

045.19.

THE

P O E M S

O F

OSSIAN.

VOL. I.

P O E M S

OF

OSSIAN.

TRANSLATED

By JAMES MACPHERSON, Efq;

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

A NEW EDITION, Carefully corrected, and greatly improved.

LONDON:

Printed for W. Strahan; and T. Becket, in the Strand, Bookfeller to their Royal Highneffes the Prince of Wales and Bishop of Osnabruch.

M DCCLXXIII.

PREFACE.

the Author may have improved his language, in the eleven years, that the following poems have been in the hands of the public. Errors in diction might have been committed at twenty-four, which the experience of a riper age may remove; and some exuberances in imagery may be restrained, with advantage, by a degree of judgment acquired in the progress of time. Impressed with this opinion, he ran over the whole with attention and accuracy; and, he hopes, he has brought the work to a state of correctness, which will preclude all future improvements.

THE eagerness, with which these Poems have been received abroad, are a recompence for the coldness with which a few have affected to treat them at home. All the polite nations of Europe have transferred them into their respective languages; and they speak of him, who brought them to light, in terms that might flatter the vanity of one fond of same. In a convenient indifference for a literary reputation, the Author hears praise without being elevated, and ribaldry, without being depressed. He has frequently seen the first bestowed too precipitately; and the latter is so faithless to its purpose, that it is often the only index to merit in the present age.

A 3

fpective.

THOUGH the taste, which defines genius, by the points of the compass, is a subject fit for mirth in itself, it is often a serious matter in the sale of a work. When rivers define the limits of abilities, as well as the boundaries of countries, a Writer may measure his success, by the latitude under which he was born. It was to avoid a part of this inconvenience, that the Author is said, by some, who speak without any authority, to have ascribed his own productions to another name. If this was the case, he was but young in the art of deception. When he placed the poet in antiquity, antiquity, the Translator should have been born on this side of the Tweed.

THESE observations regard only the frivolous in matters of literature; these, however, form a majority in every age and nation. this country, men of genuine tafte abound; but their still voice is drowned in the clamours of a multitude, who judge by fashion of poetry, as of drefs. The truth is, to judge aright requires almost as much genius as to write well; and good critics are as rare as great poets. Though two hundred thousand Romans stood up, when Virgil came into the Theatre, Varius only could correct the Æneid. He that obtains fame must receive it through mere fashion; and gratify his vanity with the applause of men, of whose judgment he cannot approve.

THE following Poems, it must be confessed, are more calculated to please persons of exquisite feelings of heart, than those who receive all their impressions by the ear. The novelty of cadence, in what is called a prose version, tho not destitute of harmony, will not to common readers supply the absence of the frequent returns of rhime. This was the opinion of the Writer himself, tho' he yielded to the judgment of others, in a mode, which presented freedom and dignity of expression, instead of setters, which cramp the thought, whilst the harmony of language is preserved. His intention was to publish in verse. The making of poetry, like any other handicrast, may be learned by industry; and he had served his apprenticeship, though in secret, to the muses.

IT is, however, doubtful, whether the harmony which these poems might derive from rhime, even in much better hands than those of the translator, could atone for the simplicity and energy, which they would lose. The determination of this point shall be left to the readers of this preface. The following is the beginning of a poem, translated from the Norse to the Gaëlic language; and, from the latter, transferred into English. The verse took little more time to the writer than the prose; and even he himself is doubtful, (if he has succeeded in either) which of them is the most literal version.

FRAGMENT OF A NORTHERN TALE.

WHERE Harold, with golden hair, spread o'er Lochlin* his high commands; where, with justice, he ruled the tribes, who sunk, subdued, beneath his sword; abrupt rises Gormal† in snow! The tempests roll dark on his sides, but calm, above, his vast forehead appears. White-issuing from the skirt of his storms, the troubled torrents pour down his sides. Joining, as they roar along, they bear the Torno, in foam, to the main.

GREY on the bank and far from men, half-covered by ancient pines, from the wind, a lonely pile exalts its head, long-shaken by the storms of the north. To this sled Sigurd, fierce in fight, from Harold the leader of armies, when fate had brightened his spear, with renown: When he conquered in that rude field, where Lulan's warriors fell in blood, or rose, in terror, on the waves of the main. Darkly sat the grey-haired chief; yet forrow dwelt not in his soul. But when the warrior thought on the past, his proud heart heaved again his side: Forth-slew his sword from its place, he wounded Harold in all the winds.

[.] The Gaëlic name of Scandinavia, or Scandinia.

⁺ The mountains of Sevo.

ONE daughter, and only one, but bright in form and mild of foul, the last beam of the fetting line, remained to Sigurd of all his race. His son, in Lulan's battle slain, beheld not his father's slight from his foes. Nor finished seemed the ancient line! The splendid beauty of bright-eyed Fithon, covered still the fallen king with renown. Her arm was white like Gormal's snow; her bosom whiter than the foam of the main, when roll the waves beneath the wrath of the winds. Like two stars were her radiant eyes, like two stars that rise on the deep, when dark tumult embroils the night. Pleasant are their beams aloft, as stately they ascend the skies.

Nor Odin forgot, in aught, the maid. Her form scarce equalled her lofty mind. Awe moved around her stately steps. Heroes loved—but shrunk away in their fears. Yet midst the pride of all her charms, her heart was soft, and her soul was kind. She saw the mournful with tearful eyes. Transient darkness arose in her breast. Her joy was in the chace. Each morning, when doubtful light wandered dimly on Lulan's waves, she rouzed the resounding woods, to Gormal's head of snow. Nor moved the maid alone, &c.

The same versified.

WHERE fair hair'd Harold, o'er Scandinia reign'd And held, with justice, what his valour gain'd, Sevo, in snow, his rugged forehead rears And, o'er the warfare of his storms, appears Abrupt and vast.—White-wandering down his side A thousand torrents, gleaming as they glide, Unite below; and pouring through the plain Hurry the troubled Torno to the main.

GREY, on the bank, remote from human kind, By aged pines, half shelter'd from the wind, A homely mansion rose, of antique form, For ages batter'd by the polar storm. To this sierce Sigurd sled, from Norway's lord When fortune settled, on the warrior's sword, In that rude field, where Suecia's chiefs were flain, Or forced to wander o'er the Bothnic main. Dark was his life, yet undiffurb'd with woes, But when the memory of defeat arose His proud heart struck his side; he graspt the spear, And wounded Harold in the vacant air.

One daughter only, but of form divine,
The last fair beam of the departing line,
Remain'd of Sigurd's race. His warlike son
Fell in the shock, which overturn'd the throne.
Nor desolate the house! Fionia's charms
Sustain'd the glory, which they lost in arms.
White was her arm, as Sevo's losty snow,
Her bosom fairer, than the waves below,
When heaving to the winds. Her radiant eyes
Like two bright stars, exulting as they rise,
O'er the dark tumult of a stormy night
And gladd'ning heav'n, with their majestic light,

In nought is Odin to the maid unkind Her form scarce equals her exalted mind, Awe leads her facred steps where'er they move, And mankind worship, where they dare not love. But, mix'd with softness, was the virgin's pride, Her heart had seclings, which her eyes deny'd. Her bright tears started at another's woes, While transient darkness on her soul arose.

THE chace she lov'd; when morn, with doubtful beams Came dimly wandering o'er the Bothnic stream, On Sevo's sounding sides, she bent the bow, And rouz'd his forests to his head of snow. Nor mov'd the maid alone; &c.

ONE of the chief improvements, on this edition, is the care taken, in arranging the poems in the order of time; so as to form a kind of regular history of the age to which they relate. The writer has now refigned them for ever to their fate. That they have been well received by the public, appears from an extensive sale; that they shall continue to be well received, he may venture to prophecy without the gift of that inspiration, to which poets lay claim. Through the medium of verfion upon version, they retain, in foreign languages, their native character of fimplicity and energy. Genuine poetry, like gold, lofes little, when properly transfused; but when a composition cannot bear the test of a literal version, it is a counterfeit which ought not to pass current. The operation must, however, be performed with skilful hands. A translator, who cannot equal his original, is incapable of expressing its beauties.

LONDON, Aug. 15,

CONTENTS

OF THE

FIRST VOLUME.

CATH-LODA,	Part :	First,	_	Page 1
	Part	Second,	+	15
	Part	Third,		27
COMALA,	—	-		37
CARRIC-THU	RA,	, —	_	5 I
CARTHON,	_	_		- 75
OINA-MORU	L,	_	_	- 97
COLNA-DON	Α,	_	-	105
OITHONA,	-	_		113
CROMA,			_	125
CALTHON and	COI	LMAL	, —	139
The WAR of CA	A R O	S,	_	153
CATHLIN of C	CLU	THA,		167
SUL-MALLA o	f LU	MON,		181
WAR of INIS-	ТН	ONA,	_	193
The SONGS of	SEL	M A,		203
			FIN	GAL,

CONTENTS.

FINGAL, B	look I.			217
В	ook II.			243
B	ook III.	-		26 1
В	ook IV.) mental of		281
В	look V.		_	299
В	ook VI.)		315
LATHMON	V,	-	_	331
DAR-THUI	_A,	- 1	-	351
DEATH of	CUTHU	JLLIN	,	375
BATTLE of	LORA.		-	201

CATH-LODA:

A

P O E M.

DUAN FIRST.

YOL. I.

ARGUMENT.

FINGAL, when very young, making a voyage to the Orkney islands, was driven, by stress of weather, into a bay of Scandinavia, near the residence of Starno, king of Lochlin-Starno invites Fingal to a feast. Fingal, doubting the faith of the king, and mindful of a former breach of hospitality, refuses to go .- Starno gathers together his tribes: Fingal refolves to defend himfelf .- Night coming on, Duth-maruno proposes to Fingal, to observe the motions of the enemy.-The king himfelf undertakes the watch. Advancing towards the enemy, he, accidentally, comes to the cave of Turthor, where Starno had confined Conban-carglas, the captive daughter of a neighbouring chief .- Her story is imperfect, a part of the original being loft .- Fingal comes to a place of worship, where Starno and his son, Swaran, confulted the spirit of Loda, concerning the issue of the war .-The rencounter of Fingal and Swaran .- Duan first concludes with a description of the airy hall of Cruth-loda supposed to be the Odin of Scandinavia.

CATH-LODA.

DUAN* FIRST.

A TALE of the times of old! Why, thou wanderer unfeen! Thou bender of the thiftle of Lora; why, thou breeze of the valley, hast thou left mine ear? I hear no

* The bards distinguished those compositions, in which the narration is often interrupted, by episodes and apostrophes, by the name of Duan. Since the extinction of the order of the bards, it has been a general name for all ancient compofitions in verse. The abrupt manner in which the story of this poem begins, may render it obscure to some readers; it may not therefore be improper, to give here the traditional preface, which is generally prefixed to it. Two years after he took to wife Ros-crana, the daughter of Cormac, king of Ireland, Fingal undertook an expedition into Orkney, to vifit his friend Cathulla, king of Inistore. After staying a few days at Caric-thura, the refidence of Cathulla, the king fet fail, to return to Scotland; but, a violent storm arising, his thips were driven into a bay of Scandinavia, near Gormal, the feat of Starno, king of Lochlin, his avowed enemy. Starno, upon the appearance of strangers on his coast, summoned together the neighbouring tribes, and advanced, in a hostile manner, towards the bay of U-thorno, where Fingal had taken shelter. Upon discovering who the strangers were, and fearing no diftant roar of ftreams! No found of the harp, from the rock! Come, thou huntress of Lutha, Malvina, call back his foul to the bard. I look forward to Lochlin of lakes, to the dark, billowy bay of U-thorno, where Fingal defeends from Ocean, from the roar of winds. Few are the heroes of Morven, in a land unknown!

B 2

STARNO fent a dweller of Loda, to bid Fingal to the feaft; but the king remembered the past, and all his rage arose. "Nor Gormal's mostly towers, nor Starno shall Fingal behold. Deaths wander, like shadows, over his fiery soul! Do I forget that beam of light, the white-handed daughter * of kings? Go, son of Loda; his words are wind to Fingal: wind, that, to and fro, drives the thistle, in autumn's dusky vale.

searing the valour of Fingal, which he had, more than once, experienced before, he resolved to accomplish by treachery what he was afraid he should fail in by open force. He invited, therefore, Fingal to a feast, at which he intended to affassinate him. The king prudently declined to go, and Starno betook himself to arms. The sequel of the story may be learned from the poem itself.

* Agandecca, the daughter of Starno, whom her father killed, on account of her discovering to Fingal, a plot laid against his life. Her story is related at large, in the third book of Fingal. vale. Duth-maruno †, arm of death! Crommaglas, of iron fhields! Struthmor, dweller of battle's wing! Cormar, whose thips bound on feas, careless as the course of a meteor, on darkrolling clouds! Arise, around me, children of heroes, in a land unknown! Let each look on his thield, like Trenmor, the ruler of wars. "Come down, thus Trenmor said, thou dweller between the harps. Thou shalt roll this stream away, or waste with me in earth."

AROUND the king they rife in wrath. No words come forth: they feize their spears. Each foul is rolled into itself. At length the sudden clang is waked, on all their echoing shields. Each takes his hill, by night; at intervals, they darkly stand. Unequal bursts the hum of songs, between the roaring wind!

[†] Duth-maruno is a name very famous in tradition. Many of his great actions are handed down, but the poems, which contained the detail of them, are long fince loft. He lived, it is fupposed, in that part of the north of Scotland, which is over against Orkney. Duth-maruno, Cromma-glas, Struthmor, and Cormar, are mentioned, as attending Comhal, in kis last battle against the tribe of Morni, in a poem, which is still preserved. It is not the work of Ossian; the phraseology betrays it to be a modern composition. It is something like those trivial compositions, which the Irish bards forged, under the name of Ossian, in the fisteenth and sixteenth centuries. Duth-maruno signifies, black and fleady; Cromma-glas, bending and sixteenth centuries. The structure of the structure of the structure of the structure of the structure.

BROAD over them rose the moon!

In his arms, came tall Duth-maruno; he from Croma of rocks, ftern hunter of the boar! In his dark boat he rose on waves, when Crumthormo * awaked its woods. In the chace he shone, among soes: No fear was thine, Duthmaruno!

"Son of daring Comhal, shall my steps be forward through night? From this shield shall I view them, over their gleaming tribes? Starno king of lakes, is before me, and Swaran, the foe of strangers. Their words are not in vain, by Loda's stone of power. —Should Duthmaruno not return, his spouse is lonely, at home, where meet two roaring streams, on Crathmo-craulo's plain. Around are hills, with echoing woods, the ocean is rolling near. My son looks on screaming sea-fowl, a young wanderer on the field. Give the head of a boar to Can-dona ‡, tell him of his father's joy, when the [•] Crumthormoth, one of the Orkney or Shetland islands. The name is not of Galic original. It was subject to its own; petty king, who is mentioned in one of Osian's poems.

[†] Cean-daona, head of the people, the fon of Duth-maruno. He became afterwards famous, in the expeditions of Offian, after the death of Fingal. The traditional tales concerning him are very numerous, and, from the epithet, in them, beflowed on him (Candona of boars) it would appear, that he applied himself to that kind of hunting, which his father, in briftly strength of I-thorno rolled on his lifted spear. Tell him of my deeds in war! Tell where his father fell!"

this paragraph, is fo anxious to recommend to him. As I have mentioned the traditional tales of the Highlands, it may not be improper here, to give some account of them. After the expulsion of the bards, from the houses of the chiefs, they, being an indolent race of men, owed all their subfiftence to the generofity of the vulgar, whom they diverted with repeating the compositions of their predecessors, and running up the genealogies of their entertainers to the family of their As this subject was, however, soon exhausted, they were obliged to have recourse to invention, and form stories having no foundation in fact which were swallowed, with great credulity, by an ignorant multitude. By frequent repeating, the fable grew upon their hands, and, as each threw in whatever circumstance he thought conducive to raise the admiration of his hearers, the story became, at last, so devoid of all probability, that even the vulgar themselves did not believe it. They, however, liked the tales fo well, that the bards found their advantage in turning professed tale makers. They then launched out into the wildest regions of fiction and romance. I firmly believe, there are more stories of giants, enchanted castles, dwarfs, and palfreys, in the Highlands, than in any country in Europe. These tales, it is certain, like other romantic compositions, have many things in them unnatural, and, consequently, disgustful to true taste, but, I know not how it happens, they command attention more than any other fictions I ever met with. The extreme length of these pieces is very surprising, some of them requiring many days to repeat them, but such hold they take of the memory, that few circumstances are ever omitted by those who have received them only from oral tradition: What is still more amazing, the very language of the bards is fill preferved. It is curious to fee, that the descriptions of magnificence. introduced in these tales, is even superior to all the pompous oriental fictions of the kind.

" Nor forgetful of my fathers," faid Fingal, "I have bounded over the feas. Theirs were the times of danger, in the days of old. Nor fettles darkness on me, before foes, tho' youthful in my locks. Chief of Crathmo-craulo, the field of night is mine."

FINGAL rushed, in all his arms, wide-bounding over Turthor's stream, that fent its sullen roar, by night, through Gormal's misty vale. A moon-beam glittered on a rock; in the midst, stood a stately form; a form with floating locks, like Lochlin's white-bosomed maids. Unequal are her steps, and short. She throws a broken song on wind. At times she tosses her white arms: for grief is dwelling in her soul.

