nuns loved their Abbess well. Sad was this voyage to the dame;

Sad was this voyage to the dame; Summoned to Lindisfarn, she came, There, with Saint Cuthbert's Abbot old, And Tynemouth's Prioress, to hold A chapter of Saint Benedict, For inquisition stern and strict, On two apostates from the faith, And, if need were, to doom to death.

Nought say I here of Sister Clars, Save this, that she was young and fult; As yet a novice supprofessed, Lovely, and gentle, but distressed. She was betroubted to one now dead, Or worse, who had dishonoured field. Her kitments had be neglive her hand To one, who loved her for her land! Herself, almost heart-levelsher with the property of the state of the

V)

She aste upon the galley's prow. And scened to mark the waves below; Nay seemed, so fixed her look and eye, Tae count them as they gifted by. She saw them rout—two steemens are the gifted by. She saw them rout—two steemens, and have, Nor wave, nor breezes, marmured there; There saw they where some careless hand O'er a deaf corpse had beauget the sand, Tae had been the sand to the same than the same that the same that a world look was given, As he reaked up her eyes to haven't

VII.

Lovely, and gentle, and distressed—
These charms might tame the fiercest breast:
Harpers have sung, and poets told,
That he, in fury uncontrouled,
The shaggy monarch of the wood,
Before a virgin, fair and good,
Hath pacified his savage mood.

Ane snagey mointern of the wood, Before a virgin, fair and good, Hath pacified his savage mood. But passions in the human frame Off put the lion's rage to shame: And jealousy, by dark intrigue, With sordid avariee in league, Had varedised, with their bowl and knife.

And now the vessel skirts the strand

Of put the noist stage to smaller.

And Jealousy, by dark infrigue,
With sordid avariec in league,
Had practised, with their bowl and knife,
Against the mourner's harmless life.

This crime was charged gainst those who lay
Prisoned in Cuthbert's falet gray.

VIII.

Of mountainous Northumberland; Towns, towers, and halls, successive rise, And catch the must 'delighted year. Montk Wearmouth soon behind them lay, And Tyremouth's priory and bay; They marked, and ther trees, the hall They marked, and ther trees, the hall Rush to the sea strongh sounding woods; They past the tower of Wilderington, Mother of many a valuant son;

Mother of many a valiant son; At Coquet-isle their beads they tell, To the good Saint who owned the call. Then did the Alne attention claim, And Warkworth, proud of Percy's name; And next, they crossed themselves, to bear The whitening breakers sound so near, Where, toiling through the rocks, they roar On Dunstanborough's caverned sbore; Thy tower, proud Bamborough, marked they here, King Ida's castle, huge and square, From its tall rock look grimly dow

From its tall rock look grimly down,
And on the swelling ocean frown;
Then from the coast they bore away,
And reached the Holy Island's bay.

The tide did now its flood-mark gain, And gridled in the Saint's domain: For, with the flow and ebb, its stills Drywhed, or a snake, and the state of the Drywhed, or a snake, and the state of the Drywhed, or a snake, and the state of the Drywhed, or a snake, and the snake of the Saint Sa

In Saxon strength that Abbey frowned, With massive arches broad and round, That rose alternate, row and row On ponderous columns, short and low, Built ere the art was known, By pointed aisle, and shafted stalk, The areades of an alley'd walk

To emulate in stone.

On the deep walls, the heathen Dano
Had poured his impious rage in vain;
And needful was such strength to these,
Exposed to the tempestuous seas,
Scourged by the wind's eternal sway,
Open to rovers fierce as they,
Which could twelve hundred years withstand

Winds, waves, and northern pirates' hand.
Not but that portions of the rile

Not but that portions of the pile, Rebuilded in a later stile, Shewed where the spoiler's hand had been:

Shewed where the spoller's hand had been; Not but the wasting sea-breez keen Had worn the pillar's earving quaint, And mouldered in his niche the saint, And rounded, with consuming power, The pointed angles of each tower; Yet still entire the Abby stood, Like veteran, worn, but unsubdued.

Soon as they neared his turrets strong,
The maidens raised Saint Hilda's song,
And with the sea-swave and the wind,
Their voices, sweetly shrill, combined,
And made harmonious close; *

Then, answering from the sandy shore, Half-drowned amid the breakers' roar, According chorus rose: Down to the haven of the Isle,

The monks and nuns in order file,

And, as they caught the sounds on air,

Signing the cross, the Abbess stood, And blessed them with her hand.

XII.

Suppose we now the welcome said, Suppose the Convent banquet made Through cloister, aisle, and gallery,

Nor risk to meet unhallowed eye, The stranger sisters roam :

For there, even summer night is chill, Then, having strayed and gazed their fill, They closed around the fire:

And all, in turn, essayed to paint The rival merits of their saint, A theme that ne'er can tire

A holy maid; for, be it known, . That their saint's honour is their own,

XIII

Then Whitby's nuns exulting told, How to their house three barons bold Must menial service do;

While horns blow out a note of shame, And monks cry "Fye upon your name!

In wrath, for loss of sylvan game, Saint Hilds's priest ye slew."

"This, on Ascension-day, each year, While labouring on our harbour-pier, Must Herbert, Bruce, and Percy hear."

They told how, in their convent cell,
A Saxon princess once did dwell,
The lovely Edelfied;

And how, of thousand snakes, each one Was changed into a coil of stone,

When holy Hilda prayed; Themselves, within their holy bound, Their stony folds had often found. They told, how see-fowls' pinions fail, As over Whithy's towers they sail, And, sinking down, with flutterings faint, They do their homase to the saint. Nor did Saint Cuthbert's daughters fall, To vie with these in holy tale; His body's resting place, of old, How oft their patron changed, they told; How, when the rude Dane burned their pile, The monks fled forth from Holy Isle; O'er northern mountain, marsh, and moor, From sea to sea, from shore to shore, Seven years Saint Cuthbert's corpuse they

They rested them in fair McIrose;
But though, alive, he loved it well,
Not there his reliques might repose;
For, wondrous tale to tell!

In his stone-coffin forth he rides,
(A ponderous bark for river tides)
Yet light as gossamer it glides,
Downward to Tillmouth cell.

Nor long was his abiding there, For southward did the saint repair; Chester-le-Street, and Rippon, saw His holy corpse, ere Wardilaw Halled him with joy and fear;

And, after many wanderings past, He chose his lordly seat at last, Where his cathedral, huge and vast, Looks down upon the Wear:

There, deep in Durhsm's Gothic shade, His reliques are in secret laid;

But none may know the place. Save of his holiest servants three, Deep sworn to solemn secrecy, Who share that wondrous grace.

XV.

Who may his miracles declare! Even Scotland's dauntless king, and helr,

(Although with them they led Galwegians, wild as ocean's gale, And Lodon's knights, all sheathed in mail, And the bold men of Teviotdale,)

Before his standard fled. 'Twas he, to vindicate his reign, Edged Alfred's faulchion on the Dane, And turned the conqueror back again,

When, with his Norman bowyer band, He came to waste Northumberland.

But fain Saint Hilda's nuns would learn. If, on a rock, by Lindisfarn, Saint Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame The sea-born beads that bear his name : Such tales had Whitby's fishers told, And said they might his shape behold, And hear his anvil sound:

A deadened clang, -- a huge dim form, Seen but, and heard, when gathering storm, And night were closing round. But this, as tale of idle fame,

The nuns of Lindisfarm disclaim.

While round the fire such legends go, Far different was the scene of woe, Where, in a secret aisle beneath,

It was more dark and lone that vault, Than the worst dungeon cell; Old Colwulf built it, for his fault.

In penitence to dwell, When he, for cowl and heads, laid down The Saxon battle-axe and crown. This den, which, chilling every sense

Of feeling, hearing, sight, Was called the Vault of Penitence,

Excluding air and light, Was, by the prelate Sexhelm, made A place of burial, for such dead As, having died in mortal sin, Might not be laid the church within, 'Twee now a place of punishment; Whence if so loud a shrick was sent,

As reached the upper air. The hearers blessed themselves, and said, The spirits of the sinful dead Remoaned their torments there.

But though, in the monastic pile, Did of this penitential aisle Some vague tradition go. Few only, save the Abbot, knew

Where the place lay; and still more few Were those, who had from him the clew To that dread vault to go. Victim and executioner Were blind-fold when transported there. In low dark rounds the arches hung, From the rude rock the side-walls sprung: The grave-stones, rudely sculptured o'er. Half sunk in earth, by time half wore, Were all the payement of the floor: The mildew drops fell one hy one, With tinkling plash, upon the stone, A cresset,* in an iron chain, Which served to light this drear domain, With damp and darkness seemed to strive, As if it scarce might keep alive: And set it dimly served to shew

XIX.
There, met to doom in secrecy,

Were placed the heads of convents three: All servants of Saint Benedict, The statutes of whose order strict On iron table lay; In long black dress, on seats of stone.

Behind were these three judges shown,
By the pale cresset's ray:
The Abbess of Saint Hilds's, there,

The Abbess of Saint Hilda's, there Sate for a space with visage bare, * Antique Chandelies

The awful conclave met below,

Until, to hide her bosom's swell, And tear-drops that for pity fell, She closely drew her veil: You shrouded figure, as I guess,

By her proud mien and flowing dress, Is Tynemouth's haughty Prioress, And she with awe looks pale: And he, that Ancient Man, whose sight, Has long been quenched by age's night, Upon whose wrinkled brow alone.

Upon whose wrinkled brow alone, Nor ruth, nor mercy's trace is shown, Whose look is hard and stern,— Saint Cuthbert's Abbot is his stile;

Saint Cuthbert's Abbot is his stile; For sanctity called, through the isle, The Saint of Lindisfarn.

Before them stood a guilty pair ;

But, though an equal fate they share,
Yet one alone descrives our care.
Her sex a page's dress belied;
The cloak and doublet, loosely tied,
Obseured her charms, but could not hide.
Her cap down o'er her face she drew;
And, on her doublet breast,

Lord Marmion's falcon crest. But, at the Prioress' command, A Monk undid the silken band, That tied her tresses fair. And raised the bonnet from her head, And down her slender form they spread, In ringlets rich and rar. Constance de Beverly they know, Sister professed of Fontevraud, Whom the church numbered with the dead, For broken yours and convent fled.

XXI

When thus her face was given to view, (Although so galle was her huy. It did a ghastly contrast bear. It did a ghastly contrast bear. To those bright inrightes glutering fair; To those bright inrightes glutering fair; To these bright inrightes glutering fair, and the season of the

XXII.

Such as does murder for a meed;
Who, but of fear, knows no controul,
Because his conscience, scared and foul,
Feels not the import of his deed;

One, whose brute-feeling ne'er aspires Beyond his own more brute des² ~c. Such tools the tempter ever needs, To do he savegest of deels;
For them no visited terrors daunt,
The families of the savegest of the savegest

XXII

Yet well the holdess wretch neight strike, well might be placens store a speak! For there were seen, in that dark wall, For there were seen, in that dark wall, Two niches, narrow deep, and tall. Who enters at such grisly door, and the state of the seen of th

XX

These executioners were chose,
As men who were with mankind foes,
And, with despite and envy fired,
Into the closer had retired:

Into the cloister had retired;
Or who, in desperate doubt of grace,
Strove, by deep penance, to efface

Of some foul crime the stain; For, as the vassals of her will, Such men the church selected still,

Such men the church selected still As either joyed in doing ill, Or thought more grace to gain.

Or thought more grace to gain,

If, in her cause, they wrestled down
Feelings their nature strove to own.

By strange device were they brought there,
They knew not how, and knew not where.

XXV.

And now that hlind old Abbot rose, To speak the Chapter's doom, On those the wall was to inclose,

Alive, within the tomb; But stopped, because that woeful maid, Gathering her powers, to speak essayed. Twice she essayed, and twice in vain; Her accents might no utterance gain; Nought but imperfect murnurs slip Nought but imperfect murmurs slip From her convulsed and quivering lip: "Twixt each attempt all was so still, You seemed to hear a distant rill...

'Twas ocean's swells and falls;

For though this vault of sin and f-ar Was to the sounding surge so near, A tempest there you scarce could hear So massive were the walls.

At length, an effort sent apart

The blood that curdled to her heart, And light came to her eye, And colour dawned upon her cheek, A hectic and a fluttered streak, Like that left on the Cheviot peak, By Autumn's stormy sky;

And when her silence broke at len sile. Still as she spoke she gathered straight And armed herself to bear,

It was a fearful sight to see Such high resolve and constancy.

XXVII.

"I speak not to implore your grace; Well know I, for one minute's space, Nor do I speak your prayers to gain; To cleanse my sins, be penance vain, Vain are your masses too .-

I listened to a traitor's tale, I left the convent and the veil. For three long years I bowed my pride, horse-boy in his train to ride;

And well my folly's meed he gave, Who forfeited, to be his slave, All here, and all beyond the grave.— He saw young Clara's face more fair, He knew her of broad lands the heir, Forgot his vows, his faith forswore, And Constance was beloved no more.

And Constance was beloved no more,'Tis an old tale, and often told;
But, did my fate and wish agree,

Ne'er had been read, in story old,
Of maiden true betrayed for gold,
That loved, or was avenged, like me!

XVIII.

"The king approved his favourite's aim, In vain a rival barred his claim, Whose faith with Clare's was plight, For he attaints that rival's fame

With treason's charge—and on they came, In mortal lists to fight.

Their oaths are said, Their prayers are prayed,

Their lances in the rest are laid, They meet in mortal shock; And hark! the throng, with thundering cry, Shout, 'Marmion, Marmion, to the sky!

De Wilton to the block!'
Say ye, who preach heaven shall decide,
When in the lists two champions ride,
Sax, was heaven's justice here?

When, loyal in his love and faith, Wilton found overthrow or death,

Wilton found overthrow or death,

Beneath a traitor's spear.

How false the charge, how true he fell,

This guilty packet best can tell,"—

Then drew a packet from her breast.

Paused, gathered voice, and spoke the rest.

'Still was false Marmion's hridal staid;

To Whithy's convent fled the maid,
The hated match to shun.
'Ho! shifts she thus?' King Henry cried,

'Sir Marmion, she shall be thy bride,

One way remained—the king's command Sent Marmion to the Scottish land: I lingered here, and rescue plann'd

For Clara and for me: This caitiff Monk, for gold, did swear, He would to Whitby's shrine repair, And, by his drugs, my rival fair

And, by his drugs, my rival fair
A saint in heaven should be.
But ill the dastard kept his oath,
Whose cowardice hath undone us both.

XXX

"And now my tongue the secret tells, Not that remorse my bosom swells, But to assure my soul, that none Shall ever wed with Marmion. Had fortune my last hope betrayed,
This packet to the king conveyed,
Had given him to the headsman's stroke,
Although my heart that instant broke.—
Now, men of death, work forth your will,
For I can suffer, and be still;
And come he slow, or come he fast,
Itis but Death who comes at last.

VVVI

"Yet dread ma from my living tomb, Ye vasual slave of bloody Rome! If Marmion's late remores should was, If Marmion's late remores should was, the slave of the slave of the slave of the slave of the late of the slave of the slave of the Had rather been your guest again. Belind, a darker hour ascend: The alters quake, the crosier bends, Reliefs that they acker to the slave of the Slave for they not activation's wing Then shall these vaults, so strong and deep, Barts dops to the seavinds' aweny Smort treadler then shall find my bones, And. Isrongat of projects' crickly, And. Isrongat of projects' crickly, Marvel such relics here should be."--XXXII.

Fixed was her look, and stern her air; Back from her shoulders streamed her hair; The locks, that wont her brow to shade, Stared up arectly from her head; Her figure seemed to rise more high; Her voice, despair's wild energy Had given a tome of prophecy. Appailed the astonished conclave sate; With stupid eyes, the men of fatte Gazed on the light inspired form, And instend for the averaging serm; No hand was moved, no word was said, Till than the Abod's door was given, Radings his sightless halls to beaven:— "Silver, left thy sorrows cases."

Sinful brother, part in peace!"—
From that dire dungeon, place of door
Of execution too, and tomb,

Paced forth the judges three; Sorrow it were, and shame, to tell The butcher-work that there befell, When they had glided from the cell Of sin and misery.

VVVII

An hundred winding steps convey That conclave to the upper day; But, ere they breathed the fresher air, They heard the shrickings of despair, And many a stifled groan:

With speed their upward way they take, Such speed as age and fear can make,) And crossed themselves for terror's sake, As hurrying, tottering on.

Even in the wesper's heavenly tone,
They second to hear a dying groun,
And hade the passing healt to tell

Show or the mindight wave it swung,
Northumbelan rocks in answer rung;
To Warleworth edit the ceboar rolled,
His beads the walcoful hermit told;
His beads the walcoful hermit told;
The Jamborouth peasant raised his head,
So far was heard the mighty knall,
The stag sgroung up on Cheviol Fell,
Spread his bread nostril to the wind,
Listed before, adis, behind;
Then counted him down beside the hind,
And quaked sames the mountain form,

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO THIRD.

To WILLIAM ERSKINE, Esq.

LIKE April morning clouds, that pass, With varying shadow, o'er the grass, And imitate, on field and furrow, Life's chequered scene of joy and sorrow; Like streamlet of the mountain north, Now in a torrent racing forth. Now winding slow its silver train. And almost slumbering on the plain; Like breezes of the autumn day, Whose voice inconstant dies away. And ever swells again as fast, When the car deems its murmur past . Thus various, my romantic theme Flits, winds, or sinks, a morning dream; Yet pleased, our eye pursues the trace Of Light and Shade's inconstant race; Pleased, views the rivulet afar, Weaving its maze irregular: And pleased, we listen as the breeze Heaves its wild sigh through Autumn trees. Then wild as cloud, or stream, or gale, Flow on, flow unconfined, my tale,

Need I to thee, daw Erskine, tell, I love the lience all too well, In sound now lovely, and now strong, To raise the deaultory song?—Oft, when mid such cappicious chine, Some transient for I offelder rhyzre, To thy kind judgment seemed excuse Yer many an error of the muse; Oft heat thou said, "If still IIIn-speat, Thine hours to poetry are lent, Go, and to tame thy wandering course, Quaff from the formation at the source;

...

From them, and from the paths they shew'd, Chuse honoured guide and practised road; Nor ramble on through brake and maze, With harners rude of harharous days.

"Or deem'st thou not our later time Vields topic meet for classic rhyme? Hast thou no elegiac verse For Brunswick's venerable hearse? What! not a line, a tear, a sigh, When valour bleeds for liberty?-Oh, hero of that glorious time, When, with unrivalled light sublime,-Though martial Austria, and though all The might of Russia, and the Gaul, Though handed Europe stood her foes-The star of Brandenburgh arose, Thou could'st not live to see her beam For ever quenched in Jena's stream. Lamented chief!—it was not given. To thee to change the doorn of heaven. And crush that dragon in his birth. Predestined scourge of guilty earth. Lamented chief!-not thine the power. To save in that presumptuous hour, When Prussia hurried to the field. And snatched the spear, but left the shield;

Valour and skill 'twas thine to try. And, tried in vain, 'twas thine to die. al had it seemed thy silver hair The last, the bitterest pang to share, For princedoms reft, and scutcheons riven, And birthrights to usurpers given; Thy land's, thy children's wrongs to feel, And witness woes thou could'st not heal! On thee relenting heaven bestows For honoured life an honoured close: And when revolves, in time's sure change, The hour of Germany's revenge. When, breathing fury for her sake, Some new Arminius shall awake. Her champion, ere he strike, shall come To whet his sword on BRUNSWICK's tomb

"Or of the Red-Cross hero teach.

Damntees in dungeon as on breach;
Allike to bim the see, the shore,
The brand, the bridds, or the oar;
Allike to him the war that calls
Its votaries to the shattered walls,
Which the gird Turk beamened with bleed
Which the gird Turk beamened with bleed
Which the gird Turk beamened would whe
The allience of the polar lake,
When stubborn Russ, and metalf & weed,
On that, where wome their death-game and affright
Or that, where wregennee and affright
How'd round the father of the fight,

Who snatched on Alexandria's sand The conqueror's wreath with dying hand,

"Or, if to touch such cheed be thine, Restore the ancient trajic line, And emulate the notes that rung From the with Jarp which silent hung, By alive Aron's holy alone, Tilt twice an hundred years rolled o'er; Promit he pale willow antached the treasure, And swept it with a kindred measure, Till Aron's swan, while rung the grove With Montfort's hate and Bastl's love, Descond their own Shadepasen Wed again."—

Thy friendably thus thy Judgment wrongwith praises not to me belonging. [Ing. In task more meet for mighted powers, would'st thou sugges my thriftless hours. Would's thou sugges my thriftless hours. That source power by all obeyed, Which warps not less the passive mind, Its source concealed or undefined; Whether an impaise, that has birth Soon as the Infant wakes on earth, Inse with our echings and our powers, the with our echings and our powers, or whether faller termed the away Or whether filler termed the away

Howe'er derived, its force confessed Rules with despotic sway the breast, And drags us on by viewless chain. While taste and reason plead in vain. Look east, and ask the Belgian why. Beneath Batavia's sultry sky, He seeks not eager to inhale The freshness of the mountain gale. Content to rear his whitened wall Beside the dank and dull canal? He'll say, from youth he loved to see The white sail gliding by the tree. Or see you weather-beaten hind, Whose sluggish herds before him wind. Whose tattered plaid and rugged cheek His northern clime and kindred speak; Through England's laughing meads he goes. And England's wealth around him flows: Ask, if it would content him well At ease in these gay plains to dwell, Where hedge-rows spread a verdant screen. And spires and forests intervene. And the neat cottage peeps between? No! not for these will he exchange His dark Lochaber's boundless range, Nor for fair Devon's meads forsake Bennevis grey and Garry's lake,

Thus, while I ape the measure wild Of tales that charmed me yet a child, Rude though they be, still with the chime Beturn the thoughts of early time:

MARKION And feelings, roused in life's first day, Glow in the line, and prompt the lay, Then rise those crags, that mountain tower, Which charmed my fancy's wakening hour. Though no broad river swept along. To claim, perchance, heroic song; Though sighed no groves in summer gale. To prompt of love a softer tale: Though scarce a puny streamlet's speed Claimed homage from a shepherd's reed; Yet was poetic impulse given. By the green hill and clear blue heaven. It was a barren scene, and wild, Where naked cliffs were rudely piled; But ever and anon between Lay velvet tufts of loveliest green : And well the lonely infant knew Recesses where the wall-flower grew, And honey-suckle loved to crawl Up the low crag and ruined wall: I deemed such pooks the sweetest shade The sun in all his round surveyed;

The mightlest work of human power; And marvelled, as the aged hind With some strange tale bewitched my mind, Of forayers, who, with headlong force, Down from that strength had spurred their horse, Their southern rapine to renew,

And still I thought that shattered tower

Far in the distant Cheviots blue,

And, home returning, filled the hall With revel, wassel-rout, and brawl .--Methought that still with tramp and clang The gate-way's broken arches rang : Methought grim features, seamed with sears, Glared through the windows' rusty bars. And ever, by the winter hearth, Old tales I heard of woe or mirth. Of lovers' sleights, of ladies' charms, Of witches' spells, of warriors' arms; Of patriot battles, won of old By Wallace wight and Bruce the bold; Of later fields of feud and fight. When, pouring from their Highland height. The Scottish clans, in headlong sway, Had swept the scarlet ranks away. While stretched at length upon the floor. Again I fought each combat o'er, Pebbles and shells in order laid. The mimic ranks of war displayed: And onward still the Scottish Lion bore. And still the scattered Southron fled before.

Still, with vain fondness, could I trace, Anew, each kind familiar face, Anew, each kind ramiliar race, That brightened at our evening fire; From the that ched mansion's grey-haired Sire, Wise without learning, plain and good, And sprung of Scotland's gentler blood; Whose eye in age, quick, clear, and keen, Shewed what in youth its glance had been;

Whose doom discording neighbours sought.

Content with equity unbought; To him the venerable Priest, Our frequent and familiar guest. Whose life and manners well could paint Alike the student and the saint; Alas! whose speech too oft I broke With gambol rude and timeless loke: For I was wayward, bold, and wild, A self-will'd imp, a grandame's child; But half a plague, and half a jest,
Was still endured, beloved, carest.

From me, thus nurtured, dost thou ask The classic poet's well-conned task? Nay, Erskine, nay-on the wild hill Let the wild heathbell flourish still: Cherish the tulin prune the vine. But freely let the woodbine twine, And leave untrimmed the eglantine; Nay, my friend, nay - since oft thy praise Hath given fresh vigour to my lays, Since oft thy judgment could refine My flattened thought, or cumbrous line, Still kind, as is thy wont, attend, And in the minstrel spare the friend, Though wild as cloud, as stream, as gale, Flow forth, flow unrestrained, my tale!

CANTO THIRD.

THE HOSTEL, OR INN.

THE livelong day Lord Marmion rode: The mountain path the Palmer shewed a By glen and streamlet winded still, Where stunted birches hid the rill. They might not chuse the lowland road. For the Merse forayers were abroad, Who, fired with bate and thirst of prev. Had scarcely failed to bar their way. Oft on the trampling band, from crown Of some tall cliff, the deer looked down; On wing of jet, from his repose In the deep heath, the black-cock rose; Sprung from the gorse the timid roe, Nor waited for the bending bow : And when the stony path began. By which the naked peak they wan, Up flew the snowy ptarmigan, The noon had long been passed before They gained the height of Lammermoor; Thence winding down the northern way, Before them, at the close of day, Old Gifford's towers and hamlet lay.

No summons calls them to the tower, To spend the hospitable hour. To Scotland's camp the Lord was gone; Ris cautious dame, in bower alone, Dreaded her castle to unclose, So late, to unknown friends or foes. On through the hamlet as they paced,

On through the names as they paced,
Before a porch, whose front was graced
With bush and flaggon trimly placed,
Lord Marmion drew his rein:

Lord Marmion drew his rein; The village inn seemed large, though rude; Its cheerful fire and hearty food

Its cheerful fire and hearty food Might well relieve his train.

Down from their seats the horsemen sprung With Jingling spurs the court-yard rung; They bind the horses to the stall, For forage, food, and firing call, And various clamour fills the hall; Weighing the labour with the cost, Toils everywhere the bustling host.

Soon by the chimney's merry blaze, Through the rude hostel might you gaze; Might see, where, in dark nook aloof, The rafters of the sooty roof Bore wealth of winter cheer;

Bore wealth of winter cheer;
Of sea-fowl dried, and solands store,
And gammons of the tusky boar,
And sayoury haunch of deer.

And savoury naunch or deer.
The chimney arch projected wide;
Above, around it, and beside,
Were tools for housewives' hand:

Nor wanted, in that martial day, The implements of Scottish fray, The buckler, lance, and brand. Beneath its shade, the place of state, On oaken settle Marmion sate, And viewed around the blazing hearth, His followers mix in noisy mirth, Whom with brown ale, in jolly tide, From ancient vessels ranged aside, Full actively their host supplied.

IV.

Their's was the glee of martial breast, and laughter thriv; at little jest; And oft Lord Marmion deligned to sid, and the Lord Marmion deligned to sid, and the laughter of la

From India's fires to Zembla's frost.

Resting upon his pilgrim's staff, Right opposite the Palmer stood; His thin dark visage seen but half, Half hidden by his hood. Still fixed on Marmion was his look, Which he, who ill such gaze could brook, Strove by a frown to quell;

But not for that, though more than once Full met their stern encountering glance, The Palmer's visage fell.

VI.

By fits less frequent from the crowd Was heard the burst of laughter loud; For still, as squire and archer stared On that dark face and matted beard, Their glee and game declined.

All gazed at length in silence drear, Unbroke, save when in comrade's ear Some yeoman, wondering in his fear,

Thus whispered forth his mind:—
"Saint Mary! saw'st thou e'er such sight?
How pale his cheek, his eye how bright,
Whene'er the fire-brand's fickle light

Whene'er the fire-brand's fickle light Glances beneath his cow! Full on our Lord he sets his eye; For his best palfrey, would not I Endure that sullen soow!"...

II.

But Marmion, as to chase the wife which thus had quelled sade hearts, who The ever-varying fire-lights peace.

That figure stern and face of woo,

Now called upon a squire.—

"Fitz-Eustace, know'st thou not some lay, To speed the lingering night away? We slumber by the fire."—

"So please you," thus the youth rejoined, "Our choicest minstrel's left behind. Ill may we hope to please your ear. Accustomed Constant's strains to hear. The harp full deftly can be strike. And wake the lover's lute alike; To dear Saint Valentine, no thrush Sings livelier from a spring-tide bush ; No nightingale her love-lorn tune More sweetly warbles to the moon, Wo to the cause, whate'er it be,

Detains from us his melody, Lavished on rocks, and billows stern, Or duller monks of Lindisfarn.

