ENGLAND ELEVENS.

In all these matches some professionals were included.

NOTES.

1. The Scoring Books of the Grange were not always kept with the minuteness now usual, and where men were caught the bowlers are often not stated. This applies especially to the early years.

2. The names of the players are frequently not put down in the order of going in.

3. Where the Scoring Books have been available, the details of runs have been given according to this formula, $\frac{1}{4}$, a four hit, $\frac{3}{3}$, three hits for three each, and so on.

4. After 1855 the Scoring Books of the Grange have not been obtained, and consequently the details of runs have not been given.

5. In the years 1856-62 inclusive the scores of matches with clubs in Scotland other than the Perth Club, have not been obtained.

6. In comparing the Scores now given with those in matches of recent years, it must be remembered that the Cricket grounds formerly were not kept with the care now usual ; and especially, that in the Grange Grove Street Ground the outfielding was rough, and grass often long, which would often make a difference of perhaps a third in number of runs.

7. " P." following names signifies professional.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE

Grange Cricket Club, Edinburgh.

GRANGE CRICKET CLUB was founded in 1832; and it has been ever since so closely associated with the progress of Cricket in Scotland, that some account of its origin and history may not be without interest to many cricketers of the present day.

In the early part of the year 1832, three young men, members of the Speculative Society, who had and have still the privilege of rooms in the University Buildings in Edinburgh, adjourned from a dull debate to the outer hall, and there, in the course of casual conversation, the idea of starting a Cricket Club was suggested. The actors were Edward Horsman, afterwards M.P. for Cockermouth and other places, Secretary for Ireland, etc.; David Mure, afterwards Lord Advocate for Scotland, and one of the Judges of the Court of Session under the title of Lord Mure; and James Moncreiff, afterwards M.P. for Leith Burghs, City of Edinburgh, and Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen, Lord Advocate for Scotland and Lord Justice Clerk, and created a Peer in 1874 under the title of Lord Moncreiff. Before that evening closed, it was resolved that a Cricket Club should be formed; and on an early day after, John Dick Lauder, eldest son of Sir Thomas Dick Lauder, was approached with the object of ascertaining whether Sir Thomas would grant to the Club the use of one of his fields on the Grange estate. The genial and deservedly popular Baronet, ever kind and considerate towards young men, at once responded to the application, and a formal lease was arranged for a field on the east side of "The Lovers' Lane," a well-known thoroughfare on the south side of Edinburgh. On the Club getting possession, the centre was prepared for wickets, but little was done for the rest of the field, which was somewhat rough and uneven, as laid down in grass from the plough, but it answered its purpose in the early years of the Club, among whose members were many who knew little of scientific cricket, and who had much to learn in all parts of the game.

Among the members who joined in 1832 were :—

R. G. COLQUHOUN of Camstradden, long in the Diplomatic Service.

H. H. P. CAMPBELL, afterwards Sir HUGH, of Marchmont, Berwickshire.

CHARLES EARLE, from Lancashire.

P. GRIMSTEAD of Oxford University.

EDWARD HORSMAN, afterwards M.P.

JOHN D. HORSMAN, Captain H.E.I.S.

A. LEITH, afterwards Sir ALEXANDER.

JOHN DICK LAUDER, afterwards Sir JOHN.

JAMES MONCREIFF, afterwards Lord MONCREIFF.

WILLIAM MONCREIFF, now President of the Grange Club.

ALEX. MACKENZIE, afterwards of Scatswell.

JAMES M. MACKENZIE, his brother.

WM. F. MACKENZIE of Portmore.

The names of other members who made any mark as cricketers will appear from year to year in the matches.

At this period there were but few cricket clubs in Scotland. There were the Brunswick in Edinburgh, consisting chiefly of medical students at the University, and a few others permanently resident ; a club in Glasgow, and another at Perth, which had been formed there mainly by an Englishman, who for some years held an appointment in the town. None of these had a private ground, and all their matches or practice had to come off on Bruntsfield Links in Edinburgh, Glasgow Green, and Perth Inch. Of these, the first two were very rough and uneven. Perth Inch was better, but grass generally long, which impeded both hitting and fielding. There was not a single professional in Scotland at the time.

In their first years the Grange had regular Club games twice a week, and many members were out practising every day. The only matches with another club were two with the Brunswick, in both of which the Grange were victorious.