"Torcul-torno*, of aged locks!" fhe faid, "where now are thy fleps, by Lulan? Thou haft Torcul-torno, according to tradition, was king of Crathiun, a diffrict in Sweden. The river Lulan ran near the refidence of Torcul-torno. There is a river in Sweden, still called Lula, which is probably the same with Lulan. The war between Starno and Torcul-torno, which terminated in the death of the latter, had its rise at a hunting party. Starno being invited, in a friendly manner, by Torcul-torno, both kings, with their followers, went to the mountains of Stivamore, to hunt. A boar rushed from the wood before the kings, and Torcul-torno killed it. Starno thought this behaviour a breach upon the privilege of guests, who were alwaya homoured, as tradition expresses it, with the danger of the thack. hast failed, at thine own dark streams, father of Conban-cargla! But I behold thee, chief of Lulan, sporting by Loda's hall, when the dark-skirted night is rolled along the sky.—Thou, sometimes, hidest the moon, with thy shield. I have seen her dim, in heaven. Thou kindlest thy hair into meteors, and sailest along the night. Why am I forgot, in my cave, king of shaggy boars? Look, from the hall of Loda, on thy lonely daughter."

"Who art thou," faid Fingal, "voice of night?"

SHE, trembling, turned away.

"Who art thou, in thy darkness?"

SHE thrunk into the cave.

THE king loofed the thong from her hands. He afked about her fathers.

chace. A quarrel arose, the kings came to battle, with all their attendants, and the party of Torcul-torno were totally deseated, and he himself sain. Starno pursued his victory, laid waste the district of Crathlun, and, coming to the residence of Torcul torno, carried off, by force, Conban-carglas, the beautiful daughter of his enemy. Her he confined in a cave, near the palace of Gormal, where, on account of her equal treatment, she became distracted.

The paragraph, just now before us, is the song of Conbancarglas, at the time she was discovered by Fingal. It is in Lyric measure, and set to music, which is wild and simple, and so inimitably suited to the situation of the unhappy lady, that seems are it without tears.

" TORCUL-

" TORCUL-TORNO," she faid, " once dwelt at Lulan's foamy ftream: he dwelt-but, now, in Loda's hall, he shakes the founding shell. He met Starno of Lochlin, in war; long fought the dark-eyed kings. My father fell, in his blood. blue-shielded Torcul-torno! By a rock, at Lulan's stream, I had pierced the bounding roe. My white hand gathered my hair, from off the rushing winds. I heard a noise. Mine eves were up. My foft breast rose on high. My flep was forward, at Lulan, to meet thee, Torcul-torno! It was Starno, dreadful king! His red eyes rolled on me in love. Dark waved his thaggy brow, above his gathered fmile. Where is my father; I faid, he that was mighty in war? Thou art left alone among foes, O daughter of Torcul-torno! He took my hand. He raifed the fail. In this cave he placed me dark. At times, he comes, a gathered mist. He lifts, before me, my father's shield. But often passes a beam * of youth, far-distant from my cave. The fon of Starno moves, in my fight. He dwells lonely in my foul."

" MAID of Lulan," faid Fingal, " white-

^{*} By the beam of youth, it afterwards appears, that Conbancarglas means Swaran, the son of Starno, with whom, during her confinement, she had fallen in love, handed daughter of grief! a cloud, marked with ftreaks of fire, is rolled along thy foul. Look not to that dark-robed moon; look not to those meteors of heaven. My gleaming steel is around thee, the terror of thy foes! It is not the steel of the feeble, nor of the dark in foul! The maids are not shut in our * caves of streams. They tose not their white arms alone. They bend, fair within their locks, above the harps of Selma. Their voice is not in the defart wild. We melt along the pleasing found!"

* * * * * *

FINGAL, again, advanced his fleps, wide thro' the bosom of night, to where the trees of Loda shook amid squally winds. Three stones, with heads of moss, are there; a stream, with soaming course: and dreadful, rolled around them, is the dark-red cloud of Loda. High from its top looked forward a ghost, half-formed of the shadowy smoak. He poured his voice, at times, amidst the roaring stream. Near, bend-

^{*} From this contrast, which Fingal draws, between his own nation, and the inhabitants of Scandinavia, we may learn, that the former were much less barbarous than the latter. This distinction is so much observed throughout the poems of Ossian, that there can be no doubt, that he followed the real manners of both nations in his own time. At the close of the speech of Fingal, there is a great part of the original lost.

ing beneath a blasted tree, two heroes received his words: Swaran of lakes, and Starno foe of strangers. On their dun shields, they darkly leaned: their spears are forward through night. Shrill sounds the blast of darkness, in Starno's stoating beard.

They heard the tread of Fingal. The warriors rofe in arms. "Swaran, lay that wanderer low," faid Starno, in his pride. "Take the fhield of thy father. It is a rock in war."—Swaran threw his gleaming fpear. It flood fixed in Loda's tree. Then came the foes forward, with fwords. They mixed their rattling fleel. Through the thongs of Swaran's fhield rushed the blade * of Luno. The shield fell rolling on earth. Cleft the helmet † fell down. Fingal flopt the listed fleel. Wrathful flood Swaran, unarmed. He rolled his filent eyes; he threw his fword on earth. Then, flowly stalking over the stream, he whistled as he went.

Nor unfeen of his father is Swaran. Starno turns away in wrath. His thaggy brows wave dark, above his gathered rage. He ftrikes Loda's tree, with his fpear. He raises the hum of songs. They come to the host of Lochlin, each in his own dark path; like two foam-covered streams, from two rainy vales!

^{*} The fword of Fingal, so called from its maker, Luno of Lochlin.

⁺ The helmet of Swaran. The behaviour of Fingal is always confiftent with that generofity of spirit which belongs to a hero. He takes no advantage of a foc difarmed.

To Turthor's plain Fingal returned. Fair rose the beam of the east. It shone on the spoils of Lochlin in the hand of the king. From her cave came forth, in her beauty, the daughter of Torcul torno. She gathered her hair from wind. She wildly raised her song. The song of Lulan of shells, where once her father dwelt. She saw Starno's bloody shield. Gladness rose, a light, on her sace. She saw the cleft helmet of Swaran*. She thrunk, darkened, from Fingal.—" Art thou sallen, by thy hundred streams, O love of the mournful maid."

U-THORNO, that rifeft in waters! on whose fide are the meteors of night! I behold the dark moon descending, behind thy resounding woods. On thy top dwells the misty Loda: the house of the fpirits of men! In the end of his cloudy hall, bends forward Cruth-loda of fwords. His form is dimly feen, amid his wavy mift. His right-hand is on his fhield. In his left is the half-viewless shell. The roof of his dreadful hall is marked, with nightly fires!

^{*} Conban-carglas, from feeing the helmet of Swaran bloody in the hands of Fingal conjectured, that that hero was killed. A part of the original is loft. It appears, however, from the fequel of the poem, that the daughter of Torcultorno did not long furvive her furprize, occasioned by the supposed death of her lover. The description of the airy hall of Loda (which is supposed to be the same with that of Odin, the deity of Scandinavia) is more picturesque and descriptive, than any in the Edda, or other works of the northern Scalders.

THE race of Cruth-loda advance, a ridge of formless shades. He reaches the founding shell, to those who shone in war. But, between him and the feeble, his shield rises, a darkened orb. He is a setting meteor to the weak in arms. Bright, as a rainbow on streams, came Lulan's white-bosomed maid.

CATH-LODA:

A

POEM.

DUAN SECOND.

ARGUMENT.

FINGAL returning, with day, devolves the command on Duthsmaruno, who engages the enemy, and drives them over the fiream of Turthor. Having recalled his people, he congratulates Duth-maruno on his fuccess, but discovers, that that hero had been mortally wounded in the action.—Duthmaruno dies. Ulin, the bard, in honour of the dead, introduces the epifode of Colgorm and Strina-dona, which concludes this duen.

CATH-LODA:

DUAN SECOND.

"WHERE art thou, fon of the king," faid dark-haired Duth-maruno? "Where hast thou failed, young beam of Selma? He returns not, from the bosom of night! Morning is spread on U-thorno. In his mist is the sun, on his hill. Warriors, lift the shields, in my presence. He must not fall, like a fire from heaven, whose place is not marked on the ground. He comes, like an eagle, from the skirt of his squally wind! In his hand are the spoils of foes. King of Selma, our souls were fad!"

"NEAR us are the foes, Duth-maruno. They come forward, like waves in mift, when their foamy tops are feen, at times, above the low-failing vapour. The traveller shrinks on his journey; he knows not whither to fly. No trembling travellers are we! Sons of heroes call forth the steel. Shall the sword of Fingal arise, or shall a warrior lead?"

Vol. I. C THE

*The deeds of old, faid Duth-maruno, are like paths to our eyes, O Fingal. Broad-shielded Trenmor, is still seen, amidst his own dim years. Nor feeble was the soul of the king. There, no dark deed wandered in secret. From their hundred streams came the tribes, to grassy Colglancrona. Their chiefs were before them. Each strove to lead the war. Their swords were often half-unsheathed. Red rolled their eyes of rage.

* In this short episode we have a very probable account given us, of the origin of monarchy in Caledonia. The Caël or Gauls, who possessed the countries to the north of the Firth of Edinburgh, were, originally, a number of distinct tribes, or clans, each subject to its own chief, who was free and independent of any other power. When the Romans invaded them, the common danger might, perhaps, have induced those reguli to join together, but, as they were unwilling to yield to the command of one of their own number, their battles were ill-conducted, and, confequently, unfuccefsful. Trenmor was the first who represented to the chiefs, the bad confequences of carrying on their wars in this irregular manner. and advised, that they themselves should alternately lead in battle. They did so, but they were unsuccessful. When it came to Trenmor's turn, he totally defeated the enemy, by his fuperior valour and conduct, which gained him fuch an interest among the tribes, that he, and his family after him, were regarded as kings; or to use the poet's expression, the words of power rushed forth from Selma of kings. The regal authority, however, except in time of war, was but inconfiderable; for every chief, within his own district, was absolute and independent. From the scene of the battle in this episode, (which was in the valley of Crona, a little to the north of Agricola's wall) I should suppose, that the enemies of the Caledonians were the Romans, or provincial Britons.

Separate they flood, and hummed their furly fongs. "Why should they yield to each other? their fathers were equal in war." Trenmor was there, with his people, flately in youthful locks. He faw the advancing foe. The grief of his foul arose. He bade the chiefs to lead, by turns: they led, but they were rolled away. From his own mosfy hill, blue-shielded Trenmor came down. He led wide-skirted battle, and the firangers failed. Around him the dark-browed warriors came: they flruck the shield of joy. Like a pleafant gale, the words of power rushed forth from Selma of kings. But the chiefs led, by turns, in war, till mighty danger rose: then was the hour of the king to conquer in the field.

"Nor unknown, faid Cromma-glass * of shields,

^{*} In tradition, this Cromma glas makes a great figure in that battle which Comhal loft, together with his life, to the tribe of Morni. I have just now, in my hands, an Irish composition, of a very modern date, as appears from the language, in which all the traditions, concerning that decisive engagement, are jumbled together. In justice to the merit of the poem, I should have here presented to the reader a translation of it, did not the bard mention some circumstances very ridiculous, and others altogether indecent. Morna, the wife of Comhal, had a principal hand in all the transactions previous to the deseat and death of her husband; she, to use the words of the bard, who was the guiding shar of the women of Erin. The bard, it is to be hoped, misrepresented the ladies of his shields, are the deeds of our fathers. But who shall now lead the war, before the race of kings? Mist settles on these four dark hills: within it let each warrior strike his shield. Spirits may descend in darkness, and mark us for the war."

THEY went, each to his hill of mist. Bards marked the founds of the shields. Loudest rung thy boss, Duth-maruno. Thou must lead in war!

Like the murmur of waters, the race of Uthorno came down. Starno led the battle, and Swaran of stormy isles. They looked forward from iron shields, like Cruth-loda siery-eyed, when he looks from behind the darkened moon, and strews his signs on night. The foes met by Turthor's stream. They heaved like ridgy waves. Their echoing strokes are mixed. Shadowy death slies over the hosts. They were clouds of hail, with squally winds in their skirts. Their country, for Morna's behaviour was, according to him, so void of all decency and virtue, that it cannot be supposed, they had chosen her for their guiding flar. The poem consists of many stanzas. The language is figurative, and the numbers harmonious; but the piece is so full of anachronisms, and so unequal in its composition, that the author, most undoubtedly, was either mad, or drunk, when he wrote it. It is worthy of being remarked, that Comhal is, in this poem, very often called, Comhal na b'Albin, or Combal of Albion, which sufficiently demonstrates, that the allegations of Keating and O'Flaherty, concerning Fion Mac-Comnal, are but of late invention.

showers are roaring together. Below them swells the dark-rolling deep.

STRIFE of gloomy U-thorno, why should I mark thy wounds! Thou art with the years that are gone! thou fadest on my soul!

STARNO brought forward his skirt of war, and Swaran his own dark wing. Nor a harmless fire is Duth-maruno's sword. Lochlin is rolled over her streams. The wrathful kings are lost in thought. They roll their silent eyes, over the slight of their land. The horn of Fingal was heard; the sons of woody Albion returned. But many lay, by Turthor's stream, silent in their blood.

CHIEF of Crathmo, faid the king, Duthmaruno, hunter of boars! not harmless returns my eagle, from the field of foes! For this white-bosomed Lanul shall brighten, at her streams; Candona shall rejoice, as he wanders in Crathmo's fields.

COLGORM*, replied the chief, was the first of

[•] The family of Duth-maruno, it appears, came originally from Scandinavia, or, at leaft, from some of the northern isles, subject, in chief, to the kings of Lochlin. The Highland senachies, who never missed to make their comments on, and additions to, the works of Ossian, have given us a long list of the ancestors of Duth maruno, and a particular account of their actions, many of which are of the marvellous kind. One of the tale-makers of the north has chosen for his hero, Starnmor, of my race in Albion; Colgorm, the rider of ocean, thro' its watry vales. He flew his brother in I-thorno*: he left the land of his fathers. He chose his place, in silence, by rocky Crathmo-craulo. His race came forth, in their years; they came forth to war, but they always sell. The wound of my fathers is mine, king of echoing isles!

HE drew an arrow from his fide! He fell pale, in a land unknown. His foul came forth to his fathers, to their flormy ifle. There they purfued boars of mist, along the skirts of winds. The chiefs flood silent around, as the stones of Loda, on their hill. The traveller fees them, through the twilight, from his lonely path. He thinks them the ghosts of the aged, forming future wars.

NIGHT came down, on U-thorno. Still flood the chiefs in their grief. The blast whistled by turns, thro' every warrior's hair. Fingal, at length, broke forth from the thoughts of his foul. He called Ullin of harps, and bade the fong to rife. "No falling fire, that is only seen, and then retires in night; no the father of Duth-maruno, and, confidering the adventures thro' which he has led him, the piece is neither difagreeable, nor abounding with that kind of fiction, which shocks credibility.

[·] An island of Scandinavia.

departing meteor was he that is laid fo low. He was like the ftrong-beaming fun, long rejoicing on his hill. Call the names of his fathers, from their dwellings old!"

I-THORNO*, faid the bard, that rifeft midft ridgy feas! Why is thy head fo gloomy, in the ocean's mift? From thy vales came forth a race, fearless as thy strong-winged eagles; the race of Colgorm of iron shields, dwellers of Loda's hall.

In Tormoth's refounding isle, arose Lurthan, streamy hill. It bent its woody head over a silent vale. There, at foamy Cruruth's source, dwelt Rurmar, hunter of boars! His daughter was fair as a sun-beam, white-bosomed Strinadona!

MANY a king of heroes, and hero of iron shields; many a youth of heavy locks came to Rurmar's echoing hall. They came to woo the maid, the stately huntress of Tormoth wild. But thou lookest careless from thy steps, highbosomed Strina-dona!

^{*} This epifode is, in the original, extremely beautiful. It is fet to that wild kind of music, which some of the Highlanders distinguish, by the title of Fón Oimarra, or, the Song of mermaids. Some part of the air is absolutely infernal, but there are many returns in the measure, which are inexpressibly wild and beautiful. From the genius of the music, I should think it came originally from Scandinavia, for the fistions delivered down concerning the Oi-marra, (who are reputed the authors of the music) exactly correspond with the notions of the northern nations, concerning their dirac, or gooddesses of death.—Of all the names in this episode, there is none of a Galic original, except Strina-dona, which signifies, the strife of beroes.

If on the heath she moved, her breast was whiter than the down of Cana †; if on the seabeat shore, than the soam of the rolling ocean. Her eyes were two stars of light. Her sace was heaven's bow in showers. Her dark hair slowed round it, like the streaming clouds. Thou wert the dweller of souls, white-handed Strina-dona!

COLGORM came, in his ship, and Corcul-Suran, king of shells. The brothers came, from I-thorno, to woo the sun-beam of Tormoth wild. She saw them in their echoing steel. Her soul was fixed on blue-eyed Colgorm. Ul-lochlin's nightly eye looked in, and saw the tossing arms of Strina-dona.

WRATHFUL the brothers frowned. Their flaming eyes, in filence, met. They turned away. They ftruck their shields. Their hands were trembling on their swords. They rushed into the strife of heroes, for long-haired Strinadona.

[†] The Cana is a certain kind of grass, which grows plentiful in the heathy morasses of the north. Its stalk is of the reedy kind, and it carries a tust of down, very much resembling cotton. It is excessively white, and, consequently often introduced by the bards, in their similes concerning the beauty of women.

^{*} Ul-lochlin, the guide to Lochlin; the name of a star.