Now must I venture as I may, To sing his favourite roundelay."-IX.

A mellow voice Fitz-Eustace had, The air he chose was wild and sad: Such have I heard, in Scottish land, Rise from the busy harvest hand. When falls before the mountaineer, On lowland plains, the ripened ear, Now one shrill voice the notes prolong Now a wild chorus swells the song . Oft have I listened, and stood still. As it came softened up the hill.

And deemed it the lement of men Who languished for their native glen: And thought, how sad would be such sound. On Susmehana's swampy ground. Kentucky's wood-encumbered brake, Or wild Ontario's boundless lake. Where heart-sick exiles, in the strain. Recalled fair Scotland's bills again!

> Y Sona.

Where shall the lover rest.

Whom the fates sever From his true maiden's breast.

Parted for ever? Where, through groves deep and high,

Sounds the far billow. Where early violets die.

Under the willow.

Eleu lozo, &c. Soft shall be his pillow.

There, through the summer day, Cool streams are laving; There, while the tempests sway, Scarce are boughs waving . There, thy rest shalt thou take, Parted for ever.

Never again to wake. Never, O never.

Eleu loro, &c. Never, O never,

CANTO THIRD-THE HOSTEL, OR INN. 79

Y

Where shall the traitor rest, He, the deceiver, Who could win maiden's breast,

Who could win maiden's bro Ruin, and leave her? In the lost battle, Borne down by the flying, Where mingles war's rattle, With groans of the dying.

Eleu loro, &c. There shall he be lying.

Her wing shall the eagle flap,
O'er the false-hearted;
His warm blood the wolf shall lap,
Ere life be parted.

Ere life be parted.
Shame and disbonour sit
By his grave ever;
Blessing shall hallow it,— Never, O peyer.

CHORUS.

Eleu loro, &c. Never, O never.

It ceased, the melancholy sound;
And silence sunk on all around.
The air was sad; but sadder still

The air was sad; but sadder still
It fell on Marmion's ear,
And plained as if disgrace and ill,
And shameful death, were near.
He draw his mantle nest his face.

Between it and the band,

And rested with his head a space,
Reclining on his hand.
His thoughts I sean not; but I ween,
That, could their import have been seen,
The meanest groom in all the hall,
That o'er tied courser to a stall,
Would scarce have wishoft to be their prey,

For Lutterward and Fontenaye.

High minds, of native pride and force, Most deeply fed thy pangs, Removes 1: Foar, for their scourge, mean villains have, Thou at the tearture of the brave; Thou at the tearture of the brave; Thou at the tearture of the brave; Their minds to bear the sounds they find: Their minds to bear the sounds they find: Their minds to bear the sounds they find the smart Of civil conflict in the heart. Of civil conflict in the heart. And, mulling, to Fitz-Stutese said:—And, mulling, to Fitz-Stutese said:—Seemed in mine as a death-poal vang. Such as in numeries they toil. For some departing stater's soul?

Say, what may this portend?"—
Then first the Palmer silence broke,
(The livelong day he had not spoke,)
"The death of a dear friend."

XIV.

Marmion, whose steady heart and eye Ne'er changed in worst extremity, Marmion, whose soul could scantly brook, Even from his king, a haughty look; Whose accent of command controuled, In camps, the boldest of the bold— Thought, look, and utterance, falled him now, Fallen was his glance, and flushed his brov

For either in the tone, Or something in the Palmer's look, So full upon his conscience strook,

That answer he found none. Thus oft it haps, that when within They shrink at sense of secret sin,

A feather daunts the brave; A fool's wild speech confounds the wise, And proudest princes veil their eyes Before their meanest slave.

Well might be finite; ...by his add Weal Countaine Benvirey betrayed; Not that he august of the doorn, Which on the living closed the temble But, tired to hear the desperate maid. Threaten by turns, bessech, upbraid; in the country of the country of the country Blo practiced on the life of Clare; Its fugtite the church he gave, Though not a victim, but a slave; And deemed restraint in convent strange, when the country of the country of the country of the Hold Rombiet blumbers side fear, poor, Hold Rombiet blumbers side fear, 82 MARMI

Secure his pardon he might hold,
For some alight mulet of penance-gold.
Thus judging, he gave secer way.
When the stern priests aurprised their prey;
When the stern priests aurprised their prey
Was left helind, to speer his age;
Was left helind, to speer his age;
You mitter what he thought and heard;
Wee to the vassal, who durst pry
Into Lord Marmon's privace;

VI.

His conscience slept-he deemed her well. And safe secured in distant cell : But, wakened by her favourite lay, And that strange Palmer's boding say, That fell so ominous and drear. Full on the object of his fear, To ald remorse's venomed throes. Dark tales of convent vengeance rose; And Constance, late betrayed and scorn All lovely on his soul returned: Lovely as when, at treacherous call, She left her convent's peaceful wall, Crimsoned with shame, with terror mute, Dreading alike escape, pursuit, Till love, victorious o'er alarms, Hid fears and blushes in his arms.

XVII.

"Alas!" he thought, "how changed that mien! How changed these timid looks have been, CANTO THIRD-THE HOSTEL, OR INN. 83 Since years of guilt, and of disguise, Have steeled her brow, and armed her eyes! No more of virgin terror speaks The blood that mantles in her cheeks Fierce, and unfeminine, are there. Frenzy for lov, for grief despair; And I the cause—for whom were given Her peace on earth, her hopes in heaven !-Would," thought he, as the picture grows, "I on its stalk had left the rose! Oh why should man's success remove The very charms that wake his love !--Her convent's peaceful solitude Is now a prison harsh and rude : And, pent within the narrow cell. How will her spirit chafe and swell! How brook the stern monastic laws! The penance how-and I the cause !-Vigil and scourge-perchance even worse!"-And twice he rose to cry "to horse!"

And twice his sovereign's mandate came, Like damp upon a kindling flame; And twice he thought, "Gave I not charge She should be safe, though not at large? They durst not, for their island, shred One golden ringlet from her head." XVIII.

While thus in Marmion's bosom strove Repentance and reviving love, Like whirlwinds, whose contending away I've seen Loch Vennachar obey,

84 MARMI

Their Host the Palmer's speech had heard, And, talkative, both up the word:
"Ay, reverend Pligrin, you, who stray Prom Scotland's simple land away,
"To visit realms size, you want to the property of the stray of t

And, Marmion giving license cold,

XIX.

The Most's Tale.

"A clerk could tell what years have flown Since Alexander filled our throne, (Third monerate of that warille name,) And else the time when here he came To seek is It lugo, then our lord: A braver never drew a sword; Of midnight, apple the word of power; The same, whom ancient records call The founder of the Gobiln-Idal. I would. Sir Knight, your longer stay Gave you that cavern to survey. Of lofty roof, and ample size Beneath the castle deep it lies: To hew the living rock profound. The floor to pave, the arch to round, There never toiled a mortal arm, It all was wrought by word and charm; And I have heard my grandsire say, That the wild clamour and affray Of those dread artizans of hell. Who laboured under Hugo's spell, Sounded as loud as ocean's war, Among the caverns of Dunbar.

XX. "The king Lord Gifford's castle sought, Deep-labouring with uncertain thought : Even then be mustered all his host. To meet upon the western coast; For Norse and Danish galleys plied Their cars within the firth of Clyde. There floated Haco's hanner trim, Above Norweyan warriors grim. Savage of heart, and large of limb : Threatening both continent and isle, Bute, Arran, Cunninghame, and Kyle. Lord Gifford, deep beneath the ground. Heard Alexander's bugle sound And tarried not his garb to change, But, in his wizard habit strange, Came forth .-- a quaint and fearful sight ! His mantle lined with fox-skins white; His high and wrinkled forehead bore A pointed cap, such as of yore Clerks say that Pharach's Maci wore: Wis shoes were marked with cross and spell; Unon his breast a pentacle : His zone, of virgin parchment thin, Or, as some tell, of dead man's skin.

Bore many a planetary sign. Combust, and retrogade, and trine : And in his hand he held prepared.

A naked sword without a guard. VVV

"Dire dealings with the flendish race Had marked strange lines upon his face : Vigil and fast had worn him grim, His eyesight dazzled seemed, and dim, As one unused to upper day: Even his own menials with dismay Beheld, Sir Knight, the grisly sire. In this unwonted wild attire :-Unwonted, for traditions run, He seldom thus beheld the sun. "I know," he said, -- his voice was hoarse, And broken seemed its hollow force,-'I know the cause, although untold, Why the king seeks his vassal's hold: Vainly from me my liege would know His kingdom's future weal or woe:

But yet, if strong his arm and heart, His courage may do more than art.

" Of middle air the demons proud. Who ride upon the racking cloud, Can read, in fixed or wandering stay, The issue of events afar : But still their sullen sid withhold Save when hy mightier force controuled. Such late I summoned to my hall: And though so potent was the call. That scarce the deepest nook of hell I deemed a refuge from the snell. Yet, obstinate in silence still. The haughty demon mocks my skill. But thou,-who little knowest thy might. As born upon that blessed night. When yawning graves, and dying groan, Proclaimed hell's empire overthrown,-With untaught valour shalt compel Response denied to magic spell.'-'Gramercy,' quoth our monarch free, 'Place him hut front to front with me, And, hy this good and honoured hrand, The gift of Cœur-de-Lion's hand,

Soothly I swear, that, tide what tide, The demon shall a huffet hide.'-His bearing hold the wizard viewed, And thus well pleased his speech renewed -'There spoke the blood of Malcolm !-mark : Forth pacing hence, at midnight dark,

98 The rampart seek, whose circling crown Crests the ascent of yonder down : A southern entrance shalt thou find; There halt, and there thy bugle wind, And trust thine elfin foe to see, In guise of thy worst enemy :

Couch then thy lance, and sour thy steed-Upon him! and Saint George to speed! If he go down, thou soon shalt know, Whate'er these airy sprites can shew :---If thy heart fail thee in the strife,

I am no warrant for thy life.'---XXIII

"Soon as the midnight hell did ring Alone, and armed, rode forth the king To that old camp's deserted round :--Sir Knight, you well might mark the mound. Left hand the town.-the Pletish race The trench, long since, in blood did trace; The moor around is brown and bare, The space within is green and fair. The spot our village children know, For there the earliest wild flowers grow; But woe betide the wandering wight. That treads its circle in the night! The breadth across, a bowshot clear. Gives ample space for full career; Opposed to the four points of heaven, By four deep gaps is entrance given. The southernmost our monarch past. Halted, and blew a callant blost .

And on the north, within the ring, Appeared the form of England's ling; Who then, at floousand leagues sfar, In Palestine waged holy war: Yet arms like England's did he wield, Alike the leopards in the shield, Alike his Syrian courser's frame, The rider's length of limb the same: Long afterwards did Scotland know, Tell Edward "was her deadliest foe.

XXIV.

"The vision made our monarch start, But soon he mann'd his noble heart, And in the first career they ran, The Ethn Knight fell horse and man; Yet did a splinter of his lance Through Alexander's visor glance, And razed the skin—a puny wound. The king, light leaping to the ground, With naked blade his phanton fee Compelled the future was to show. Of Large he saw the glorious plain.

ompetice the future war to show.

Of Largs he saw the glorious plain,
Where still gigantic bones remain,
Memorial of the Danish war;
Himself he saw, amid the field,
On high his brandished war-axe wield,
And strike proud Hace from his car.

^{*} Edward I., surnamed Longshanks.

While, all around the shadowy kings, Denmark's grim ravens cower'd their , wings. 'Tie said, that, in that awful night,

Remoter visions met his sight,

Fore-showing future conquests for When our sons' sons wage northern war :

A royal city, tower and spire, Reddened the midnight sky with fire;

And shouting crews her navy bore. Triumphant, to the victor shore.

Such signs may learned clerks explain, They pass the wit of simple swain.

XXV.

"The joyful king turned home again, Headed his host, and quelled the Dane; But yearly, when returned the night

Of his strange combat with the sprite, His wound must bleed and smart, Lord Gifford then would gibing say,

Bold as ye were, my liege, ye pay The penance of your start.

Long since, beneath Dunfermline's nave, King Alexander fills his grave, Our Lady give him rest !

Yet still the nightly spear and shield The elfin warrior doth wield. Upon the brown hill's breast :

And many a knight hath proved his chance. In the charmed ring to break a lance,

But all have foully sped; Save two, as legends tell, and they Were Wallace wight, and Gilbert Hay,— Gentles, my tale is said."—

XXVI.

The quaighs* were deep, the liquor strong, And on the tale the yeoman throng Had made a comment sage and long,

But Marmion gave a sign;
And, with their lord, the squires retire;
The rest, around the hostel fire,

Their drowsy limbs recline; For pillow, underneath each head, The quiver and the targe were laid; Deep slumbering on the hostel floor, Oppressed with toil and ale they snore; The dying flame, in fifth change,

Oppressed with toil and ale they snore;
The dying flame, in fitful change,
Threw on the groupe its shadows strange.

XXVII.

Apart, and nestling in the hay
Of a waste loft, Fitz-Eustace lay;
Scarce, by the pale moonlight, were seen
The foldings of his mantle green:
Lightly be dreamt, as youth will dream,
Of sport by thicket, or by stream,
Of hawk or hound, of ring or glove,
Or, Hother wo, flath's low,

* A wooden cup, composed of staves hosped together.

A cautious tread his slumber broke. And, close beside him, when he woke, In moonbeam half, and half in gloom, Stood a tall form, with nodding plume ; But, ere his dagger Eustace drew, His master Marmion's voice he knew.

XXVIII.

-" Fitz-Eustace ! rise,-I cannot rest : Yon churl's wild legend haunts my breast, And graver thoughts have chafed my mood : The air must cool my feverish blood; And fain would I ride forth, to see The scene of elfin chivalry.

Arise, and saddle me my steed;

And, gentle Eustace, take good heed Thou dost not rouse these drowsy slaves : I would not, that the prating knaves Had cause for saving, o'er their ale, That I could credit such a tale."-Then softly down the steps they slid, Eustace the stable door undid. And darkling, Marmion's steed arrayed, While, whispering, thus the Baron said :---

"Did'st never, good my youth, hear tell That in the hour when I was born, St George, who graced my sire's chapelle, Down from his steed of marble fell, A weary wight forlorn?

The flattering chaplains all agree,
The champion left his steed to me.
I would, the empiris truth to shew,
That I could ment this Ellin Foe!
Blithe would I battle, for the right
To ask one question at the sprite—
Year the constraint of the sprite—
A many top, there, is given there be,
To dashing waters dance and sing,
Or round the genen calc wheel their ring."—
Thus speaking he his steed bestrode,
And from the hostel slowly rode.

XXX.

Fitz-Eustace followed him abroad, And marked him pace the village road, And listened to his horse's tramp, Till, by the lessenting sound, He judged that of the Pictich camp Lord Marmion sought the round. Wonder it seemed, in the squire's gres, That one, so wary held, and wise, of whom, 'two sald, he scarce received

For gospel, what the church believed,— Should, stirred by idle tale, Ride forth in silence of the night, As hoping half to mest a sprite, Arrayed in plate and mail.

For little did Fitz-Eustace know, That passions, in contending flow, Unfix the strongest mind : Wearled from doubt to doubt to flee, We welcome fond credulity, Guide confident, though blind.

Little for this Fitz-Eustage cared. But, natient, waited till he heard. At distance, pricked to utmost speed, The foot-tramp of a flying steed.

Come town-ward rushing on : First, dead, as if on turf it trod, Then, clattering on the village road .-In other pace than forth he yode,"

Returned Lord Marmion. Down hastily he sprung from selle, And, in his haste, well nigh he fell :

To the squire's hand the rein he threw. And spoke no word as he withdrew: But yet the moonlight did betray. The falcon crest was soiled with clay : And plainly might Fitz-Eustace see, By stains upon the charger's lonee. And his left side, that on the moor He had not kept his footing sure. Long musing on these wondrous signs. At length to rest the squire reclines, Broken and short : for still, between, Would dreams of terror intervene: Eustace did ne'er so blithely mark The first notes of the morning lark.

" Used by old soute for same.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FOURTH.

To JAMES SKENE, Esq.

Ashestiel, Ettricke Forest. An ancient minstrel sagely said, ". Where is the life which late we led?"-That motley clown, in Arden wood, Whom humorous Jaques with envy viewed, Not even that clown could amplify, On this trite text, so long as I. Eleven years we now may tell, Since we have known each other well; Since riding side by side our hand First drew the voluntary brand ; And sure, through many a varied scene, Unkindness never came between, Away these winged years have flown. To join the mass of ages gone; And though deep marked, like all below, With chequered shades of joy and woe; Though thou o'er realms and seas hast range l. Marked cities lost, and empires changed, While here, at home, my narrower ken Somewhat of manners saw, and men; Though varying wishes, hopes, and fears, Fevered the progress of these years, Yet now, days, weeks, and months, but sees The recollection of a dream,

9.6

So still we glide down to the sea Of fathomless eternity.

Even now, it scarcely seems a day, Since first I tuned this idle lay: A task so often thrown aside, When leisure graver cares denied, When leisure graver cares denice,
That now, November's dreary gale,
Whose voice inspired my opening tale,
That same November gale once more
Whirls the dry leaves on Yarrow shore; Their vex'd boughs streaming to the sky, Once more our naked birches sigh; And Blackhouse heights, and Ettricke Pen, Have don'd their wintry shrouds again; And mountain dark, and flooded mead, Bid us forsake the banks of Tweed. Earlier than wont along the sky, Mixed with the rack, the snow-mists fly: The shepherd, who, in summer sun, Has something of our envy won. As thou with pencil. I with pen. The features traced of hill and glen; He who, outstretched, the livelong day, At ease among the heath-flowers lay, Viewed the light clouds with vacant look, Or slumbered o'er his tattered book. Or idly busied him to guide His angle o'er the lessened tide ;--At midnight now, the snowy plain Finds sterner labour for the swain

When red hath set the beamless sun. Through heavy vapours dank and dun; When the tired ploughman, dry and warm, Hears, half asleep, the rising storm Hurling the hail, and sleeted rain, Against the casement's tinkling pane; The sounds that drive wild deer, and fox, To shelter in the brake and rocks, Are warnings which the shepherd ask To dismal, and to dangerous task. Oft he looks forth, and hopes, in vain, The blast may sink in mellowing rain; Till, dark above, and white below, Decided drives the flaky snow, And forth the hardy swain must go. Long, with dejected look and whine, To leave the hearth his dogs renine; Whistling, and cheering them to ald, Around his back he wreathes the plaid: His flook he gathers, and he guides To open downs, and mountain sides, Where, flercest though the tempest blow, Least deeply lies the drift below. The blast, that whistles o'er the fells. Stiffens his locks to icicles; Oft he looks back, while, streaming far, His cottage window seems a star. Loses its feeble gleam, and then Turns patient to the blast again. And, facing to the tempest's sween. Drives through the gloom his lagging sheep: If falls his heart, if his limbs fail, Benumbing death is in the gale; His paths, his landmarks, all unknown, Close to the hut, no more his own, Close to the ald he sought in vain, The morn may find the stiffen'd swain? His widow sees, at dawning pale, His orphans raise their feeble wail; And, close beside him in the snow, Poor Yarrow, partner of their wee, Couches upon his master's breast, And licks his cheek, to break his rest-

His healthy fure, his rural cot. His summer couch by greenwood tree. His rustic kirn's * loud revelry, His native hill notes, tuned on high, To Marion of the blithesome eye; His crook, his scrip, his oaten reed, And all Arcadia's golden creed? Changes not so with us, my Skene,

Who envies now the shepherd's lot,

Of human life the varying scenc? Our youthful summer oft we see Dance by on wings of game and glee. While the dark storm reserves its rage, Against the winter of our age: As hc, the ancient chief of Troy, His manhood spent in peace and joy: * The Scottish harvest home.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FOURTH. But Grecian fires, and loud alarms, Called ancient Priam forth to arms. Then happy those,-since each must drain His share of pleasure share of pain .-Then happy those, beloved of heaven, To whom the mingled cup is given; Whose lenient sorrows find relief, Whose joys are chastened by their grief. And such a lot, my Skene, was thine, When thou of late were doomed to twine,-Just when thy bridal hour was by .--The cypress with the myrtle tle; Just on thy bride her Sire had smiled, And blessed the union of his child, When love must change its joyous cheer, And wine affection's filial tear. Nor did the actions, next his end, Speak more the father than the friend : Scarce had lamented Forbes paid The tribute to his minetrel's shade: The tale of friendship scarce was told, Ere the parrator's heart was cold. Far may we search before we find A heart so manly and so kind. But not around his honour'd urn, Shall friends alone and kindred mourn: The thousand eyes his care had dried, Pour at his name a bitter tide: And frequent falls the grateful dew. For benefits the world ne'er knew. If mortal charity dare claim

The Almighty's attributed name.

Inscribe above his mouldering clay,
"The widow's shield, the orphan's stay,"
Nor, though it wake the sorrow, deem
My werse intrudes on this sad theme;
For sacred was the pen that wrote,
"Thy father's friend forget thou not."
And grateful title may I pleas.
For many a kindly word and deed,
For many a kindly word and seed,
The stay is the sorrow of the

To thee, perchance, this rambling strain Recals our summer walks again : When doing nought,-and, to speak true, Not anxious to find aught to do,-The wild unbounded hills we ranged. While oft our talk its topic changed, And desultory, as our way, Ranged unconfined from grave to gay. Even when it flagged, as oft will chance, No effort made to break its trance. We could right pleasantly pursue Our sports in social silence too. Thou gravely labouring to portray . The blighted oak's fantastic spray, I spelling o'er, with much delight, The legend of that antique knight. Tirante by name, yeleped the White. At either's feet a trusty squire, Pandour and Camp, with eyes of fire, Jealous, each other's motions viewed,

And scarce suppressed their ancient feud.

The laverock whistled from the cloud; The stream was lively, but not loud; From the whitz-thorn the May-flower shed Its dewy fragrance round our head; Not Ariel lived more merrily Index the blessom'd bough, than we.

And blithesome nights, too, have been ours. When Winter stript the summer's bowers; Careless we heard, what now I hear. The wild blast sighing deep and drear, Igay, When fires were bright, and lamps beamed And ladies tuned the lovely lay ; And he was held a laggard soul, Who shunn'd to quaff the sparkling bowl, Then he, whose absence we deplore, Who breathes the gales of Devon's shore, The longer missed, bewailed the more; And thou, and I, and dear-beloved R----And one whose name I may not say,-For not Mimosa's tender tree Shrinks sooner from the touch than he .--In merry chorus well combined, With laughter drowned the whistling wind. Mirth was within: and Care without Might grow her poils to hear our shout. Not but amid the buxom scene Some grave discourse might intervene-Of the good horse that bore him best, His shoulder hoof and arching crest:

For, like mad Tom's, " our chiefest care, Was horse to ride, and weapon wear, Igama Such nights we've had; and, though the Of manhood be more sober tame. And though the field-day, or the drill. Seem less important now-vet still Such may we hope to share again. The sprightly thought inspires my strain: And mark, how like a Forseman true. Lord Marmion's march I thus renew.

CANTO FOURTH.

THE CAMP.

EUSTACE, I said, did blithely mark The first notes of the merry lark. The lark sung shrill, the cock he crew, And loudly Marmion's bugles blew. And, with their light and lively call, Brought groom and yeoman to the stall.

Whistling they came, and free of heart: But soon their mood was changed: Complaint was heard on every part. Of something disarranged.

Some elamoured loud for armour lost; Some brawled and wrangled with the host: "By Becket's bones," cried one, "I fear, That some false Scot has stolen my spear !"-* See King Lear.

Young Blount, Lord Marmion's second squire. Found his steed wet with sweat and mire;

Although the rated horse-boy sware. Last night he dressed him sleek and fair While chafed the impatient squire like thunder, Old Hubert shouts, in fear and wonder .-" Help, gentle Blount ! help, comrades all Bevis lies dving in his stall : To Marmion who the plight dare tell. Of the good steed he loves so well?"-Ganing for fear and ruth,y saw The charger panting on his straw: Till one, who would seem wisest, cried,-With that cursed Palmer for our guide? Retter we had through mire and bush Been lanthorn-led by Friar Rush."* II.

Fitz-Eustace, who the cause but guessed, Nor wholly understood. His comrades' clamorous plaints suppressed;

He knew Lord Marmion's mood. Him ere he is ned forth he sought. And found deep plunged in gloomy thought, And did his tale display a Alias Will o' the Wisp. See Note.

Simply, as if he knew of nought To cause such disarray.

Lord Marmion gave attention cold, Nor marvelled at the wonders told,— Passed them as accidents of course, And bade his clarions sound to horse,

111

Young Henry Blount, meanwhile, the cost Had reckoned with their Scottish host; And, as the charge he cast and paid,

" Ill thou deserv'st thy hire," he said;
"Dost see, thou knave, my horse's plight?
Fairies have ridden him all the night,

And left him in a foam!

I trust, that soon a conjuring band,
With English cross and blazing brand,
Shall drive the devils from this land.

To their infernal home:
For in this haunted den, I trow,
All night they trampled to and fro,"—
The laughing host looked on the hire,—
"Gramerey, gentle southern squire,
And if those com'st among the rest,
With Scottish broad-sword to be blest,
Sharp be the brand, and sure the blow,
And short the pauje to undergo,"—
Here stayed their talk,—for Marmion
Gave now the signal to set on.

Gave now the signal to set on.

The Palmer shewing forth the way,
They journeyed all the morning day.

IV.

The green-sward way was smooth and good, Through Humble's and through Saltoun's wood; A forest glade, which, varying still, Here gave a view of dale and hill ; There parrower closed, till over head A vaulted screen the branches made. "A pleasant path," Fitz-Eustace said, "Such as where errant knights might see Adventures of high chivalry : Might meet some damsel flying fast, With hair unbound, and looks aghast ; And smooth and level course were here. In her defence to break a spear. Here, too, are twilight nooks and dells : And oft, in such, the story tells, The damsel kind, from danger freed, Did grateful pay her champion's meed."---He spoke to cheer Lord Marmion's mind :

Perchance to shew his lore designed;
For Eustace much had pored
Upon a huge romantic tome,
In the hall-window of his home,
Imprinted at the antique dome
Of Caxton or De Worde.
Therefore he spoke,—but spoke in vala,
For Marnion answered nought again.

Now sudden distant trumpets shrill, In notes prolonged by wood and hill, Were heard to echo far; Each ready archer grasped his bow, But by the flourish soon they know.

But by the flourish soon they know They breathed no point of war.

Vet contious, as in forman's land. Lord Marmion's order speeds the band, Some opener ground to gain ; And scarce a furlong had they rode.

When thinner trees, recoding, shewed A little woodland plain.

Just in that advantageous glade. The halting troop a line had made. As forth from the opposing shade Issued a callant train.

VI.

First came the trumpets, at whose clang So late the forest echoes rang ; On prancing steeds they forward pressed, With scarlet mantle, azure vest;

Each at his trump a banner wore, Which Scotland's royal scutcheon bore . Heralds and pursuivants, by name

Bute, Islay, Marchmount, Rothsay, came, In painted tabards, proudly shewing Gules, Argent, Or, and Azure glowing, Attendant on a King-at-arms, Whose hand the armorial truncheon held. That feudal strife had often quelled When wildest its alarms.

VII.

He was a man of middle age; In aspect manly, grave, and sage, As on king's errand come; But in the glances of his eye,
A penerating, keen, and sly
Expression found its nerue;
The flash of that satiric rage,
Which, bursting on the early stage,
Branded the vices of the age,

And broke the keys of Rome. On milk-white palfrey forth he paced His cap of maintenance was graced

His cap of maintenance was graced With the proud heron-plume.

From his steed's shoulder, loin, and breast, Silk housings swept the ground, With Scotland's arms, device, and crest,

With Scotland's arms, device, and crest, Embroidered round and round. The double tressure might you see,

First by Achaius borne, The thistle, and the fleur-de-lis,

The thistle, and the fleur-de-lis,
And gallant unicorn.
So bright the King's armorial coat,
That scarce the dazzled eye could note,
In living colours, blazoned brave,
The Lion, which his title gave.

A train, which well beseemed his state,
But all unarmed around him wait.
Still is thy name in high account,
And still thy verse has charms,
Sir David Lindesay of the Mount,
Lord Lion Kinz-at-arms!

VIII Down from his horse did Marmion spring, Soon as he saw the Lion-King; For well the stately Baron knew. To him such courtesy was due, Whom royal James himself had crowned. And on his temples placed the round Of Scotland's ancient diadem : And wet his brow with hallowed wine. And on his finger given to shine The emblematic gem. Their mutual greetings duly made, The Lion thus his message said :--"Though Scotland's King bath deeply awore. Ne'er to knit faith with Henry more, And strictly bath forbid resort From England to his royal court; Yet, for he knows Lord Marmion's name. And honours much his warlike fame, My liege hath deemed it shame, and lack Of courtesy, to turn him back ; And, by his order, I, your guide, Must lodging fit and fair provide

And, by his order, I, your guide,
Must lodging fit and fair provide,
Till finds King James meet time to see
The flower of English chivalry."—
IX.
Though inly chafed at this delay.