In 1833 there were matches with the Brunswick and the Garrison in Edinburgh, also home and home matches with the Glasgow Club. The last of these was played on Glasgow Green, where it was very rough cricket, and where a numerous crowd, who did not understand the game, much impeded the fielding.

In the following year, 1834, a professional, John Sparkes, generally called "Old Sparkes," was brought down from England by Edward Horsman, who at the time wrote to his friend, James Moncreiff: "Try to get up a good field on Tuesday. I am going to bring down Sparkes with me. He is the finest slow bowler in England, and is exactly the style of practice our men want. I have made an agreement with him that he is to bowl all day, bowl in our games on practice days if required, stand umpire in matches, and do everything for £20, he paying his own expenses to and from Scotland." Sparkes was then well advanced in years, but he never would tell his age; and even on his deathbed, more than twenty years afterwards, when his age was required by a medical member of the Club in order to get medicines from a charitable dispensary, the only answer he would give was, "Say I am a hundred." He had been a celebrated player in his younger days, and was still able to bowl "all day," as expressed in Edward Horsman's letter. And he literally did so, often bowling five or six hours a day to members in practice, and when not bowling he was busy with his spade, levelling and repairing the turf. His style was slow round with much work from leg to off.

He was a thorough master of the game in all its parts, and up to every known trick with ball or bat. He was so well pleased with his position with the Grange Club that he remained till his death about 1852 or 53. Under his teaching the play of the Grange members soon improved, and for many years they came off victorious in most of their matches against the clubs in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Perth.

The Grange retained the field on Sir Thomas Lauder's estate for some years, but in 1836 it was found advisable to change, and another field was acquired on the west side of Edinburgh, near Grove Street. This was a larger ground; the centre was well levelled and turfed, but the out-field was in ridges. Consequently, the ball travelled slow from the bat, and the out-fielding was difficult. From this cause, the scores were not so large as they would have been on a good modern ground, and with fast bowling it was impossible to prevent a good many byes. This should be remembered when comparing the scores of those days with those in the matches of recent years.

After about half-a-dozen years "Old Sparkes" began to fail in his bowling, and the "catapulta" having then been introduced, one was got for the Grange. This was used by Sparkes for some years, and very good practice he made. He learned to vary the pitch and pace, and even to get a slight twist on the ball occasionally. It was excellent practice for defence, but when kept straight and at a good pace it was almost impossible to hit safely without the batsman leaving his ground. After a few years it was thought that this machine bowling cramped the batting, and led to a tame defensive style; and in 1842 a professional, Sheppard, from Mitcham, was engaged; and ever afterwards the Club had a professional, besides Sparkes, among whom there were some well-known names, such as Jackson, P. Sewell, jun., Oscroft, and Bush.

In 1849 the famous Eleven of England made their first appearance in Scotland on the Grange ground, against Twenty-two of Scotland, including some professionals. They had an easy victory, but the match created quite a sensation; people flocked from all parts of Scotland to witness it, and its effects were to start new life into Cricket in Scotland. Clubs were formed in all directions; professionals were engaged from England; and in a few years play all round was wonderfully improved.

The Eleven of England repeated their visit in 1850 and 1851, and in later years they and "the South of England Eleven" occasionally played in Edinburgh, and other places in Scotland; and these matches had a remarkable influence in increasing the public interest in Cricket, and in stirring up the young players to endeavour to imitate the style of the best cricketers of the day.

For several years previous to these matches, the boys of the Edinburgh Academy, at that time the leading educational seminary in Edinburgh, had been allowed to play Cricket on the Grange ground at hours that did not interfere with the Club. About the year 1850, or soon after, it was thought desirable to acquire a private ground for the use of the school and its former pupils, and the promoters of this scheme succeeded in obtaining a lease of a field at Raeburn Place, on the North side of Edinburgh. The Academical Club was then formed, the membership of which was limited to pupils, past and present, of the Edinburgh Academy, and a professional from England was engaged. From that time the school had the advantage of an excellent cricket ground, where the boys had opportunity of practising the game from their earliest years. Other schools soon followed the example of the Academy, and in a few years all the high-class schools in Edinburgh, and indeed throughout Scotland, had private cricket grounds, with competent professionals; and thus every year a supply of young cricketers came from the schools to recruit the ranks of the Grange and similar clubs. Before then the membership of the Grange was very limited, and consequently the Club played only a few good matches in each year. But after the school grounds had been opened for a few years, the applicants for admission to the Grange rapidly increased in numbers, more matches were played, and Cricket generally was improved.