CORCUL-SURAN fell in blood. On his isle, raged the strength of his father. He turned Colgorm, from I-thorno, to wander on all the winds. In Crathmo-craulo's rocky field, he dwelt by a foreign stream. Nor darkened the king alone, that beam of light was near, the daughter of echoing Tormoth, white-armed Strina-dona †.

† The continuation of this episode is just now in my hands; but the language is so different from, and the ideas so unworthy of, Ossian, that I have rejected it, as an interpolation by a modern bard.

CATH-LODA:

A

P O E M.

DUAN THIRD.

ARGUMENT.

Ossian, after some general reflections, describes the situation of Fingal, and the position of the army of Lochlin.—The conversation of Starno and Swaran.—The episode of Corman-trunar and Foinar-bragal.—Starno, from his own example, recommends to Swaran, to surprize Fingal, who had retired alone to a neighbouring hill. Upon Swaran's resusal, Starno undertakes the enterprize himself, is overcome, and taken prisoner, by Fingal.—He is dismissed, after a severe reprimand for his cruelty.

CATH-LODA:

DUAN THIRD.

WHENCE is the fiream of years? Whither do they roll along? Where have they hid, in mift, their many-coloured fides?

I look into the times of old, but they feem dim to Offian's eyes, like reflected moon beams, on a diffant lake. Here rife the red beams of war! There, filent, dwells a feeble race! They mark no years with their deeds, as flow they pass along. Dweller between the shields! thou that awakest the failing soul! descend from thy wall, harp of Cona, with thy voices three! Come with that which kindles the past: rear the forms of old, on their own dark-brown years!

* UTHORNO, hill of ftorms, I behold my race on thy fide. Fingal is bending, in night, over Duth-

^{*} The bards, who were always ready to supply what they thought deficient in the poems of Ossian, have inserted a great many incidents between the second and third duan of Cathloda. Their interpolations are so easily distinguished from the genuine

Duth-maruno's tomb. Near him are the steps of his heroes, hunters of the boar. By Turthor's stream the host of Lochlin is deep in shades. The wrathful kings stood on two hills; they looked forward from their bossy shields. They looked forward to the stars of night, redwandering in the west. Cruth-loda bends from high, like a formless meteor in clouds. He sends genuine remains of Offian, that it took me very little time to mark them out, and totally to reject them. If the modern Scotch and Irish bards have shewn any judgment, it is in ascribing their own compositions to names of antiquity; for, by that means, they themselves have escaped that contempt, which the authors of fuch futile performances must, necessarily, have met with, from people of true tafte. I was led into this observation, by an Irish poem, just now before me. It concerns a descent made by Swaran, king of Lochlin, on Ireland, and is the work, fays the traditional preface prefixed to it, of Offian Mae-Fion. It however appears, from feveral pious ejaculations, that it was rather the composition of some good priest, in the fifteenth or fixteenth century, for he speaks; with great devotion, of pilgrimage, and more particularly, of the blue-eyed daughters of the convent. Religious, however, as this poet was, he was not altogether decent, in the scenes he introduces between Swaran and the wife of Congcullion, both of whom he represents as giants. It happening unfortunately, that Congcullion was only of a moderate stature, his wife with. out hesitation, preferred Swaran, as a more adequate match for her own gigantic fize. From this fatal preference proceeded so much mischief, that the good poet altogether lost fight of his principal action, and he ends the piece, with au advice to men, in the choice of their wives, which, however good it may be, I shall leave concealed in the obscurity of the original:

abroad the winds, and marks them, with his figns. Starno forefaw, that Morven's king was not to yield in war.

He twice struck the tree in wrath. He rushed before his son. He hummed a surly song; and heard his hair in wind. Turned * from one another, they stood, like two oaks, which different winds had bent; each hangs over its own loud rill, and shakes its boughs in the course of blass.

"ANNIR," faid Starno of lakes, " was a fire that confumed of old. He poured death from his eyes, along the firiving fields. His joy was in the fall of men. Blood, to him, was a fummer stream, that brings joy to withered vales, from its own mostly rock. He came forth to the lake Luth-cormo, to meet the tall Corman-trunar, he from Urlor of streams, dweller of battle's wing."

The furly attitude of Starno and Swaran is well adapted to their fierce and uncomplying dispositions. Their characters, at first fight, seem little different; but, upon examination, we find that the poet has dexterously distinguished between them. They were both dark, slubborn, haughty and reserved; but Starno was cunning, revengeful, and cruel, to the highest degree; the disposition of Swaran, though savage, was less bloody, and somewhat tinctured with generosity. It is doing injustice to Ossian, to say, that he has not a great variety of characters.

"The chief of Urlor had come to Gormal, with his dark-bosomed ships. He saw the daughter of Annir, white-armed Foina-brâgal. He saw her! Nor careless rolled her eyes, on the rider of stormy waves. She fled to his ship in darkness, like a moon-beam thro' a nightly vale. Annir pursued along the deep; he called the winds of heaven. Nor alone was the king! Starno was by his side. Like U-thorno's young cagle, I turned my eyes on my father.

We rushed into roaring Urlor. With his people came tall Corman-trunar. We fought; but the foe prevailed. In his wrath my father stood. He lopped the young trees, with his sword. His eyes rolled red in his rage. I marked the foul of the king, and I retired in night. From the field I took a broken helmet: a shield that was pierced with steel: pointless was the spear in my hand. I went to find the foe.

On a rock fat tall Corman-trunar, befide his burning oak; and near him, beneath a tree, fat deep-bofomed Foina-brâgal. I threw my broken shield before her. I spoke the words of peace. "Beside his rolling sea, lies Annir of many lakes. The king was pierced in battle; and Starno is to raise his tomb. Me, a son of Loda, he sends to white-handed Foina, to bid her fend a lock from her hair, to rest with her father, in earth-And thou king of roaring Urlor, let the battle cease, till Annir receive the shell, from siery-eyed Cruth-loda.

* BURSTING into tears, she rose, and tore a lock from her hair; a lock, which wandered, in the blast, along her heaving breast. Corman-trunar gave the shell; and bade me to rejoice before him. I rested in the shade of night; and hid my face in my helmet deep. Sleep descended on the foe. I rose, like a stalking ghost. I pierced the side of Cormantrunar. Nor did Foina-bragal escape. She rolled her white bosom in blood.

WHY then, daughter of heroes, didst thou wake my rage?

MORNING rose. The soe were sted, like the departure of mist. Annir struck his bossy shield. He called his dark-haired son. I came, streaked with wandering blood: thrice rose the Offian is very partial to the fair fex. Even the daughter of the cruel Annir, the fifter of the revengeful and bloody Starno, partakes not of those difagreeable characters so peculiar to her family. She is altogether tender and delicate. Homer, of all ancient poets, uses the sex with least ceremony. His cold contempt is even worse, than the downright abuse of the moderns; for to draw abuse implies the possession of some merit.

shout of the king, like the bursting forth of a squall of wind, from a cloud, by night. We rejoiced, three days, above the dead, and called the hawks of heaven. They came, from all their winds, to feast on Annir's foes. Swaran! Fingal is alone *, on his hill of night. Let thy spear pierce the king in secret; like Annir, my foul shall rejoice.

"Son of Annir," faid Swaran, "I shall not flay in shades. I move forth in light: the hawks ruth from all their winds. They are wont to trace my course: it is not harmless thro' war."

BURNING rose the rage of the king. He thrice raised his gleaming spear. But, starting, he spared his son; and rushed into the night. By Turthor's stream a cave is dark, the dwelling of Conban-carglas. There he laid the helmet of kings, and called the maid of Lulan, but the was distant far, in Loda's resounding hall.

Swelling in his rage, he strode, to where Fingal lay alone. The king was laid on his shield, on his own fecret hill.

^{*} Fingal, according to the custom of the Caledonian kings, had retired to a hill alone, as he himself was to resume the command of the army the next day. Starno might have some intelligence of the king's retiring, which occasions his request to Swaran, to stab him; as he foresaw, by his art of divination, that he could not overcome him in open battle.

STERN hunter of fhaggy boars! no feeble maid is laid before thee. No boy, on his ferny bed, by Turthor's murmuring fiream. Here is fpread the couch of the mighty, from which they rife to deeds of death! Hunter of fhaggy boars awaken not the terrible!

STARNO came murmuring on. Fingal arose in arms. "Who art thou, fon of night?" Silent he threw the spear. They mixed their gloomy strife. The shield of Starno fell, cleft in twain. He is bound to an oak. The early beam arose. It was then Fingal beheld the king. He rolled a while his filent eyes. He thought of other days, when white-bosomed Agandecca moved like the music of songs. He loosed the thong from his hands. Son of Annir, he faid, retire. Retire to Gormal of thells; 2 beam that was fet returns. I remember thy white-bofomed daughter; dreadful king away! Go to thy troubled dwelling, cloudy foe of the lovely! Let the stranger shun thee, thou gloomy in the hall I

A TALE of the times of old!

COMÁLA:

A

DRAMATIC POEM.

ARGUMENT.

This poem is valuable on account of the light it throws on the antiquity of Oslian's compositions. The Caracul mentioned here is the same with Caracalla the son of Severus, who in the year 211 commanded an expedition against the Caledonians. The variety of the measure shews that the poem was originally fet to music, and perhaps presented before the chiefs upon folemn occasions. Tradition has handed down the story more complete than it is in the poem. " Comala, the daughter of Sarno king of Inistore or Crkney illands, fell in love with Fingal the fon of Comhal at a feast, to which her father had invited him. [Fingal, B. Ill.] upon his return from Lochlin, after the death of Agandecca. Her passion was so violent, that she followed him, disguised like a youth, who wanted to be employed in his wars. She was foon discovered by Hidallan the fon of Lamor, one of Fingal's heroes, whose love fhe had flighted fome time before. Her romantic passion and beauty recommended her fo much to the king, that he had resolved to make her his wife; when news was brought him of Caracul's expedition. He marched to stop the progress of the enemy, and Comala attended him. He left her on a hill, within fight of Caracul's army, when he himfelf went to battle, having previously promised, if he survived, to return that night." The fequel of the story may be gathered from the poem itself.

C O M A L A:

A

DRAMATIC POEM.

$

The PERSONS.

FINGAL. MELILCOMA, daughters Hidallan. Dersagrena, of Morni.

COMALA. BARDS.

DERSAGRENA.

HE chace is over. No noise on Ardven but the torrent's roar! Daughter of Morni, come from Crona's banks. Lay down the bow and take the harp. Let the night come on with songs, let our joy be great on Ardven.

MELILCOMA *.

NIGHT comes apace, thou blue-eyed maid; grey night grows dim along the plain. I faw a deer at Crona's fiream, a mosty bank he seemed through the gloom, but soon he bounded away. A meteor played round his branching horns! the awful faces † of other times looked from the clouds of Crona!

^{*} Melilcoma, - foft-rolling eye.

DERSAGRENA I.

THESE are the figns of Fingal's death. The king of thields is fallen! and Caracul prevails. Rife, Comala ||, from thy rock; daughter of Sarno, rife in tears. The youth of thy love is low; his ghoft is on our hills.

MELILCOMA.

THERE Comala fits forlorn! two grey dogs near thake their rough ears, and catch the flying breeze. Her red cheek rests upon her arm, the mountain wind is in her hair. She turns her blue eyes toward the fields of his promise. Where art thou, O Fingal, the night is gathering around?

† Apparent diræ facies, inimicaque Trojæ Numina magna deum.

VIRG.

And the dire form of hostile gods appear.

DRYDEN.

† Dersagrena, the brightness of a sun-beam. | Comala, the maid of the pleasant brow.

COMALA.

COMALA.

O CARUN* of the streams! why do I behold thy waters rolling in blood? Has the noise of the battle been heard; and sleeps the king of Morven? Rise, moon, thou daughter of the sky! look from between thy clouds, rise that I may behold the gleam of his steel, on the sield of his promise. Or rather let the meteor, that lights our fathers through the night, come, with its red beam, to thew me the way to my fallen hero. Who will defend me from forrow? Who from the love of Hidallan? Long shall Comala look before the can behold Fingal in the midst of his host; bright as the coming forth of the morning, in the cloud of an early shower.

Carun or Cara'on, a winding river.—This river retains still the name of Carron, and falls into the Forth some miles to the North of Falkirk.

[—] Gentesque alias cum pelleret armis
Sedibus, aut victas vilem servaret in usum
Servitii, bic contenta suos desen ere sines
Roma securigeris prætendit mænia Scotis:
Hic spe progressus posita, Caronis ad undam Terninus Ausonii signat divortia regni. Buchanan.

HIDALLAN T.

Dwell, thou mist of gloomy Crona, dwell on the path of the king. Hide his steps from mine eyes, let me remember my friend no more. The bands of battle are scattered, no crowding tread is round the noise of his steel. O Carun, roll thy streams of blood, the chief of the people is low.

COMALA.

Who fell on Carun's founding banks, fon of the cloudy night? Was he white as the fnow of Ardven? Blooming as the bow of the shower? Was his hair like the mist of the hill, fost and curling in the day of the fun? Was he like the thunder of heaven in battle? Fleet as the roe of the defart?

HIDALLAN.

O THAT I might behold his love, fair-leaning from her rock! Her red eye dim in tears, her blufhing cheek half hid in her locks! Blow, O gentle breeze, lift thou the heavy locks of the + Hidallan was fent by Fingal to give notice to Comala of his return; he, to revenge himself on her for slighting his love some time before, told her that the king was killed in battle. He even pretended that he carried his body from the field to be buried in her presence; and this circumstance makes it probable that the poem was presented of old.

maid,

maid, that I may behold her white arm, her lovely cheek in her grief.

COMALA.

AND is the fon of Comhal fallen, chief of the mournful tale? The thunder rolls on the hill! The lightning flies on wings of fire! They frighten not Comala; for Fingal is low. Say, chief of the mournful tale, fell the breaker of the shields?

HIDALLAN.

THE nations are feattered on their hills! they shall hear the voice of the king no more.

COMALA.

Confusion purfue thee over thy plains! Ruin overtake thee, thou king of the world! Few be thy fleps to thy grave; and let one virgin mourn thee. Let her be like Comala, tearful in the days of her youth. Why haft thou told me, Hidallan, that my hero fell? I might have hoped a little while his return, I might have thought I faw him on the diffant rock; a tree might have deceived me with his appearance; the wind of the hill might have been the found of his horn in mine ear. O that I were on the banks of Carun! that my tears might be warm on his cheek!

HIDALLAN.

He lies not on the banks of Carun: on Ardven heroes raise his tomb. Look on them, O moon, from thy clouds; be thy beam bright on his breast, that Comala may behold him in the light of his armour.

COMALA.

STOP, ye fons of the grave, till I behold my love! He left me at the chace alone. I knew not that he went to war. He faid he would return with the night; the king of Morven is returned! Why didft thou not tell me that he would fall, O trembling dweller of the rock *! Thou fawest him in the blood of his youth; but thou didft not tell Comala!

MELILCOMA.

WHAT found is that on Ardven? Who is that bright in the vale? Who comes like the strength of rivers, when their crouded waters glitter to the moon?

* By the dweller of the rock she means a druid. It is probable that some of the order of the druids remained as late as the beginning of the reign of Fingal; and that Comala had consulted one of them concerning the event of the war with Caracul.

COMALA.

Who is it but the foe of Comala, the fon of the king of the world! Ghost of Fingal! do thou, from thy cloud, direct Comala's bow. Let him fall like the hart of the defart. It is Fingal in the crowd of his ghosts. Why dost thou come, my love, to frighten and please my foul?

FINGAL.

RAISE, ye bards the fong, raise the wars of the streamy Carun! Caracul has fled from our arms along the fields of his pride. He sets far distant like a meteor, that incloses a spirit of night, when the winds drive it over the heath, and the dark woods are gleaming around. I heard a voice, or was it the breeze of my hills? Is it the huntress of Ardven, the whitehanded daughter of Sarno? Look from thy rocks, my love; let me hear the voice of Comala!

COMALA.

TAKE me to the cave of thy rest, O lovely son of death!

FINGAL.

Come to the cave of my rest. The storm is past, the sun is on our fields. Come to the cave of my rest, huntress of ecchoing Ardven!

COMALA.

HE is returned with his fame! I feel the right hand of his wars! But I must rest bestide the rock till my soul returns from my fear! O let the harp be near! raise the song, ye daughters of Morni!

DERSAGRENA.

COMALA has flain three deer on Ardven, the fire afcends on the rock; go to the feaft of Comala, king of the woody Morven!

FINGAL.

RAISE, ye fons of fong, the wars of the streamy Carun; that my white-handed maid may rejoice: while I behold the feast of my love.

BARDS.

ROLL, streamy Carun, roll in joy, the fons of battle fled! The fleed is not feen on our fields; fields; the wings * of their pride fpread in other lands. The fun will now rife in peace, and the shadows descend in joy. The voice of the chace will be heard; the shields hang in the hall. Our delight will be in the war of the ocean, our hands shall grow red in the blood of Lochlin. Roll, streamy Carun, roll in joy, the sons of battle sled!

MELILCOMA.

DESCEND, ye light miss from high! Ye moon-beams, lift her foul. Pale lies the maid at the rock! Comala is no more?

FINGAL.

Is the daughter of Sarno dead; the whitebosomed maid of my love? Meet me, Comala, on my heaths, when I sit alone at the streams of my hills!

HIDALLAN.

CEASED the voice of the huntress of Ardven? Why did I trouble the foul of the maid? When shall I fee thee, with joy, in the chace of the dark-brown hinds?

^{*} Perhaps the poet alludes to the Roman eagle.

FINGAL.