Lord Marmion bears it as he may. The Palmer, his mysterious guide, Beholding thus his place supplied, Sought to take leave in vain: Strict was the Lion-King's command, That none, who rode in Marmion's band,

Should sever from the train:

"England has here enow of spies In Lady Heron's witching eyes;" To Marchmount thus, apart, he said, But fair pretext to Marmion made. The right-hand path they now decline, And trace against the stream the Tyne.

X.
At length up that wild dale they wind,

Where Crichtoun-Castle crowns the bank; For there the Lion's care assigned

A lodging meet for Marmion's rank.
That Castle rises on the steep
Of the green vale of Tyne;
And far beneath, where slow they creep

From pool to eddy, dark and deep, Where alders moist, and willows weep, You hear her streams repine.

The towers in different ages rose;
Their various architecture shews
The builders' various hands;
A mighty mass, that could oppose,

When deadliest hatred fired its foes, The vengeful Douglas bands.

Xf.

Crichtoun! though now thy miry court
But pens the lazy steer and sheep,
Tby turrets rude, and tottered Keep,
Have been the minatrel's loved resort.

Oft have I traced within thy fort,
Of mouldering shield the mystic sense,
Scutcheons of honour, or pretence,
Quartered in old armorial sort,
Remains of rule magnificence:

Remains of rude magnificence; Nor wholly yet hath time defaced Thy lordly gallery fair;

Thy lordly gallery fair;
Nor yet the stony cord unbraced,
Whose twisted knots, with roses laced,
Adorn thy rulned stair.
Still rises unimpaired, below.

Adorn thy ruined stair.
Still rises unimpaired, below,
The court-yard's graceful portico;
Above its cornice, row and row

Above its cornice, row and row
Of fair hewn facets richly shew
Their pointed diamond form,
Though there but houseless cattle go
To shield them from the storm.

And, shuddering, still may we explore,
Where oft whilome were captives pent,
The darkness of thy Massy More;*

Or, from thy grass-grown battlement, May trace, in undulating line, The sluggish mazes of the Tyne.

Another aspect Crichtoun shewed, As through its portal Marnion rode; But yet 'twas melancholy state Received him at the outer gate; For none were in the eastle then, But women, hows, or aced men.

^{*} The pit, or prison vault. See Note.

With eyes scarce dried, the sorrowing dame, To welcome noble Marmion, came; Her son, a stripling twelve years old, Proffered the Baron's rein to hold : For each man, that could draw a sword, Had marched that morning with their lord, Earl Adam Hepburn,-he who died On Flodden, by his sovereign's side. Long may his Lady look in vain! She pe'er shall see his gallant train Come sweeping back through Crichte

Dean. 'Twas a brave race, before the name

Of hated Rothwell stained their fame. And here two days did Marmion rest,

Attended as the king's own guest,-Such the command of royal James Who marshalled then his land's array, Upon the Borough-moor that lay. Perchance he would not foeman's eye Upon his gathering host should pry, To march against the English land. Here while they dwelt, did Lindesay's wit Oft cheer the Baron's moodler fit : And, in his turn, he knew to prize Lord Marmion's powerful mind, and wise .-Trained in the lore of Rome, and Groece, And policies of war and peace,

With every rite that honour claims,

XIV.

112

It chanced, as fell the second night, That on the battlements they walked, And, by the slowly fading light, Of varying topics talked ;

And, unaware, the Herald-bard

Said Marmion might his toil have spared.

In travelling so far; For that a messenger from heaven In vain to James had counsel given Against the English war:

And, closer questioned, thus he told A tale, which chronicles of old In Scottish story have enrolled :--

Sir Babit Mindesan's Calc. Of all the palaces so fair, Built for the royal dwelling. In Scotland, for beyond compare Linlithgow is excelling ; And in its park, in jovial June, How sweet the merry linnet's tune,

How blithe the blackbird's lay! The wild buck bells " from ferny brake, The coot dives merry on the lake, The saddest heart might pleasure take

To see all nature gay, But June is to our Sovereign dear The heaviest month in all the year :

a An ancient word for the cry of over. See Note.

Too well his cause of grief you know,— June saw his father's overthrow. Wee to the traitors, who could bring The princely boy against his King! Still in his conscience burns the sting. In offices as strict as Lent, King James's June is ever seent.

35775

"When last this ruthful month was come, And in Linlithgow's holy dome The King, as wont, was praying;

While for his royal father's soul
The chaunters sung, the bells did toll,
The Bishop mass was saying—

For now the year brought round again
The day the luckless king was slain—

In Katharine's aisle the monarch knelt,
With sackcloth-shirt, and iron belt,
And eyes with sorrow streaming:

And eyes with sorrow streaming;
Around him, in their stalls of state,
The Thistle's Knight-Companions sate,
Their banners o'er them beaming.
I too was there, and, sooth to tell,
Bedeafened with the jangling knell,

Bedeafened with the jangling knell, Was watching where the sunbeams fell, Through the stained cosement gleaming; But, while I marked what next befel, It seemed as I were dreaming.

Stepped from the crowd a glostly wight, In azure gown, with cincture white; 114

His forehead bald, his head was bare, Down hung at length his yellow hair .-Now, mock me not, when, good my Lord, I pledge to you my knightly word, That, when I saw his placid grace, His simple majesty of face, His solemn bearing, and his pace

So stately gliding on,-Seemed to me ne'er did limner paint Bo just an image of the Saint,

Who propped the Virgin in her faint .-The loved Apostle John.

" He stepped before the Monarch's chair,

And stood with rustic clainness there, And little reverence made: Nor head, nor body, bowed nor bent,

But on the desk his arm he leant. And words like these he said. In a low voice,-but never tone [bone:-So thrilled through vein, and nerve, and

' My mother sent me from afar, Bir King, to warn thee not to war,-

Woe waits on thine array; If war thou wilt, of woman fair, Her witching wiles and wanton snare,

James Stuart, doubly warned, beware: God keep thee as he may !'-The wondering Monarch seemed to seek

For answer and found none:

And when he raised his head to speak, The monitor was gone.

The Marshal and myself had cast To stop him as he outward past;

But, lighter than the whirlwind's blast, He vanished from our eyes,

Like sunbeam on the billow cast, That glances but, and dies."—

XVIII

While Lindesay told this marvel strange, The twilight was so pale, He marked not Marmion's colour change,

While listening to the tale: But, after a suspended pause,

The Baron spoke:—" Of Nature's laws So strong I held the force,

So strong I held the force, That never super-human cause Could e'er controul their course:

Counce or controval their course; And, three days since, had judged your aim Was but to make your guest your game. But I have seen, since past the Tweed, What much has changed my sceptic creed, And made me credit aught."—He staid, And seemed to wish his words unsaid:

and seemed to wish his words unsaid:
But, by that strong emotion pressed,
Which prompts us to unload our breast,
Even when discovery's pain,

To Lindesay did at length unfold The tale his village host had told At Gifford, to his traip 116

Nought of the Palmer says he there. And nought of Constance, or of Clare: The thoughts, which broke his sleep, he To mention but as feverish dreams. I seems

XIX.

"In vain," said he, "to rest I spread My burning limbs, and couched my head: Fantastic thoughts returned: And, by their wild dominion led, My heart within me burned. So sore was the delirious goad, I took my steed, and forth I rode, And, as the moon shone bright and cold. Soon reached the camp upon the wold. The southern entrance I passed through, And halted, and my bugle blew-Methought an answer met my ear,-Yet was the blast so low and drear, So hollow, and so faintly blown.

Thus judging, for a little space I listened, ere I left the place; But scarce could trust my eyes, Nor yet can think they served me true, When sudden in the ring I view, In form distinct of shape and hue, A mounted champion rise .-I've fought, Lord-Lion, many a day,

It might be echo of my own.

In single fight, and mixt affray. And ever, I myself may say,

Have borne me as a knight;

But when this unexpected rec Seemed starting from the sulph below.-I care not though the truth I show .--

I trembled with affright; And as I placed in rest my spear,

My hand so shook for very fear. I scarce could couch it right.

"Why need my tongue the issue tell?

We ran our course,-my charger fell ;---What could he 'gainst the shock of hell?---I rolled upon the plain.

High o'er my head, with threatening hand,

The spectre shook his naked brand,---Yet did the worst remain: My dazzled eyes I upward cast,---

Not opening hell itself could blast Their sight, like what I saw!

Full on his face the moonbeam strook,-A face could never be mistook! I knew the stern vindictive look

And held my breath for awe. I saw the face of one who, fled To foreign climes, has long been dead .-

I well believe the last: For ne'er, from visor raised, did stare A human warrior, with a glaro

So grimly and so ghast.

Thrice o'er my head he shook the blade; But when to good Saint George I prayed, (The first time e'er I asked his aid,)

He plunged it in the sheath;
And, on his courser mounting light,
He seemed to vanish from my sight:

And, on his courser mounting light, He seemed to vanish from my sight: The moon-beam drooped, and deepest night

The moon-seam drooped, and deepest no Sunk down upon the heath.—
'Twere long to tell what cause I have To know his face, that met me there,

To know his face, that met me there Called by his hatred from the grave, To cumher upper air:

Dead or alive, good cause had he To be my mortal enemy."—

XXII.
Marvelled Sir David of the Mount ,

Then, learned in story, 'gan recoun Such chance had hap'd of old, When one, near Norham, there did fight A spectre fell, of fiendish might, In likeness of a Scottish knight, With Brian Bulmer bold.

And trained him nigh to disallow The aid of his haptismal vow.

"And such a phantom, too, 'tis said, With Highland hroad-sword, targe, and plaid, plaid,

And fingers red with gore,
Is seen in Rothlemurcus glade,
Or where the sable pine-trees shade

Dark Tomantoul, and Auchnaslald, Dromouchty, or Gienmore.* And yet, whate'er such legends say, Of warlike demon, ghost, or fay,

Of warlike demon, ghost, or fay, On mountain, moor, or plain,

On mountain, moor, or plain, Spotless in faith, in bosom told, True son of chivalry shout I hold

These midnight terrors vain; For seldom have such spirits power To harm, save in the evil, hour, When guilt we meditate within, Or harbour unrepented sin."— Lord Marmion turned him half aside, And twice to clear his voice he tried.

Then pressed Sir David's hand,— But nought, at length, in answer said;

And here their farther converse staid, Each ordering that his band Should bowne them with the rising day, To Scotland's compete take their way.

To Scotland's camp to take their way,— Such was the King's command. XXIII.

Early they took Dun-Edin's road, And I could trace each step they trode; Hill, brook, nor dell, nor rock, nor stone Lies on the path to me unknown. Much might it boast of storied lore; But, passing such digression o'er,

* See the traditions concerning Bulmer, and the spectre called Landeurg, or Bloody-hand, in a note on Canto III. Suffice it, that their route was laid Across the furzy hills of Braid. They passed the glen and scanty rill, And climbed the opposing bank, until They gained the top of Blackford Hill

XXIV.

Blackford! on whose uncultured breast, Among the broom, and thorn, and whin, A truant-boy, I sought 'i'e nest, Or listed, as I lay at rest, While rose, on breezes thin, The murmur of the city crowd,

And, from his steeple jangling loud, Saint Giles's mingling din. Now, from the summit to the plain, Waves all the hill with yellow grain; And o'er the landscape as I look, Nought do I see unchanged remain, Save the rude cliffs and chiming brook. To me they make a heavy moan, Of early friendships past and gone.

xxv.

But different far the change has been, Since Marmion, from the crown Of Blackford, saw that martial scene Upon the bent so brown: Thousand pavilions, white as snow, Spread all the Borough-moor below, Upland, and dale, and down:— A thousand did I say? I ween, Thousands on thousands there were see. That chequered all the heath between

The streamlet and the town : In crossing ranks extending far, Forming a camp irregular: Oft giving way, where still there stood That darkly huge did intervene, And tamed the glaring white with green : In these extended lines there lay

A martial kingdom's vast array.

XXVI.

For from Hebudes, dark with rain, To eastern Lodon's fertile plain, And from the southern Redswire edge, To farthest Rosse's rocky ledge: From west to east, from south to north. Scotland sent all her warriors forth. Marmion might hear the mingled hum Of myriads up the mountain come The horses' tramp, and tingling clank, Where chiefs reviewed their vassal rank, And chargers' shrilling neigh;

And see the shifting lines advance, While frequent flashed, from shield and lance, The sun's reflected ray.

XXVII.

Thin curling in the morning air. The wreaths of failing smoke declare, To embers now the brands decayed,
Where the night-watch their fires had made,
They saw, slow rolling on the plain,
Full many a baggage-cart and wain,
Full many a baggage-cart and wain,
And dire artillery's clumps quay,
By sluggish oxen tugged to war;
And there were Borthwick's Sisters Seven,
And culverins which France had given.
Hammend effit the gums residently the properties of the pro

The conqueror's spoil on Flodden plain. XXVIII. Nor marked they less, where in the air

A thousand streamers flaunted fair; Various in shape, device, and hue, Green, sanguine, purple, red, and blue, Broad, narrow, swallow-tailed, and square, Scroll, pennon, pensil, bandrol,† there O'er the pavilions flew.

Highest, and midmost, was descried
The royal banner, floating wide;
The staff, a pine-tree strong and straight.

Pitched deeply in a massive stone, Which still in memory is shown, Yet bent beneath the standard's weight, Whene'er the western wind unrolled, With toil, the huge and cumbrous fold,

Seven culverins so called, cast by one Borthwick. + Each of these feudal ensigns intimated the different rank of those entitled to display them.

And gave to view the dazzling field, Where, in proud Scotland's royal shield, The ruddy Lion ramped in gold.

XXIX

Lord Marmion viewed the landscape bright,-He viewed it with a chief's delight .--Until within him burned his heart, And lightning from his eye did part. As on the battle-day;

Such glance did falcon never dart. When stooping on his prev. "Oh! well, Lord-Lion, hast thou said,

Thy King from warfare to dissuade Were but a vain essay : For, by Saint George, were that host mine. Not power infernal, nor divine,

Should once to peace my soul incline, Till I had dimmed their armour's shine In glorious battle fray !"-- Answered the hard, of milder mood : " Fair is the sight .- and yet 'twere good,

That kings would think withal. When peace and wealth their land has blessed 'Tis better to sit still at rest,

Than rise, perchance to fall."-

Still on the spot Lord Marmion staved. For fairer scene he ne'er surveyed. When sated with the martial show That peopled all the plain below.

The wandering eye could o'er it go, And mark the distant city glow With gloomy splendour red; For on the smoke-wreaths, huge and slow,

For on the smoke-wreaths, huge and all That round her sable turrets flow, The morning beams were shed.

And tinged them with a lustre proud, Like that which streaks a thunder-cloud. Such dusky grandeur clothed the height,

Where the huge castle holds its state And all the steep slope down,

And all the steep slope down, Whose ridgy back heaves to the sky, Piled deep and massy, close and high,

Piled deep and massy, close and high. Mine own romantic town! But northward far, with purer blaze,

On Ochil mountains fell the rays, And as each heatby top they kissed, It gleamed a purple amethyst.

t gleamed a purple amethyst. Yonder the shores of Fife you saw Here Preston-Bay and Berwick-Law;

And, broad between them rolled, The gallant Firth the eye might note, Whose islands on its bosom float, Like emeralds chased in gold.

Fitz-Eustace' heart felt closely pent;
As if to give his rapture vent,
The spur he to his charger lent,

And raised his bridle-hand,
And, making demi-volte in air, [dare,
Cried, "Where's the coward that would not
To fight for such a land!"

The Lindesay smiled his joy to see;

Thus while they looked, a flourish proud, Where mingled trump, and clarion loud, And fife, and kettle-drum, And sackbut deep, and psaltery, And war-pipe with discordant cry,

And cymbal clattering to the sky, Making wild music bold and high. Did up the mountain come; The whilst the bells, with distant chime, Merrily tolled the hour of prime.

And thus the Lindesay spoke ; "Thus clamour still the war-notes when The King to mass his way has ta'en, Or to St. Catherine's of Sienne.

Or chanel of Saint Roccue To you they speak of martial fame; But me remind of peaceful game, When blither was their cheer. Thrilling in Falkland-woods the air,

In signal none his steed should spare, But strive which foremost might repair To the downfall of the door.

"Nor less." he said .-- " when looking forth, I view von Empress of the North Sit on her hilly throne:

Her palace's imperial bowers, Her castle, proof to hostile powers, Her stately halls, and holy towers-Nor less." he said, "I moan.

Nor less," he said, "I mean, To think what wee mischance may bring, And how these merry hells may ring The death-dirge of our gallant King;

The death-dirge of our gallant I Or, with their larum, call The burglers forth to watch an

The burghers forth to watch and ward,
'Gainst southern sack and fires to guard
Dun-Edin's leaguered wall.—

But not, for my presaging thought, Dream conquest sure, or cheaply bought! Lord Marmion, I say nay:—

God is the guider of the field, He breaks the champion's spear and shield,— But thou thyself shalt say.

When joins you host in deadly stowie, That England's dames must weep in bower,

Her monks the death-mass sing; For never saw'st thou such a power Led on hy such a King."—

And now, down winding to the plain,
The barriers of the camp they gain,
And there they made a stay.—
There stays the Minstrel, till be fling

His hand o'er every Border string, And fit his harp the pomp to sing, OI Scotland's ancient Court and King.

Scotland's ancient Court and King In the succeeding lay.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO

To GEORGE ELLIS, Esq.

Edinburgh. WHEN dark December glooms the day, And takes our antumn joys away; When short and scant the sunbeam throws, Upon the weary waste of snows, A cold and profitless regard. Like patron on a needy bard; When sylvan occupation's done. And o'er the chimney rests the gun, And hang, in idle trophy, near, The game-pouch, fishing-rod, and spear ; When wiry terrier, rough and grim, And greyhound with his length of limb. And pointer, now employed no more. Cumber our parlour's narrow floor : When in his stall the impatient steed Is long condemned to rest and feed; When from our snow-encircled home. Scarce cares the hardiest step to roam, Since path is none, save that to bring The needful water from the spring; When wrinkled news-page, thrice con'd o'er, Beguiles the dreary hour no more, And darkling politician crossed, Invelohs against the lingering post

And answering house-wife sore complains Of carriers' snow-impeded wains; When such the country-cheer, I come, Well pleased, to seek our city home; For converse, and for books, to change The Forest's melancholy range, And welcome, with renewed delight, The busy day, and social night.

Not here need my desponding rhyme Lament the rayages of time. As erst by Newark's riven towers. And Ettricke stripped of forest bowers." True,-Calcdonia's Queen is changed, Since on her dusky summit ranged, Within its steepy limits pent. By bulwark, line, and battlement, And flanking towers, and laky flood, Guarded and carrisoned she stood. Denving entrance or resort, Save at each tall embattled port : Above whose arch, suspended, hung Portcullis spiked with iron prong. That ICA is gor a,—but not so long, Since / Jr. M., and opening late, Jealous revo. ...d the studded gate ; Whose task, from eve to morning tide, A wicket churlishly supplied, Stern then, and steel-girt was thy brow, Dun-Edin! O, how altered now,

* See Introduction to Canto II.

When safe amid thy mountain court Thou sitt'st, like Empress at her sport. And liberal, unconfined, and free, For thy dark cloud, with umbered lower, That hung o'er cliff, and lake, and tower, Thon gloam'st against the western ray Ten thousand lines of brighter day.

Not she, the championess of old, In Spenser's magic tale enrolled .-She for the charmed spear renowned,

Which forced each knight to kiss the ground -

Not she more changed, when, placed at rest, What time she was Malbecco's guest, * She gave to flow her maiden vest : When from the corslet's grasp relieved, Free to the sight her bosom heaved; Sweet was her blue eye's modest smile, Erst hidden by the aventayle; And down her shoulders graceful rolled Her locks profuse of paly gold, They who whilome, in midnight fight, Had marvelled at her matchless might, No less her maiden charms approved, But looking liked, and liking loved.

^{*} See "The Pairy Queen," Book III. Canto IX. + "For every one her liked, and every one her

The sight could jaulous pangs begulle, And charm Malbeco's cares wille: And he, the wandering Squire of Dames, Forgot his Columbella's claims, And passion, erst unknown, could gain The breast of bulls. Sir Satyrane; Nor durst light Paridel advance, Bold as he was, a looser glance,—She charmed, at once, and tamed the heart, Incomparable Britimasto'

So thou, fair City! disarrayed Of battled wall, and rampart's aid, As stately seem'st, but lovelier far Than in that panoply of war. Nor deem that from thy fenceless throne Strength and security are flown: Still, as of vore. Queen of the North! Still canst thou send thy children forth, Ne'er readier at alarm-bell's call Thy burghers rose to man thy wall. Than now, in danger, shall be thine, Thy dauntless voluntary line; For fosse and turret proud to stand, Their breasts the bulwarks of the land. Thy thousands, trained to martial toil. Full red would stain their native soil. Ere from thy mural crown there fell The slightest knosp, or pinnacle, And if it come .- as come it may, Dun-Edin! that eventful day,- Renowned for hospitable deed. That virtue much with heaven may plead. In patriarchal times whose care Descending angels deigned to share; That claim may wrestle blessings down On those who fight for the Good Town, Destined in every age to bo Refuge of injured royalty : Since first, when conquering York arose, To Henry meek she gave repose, Till late, with wonder grief, and awe. Great Rourhon's relicks sad she saw.

Truce to these thoughts !-- for, as they rise, How gladly I avert mine eyes, Bodings, or true or false, to change, For Fiction's fair romantic range, That hovers 'twixt the day and night : Dazzling alternately and dim, Her wavering lamp I'd rather trim, Knights, squires, and lovely dames to see, Creation of my fantasy. Than gaze abroad on recky fen. And make of mists invading men .---Who loves not more the night of June Than dull December's gloomy noon? The moonlight than the fog of frost? And can we say, which cheats the most?

But who shall teach my harp to gain A sound of the romantic strain.

Whose Anglo-Norman tones whilere Could win the Second Henry's ear, Famed Beauclerc called, for that he loved The minstrel and his lay approved? Who shall these lingering notes redeem. Decaying on Oblivion's stream; Such notes as from the Breton tongue Marie translated. Blondel sung?.... O! horn Time's ravage to repair, And make the dying Muse thy care ; Who, when his scythe her hoary foe Was poising for the final blow, The weapon from his hand could wring, And break his glass, and shear his wing, And bid, reviving in his strain. The gentle poet live again : Thou, who canst give to lightest lay An unpedantic moral gay, Nor less the dullest theme bid flit. On wings of unexpected wit : In letters as in life approved, Example honoured, and beloved,-Dear Ellis! to the bard impart A lesson of thy magic art. To win at once the head and heart,-At once to charm, instruct, and mend, My guide, my pattern, and my friend !

Such minstrel lesson to bestow Be long thy pleasing task,—but, O! No more by thy example teach What few can practise, all can preach; With even patience to endure Lingering disease, and painful cure, And boast affliction's pangs subdued By mild and manly fortitude. Bnough, the lesson has been given: Porbid the repetition, Heaven!

Come, listen, then! for thou hast known, And loved, the Minsterl's varying tone; a Mand loved, the Minsterl's varying tone; a Washes and Minsterl's varying tone; and the Washes a will measure, radie and held, Till Windows's cales, and Assort plain, Wilth wonder beared the northern strain. Come, listen — lodd in thy spilanse, Trans Bart shall secror polarized laws; a law of the strain of the

CANTO FIFTH.

THE COURT.

THE train has left the hills of Braid; The barrier guard have open made,

(So Lindesay bade,) the palisade. That closed the tented ground, Their men the warders backward drew, And carried pikes as they rode through, Into its ample bound.

Fast ran the Scottish warriors there, Upon the Southern band to stare; And envy with their wonder rose, To see such well-appointed foes; Such length of shafts, such mighty bows, So huge, that many simply thought, But for a vaunt such weapons wrought; And little deemed their force to feel, Through links of mail, and plates of steel, When, rattling upon Flodden vale, The cloth-yard arrows flew like hail.

Nor less did Marmion's skilful view Glance every line and squadron through : And much he marvelled one small land Could marshal forth such various band :

Heavily sheathed in mail and plate, Like iron towers for strength and weight, On Flemish steeds of bone and height, With battle-axe and spear.

Young knights and squires, a lighter train, Practised their chargers on the plain. By aid of leg, of hand, and rein, Each warlike feat to shew:

To pass, to wheel, the croupe to gain, And high curvett, that not in vain The sword-sway might descend amain

On forman's casque below. He saw the hardy burghers there

He saw the hardy burghers there March armed, on foot, with faces barc, For visor they wore none, Nor waving plume, nor crest of knight;

Nor waving plume, nor crest of knight; But burnished were their corslets bright, Their brigantines, and gorgets light, Like very silver shone.

Long pikes they had for standing fight, Two-handed swords they wore, And many wielded mace of weight,

And many wielded mace of weight And bucklers bright they bore.

III.

On foot the yeoman too, but dressed In his steel jack, a swartby vest, With iron quilted well;

Each at his back, (a slender store,)
His forty days' provision bore,
As feudal statutes tell.

As remain statutes cell.

As arms were halbard, axe, or spear,
A cross-bow there, a hagbut here,
A dagger-knife, and brand.—.

Sober he seemed, and sad of cheer,
As loth to leave his cottage dear,
And march to foreign strand;
Or musing, who would guide his steer,

To till the fallow land,

Yet deem not in his thoughtful eve Did aught of dastard terror lie :-

More dreadful far his ire, Than theirs, who, scorning danger's name. In eager mood to battle came,

Their valour like light straw on flams, A fierce but fading fire.

IV.

Not so the Borderer : -- bred to war, He knew the battle's din afar. And joyed to hear it swell. His peaceful day was slothful ease:

Nor harp, nor pipe, his ear could please, Like the loud slogan vell.

On active steed, with lance and blade, The light-armed pricker plied his trade .-Let nobles fight for fame :

Let vassals follow where they lead, Burghers, to guard their townships, bleed. But war's the Borderers' game.

Their gain, their glory, their delight, To sleep the day, maraud the night, O'er mountain, moss, and moor; Joyful to fight they took their way, Scarce caring who might win the day,

Their booty was secure. These, as Lord Marmion's train passed by, Looked on at first with careless eve. Nor marvelled aught, well taught to know

The form and force of English bow.

But when they saw the Lord arrayed In splendid arms, and rich brocade, Each Borderer to his kinsman said,—

"Hist, Ringan! seest thou there! [ride? Canst guess which road they'll homeward O! could we but on Border side,

By Eusedale glen, or Liddell's tide, Beset a prize so fair!

That fangless Lion, too, their guide,
Might chance to lose his glistering hide;
Brown Maudlin, of that doublet pied,
Could make a kirtle rare."

outd make a kirtle rare.

Next Marmion marked the Celtic race, Of different language, form, and face, A various race of man:

Just then the chiefs their tribes arrayed, And wild and garish semblance made, The checquered trews, and belted plaid, And varying notes the war-pipes brayed To every varying clan:

Wild through their red or sable hair Looked out their eyes, with savage stare,

On Marmion as he passed; Their legs above the knee were bare; Their frame was sinewy, short, and spare,

And hardened to the blast; Of taller race, the chiefs they own Were by the eagle's plumage known. The hunted red-deer's undressed hide Their hairy buskins well supplied:

The graceful bonnet decked their head; Back from their shoulders hung the plaid; A dagger proved for edge and strength,

And quivers, bows, and shafts,-but, O

Short was the shaft, and weak the bow, To that which England bore.

The Isles-men carried at their backs The ancient Danish battle-axe. They raised a wild and wondering cry, As with his guide rode Marmion by. Loud were their clamouring tongues, as when The clanging sea-fowl leave the fen. And, with their cries discordant mixed. Grumbled and velled the pipes betwixt.

Thus through the Scottish camp they passed. And reached the City gate at last, Where all around, a wakeful guard, Armed burghers kept their watch and ward, Well had they cause of jealous fear, When lay encamped, in field so near, The Borderer and the Mountaineer. As'through the bustling streets they go. All was alive with martial shew; At every turn, with dinning clang, The armourer's anvil clashed and rang; Or toiled the swarthy smith, to wheel The bar that arms the charger's heel;

Or axe, or faulchion, to the side Of jarring grind-stone was applied. Page, groom, and squire, with hurrying pace, Through street, and lane, and marketplace.

Bore lance, or casque, or sword: While burghers, with important face, Described each new-come lord, Discussed his lineage, told his name.