The Grange occupied the ground at Grove Street till 1862, and during that period they played against all the best clubs in Scotland, and several of those in the North of England. They could not, of course, always win, but we may safely say that they were but seldom vanquished, and that they well maintained their position as the premier Club in Scotland. This year, 1862, was the last of their occupation of the field at Grove Street. By that time the extension of the city to the westward had created a demand for building ground, and the field at Grove Street was too conveniently situate to be overlooked. The proprietors received an offer which was too favourable to be refused; and consequently, the Grange Club had to remove at the close of the Cricket Season in that year.

There was much difficulty in finding another field near enough to Edinburgh, but eventually arrangements were made for a short lease of ground belonging to the trustees of Fettes College. A year or two passed before this was ready for satisfactory play, and in the interval several of the old Grange members withdrew from active service, and the Club fell into the hands of a younger generation.

In six or seven years this field was required for the use of Fettes College boys. The Grange had then to make another, and their last, move to the field at Raeburn Place, where they have played for the last twenty years; and there, we trust, they may remain as long as Cricket is played in Scotland. Some ten years after their taking possession, a movement was made by old members of the Grange, in concert with three other clubs, who had similar interest in adjoining ground, to raise a fund for the purpose of purchasing the whole of the fields occupied by these clubs. That movement was successful, and in 1882 the fields were purchased and vested in trustees for behoof of the clubs. The Grange have thus acquired right to their field in perpetuity; and nothing can ever intrude on or disturb them except a railway or other public work authorised by an Act of Parliament.

In connection with the history of the Grange Club, it may not be inappropriate to notice shortly the cricketers who were most prominent in their matches during their first decade.

EDWARD HORSMAN.—Having a thorough knowledge of the game, and the experience gained during years at Cambridge, and being very active and energetic, Horsman was mainly instrumental in getting the Club into working order; and he very soon became the acknowledged leader, and practically the Captain, in all matches in which he played. He was a straight bowler, fast underhand, with high delivery, a first-rate field; and though not a finished scientific bat, he was a powerful hitter, and frequently made large scores rapidly. From his avocations, first at the Bar, and later as M.P., he did not appear often in the Club matches.

DAVID MURE.—A most useful member in the early years of the Club, of which he was for many years President. Educated at Westminster School, he had been well coached, and was a thorough cricketer; a strong batsman, and when well set he frequently ran up large scores; also a good field in his own place, long slip, where he always stood.

CHARLES EARLE.—This member came from Lancashire; was a good bowler, round armed, and during the years that he played he gave very material support to the Club in that department. He was resident in Edinburgh for a few years only, and his name thus does not appear in many matches.

JAMES MANSFIELD MACKENZIE.—The most promising cricketer of the younger members, a fair bowler, first-rate field, and a strong bat, who made runs fast. He played with the Club for only a few years, for he was cut off in his prime about the year 1838.

GEORGE BAILLIE.—Afterwards Earl of Haddington, the fastest and straightest underhand bowler ever seen in the North. For about ten years, from 1835, his bowling was the mainstay of the Grange. He kept wicket fairly well, and was a strong bat, but would seldom play a careful game, though he could do so when he liked, as shown by such scores as 114-55-38, all "not out."

WILLIAM MONCREIFF.—By the accident of circumstances, the death of one member, and the absence or occupations of other seniors, it devolved on this member to take the principal charge of the Grange Club, its affairs and matches, in the year 1838, and from that time till 1862 he was practically its manager and captain. He was one of the Eleven from 1832 to 1862, and was seldom absent from any important match. A sharp field at his usual place, point, a fair bowler at one period, and a steady bat. Retired in 1862. Now President of the Club.

WILLIAM HORSBRUGH.—A thorough cricketer all round, and for twenty years or so, from 1838, a regular member of the Grange Eleven whenever he was able to play. A first-class field in any place, a fair bowler, and a careful, reliable bat. Few members worked as hard for the Club, or sacrificed as much time and personal convenience for its honour and prestige. A sound judge of the game, his advice was most valuable in emergencies.

H. J. WYLIE.—Joined about 1842, and from that time till 1862 was seldom absent from important matches. After some years he became a very good bowler, moderate pace, with high easy delivery. He was undoubtedly the best bowler educated on the Grange ground at that period. As a bat he was a hard hitter, and made runs fast.