Youth of the gloomy brow! no more shalt thou seast in my halls. Thou shalt not pursue my chace, my foes shall not fall by thy sword *. Lead me to the place of her rest that I may behold her beauty. Pale she lies at the rock, the cold winds lift her hair. Her bow-string sounds in the blass, her arrow was broken in her fall. Raise the praise of the daughter of Sarno! give her name to the winds of heaven!

BARDS.

SEE! meteors gleam around the maid! See! moon-beams lift her foul! Around her, from their clouds, bend the awful faces of her fathers; Sarno + of the gloomy brow! the redrolling eyes of Fidallan! When shall thy white hand arise? When shall thy voice be heard on our rocks? The maids shall feek thee on the heath, but they shall not find thee. Thou shalt come, at times, to their dreams, to settle peace

The fequel of the flory of Hidallan is introduced in another poem.

[†] Sarno the father of Comala died foon after the flight of his daughter. Fidallan was the first king that reigned in Inistore.

A DRAMATIC POEM.

49

in their foul. Thy voice shall remain in their ears, they shall think with joy on the dreams of their rest. Meteors gleam around the maid, and moon-beams lift her foul!

CARRIC-THURA:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Fingal, returning from an expedition which he had made into the Roman province, refolved to vifit Cathulla king of Inistore, and brother to Comila, whose story is related, at large, in the preceding dramatic poem. Upon his coming in fight of Carric-thura, the palace of Cathulla, he observed a flame on its top, which, in those days, was a fignal of diffress. The wind drove him into a bay, at some distance from Carric-thura, and he was obliged to pass the night on the shore. Next day he attacked the army of Frothal king of Sora, who had befieged Cathulla in his palace of Carric-thura, and took Frothal himself prisoner, after he had engaged him in a fingle combat. The deliverance of Carric-thura is the subject of the poem, but several other episodes are interwoven with it. It appears from tradition, that this poem was addressed to a Culdee, or one of the first Christian missionaries, and that the story of the Spirit of Loda, supposed to be the ancient Odin of Scandinavia, was introduced by Ossian in opposition to the Culdee's doctrine. Be this as it will, it lets us into Offian's notions of a superior being; and shews that he was not addicted to the superstition which prevailed all the world over, before the introduction of Christianity.

CARRIC-THURA:

A

P O E M.

AST; thou left thy blue course in heaven, golden-haired son of the sky! The west has opened its gates; the bed of thy repose is there. The waves come to behold thy beauty. They lift their trembling heads. They see thee lovely in thy sleep; they shrink away with fear. Rest, in thy shadowy cave, O sun! let thy return be in joy.

But let a thousand lights arise to the sound of the harps of Selma: let the beam spread in the hall, the king of shells is returned! The strife of Carun is pass *, like sounds that are no more. Raise the song, O bards, the king is returned, with his same!

E 3

Such

[†] The song of Ullin, with which the poem opens, is in a lyric measure. It was usual with Fingal, when he returned from his expeditions, to send his bards singing before him. This species of triumph is called, by Ossian, the song of victory.

^{*} Offian has celebrated the firife of Crona, in a particular poem. This poem is connected with it, but it was impossible for the translator to procure that part which relates to Crona, with any degree of purity.

Such were the words of Ullin, when Fingal returned from war: when he returned in the fair blufhing of youth, with all his heavy locks. His blue arms were on the hero; like a light cloud on the fun, when he moves in his robes of mift, and fhews but half his beams. His heroes follow the king: the feaft of fhells is fpread. Fingal turns to his bards, and bids the fong to rife.

Voices of ecchoing Cona! he faid, O bards of other times! Ye, on whose souls the blue hosts of our fathers rise! strike the harp in my hall; and let me hear the song. Pleasant is the joy of gries! it is like the shower of spring, when it softens the branch of the oak, and the young leaf rears its green head. Sing on, O bards, to-morrow we lift the sail. My blue course is through the ocean, to Carrie-thura's walls; the mostly walls of Sarno, where Comála dwelt. There the noble Cathulla, spreads the feast of shells. The boars of his woods are many; the found of the chace shall arise!

CRONNAN*, fon of the fong! faid Ullin, Minona, graceful at the harp! raife the tale of Shilric,

One should think that the parts of Shilric and Vinvela were represented by Cronnan and Minona, whose very names denote that they were singers, who performed in public. Cronnan signifies a mournful found, Minona, or Min-'onn, fife Shilric, to please the king of Morven. Let Vinvela come in her beauty, like the showery bow, when it shews its lovely head on the lake, and the setting sun is bright. She comes, O Fingal! her voice is soft but sad.

VINVELA.

My love is a fon of the hill. He pursues the flying deer. His grey dogs are panting around him; his bow-firing founds in the wind. Dost thou rest by the fount of the rock, or by the noise of the mountain-stream? the rushes are nodding to the wind, the miss flies over the hill. I will approach my love unseen; I will behold him from the rock. Lovely I saw thee first by the aged oak of Branno*; thou wert returning tall from the chace; the fairest among thy friends.

SHILRIC.

What voice is that I hear? that voice like the fummer-wind! I fit not by the nodding air. All the dramatic poems of Offian appear to have been prefented before Fingal, upon folemn occasions.

^{*} Bran, or Branno, fignifies a mountain-fiream: it is here fome river known by that name, in the days of Odian. There are feveral small rivers in the north of Scotland still retaining the name of Bran; in particular one which falls into the Tay at Dunkeld.

rushes; I hear not the fount of the rock. Afar, Vinvela*, afar, I go to the wars of Fingal. My dogs attend me no more. No more I tread the hill. No more from on high I see thee, fair-moving by the stream of the plain; bright as the bow of heaven; as the moon on the western wave.

VINVELA.

THEN thou art gone, O Shilric! I am alone on the hill! The deer are feen on the brow; void of fear they graze along. No more they dread the wind; no more the ruftling tree. The hunter is far removed; he is in the field of graves. Strangers! fons of the waves! fpare my lovely Shilric!

SHILRIC.

Is fall I must in the field, raise high my grave, Vinvela. Grey stones and heaped-up earth, shall mark me to suture times. When the hunter shall sit by the mound, and produce his food at noon, "Some warrior rests here," he will say; and my same shall live in his praise. Remember me, Vinvela, when low on earth I lie!

Bhin bheul, a woman with a melodious voice. Bh in the Galic language has the same sound with the w in English.

VINVELA.

YES! I will remember thee; alas! my Shilric will fall! What shall I do, my love! when thou art for ever gone? Through these hills I will go at noon: I will go through the silent heath. There I will see the place of thy rest, returning from the chace. Alas! my Shilric will fall; but I will remember Shilric.

AND I remember the chief, faid the king of woody Morven; he confumed the battle in his rage. But now my eyes behold him not. I met him, one day, on the hill; his cheek was pale; his brow was dark. The figh was frequent in his breaft: his fleps were towards the defart. But now he is not in the crowd of my chiefs, when the founds of my shields arife. Dwells he in the narrow house*, the chief of high Carmora †?

CRONNAN! faid Ullin of other times, raife the fong of Shilric; when he returned to his hills, and Vinvela was no more. He leaned on her grey mosfly stone; he thought Vinvela lived. He saw her sair moving ‡ on the plain: but the bright form lasted not: the fun-beam fled from the field, and she was seen no more. Hear the song of Shilric, it is soft but sad!

^{*} The grave.

⁺ Carn-mór, bigh rocky hill.

[†] The distinction which the ancient Scots made between good and bad spirits, was, that the former appeared sometimes in the day-time in lonely unfrequented places, but the latter never but by night, and in a dismal gloomy scene.

I set by the mosty fountain; on the top of the hill of winds. One tree is rustling above me. Dark waves roll over the heath. The lake is troubled below. The deer descend from the hill. No hunter at a distance is seen. It is mid-day: but all is silent. Sad are my thoughts alone. Didst thou but appear, O my love, a wanderer on the heath! thy hair sloating on the wind behind thee; thy bosom heaving on the sight; thine eyes full of tears for thy friends, whom the mist of the hill had concealed! Thee I would comfort, my love, and bring thee to thy sather's house!

Bur is it she that there appears, like a beam of light on the heath? bright as the moon in autumn, as the sun in a summer-storm, comest thou, O maid, over rocks, over mountains to me? She speaks: but how weak her voice! like the breeze in the reeds of the lake.

"RETURNEST thou fafe from the war? Where are thy friends, my love? I heard of thy death on the hill; I heard and mourned thee, Shilrie! Yes, my fair, I return; but I alone of my race. Thou thalt fee them no more: their graves I raised on the plain. But why art thou on the defert hill? Why on the heath alone?"

"ALONE I am, O Shilric! alone in the winter-house. With grief for thee I fell. Shilric, I am pale in the tomb."

SHE fleets, the fails away; as mist before the wind! and, wilt thou not stay, Vinvela? Stay and behold my tears! fair thou appearest, Vinvela! fair thou wast, when alive!

By the mostly fountain I will sit; on the top of the hill of winds. When mid-day is silent around, O talk with me, Vinvela! come on the light-winged gale! on the breeze of the defart, come! Let me hear thy voice, as thou passest, when mid-day is silent around!

SUCH was the fong of Cronnan, on the night of Selma's joy. But morning rose in the east; the blue waters rolled in light. Fingal bade his fails to rise; the winds came rustling from their hills. Inistore rose to sight, and Carrie-thura's mostly towers! But the sign of distress was on their top: the warning slame edged with smoke. The king of Morven struck his breast: he assumed, at once, his spear. His darkened brow bends forward to the coast: he looks back to the lagging winds. His hair is disordered on his back. The silence of the king is terrible!

NIGHT

NIGHT came down on the fea; Rotha's bay received the ship. A rock bends along the coast with all its ecchoing wood. On the top is the circle * of Loda, the mosty stone of power! A narrow plain spreads beneath, covered with grass and aged trees, which the midnight winds, in their wrath, had torn from the shaggy rock. The blue course of a stream is there! the lonely blast of ocean pursues the thistle's beard. The stame of three oaks arose: the feast is spread around: but the soul of the king is sad, for Carric-thura's Chief distress.

THE wan, cold moon rose, in the east. Sleep descended on the youths! Their blue helmets glitter to the beam; the fading fire decays. But sleep did not rest on the king: he rose in the midst of his arms, and slowly ascended the hill to behold the slame of Sarno's tower.

THE flame was dim and diffant; the moon hid her red face in the east. A blast came from the mountain, on its wings was the spirit of Loda. He came to his place in his terrors †, and shook

The circle of Loda is supposed to be a place of worship among the Scandinavians, as the spirit of Loda is thought to be the same with their god Odin.

⁺ He is described, in a simile, in the poem concerning the his dusky spear. His eyes appear like flames in his dark face: his voice is like distant thunder. Fingal advanced his fpear in night, and raifed his voice on high.

Son of night, retire: call thy winds and fly! Why doft thou come to my prefence, with thy thadowy arms? Do I fear thy gloomy form, fpirit of difmal Loda? Weak is thy shield of clouds: feeble is that meteor, thy fword. The blast rolls them together; and thou thyself art loft. Fly from my prefence fon of night! call thy winds and fly !

Dost thou force me from my place, replied the hollow voice? The people bend before me. I turn the battle in the field of the brave. I look on the nations and they vanish: my noftrils pour the blaft of death. I come abroad on the winds: the tempests are before my face. But my dwelling is calm, above the clouds; the fields of my rest are pleasant.

DWELL in thy pleasant fields, said the king: Let Comhal's fon be forgot. Do my steps afcend, from my hills, into thy peaceful plains? Do I meet thee, with a spear, on thy cloud, fpirit of difmal Loda? Why then dost thou frown on me? why shake thine airy spear? Thou frownest in vain: I never fled from the mighty in war. And thall the fons of the wind frighten the king of Morven? No: he knows the weakness of their arms!

FLY to thy land, replied the form: receive the wind and fly! The blafts are in the hollow of my hand: the course of the storm is mine. The king of Sora is my son, he bends at the stone of my power. His battle is around Carricthura; and he will prevail! Fly to thy land, son of Comhal, or seel my slaming wrath!

He lifted high his shadowy spear! He bent forward his dreadful height. Fingal, advancing, drew his sword; the blade of dark-brown Luno*. The gleaming path of the steel winds thro' the gloomy ghost. The form sell shapeless into air, like a column of smoke, which the staff of the boy disturbs, as it rises from the half-extinguished furnace.

THE spirit of Loda shrieked, as, rolled into himself, he rose on the wind. Inistore shook at the sound. The waves heard it on the deep. They stopped, in their course, with sear: the friends of Fingal started, at once; and took their heavy spears. They missed the king: they rose in rage; all their arms resound!

^{*} The famous fword of Fingal, made by Lun, or Luno, a fmith of Lochlin.

The moon came forth in the east. Fingal returned in the gleam of his arms. The joy of his youth was great, their fouls settled, as a sea from a storm. Ullin raised the song of gladness. The hills of Inistore rejoiced. The slame of the oak arose; and the tales of heroes are told.

But Frothal, Sora's wrathful king, fits in fadness beneath a tree. The host spreads around Carric-thura. He looks towards the walls with rage. He longs for the blood of Cathulla, who, once, overcame him in war. When Annir reigned * in Sora, the father of fea-borne Frothal, a fform arose on the sea, and carried Frothal to Inistore. Three days he feasted in Sarno's halls, and faw the flow rolling eyes of Comála. He loved her, in the flame of youth, and ruthed to feize the white-armed maid. Cathulla met the chief. The gloomy battle rofe. Frothal was bound in the hall; three days he pined alone. On the fourth, Sarno fent him to his thip, and he returned to his land. But wrath darkened in his foul against the noble ^{*} Annir was also the father of Erragon, who was king after the death of his brother Frothal. The death of Erragon is the subject of the battle of Lora, a poem in this collection.

Cathulla. When Annir's stone * of fame arose, Frothal came in his strength. The battle burned round Carric-thura, and Sarno's mosty walls.

MORNING rose on Inistore. Frothal struck his dark-brown shield. His chiefs started at the sound; they stood, but their eyes were turned to the sea. They saw Fingal coming in his strength; and sirst the noble Thubar spoke. "Who comes like the stag of the defart, with all his herd behind him? Frothal, it is a foe! I see his forward spear. Perhaps it is the king of Morven, Fingal the first of men. His deeds are well known in Lochlin; the blood of his foes is in Starno's halls. Shall I ask the peace to skings? His sword is the bolt of heaven!"

Son of the feeble hand, faid Frothal, shall my days begin in a cloud? Shall I yield before I have conquered, chief of streamy Tora? The people would fay in Sora, Frothal slew forth like a meteor; but a darkness has met him; and his fame is no more. No: Thubar, I will never yield; my fame shall surround me like light. No: I will never yield, chief of streamy Tora!

[•] That is, after the death of Annir. To erect the stone of one's fame, was, in other words, to say that the person was dead.

[†] Honourable terms of peace.

FINGAL

HE went forth with the ffream of his people, but they met a rock: Fingal flood unmoved, broken they rolled back from his fide. Nor did they fafely fly; the fpear of the king purfued their fleps. The field is covered with heroes. A rifing hill preferved the foe.

FROTHAL faw their flight. The rage of his bosom rose. He bent his eyes to the ground, and called the noble Thubar. Thubar! my people are fled. My fame has ceased to arise. I will fight the king; I feel my burning soul!, Send a bard to demand the combat. Speak not against Frothal's words! But, Thubar! I love a maid; she dwells by Thano's stream, the white-bosomed daughter of Herman, Utha with soft-rolling eyes. She seared the low-laid Comála; her secret sighs rose, when I spread the fail. Tell to Utha of harps, that my soul delighted in her!

SUCH were his words, refolved to fight, The foft figh of Utha was near! She had followed her hero, in the armour of a man. She rolled her eye on the youth, in fecret, from beneath her fteel. She faw the bard as he went; the fpear fell thrice from her hand! Her loofe hair flew on the wind. Her white breast rose, with fighs. She raised her eyes to the king. She would speak, but thrice she failed.

Vol. i. F

FINGAL heard the words of the bard; he came in the firength of his fteel. They mixed their deathful fpears: They raifed the gleam of their arms. But the fword of Fingal descended and cut Frothal's shield in twain. His fair side is exposed; half bent he foresees his death. Darkness gathered on Utha's soul. The tear rolled down her cheek. She rushed to cover the chief with her shield; but a fallen oak met her steps. She fell on her arm of snow; her shield, her helmet slew wide. Her white bosom heaved to the sight; her dark-brown hair is spread on earth.

Fingal pitied the white-armed maid! he flayed the uplifted fword. The tear was in the eye of the king, as, bending forward, he spoke. "King of streamy Sora! fear not the sword of Fingal. It was never stained with the blood of the vanquished; it never pierced a fallen soe. I et thy people rejoice by thy native streams. Let the maids of thy love be glad. Why shouldest thou fall in thy youth, king of streamy Sora?" Frothal heard the words of Fingal, and saw the rising maid: they flood in silence, in their beauty: like two young trees of the plain, when the shower of spring is on their leaves, and the loud winds are laid.

^{*} Frothal and Utha,

DAUGHTER of Herman, faid Frothal, didft thou come from Tora's streams; didst thou come, in thy beauty, to behold thy warrior low? But he was low before the mighty, maid of the slow-rolling eye! The feeble did not overcome the fon of car-borne Annir! Terrible art thou, O king of Morven! in battles of the spear. But, in peace, thou art like the sun, when he looks thro' a silent shower: the slowers lift their fair heads before him; the gales shake their russling wings. O that thou wert in Sora! that my feast were spread! The future kings of Sora would fee thy arms and rejoice. They would rejoice at the same of their fathers, who beheld the mighty Fingal!