His following," and his warlike fame .---

The Lion led to lodging meet,
Which high o'erlooked the crowded street;
There must the Baron rest, Till past the hour of vesper tide,

And then to Holy-Rood must ride,-Such was the King's behest.

Meanwhile the Lion's care assigns A banquet rich, and costly wines,

To Marmion and his train. And when the appointed hour succeeds, The Baron dons his peaceful weeds. And following Lindesay as he leads,

The palace-halls they gain.

Old Holy-Rood rung merrily, That night, with wassal, mirth, and glee; King James within her princely bower Feasted the chiefs of Scotland's power. Summoned to spend the parting hour: 6 Fellenius - Paulal Batainese

For he had charged, that his array Should southward march by break of day. Well loved that splendid monarch aye

The banquet and the song,

By day the tourney, and by night The merry dance, traced fast and light,

The merry dance, traced fast and light,
The masquers quaint, the pageant bright,
The revel loud and long.

This feast outshone his banquets past; It was his blithest,—and his last.

It was his blithest,—and his last.

The dazzling lamps, from gallery gay,
Cast on the court a dancing ray;

Cast on the court a dancing ray; Here to the harp did minstrels sing; There ladies touched a softer string; With long-cared cap, and motley vest, The licensed fool retailed his jest; His magic tricks the juggler piled;

His magic tricks the juggler plied; At dice and draughts the gallants vied; While some, in close recess apart,

While some, in close recess apart, Courted the ladies of their heart, Nor courted them in vain:

For often in the parting hour, Victorious love asserts his power

O'er coldness and disdain; And flinty is her heart, can view To battle march a lover true,—

Can hear, perchance, his last adieu, Nor own her share of pain.

Through this mixed crowd of glee and game, The King to greet Lord Marmion came, While, reverent, all made room.

wante, reverency and made room.

An easy task it was, I trow, King James's manly form to know, Although, his courtesy to shew, He doffed, to Marmion bending low, His broidered cap and plume. For royal were his garb and mien. His cloak, of crimson velvet piled, Trimmed with the fur of martin wild: His yest, of changeful satin sheen, The dazzled eye beguiled: His gorgeous collar hung adown, Wrought with the badge of Scotland's crown, The thistle brave, of old renown: His trusty blade, Toledo right, Descended from a baldric bright: White were his buskins, on the heel His spurs inlaid of gold and steel; His bonnet, all of crimson fair. Was buttoned with a ruby rare:

And Marmion deemed he ne'er had seen

IX.

The Monarch's form was middle size; For feat of strength, or exercise, Shaped in proportion fair; And hazel was his eagle eye, And auburn of the darkest dye, His short curied beard and hair. Light was his footstep in the dance, And firm his stirrup in the lists;

And, oh! he had that merry glance, That seldom lady's heart resists. Lightly from fair to fair he flew, And loved to plead, lament, and sue :-Suit lightly won, and short-lived pain! For monarchs seldom sigh in vain. I said be joyed in banquet-bower: But, mid his mirth, 'twas often strange, How suddenly his cheer would change. His look o'ercast and lower. If, in a sudden turn, he felt The pressure of his iron helt. That bound his breast in penance-pain, In memory of his father slain. Even so 'twas strange how, evermore, Soon as the passing pang was o'er, Forward he rushed, with double glee, Into the stream of revelry: Thus, dim-seen object of affright Startles the courser in his flight. And half he halts, half springs aside :

X.
O'er James's heart, the courtiers say,
Sir Hugh the Heron's wife held sway:

To Scotland's court she came, To be a hostage for her lord, Who Cessford's gallant heart had gored,

And, straining on the tightened rein, Scours doubly swift o'er hill and plain, And with the King to make accord,
Had sent his lovely dame.
Nor to that lady free alone

Nor to that lady free alone Did the gay King allegiance own; For the fair Queen of France

For the fair Queen of France Sent him a Turquois ring, and glove, And charged him, as her knight and love,

For her to break a lance; And strike three strokes with Scottish hrand, And march three miles on southern land,

And march three miles on southern land, And bid the banners of his band In English hreezes dance. And thus, for France's Queen, he drest

His manly limbs in malled vest; And thus admitted English fair, His inmost counsels still to share: And thus, for both he madly planned

The ruin of himself and land.

And yet, the sooth to tell,

Nor England's fair, nor France's Queen,

Were worth one pearl-drop, bright sheen,
From Margaret's eyes that fell,—

His own Queen Margaret, who in Lithgow bower, All lonely sat, and wept the weary hour.

The queen sits lone in Lithgow p'le,
And weeps the weary day,
The war against her native soil,
Her monarch's risk in listile bre il.

And in gay Holy-Rood the while Dame Horon rises with a smile Upon the harp to play. Fair was her rounded arm, as o'er The strings her fingers flew;

The strings her funded arm, as o'er
The strings her fingers fiew;
And as she touched, and tuned them all,
Ever her bosom's rise and fall
Was plainer given to view;

Was plainer given to John with the first program of the first program of the first program of the first program of the first plainer of

LOCHINVAR.

HADY Meron's Song.

O, young Lochinvar is come out of the west,
Through all the wide Border his steed was the best:

And save his good broad-sword, he weapons had none,

He rode all unarmed, and he rode all alone.

So faithful in love, and so dauntless in war, There never was knight like the young Lochinvar.

He staid not for brake, and he stopped not for stone

He swam the Eske river where ford there was none:

But, ere he alighted at Netherby gate.

The bride had consented, the gallant came

For a largard in love, and a dastard in war, Was to wed the fair Ellen of brave Lochinvar,

So boldly he entered the Netherby Hall, Among bride's-men, and kinsmen, and brothers, and all :

Then spoke the bride's father, his hand on his sword

(For the poor craven bridegroom said never

"O come ye in peace here, or come ye in war, Or to dance at our bridal, young Lord

"I long woo'd your daughter, my suit you-

Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its

And now I am come, with this lost love of mine.

To lead but one measure, drink one cup of wine.

There are maidens in Scotland more lovely hy far. That would gladly be bride to the young

Lochinvar."

The bride kissed the goblet: the knight took it up. He quaffed off the wine, and he threw down the cup.

She looked down to blush, and she looked up to sigh With a smile on her lips, and a tear in her eye.

He took her soft hand, ere her mother could bar.-"Now tread we a measure!" said young

So stately his form, and so lovely her face,

That never a hall such a galliard did grace : While her mother did fret, and her father did fume. And the bridegroom stood dangling his bonnet and plume ; And the bride-maidens whispered, "'Twere better by far To have matched our fair cousin with young

One touch to bee hand, and one word in her-

When they compled the bull-look and the observer stood near a

So light to the croupe the fair lady he swung, So light to the saddle before her he sprung ! "She is won! we are gone over hank bush.

and seaur : They'll have fleet steeds that follow," quoth

There was mounting 'mong Græmes of the Netherby clan :

Forsters, Fenwicks, and Musgraves, they rode and they ran :

There was racing, and chasing, on Campbie

But the lost bride of Netherby ne'er did they

So daring in love, and so dauntless in war, Have ye e'er heard of gallant like young Lochinvar ?

The Monarch o'er the syren hung. And beat the measure as she sume : And, pressing closer, and more near, He whispered praises in her car. In loud applause the courtiers vied :

Familiar was the look, and told,
Minimian and she were friends of old.
Thin in the least of the

XIV.

He paused, and led where Douglas stood, And with stern gwt pageant viewed: I mean that Douglas, sixth of yore, Who cornet of Angus bore, And, when his blood and heart were high, Did the third James in camp defy, And all his minions led to die "Do Laudiers" dreavy flat: "On Laudiers" dreavy flat: And Company of the Company of the Company of the Company of the Company of Architable Bell-the-Cat.

The same who left the dusky vale
Of Hermitage in Liddisdale

Its dungeons, and its towers,
Where Bothwell's turrets brave the air,
And Bothwell bank is blooming fair,
To flx his princely bowers.
Though now, in age, he had laid down
His armoun for the recently deep

His armour for the peaceful gown,
And for a staff his brand,
Yet often would flash forth the fire,
That could, in youth a monarch's is

Yet often would flash forth the fire,
That could, in youth, a monarch's ire
And minion's pride withstand;
And even that day, at council board,
Unapt to sooth his sovereign's mood,
Against the war had Ansus stood.

And chafed his royal Lord.

XV. His giant-form, like ruined tower,

Though fallen its muscles' brawny vaunt, Huge-boned, and tall, and grim, and gaunt, Seemed o'er the gaudy soene to lower: His locks and beard in silver grew; His eye-brows lept their sable hue. Near Douglas when the Monarch stood, His bitter speech he thus pursued:— "Acrd Marrinon, since these letters say."

That in the North you needs must stay, While slightest hopes of peace remain, Uncourteous speech it were, and stern, To say—Return to Lindisfarn, Until my herald come again.—

Then rest you in Tantalion Hold; Your host shall be the Douglas bold,— A chief unlike his sires of old. He wears their motto on his blade, Their blazon o'er his towers displayed : Yet loves his sovereign to oppose, More than to face his country's foes. And, I bethink me, by Saint Stephen, But e'en this morn to me was given

A prize, the first fruits of the war, Ta'en by a galley from Dunbar, A beyy of the maids of heaven.

Under your guard these holy maids Shall safe return to cloister shades. And, while they at Tantallon stay, Requiem for Cochran's soul may say."---And, with the slaughtered favourite's name, Across the Monarch's brow there came A cloud of ire, remorse, and shame,

In answer nought could Angus speak : His proud heart swelled well nigh to break : He turned aside, and down his cheek A burning tear there stole.

His hand the monarch sudden took, That sight his kind heart could not brook : "Now by the Renon's soul

Angus, my hasty speech forgive ! For sure as doth his spirit live, As he said of the Douglas old, I well may say of you .-

That never king did subject hold.

In speech more free, in war more bold, More tender, and more true :* Forgive me. Douglas, once again."-And, while the King his hand did strain, The old man's tears fell down like rain. To seize the moment Marmion tried And whispered to the King aside :-"Oh! let such tears unwonted plead For respite short from dubious deed! A child will weep at bramble's smart, A maid to see her sparrow part, A stripling for a woman's heart : But woe awaits a country, when She sees the tears of bearded men. Then, oh! what omen, dark and high, When Douglas wets his manly eye!"-

XVII. Displeased was James, that stranger viewed

And tampered with his changing mood.
"Laugh those that can, weep those that may,"
Thus did the fiery Monarch say.

"Southward I mared by break of day; And if within Tantallon strong, The good Lord Marmion tarries long, Perchange our meeting next may fall."

> * O Dowglas! Dowglas! Tendir and trew. The Houlate.

The haughty Marmion felt the taunt, And answered, grave, the royal vaunt : " Much honoured were my humble home, If in its halls King James should come; Rut Nottingham has archers good. And Yorkshire men are stern of mood; Northumbrian prickers wild and rude. On Derby Hills the paths are steep : In Ouse and Type the fords are deep; And many a banner will be torn, And many a knight to earth be borne, And many a sheaf of arrows spent, Ere Scotland's King shall cross the Trent: Yet pause, brave prince, while yet you may."-The Monarch lightly turned away. And to his nobles loud did call,-"Lords, to the dance .- a hall ! a hall !" Himself his cloak and sword flung by, And led Dame Heron gallantly : Rung out-" Blue Bonnets o'er the Border."

Eave we these revels now, to tell
What to Saint Hilda's madds befel,
Whose galley, as they sailed again
To Whitby, by a Soot was ta'en.
Now at Dun-Edin did they bide,
Till James should of their fate decide;

* The ancient cry to make room for a dance, or pageant.

And soon, by his command, Were gently summoned to prepare To journey under Marmion's care, As escort honoured, safe, and fair, Again to English land.

The Abbess told her chaplet o'er, Nor knew which Saint she should implice: For when she thought of Constance, sore

She feared Lord Marmion's mood.

And judge what Clara must have felt!

The sword, that hung in Marmion's belt, Had drunk De Wilton's blood. Unwittingly, King James had given, As guard to Whitby's shades.

As guard to Whitby's shades,
The man most dreaded under heaven
By these defenceless maids;
Yet what petition could avail,
Or who would listen to the tale

Of woman, prisoner and nun, Mid bustle of a war begun? They deemed it hopeless to avoid The convoy of their dangerous guide.

Their lodging, so the King assigned, To Marmion's, as their guardian, joined And thus it foll, that, passing nigh, The Palmer caught the Abbess' eye, Who warned him by a scroll, She had a secret to reveal.

That much concerned the Church's weal, And health of sinners' soul; And with deep charge of secreey, She named a place to meet,

Within an open balcony,

That hung from dizzy pitch, and high, Above the stately street;

Above the stately street; To which, as common to each home,

At night they might in secret come.

XX.

At night in secret there they came.

The Palmer and the holy dame.

The meon among the clouds rode high,
And all the city hum was by.

nd all the city hum was by.

Upon the street, where late before

Did din of war and warriors roar,

You might have heard a pobble fall.

You might have heard a pebble fall,
A beetle hum, a cricket sing,
An owlet flap his boding wing

On Giles's steeple tall.

The antique buildings, climbing high,
Whose Gothic frontlets sought the sky.

Whose Gothic frontlets sought the sky,
Were here wrapt deep in shade;
There on their brows the moon-beam broke,
Through the faint wreaths of silvery smoke,

And on the casements played.

And other light was none to see,
Save torches gliding far.

Before some chieftain of degree, Who left the royal revelry To bowne him for the war.—

A solemn scene the Abbess chose; A solemn hour, her secret to disclose. "O, holy Palmer!" she began,-" For sure he must be sainted man. Whose blessed feet have trod the ground Where the Redeemer's tomb is found :-For his dear Church's sake, my tale Attend, nor deem of light avail, Though I must speak of worldly love,-How vain to those who wed above !-De Wilton and Lord Marmion woo'd Clara de Clare, of Gloster's blood : (Idle it were of Whitby's dame. To say of that same blood I came;) Lord Marmion said despiteously, And had made league with Martin Swart.* When he came here on Simpel's part : And only cowardice did restrain His rebel aid on Stokefield's plain,— And down he threw his glove :- the thing Was tried, as wont, before the King : Where frankly did De Wilton own. And that between them then there went For this he to his eastle sent ;

* A German general, who commanded the auxiliaries sent by the Ducheas of Burgundy with Lambert Simmel. He was defeated and killed at Stokefield.

But when his messenger returned, Junigs how De Witten's fary burned! Junigs how De Witten's fary burned! Letters that claimed tideopal aid. And proved King Henry's cause betrayed. His farm, thus Biglitod, in the died He streve to clear, by spear and shield;—To clear his farm in vain he strow. For wondrons are His ways above! For wondrons are His ways above! For wondrons are Thin ways above! The clear his farm of the history of the street of the s

XXII.

As recreant doomed to suffer law,
Repentant, owned in vain,
That, while he had the scrolls in care,
A stranger maiden, passing fair,
Had drenched him with a beverage rare;—
His words no faith could gain.

With Clare alone he oredence won, who, rather than wed Marmion, Did to Saint Hilda's shrine repair, To give our house her livings fair, And die a vestal votrees ther. The impulse from the earth was given, But bent her to the paths of heaven. A purer heart, a lovelier maid, Ne'es shelvered her in Whithy's shade. No, not since Saxon Edelfied;

Only one trace of earthly strain, That for her lover's loss

She cherishes a sorrow vain, And murmurs at the cross.— And then her heritage ;—it goes

Along the banks of Tame; Deep fields of grain the reaper mows, In meadows rich the helfer lows,

In meadows rich the helfer lows, The falconer, and huntsman, knows Its woodlands for the game.

Shame were it to Saint Hilda dear, And I, her humble vot'ress here, Should do a deadly sin.

Should do a deadly sin, Her temple spoiled before mine eyes, If this false Marmion such a prize

If this false Marmion such a prize By my consent should win: Yet hath our boisterous monarel

Yet hath our boisterous monarch sworn, That Clare shall from our house be torn And grievous cause have I to fear, Such mandate doth Lord Marmion bear.

xxIII

"Now, prisoner, helpless, and betrayed To evil power, I claim thine aid,

To holy shrine and grotto dim;
By every martyr's tortured limb;
By angel, saint, and scraphim,
And by the Church of God!

For mark :-- When Wilton was betrayed,

And with his squire forged letters laid, She was, alas! that sinful maid, By whom the deed was done,—

By whom the deed was done,—
O! shame and horror to be said!—

She was a perjured nun:

No clerk in all the land, like her,
Traced quaint and varying charge

Traced quaint and varying character.

Perchance you may a marvel deem,
That Marmion's paramour.

That Marmion's paramour, (For such vile thing she was,) should scheme

Her lover's nuptial hour,

But o'er him thus she hoped to gain, As privy to his honour's stain, Illimitable power:

For this she scoretly retained Each proof that might the plot reveal, Instructions with his hand and seal; And thus Saint Hilda deigned.

And thus Saint Hilda deigned,
Through sinner's perfidy impure,
Her house's glory to secure,
And Clare's immortal weal.

IV.

"Twere long, and needless, here to tell.
How to my hand these papers fell;
With me they must not stay.
Saint Hilda keep her Abbess true!
Why knows what outsiers he might do.

While Journeying by the way?--

I venturous leave thy calm domain. To travel or by land or main.

Deep penance may I pay!-Now, saintly Palmer, mark my prayer;

I give this packet to thy care. For thee to stop they will not dare;

And, O! with cautious speed, To Wolsey's hand the papers bring.

That he may shew them to the King; And, for thy well-earned meed,

Thou holy man, at Whitby's shrine A weekly mass shall still be thine, While priests can sing and read .-

What all'st thou?—Speak!"—For as he took The charge, a strong emotion shook

CANTO PIPTH - THE COURT.

His frame; and, ere reply, They heard a faint, yet shrilly tone, Like distant clarion feebly blown,

That on the breeze did die ;

And loud the Abbess shricked in fear, " Saint Withold save us !- What is here! Look at you City Cross

See on its battled tower appear Phantoms, that seutcheons seem to rear, And blazoned banners toss!"-

. Sur more is revert that monument. Wheney royal ediet mang,

And voice of Scotland's law was sent. In glorious trumpet clang. O! be his tomb as lead to lead, Upon its dull destroyer's head!— A minstrel's malison * is said.—) Then on its battlements they saw A vision, passing Nature's law,

Strange, wild, and dimly seen; Figures, that seemed to rise and die, Gibber and sign, advance and fly,

While nought confirmed could ear or eve Discern of sound or mien. Yet darkly did it seem, as there

Heralds and Pursuivants prepare. With trumpet sound, and blazon fair, A summons to proclaim: But indistinct the pageant proud,

As fancy forms of midnight cloud. When flings the moon upon her shroud It flits, expands, and shifts, till loud,

From midmost of the spectre crowd, This awful summons came :---

"Prince, prelate, potentate, and peer, Whose names I now shall call, Scottish, or foreigner, give ear! Subjects of him who sent me here,

* i. c. Curse.

CANTO FIFTH - THE COURT. - 161

At his tribunal to appear.

I summon one and all: I cite you by each deadly sin,

That e'er hath soiled your hearts within; I cite you, by each brutal lust,

That e'er defiled your earthly dust,— By wrath, by pride, by fear,

By each o'er-mastering passion's tone, By the dark gra/s, and dying groan!

When forty days are past and gone, I cite you, at your Monarch's throne, To answer and appear."—

To answer and appear."—
Then thundered forth a roll of names:—

Then thundered forth a roll of names!

The first was thine, unhappy James!

Then all thy pobles came:

Then all thy nobles came; Crawford, Glencairn, Montrose, Argyle, Ross, Bothwell, Forbes, Lennox, Lyle,—

Ross, Bothwell, Forbes, Lennox, Lyle, Why should I tell their separate style? Each chief of birth and fame,

Of Lowland, Highland, Border, Isle, Fore-doomed to Flodden's carnage pile, Was cited there by name;

And Marmion, Lord of Fontenaye, Of Lutterward, and Scrivelbaye, De Wilton, erst of Aberley.

The self-same thundering voice did say.—
But then another spoke:
"Thy fatal summons I deny,
And thine infernal lord defy,

And thine infernal lord defy,

Appealing me to Him on High,

Who burst the sinner's yoke."—

At that dread accent, with a scream-Parted the pageant like a dream,

The summoner was gone.

Prone on her face the Abbess fell,

And fast, and fast, her beads did tell; Her nuns came, startled by the Tell.

And found her there alone. She marked not, at the scene aghast, What time, or how, the Palmer passed,

XXVII. Shift we the scene,-The camp doth move,

Dun-Edin's streets are empty now, Save when, for weal of those they love, To pray the prayer, and vow the vow,

The tottering child, the anxious fair. The grey-haired sire, with pious care, To chapels and to shrines repair.-Where is the Palmer now? and where The Abbess, Marmion, and Clare?-Bold Douglas! to Tantallon fair They journey in thy charge:

Lord Marmion rode on his right hand, The Palmer still was with the band; Angus, like Lindesay, did command,

That none should roam at large.
But in that Palmer's altered mien A wondrous change might now be seen; Freely he snoke of war. Of marvels wrought by single hand.

When lifted for a native land:

And still looked high, as if he planned, Some desperate deed afar. His courser would he feed, and stroke, And, tucking up his sable frocke, Would first his metal bold provoke, Then soothe, or quell his pride, Old Hubert said, that never one

He saw, except Lord Marmion, A steed so fairly ride.

XXVIII. Some half-hour's march behind, there came, By Eustace governed fair, . A troop escorting Hilda's Dame, With all her nuns, and Clare,

No audience had Lord Marmion soughts Ever he feared to aggravate Clara de Clare's suspicions bates And safer 'twas, he thought,

To wait till, from the nuns removed. The influence of kinsmen loved,

And suit by Henry's self approved, Her slow consent had wrought. His was no flickering flame that dies Unless when fanned by looks and sighs. And lighted oft at lady's eyes; He longed to stretch his wide command

O'er luckless Clara's ample land -Besides, when Wilton with him vied. Although the pang of humbled pride The place of jealousy supplied, Yet conquest, by that meanness won He almost loathed to think upon, Led him, at times, to hate the cause.

Which made him burst through honour's laws.

If e'er he loved, 'twas her alone, Who died within that rault of stone

XXIX.

And now, when close at hand they saw North-Berwick's town, and lofty Law. Fitz-Eustace hade them nause a while. Before a venerable pile, Whose turrets viewed, afar, The lofty Bass, the Lambie Isle, The ocean's peace, or war.

At tolling of a bell, forth came The convent's venerable Dame, And prayed Saint Hilda's Abbess rest With her, a loved and honoured guest, Till Douglas should a bark prepare, To waft her back to Whithy fair. Glad was the Abbess, you may guess, And thanked the Scottish Prioress: And tedious were to tell, I ween, The courteous speech that passed between, O'erjoyed the nuns their palfreys leave; But when fair Clara did intend. Like them, from horse-back to descend, Fitz-Eustace said .- " I grieve.

Fair lady, grieve e'en from my heart,

Such gentle company to part .--Think not discourtesy, . But Lords' commands must be obeyed:

And Marmion and the Douglas said. That you must wend with me. Lord Marmion hath a letter broad.

Which to the Scottish Earl he shewed, Commanding, that, beneath his care, Without delay, you shall repair, To your good kinsman, Lord Fitz-Clare."—

XXX. The startled Abbess loud exclaimed;

But she, at whom the blow was aimed. Grew pale as death, and cold as lead .--She deemed she heard her death-doom read. "Cheer thee, my child !" the Abbess said, "They dare not tear thee from my hand. To ride alone with armed hand "-"Nay, holy mother, nay,"

Fitz-Eustace said, "the lovely Clare Will be in Lady Angus' care.

In Scotland while we stay: And, when we move, an easy ride Will bring us to the English side, Female attendance to provide Befitting Gloster's heir; Nor thinks, nor dreams, my noble lord, By slightest look, or act, or word, To harass Lady Clare.

Her faithful guardian he will be, Nor sue for slightest courtesy That e'en to stranger falls,

Till he shall place her, safe and free,
Within her Kinsman's halls. "—
He spoke, and bushed with earnest grace;
His fath was painted on his face,
And Clare's overs fear relieved.
The Lady Abbess Iond exclaimed
On Henry, and the Douglas blamed,
Entreated, threatened, grieved;
To marty, saint, and prophet prayed,

To martyr, saint, and prophet prayed, Against Lord Marmion inveighed, And called the Prioress to aid, To curse with candle, bell, and book,—Her head the grave Cistertian shook:
"The Douglas, and the King," she said,

Her head the grave Cistertian shook: "The Douglas, and the King," she said, "In their commanda will be obeyed; Grieve not, nor dream that harm can fall The malden in Tantalion hall."——

The Abbess, seeing strife was vain,

Assumed her wonted state again,

For much of state the had

Composed ber veil, and raised her head, And—"Bid," in solemn voice she said, "Thy master, bold and bad.

The records of bis house turn o'er,
And, when he shall there written see,
That one of his own ancestry

Drove the monks forth of Coventry, Bid him his fate explore! Prancing in pride of earthly trust.

His charger hurled him to the dust, And, by a base plebeian thrust, He died his band before,

God judge 'twixt Marmion and me; He is a chief of high degree,

And I a poor recluse : Yet oft, in holy writ, we see

Even such weak minister as me May the oppressor bruise: For thus, inspired, did Judith slay

The mighty in his sin.

And Jael thus, and Deborah,"-Here hasty Blount broke in :

"Fitz-Eustace, we must march our band a St Anton' fire thee! wilt thou stand All day, with bonnet in thy hand,

To hear the Lady preach? By this good light! if thus we stay, Lord Marmion, for our fond delay,

Will sharper sermon teach Come, d'on thy cap, and mount thy horse; The Dame must patience take perforce."

"Submit we then to force," said Clare; "But let this barbarous lord despair His purposed aim to win : Let him take living, land, and life;

But to be Marmion's wedded wife In me were deadly sin:

And if it be the king's decree.

That I must find no sanctuary,
Where even a homicide might come,
And safely rest his head,
Though at its open portals stood,
Thirsting to pour forth blood for blood,
The kinsmen of the dead;
Yet one asylum is my own,

The kinsmen of the dead;
Yet one asylum is my own,
Against the dreaded hour;
A low, a silent, and a lone,
Where kings have little power

One victim is before me there.—
Mother, your blessing, and in prayer
Remember your unhappy Clare!"—
Loud weeps the Abbess, and bestows
Kind blessings many a one;
Weeping and walling loud arose

Weeping and wailing loud arose
Round patient Clare, the clamorous woes
Of every simple nun.
His eyes the gentle Eustace dried,
And scarce rude Blount the sight could big

And scarce rude Blount the sight could bide.
Then took the squire her rein,
And gently led away her steed,
And, by each court ous word and deed,

To cheer her strove in vain.

XXXIII.

But scant three miles the band had rode,
When o'er a height they passed,
And, sudden, close before them shewed
His towers, Tantalion vast;
Broad, massive, high, and stretching far,
And held impremable in was

On a projecting rock they rose, And round three sides the ocean flows; The fourth did hattled walls inclose, And double mound and fosse,

By parrow draw-bridge, outworks strong. Through studded gates, an entrance long, To the main court they cross

It was a wide and stately square:

Around were lodgings, fit and fair. And towers of various form,

Which on the court projected far, And broke its lines quadrangular, Here was square keep, there turret high, Or pinnacle that sought the sky, Whence oft the Warder could descry

The eathering ocean-storm. Here did they rest,....The princely care

Of Douglas, why should I declare. Or say they met reception fair? Or why the tidings say,

Which, varying, to Tantallon came. By hurrying posts, or fleeter fame, With every varying day?

And, first, they heard King James had won Etall, and Wark, and Ford : and then

That Norham castle strong was ta'en. At that sore marvelled Marmion ;-And Douglas hoped his Monarch's hand Would soon subdue Northumberland: But whispered news there came.

That, while his host mactive lay, And melted by degrees away, King James was dallying off the day With Heron's wily dame .--

Such acts to chronicles I yield: Go seek them there, and see: Mine is a tale of Flodden Field.

And not a history .--At length they heard the Scottish host

On that high ridge had made their post,

Which frowns o'er Millfield Plain And that brave Surrey many a hand Had gathered in the southern land, And marched into Northumberland,

And camp at Wooler ta'en. Marmion, like charger in the stall, That hears without the trumpet call.

Began to chafe and swear :--" A sorry thing to hide my head In castle, like a fearful maid. When such a field is near !

Needs must I see this battle-day : Death to my fame, if such a fray Were fought, and Marmion away ! The Douglas, too, I wot not why,

Hath 'bated of his courtesy ; No longer in his halls I'll stay."-Then bade his band, they should array For march against the dawning day,

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO SIXTH.

TO RICHARD HEBER, Esq.