CAPTAIN F. HUTCHINSON, NOW COLONEL.—Played first with the Grange when quartered in Edinburgh with his regiment in 1841, and rejoined the Club when he came to reside in Scotland in 1845. For fifteen years after he was a prominent member of the Grange Eleven. A good wicket-keeper and a careful, safe bat. Most reliable to keep up his wicket when wanted ; and on several occasions he won matches for the Club by indomitable patience and coolness, carrying out his bat with the last man. The gallant and plucky old Colonel, we rejoice to say, still survives (though an octogenarian), and may recognise some of his old performances as he looks over the matches of the Grange.

We cannot carry personal comments further. Most of those we have mentioned are now no more ; but it would be different were we to continue remarks on the cricketers to a later period, and we have no desire to offend, either by too truthful criticism or by invidious selection.

We append the scores of the leading matches of the Grange during the period 1832 to 1862. In the early years the matches were few, and all are inserted. Later on matches were more numerous, and we have been obliged to make a selection from what may be considered the first-class matches of the period. To have inserted all would have extended this small volume to undue and inconvenient proportions. Second-class or scratch matches, and unfinished matches, with a few exceptions, have been omitted. For the period 1856-62 inclusive the scoring books of the Grange have not been available. They cannot be traced; but by the courtesy of the secretaries of the Perthshire and Kelso Clubs, and from other sources, we are enabled to give the scores of some of the leading matches down to July 1862, when the Grange Club left the ground at Grove Street, and when our personal connection with the Club as a playing member ceased. We must leave it for some younger hand to continue the record of the Grange after that date.

The last match on the Grove Street ground was against Kelso, on 25th and 26th July 1862, when the game was closely contested. When the tenth Grange wicket fell, there were still 9 runs to make, the final scores being —Kelso, 44 and 126, total 170; Grange, 74 and 97, total 171; Grange winning by 1 run, the "not outs" being W. Moncreiff, 8; A. B. Macallan, 4.

We also give the scores of some of the matches of the "All England Eleven" in the north. The first of these, played at Newcastle in 1847, is inserted, because it was the first time that celebrated corps came so far north. On that occasion the Northumberland Club applied to the Grange to assist them, and two members of the latter Club responded to the request, and were able to be of some service. The Eleven for "All England" included the well-known names of Alfred Mynn, Felix, Lillywhite, sen., Pilch, Hillyer, Clarke, Dorrington, Guy, Martingall, Parr. The next match was at Edinburgh in 1849, when Lillywhite, Pilch, and Dorrington were replaced by Box, Wisden, and Chatterton. The Eleven were easy victors. In 1850 the same party appeared, with the addition of Adams, and again won easily. In the third match at Edinburgh, in 1851, Mynn, Clarke, Hillyer, and Chatterton were replaced by Pilch, Caffyn, Cæsar, and George Anderson, the last three all young players. Scotland had with them two very good bowlers from North of England, Armitage and Crossland; and as the team had been carefully selected for fielding, few chances were let off, and the Eleven succeeded in scoring only 63 in each innings. Though they won the match, it was by 20 runs only.

Most of these famous players in the first three matches were well advanced in years, and past the age when most cricketers retire. Both Mynn and Pilch, for many years the champion bats of England, failed to do much in scoring, their averages having been only 6 and $4\frac{1}{2}$. The only consistent scorer of the older men was Felix, whose average in the four matches was over 20. He was perhaps the most scientific and sure bat of his day; played every ball the right way, patient and careful throughout his innings from first to last, and seldom took a liberty with an accurate bowler. From the safe game that he played, he was a most troublesome batsman to his opponents, even in his last years, and with twenty-two in the field.

To those now surviving who remember the early days of the Grange Club, these reminiscences may recall some of the pleasant days of former times; and even to the cricketers of later years they may not be without interest. In looking back to those days, our recollection has been revived of many a familiar face and valued friend, long since departed and regretted; and we have also been reminded of many a friendly and generous act, and of many a kindly word from those who were our comrades-in-arms on the battle-fields of the Grange. We can truly say that our years of active service with the Grange, for thirty-one years, were among the most pleasant of our youthful days; and that it was on the Grange ground that we made the acquaintance of most of those who became the most attached and valued friends of our later life. We trust the present generation of Grange Cricketers may have similar experience, and may long survive to vie with each other in promoting the noble game, and in maintaining the honour and credit of the old Club.