Son of Annir, replied the king, the fame of Sora's race shall be heard! When chiefs are strong in war, then does the fong arise! But if their swords are stretched over the feeble: if the blood of the weak has stained their arms; the bard shall forget them in the song, and their tombs shall not be known. The stranger shall come and build there, and remove the heaped-up earth. An half-worn sword shall rise before him; bending above it, he will say, "These are the arms of the chiefs of old, but their names are not in song." Come thou, O Frothal, to the feast of Inistore; let the maid of thy love be there; let our faces brighten with joy!

FINGAL took his fpear, moving in the steps of his might. The gates of Carric-thura are opened wide. The feast of shells is spread. The fost sound of music arose. Gladness brightened in the hall. The voice of Ullin was heard; the harp of Selma was strung. Utha rejoiced in his presence, and demanded the song of grief; the big tear hung in her eye, when the soft * Crimora spoke. Crimora the daughter of Rinval, who dwelt at Lotha's † roaring stream! The tale was long, but lovely; and pleased the blushing Utha.

CRIMORA .

Who cometh from the hill, like a cloud tinged with the beam of the west? Whose voice is that, loud as the wind, but pleasant as the harp of Carril ||? It is my love in the light of

* There is a propriety in introducing this epifode, as the fituations of Crimora and Utha were fo fimilar.

† Lotha was the ancient name of one of the great rivers in the north of Scotland. The only one of them that still retains a name of a like found is Lochy, in Invernesshire; but whether it is the river mentioned here, the translator will not pretend to say.

‡ Cri-mora, a woman of a great foul.

|| Perhaps the Carril mentioned here is the same with Carril the son of Kinsena, Cuchullin's bard. The name itself is proper to any bard, as it signifies a spright'y and barmonious sound.

fteel; but fad is his darkened brow! Live the mighty race of Fingal? or what darkens in Connal's foul *?

CONNAL.

THEY live. They return from the chace, like a ftream of light. The fun is on their thields. Like a ridge of fire they descend the hill. Loud is the voice of the youth! the war, my love, is near! To-morrow the dreadful Dargo comes to try the force of our race. The race of Fingal he desies; the race of battle and wounds!

CRIMORA.

CONNAL, I faw his fails like grey mist on the dark-brown wave. They slowly came to land. Connal, many are the warriors of Dargo!

CONNAL.

Bring me thy father's fhield; the boffy, iron thield of Rinval; that shield like the full-orbed moon, when she moves darkened through heaven.

^{*} Connal, the son of Diaran, was one of the most famous heroes of Fingal; he was slain in a battle against Dargo a Briton; but whether by the hand of the enemy, or that of his mistress, tradition does not determine.

CRIMORA.

THAT shield I bring, O Connal; but it did not defend my father. By the spear of Gormar he fell. Thou may'ft fall, O Connal!

CONNAL.

Fall I may! But raise my tomb, Crimora! Grey stones, a mound of earth, shall send my name to other times. Bend thy red eye over my grave, beat thy mournful heaving breast. Though fair thou art, my love, as the light; more pleasant than the gale of the hill; yet I will not here remain. Raise my tomb, Crimora!

CRIMORA.

THEN give me those arms that gleam; that sword, and that spear of steel. I shall meet Dargo with Connal, and aid him in the sight. Farewel, ye rocks of Ardven! ye deer! and ye streams of the hill! We shall return no more. Our tombs are distant far!

"And did they return no more?" faid Utha's burfting figh. "Fell the mighty in battle, and did Crimora live? Her fleps were lonely; her foul was fad for Connal. Was he not young and lovely; like the beam of the fetting fetting fun?" Ullin faw the virgin's tear, he took the foftly-trembling harp: the fong was lovely, but fad, and filence was in Carric-thura, AUTUMN is dark on the mountains; grey mist rests on the hills. The whirlwind is heard on the heath. Dark rolls the river through the narrow plain. A tree stands alone on the hill, and marks the slumbering Connal. The leaves whirl round with the wind, and strew the grave of the dead. At times are seen here the ghosts of the departed, when the musing hunter alone stalks slowly over the heath.

Who can reach the fource of thy race, O Connal? who recount thy fathers? Thy family grew like an oak on the mountain, which meeteth the wind with its lofty head. But now it is torn from the earth. Who thall fupply the place of Connal? Here was the din of arms; here the groans of the dying. Bloody are the wars of Fingal! O Connal! it was here thou didft fall. Thine arm was like a florm; thy fword a beam of the fky; thy height, a rock on the plain; thine eyes, a furnace of fire. Louder than a florm was thy voice, in the battles of thy fleel. Warriors fell by thy fword, as the thiflle by the staff of a boy. Dargo the mighty came on, darkening in his rage. His brows were gathered into wrath. His eyes like two caves in a rock. Bright rofe their fwords on each fide; loud was the clang of their fteel.

THE daughter of Rinval was near; Crimora bright in the armour of man; her yellow hair is loofe behind, her bow is in her hand. She followed the youth to the war, Connal her much-beloved. She drew the firing on Dargo; but erring the pierced her Connal. He falls like an oak on the plain; like a rock from the shaggy hill. What shall she do, hapless maid! He bleeds; her Connal dies! All the night long she cries, and all the day, "O Connal, my love, and my friend!" With grief the fad mourner dies! Earth here incloses the loveliest pair on the hill. The grafs grows between the stones of the tomb: I often sit in the mournful shade. The wind fighs through the grass; their memory rushes on my mind. Undisturbed you now fleep together; in the tomb of the mountain you rest alone!

And fost be their rest, said Utha, hapless children of streamy Lotha! I will remember them with tears, and my secret song shall rise; when the wind is in the groves of Tora, when the stream is roaring near. Then shall they come on my soul, with all their lovely grief!

THREE days feasted the kings: on the fourth their white fails arose. The winds of the north drove Fingal to Morven's woody land. But the fpirit of Loda fat, in his cloud, behind the ships of Frothal. He hung forward with all his blasts, and spread the white-bosomed fails. The wounds of his form were not forgot; he still feared * the hand of the king!

* The flory of Fingal and the spirit of Loda, supposed to be the samous Odin, is the most extravagant siction in all Ossian's poems. It is not, however, without precedents in the best poets; and it must be said for Ossian, that he says nothing but what perfectly agreed with the notions of the times, concerning ghosts. They thought the souls of the dead were material, and consequently susceptible of pain. Whether a proof could be drawn from this passage, that Ossian had no notion of a divinity, I shall leave to others to determine: it appears, however, that he was of opinion, that superior beings ought to take no notice of what passage.

CARTHON:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

This poem is compleat, and the subject of it, as of most of Offian's compositions, trapical. In the time of Comhal the fon of Trathal, and father of the celebrated Fingal, Clefsammor the fon of Thaddu and brother of Morna, Fingal's mother, was driven by a ftorm into the river Clyde, on the banks of which stood Balclutha, a town belonging to the Britons between the walls. He was hospitably received by Reuthámir, the principal man in the place, who gave him Moina his only daughter in marriage. Reuda, the fon of Cormo, a Briton who was in love with Moina, came to Reuthamir's house, and behaved haughtily towards Clessammor. A quarrel infued, in which Reuda was killed: the Britons, who attended him preffed to hard on Clefsammor, that he was obliged to throw himself into the Clyde, and fwim to his ship. He hoisted fail, and the wind being favourable, bore him out to fea. He often endeavoured to return, and carry off his beloved Moina by night: but the wind continuing contrary, he was forced to defift.

Moina, who had been left with child by her husband, brought forth a fon, and died foon after. - Reuthamir named the child Carthon, i. e. the murmur of waves, from the form which carried off Clessammor his father, who was supposed to have been cast away. When Carthon was three years old, Comhal the father of Fingal, in one of his expeditions against the Britons, took and burnt Balclutha. Reuthamir was killed in the attack: and Carthon was carried fafe away by his nurse, who fled farther into the country of the Britons. Carthon, coming to man's estate was refolved to revenge the fall of Balclutha on Comhal's posterity. He fet fail, from the Clyde, and, falling on the coast of Morven, defeated two of Fingal's heroes, who came to oppose his progress. He was, at last, unwittingly killed by his father Clessammor, in a fingle combat. This story is the foundation of the present poem, which opens on the night preceding the death of Carthon, fo that what passed before is introduced by way of episode. The poem is addreffed to Malvina the daughter of Toscar.

CARTHON:

A

P O E M.

A TALE of the times of old! The deeds of days of other years!

The murmur of thy fireams, O Lora, brings back the memory of the past. The sound of thy woods, Garmallar, is lovely in mine ear. Dost thou not behold, Malvina, a rock with its head of heath? Three aged pines bend from its face; green is the narrow plain at its feet; there the slower of the mountain grows, and shakes its white head in the breeze. The thisse is there alone, shedding its aged beard. Two stones, half sunk in the ground, shew their heads of moss. The deer of the mountain avoids the place, for he beholds a dim ghost standing there. The mighty lie, O Malvina, in the narrow plain of the rock.

^{*} It was the opinion of the times, that deer faw the ghosts of the dead. To this day, when beasts suddenly start without any apparent cause, the vulgar think that they see the spirits of the deceased.

A TALE of the times of old! the deeds of days of other years!

Who comes from the land of ftrangers, with his thousands around him? the fun-beam pours its bright stream before him; his hair meets the wind of his hills. His face is settled from war. He is calm as the evening beam that looks, from the cloud of the west, on Cona's silent vale. Who is it but Comhal's fon *, the king of mighty deeds! He beholds his hills with joy, he bids a thousand voices rise. "Ye have sled over your fields, ye sons of the distant land! The king of the world sits in his hall, and hears of his people's slight. He lists his red eye of pride; he takes his father's sword. Ye have sled over your fields, sons of the distant land!"

SUCH were the words of the bards, when they came to Selma's halls. A thousand lights † from the stranger's land rose, in the midst of the people. The feast is spread around; the night passed away in joy. Where is the noble Cless-ammor ‡, said the fair-haired Fingal? Where is the brother of Morna, in the hour of my joy?

^{*} Fingal returns here, from an expedition against the Romans, which was celebrated by Ossian in a poem called the strife of Crona.

⁺ Probably wax-lights; which are often mentioned as carried, among other booty, from the Roman province.

¹ Clestamh mor, mighty deeds.

Sullen and dark he paffes his days in the vale of ecchoing Lora: but, behold, he comes from the hill, like a fleed in his flrength, who finds his companions in the breeze; and toffes his bright mane in the wind. Bleft be the foul of Clefs-ámmor, why fo long from Selma?

RETURNS the chief, faid Clefsámmor, in the midft of his fame? Such was the renown of Comhal in the battles of his youth. Often did we pass over Carun to the land of the strangers; our swords returned, not unstained with blood: nor did the kings of the world rejoice. Why do I remember the times of our war? My hair is mixed with grey. My hand forgets to bend the bow: I lift a lighter spear. O that my joy would return, as when I first beheld the maid; the white bosomed daughter of strangers, Moina *, with the dark-blue eyes!

Tell, faid the mighty Fingal, the tale of thy youthful days. Sorrow, like a cloud on the fun, shades the foul of Clessámmor. Mournful are thy thoughts, alone, on the banks of the roaring Lora. Let us hear the forrow of thy youth, and the darkness of thy days!

^{*} Moina, fost in temper and person. We find the British names in this poem derived from the Galic, which is a proof that the ancient language of the whole island was one and the same.

"It was in the days of peace," replied the great Clefsámmor, "I came, in my bounding thip, to Balclutha's * walls of towers. The winds had roared behind my fails, and Clutha's † ftreams received my dark-bofomed thip. Three days I remained in Reuthámir's halls, and faw his daughter, that beam of light. The joy of the thell went round, and the aged hero gave the fair. Her breafts were like foam on the wave, and her eyes like ftars of light: her hair was dark as the raven's wing: her foul was generous and mild. My love for Moina was great: my heart poured forth in joy."

"The fon of a stranger came; a chief who loved the white-bosomed Moina. His words were mighty in the hall; he often half-unsheathed his sword. Where, said he, is the mighty Comhal, the restless wanderer ‡ of the heath? Comes he, with his host, to Balclutha, since Clessámmor is so bold? My soul, I replied, O warrior! burns in a light of its own. I fland without fear in the midft of thousands, though the valiant are distant far. Stranger! thy words are mighty, for Clessámmor is alone. But my fword trembles by my fide, and longs to glitter in my hand. Speak no more of Comhal, fon of the winding Clutha!"

^{*} Balclutha, i. e. the town of Clyde, probably the Alcluth of Bede.

[†] Clutha, or Cluath, the Galic name of the river Clyde, the fignification of the word is bending, in allufion to the winding course of that river. From Clutha is derived its Latin name, Glotta.

[†] The word in the original here rendered by refless awanderer, is Scuta, which is the true origin of the Scoti of the Romans; an opprobrious name imposed by the Britons, on the Caledonians, on account of the continual incursions into their country.

"THE strength of his pride arose. We fought; he fell beneath my fword. The banks of Clutha heard his fall; a thousand spears glittered around. I fought: the strangers prevailed: I plunged into the stream of Clutha. My white fails rose over the waves, and I bounded on the dark-blue fea. Moina came to the shore, and tolled the red eye of her tears: her loofe hair flew on the wind; and I heard her mournful, distant cries. Often did I turn my ship! but the winds of the East prevailed. Nor Clutha ever fince have I feen, nor Moina of the dark brown hair. She fell in Balclutha, for I have feen her ghost. I knew her as she came through the dusky night, along the murmur of Lora: fhe was like the new moon, feen through the gathered mist: when the sky pours down its flaky fnow, and the world is filent and dark."

RAISE*, ye bards, faid the mighty Fingal,

^{*} The title of this poem, in the original, is Duan na nlacl, i. e. The Foem of the Hymns: probably on account of its many Yol. I. G digref-

the praise of unhappy Moina. Call her ghost, with your fongs, to our hills; that she may rest with the fair of Morven, the fun-beams of other days, the delight of heroes of old. I have feen the walls of Balclutha, but they were defolate. The fire had refounded in the halls: and the voice of the people is heard no more. The fiream of Clutha was removed from its place, by the fall of the walls. The thiftle shook, there, its lonely head: the moss whistled to the wind. The fox looked out, from the windows, the rank grafs of the wall waved round its head. Defolate is the dwelling of Moina, filence is in the house of her fathers. Raise the fong of mourning. O bards, over the land of strangers. They have but fallen before us: for, one day, we must fall. Why dost thou build the hall, fon of the winged days? Thou lookest from thy towers to-day; yet a few years, and the blast of the. defart comes; it howls in thy empty court, and whiftles round thy half-worn shield. And let the blaft of the defart come! we shall be renowned in our day! The mark of my arm shall be inbattle; my name in the fong of bards. Raise digressions from the subject, all which are in a lyric measure, as this song of Fingal. Fingal is celebrated by the Irish historians for his wisdom in making laws, his poetical genius, and his foreknowledge of events. O'Flaherry goes so far as to say, that Fingal's laws were extant in his own time.

the fong; fend round the shell: let joy be heard in my hall. When thou, sun of heaven, shalt fail! if thou shalt fail, thou mighty light! if thy brightness is for a season, like Fingal; our fame shall survive thy beams!

SUCH was the fong of Fingal, in the day of his joy. His thousand bards leaned forward from their seats, to hear the voice of the king. It was like the music of harps on the gale of the spring. Lovely were thy thoughts, O Fingal! why had not Offian the strength of thy soul? But thou standest alone, my father! who can equal the king of Selma?

The night passed away in song; morning returned in joy. The mountains shewed their grey heads; the blue face of ocean smiled. The white wave is seen tumbling round the distant rock; a mist rose, slowly, from the lake. It came, in the figure of an aged man, along the silent plain. Its large limbs did not move in steps; for a ghost supported it in mid air. It came towards Selma's hall, and dissolved in a shower of blood.

THE king alone beheld the fight; he forefaw the death of the people. He came, in filence, to his hall; and took his father's spear. The mail rattled on his breast. The heroes rose around. They looked, in silence, on each G 2 other other, marking the eyes of Fingal. They faw battle in his face: the death of armies on his fpear. A thousand shields, at once, are placed on their arms; they drew a thousand swords. The hall of Schma brightened around. The clang of arms ascends. The grey dogs howl in their place. No word is among the mighty chiefs. Each marked the eyes of the king; and half assumed his spear.

Sons of Morven, begun the king, this is no time to fill the thell. The battle darkens near us; death hovers over the land. Some ghoft, the friend of Fingal, has forewarned us of the foe. The fons of the stranger come from the darkly-rolling fea. For, from the water, came the fign of Morven's gloomy danger. Let each assume his heavy spear, each gird on his father's sword. Let the dark helmet rise on every head; the mail pour its lightening from every side. The battle gathers like a storm; soon shall ye hear the roar of death.

The hero moved on before his hoft, like a cloud before a ridge of green fire; when it pours on the fky of night, and mariners foresee a storm. On Cona's rising heath they stood: the white-bosomed maids beheld them above like a grove; they foresaw the death of the youth, and looked towards the sea with sear. The white wave deceived them for diffant fails; the tear is on their cheek! The fun rose on the sea, and we beheld a distant fleet. Like the mist of ocean they came: and poured their youth upon the coast. The chief was among them, like the stag in the midst of the herd. His shield is studded with gold; stately strode the king of spears. He moved towards Selma; his thousands moved behind.

Go, with a fong of peace, faid Fingal; go, Ullin, to the king of fwords. Tell him that we are mighty in war; that the ghosts of our foes are many. But renowned are they who have feasted in my halls! they shew the arms * of my fathers in a foreign land: the fons of the strangers wonder, and bless the friends of Morven's race; for our names have been heard afar: the kings of the world shook in the midst of their host.