Mortoun, House, Christmas, HEAP on more wood !-- the wind is chill; But let it whistle as it will, We'll keep our Christmas merry still. Each age has deemed the new-born year The fittest time for festal cheer : Even heathen yet, the savage Dane At Iol more deep the mead did drain; High on the beach his galleys drew, And feasted all his nirate crew : Then in his low and pine-built hall, Where shields and axes decked the wall; They gorged upon the half-dressed steer : Caroused in seas of sable beer; While round, in brutal jest, were thrown The half-gnawed rib, and marrow-bone; Or listened all, in grim delight While scalds yelled out the joys of fight. Then forth, in frenzy, would they hie, While wildly loose their red locks fiv. And dancing round the blazing pile, They make such barbarous mirth the while, As best might to the mind recal The boisterous joys of Odin's hall.

And well our Christian sires of old Loved when the year its course had rolled. And brought blithe Christmas back again. With all his hospitable train. Domestic and religious rite Gave honour to the holy night: On Christmas eye the bells were rung : On Christmas eve the mass was sung ; That only night, in all the year, Saw the stoled priest the chalice rear. The damsel donned her kirtle sheen; The hall was dressed with holly green; Forth to the wood did merry-men go, To gather in the misletoe. Then opened wide the baron's hall To vassal, tenant, serf, and all; Power laid his rod of rule aside, And Ceremony doffed his pride. The heir, with roses in his shoes, That night might village partner chuse: The lord, underogating, share The vulgar game of "post and pair." All hailed, with uncontrolled delight. And general voice, the happy night, That to the cottage, as the crown, Brought tidings of salvation down.

The fire, with well-dried logs supplied, Went roaring up the chimney wide; The huge hall-table's oaken face, Scrubbed till it shone, the day to grace, Bore then upon its massive board.

No mark to part the squire and lord.
Then was brought in the lasty brawn,
By old blue-coated serving-man;
Then the grin bours'-sheaf frowned on high,
Crested with bays and rosemary.
Well can the green-garbed rauger tell,
How, when, and where, the monster full;
What dogs before his death be to what dogs before his death be to the

How, when, and where, the moisser lenf, what dogs before his death he tore, And all the baiting of the boar. The wasser loand in good brown bowls, Garnished with ribbons, bilthely trowls. There the huge sirloin recited, hard by Plum-porridge stood, and Christmas pre Nor falled old Seotland to produce At such high-tide, her savoury goose. Then came the merry masquers in.

Then came the merry masquers in, And carols roared with blithesome din; If unmelodious was the song, It was a hearty note, and strong. Who lists may in their mumming see Traces of ancient mystery;

Mitte shirts supplied the masquerade,
And smutted cheeks the visors made;
But, O ! what masquer sichly dight
Can boast of bosoms half so light!
England was merry England, when Old Christmas brought his sports again.
Twas Christmas broached the mightlest ale;
"Twas Christmas told the merriest tale;
Twas Christmas told the merriest tale;

A Christmas gambol oft could cheer The poor man's heart through half the year.

Still linger in our northern clime Some remnants of the good old time; And still, within our vallies here, We hold the kindred title dear. Even when perchance its far-fetched claim To Southron ear sounds empty name : For course of blood, our proverbs deem, Is warmer than the mountain-stream.* And thus, my Christmas still I hold Where my great-grandsire came of old : With amber beard, and flaxen hair, And reverend anostolic air-The feast and holy-tide to share. And mix sobriety with wine, And honest mirth with thoughts divine Small thought was his, in after time E'er to be hitched into a rhyme. The simple sire could only boast, That he was loval to his cost : The banished race of kings revered. And lost his land,-but kept his beard.

In these dear halls, where welcome kind, Is with fair liberty combined: Where cordial friendship gives the hand, And flies constraint the magic wand Of the fair dame that rules the land Little we heed the tempest drear. While music, mirth, and social cheer, Speed on their wings the passing year.

[&]quot; Blood is warmer than water," - a proverb meant to viodicate our family predilections.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO SIXTH, 7 173

And Mertoun's halls are fair e'en now, When not a leaf is on the bough. Tweed loves them well, and turns againg. As loath to leave the sweet domain. And holds his mirror to her face, And clips her with a close embrace:— Gladly as he, we seek the dome, And as reluctant turn us home.

How Just, that, at this time of gies, My thoughts should, Heber, turn to this if For many a merry hour we've known, and heaved the climes of midnight's tone. Cease, then, my friend! a moment cease, And leave these classist tomes in years of T Roman and of Greedian love.

"The season and the season of Greedian love, which was the season with the season of the season which was the seaso

In Fairy Land or Limbo lost,
To jostle conjuror and ghost,
Goblin and witch!"—Nay, Heber dear,
Before you touch my charter, hear.

4 "Hannibal was a pretty fellow, sir-2 v.;

Though Leyden alds, alas! no more, My cause with many-languaged lore, This may I say:—In realms of death Ulysses meets Addeds: *uraith; *Enesa, upon Thrucha's above, The ghost of mudreds Polydor; For omens, we in Livy cross, At every turn, locatura Bas. At every turn, locatura Bas. As grave and duly speaks that ox, or the control of t

The place of Common-councilman,

All nations have their omens drear, Their legends wild of woe and fear. To Cambria look—the possant see, Bethink him of Clendowerdy, And shun "the spirit's blasted tree." The Highlander, whose red dayamer The battle turned on Maida's shore, Will, on a Priday morn, look pale, If asked to tell a fairy tale: fe fears the vengetid Ellin King, Who leaves that day hig greaty ring; Who leaves that day hig greaty ring;

Didst e'er, dear Heber, pass along Beneath the towers of Franchémont, Which, like an eagle's nest in air, Hang o'er the stream and hamlet fair?— Deep in their vaults, the peasants say, A mighty treasure buried lay, Amassed through rapine and through wrong, By the last lord of Franchémont. The iron cheet is holted hard, A Huntsman sits, its constant guard;

Around his neck his horn is hung, His hanger in his belt is slung; Before his feet his hloodhounds lie: And 'twere not for his gloomy eye, Whose withouting along a no he

Whose withering glance no heart car brook, As true a huntsman doth he look,

As true a huntsman doth he look,
As bugle e'er in hrake did sound,
Or ever hollowed to a hound.
To chase the flend, and win the prize,
In that same dungeon ever tries

An aged Necromantic Priest; It is a hundred years at least, Since 'twixt them first the strife begun, And neither yet has lost or won.

And oft the Conjurer's words will make The stubbern Demongroan and quake; And oft the hands of iron hreak, Or bursts one lock, that still amain, Fast as 'its opened, shuts again. That magic strife within the tomb May last until the day of door

Unless the Adept shall learn to tell
The very word that clenched the spell,
When Franch'mont locked the treasure oell.

An hundred years are past and gong, And searce three letters has he won. Such general superstition may Excuse for old Pitscottie say; Whose gossip history has given My song the messenger from heaven, That warned, in Lithgow, Scotland's King, Nor less the infernal summoning. May pass the Monk of Durham's tale, Whose Demon fought in Gothic mail: May pardon plead for Fordun grave, Who told of Gifford's Gohlin-Cave. But why such instances to you, Who, in an instant, can review Your treasured hoards of various lore, And furnish twenty thousand more? Hoards, not like their's whose volumes rest Like treasures in the Franch'mont chest; While gripple owners still refuse To others what they cannot use; Give them the priest's whole century, They shall not spell you letters three ; Their pleasure in the book's the same The magpie takes in pilfored gem. Thy volumes, open as thy heart, Delight amusement science art

To every ear and eve impart: Yet who, of all who thus employ them, Can, like the owner's self, enjoy them ?-But, hark! I hear the distant drum : The day of Flodden field is come .-

Adieu, dear Heber! life and health, And store of literary wealth.

CANTO SIXTH.

THE BATTLE.

THE BATTLE.

WHILE great events were on the gale, And each hour brought a varying tale, And the demeanour, changed and cold, Of Douglas, fretted Marmion bold, And, like the impatient steed of war, He snuffed the battle from afar : And hopes were none, that back again, Herald should come from Terouenne, Where England's King in leaguer lay, Before decisive hattle-day While these things were, the mournful Clare Did in the Dame's devotions share : For the good Countess ceaseless prayed, To Heaven and Saints, her sons to aid, And, with short interval, did pass From prayer to book, from book to mass. And all in high Baronial pride .-A life both dull and dignified ;-Yet as Lord Marmion nothing pressed Upon her intervals of rest. Dejected Clara well could bear The formal state, the lengthened prayer

180 MARMION. Though dearest to her wounded heart. The hours that she might spend apart. I said. Tantallon's dizzy steep Hung o'er the margin of the deep. Many a rude tower and rampart there Repelled the insult of the air, Which, when the tempest vexed the sky, Half breeze, half spray, came whistling by, Above the rest, a turret square Did o'er its Gothic entrance bear. Of sculpture rude, a stony shield ; The Bloody Heart was in the field, And in the chief three mullets stood, The cognizance of Douglas blood. The turret held a parrow stair. A parapet's embattled row Did seaward round the castle go:

Which, mounted, gave you access where Sometimes in dizzy steps descending. Sometimes in narrow circuit bending, Sometimes in platform broad extendin Its varying circle did combine Bulwark, and bartisan, and line, And bastion, tower, and vantage-coign; Above the booming ocean leant The far-projecting battlement;

The billows burst, in ceaseless flow, Upon the precipice below. Where'er Tantallon faced the land.

Gate-works, and walls, were strongly manued;

No need upon the sea-girt sido: The steepy rock, and frantic tide, Approach of human step denied; And thus these lines, and ramparts rude, Were left in deepest solitude.

TIT

And, for they were so lonely, Clare Would to these hattlements repair, And muse upon her sorrows there, And list the sea-bird's cry:

Or slow, like noon-tide ghost, would glide Along the dark-gray hulwarks' side, And ever on the heaving tide Look down with weary eye.

Oft did the cliff, and swelling main, Recal the thoughts of Whitby's fane,-A home she ne'er might see again : For she ad laid adown.

So Douglas bade, the hood and veil, And frontlet of the cloister pale. And Benedictine gown: It were unseemly sight, he said.

A novice out of convent shade -Now her bright locks, with sunny glow, Again adorned her brow of snow; Her mantle rich, whose borders, round, A deep and fretted broidery bound, In golden foldings sought the ground: Of holy ornament, alone Remained a cross with ruby stone;

And often did she look
On that which in her hand she bore,
With velvet bound, and broidered o'er,
Her breviary book.
In such a place, so lone, so grim,
At dawning pals, or twilight dim,
It fearful would have been,
To meet a form so richly dressed,

It fearful would have been, To meet a form so richly dressed, With book in hand, and cross on breast, And such a woeful mien. Fitz-Eustace, loitering with his bow, To practise on the gull and crow, Saw here, at distance allows.

Saw her, at distance, gliding slow, And did by Mary swear,— Some love-lorn Fay she might have been, Or, in Romance, some spell-bound Queen; For ne'er, in work-day world, was seen A form so witching fair.

A form so witching fair.

Once walking thus, at evening idae, it chanced a gliding sail she spled, it chanced a gliding sail she spled, And, sighing, hought—"The Abbess there, Ferchance, does to her home repair; lifer pascedul rule, where Duty, frew, while hand in hand with Charity; which is and in hand with Charity; can consider the splenge of haven been been consult as glingups of haven been of the character of the splenger of the spl

1.83

The very form of Hilda fair,* Hovering upon the sunny air, And smiling on her votaries' prayer. O! wherefore, to my duller eye, Did still the Saint her form deny! Was it, that, seared by sinful scorn, My heart could neither melt nor burn? Or lie my warm affections low. With him, that taught them first to glow ?-Yet, gentle Abbess, well I knew, To pay thy kindness grateful due. And well could brook the mild command. That ruled thy simple maiden band .---How different now! condemned to bide My doom from this dark tyrant's pride .--But Marmion has to learn, ere long, That constant mind, and hate of wrong, Descended to a feeble girl. From Red De Clare, stout Gloster's Earl; Of such a stem, a sapling weak, He ne'er shall bend, although he break,

"But see!—what makes this armour here?"
For in her path there lay
Targe, corslet, helm;—she viewed them

"The breast-plate pierced!—Aye, much I fear.

^{*} See Note.

184 MARMION

Weak fence wert thou 'gainst foeman's spear, That hath made fatal entrance here. As these dark blood-gouts say .--Thus Wilton !- Oh ! not corslet's ward. Not truth, as diamond pure and hard,

Could be thy manly bosom's guard, On von disastrous day !"

She raised her eyes in mournful mood .-WILTON himself before her stood! It might have seemed his passing ghost, For every youthful grace was lost And joy unwonted, and surprise, Gave their strange wildness to his eyes .-Expect not, poble dames and lords. That I can tell such scene in words : What skilful limner e'er would chuse To paint the rainhow's varying hues, Unless to mortal it were given To dip his hrush in dyes of heaven?

Far less can my weak line declare Each changing passion's shade; Brightening to rapture from despair, Sorrow, surprise, and pity there. And joy, with her angelic air, And hope, that paints the future fair, Their varying hues displayed : Each o'er its rival's ground extending, Aiternate conquering, shifting, blending, Till all, fatigued, the conflict yield. And mighty Love retains the field.

Sbortly I tell what then he said, By many a tender word delayed. And modest blush, and bursting sigh, And question kind, and fond reply.

VI.

De Wilton's History.

"Forget we that disastrous day, When senseless in the lists I lay, Thence dragged,—but how I cannot know,

For sense and recollection fled,—
I found me on a pallet low,

Within my ancient beadsman's shed.

Austin,—remember'st thou, my Claro, How thou didst blush, when the old man,

When first our infant love began, Said we would make a matchless pair?— Menials, and friends, and kinsmen fled

Menials, and friends, and kinsmen fled From the degraded traitor's bed,— He only held my burning head, And tended me for many a day, While wounds and fever held their sway, But far more needful was his care,

When sense returned to wake despair;
For I did tear the closing wound,
And dash me frantic on the ground,
If e'er I heard the name of Clare.
At length, to calmer reason brought,

Much by his kind attendance wrought,

With him I left my native strand, And, in a palmer's weeds arrayed, My hated naime and form to shade, I journeyed many a land; No more a lord of rank and birth, But mingled with the dregs of earth.

But mingled with the dregs of earth.

Oft Austin for my reason feared,

When I would sit, and deeply brood

On dark revenge, and deeds of blood,

On dark revenge, and deeds of blood, Or wild mad schemes apreared. My friend at length fell sick, and said, God would remove him soon;

And while upon his dying bed,
He begged of me a boon—
If ere my deadliest enemy
Beneath my brand should conquered lie,
Even then my mercy should awake,
And saare his life for Austin's sake.

VII.

"Still restless as a second Cain,
To Scotland next my route was ta'en.
Full well the paths I knew;
Fame of my fate made various cound,
That death in Pilgrimage I found,
That I had perished of my wound,
None card which tale was true;
And living eye could never guess
De Wilton in his calmer's dress;

e Wilton in his paimer's dress; For now that sable slough is shed, And trimmed my shaggy beard and head, I scarcely know me in the glass. A chance most wond'rous did provide, That I should be that Baron's guide-I will not name his name !-Vengeance to God alone belongs : But, when I think on all my wrongs. My blood is liquid flame !

And ne'er the time shall I forget, When, in a Scottish hostel set, Dark looks we did exchange : What were his thoughts I cannot tell; But in my hosom mustered Hell

Its plans of dark revenge.

"A word of vulgar augury, That hroke from me, I scarce knew why, Brought on a village tale; Which wrought upon his moody sprite,

And sent him armed forth by night, I borrowed steed and mail. And weapons, from his sleeping hand; And, passing from a postern door.

We met, and 'countered, hand to hand,---He fell on Gifford-moor. For the death-stroke my hrand I drew, (O then my helmed head he knew. The palmer's cowl was gone.) Then had three inches of my hlade The heavy debt of vengeance paid .-My hand the thought of Austin staid :

I left him there alone .--

O good old man! even from the gare; thy spirit could thy master save; HT shad slain my foeman, ne'er Had Whitity's Abbess, in her fear, Given to my hand this packet dear, Of power to clear my injured frame, And vindicate De Witton's name— Perchance you heard the Abbest tell Of the strange pageantry of Hell, That broke our secret search—

It rose from the infernal shade, Or featly was some juggle played, A tale of peace to teach.

Appeal to Heaven I judged was best, When my name came among the rest,

"Now here, within Tantalion Hold,
To Denglas late my tale I told,
To Denglas late my tale I told,
To benglas late my tale I told,
To whom my house was known of old.
Won by my proofs, his fault-dain bright.
This eva mere shall didn in lengths,
This eva mere shall didn in lengths.
These were the arms that one did turn
These were the arms that one did turn.
These were the same that one didn's
And Harry Hotspur forced to yield,
When the Dead Douglas won the field.
These Angus gave—his armourers' scave,
Ere morn, shall every breach regair;
For nought, he add, was in his halls,
But ancient armour on the walls,
And aged chargers in the stalls,

And women, priests, and gray-haired men: The rest were all in Twisell glen. And now I watch my armour here, By law of arms, till midnight's near; Then, once again a belted knight, Seek Surrey's camp with dawn of light.

"There soon again we meet, my Clare! This Baron means to guide thee there: Douglas reveres his king's command, Else would he take thee from his band. And there thy kinsman, Surrey, too, Will give De Wilton justice due. Now meeter far for martial broil. Firmer my limbs, and strung by toil. Once more" --- "O, Wilton! must we Risk new-found happiness again.

Trust fate of arms once more? And is there not a humble glen, Where we, content and poor, Might build a cottage in the shade, A shepherd thou, and I to aid Thy task on dale and moor?-That reddening brow !-- too well I know.

Not even thy Clare can peace bestow, While falsehood stains thy name:

* Where James encamped before taking post on

Go then to fight! Clare bids thee go! Clare can a warrior's feelings know, And weep a warrior's shame; Can Red Earl Gilbert's spirit feel, Buckle the spurs upon thy heel, And belt thee with thy brand of steel, And send thee feeth to forme!"

XI.

That night, upon the rocks and bay,
The midnight moonbeam slumbering lay,
And poured its silver light, and pure,
Through loop-hole, and through embrazure,
Upon Tantallon tower and hall;

But chief where arched windows wide Illuminate the chapel's pride, The sober glances full.

The sober glances fall.

Much was there need; though, seamed with

Two veterans of the Douglas' wars,
Though two gray priests were there,
And each a blazing torch held high,
You could not by their blaze descry

The chapel's carving fair.

Amid that dim and smoky light,

Chequering the silvery moon-shinc bright, A Bishop by the altar stood, A noble lord of Douglas blood, With mitre sheen, and rocquet white:

Yet shewed his meek and thoughtful eye But little pride of prelacy: More pleased that, in a barbarous age, again gave rude Soubinad Virgil's page.

The blatoprick of fair Dankeld, Beside him ancient Angus stood, Doffed his furned gown, and sable hood for the blatoprick grown, and wisage pale, He wore a cap and shirt of mail And leard his larges and wrinkied hand with the stood of the wore and the stood of the wore and within the wore and the work of the wore and the work of the wore and the work of the wor

He seemed as, from the tombs around Rising at judgment-day, Some glant Douglas may be found In all his old array;

So pale his face, so huge his limb, So old his arms, his look so grim.

I.

Then at the altar Wilton kneels, And Clare the spurs bound on his heels; And think what next he must have felt, At buckling of the faulchion belt! And judge how Clara changed her hue,

While fastening to her lover's side A friend, which, though in danger tried, He once had found untrue!

Then Douglas struck him with his blade:
"Saint Michael and Saint Andrew ald, 199

I dob thee knight. Arise Sir Ralph, De Wilton's heir!

For king, for church, for lady fair, See that thou fight."-And Bishop Gawain, as he rose,

MARMION.

Said,-" Wilton! grieve not for thy woes, Disgrace, and trouble

For He, who bonour best bestows, May give thee double."-

De Wilton sobbed, for sob he must-"Where'er I meet a Douglas, trust

That Douglas is my brother!" "Nay, nay," old Angus said, "not so; To Surrey's camp thou now must go. Thy wrongs no longer smother.

I have two sons in yonder field; And if thou meet'st them under shield,

Upon them brayely-do thy worst; And foul fall him that blenches first !"-

Not for advanced was morning day. When Marmion did his troop array To Surrey's camp to ride; He had safe-conduct for his band,

Beneath the royal seal and hand, And Douglas gave a guide: The ancient Earl, with stately grace, Would Clara on ber palfrey place,

And whispered, in an under tone, "Let the bawk stoop, his prey is flown." The train from out the castle drew;
But Marmlon stopp'd to bid adleu:—
"Though something I might plain," he said,

"Of cold respect to stranger guest,
Sent hither by your king's behest,

While in Tantallon's towers I staid; Part we in friendship from your land, And, noble Earl, receive my hand."---But Douglas round him drew his cloak,

Folded his arms, and thus he spoke:—
"My manors, halls, and bowers, shall still

Be open, at my sovereign's will,
To each one whom he lists, howe'er
Unmeet to be the owner's peer,
My castles are my king's alone,
From turret to foundation-stone—

From turret to foundation-stone— The hand of Douglas is his own; And never shall in friendly grasp The hand of such as Marmion clasp."—

Burned Marmion's swarthy cheek like five, And shook his very frame for ire,

And—"This to me!" he said,—
"An 'twere not for thy hoary beard,
Such hand as Marmion's had not spared
To cleave the Douglas' head!

And, first, I tell thee, haughty Peer, He, who does England's message here, Although the meanest in her state, May well, proud Angus, be thy mate; And, Douglas, more I tell thee here,
Even in thy pitch of pride,
Here in thy hold, thy vassals near,
(Nay, never look upon your lord,

(Nay, never look upon your lord,
And lay your hands upon your sword,)
I tell thee, thou'rt defied!
And if thou saidst. I am not peer

And if thou saidst, I am not peer
To any lord in Scotland here,
Lowland or Highland, far or near,
Lord Angus, thou hast lied!"—

On the Earl's check the flush of rage O'ercame the ashen hue of age: Fierce he broke forth:—"And dar'st thou then To beard the lion in his don,

The Douglas in his hall?

And hop'st thou hence unscathed to go?—

No, by Saint Bryde of Bothwell, no!—

Up drawbridge, grooms—what, Warder, ho!

Let the portcullis fall."— Lord Marnion turned,—well was lits need, And dashed the rowels in his steed, Like arrow through the arch-way sprung. The ponderous grate behind him rung: To pass there was such scanty room, The bars, descending, razed his plume.

xv.

The steed along the drawbridge files, Just as it trembled on the rise; Not lighter does the swallow skim Along the smooth lake's level brim; And when Lord Marmion reached his band, He halts, and turns with elenched hand, And shout of loud deflance pours, And shook his gauntlet at the towers. "Horse! horse!" the Douglas cried, "and

"Horse! horse!" the Douglas cried, "and chase!"
But soon he reined his fury's pace:
"A royal messenger he came,

Though most unworthy of the name .-A letter forged! Saint Jude to speed! Did ever knight so foul a deed ! At first in heart it liked me ill. When the King praised his clerkly skill. Thanks to Saint Bothan, son of mine, Save Gawain, ne'er could pen a line : So swore I, and I swear it still. Let my boy-bishop fret his fill,-Saint Mary mend my flery mood ! Old age ne'er cools the Douglas blood, I thought to slav him where he stood .-"Rold can be speak, and fairly ride. I warrant him a warrior tried."---With this his mandate be recals, And slowly seeks his eastle halls,

XVI.

The day in Marmion's journey wore,
Yet, ere his passion's gust was o'er,
They crossed the heights of Stanrigg-moor.
His troop more closely there he scann'd,
And missed the Palmer from the band,—

" Palmer or not." young Blount did say. "He parted at the peep of day; Good sooth it was in strange array,"-"In what array?" said Marmion, quick, "My lord, I ill can spell the trick: But all night long, with clink and bang, Close to my couch did hammers clang : At dawn the falling drawbridge rang, And from a loop-hole while I peep, Old Bell-the-Cat came from the Keep, Wrapped in a gown of sables fair, As fearful of the morning air; Beneath, when that was blown aside, A rusty shirt of mail I spied. By Archibald won in bloody work, Against the Savacen and Turk: Last night it hung not in the hall : I thought some marvel would befal. And next I saw them saddled lead Old Cheviot forth, the Earl's best steed; A matchless horse, though something old. Prompt to his pages, enol and hold. I heard the Sheriff Sholto say, The Earl did much the Master * pray To use him on the battle-day : But he preferred "-" Nay, Henry, cease! Thou sworn horse-courser, hold thy peace,-Eustace, thou bear'st a brain-I pray What did Blount see at break of day?"-

^{*} His eldest son, the Master of Angus.

"In brief, my lord, we both descried (For I then stood by Henry's side) The Palmer mount, and outwards ride.

Upon the Earl's own favourite steed; All sheathed he was in armour bright. And much resembled that same knight. Subdued by you in Cotswold fight:

Lord Angus wished him speed."---The instant that Fitz-Eustace spoke, A sudden light on Marmion broke;-"Ah! dastard fool, to reason lost!" He muttered; "'Twas nor fay nor ghost, I met upon the moonlit wold,

But living man of earthly mould O dotage blind and gross ! Had I but fought as wont, one thrust

Had laid De Wilton in the dust, My path no more to cross .--How stand we now ?-he told his tale

To Douglas; and with some avail; 'Twas therefore gloomed his rugged brow ---Will Surrey dare to entertain, 'Gainst Marmion, charge disproved and vain?

Small risk of that I trow .--Yet Clare's sharp questions must I shun; Must separate Constance from the Nun-O what a tangled web we weave. When first we practise to decelve !-A Palmer too !-- no wonder why I felt rebuked beneath his eve:

I might have known there was but one Whose look could guell Lord Marmion,"-

Stung with these thoughts, he urged to speed His troop, and reached, at eye, the Tweed, Where Lennel's convent closed their march;

(There now is left but one frail arch. Yet mourn thou not its cells;

Our time a fair eychange has made : Hard by, in hospitable shade,

Well worth the whole Bernardine broad. That c'er wore sandal, frock, or hood.) Yet did Saint Bornayd's Abbot there Give Marmion entertainment fair, And lodging for his train, and Clare, Next morn the Baron climbed the tower. To view afar the Scottish power,

Like romnants of the winter snow. Along the dusky ridge. f.ong Marmion looked ;-at length his eye

Unusual movement might descry, The Scottish host drawn out appears.

For, flashing on the hedge of spears The eastern sun-beam shines.

Their front now deepening, now extending; Their flank inclining, wheeling, bending, Now drawing back, and now descending,

The skilful Marmion well could know. They watched the motions of some foe,

Even so it was :- from Flodden ridge

The Scots beheld the English host Leave Barmore-wood, their evening post, And heedful watched them as they crossed The Till by Twisel Bridge.

High sight it is, and haughty, while

Beneath the caverned cliff they fall. Beneath the castle's airy wall. By rock, by oak, by hawthorn tree,

Troop after troop are disappearing : Troop after troop their banners rearing, Upon the eastern bank you see,

Still pouring down the rocky den, Where flows the sullen Till.

And rising from the dim-wood glen, Standards on standards, men on men,

In slow succession still. And sweeping o'er the Gothic arch, And pressing on, in ceaseless march, To gain the opposing hill,

That morn, to many a trumpet-clang, Twisel! thy rock's deep echo rang; And many a chief of birth and rank, Saint Helen! at thy fountain drank. Thy hawthorn glade, which now we see In spring-tide bloom so lavishly, Had then from many an axe its doom. To give the marching columns room.

XX.

And why stands Scotland idly now, Dark Flodden! on thy airy brow. Since England gains the pass the while, And struggles through the deep defile? What checks the flery soul of James? Why sits that champion of the Dames Inactive on his steed.

And sees, between him and his land, Between him and Tweed's southern strand. His host Lord Surrey lead? What vails the vain knight-errant's brand 2-

O, Douglas, for thy leading wand ! Fierce Randolph, for thy speed O for one hour of Wallace wight. Or well-skilled Bruce, to rule the fight, And cry-" Saint Andrew and our right !" Another sight had seen that morn. From Fate's dark book a leaf been torn, And Flodden had been Bannock-burn !--The precious hour has passed in vain. And England's host has gained the plain :

Wheeling their march, and circling still,

Around the base of Flodden-hill. Ere yet the bands met Marmion's eve. Fitz-Eustace shouted loud and high .- "Hark! hark! my lord, an English drum! And see ascending squadrons come Between Tweed's river and the hill,

Foot, horse, and cannon :—hap what hap, My basnet to a 'prentice cap, Lord Surrey's o'er the Till!—

Yet more! yet more!—how fair arrayed They file from out the hawthorn shade,

They file from out the hawthorn shade And sweep so gallant by! With all their banners bravely spread, And all their armour flashing high.

And all their armour flashing high, Saint George might waken from the dead, To see fair England's standards fly."— "Stint in thy wests?" much Blues

To see fair England's standards fly."—
"Stint in thy prate," quoth Blount; "thoud'st best,
And listen to our lord's beliest."—

And listen to our four's behiest."— With hindling brow Lord Marmion said,— "This instant be our band arrayed;" The river must be quickly crossed, That we may Join Lord Surrey's host. If sight King James,—as well I trust, That fight King James,—as well it frust, That fight continues the must,— The Lady chee's behind our lines Shall tarry, with the bettle joins."—

Himself he swift on horseback threw, Scarce to the Abbot bade adica; Far less would listen to his prayer, To leave behind the helpless Clare. Down to the Tweed his band he drew, And muttered, as the flood they view, "The pheasant in the falcon's claw, He scarce will yield to please a daw: Lord Angus may the Abbot awe, So Clare shall bide with me." Then on that dangerous ford, and deep,

Then on that dangerous ford, and deep,
Where to the Tweed Leat's eddies creep,
He ventured desperately;
And not a moment will be bide.

And not a moment will be bide,
Till squire, or groom, before him ride
Headmost of all be stems the tide,

Headmost of all he stems the tide,
And stems it gallantly.

Eustace held Clare upon her horse,

Old Hubert led her rein, Stoutly they braved the current's course, And, though far downward driven per

And, though har downward driven per force, The southern bank they gain; Behind them, straggling, came to shore,

As best they might, the train: Each o'er his head his yew-bow bore, A caution not in vain;

Deep need that day that every string, By wet unharmed, should sharply ring. A moment then Lord Marmion staid, And breathed his steed, his men arrayed, Then forward moved his band, Until, Lord Surrey's rear-guard won,

He halted by a cross of stone,
That, on a hillock standing lone,
Did all the field command.

Did all the neid command

X

Hence might they see the full array Of either host, for deadly fray; Their marshalled lines stretched east and west,

And fronted north and south,
And distant salutation rest

And distant salutation past
From the loud eannon mouth;
Not in the close successive rattle,

Not in the close successive rattle, That breathes the voice of modern bat

The hillock gained, Lord Marmion staid: "Here, by this cross," he gently said,

"You well may view the seene.

Here shalt thou tarry, lovely Clare:

O! think of Marmion in thy prayer!—
Thou wilt not?—well,—no less my care
Shall, watchful, for thy weal prepare.—
You, Blount and Eustace, are her guard,
With ten picked archers of my train;

With ten picked archers of my train;
With England if the day go hard,
To Berwick speed amain.—
But, if we conquer, cruel maid!

My spoils shall at your feet be laid,
When here we meet again."—
He waited not for answer there,

And would not mark the maid's despair, Nor heed the discontented look From either squire; but spurred amain.

From either squire; but spurred amain And, dashing through the battle-plain, His way to Surrey took.

XXIV. " The good Lord Marmion, by my life! Welcome to danger's hour ! Short greeting serves in time of strife :-

Thus have I ranged my power: Myself will rule this central host,

Stout Stanley fronts their right. My sons command the vaward post. With Brian Tunstall, stainless knight;

Lord Dacre, with his horsemen light, Shall be in rear-ward of the fight, And succour those that need it most.

Now, gallant Marmion, well I know, Would gladly to the vanguard go; Edward, the Admiral, Tunstall there, With thee their charge will blithely share;

There fight thine own retainers too, Beneath De Burg, thy steward true,"-"Thanks, noble Surrey !" Marmion said,

Nor further greeting there he paid; But, parting like a thunder-bolt,

First in the vanguard made a halt, Where such a shout there rose Of " Marmion ! Marmion !" that the cry Up Flodden mountain shrilling high,

Startled the Scottish foes. Blount and Fitz-Eustace rested still

With Lady Clare upon the hill; On which, (for far the day was spent,) The western sun-beams now were bent. The cry they heard, its meaning linew, Could plain their distant comrades view; Sadly to Blount did Eustace say, "Unworthy office here to stay! No hope of gilded spurs to-day.—
But, see! look up—on Flodden bent,

The Scottish foe has fired his tent."—
And sudden, as he spoke,
From the sharp ridges of the hill,

From the sharp ridges of the hill,
All downward to the banks of Till,
Was wreathed in sable smoke;

Volumed and vast, and rolling far,
The cloud enveloped Scotland's war,
As down the hill they broke:

As down the hill they broke; Nor martial shout, nor minstrel tone,

Announced their march; their tread alone,
At times one warning trumpet blown,

At times a stifled hum,
Told England, from his mountain-throne

King James did rushing come,— Scarce could they hear, or see their foes, Until at weapon-point they close.—

They close, in clouds of smoke and dust,
With sword-sway, and with lance's thrust;
And such a yell was there,

Of sudden and portentous birth, As if men fought upon the earth, And flends in upper air,

Long looked the anxious squires; their eye Could in the darkness nought descry. 206

XXVI.

At length the freshening western blast
Aside the shroud of battle cast;

Aside the shroud of battle cast; And, first, the ridge of mingled spears Above the brightening cloud appears; And in the smoke the pennous flew, As in the storm the white sea-mew, Then marked they, dashing broad and f The broken billows of the war,

Then marked they, dashing broad and far,
The broken billows of the war,
And plumed crests of chieftains brave,
Floating like foam upon the wave;
But nought distinct they see;

But nought distinct they see; Wide raged the battle on the plain; Spears shook, and faulchions flashed amain; Fell England's arrow-flight like rain;

Crests rose, and stooped, and rose again,
Wild and disorderly.

Amid the scene of tumult, high

Amid the scene of tumult, high They saw Lord Marmion's falcon fly: And stainless Tunstall's banner white, And Edmund Howard's lion bright, Still bear them bravely in the fight;

Of gallant Gordons many a one,
And many a stubborn Highlandman,
And many a rugged Border clan,
With Huntley, and with Home.

XXVII.

Far on the left, unseen the while, Stanley broke Lennox and Argyle; Though there the western mountaineer Rushed with bare bosom on the spear. And flung the feeble targe aside, And with both hands the broad-sword plied; 'Twas vain .- But Fortune, on the right, With fickle smile, cheered Scotland's fight. Then fell that spotless banner white.

The Howard's lion fell:

Yet still Lord Marmion's falcon flew With wavering flight, while floreor grew Around the battle yell.

A Home! a Gordon! was the cry;

Advanced .- forced back .- now low, now

As bends the bark's mast in the calc. When rent are rigging, shrouds, and sail,

"By beaven, and all its saints! I swear,

Fitz-Eustace, you with Lady Clare

May bid your beads, and patter prayer,--I gallop to the host." And to the fray he rode amain.

Followed by all the archer train. The flery youth, with desperate charge, Made, for a space, an opening large

The rescued banner rose. -

But darkly closed the war around, Like pine-tree, rooted from the ground,

It sunk among the foes.
Then Eustace mounted too ;—yet staid,

As loth to leave the helpless maid, When, fast as shaft can fly,

When, fast as shaft can fly, Blood-shot his eyes, his nostrils spread, The loose rein dangling from his head, Housing and saddle bloody red.

Housing and saddle bloody red,

Lord Marmion's steed rushed by;

And Eustage maddening at the sight

And Eustace, maddening at the sight,
A look and sign to Clara cast,
To mark he would return in haste,

To mark he would return in hast Then plunged into the fight. XXVIII.

Ask me not what the maiden feels, Left in that dreadful hour alone: Perchance her reason stoops, or reels;

Perchance her reason stoops, or reas;
Perchance a courage, not her own,
Braces her mind to desperate tonc.—
The scattered van of England wheels;—

The scattered van of England wheels;—
She only said, as loud in air
The turnult roared, "Is Wilton there?"—
They fly, or, maddened by despair,
Fight but to die..." In Wilton there!"—

With that, straight up the hill there rode
Two horsemen drenched with gore,
And in their arms, a helpless load,
A wounded knight they bore.

His hand still strained the broken brand; His arms were smeared with blood, and sand: Dragged from among the horses' feet, With dinted shield, and helmet beat, The falcon-crest and plumage gone, Can that be haughty Marmion! Young Blount his armour did unlace, And, szaine on his chaptly face.

Said—"By Saint George, he's gone! That spear-wound has our master sped, And see the deep cut on his head!

Good night to Marmion."—
"Unnurtured Blount! thy brawling cease:

He opes his eyes," said Eustace; "peace!"—
XXIX.

When, doffed his casque, he felt free air, Around gan Marmion wildly stare:— "Where's Harry Blount? Fitz-Eustace

Linger ye here, ye hearts of hare!
Redeem my pennon,—charge again!
Cry—' Marmion to the rescue!'—Vain!
Last of my race, on battle plain
That shout shall no ye be beaut again!

That shout shall ne'er be heard again!—
Yet my last thought is England's:—fly,
To Daere bear my signet-ring;
Tell him his condense at a leist

Fitz-Eustace, to Lord Surrey hie:
Tunstall lies dead upon the field;
His life-blood stains the spotless shield:
Edmund is down;—my life is reft;—
The Admiral alone is left.

0

210

Let Stanley charge with spur of fire,— With Chester charge, and Lanchashire, Full upon Scotland's central host, Or victory and England's lost,— Must I bit twice?—hence, variets! fly! Leave Marmion here alone,—to die."

They parted, and alone he lay;
Clare drew her from the sight away,
Till pain wrung forth a lowly moan,
And half he murmured...." Is there none.

And half he murmured,—" Is there none
Of all my halls have nurst,
Page, squire, or groom, one cup to bring
Of blessed water, from the spring,
To slake my dying thirst!"—

O, woman! In our hours of case, Uncertain, coy, and hard to please, And variable as the shade By the light quivering aspen made; When pain and anguish wring the brow !— A ministering angel thou !—

A ministering angel thou !— Scarce were the piteous accents said, When, with the Baron's casque, the maid To the nigh streamlet ran: Forzot were hatred, wrongs, and fears:

The plaintive voice alone she hears,
Sees but the dying man.
She stooped her by the runnel's side,

But in abhorrence backward drew; For, oozing from the mountain wide, Where raged the war, a dark red tide

Was curdling in the streamlet blue. Where shall she turn !- behold her mark

A little fountain-cell.

Where water, clear as diamond-spark, In a stone bason fell.

Above, some half-worn letters say,

" Brink wearp, pilarim, brink.

and pran. For. the. kind. soul. of. Sobil

Gren. THho. built. this. cross, and mell." She filled the helm, and back she hied,

And with surprise and joy espled A Monk supporting Marmion's head

A plous man, whom duty brought

To shrieve the dying, bless the dead,

Deep drank Lord Marmion of the wave, And, as she stooped his brow to lave-"Is it the hand of Clare," he said,

" Or injured Constance, bathes my head !" Then, as remembrance rose,-

" Speak not to me of shrift or prayer ! I must redress her woes, Short space, few words, are mine to spare;

Forgive and listen, gentle Clare!"__ "Alas!" she said. "the while,-

O think of your immortal weal!
In vain for Constance is your zeal;
Sho—died at Holy Isla:"
Lord Marmion started from the ground,
As light as if he felt no wound;
Though in the action burst the tide,
In torrents, from his wounded side.

In torrents, from his wounded side,
"Then it was truth!"—he said—"I knev
That the dark presage must be true,—
I would the Flend, to whom belongs
The venzeance due to all her wrongs,

Would spare me but a day!

For wasting fire, and dying groan,
And priests slain on the altar stone
Might bribe him for delay.

It may not be!—this dizzy transe— Curse on you base maraudor's lance, And doubly cursed my fulling brand! A sinful heart makes feeble hand."— Then, fainting, down on earth be sunk, Supported by the trembling Monk.

XXXII.

With fruitless labour, Clara bound, And strove to staunch, the gushing wound: The Monk, with unavailing cares, Exhausted all the Church's prayers; Ever, he said, that, close and near, A lady's voice was in his ear, And that the priest he could not hear,

For that she ever sung.

"In the last battle, borne down by the flying, Where mingles war's rattle with groans of the dwing!"

So the notes rung;
"Avoid thee, Fiend!—with cruel hand,
Shake not the dying sinner's sand!—
O look, my son, upon yon sign

Of the Redeemer's grace divine;
O think on faith and bliss!—
By many a death-bed I have been,
And many a sinner's parting seen,

But never aught like this."—
The war, that for a space did fall,
Now trebly thundering swelled the gr
And—STANLEY! was the cry;—

And fired his glazing eye:
With dying hand, above his head
He shook the fragment of his blade,
And shouted "Victory!—

"Charge, Chester, charge! On, Stanley, on?" Were the last words of Marmion.

By this, though deep the evening fell, Still rose the battle's deadly swell, For still the Scots, around their king, Unbroken fought in desporate ring. Where's now their victor vaward wing, Where Huntley, and where Home?—

O for a blast of that dread horn, On Fontarabian echoes borne. That to King Charles did come,
When Rowland hrave, and Olivier,
Ard every palladin and peer,
On Roncesvalles died!
Such hlast might warn them, not in vain,

Such hist might warn them, not in To quit the plunder of the slain, And turn the doubtful day again, While yet on Flodden side.

While yet on Flodden side, Afar, the Royal Standard flies, And round it toils, and bleeds, and dies, Our Caledonian pride!

In vain the wish—for far away,
While spoil and havoc mark their way,
Near Sybil's Cross the plunderers stray.—
"O Lady," cried the Monk, "away!"—

"O Lady," cried the Monk, "away!"—
And placed her on her steed;
And led her to the chapel fair,
Of Tilmouth upon Tweed.

Of Tilmouth upon Tweed.
There all the night they spent in prayer,
And, at the dawn of morning, there
She met her kinsman, Lord Fitz-Clare.

XXXIV. But as they left the dark'ning heath,

More desperate grew the strife of death.
The English shafts in vollies halled,
In headlong charge their horse assailed:
Front, flank, and rear, the squadrons sweep,
To break the Scottish circle deep,
That fourth around their kins.

But yet, though thick the shafts as snow

Though should be before like whichely

Though charging knights like whirlwinds go Though bill-men plie the ghastly blow, Unbroken was the ring;

The stubborn spear-men still made good Their dark impenetrable wood,

Each stepping where his comrade stood, The instant that he fell.

No thought was there of dastard flight;— Linked in the serried phalanx tight, Groom fought like noble, squire like knight,

As fearlessly and well;
Till utter darkness closed her wing

Till utter darkness closed her wing O'er their thin host and wounded king.

Then skilful Surrey's sage commands

Led back from strife his shattered bands;

And from the charge they drew,

And from the charge they drew, As mountain-waves, from wasted lands, Sweep back to ocean blue.

Then did their loss his formen know;
Their king, their lords, their mightiest low,
They melted from the field as snow,
When streams are swoln and south winds blow,

Dissolves in silent dew.
Tweed's echoes heard the ceaseless plash,

While many a broken band, Disordered, through her currents dash, To gain the Scottish land;

To town and tower, to down and dale, 'To tell red Flodden's dismal tale, And raise the universal wall. Tradition, legend, tune, and song, Shall many an age that wail prolong : Still from the sire the son shall hear Of the storn strife and carnage dream

Of Flodden's fatal field, Where shivered was fair Scotland's spear,

And broken was her shield!

Day dawns upon the mountain's side :---There. Scotland ! lay thy brayest pride. Chiefs, knights, and nobles, many a one; The sad survivors all are gone .--View not that corpse mistrustfully, Defaced and mangled though it be: Nor to you Border castle high Look northward with upbraiding eye;

Nor cherish hope in vain, That, journeying far on foreign strand,

The Royal Pilgrim to his land May yet return again. He saw the wrock his rashness wrought;

Reckless of life, he desperate fought, And fell on Flodden plain:

And well in death his trusty brand, Firm clenched within his manly hand, Reseemed the monarch slain.

But, O! how changed since you blithe night!-Gladly I turn me from the sight.

Tinto my tale again.

XX

Short is my tale—Filtz-Ristace cure, A pierced and mangled body pare
To moated Llehfled's folly pile;
And there, beneath the southern aide,
A tomb, with Gothle sculpture fair,
Did long Lord Marminor's image bear.
(Now wainly for its site you look;
Twas levelled, when finantic Brook
The fair eatherland stormed and took;
But, thanks to heaven, and good!

A guerdon meet the spoiler had:)
There erst was martial Marmion four
His feet upon a couchant bound,

His hands to heaven upraised;
And all around, on scutcheon rich

And noted curved, and reterior incom, Illi surms and fast were blanch. By, And priests for Marmion beauthed the prepared to the property of the prepared to the preto the prepared to the preto the pr And thus, in the proud Baron's tomb, The lowly woodsman took the room.

XXXVII.

Less easy task it were, to shew

Lord Marmion's nameless grave, and low.

They dug his grave e'en where be lay,

Lord Marmion's nameless grave, and lot They due his grave e'en where be lay But every mark is gone; Time's wasting hand has done away The simple Cross of Sybil Grey, And broke her font of stone: Buy yet from out the little hill Oozes the slender springlet still. Oft hatts the stranger there,

For thence may beat his curious eye The memorable field descry; And shepherd boys repair To seek the water-flag and rush, And rest them by the hard bush, And plast their garlands fair or, That holds the bone of Marmion brave.— When thou shalf find the little hill, With thy heart commune, and be still. It even, in templation strong.

That helds the bones of Marmion brave. When thou shalt find the little M; when thou shalt find the little M; with the heart commune, and be still. If ever, in temptation strong, Thou left'st the right path for the wrong; Thou left'st the right path for the wrong; Still led then further from the read; Still led then further from the read; on noise Marmion's lovely touth; But say, "He died a gallant knight, With sword in hand, for Englands's right,"

XXXVIII. I do not rhyme to that dull elf, Who cannot image to himself. That all through Flodden's dismal night. Wilton was foremost in the fight: That, when brave Surrey's steed was slain, 'Twas Wilton mounted him again: 'Twas Wilton's brand that deepest hewed, Amid the spearmen's stubborn wood: He was the living soul of all; That, after fight, his faith made plain, He won his rank and lands again : And charged his old paternal shield

With bearings won on Flodden field .--Nor sing I to that simple maid. To whom it must in terms be said. That king and kinsmen did agree, To bless fair Clara's constancy : Who cannot, unless I relate,

Paint to her mind the bridal's state; That Wolsey's voice the blessing spoke, More. Sands, and Denny, passed the joke; That bluff King Hal the curtain drew, And Catherine's hand the stocking threw; And afterwards, for many a day, That it was held enough to say,

In blessing to a wedded pair, "Love they like Wilton and like Clare!"- 230

L' Enboy.

TO THE READER. Why then a final note prolong, Or lengthen out a closing song, Unless to bid the gentles speed, Who long have listed to my rede?"-To Statesman grave, if such may deign To read the Minstrel's idle strain, Sound head, clean hand, and piercing wit, And patriotic heart-as Pirr! To every lovely lady bright, What can I wish but faithful knight? What can I wish but lady true? And knowledge to the studious sage: And pillow soft to head of age. To thee, dear schoolboy, whom my lay Has cheated of thy hour of play, Light task, and merry holiday! To all, to each, a fair good night, And pleasing dreams, and slumbers light ! A garland for the hero's crest, And twined by her he loves the best ;

[.] Used generally for tale or discourse

NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

As when the Champion of the Lake Enters Morgana's fated house, and out a nisse of that clouth away, and then it fared

he was afeard, and then bee saw a faire sword lye by the dead knight, and that he gat in his hand, and hied him out of the chappell. As soon as he was in the chappell-yerd, all the knights spoke to him with 'Whether I live or die, said Sir Lanneelot, with and, beyond the channell verd, there met him a 'No.' said she: 'and we did leave that sword. Queenc Guenever should we never see,' 'Then Sir Launcelot. 'Now, gentle knight,' said the damosell, 'I require thee to kisse me once,' 'Nay,' said Sir Launcelot, 'that, God forbid!' 'Well, hand. And so, Sir Launcelot, now I tell thee, that alive, I had kept no more joy in this world but to it and served, and so have kept it my life daies, and said Sir Launcelot: 'Jesus screserve me from your subtill craft!' And therewith he took his horse, and departed from her."

Norv I

A sinful man, and unconfessed, He took the sangreal's holy quest, And, slumbering, saw the vision high.

He might not view with waking eye. - P. 10, One day, when Arthur was holding a high feast with his Knights of the Round Table, the Sangreall, or vessel out of which the last passover was eaten, a precious relies, which had long remained conceased from human eyes, because of the sins of the land, audiently appeared to him and all his chira'ers. The consequence of this vision was, that all the knights Belt also it is relied in the property of the single state of the property of the single state of the sin

In a wife of active and held to spith, but we will be a vertice led by any at a tile law, in some units a limit, and will be a vertice led by any at a tile law, and the law,

"And so hee fell on sleeps, and halfe waking and balfe sleeping, hee saw conic by him two paiffyes, both faire and white, the which beare a litter, therein lying a sicke kurpht. And when he was nigh the crosse, he there abode still. All this sir Launcelot saw and beheld, for hee sleep into verify, when the same should be the same that the holy wassel come by me, where through I shall be blessed, for I have endured thus long, for little crosse. Then anon his squire brought him his selfe upright, and he thought him what hee had there seene, and whether it were dreamse or not, right so he leads a volec that said, 'Sir Launcelot, right so he leads a volec that said, 'Sir Launcelot, is the wood, and more maked and have then is the lefe of the fig. 'Iter, therefore go thou from hence, left of the fig. 'Iter the left of the fig. 'Iter has been said with the left of the fig. 'Iter has been departed sore and wit not what to doe. And so he departed sore and wit not what to doe. And so he departed sore then he deemed never to have had more worship for the words went unto his heart, till little he knew

OTR III.

Had raised the Table Round again, But that a ribald king and court Bade him toil on, to make them sport; Demanded for their niceard pay.

Fit for their souls, a looser lay, Licentious satire, song, and play.—P. 10. Pryden's melancholy account of his projected 1'Tyuen's melaneholy account of his projects Epic Poem, blasted by the selfish and sordid parsi mony of his patrons, is contained in an "ks-ay or Satire," addressed to the Earl of Dorset, and pre fixed to the Translation of Juvenal. After mention ing a plan of supplying machinery from the guardian angels of kingdoms, mentioned in the book of Daniel, he adds: "Thus, my lord, I have, as briefly as I could, given your lordship, and by you the world, a ruld draught of what I have been long labouring in my imagination, and what I had intended to have pot imagination, and what I had intended to have pot make a power, and to have left five stage, to while my genius never much inclined use, for a worl which would have taken up up life in the perform which would have taken up up life in the perform tentarity obliged. Of townshipters, both relating to, it, I was doubtful whether I should chuse that of farther datasts in time, gives the greater scopes in in subduing Spain, and restoring it to the lawful prince, though a great tyrant, Don Pedro the Cruele which, for the company of time, including why the expeditation of new secretarions, for the presentation of the secretarions of the secretarion of

996

Nove IV.

Of Ascapart, and Bevis bold.—P. 12.

The "History of Bevis of Hampton" is abridged a my friend Mr. George Ellis, with that liveliness which extracts amusement even out of the most rude and unpromising of our old tales of chivairy. Ascapari, a most important personage in the romance, is thus described in an extract:

This geaunt was mighty and strong, And full thirty foot was long. He was bristled like a sow:

A foot he had between cach brow; His lips were great, and hung aside; His even were hollow; his mouth was wide;

Lothly he was to look on than, And liker a devil than a man. His staff was a young oak, Hard and heavy was his stroke.

Specimens of Metrical Romances, Vol. II, p. 136.
I am happy to say, that the memory of Sir Bevis is still fragrant in his town of Southampton; the

ente of which is centicalled by the afficies of that ughty knight-errant, and his gigantic associate.

Day set on Norham's castled steep, And Tweed's fair river, broad and deen, &c.

The ruinous castle of Norham, (anciently called Ubbanford,) is situated on the southern bank of the and Scotland. The extent of its ruins, as well as its historical importance, shows it to have been a place repeatedly taken and retaken during the wars between England and Scotland; and, indeed, scarce overhaugs the river. The repeated sieges which Pud-ey, hishon of Durham, who added a huge keen, in 1174, took the castle from the bishop, and committed the keeping of it to William de Nevilla. After this period it seems to have been chiefly garrisoned by the king, and considered as a royal forfrequently the castellans, or castains of the garrison: Yet, as the eastle was situated in the patri-Durham till the Reformation

According to Mr. Pinkerton, there is, in the British Museum, Cal. B. 6, 716, a curious memoir of he Dacres in the state of Norham Castle in 15/2. not long after the battle of Floriden. The lines ward, or keep, is represented as impregnable, "The quarters of grain, besides many cows, and four but a number of the arrow, wanted feathers, and a good Eletcher (i.e. maker of arrows) was required." History of Scotland, Vol. 11, p. 201, Note.

The ruins of the castle are at present considerable, as well as picturesque. They consist of a large shattered tower, with many vaults, and fragments of other edifices, inclosed within an outward wall of

Nove V

The Donjon Keep .- P. 12.

It is porhus unrecessary to remind up readers, that the shows, in its proper significants, means that the shows, in its proper significants, means a second of the state of th

Nove WI

Well was he armed from head to heel, In mail, and plate, of Milan steel.—P.

The artists of Milas were famous in the mildre following passage, in which Professar diversity and account of the preparations made by theory, Earl of Dilweing passage, in which Professar diversity and account of the preparations made by theory, Earl of Dilweing and the Professar diversity and the professage of the p

he wished for in plated and mail armour, the lord of Milan, out of his abundant love for the Earl ordered four of the hest armourers in Milan to accompany the knight to England, that the Earl or Derby might be more completely armed."—Johnes' Froissart, Vol. IV. p. 597.

Norm VIII

The golden legend bore aright, Who CRECKS AT ME, TO DEATH IS DIGHT.—P. 15. The crest and motto of Marmion are horrowed

The creek and motto of Starmion are horrowed first Early Crustoff, which was a mong other gentlemm of quality, attended during a visit to London, in to my authority Bower, no colly excelling in vie dom, but also of a lively wit. Chancing to he at the dom, but also of a lively wit. Chancing to he at the dom, but also of a lively wit. Chancing to he at the dom, but also of a lively wit. Chancing to he at the dom, but also of a lively wit. Chancing to he at the dom, but also of a lively wit. Chancing to he at the domination of the person, parading the palace, arrayded in a new mantle, hearing for device an embroyder.

I bear a falcon, fairest of flight, Who so pinches at ber, his death is dight

The Scottish knight, being a wag, appeared next day in a dress exactly similar to that of Courtenay, but bearing a magpie instead of the falcon, with a motto ingeniously contrived to rhyme to the vaunting inscription of Sir Piers:

I bear a pic picking at a piece, Who so picks at her, I shall pick at his nese,‡ In faith.

This affront could only be explated by a just with sharp lances. In the course, Dairell left his helmet unlaced, so that it gave way at the touch of his antagonist's lance, and he thus avoided the shock of the encounter. This happened twice:—In the third encounter, the handsome Courtenay lost two of his front teeth. As the Bugliahman complained bitterly of Dairell's fraud in not fastening his 8 Prepared + Armour.

Henry IV.

heimet, the Scottishman arreed to run six courses more, such changes tasking in the head of the more, such changes tasking in the head of the search of the

NOTE IX.

Largesse, largesse.-P. is.

This was the cry with which heralds and pursuivants were won't to acknowledge the bounty received from the knights. Stewart of Lorn distinguishes a baltad, in which he satirises the narrowness of James V. and his courtiers, by the ironical burden— Lerges, lerges, lerges, bay.

Lerges, lerges, lerges, hay, Lerges of this new year day.

First lerges of the kinv, my chief, Who came as quiet as a thief. And in my hands slid—shillings twacing To put his largeness to the price.

For lerges of this new year day.

The heralds. like the minstrels, were a race allowed to have great claims u.on the liberality of the knichts, of whose feats they kept a record, and proclaimed them aloud, as in the text, upon suitable of incorrance, provident such as the Border fortresses of im-creare, pursuivants usually resided, whose inviolable character sendered them the only persons that could, with perfect assurance of safety, be sent on necessary embassics into Scotland. This is alluded to in Stanza XXI. p. 24.

Two.- † Proof.