ULLIN went with his fong. Fingal rested on his spear: he saw the mighty soe in his armour: he blest the stranger's son. "How stately art thou, son of the sea! said the king of woody Morven. Thy sword is a beam of sire by thy fide: thy spear is a pine that defies the storm. The varied sace of the moon is not broader than thy shield. Ruddy is thy sace of youth! soft the ringlets of thy hair! But this tree may sall; and his memory be forgot! The daughter of the stranger will be sad, looking to the rolling sea: the children will say, "We see a ship; perhaps it is the king of Balclutha." The tear starts from their mother's eye. Her thoughts are of him who sleeps in Morven!"

^{*} It was a custom among the ancient Scots, to exchange arms with their guests, and those arms were preserved long in the different families, as monuments of the friendship which subsisted between their ancestors.

SUCH were the words of the king, when Ullin came to the mighty Carthon: he threw down the spear before him; he raised the song of peace. "Come to the seast of Fingal, Carthon, from the rolling sea! partake of the seast of the king, or lift the spear of war! The ghosts of our foes are many: but renowned are the friends of Morven! Behold that field, O Carthon; many a green hill rises there, with mostly stones and rustling grass: these are the tombs of Fingal's foes, the sons of the rolling sea!"

"Dost thou speak to the weak in arms!" said Carthon, "bard of the woody Morven? Is my face pale for fear, son of the peaceful song? Why, then, dost thou think to darken my soul with the tales of those who fell? My arm has sought in battle; my renown is known afar. Go to the feeble in arms, bid them yield to Fingal.

gal. Have not I feen the fallen Balclutha? And shall I feast with Comhal's son? Comhal! who threw his fire, in the midst of my father's hall! I was young, and knew not the cause, why the virgins wept. The columns of smoke pleased mine eye, when they rose above my walls! I often looked back, with gladness, when my friends sted along the hill. But when the years of my youth came on, I beheld the moss of my fallen walls: my sigh arose with the morning, and my tears descended with night. Shall I not sight, I said to my foul, against the children of my foces? And I will sight, O bard! I feel the strength of my foul."

His people gathered around the hero, and drew, at once, their finning fwords. He flands, in the midft, like a pillar of fire; the tear half-flarting from his eye; for he thought of the fallen Balclutha; the crowded pride of his foul arose. Sidelong he looked up to the hill, where our heroes shone in arms; the spear trembled in his hand: bending forward, he seemed to threaten the king.

SHALL I, faid Fingal to his foul, meet, at once, the youth? Shall I ftop him, in the midst of his course, before his same shall arise? But the bard, hereaster, may say, when he sees the tomb of Carthon; Fingal took his thousands to battle, before the noble Carthon fell. No: bard of the times to come! thou shalt not lessen Fingal's fame. My heroes will fight the youth, and Fingal behold the war. If he overcomes, I rush, in my strength, like the roaring stream of Cona. Who, of my chiefs, will meet the son of the rolling sea? Many are his warriors on the coast: and strong is his ashen spear!

CATHUL * rose, in his strength, the son of the mighty Lormar: three hundred youths attend the chief, the race † of his native streams. Feeble was his arm against Carthon, he sell; and his heroes sted. Connal resumed the battle, but he broke his heavy spear: he lay bound on the steld: Carthon pursued his people.

CLESSAMMOR! faid the king | of Morven, where is the fpear of thy firength? Wilt thou behold Connal bound; thy friend, at the fiream of Lora? Rife, in the light of thy fleel, com-

If Fingal did not then know that Carthon was the fon of Clessammor.

[·] Cath-'huil, the eye of battle.

[†] It appears, from this passage, that clanship was established, in the days of Fingal, though not on the same footing with the present tribes in the north of Scotland.

¹ This Connal is very much celebrated in ancient poetry, for his wisdom and valour: there is a small tribe still subsisting, in the North, who pretend they are descended from him.

panion of valiant Comhal. Let the youth of Balclutha feel the strength of Morven's race. He rose in the strength of his steel, shaking his grizly locks. He sitted the shield to his side; he rushed, in the pride of valour.

Carthon stood, on a rock; he saw the hero rushing on. He loved the dreadful joy of his sace: his strength, in the locks of age! "Shall I lift that spear, he said, that never strikes, but once, a see? Or shall I, with the words of peace, preserve the warrior's life? Stately are his steps of age! lovely the remnant of his years! Perhaps it is the husband of Moina; the sather of car-borne Carthon. Often have I heard, that he dwelt at the ecchoing stream of Lora."

Such were his words, when Clessámmor came, and lifted high his spear. The youth received it on his shield, and spoke the words of peace. "Warrior of the aged locks! Is there no youth to lift the spear? Hast thou no son, to raise the shield before his sather, to meet the arm of youth? Is the spouse of thy love no more? or weeps she over the tombs of thy sons? Art thou of the kings of men? What will be the same of my sword should'st thou fall?

It will be great, thou fon of pride! begun the tall Clefsammor. I have been renowned in battle; battle; but I never told my name * to a foe. Yield to me, fon of the wave, then shalt thou know, that the mark of my sword is in many a sield. "I never yielded, king of spears! replied the noble pride of Carthon: I have also fought in war; I behold my future same. Despise me not, thou chief of men; my arm, my spear is strong. Retire among thy friends, let younger heroes sight." Why dost thou wound my soul, replied Clessammor with a tear? Age does not tremble on my hand; I still can list the sword. Shall I sly in Fingal's sight; in the sight of him I love? Son of the sea! I never sted: exalt thy pointed spear.

THEY fought, like two contending winds, that strive to roll the wave. Carthon bade his spear to err; he still thought that the soe was the spouse of Moina. He broke Clessammor's beamy spear in twain: he seized his shining sword. But as Carthon was binding the chief; the chief drew the dagger of his sathers. He

To tell one's name to an enemy was reckoned, in those days of heroism, a manifest evasion of fighting him; for, if it was once known, that friendship subsisted, of old, between the ancestors of the combatants, the battle immediately ceased; and the ancient amity of their forefathers was renewed. A man who tells his name to his enemy, was of old an ignominious term for a goward.

faw the foe's uncovered fide; and opened, there,

Fingal faw Clessammor low: he moved in the found of his steel. The host stood silent, in his presence; they turned their eyes to the king. He came, like the fullen noise of a storm, before the winds arise: the hunter hears it in the vale, and retires to the cave of the rock. Carthon stood in his place: the blood is rushing down his side: he saw the coming down of the king; his hopes of same arose*; but pale was his cheek: his hair slew loose, his helmet shook on high: the force of Carthon sailed; but his soul was strong.

FINGAL beheld the heroe's blood; he ftopt the uplifted spear. "Yield, king of swords! faid Comhal's son; I behold thy blood. Thou hast been mighty in battle; and thy same shall never fade." Art thou the king so far renowned, replied the car-borne Carthon? Art thou that light of death, that frightens the kings of the world? But why should Carthon ask? for he is like the stream of his hills; strong as a river, in his course: swift as the eagle of heaven. O that I had fought with the king; that my fame might be great in fong! that the hunter, beholding my tomb, might say, he fought with the mighty Fingal. But Carthon dies unknown; he has poured out his force on the weak."

[•] This expression admits of a double meaning, either that Carthon hoped to acquire glory by killing Fingal; or to be rendered famous by falling by his hand. The last is the most probable, as Carthon is already wounded.

But thou shalt not die unknown, replied the king of woody Morven: my bards are many, O Carthon, their songs descend to suture times. The children of years to come shall hear the same of Carthon; when they sit round the burning oak †, and the night is spent in songs of old. The hunter, sitting in the heath, shall hear the russling blast; and, raising his eyes, behold the rock where Carthon sell. He shall turn to his son, and shew the place where the mighty sought; "There the king of Balclutha sought, like the strength of a thousand streams."

Joy rose in Carthon's face: he lifted his heavy eyes. He gave his fword to Fingal, to lie within his hall, that the memory of Balclutha's king might remain in Morven. The battle ceased along the field, the bard had fung the fong of peace. The chiefs gathered round the falling Carthon; they heard his words, with fighs. Silent they leaned on their spears, while Balclutha's hero spoke. His hair sighed in the wind, and his voice was fad and low.

[†] In the north of Scotland, till very lately, they burnt a large trunk of an oak at their feltivals; it was called the trunk of the feaft. Time had, fo much, confectated the custom, that the vulgar thought it a kind of facrilege to difuse it.

"King of Morven, Carthon faid, I fall in the midft of my courfe. A foreign tomb receives, in youth, the last of Reuthámir's race. Darkness dwells in Balclutha: the shadows of grief in Crathmo. But raise my remembrance on the banks of Lora: where my fathers dwelt. Perhaps the husband of Moina will mourn over his fallen Carthon." His words reached the heart of Clessámmor: he fell, in silence, on his fon. The host stood darkened around: no voice is on the plain. Night came, the moon, from the east, looked on the mournful field: but still they stood, like a filent grove that lifts its head on Gormal, when the loud winds are laid, and dark autumn is on the plain.

THREE days they mourned above Carthon; on the fourth his father died. In the narrow plain of the rock they lie; a dim ghost defends their tomb. There lovely Moina is often feen; when the fun-beam darts on the rock, and all around is dark. There she is feen, Malvina, but not like the daughters of the hill. Her robes are from the stranger's land; and she is still alone!

FINGAL was fad for Carthon: he commanded his bards to mark the day, when shadowy autumn returned: And often did they mark the day and fing the hero's praife. "Who comes fo dark from ocean's roar, like autumn's shadowy cloud? Death is trembling in his hand! his eyes are flames of fire! Who roars along dark Lora's heath? Who but Carthon, king of fwords? The people fall! fee! how he strides, like the fullen ghost of Morven! But there he lies a goodly oak, which fudden blafts overturned! When thalt thou rife, Balclutha's joy! When, Carthon, shalt thou arise? Who comes fo dark from ocean's roar, like autumn's shadowy cloud?" Such were the words of the bards, in the day of their mourning: Offian often joined their voice; and added to their fong. My foul has been mournful for Carthon; he fell in the days of his youth: and thou, O Clessámmor! where is thy dwelling in the wind? Has the youth forgot his wound? Flies he, on clouds, with thee? I feel the fun, O Malvina, leave me to my reft. Perhaps they may come to my dreams; I think I hear a feeble a feeble voice! The beam of heaven delights to fhine on the grave of Carthon: I feel it warm around!

O THOU that rollest above, round as the thield of my fathers! Whence are thy beams, O fun! thy everlafting light? Thou comest forth, in thy awful beauty; the stars hide themselves in the fky; the moon, cold and pale, finks in the western wave. But thou thyself movest alone: who can be a companion of thy course! The oaks of the mountains fall: the mountains themselves decay with years; the ocean shrinks and grows again: the moon herfelf is loft in heaven; but thou art for ever the fame; rejoicing in the brightness of thy course. When the world is dark with tempests; when thunder rolls, and lightning flies; thou lookest in thy beauty, from the clouds, and laughest at the fform. But to Offian, thou lookest in vain; for he beholds thy beams no more; whether thy yellow hair flows on the eastern clouds, or thou tremblest at the gates of the west. But thou art perhaps, like me, for a feafon, thy years will have an end. Thou fhalt fleep in thy clouds, careless of the voice of the morning. Exult then, O fun, in the firength of thy youth! Age is dark and unlovely; it is like the glimmering light of the moon, when it shines through broken clouds, and the mist is on the hills; the blast of north is on the plain, the traveller shrinks in the midst of his journey.

OINA-MORUL:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

After an address to Malvina, the daughter of Toscar, Ossian proceeds to relate his own expedition to Fuärsed, an island of Scandinavia. Mal-orchol, king of Fuärsed, being hard pressed in war, by Ton-thormod, chief of Sar-dronlo, (who had demanded, in vain, the daughter of Mal-orchol in marriage) Fingal sent Ossian to his aid. Ossian, on the day after his arrival, came to battle with Ton-thormod, and took him prisoner. Mal-orchol offers his daughter Oinamorul to Ossian; but he, discovering her passon for Tonthormod, generously surrenders her to her lover, and brings about a reconciliation between the two kings.

OINA-MORUL:

A

P O E M.

S flies the unconstant fun, over Larmon's graffy hill; fo pass the tales of old, along my foul, by night! When bards are removed to their place; when harps are hung in Selma's hall; then comes a voice to Offian, and awakes his foul! It is the voice of years that are gone! they roll before me, with all their deeds! I feize the tales, as they pass, and pour them forth in fong. Nor a troubled stream is the fong of the king, it is like the rifing of music from Lutha of the strings. Lutha of many strings, not filent are thy streamy rocks, when the white hands of Malvina move upon the harp! Light of the shadowy thoughts, that fly across my foul, daughter of Toscar of helmets, wilt thou not hear the fong! We call back, maid of Lutha, the years that have rolled away!

It was in the days of the king, while yet my locks were young, that I marked H 2 . Gon-

Con-cathlin *, on high, from ocean's nightly wave. My course was towards the isle of Fuärsed, woody dweller of seas! Fingal had fent me to the aid of Mal-orchol, king of Fuärsed wild: for war was around him, and our fathers had met, at the seast.

In Col-coiled, I bound my fails; I fent my fword to Mal-orchol of shells. He knew the fignal of Albion, and his joy arose. He came from his own high hall, and seized my hand in grief. "Why comes the race of heroes to a falling king? Ton-thormod of many spears is the chief of wavy Sar-dronlo. He saw and loved my daughter, white-bosomed Oina-morul. He sought; I denied the maid; for our fathers had been foes. He came, with battle, to ^{*} Con-cathlin, mild beam of the wave. What flar was so called of old is not easily ascertained. Some now distinguish the pole-star by that name. A song, which is still in repute, among the sea-faring part of the Highlanders, alludes to this passage of Ossian. The author commends the knowlege of Ossian in sea assairs, a merit, which, perhaps, sew of us moderns will allow him, or any in the age in which he lived. One thing is certain, that the Caledonians often made their way thro' the dangerous and tempessuous seas of Scandinavia; which is more, perhaps, than the more polished nations, substituting in those times, dared to venture. In estimating the degree of knowledge of arts among the antients, we ought not to bring it into comparison with the improvements of modern times. Our advantages over them proceed more from accident, than any merit of ours.

Fuärfed; my people are rolled away. Why comes the race of heroes to a falling king?"

I come not, I faid, to look, like a boy, on the firife. Fingal remembers Mal-orchol, and his hall for firangers. From his waves, the warrior descended, on thy woody ifle. Thou wert no cloud before him. Thy feast was spread with songs. For this my sword shall rise; and thy soes perhaps may fail. Our friends are not forgot in their danger, tho' distant is our land.

"Defcendant of the daring Trenmor, thy words are like the voice of Cruth-loda, when he fpeaks, from his parting cloud, ftrong dweller of the fky! Many have rejoiced at my feaft; but they all have forgot Mal-orchol. I have locked towards all the winds; but no white fails were feen. But fleel * refounds in my hall; and not

^{*} There is a severe satire couched in this expression, against the guests of Mal-orchol. Had his feast been still spread, had joy continued in his hall, his former parasites would not have sailed to refort to him. But as the time of selsivity was past, their attendance also ceased. The sentiments of a certain old bard are agreeable to this observation. He, poetically, compares a great man to a fire kindled in a desart place. "Those that pay court to him, says he, are rolling large around him, like the smoke about the fire. This smoke gives the fire a great appearance at a distance, but it is but an empty vapour itself, and varying its form at every breeze. When the trunk, which sed the fire, is consumed, the smoke departs on all the

not the joyful shells. Come to my dwelling, race of heroes; dark-skirted night is near. Hear the voice of songs, from the maid of Fuärfed wild.

WE went. On the harp arose the white hands of Oina-morul. She waked her own fad tale, from every trembling string. I stood in filence; for bright in her locks was the daughter of many isles! Her eyes were two stars, looking forward thro' a rushing shower. The mariner marks them on high, and bleffes the lovely beams. With morning we rushed to battle, to Tormul's refounding stream: the foe moved to the found of Ton-thormod's boffy thield. From wing to wing the strife was mixed. I met Ton-thormod in fight. Wide flew his broken steel. I seized the king in war. I gave his hand, bound fast with thongs, to Mal-orchol, the giver of shells. Joy rose at the feast of Fuärfed, for the foe had failed. Ton-thormod turned his face away, from Oinamornl of iffes!

winds. So the flatterers forfake their chief, when his power declines." I have chosen to give a paraphrase, rather than a translation, of this passage, as the original is verbose and frothy, notwithstanding of the sentimental merit of the author. He was one of the less antient bards, and their compositions are not nervous enough to bear a literal translation.

Son of Fingal, begun Mal-orchol, not forgot shalt thou pass from me. A light shall dwell in thy ship, Oina-morul of slow-rolling eyes. She shall kindle gladness, along thy mighty foul. Nor unheeded shall the maid move in Selma, thro' the dwelling of kings!

In the hall I lay in night. Mine eyes were half-closed in sleep. Soft music came to mine ear: it was like the rifing breeze, that whirls, at first, the thistle's beard; then flies, darkshadowy, over the grass. It was the maid of Fuärfed wild! The raifed the nightly fong; the knew that my foul was a stream, that flowed at pleafant founds. "Who looks," the faid, " from his rock, on ocean's closing mist? His long locks, like the raven's wing, are wandering on the blaft. Stately are his steps in grief! The tears are in his eyes! His manly breaft is heaving over his burfling foul! Retire, I am distant far; a wanderer in lands unknown. Tho' the race of kings are around me, yet my foul is dark. Why have our fathers been foes, Ton-thormod love of maids!"