They hailed Lord Marmion; hey hailed him Lord of Fontenaye Of Lutterward, and Serivelbaye,

Of Temworth tower and town -P 18. Lord Marmion, the principal character of the present romance, is entirely a fictitious personage, In earlier times, indeed, the family of Marmion, extinct in the person of Philip de Marmion, who died in 20th Edward I., without issue male. He seendant in the reign of Richard 1, by the supposed tenure of his Castle of Tamworth, claimed the office of royal chamulon, and to do the service anpermining namely, on the day of coronation, to bat against any who would gainsay the king's title. day. The family and possessions of Freville have merged in the Earls of Ferrars: I have not, theretitles of an old one in an imaginary personage, It was one of the Marmion family, who, in the

It was one of the Marmion family, who, in the relgn of Edward 11, performed that chivalrous featbefore the very cashe of Norham, which bishing Percy has woven into his beautiful balled, "Toe Hermit of Warkworth." The story is thus sold by Leland: "The Scottes came yn to the marches of England.

ladies; and amonge them one lady brought a

as al glittering in gold, and wering the heaulme, his

the throng of ennemyes; the which layed sore strings on hym, and milled hym at the last out of "Then Thomas Gray, with at the hole garrison, lette prik yn among the Scottes, and so wondid with Geav, persewed the Scottes vn chase There were taken 50 horse of price; and the women of Norham brought them to the foote men to follow

No

Sir Hugh the Heron bold, Baron of Twisell, and of Ford,

Were accuracy of any consequence in a fictitious narrative, this exactilative man ought to have been Williams for William Heron of Ford was husband to the famous Lady Ford, whose syren charms as also to have cost our James IV, so dear. Moreover, a sale to have cost our James IV, so dear. Moreover, a prisoner in Sectional, being surrendered by Henry VIII., on account of his share in the shoughter of Str Robert Ker of Ceasifod. His wife, represented in fact, living in her own easile at Ford. See Sir Robert Ker of Ceasifod. His wife, represented in fact, living in her own easile at Ford. See Sir Robert Ker of See Sir Robert See Sir Robert See Sir Robert See Sir Robert See Sir

A HARDEN

"How the herce Thirwalls, and Ridleys all,"

The first of the control of the cont

Hoot awa', lads, hoot awa', Ha' ye heard how the Ridleys, and Thirwalls, and a', 'a See Ministries of the Scottlin Borden.

He' set upon Albany & Peatherstonbauch. And taken his life at the Dearmanahaugh And Hardriding Dick.

And Huchie of Hawden, and Will of the Wa' I canno' tell a' i canno' tell a'. And mony a mair that the de'il may knaw.

The suld man went down, but Nicol, his son, Ran away afore the fight was begun: And afore they were done,

There was many a Featherston gat sic a stun,

Leanna' tell a'. Leanna' tell a's

Some gat a skelp, t and some gat a claw; But they gard the Featherstons haud their jaw,-2 Some gat a hurt, and some yat nane;

And syne ran wallowing ++ hame.

Hoot, hoot, the suid man's slain outright ! Lay him now wi' his face down;-he's a sorrowful Janes, thou donot To Thou gets a new gude-man afore it be night.

* Prenounced debous. † Skein signifies slap, or rather is the same word which T Hold their same, a volume averaged as still in our

6 Got stolen, or were plundered; a very likely termi | Neck .- T Punch .-  Belly .- * Hellowing. TI Sille slut. The Border Bard calls her so, because she was weeping for her sisin husband; a loss which he seems to think might be soon repaired.

VI. Hoo away, lads, hoo away,

Wi's a' be hangid if we stay, Tak' up the dead man, and lay him shint the biggings Here's the Bailey o' Haltwhistle.

That sup'd up the broo',-&c.

In the explanation of this ancient ditty, Mr Surrates. 24 Oct. 22do Henrici Svi. Inquisitio cont. 22 Oct. per Nicoloum Ridley de Unthanke, Gen. for 36to Henrici Svi, we have-Utlogatio Nicolai

@ The Sattiff of Haltmhistle seems to have assigned when

Will, Ridle de Morale,

James backed the cause of that mock prince,

What time we razed old Ayton tower .- P. 23, of York, is well known. In 1496, he was received

SUBBEY.

And given them light to set their hoods, - P. 22.

The garrisons of the English castles of Wark, called "The Blind Baron's Comfort;" when his barony of Blythe, in Lauderdale, was harried by bis company, to the number of 300 men. They profiled the pecifical knight of 500 sheep, 200 not, 200 horses and mares; the whole furniture of his house of Biyths, worth 100 pounds scost (1.88 disk), and every thing size that was portable. "This they work the said of the size of the said of the Note XV.

And of that Grot where Olives nod
Where, darling of each heart and eye
From all the youth of Sicily.

"State Roaals was of Palermo, and been of a very mabbe family, and when very round, ablorred over mabbe family, and when very round, ablorred outween of mankind, reasiving to deducate herself while for old whitely, that the, by when inspimere heard of, III har body was found in that eight, more heard of, III har body was found in that eight, when now the chapel is built us dely walfine, pin was carried up there by the shands of angels; for was carried up there by the shands of angels; for her being the shands of angels; for the property of the shands of angels and the their brighting pines, this holy woman lived a great and y years, feeling only on what the found grees. narrow and dreadful cleft, in a rook, which was always dropping wet, and was her place of retirement, as well as prayers having worn out even the rock with her knees. In a certain place, which is now open't on corpose to show it to those who came to be a root of the control of the control of the temperature of the control of the control of the which is just beneath the hole in the rock, which is open't on curpons, as I and, there is a very fine status of marble, representing her in a time pusture of the control of the control of the control of work, and the state, on which they are mass, is

NOTE XVI.

Himself still sleeps before his beads Have marked ten aves, and two creeds.-P. 29.

Priar John understood the soperific vietue of his bents and thretary, as well as bit namerake just has means, on which side seewer he turned himself. Whereupon the montk said to him, I never show the turned himself, whereupon the montk said to him, I never show the turned himself, whereupon the montk said to him, I never show the turned himself, and tu

Norm XVII.
The summoned Palmer came in place;

In his black mantle was he clad,
With Peter's keys in cloth of red,
On his broad shoulders arouseht... P 29.

On his broad shoulders "rought." P. 22,

A Palmer, opposed to a Platrine, was one who made in the said his said his proposed to a Platrine, was one who made in the proposed to the district where the proposed to the proposed to the district where the proposed to the district proposed to the district proposed to the pr lesque account of two such persons, entitled. "Simmy and his Brother." Their accourrements are thus ludierously described, (I discard the

Two tabards of the tartan;

St James's she'ls on t'other side shows As pretty as a partane

On Symmye and his brother,

To fair St Andrew's bound. Within the ocean-cave to pray, Where good St Rule his holy law

Sung to the billows' sound .- P. 30. St Regulus, (Scottice, St Rule) a monk of Patron tower The latter is at it stending and though me Archhishous of St Andrew's, hears the name of this Ocean It is nearly round, about ten feet in diameter, and the same in height. On one side is a inner den, where the miserable ascetic who inhaegress and regress is hardly practicable. As Resusome vestion to complain, that the ancient name of Kliftule (Cella Beauti) should have been suppresseded even in favour of the tutelar saint of Scotland. The reason of the change was that St Rule is said to have brought to Scotland the reliques of St Andrew. 40 MARMION.

Nors XIX.
Thence to Saint Fillan's blessed well,

Whose spring can frenzied dreams dispel,
And the crazed brain restore.—P.;31.
St. Fillan was a Scottish saint of some reputation.

SI Pilin was a Scottish saint of some reputation, idea, pet the common people still retain some of the superstitions connected with it. There are, in Perhabirs, several wells not springs delicated to different some still retain some of the superstitions connected with it. There are, in Conference of the superstition of the s

NOTES TO CANTO SECOND. Note I.

The scores are desert now, and bares, Where described onces above that A.—P. 30. Where the minds of the control of the control

"The second day of June, the king nest out of These huntings had, of course, a military character, and attendance upon them was a part of the military tenures, in Scotland, enumerates the ser-Taylor the water nost has given an account of

"There did I find the truly noble and right ho-

Engye, son and heir to the Marquis of Huntley, knight of Abercarney, and hundred of others. diverse colours, which they call tartan ; as for breeches, many of them, nor their forefathers, never Pitscottie's History of Scotland, folio edition, p. 148.

were any, but a jerkin of the same stuff that their home lovel; their garriers being hand or warshine of what love is the property being hand or warshine of which is a mantle of diverse colours, much finer and which is a mantle of diverse colours, much finer and their hone is a handleredier. And it then knots, about their ments, and thu, are large stuffer, and the stuffer of their ments, and thu, are large stuffer, and their ments and their ments and their ments of t shape. I rode with him from his house, where I saw the ruins of an old eastle, called the eastle of Kindroght. It was built by King Malesim Cammore, when Edward the Contessor, Hand, and Norman William, released in England. I speak of it, because it was the last house I saw in those party; for each of the contessor, Hand, and Norman William, released in England. I speak of it, because it was the last house I saw in those party; for either house, corn-field, or habitation for any creature, but deer, with horrers, whyes, and such like creatures,—which made me doubt that I should never house on a house acid.

where there were small contages, built on purpose to lodge in, which they call Longularia. Lank my good Lord Krikine, he commanded that it should always on the side of a lank; many settlers and poet boiling, and many spits turning and winding, with great variety of scheep.— as venion backs; sodies, great variety of scheep.— as venion backs; sodies, fresh salmon, pigcons, hens, capons, chickens, partridge, multi-cocks, heath-cocks, caperbellies, and termaentis; good ale, sacks, white and claret, tent. —"All these, and more than there, we had conti-

An those, and more than these, we had conti-nants and purveyors to victual our camps, which

NOTE II.

Where erst the Outlaw drew his arrow.—P. 34. The tale of the Outlaw man, who held out Newark Castle and Ettricke Forest against the Newark Castle and Ettricke Forest against the In the Macfariane MS., among other causes of James the Fifth's charter to the burgh, is mentioned, that the citizens assisted him to suppress this dangerous outlaw.

Nove 111.

Lone Saint Mary's silver take .- P. 37. This beautiful sheet of water forms the reservoir from which the Yarrow take its source. It is con-Lower and surrounded by mountains. In the win-

hence my friend Mr Wordsworth's lines;

The swans on sweet St Mary's lake

Near the lower extremity of the lake, are the ruins of Dryhone Tower, the birth-place of Mary Sentt, daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope, and famous by the traditional name of Flower of Yarrow She was married to Walter Scott of Harden. no less renowned for his depredations, than his bride for her beauty. Her romantic appellation was, in latter days, with equal justice, conferred on Miss Mary Lilias Scott, the last of the elder branch of the Harden family. The author well remembers though age had then injured the charms which prothough age had then injured the charms which pro-cured her the name. The words usually saing to the air of "Tweedside," beginning, "What beau-ties does Flora disclose," were composed in her

Hath laid our Lady's chapel low .- P. 38. The changl of Saint Mary of the Lowes (de lacubus) was situated on the eastern side of the lake, to which The vestiges of the building can now scarcely be an us commonly striking effect. The vestices of the situation, it commands a full view of the lake, with the lake itself to Lord Nanier On the left hand is the tower of Dryhope, mentioned in the preceding Nors V.

That wizard priest's, whose bones are thrust From company of holy dust.—P. 39.

At one conver of the burial review of the elemlate of the burial review of the demoment of the burial review of the demoment of the demonstration of the control of the mound, called Burnow's core, where tradition deposits the remains of a necromantle pries, the former tenant of the chaptainy. His story much resembles that of a dumbroulo is the "buok," and its resembles that of a dumbroulo is the "buok," and its which will be a burial to the burial resemble that of the burial resembles and the burial resembles and
Mr. James Hogz, more postteally designed the Extricks Shephen, T. Di his volume, entitled the "Mountain faul," which contains this, and many other hyperdistry stories and ballation of greatments, the Dark Loch-skene.-P. 40.

A mountain lake, of considerable size, at the head of the Moffai-vater. The character of the senergy is uncommonly aware; and the earn, or seotish as a state of the lake, and the earn, or seotish as the late lake. Loth-skeep diedarges itself into a brook, which, after a short and precipitate course, falls rom a extract of immune leight, the "Orey Mary's Tail." The "Ginn's Grave," afterwarm sentioned, is a sor of trench, which bears that name, a little way from the foot of the shared that name, a little way from the foot of the signed to commond the pass.

Where from high Whitby's cloistered pile, Bound to Saint Cuthbert's Holy isle,-P

Bound to Saint Cuthbert's Holy isle--P 42, The Abbey of Whithy, in the Archdeacenre of Cleaveland, on the coast of Yorkshire, was founded Northumberland, it contained both monks, and nons of the Benedictie orders but, contrary to wat was usual in such establishments, the abbesa articevards ruined by the Danes, and rebuilded by William Perey, in the reign of the Conqueror, There were no nuns there in Henry the Eighth's time, nor long before it. The ruins of Whitby Abto paid they manifested.

It has a wear like 19 by lates, from the assetty of the lates were already to the form the assetty of the lates were already to the lates of the assetty of the lates were already to the lates of the lates were already to the lates which the property of the lates were already to the lates were already to the lates which were already to the lates w

Then Whitby's nuns, exulting, told, How to their house three Barons bold

The popular account of this curious services which are popular account of this curious services which are probably confirmed and examined as the service which are the control of the curious first the service with the service of the curious first the curious curious services and the curious first the curious curious services are serviced as the curious curious curious services are serviced as the curious curious curious services are serviced as the curious services

having found a great wild boar, the hounds ran himwell near about the chapel and hermitage of Eakthe hounds out of the chapel, and kept himself thick of the wood, being put behind their game, boar lying dead: for which, the gentlemen, in a penance I shall lay on them for the safeguard of deliver unto you, William de Bruce, ten stakes, by you, or some of you, with a knife of one nenny priest and you, Rabbi do Percy, shall take teenth; vor, Allation, shall take time of real two, to be red as after-skill and to be taken on your backs, and as a strength; and to be taken on your backs, and the skill t

Whithy or his mercasor. This I entered, and conserved by the Jan you may have lives and goods aroundly be good and the promise by your next in however. that it shall be groundle, by your next in however. The parties of the properties and the parties of the part

"This service," it is added, "still continues to be performed with the prescribed ceremonies, though not by the proprietors in person. Past of the lands charged therewith are now held by a gentleman of the name of Herbert." The lovely Edelfied .- P. 50.

She was the daughter of King Osway, who, in gratitude to heaven for the great victory which he won in 655, aminst Penda, the pagan kin, of Reven, dedicated Rdelfdeda, then but a year old, to the service of God in the monastery of Whitby, of which St Hilda was then abbes. She afterwards adorned the place of her education with great magnificence.

Was changed into a coil of stone,
When holy Hilda prayed.
how sea fewls' pinions fail,

how sea fowls' pinions fail,
As over Whitby's towers they sail,—P. 50.

These two miracles are much insisted upon by a scient writers—he have occasion to mention eith Whitby or M Hilda. The reliques of the snakshich infested the precinets of the convent, as were, at the abbess's prayer, not only behealed, by tetrified, are still found about the rocks, and as branch by Pentersuit Smallins Annuality.

(If it has another to the yours of the resulting, the pentersuit of the pentersuit of the resulting state of the pentersuit of the p

950

MARMION.

NOTE XL

His hody's resting place, of old, How oft their patron changed, they told .- P. 51 St Cutbbert was, in the choice of his sepulchre. one of the most mutable and unreasonable saints in the Calendar. He died a n 686 in a hermiteen before. His body was brought to Lindistarne The monks flad to Scotland, with what they deemed through Scotland for several years, and came as far hy tempests. He at length made a halt at Norham: have swam. It still lies, or at least did so a few Tillmouth, From Tillmouth, Cuthbert wandered Prantferred. At length, the Danes continuing to Chester-le-street, that, passing through a forest ealled Dunholme, the Saint and bis carriage became law. Here the saint chose his place of residence; persons at a sime. When one dies, the survivors associate to them, in his room, a person judged fit

Before his standard fled. - P. 59.

Every one has heard, that when David I., with the English host marched against them under the was imputed the great victory which they obtained moor. The conquerors were at least as much in-Remorant Mand See Curractur's Coledonia v. 699;

Twas he, to vindicate his reign.

Edged Alfred's faulchion on the Dane. Cutbbert, we have seen, had no great reason to spare the Danes, when emportunity offered. Aca consolation which, as was reasonable, Alfred, after the victory of Ashendown, rewarded, by a your offering at the shrine of the Saint As to commanding the shrine to be opened, seized with heat and slokness, accompanied with such a panie terror, that, notwithstam-ing there was a umptions of the state of the state of the state of the such as the state of the thought no small part both of the miracle and the senance, I and never drew his bridle till the not to

NOTE XIV.

St Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame

The sea born beads, that bear his name - P. St.
Although we do not learn that Culbher was, during his life, such an artificer as Dunstan, his brother in aneatity, yet, since his death, he has acquired the reputation of forging these finetends and pass there by the name of St. Culbh r'th Reads, While at this task, he is supposed to ait during the night upon a certain rock, and use another as his anvit. This story was perhaps credited in 6-mer dury at bond the Sank's legend contains own on

NOTE XV. Old Colwulf.- P. 53.

Cockworf, or Calward, King of Northumberland, intermitted in the either either. He was a man of marinted in the either either in the was a man of the control of the second of the either eithe

These penitential vauits were the Geissel-geroofs of German convents. In the earlier and more rigid times of monastic discipline, they were sometimes used as a cemetery for the lay benefactors of the convent, whose unsanctified corpses were then seldom permitted to pollute the choir, They also But their most frequent use, as implied by the Tynemouth's haughty Prioress .- P. 55. That there was an ancient priory at Tynemouth, of a holy lady called Tude, who had sent him a severe penances on such as presumed to approach

It is well known, that the religious who broke penalty as the Roman vestals in a similar case. A penalty as the noman vestals in a similar case. A were some years and discovered the remains of a 234 female skeleton, which, from the shape of the niche, and position of the figure, seemed to be that

NOTES TO CANTO THIRD.

The village Inn -P 74 The accommodations of a Scottish hostelyle, or inn, in the 16th century, may be collected from feasted her paramour with rabbits, capons, partridges, and Bourdeaux wine. At least, if the Scottish inns were not good, it was not for want of encouragement from the legislature, who, so early horse, but, by another statute, ordained, that no for exercising such hospitality. But, in spite of

The death of a dear friend,-P. 80.

Among other omens to which faithful credit is given amone the Scottish peasantry, is what is called the "dead bell," explained, by my friend James Hogg, to be that tinkling in the ears which the of some friend's decease. He tells a story to the & James L. Parliament L. cap. 24; Parliament 111, cap. 36.

The Goblin Hall -P 81

is Fordun, whose words are—"A. D. Mecakyu, Ilago Gilfard of Vester moriture, edus extrum, vel saltem caveam, et dong lonem, arte damantas antilease and the saltem caveam, et dong lonem, arte damantas antibester mirabili species subheraneus, oper mirifice constructus, magno terrarum spatio proteitaus, qui communiter Bo-Hizz, appellatus est."—th. X.
cap. Ill. Eff David conjectures, that Bugh de Offcap. Ill. Eff David conjectures, that Bugh de Offgreat oppressor.

AF I TOWARD W.

NOTE IV.

There floated Haco's banner trim Above Norweyan warriors grim. -P. 88, In 1263. Haco, King of Norway, came into the made a descent at Largs, in Ayrabire. Here he was Alexander III. Baco retreated to Orkney, where are still existing near the place of battle, many harrows some of which having been opened, were

His wigard habit strange,-P. 85. in the choice and form of their vestments. Their eans are oval, or like pyramids, with langets on each side, and fur within. Their sowns are long, are three inches broad, and have many cabalistical are dagger fast ion; and their awords have neither guard nor scabbard." See these, and many other particulars, in the Discourse concerning Devils and Spirits, appeared to Reginal Scott's Discovery of Upon his breast a pentacle.-P. 86. "A pentacle is a piece of fine linen, folded with five corners according to the five senses, and sultably inscribed with characters. This the magician extends towards the stirits which he evokes, when conformable unto the ceremonies and rites of magic." See the Discourse, &c. above mentioned,

As horn upon that blessed night. When vawning graves, and dying croans, Proclaimed hell's empire overthrown,—P. ar. It is a popular article of faith, that those who are born on Christmas, or Good-Friday, have the power of seeing spirits, and even of commanding them. The Spanlards imputed the haggard and downcast looks of their Philip II, to the diagreeable visions to which this privilege subjected him.

Nove VIII.

Yet still the mighty spear and shield, The elfin warrior doth wield

The following extract from the Essay upon the Fairy Superstitions, in "The Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," will shew whence many of the particulars of the combat between Alexander III. and the Goblin Kuight are derived:—

"Gervase of Tilbury (Otia Imperial, ap. Script, rer. Brunspic, Vol. I. p. 797) relates the following pepular story concerning a fairy knight; 'Oabert, a bold and powerful baron, visited a noble family in was informed, that if any knight, unattended, and set cut, attended by a single squire, whom he which was surrounded by an ancient entrenchment. vants. The horse was of a sable colour, as well as till cock-crowing, when, with eves flashing fire, he blood. 'Gervane adde, that, as long as he lived, the scar of his wond opened arrive not the anniversary of the even on which he encountered the spirit,—for the state of the even of the even of the state of the sta

Besides the instances of Elfin Chivalry, above hand, from which he takes his name. He incists mion," gives a singular account of an officer who rately. The members volled together, united their strange antagonist, bad, as the reader may sessed such powers of self-union; nor did his efforts make more effectual improved on mon them. How the combat terminated I do not exactly remember, and have not the book by me; but I think the spirit made to the intruders on his mansion the usual proposal, that they should renounce their redemptions which being declined, he was obliged to

The most singular take of the kind is constituted in a strate communicated to me by or Artical Mr and a strate communicated to me by or Artical Mr and a strate communicated to the strategy of the strategy o

I have a surious buildings of the surious terms and the surious terms and the surious terms are surrounded to the surrounded terms and the surrounded terms are the temporary forces. Nothing poils are the temporary forces were already to the surrounded temporary forces on some quadrant relatification interpretation to the surrounded temporary forces on some quadrant relatification and the surrounded temporary forces on some quadrant relatification and the surrounded temporary forces on the surrounded temporary forces on the surrounded temporary forces in the surrounded temporary forces and the surrounded temporary forces of the surrounded temporary forces on the surrounded temporary forces of the surrounded ure red lassellas novitate fermilles percelasproprieta sciencia e via timility as resides reoperates and red timility as resides reoperates and red timility and red timility and opposition to red to the red timility and red latent and red timility and red timility and red latent and red timility and red timility and red timility and publicates. Nomes atomogen tiling reduits since and timine and back as a red over the red timility and timine and back as a red over the red timility and timility for children and timility and timility and time be found in the chapter tilings of Durbeau, or, at a firmally correspondent.

Lindesay is made to allude to this adventure of Ralph Bulmer, as a well-known story, in the 4th Canto, Stanza XXII.

The northern champions of old were accustomed possitiarly to search for, and delight in, encounters with such military spectres. See a whole chapter on the subject in BANYHOLINUS De Causis contempts

NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

Close to the hut, no more his own, Close to the aid he sought in vain, The morn may find the stiffened swain, -- P. 98.

I cannot help here mentioning, that, on the night in which these lines were written, auggested, as they were, by a sudden fail of anow, beginning after samest, an unfortunate man perished exactly in the manner here described, and his body was next upon the stance of the base of the same than the

dent happened within five miles of the farm of Ashestiel. Nors II.

Scarce had lamented Forbes paid, &c.-P. 99. Sir William Forbes of Pitsligo, Baronets unequalled, perhaps, in the degree of individual affection entertained for him by his Friends, as well in the general respect and exteem of Sociland at in the general respect and exteem of Sociland at and patronised in life, as well as celebrated after his decease, was not long published, before the follow the subject of his marraive. This melancholy event very shortly successed the marriage of the Friend to whom this introduction is addressed,

NOTE III.

This personage is a strolling demon, or egg if follet, who, once upon a time, got admistance into a monastery as a scullion, and played the monks many pranks. He was also a sort of Rebin Goodfellow, and Jack o' Lanthors. It is in allusion to this mischlevous demon that Milton's clown speaks—

She was pinched, and pulled, she said,

"The History of Friar Rush" is of extreme rarity, and, for some time, even the existence of such a book was doubted, although it is expressly altuded to by Reginald Scott, in his "Discertey of Witcheraft." I have perused a copy in the value library or my friend Mr liber; and to bueve, from Mr fielow's "Aneedotes of Literature," that there is one in the excellent collection of the Shar-there is one in the excellent collection of the Shar-

NOTE 1V.

Sir David Lindesay of the Mount, Lord Lion King-at-arms. - P. 107.

The late elaborate edition of Sir David Lindrans's Works, by Mr George Chainners, has probabily introduced him to many of my readers. It is perhaps to be reserved, that the iseamed editor had not bestowed more pains in cluedating his author, even although he should have omitted, or at least reserved, his disquisitions on the origin of the language used by the poets. Sut, with all its faults,

* I beg leave to quite a single instance from a very interesting passage. Sir David, recounting his striction to his work is an acceptable present to Kettida smit. dispared, by To Mari, Lindsay was well sharen for many formation of the same property of the same property of the same property of the same have had a powerful effect upon the recognit of the property of the same transposed property of the same proper of the utmost importance, the inauguration of the Kings-at-arms, who presided over their colleges, was proportionally solemn. In fact, it was the mimicry of a royal coronation, except that the unction was made with wine instead of oil. In Scotland, a namesake and kinsman of Sir David

King James V., in his infancy, is made, by the learned editor's punctuation, to say,... The first sillable, that then did mute Was ya. ds. Ivn. 1900 the lute;

n playd I twenty apringls perque ilk was great plesour for to hear.

Mr Chalmers does not inform us, by note, or glossary, but is meant by the king "muting pa, da, ign, upon the

what is meant by the king "emitting pa, da, fun, super the late", but any eld weman in Sectiond will beer witness, that pa, da, lyn, are the first efforts of a child to say, Where's Davie Lindsony? and that the subsequent words begin another sections.—

Then playd I twenty springis perqueir, &c.

In another place, "justing bunis," i.e. icome, or implements of tiking, is faceticuly interpreted "playful limbs." Many such minute errors could be pointed out; but these are only mentioned incidentally, and not as diminishing the real meets of the delition.

Lindeasy, inaugurated in 1997, "was crowned by King James with the ancient rewood Scotland, which was used before the Scottinh kings assumed a close crown," and, on occusion of the same solormed as the sum of the sum of

Crichton Castle .- P. 109.

where others can be a part of the Type of the Market State of the Type of the w Inspector, appeared, renders as also have expressed, the cause of forfeiture to be—"Ro qued Leavem armorism. Regen pugno viclosset, dum eum de veeptiv suis admount." See Nishets Heraday, Part IV. chap. 16; and Leelad Birleria ad Annum 1818.

predecessor Rarl William heheaded in Edinburgh Castle, with his brother, in 1440. It is said to have 1483, it was garrisoned by Lord Crichton, then its sure he had incurred by seducing his sister Margaret, in revenge, it is said, for the monarch having last Earl Bothwell, were divided, the barony and proprietor would take a little pains to preserve these splendid remains of antiquity, which are at present used as a fold for sheep, and wintering cattle; although, perhaps, there are very few ruins in Scotland which display so well the style and heauty of ancient castle-architecture. The castle More. The enithet, which is not uncommonly anplied to the prisons of other old castles in Scotland. " Epistola Itinevaria" of Tollius: "Cureer subterrangus, sive, ut Mauri appellant, Marmonna," p. 147; and again, "Coguntur owner Captivi sub noctem MARMORRAS," p. 243. The same word applies to the dungeons of the ancient Moorish castles in Snain, and serves to show from what nation the Gothic style of castle huilding was originally de-Nove VI

Earl Adam Hepburn .- P. 111.

He was the second Earl of Bothwell, and fell in the field of Flodden, where, according to an ancient

Then on the Scottish part, right proud, And stenning forth, with stomach good, Into the enemies throng he thrast ;

And Bothwell Bothwell cried bold, To cause his soldiers to ensue, But there he caught a wellcome cold, The Englishmen straight down him

The Englishmen straight down him threw Fieldern Field.

Adam was grandfather to James, Earl of Bothwell, too well known in the history of Queen Mary.

Novs VII.

For that a messenger from heaven,
In vain to James had counsel given

This story, it cold by Pitterstite with distractional templetisty. The Man, assure that Yazace could suppletistly a street, as such as the property of the pitters of the p matters. It is care to Lilleys, where he happened to be for the time at the Goundit, very sail and do lorous, making his devotion to God, to send him meant time, there exame an unit adit in a burg sown is at the kine doors, and benefit about him in gain a send of the se ^{*} Baskins.-+ Long.-+; Checks.-5 Asking.

sired to speak with him. While, at the last, he came where the king was sitting in the desk at his

"By this man had spoken thir words unto the seen. I heard say, Sir David Lindesay, Ivonseen." Buchanan, in more elegant, though not more impressive language, tells the same story, and Lindesay: " In iis (f. c. qui proprius astiterant) fuit et probitatis, nec a literarum studiis alienus, et eenissem, ut vulgatam vanis rumoribus fabulam, omissurus eram."-Lib. XIII. The king's throne, himself, with twelve stalls for the Knights Companions of the order of the Thistle, is still shows as the place where the apparition was seen. I know "My mother has sent me," could only be used by

I am glad of an opportunity to describe the cry of the deer by another word than loowing, although the latter has been seneticed by the use of the Scottish metrical translation of the Paalms. Reli seems to be an abbreviation of bellow. This sylvan

June saw his father's overthrow .-- P. 113.

the hostile army. When the king saw his own and was slain, it is not well understood by whom, Tames TV after the battle passed to Stirling and death of his father, their founder, he was seized vere penances. See a following Note on Canto V. The battle of Sauchie-burn, in which James III. # !l. was fought 18th June, 1488.

Norz X.
Sorcad all the Borough-Moor below, &c.-P. 199.

Speak an angular or experience where of the leaves of the control of the control

Norm XI.

Over the parvillant flow-P, 122.

If not except home the feetith mode of me the next and the following the followi building of their country building had they framed of four mice, but and it long by preserve whence of four mice, but and it long by preserve whence the four mice, but and it long the preserve whence the mice beautiful to the promotion of all another, and the substitution of the preserve the much bound of the preserve the much bound of the substitution of the preserve that the four the preserve that the four the preserve that the four the substitution of the preserve that the four the substitution of the preserve that the preserve the preserve that the preserve that the preserve that the preserve that the preserve the preserve that the preserve that the preserve the preserve that the preserve the preserve in proun Scotland's royal shield The ruddy Lion ramped in gold. -- P. 123.

The well-known arms of Scotland. If you will believe Boethius and Buchanan, the double treasure round the belief, mentioned p. 21, counter Autotion of the County of the County of the County by Achalus, King of Scotland, contemporary of Charlemagne, and fromder of the celebrated League with France, but Later antiquaries made, prowith the County of the into Gregorius Magnusi associated with himself in north-eastern coast of Scotland some part of the north-eastern coast of Scotland some part of the NOTES TO CANTO FIFTH.

Note I.

Caledonia's Queen is changed.—P. 128.

The Old Town of Fdinburgh was secured on the north side by a lake, now drained, and on the south by a wall, which there was some attempt to make defensible even so late as 1745. The gates, and the greater part of the wall, have heen pulled down, in the course of the late extensive and beautiful early.

largement of the city. Mr Thomas Campbell proposed to celebrate Edinburgh under the spithet here borrowed. But the "Queen of the North" nent a pen the proposed distinction.

Norte II. Flinging thy white arms to the sea .- P. 129. Close muiting this line I find I have inadver-somewhat a different meaning, from a chorus in Britain heard the descant bold,

She flung her white arms o'er the sea.

NOTE III. Since first, when conquering York arose,

To Henry meek she gave repose .- P. 131.

Money VI with his oueen, his heir, and the chieft of his family, fled to Scotland after the fatal battle of Towton. In this note a doubt was formerly expressed, whether Henry VI, came to Edinyear of his reign, which corresponds to the year of God 1461. This grant, Douglas, with his usual neglect of accuracy, dates in 1368. But this error being corrected from the conv in Macfarlane's MSS. n. 119, 120, removes all scenticism on the subject of Henry VI, being really at Edinburgh. John Nanier was son and heir of Sir Alexander Napier,

Le vieil en debouterent,

Qui fuytyf alla prendre
D'Escosse le garand,
De tous siecles le mend
Et le plus tollerant

Et le plus tollerant.
RECOLLECTION DES AVANTUR

Nove IV.

Whose Anglo-Norman tones whilere Could win the Second Henry's ear. P. 132

Mr Ellis, in his valuable Introduction to the "Specimens of Romance," has proved, by the concurring testimony of La Ravalliere, Tressan, but our apple of the property of the

Nore V

The cloth-yard arrows flow like hall, —F. 134, this is no poetical exaggeration. In some of the counties of Regland, distinguished for archery, used. The Scottish arrows are actually used. The Scottish arrows are selected in the second of t

Note VI.

To pass, to wheel, the croupe to gain,
And high curvett, that not in vain
The sword-away might descend amain

"The most useful air, as the Frenchmen term it, is territer; the counseltes, colorides, or un pas et un paul, being fitter for horses of parade and triumpt than for soldiers: yet I cannot deny but a demirode with courbeties, so that they be not too high, may be useful in a fight or melee; for, as Labroue hath it, morency having a horse that was excellent in nerforming the deminolte, did, with bis sword, strike did most: for taking his time when the horse was struck them from their borses to the ground."-

Lord Harbort of Checkwards Life in 48

He saw the hardy burgbers there March armed, on foot, with faces bare,-P. 135. The Scottish burgesses were, like yeomen, appointed to be armed with hows and sheaves, sword. buckler, knife, spear, or a good axe instead of a bow, if worth L. 100: their armour to be of white or bright harness. They were solds hots, i. c. bright steel caps, without crest or visor. By an act of James AV., their weapon-schowings are appointed to be held four times a-year, under the aldermen or

On foot the vecmen too .- P. 135.

the peasantry of Scotland, by repeated statutes; spears and axes seem universally to have been used plate-jack, hauberk, or brigantine; and their mis-"not for cold, but for cutting." The mace also on the battle of Flodden mentions a band-

Who manfully did meet their fors With leaden mauls, and lances long,

When the feudal array of the kingdom was called forth, each man was obliged to appear with forty days' provision. When this was expended, which took place before the battle of Flodden, the army melted away of course. Almost all the Scottish

A banquet viels, and coarly wines ... P. 190. In all transactions of great or petty importance, and among whomseever taking place, it would and character of James are delineated according to our best historisms. His remantic disposition, which plunge again into the tide of pleasure. Probably, laughed at the superstitious observances to which he singular poem by Dunbar, seemingly addressed to clusion. It is a most daring and profane parody on the services of the church of Rome, entitled,

274

Dunbar's Dirige to the King,
Byding over long in Striculing.
We that are bere, in heaven's glory,
To you, that are in purgatory,
Commend us on our hearty wise;
I mean we folks in Paradise,
In Edinburgh, with all merriness,
To you in Stirling, with distress,

I mean we folks in Paradise, In Edinburgh, with all merriness, To you in Stirling, with distress, Where neither pleasure nor delight is, For pity this epistle wrytis, &c.

See the whole in Sibbald's Collection, Vol. I. p. 234.

Sir Hugh the Heron's wife held sway .- P. 142.

It has been already resident, the King Jenner's againstance with Lady Hermer Devol did not considerable and the Lady Hermer Devol did not be the Lady Hermer Lady Herm

Nore XII. For the fair Queen of France

Sent him a Turquois ring, and glove, And charged him, as her knight and lov For her to break a lance.—P. 143.

"Also the Queen of France wrote a love-letter to the King of Scotland, calling him her love, shewing him that she nad suffered much rebuke in France for the defending his bonour. She believed surely that he would recompense her again with some of his kincily support in her necessity; that is to say, that he would rate her an army, and come three foot of ground on English ground, for her sake. To that effect he sent him a ring off her finger, with fourteen thousand Prench crowns to pay his expenses "--Prescoverse, p. 10. A turquois ringe-probably this fatal gift is, with James's sword and dagger, preserved in the College of Heraids, London.

Nove XIII.

Archibald Bell-the-Cat .- P. 168 Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, a man rea mason, who had been created Earl of Mar. And logue of the Mice, who had formed a resolution. that it would be highly advantageous to their com-

"By this was advised and spoken by thir lords foresaid, Cochran, the Earl of Mar, came from the king to the council, (which council was holden in the kirk of Lawder for the time,) who was well accompa nied with a band of men of war, to the number of three hundred light axes, all claid in white livery, and black bends thereon, that they might be known for Cobran the Barl of Maris men. Hinstell was for Cobran the Barl of Maris men. Hinstell was chain of gold about his neck, to the value of five hundred crowns, and four blowing horns, with both the well of gold and silk, set with precious stone, ran has this heumont bern before him, overallt with golds and so were all the rest of his horns, and all his patilons were of fine carvas of silk, and the fore he rushed rudely at the kirk-door. The connto receive in the Parl of Mar and so many of his And the Earl of Angus met with the Earl of Mar. *He had been the hunter of mischief over long, This Cochran asked, 'My lords, is it mowst or " Notwithstanding, the lords held them quiet till they caused certain armed men to pass into the king's pallion, and two or three wise men to pass with them, and give the king fair pleasant words, titll they laid hands on all the king's servants, and took them and hanged them before his eyes over the bridge of Lawder. Incontinent they brought forth Cochran, and his hands bound with a tow, win desired them to take one of his own palions with the contract of the

NOTE XIV.

Against the war had Angus stood And chafed his royal lord .- P. 149

Ages was an old man where the war against fragined was rooked upon. He ensumely spoke for the property of the property of the conon the eve of the battle of Floiden, remonstrated on the eve of the battle of Floiden, remonstrated the property of the control o

Nove !

hen rest you in Tantallon Hold .- P. 1-

The ruiss of Tantallon Castle occupy a high rock projecting into the German Ocean, about two miles cast of North Berwick. The building is not seen till a close approach, as there is rising ground between the same of the land. The circuit is of large extent, fenced upon three sides by the precipies which overlanes the case, and on the fourth two double ditch and very strong outworks. Tantallon was a principal castle of the Douglas family, and continued to hold out against James V. The king names, as Pitscottie informs us with laudable minuteness, were "Thrawn-mouth'd Mow and her lords were laid in pawn at Dunbar. Yet, notwithraise the siege, and only afterwards obtained pos-Simeon Panango, When the Earl of Angus rehe again obtained possession of Tantallon, and it Sir Ralph Sadler, who resided there for some time under Angus's projection, after the failure of his perceiation for matching the infant Mary with Ed. poorly furnished, it was of such strength as might

Ding down Tantallon,

Mak a brig to the Bass.

Tentallon was at length "dung down" and rulned by the Covenanters; its lord, the Marquis of Douglas, being a favourer of the royal cause. The eartiand barony were sold in the beginning of the eighteenth century to President Daltymple of North Berwick, by the them Marquis of Douglas.

Their motto on his blade, -P. 150.

A very ancient sword, in possession of Lord Douglas, bears, among a great deal of flourishing, two hands pointing to a heart, which is placed betwirt timen, and the date 1339, being the year in which Stuce charged the Good Lord Douglas to earry his heart to the Holy Land. The following lines (the popular saying in his time) are inscribe the emblem: So mony guid as of ye Dovglas beinge,

Of ane surname was ne'er in Scotland se I will ye charge, efter yat I depart.

To ye last day I sie my Saviour,

I do protest in tyme of almy ringe,

Ye lyk subject had never ony keing.
This curious and valuable relique was nearly lost during the civil war of 1740-6, being carried away from Douglas Castle by some of those in arms for Prince Charles. But great interest having been made by the Duke of Dourlas among the chief partisans of Swart, it was at length restored. It resembles a Highland claymorn, of the yound size, is of an ex-

NOTE XVII.

Martin Swart.—P 155.

The name of this German general is preserved by that of the field of hattle, which is called, after him, Swart-moor. There were songs about him long current in England. See Dissertation prefixed to Rition's Ancient Songs, 1792, p. ixi.

Note XVIII.

Perchance some form was unobserved,
Perchance is goint of faith is severed.—P. 156.

It was early necessary for those who feit theming ouncies of the trial by due, to find a stay of the strange and obviously preserves shower of the those who took up an unrelieves quarril, were supposed sufficient to convert it into a just not, one by the strange of the strange of the trial trial trial trial trial trial trial
trial trial trial trial trial trial trial
trial trial trial trial trial
trial trial trial trial trial
trial trial trial
trial trial trial
trial trial
trial trial
trial trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial
trial represented. Brantome tells a story of an Italian, who entered the lists upon an unjust quarrel, but,

Dun-Edin's Cross .- P. 159.

The Cross of Edinburgh was an ancient and eufeet high. At each angle there was a pillar, and wanton pretext, that it encumbered the street;

called the Luckenbooths, and, on the other, an From the tower of the Cross, so long as it remained, the heralds published the acts of Parliament; and its site, marked by radii, diverging from a stone centre, in the High Street, is still the place where proclamations are made,

Note XX.

This seef of summore came. — 7. 10.6.

This operators it claim is need tools by allow of the operators operators of the opera

"In this mean time, when they were taking forth

⁸ Sea, on this curious subject, the Eastern Pairies, in the Paired Minuschy, "vol. 2, and rife from this best site Jackson on United Styles," by 12s. Chancer calls Flute the "King of Doubled," by 12s. Chancer calls Flute the "King of Doubled Styles," in the was not setually the devil, he must be considered as the "prince of the power of the sin". The most dered as the "prince of the power of the sin". The most careachable Induces of these surviving classical superatives cannot be supported by the single styles of the single s

the time, there was a cry heard at the Markel-core as it had been a summon, which was named as it had been a summon, which was named as it had been a summon, which was named as it had been a summon, which was named as it had been a summon as it had been a summon as a summon asummon as a summon as a summon as a summon as a summon as a summon

-- vvi

Fitz. Eustace bade them pause a while Before a venerable pile. - P. 184.

The convent alluded to is a foundation of Cistertian nuns, near North Berwick, of which there are still some remains. It was founded by Duncan Earl of Fife, in 1216.

NOTE XXII

Drove the Monks forth of Coventry. - P. 166.

This relates to the extractivelys of a real Robertical Marmins, in the region of Kine Stephen, when William of Swelney Since with Some attributes of the Swelney Since and Swe

NOTES TO CANTO SIXTH.

Note I.

At Iol more deep the mead did drain,—P. 171.

The lost fit he heather Dancis a ward still spacing to Christonan in Southall, we advantaged with Christonan in Southall, we want to the Christonan in Southall, we want to the control of the court of Domanta, who was a generally and of the court of Domanta, who was a generally and the court of the court of Domanta, who was a generally of the court of Domanta, who was a generally and the court of the court

Nore

On Christmas eve the mass was sung. -P. 172.

In Roman Catholic countries, mass is never said at night, excepting on Christmas eve. Each of the rolles with which that holiday used to be celebra el, might admit of a long and curious note; but hall content myself with the following description f Christmas, and his attributes, as personified in ne of Ben Jonson's Masques for the court. "Enlier CHRISTMAS, with two or three of the Guard le is attired in round hose, long stockings, a clos-

He is attired in round hose, long stockings, a close loublet, a high-recovned hat, with a broach, a long hin beard, a truncheon, little ruffs, white shoes, his earfs and garters tied cross, and his dram beaten efore him."—

efore him."—
"The names of his children, with their a
"Miss-Rule, in a velvet cap, with a sprig.

cloak, great yellow ruff, like a reveller; his torchbearer bearing a rope, a cheese, and a basket. "Caroll, a long fawny coat, with a red cap, and a flut at his girdle; his torch-bearer carrying a songbook open. "Mnerd-nie, like a fine cook's wife, drest neat.

"Mine'd-pie, like a fine cook's wife, drest neat, her man earrying a pie, dish, and spoons.
"Gamboli, like a tumbler, with a boop and bells; his rooth heaver armyld with color staff, and himstone.

e.oth.

"lost and Pair, with a pair-royal of aces in his bat, his garment all done over with pairs and purs;

bat, his garment all done over with pairs and purs; his squire carrying a box, cards, and counters. "New-year's got, in a blue coat, serving-man like, with an orange, and a sprig of rosemary gilt on his head, his hat full of broaches, with a collar on his head, his has full of broaches, with a collar of ginger bread; his forch-bearer carrying a marchpain, with a bottle of wine on either arm. "Meanwing, in a masquing pied suit, with a visori his borch-bearer carrying the box, and ring-visor; his torch-bearer carrying the box, and ringing it.

"Wossell, like a neat sempater and songster; her page bearing a brown bowl, drest with ribbands, and rescuency, before her.

"Offering, in a short gown, with a porter's staff in his hand; a with borne before him, and a bason, by

"Baby Cocke, drest like a boy, in a fine long coat,

NOTES TO CANTO SINTH.

biggin, bib. muckender, and a little dagger; his usher bearing a great cake, with a bean and a

Norm III.

Who lists, may in their mumming see

It seems certain, that the Memoures of England, who in Northumberland at lead used to go also in dispute to the neighbouring houses, bearing the indispute to the neighbouring houses, bearing the allowing the same properties of the properties of t

.......Alexander, king of Macedon.
Who conquered all the world but Scotland alone;
When he came to Scotland his courage grew cold,

These, and many such series, were repeated, but you is, and unconnectedly. There was also oesa-sionally, believe, a Saint George. In all, there were the series of the ser

Mr Scott of Harden, my kind and affectionate text, from Mertoun-house, the seat of the Harden

No superstition in the use

Pray come, and welcome, or plague rott Mr Walter Scott, Lexindden.

The venerable old gentleman to whom the lines a barber, he affected to "wear a beard for the king." I sincerely hope this was not absolutely the original reason of my ancestor's beard; which, as appears from a portrait in the possession of Sie Henry Hay Macdougal, Bart, and another painted mansion was to be seen a few years ago, and may and Cymmer. The former is retained, as more

The spirit's blasted tree.-P. 176.

% The old gentlemen was an intimate of this celebrated + The history of their feud may be found in Pennat's Tour in Wales

Starting, he bent an eager ear, -How should the sounds return again?

And all at home his hunter train.

Then sudden anger flashed his eye,

And deen revenee he young to take

Then sudden anger flashed his eye, And deep revenge he vowed to take. On that bold man who dared to force His red deer from the forest brake.

Unhappy Chief! would nought avail, No signs impress thy heart with fear, Thy lady's dark mysterious dream.

Three ravens gave the note of death,
As through mid air they winged their way;
Then a'er his head, in rapid flight,
They coak, they seem their destined prey,

Then n'er his head, in rapid flight,
They croak,—they scent their destined prey.

Ill.omened bird! as legends say,

Who hast the wonderous power to know While health fills high the throbbing vein Tile fated hour when blood must flow.

Blinded by rare, alone he passed, Nor sought his ready vassals aid; But what his fate lay long unknown,

For many an anxious year delayed.

A peasant marked his angry eye,
He saw him reach the lake's dark bourne,
He saw him near a Blasted Oak.

But never from that hour return.

Three days passed o'er, no tidings came;—
Where should the Chief his steps delay?

Where should the Chief his steps delay? With wild alarm the servants ran, Yet knew not where to point their way.

His vassals ranged the mountain's height, The covert close, and wide-spread plain; But all in vain their easer search, They note must see their lord again.

Yet Faney, in a thousand shapes, Bore to his home the Chief once more: Some saw him on high Mocl's top. Some saw him on the winding shore. With wonder fraught the tale went round, Amazement chained the hearer's tongue; Each peasant felt his own sad loss, Vet foully oler the story hung.

Yet fondly o'er the story bung.

Oft by the moon's pale shadowy light,
His sged nurse, and steward grey.

Pale lights on Cader's rocks were seen, And midnight voices heard to moan; 'Twas even said the Blasted Oak,

And, to this day, the peasant still, With cautious fear, avoids the ground In each wild branch a spectre sees, And trembles at each rising sound.

Ten annual suns had held their cour In summer's smile, or winter's stor The lady shed the widowed tear,

Yet still to hope her hear would cling As 3'er the mind illusions play,— Of scavel fond, perhaps her lord

'Twas now November's cherries bour.
Which drenching rains and clouds defaDreary bleak Robell's tract appeared,
And dull and dank each valley's space.

Loud o'er the wier the hoarse flood fell, And dashed the foamy spray on high; The west wind bent the forest tops, And angry frowned the evening sky.

A stranger passed Llanelltid's bourne, His dark-grey steed with sweat bespre t. Which, wear'ed with the leagthened way, Could searcely gain the hill's ascent The portal reached, the iron bell Loud sounded round the outward wall;

" Of lead me to your lady soon; Say,—it is my sail lot to tell.

Say,—it is my sad lot to tell, To clear the fate of that brave knight, She long has proved she loved so well,"

Then, as he crossed the spacious hall, The menials look surprise and fear; Still o'er his harp old Modred hung, And touched the notes for grief's worn ear.

And touched the notes for grief's worn en

Then, asking what his mistion meant.
The graceful stranger sighed and spoke:--

Gladly my tongue would tell its tal My words at ease unfettered flow

The story claims thy full belief: E'en in the worst events of life.

Suspense removed is some relief.
"Though worn by eare, see Madoc here,

Ah, let his name no ancer raise, For now that mighty Chief lies low!

"E'en from the day, when, chained by fate, By wizzard's dream, or potent spell, Lingering from sad Salopia's field,

'Reft of his aid the Perey fell.

"E'en from that day misfortune still.

Pursued him with unwearied step; Vindictive still for Hotspur's death. Vanquished at length, the Glynds

To find a casual shelter there, In some lone cot, or desert wood.

"Clothed in a shepherd's humble guise, He gained by toil his scanty bread; He who had Cambria's sceptre borne, and her brave some to allow lett.

"To penury extreme, and grief,

The Chieftain fell a lingering pr I heard his last few faultering wor Such as with pain I now convey,

To Sele's sad withow bear the tale, Nor let our horrid secret rest; Give but his corse to sacred earth, Then may my parting soul be blest.—

"Dim waxed the eye that floreely shone, And faint the tongue that proudly spoke And weak that arm, still raised to me.

"How could I then his mandate bear?
Or how his last benest obey?
A rebel deemed, with him I fied;

With him I shunned the light of day.

'Proscribed by Henry's hostile rage,

My country lost, despoiled my land, Desperate, I fled my native soil, And fought on Syria's distant strand.

"O, had thy long lamented lord

The holy cross and banner viewed, Died in the sacred cause! who fell sad victim of a private feud!

"Led. by the ardour of the chase,
Far distant from his own domain:
From where Garthmaelor spreads her shad:
The Glyndwr sought the opening plain.

....

"With head aloft, and antiers wide, A red buck roused, then crossed in view Stung with the sight, and wild with rage,

Swift from the wood fierce Howel flew
"With bitter taunt, and keen reproach,

"With bitter taunt, and keen reproach He, all impetuous, poured his rage; Reviled the Chief as weak in arms, And bade him loud the battle wage.

"Givndwr for once restrained his sword And, still averse, the fight delays;

But softened words, like oil to fire,
Made anger more intensely blaze.

"They fought; and doubtful long the fray
The Glyndwr gave the fatal wound!—
Still mournful must my tale proceed,
And it's last act all dreadful sound.

"How could we hope for wished retreat,
His eager rassals ranging wide?
His bloodhounds keen savacious scent.
O'er many a trackless mountain tried?

I marked a broad, and Blasted Oak, Scorched by the lightning's livid glare; Hollow its stem from branch to root,

"Be this, I cried, his proper grave!— (The thought in me was deadly sin,) Aloft we raised the hapless Chief.

A shrick from all the damsels burst, That pierced the vaulted roofs below; While hearpre-struck the Lady stood.

With stupid stare, and vacant gaze, Full on his face her eyes were cast, Absorbed !— she lost her present grief, And faintly thought of things long passes Like wild-fire o'er a mossy heath,
The rumour through the hamlet ran;
The peasants crowd at morning dawn,
To hear the tale,—hehold the man.

He led them near the Blasted Oak,
Then, conscious, from the scene withdr

And lay the whitened hones to view!-

Contracted, grasped a rusty sword:
Which erst in many a battle gleamed,
And proudly decked their slaughtered lord.

With holy rites, and prayers addressed; Nime white-robed monks the last dirge sang And gave the Angry Spirit rest,

MOIN 41

ill on a Friday morn look pale, asked to tell a fairy tale. - P. 176

The Donine site of the Bostish The Donine site of the Bostish The Donine site of the Bostish Theorem and the Bostish Fairner. Newstrands and Donger than the English Fairner. Newstrands are the Bostish Fairner. The Intel® of the Bostish Fairner and State of the Bostish Fairner and Fair

MARMION.

Novy VII

The towers of Franchemont .- P. 176. The journal of the friend, to whom the Fourth eiger would sign his name with blood. But the Hovering upon the sunny air .- P. 183. "I shall only produce one instance more of the great veneration paid to Lady Hilds, which still prevails even in these our days; and that is the constant opinion that she rendered, and still renders, herself visible, on some occasions, in the abbey of Streamballs, or Whilely, where the to long created. At a particular time of the year citie in the summer months), at the or eleven in the year citie in the summer months), at the or eleven in the year of the chest, and the literal time per of the chest, and the part the event and the year the event and of white year of the literal time per of the per of the per of the per of the years of the per of the year of their many of their months of the year of the year of their man year.

A Bishop by the altar stood .- P. 190.

The well-known Gawain Douglas, Bishop of Dunkeld, son of Archibald Beil-the-Cat, Earl of Angus. He was author of a Scottish metrical version of the Zhneld, and of many other poetical pieces of great merit. He had not at this period

Nove X.

The buge and sweeping brand,

As weekenful and the aspling spray.—P. 191.

Angus haalt result in and personal activity corresponding to hirosophy before the property of the application of the app

aword with which he struck so remarkable a blow, was presented by his descendant, James Earl of Morton, afterwards Regent of Scotland, to Lord Lindesay of the Byres, when he defied Bothwell to single combat on Carberry-hill. See Introduction

And hopest thou hence unscathed to go? No, by St Bryde of Bothwell, no: Up draw-bridge, grooms,—what, Warder, ho! Let the porteullis fall.—P. 194.

This ebullition of violence in the potent Earl of supplication, praying the Earl to deliver in pri manner, and said. Sir Patrick, you are come a shall be rewarded for your labours, that you have used at this time, according to your demerits.

"At this saying the Bari was highly offended, and cried for horse. Sir Patrick, seeing the Barl' fory, spurred his horse, but he was chased nea-Edinburgh ere they left him; and had is not been his lead horse was so tried and good, he had been taken."—Pirscoverus's Hidrey, p. 29.

Note XII, A letter forged! St Jude to speed! Did ever knight so foul a deed?—P. I astonishment, and consider the crime as inconsistent with the unamers of the period, I have to remind him of the numerous forgeries (partly exeation, to freeze the constraint of the constraint of Artiol, to forward his unit against the Counter Mattlea; which, being detected, occasioned his flight into fixed and, and proved the remote cause of Edward 111-5 memorable wars in France, John Bursling, also, was expressly hired by fideral IV, it likes the claim of fealty asserted over Seotland by the fight in monarch.

NOTE

Where Lennel's convent closed their march.—P. 198
This was a Cistertian house of religion, noalmost entirely demolished. Lennel House is now the residence of my venerable friend Patrick Brydope, Esquire, so well known in the literary world.
It is situated near Coldstream, almost opposite to Cornhill, and consequently very near to Flodden

NOTE XIV.

The Till by Twisel Bridge.-P. 199.

On the evening previous to the memorable battle of Flodden, Surrey's head-quarters were at Barmoor wood, and King James held an inaccessible position on the ridge of Flodden-hills, one of the last and lowest eminences detached from the ridge of Charlest, The Pill, a deep and show rises assumed between the armine. On the morning of the contribution of the contributio

The ancient bridge of Twissl, by which the Englith crossed the Till, is still standing beneath Twisel Castle, a splendid pile of Gothle architecture, as extensive plantations have as much improved the country around. The gien is romantic and delight it, with steep banks on each sade, covered with rock, near the bridge, is a plentiful fountain, called St. Helen & Wel.

OTE XV.

Of either host, for deadly fray. - P. 203.

The reader cannot here expect a full account of the battle of Flodden; but, so far as is necessary to understand the following pages, I hog to remind him, that, when the English army, by their skillful counter-march, were fairly placed between King James and his own country, the Sottlish King James and his own country, the Sottlish tents, descended from the ridge of Flodden to secure the neighbouring eminence of Brankstone, on which that village is built. Thus the two armies met, almost without seeing each other, according parler, ne faire aucun bruit," Gazette of the Battle, Pia-kerton's History. Amendix. Vol. II. p. 456.

pushed forward against another large division of of Crawford and Montrose, both of whom were

The spot from which Clara views the battle, must be supposed to have been on a hillock commanding the rear of the English right wing, which was defeated, and in which condict Marmion is supposed to have fallen.

Norn XVI.

Brian Tunstall, stainless knight.—P. 204.

Sir Brian Tuntall, selled, in the romantle language of the time, Tunstall the Undeffled, was one of the few Roglishneon of rank slain at Findden He ngures in the ancient Euclish noom, to which the review of the same of the Nors XVII.

Nor to you Border eastle high Look northward with upbraiding eye,-P. 21

Look includes and with speciality of year. For the harty of Plendon. He was killed, says the heaty of better plendon and heaty of the heaty of better plendon and heaty of the hea

The fair cathedral stormed and took, -P. 217.

NOVE XVIII.

Upon revising the Poem, it seems proper to mention the following particulars: The lines in page 21,

Whose doom discording neighbours sought, Content with equity unbought, have been unconsciously borrowed from a passage in Dryden's heautiful epithe to John Driden of Chesterton. The hallse of Local Priden of is in a very slight degree founded on a nailed called "Katharine Janfarle," which may be found in the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border."