" Soft voice of the streamy isle," I said, " why doft thou mourn by night? The race of daring Trenmor are not the dark in foul. Thou thalt not wander, by streams unknown, blue-'eyed Oina-morul! Within this bosom is a voice; it comes not to other ears: it bids Offian hear the hapless, in their hour of woe. Retire, soft finger by night; Ton-thormod shall not mourn on his rock!"

WITH morning I loofed the king. I gave the long-haired maid. Mal-orchol heard my words, in the midst of his echoing halls. "King of Fuärfed wild, why should Ton-thormod mourn? He is of the race of heroes, and a flame in war. Your fathers have been foes, but now their dim ghosts rejoice in death. They firetch their hands of mift to the fame shell in Loda. Forget their rage, ye warriors, it was the cloud of other years."

Such were the deeds of Offian, while yet his locks were young: tho' loveliness, with a robe of beams, clothed the daughter of many ifles. We call back, maid of Lutha, the years that have rolled away!

COLNA-DONA;

A

POEM,

ARGUMENT.

Fingal dispatches Offian and Toscar, the son of Conloch and father of Malvina, to raise a stone, on the banks of the stream of Crona, to perpetuate the memory of a victory, which he had obtained in that place. When they were employed in that work, Car-ul, a neighbouring chief, invited them to a feast. They went: and Toscar fell desperately in love with Colna-dona, the daughter of Car-ul. Colna-dona became no less enamoured of Toscar. An incident, at a hunting party, brings their loves to a happy issue.

COLNA-DONA:

A

P O E M.

*COL-AMON of troubled fireams, dark wanderer of distant vales, I behold thy course, between trees, near Car-ul's echoing halls! There dwelt bright Colna-dona, the daughter of the king. Her eyes were rolling stars; her arms were white as the foam of streams. Her breast rose slowly to sight, like ocean's heaving waye. Her soul was a stream of light. Who, among the maids, was like the love of heroes?

^{*} Colna-dona fignifies the love of heroes. Col-amon, narrow river. Car-ul, dark-eyed Col-amon, the refidence of Car-ul, was in the neighbourhood of Agricola's wall, towards the fouth. Car-ul feems to have been of the race of those Britons, who are distinguished by the name of Maiatæ, by the writers of Rome. Maiatæ is derived from two Galic words, Moi, a plain, and Aitich, inhabitants; so that the signification of Maiatæ is, the inhabitants of the plain country; a name given to the Britons, who were settled in the Lowlands, in contradistinction to the Caledonians, (i. e. Cael-Don, the Gauls of the hills) who were possessed of the more mountainous division of North-Britain.

Beneath the voice of the king, we moved to Crona * of the streams, Toscar of grassy Lutha, and Ossian, young in fields. Three bards attended with songs. Three bossy shields were born before us: for we were to rear the stone, in memory of the past, By Crona's mossy course, Fingal had scattered his soes: he had rolled away the strangers, like a troubled sca. We came to the place of renown: from the mountains descended night. I tore an oak from its hill, and raised a stame on high. I bade my fathers to look down, from the clouds of their hall; for, at the same of their race, they brighten in the wind.

I TOOK a flone from the stream, amidst the fong of bards. The blood of Fingal's foes hung curdled in its ooze. Beneath, I placed, at intervals, three boffes from the shields of foes, as rose or fell the sound of Ullin's nightly song. Toscar laid a dagger in earth, a mail of sounding steel. We raised the mould around the stone, and bade it speak to other years.

^{*} Crona, murmuring, was the name of a small stream, which discharged itself in the river Carron. It is often mentioned by Ossian, and the scenes of many of his poems are on its banks. The enemies, whom Fingal defeated here, are not mentioned. They were, probably, the provincial Britons. That tract of country between the Firths of Forth and Clyde has been, thro' all antiquity, famous for battles and rencounters, between the different nations, who were possessed of North and South Britain. Stirling, a town fituated there, derives its name from that very circumstance. It is a corruption of the Galic name, STRILA, i. e. the bill, or rock, of contention.

Oozy daughter of streams, that now art reared on high, speak to the seeble, O stone, after Selma's race have sailed! Prone, from the stormy night, the traveller shall lay him, by thy side: thy whistling moss shall found in his dreams; the years that were past shall return. Battles rise before him, blue-shielded kings descend to war: the darkened moon looks from heaven, on the troubled sield. He shall burst, with morning, from dreams, and see the tombs of warriors round. He shall ask about the stone, and the aged shall reply, "This grey stone was raised by Ossian, a chief of other years!"

* From Col-amon came a bard, from Car-ul, the friend of strangers. He bade us to the feast

of

^{*} The manners of the Britons and Caledonians were so similar, in the days of Osian, that there can be no doubt, that they were originally the same people, and descended from those Gauls who first possessed to the melives of South-Britain, and gradually migrated to the north. This hypothesis is more rational than the idle fables of ill-informed senachies, who bring the Caledonians from distant countries. The bare opinion of Tacitus, (which, by-the-bye, was only founded on a similarity of the personal figure of the Caledonians to the Germans of his

of kings, to the dwelling of bright Colna-dona. We went to the hall of harps. There Car-ul brightened between his aged locks, when he beheld the fons of his friends, like two young branches before him.

"Sons of the mighty," he faid, " ye bring back the days of old, when first I descended from waves, on Selma's ftreamy vale! I purfued Duthmocarglos, dweller of ocean's wind. Our fathers had been foes, we met by Clutha's winding waters. He fled, along the fea, and my fails were spread behind him. Night deceived me, on the deep. I came to the dwelling of kings, to Selma of highbosomed maids. Fingal came forth with his bards, and Conloch, arm of death. I feafted three days in the hall, and faw the blue-eyes of Erin, Ros-crana, daughter of heroes, light of Cormac's race. Nor forgot did my steps depart: the kings gave their shields to Car-ul: they hang, on high, in Col-amon, in memory of the past. Sons of the daring kings, ye bring back the days of old!

own time) tho' it has staggered some learned men, is not sufficient to make us believe, that the antient inhabitants of North-Britain were a German colony. A discussion of a point like this might be curious, but could never be satisfactory. Periods so distant are so involved in obscurity, that nothing certain can be now advanced concerning them. I he light which the Roman writers hold forth is too feeble to guide us to the truth, thro' the darkness which has surrounded it.

CAR-UL kindled the oak of feafts. He took two bosses from our shields. He laid them in earth, beneath a stone, to speak to the hero's race. "When battle," faid the king, "shall roar, and our sons are to meet in wrath. My race shall look, perhaps, on this stone, when they prepare the spear. Have not our fathers met in peace, they will say, and lay aside the shield?"

NIGHT came down. In her long locks moved the daughter of Car-ul. Mixed with the harp arose the voice of white-armed Colna-dona. Toscar darkened in his place, before the love of heroes. She came on his troubled soul, like a beam to the dark-heaving ocean: when it bursts from a cloud, and brightens the soamy side of a waye.*

WITH morning we awaked the woods; and hung forward on the path of the roes. They fell by their wonted fireams. We returned thro' Crona's vale. From the wood a youth came forward, with a fhield and pointless spear. "Whence, said Toscar of Lutha, is the flying beam? Dwells there peace at Col-amon, round bright Colna-dona of harps?

^{*} Here an epifode is intirely lost; or, at least, is handed down so imperseelly, that it does not deserve a place in the poem.

"Br Col-amon of streams," said the youth, "bright Colna-dona dwelt. She dwelt; but her course is now in desarts, with the son of the king; he that seized with love her soul as it wandered thro' the hall." "Stranger of tales," said Toscar, "hast thou marked the warrior's course? He must fall, give thou that bossy shield!" In wrath he took the shield. Fair behind it rose the breasts of a maid, white as the bosom of a swan, rising graceful on swiftrolling waves. It was Colna-dona of harps, the daughter of the king! Her blue eyes had rolled on Toscar, and her love arose!

OITHONA:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Gaul, the fon of Morni, attended Lathmon into his own country, after his being defeated in Morven, as related in the preceding poem. He was kindly entertained by Nuath, the father of Lathmon, and fell in love with his daughter Oithona. The lady was no lefs enamoured of Gaul, and a day was fixed for their marriage. In the mean time Fingal. preparing for an expedition into the country of the Britone. fent for Gaul. He obeyed, and went; but not without promiting to Oithona to return, if he furvived the war, by a certain day. Lathmon too was obliged to attend his father -Nuath in his wars, and Oithona was left alone at Dunlathmon, the feat of the family. Dunrommath, lord of Uthal. supposed to be one of the Orkneys, taking advantage of the absence of her friends, came and carried off, by force, Oithona, who had formerly rejected his love, into Tromáthon, a defart island, where he concealed her in a cave.

Gaul returned on the day appointed; heard of the rape. and failed to Tromathon, to revenge himself on Dunrommath. When he landed, he found Oithona disconsolate. and resolved not to survive the loss of her honour. She told him the story of her misfortunes, and she scarce ended. when Dunrommath, with his followers, appeared at the further end of the island. Gaul prepared to attack him. recommending to Oithona to retire, till the battle was over. She feemingly obeyed; but she fecretly armed herself, rushed into the thickest of the battle, and was mortally wounded. Gaul pursuing the flying enemy, found her just expiring on the field: he mourned over her, raifed her tomb, and returned to Morven. Thus is the flory handed down by tradition; nor is it given with any material difference in the poem, which opens with Gaul's return to Dunlathmon, after the rape of Oithona.

QITHONA:

A

P O E M.

ARKNESS dwells around Dunlathmon, though the moon shews half her face on the hill. The daughter of night turns her eyes away; she beholds the approaching grief. The fon of Morni is on the plain: there is no found in the hall. No long-streaming beam of light comes trembling through the gloom. The voice of Oithona * is not heard amidft the noise of the streams of Duvranna. "Whither art thou gone in thy beauty, dark-haired daughter of Nuath? Lathmon is in the field of the valiant, but thou didst promise to remain in the hall; thou didst promife to remain in the hall till the fon of Morni returned. Till he returned from Strumon, to the maid of his love! The tear was on thy cheek at his departure; the figh rose in secret in hy breast. But thou dost not come forth with fongs, with the lightly-trembling found of the harp!"

* Oi-thona, the wirgin of the wave.

with

Such were the words of Gaul, when he came to Dunlathmon's towers. The gates were open and dark. The winds were bluftering in the hall. The trees flrowed the threshold with leaves; the murmur of night was abroad. Sad and silent, at a rock, the son of Morni fat: his soul trembled for the maid, but he knew not whither to turn his course! The son * of Leth stood at a distance, and heard the winds in his bushy hair. But he did not raise his voice, for he saw the forrow of Gaul!

SLEEP descended on the chiefs. The visions of night arose. Oithona stood, in a dream, before the eyes of Morni's son. Her hair was loose and disordered: her lovely eye rolled deep in tears. Blood stained her snowy arm. The robe half hid the wound of her breast. She stood over the chief, and her voice was feebly heard. "Sleeps the son of Morni, he that was lovely in the eyes of Oithona? Sleeps Gaul at the distant rock, and the daughter of Nuäth low: The sea rolls round the dark isle of Tromáthon. I sit in my tears in the cave! Nor do I sit alone, O ^{*} Morlo, the fon of Leth, is one of Fingal's most famous heroes. He and three other men attended Gaul on his expedition to Tromáthon.

Gaul, the dark chief of Cuthal is there. He is there in the rage of his love. What can Oithona do!"

A ROUGHER blast rushed through the oak. The dream of night departed. Gaul took his afpen spear. He stood in the rage of his foul. Often did his eyes turn to the east. He accused the lagging light. At length the morning came forth. The hero lifted up the fail. The winds came ruflling from the hill; he bounded on the waves of the deep. On the third day arose Tromáthon *, like a blue shield in the midst of the fea. The white wave roared against its rocks; fad Oithona fat on the coast! She looked on the rolling waters, and her tears came down. But when she faw Gaul in his arms, she started and turned her eyes away. Her lovely cheek is bent and red; her white arm trembles by her fide. Thrice the strove to fly from his presence; thrice her steps failed her as the went!

"DAUGHTER of Nuäth," faid the hero, "why dost thou fly from Gaul. Do my eyes fend forth the flame of death! Darkens hatred in my foul? Thou art to me the beam of the cast, rifing in a land unknown. But thou coverest thy face with fadness, daughter of car-borne Nuäth! Is the foe of Oithona near? My foul burns to meet him in fight. The fword trembles by the fide of Gaul, and longs to glitter in his hand. Speak, daughter of Nuäth, doft thou not behold my tears?"

[.] Trom-thon, beavy or deep founding wave.

"Young chief of Strumon," replied the maid, "why comest thou over the dark-blue wave, to Nuäth's mournful daughter? Why did I not pass away in secret, like the slower of the rock, that lists its fair head unseen, and strows its withered leaves on the blast? Why didst thou come, O Gaul, to hear my departing sigh? I vanish in my youth; my name shall not be heard. Or it will be heard with grief; the tears of Nuäth must fall. Thou wilt be sad, son of Morni, for the departed same of Oithona. But she shall sleep in the narrow tomb, far from the voice of the mourner. Why didst thou come, chief of Strumon, to the sea-beat rocks of Tromáthon?"

"I CAME to meet thy foes, daughter of car-borne Nuäth! the death of Cuthal's chief darkens before me; or Morni's fon shall fall! Oithona! when Gaul is low, raise my tomb on that oozy rock. When the dark-bounding ship shall pass, call the fons of the sea! call them, and give this sword, to bear it hence to Morni's hall. The grey-haired chief will then cease to look towards the defart, for the return of his fon !"

" SHALL the daughter of Nuath live?" she replied with a burfling figh. " Shall I live in Tromáthon, and the fon of Morni low? My heart is not of that rock; nor my foul careless as that fea; which lifts its blue waves to every wind, and rolls beneath the florm! The blaft which shall lay thee low, shall spread the branches of Oithona on earth. We shall wither together, fon of car-borne Morni! The narrow house is pleasant to me, and the grey stone of the-dead: for never more will I leave thy rocks, O fea-furrounded Tromáthon! Night * came on with her clouds, after the departure of Lathmon, when he went to the wars of his fathers, to the moss-covered rock of Duthormoth. Night came on. I fat in the hall, at the beam of the oak! The wind was abroad in the trees. I heard the found of arms. Joy rose in my face. I thought of thy return. It was the chief of Cuthal, the red-haired strength of Dunrommath. His eyes rolled in fire: the blood of my people was on his fword. They who defended Oithona fell by the gloomy chief! What could I do? My arm was weak. I could not lift the spear.

^{*} Oithona relates how she was carried away by Dunrommath.

He took me in my grief, amidst my tears he raised the sail. He seared the returning Lathmon, the brother of unhappy Oithona! But behold he comes with his people! the dark wave is divided before him! Whither wilt thou turn thy steps, son of Morni? Many are the warriors of thy soe!"

"My steps never turned from battle," Gaul said and unsheathed his sword. "Shall I then begin to sear, Oithona, when thy soes are near? Go to thy cave, my love, till our battle cease on the field. Son of Leth, bring the bows of our fathers! the sounding quiver of Morni! Let our three warriors bend the yew. Ourselves will lift the spear. They are an host on the rock! our souls are strong in war!"

OITHONA went to the cave. A troubled joy rose on her mind, like the red path of lightning on a stormy cloud! Her soul was resolved; the tear was dried from her wildly-looking eye. Dunrommath slowly approached. He saw the son of Morni. Contempt contrasted his sace, a smile is on his dark-brown cheek; his red eye rolled, half-conceal'd, beneath his shaggy brows!

"Whence are the fons of the fea," begun the gloomy chief? "Have the winds driven you on the rocks of Tromáthon? Or come you in fearch of the white-handed maid? The fons of the unhappy, ye feeble men, come to the hand of Dunrommath! His eye spares not the weak; he delights in the blood of strangers. Oithona is a beam of light, and the chief of Cuthal enjoys it in fecret; wouldst thou come on its loveliness, like a cloud, fon of the feeble hand! Thou mayst come, but shalt thou return to the halls of thy fathers?" " Dost thou not know me," faid Gaul, " red-haired chief of Cuthal? Thy feet were fwift on the heath, in the battle of car-borne Lathmon; when the fword of Morni's fon purfued his hoft, in Morven's woody land. Dunrommath! thy words are mighty, for thy warriors gather behind thee. But do I fear them, fon of pride? I am not of the race of the feeble !"

GAUL advanced in his arms; Dunrommath shrunk behind his people. But the spear of Gaul pierced the gloomy chief; his fword lopped off his head, as it bended in death. The fon of Morni shook it thrice by the lock; the warriors of Dunrommath fled. The arrows of Morven purfued them: ten fell on the mosfy rocks. The rest lift the founding fail, and bound on the troubled deep. Gaul advanced towards the cave of Oithona. He beheld a youth leaning on a rock. An arrow had pierced his fide; his eye rolled faintly beneath his helmet. The foul of Morni's fon was fad, he came and fpoke the words of peace.

"CAN the hand of Gaul heal thee, youth of the mournful brow? I have fearched for the herbs of the mountains; I have gathered them on the fecret banks of their ftreams. My hand has closed the wound of the brave, their eyes have bleffed the fon of Morni. Where dwelt thy fathers, warrior? Were they of the fons of the mighty? Sadness shall come, like night, on thy native streams. Thou art fallen in thy youth!"

"My fathers," replied the stranger, "were of the race of the mighty; but they shall not be fad; for my fame is departed like morning mist. High walls rise on the banks of Duvranna; and see their mossy towers in the stream; a rock ascends behind them with its bending pines. Thou mayst behold it far distant. There my brother dwells. He is renowned in battle: give him this glittering helm."

THE helmet fell from the hand of Gaul. It was the wounded Oithona! She had armed herfelf in the cave, and came in fearch of death. Her heavy eyes are half closed; the blood pours from her heaving side. "Son of Morni," she said, "prepare the narrow tomb. Sleep grows, like darkness.

darkness, onmy soul. The eyes of Oithona are dim! O had I dwelt at Duvranna, in the bright beam of my fame! then had my years come on with joy; the virgins would then bless my steps. But I fall in youth, son of Morni; my father shall blush in his hall!"

SHE fell pale on the rock of Tromáthon. The mournful warrior raised her tomb. He came to Morven; we saw the darkness of his soul. Ossian took the harp in the praise of Oithona. The brightness of the sace of Gaul returned. But his sigh rose, at times, in the midst of his friends; like blasts that shake their unfrequent wings, after the stormy winds are laid!

C R O M A:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Malvina the daughter of Toscar is overheard by Ossian samenting the death of Oscar her lover. Ossian, to divert her grief, relates his own actions in an expedition which he undertook, at Fingal's command, to aid Crothar the petty king of Croma, a country in Ireland, against Rothmar who invaded his dominions. The story is delivered down thus in tradition. Crothar king of Croma being blind with age, and his son too young for the field, Rothmar the chief of Tromlo resolved to avail, himself of the opportunity offered of annexing the dominions of Crothar to his own. He accordingly marched into the country subject to Crothar, but which he held of Arth or Artho, who was, at the time, supreme king of Ireland.

Crothar being, on account of his age and blindness, unfit for action, sent for aid to Fingal king of Scotland; who ordered his son Offian to the relief of Crothar. But before his arrival Fovargormo, the son of Crothar, attacking Rothmar, was slain himself, and his forces totally defeated. Offian renewed the war; came to battle, killed Rothmar, and routed his army. Croma being thus delivered of its enemies, Offian returned to Scotland.

C R O M A:

A

P O E M.

"It was the voice of my love! feldom art thou, in the dreams of Malvina! Open your airy halls, O fathers of Toscar of shields! Unfold the gates of your clouds: the steps of Malvina are near. I have heard a voice in my dream. I feel the fluttering of my foul. Why didst thou come, O blast, from the dark-rolling face of the lake? Thy rustling wing was in the tree; the dream of Malvina sled. But she beheld her love, when his robe of mist slew on the wind. A sun-beam was on his skirts, they glittered like the gold of the stranger. It was the voice of my love! seldom comes he to my dreams!"

"But thou dwellest in the foul of Malvina, fon of mighty Offian! My fighs arise with the beam of the east; my tears descend with the drops of night. I was a lovely tree, in thy presence, presence, Oscar, with all my branches round me; but thy death came like a blast from the defart, and laid my green head low. The spring returned with its showers; no leaf of mine arose! The virgins saw me silent in the hall; they touched the harp of joy. The tear was on the cheek of Malvina: the virgins beheld me in my grief. Why art thou sad, they said; thou sirst of the maids of Lutha? Was he lovely as the beam of the morning, and stately in thy sight?"

PLEASANT is thy fong in Offian's ear, daughter of streamy Lutha! Thou hast heard the mufic of departed bards, in the dream of thy rest, when sleep fell on thine eyes, at the murmur of Moruth *. When thou didft return from the chace, in the day of the fun, thou hast heard the music of bards, and thy fong is lovely! It is lovely, O Malvina, but it melts the foul. There is a joy in grief when peace dwells in the breast of the sad. But forrow wastes the mournful, O daughter of Toscar, and their days are few! They fall away, like the flower on which the fun hath looked in his strength after the mildew has passed over it, when its head is heavy with the drops of night. Attend to the tale of Offian, O maid. He remembers the days of his youth!

[·] Mor'-ruth, great stream.

THE king commanded; I raised my fails, and rushed into the bay of Croma; into Croma's founding bay in lovely Inisfail *. High on the coast arose the towers of Crothar king of spears; Crothar renowned in the battles of his youth; but age dwelt then around the chief. Rothmar had raifed the fword against the hero; and the wrath of Fingal burned. He fent Offian to meet Rothmar in war, for the chief of Croma was the friend of his youth. I fent the bard before me with fongs. I came into the hall of Crothar. There fat the chief amidst the arms of his fathers, but his eyes had failed. His grey locks waved around a staff, on which the warrior leaned. He hummed the fong of other times, when the found of our arms reached his ears. Crothar rose, stretched his aged hand and bleffed the fon of Fingal.

"OSSIAN!" faid the hero, "the firength of Crothar's arm has failed. O could I lift the fword, as on the day that Fingal fought at Strutha! He was the first of men! but Crothar had also his fame. The king of Morven praised me; he placed on my arm the bosty shield of Calthar, whom the king had slain in his wars. Dost thou not behold it on the wall, for Crothar's eyes have failed? Is thy firength, like thy fathers, Offian? let the aged feel thine arm!"

^{*} Inisfail, one of the ancient names of Ireland.

I GAVE my arm to the king; he felt it with his aged hands. The figh rose in his breast, and his tears came down. "Thou art ffrong, my fon, he faid, but not like the king of Morven! But who is like the hero among the mighty in war! Let the feaft of my hall be fpread; and let my bards exalt the fong. Great is he that is within my walls, ye fons of ecchoing Croma l" The feaft is fpread. The harp is heard; and joy is in the hall. But it was joy covering a figh, that darkly dwelt in every breaft. It was like the faint beam of the moon spread on a cloud in heaven. At length the music ceased, and the aged king of Croma spoke; he spoke without a tear, but forrow fwelled in the midft of his voice.

"Son of Fingal! behold'st thou not the darkness of Crothar's joy? My foul was not sad at the feast, when my people lived before me. I rejoiced in the presence of strangers, when my fon thone in the hall. But, Ossian, he is a beam that is departed. He left no streak of light behind. He is fallen, son of Fingal, in the wars of his father. Rothmar the chief of grassy Tromlo heard that these eyes had failed; he heard that my arms were fixed in the hall, and the pride of his foul arofe! He came towards Croma; my people fell before him. I took my arms in my wrath, but what could fightless Crothar do? My steps were unequal; my grief was great. I wished for the days that were past. Days! wherein I fought; and won in the field of blood. My fon returned from the chace; the fair-haired Fovar-gormo *. He had not lifted his fword in battle, for his arm was young. But the foul of the youth was great; the fire of valour burnt in his eyes. He faw the difordered steps of his father, and his figh arofe. "King of Croma," he faid, "is it because thou hast no son: is it for the weakness of Fovar-gormo's arm that thy fighs arise? I begin, my father, to feel my strength; I have drawn the fword of my youth; and I have bent the bow. Let me meet this Rothmar, with the fons of Croma: let me meet him, O my father; I feel my burning foul!" And thou shalt meet him, I said, son of the fightless Crothar! But let others advance before thee, that I may hear the tread of thy feet at thy return; for my eyes behold thee not, fairhaired Fovar-gormo! He went, he met the foe; he fell. Rothmar advances to Croma. He who flew my fon is near, with all his pointed fpears."

^{*} Faobhar gorm, the blue p int of steel.

This is no time to fill the shell, I replied, and took my spear! My people saw the fire of my eyes; they all arose around. Through night we strode along the heath. Grey morning rose in the east. A green narrow vale appeared before us; nor wanting was its winding stream. The dark host of Rothmar are on its banks, with all their glittering arms. We fought along the vale. They sled. Rothmar sunk beneath my sword! Day had not descended in the west, when I brought his arms to Crothar. The aged hero felt them with his hands; and joy brightened over all his thoughts.

THE people gather to the hall. The shells of the feast are heard. Ten harps are strung; sive bards advance, and sing, by turns*, the praise

of

^{*} Those extempore compositions were in great repute among succeeding bards. The pieces extant of that kind shew more of the good ear, than of the poetical genius of their authors. The translator has only met with one poem of this fort, which he thinks worthy of being preserved. It is a thousand years later than Ossian, but the authors seem to have observed his manner, and adopted some of his expressions. The story of it is this. Five bards, passing the night in the house of a chief, who was a poet himself, went severally to make their observations on, and returned with an extempore description of, night. The night happened to be one in October, as appears from the poem, and in the north of Scotland, it has all that variety which the bards ascribe to it, in their descriptions.

of Offian; they poured forth their burning fouls, and the firing answered to their voice. The joy of Croma was great: for peace returned to the land.

FIRST BARD.

NIGHT is dull and dark. The clouds rest on the hills. No star with green trembling beam; no moon looks from the sky. I hear the blast in the wood; but I hear it distant far. The stream of the valley murmurs; but its murmur is sullen and sad. From the tree at the grave of the dead the long-howling owl is heard. I see a dim form on the plain! It is a ghost! it sades, it slies. Some suneral shall pass this way: the meteor marks the path.

The distant dog is howling from the hut of the hill. The stag lies on the mountain moss: the hind is at his side. She hears the wind in his branchy horns. She starts, but lies again.

The roe is in the cleft of the rock; the heath-cock's head is beneath his wing. No beaft, no bird is abroad, but the owl and the howling fox. She on a leafless tree: he in a cloud on the hill.

Dark, panting, trembling, fad the traveller has lost his way. Through shrubs, through thorns, he goes, along the gurgling rill. He fears the rock and the sen. He fears the ghost of night. The old tree groans to the blast; the falling branch resounds. The wind drives the withered burs, clung together, along the grass. It is the light tread of a ghost! He trembles amidst the night.

Dark, dufky, howling is night, cloudy, windy, and full of ghofis! The dead are abroad! my friends, receive me from the night.

SECOND BARD.

The wind is up. The shower descends. The spirit of the mountain shricks. Woods fall from high. Windows slap. The growing river roars. The traveller attempts the ford.

land. The night came on with filence; the morning returned with joy. No foe came in darkness, with his glittering spear. The joy of Croma was great; for the gloomy Rothmar had fallen!

I RAISED

Hark that shrick! he dies: The storm drives the horse from the hill, the goat, the lowing cow. They tremble as drives the shower, beside the mouldering bank.

The hunter flarts from fleep, in his lonely hut; he wakes the fire decayed. His wet dogs fmoke around him. He fills the chinks with heath. Loud roar two mountain fireams which meet befide his booth.

Sad on the fide of a hill the wandering shepherd fits. The tree resounds above him. The stream roars down the rock. He waits for the rising moon to guide him to his home.

Ghosts ride on the form to-night. Sweet is their voice between the squalls of wind. Their songs are of other worlds.

The rain is past. The dry wind blows. Streams roar, and windows stap. Cold drops fall from the roof. I see the starry sky. But the shower gathers again. The west is gloomy and dark. Night is stormy and dismal; receive me, my friends, from night.

THIRD BARD.

The wind still sounds between the hills: and whistles through the grass of the rock. The firs fall from their place. The turfy hut is torn. The clouds, divided, sly over the sky, and shew the burning stars. The meteor, token of death! sees sparkling through the gloom. It rests on the hill. Isee the withered fern, the dark-browed rock, the fallen oak. Who is that in his shrowd beneath the tree, by the stream?

The waves dark-tumble on the lake, and lash its rocky sides. The boat is brimfull in the cove; the oars on the rocking tide. A maid sits sad beside the rock, and eyes the rolling stream. Her lover promised to come. She saw his boat, when

I RAISED my voice for Fovar-gormo, when they laid the chief in earth. The aged Crothar was there, but his figh was not heard. He fearched yet it was light, on the lake. Is this his broken boat on the shore? Are these his groans on the wind?

Hark! the hail rattles around. The flaky fnow descends, The tops of the hills are white. The stormy winds abate. Various is the night and cold; receive me, my friends, from night.

FOURTH BARD.

Night is calm and fair; blue, starry, settled is night. The winds, with the clouds, are gone. They sink behind the hill. The moon is up on the mountain. Trees glister: streams shine on the rock. Eright rolls the settled lake; bright the stream of the vale.

I fee the trees overturned; the shocks of corn on the plain. The wakeful hind rebuilds the shocks, and whistles on the diftant field.

Calm, fettled, fair is night! Who comes from the place of the dead? That form with the robe of fnow; white arms and dark-brown hair! It is the daughter of the chief of the people: the that lately fell! Come, let us view thee, O maid! thou that half been the delight of heroes! The blaft drives the phantom away; white, without form, it ascends the hill.

The breezes drive the blue mift, flowly over the narrow vale. It rifes on the hill, and joins its head to heaven. Night is fettled, calm, blue, flarry, bright with the moon. Receive me not, my friends, for lovely is the night.

FIITH BARD.

Night is calm, but dreary. The moon is in a cloud in the west. Slow moves that pale beam along the shaded hill. The distant wave is heard. The torrent murmurs on the rock. The cock is heard from the booth. More than half the night fearched for the wound of his fon, and found it in his breast. Joy rose in the face of the aged.

is past. The house-wise, groping in the gloom, rekindles the settled fire. The hunter thinks that day approaches, and calls his bounding dogs. He ascends the hill and whissles on his way. A blast removes the cloud. He sees the starry plough of the north. Much of the night is to pass. He nods by the mostly rock.

Hark! the whirlwind is in the wood! A low murmur in the vale! It is the mighty army of the dead returning from the air.

The moon rests behind the hill. The beam is still on that lofty rock. Long are the shadows of the trees. Now it is dark over all. Night is dreary, silent, and dark; receive me, my friends, from night.

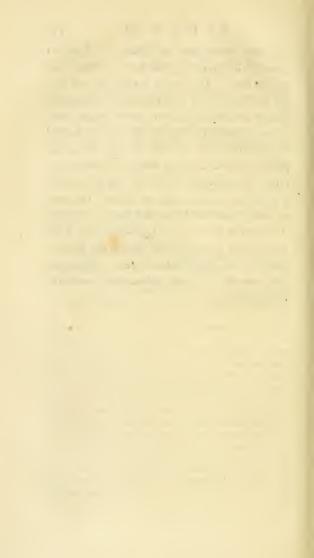

The CHIEF.

Let clouds rest on the hills: spirits fly and travellers sear. Let the winds of the woods arise, the sounding storms descend. Roar streams and windows stap, and green winged meteors fly; rise the pale moon from behind her hills, or inclose her head in clouds; night is alike to me, blue, stormy, or gloomy the sky. Night slies before the beam, when it is poured on the hill. The young day returns from his clouds, but we return no more.

Where are our chiefs of old? Where our kings of mighty name? The fields of their battles are filent. Scarce their mosfly tombs remain. We shall also be forgot. This lofty house shall fall. Our sons shall not behold the ruins in grass. They shall ask of the aged, "Where stood the walls of our fathers?"

Raise the song, and strike the harp; send round the shells of joy. Suspend a hundred tapers on high. Youths and maids begin the dance. Let some gray bard be near me to tell the deeds of other times; of kings renowned in our land, of chiefs we behold no more. Thus let the night pass until morning shall appear in our halls. Then let the bow be at hand, the dogs, the youths of the chace. We shall ascend the hill with day; and awake the deer.

He came and fpoke to Offian. "King of fpears!" he faid, " my fon has not fallen without his fame. The young warrior did not fly; but met death, as he went forward in his ftrength. Happy are they who die in youth, when their renown is heard! The feeble will not behold them in the hall; or fmile at their trembling hands. Their memory shall be honoured in fong; the young tear of the virgin will fall. But the aged wither away, by degrees, the fame of their youth, while yet they live is all forgot. They fall in fecret. The figh of their fon is not heard. Joy is around their tomb; the stone of their fame is placed without a tear. Happy are they who die in youth, when their renown is around them.

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

This piece, as many more of Offian's compositions, is addressed to one of the first Christian missionaries. The story of the poem is handed down, by tradition, thus. In the country of the Britons between the walls, two chiefs lived in the days of Fingal, Dunthalmo, lord of Teutha, supposed to be the Tweed; and Rathmor, who dwelt at Clutha, well known to be the river Clyde. Rathmore was not more renowned for his generofity and hospitality, than Dunthalmo was infamous for his cruelty and ambition. Dunthalmo, through envy, or on account of some private feuds, which sublisted between the families, murdered Cathmore at a feail; but being afterwards touched with remorfe, he educated the two fons of Rathmore, Calthon and Colmar, in his own house. They growing up to man's estate, dropped fome hints that they intended to revenge the death of their father, upon which Dunthalmo shut them up in two caves on the banks of Teutha, intending to take them off privately. Colmal, the daughter of Dunthalmo, who was fecretly in love with Calthon, helped him to make his escape from prison, and fled with him to Fingal, disguised in the habit of a young warrior, and implored his aid against Dunthalmo. Fingal fent Offian with three hundred men, to Colmar's relief. Dunthalmo having previously murdered Colmar, came to a battle with Offian; but he was killed by that hero, and his army totally defeated.

Calthon married Colmal, his deliverer; and Offian returned to Morven.

A

P O E M.

PLEASANT is the voice of thy fong, thou lonely dweller of the rock. It comes on the found of the ffream, along the narrow vale. My foul awakes, O stranger! in the midst of my hall. I stretch my hand to the spear, as in the days of other years. I stretch my hand, but it is feeble; and the figh of my bosom grows. Wilt thou not listen, fon of the rock, to the fong of Offian? My foul is full of other times; the joy of my youth returns. Thus the fun appears in the west, after the steps of his brightness have moved behind a storm; the green hills lift their dewy heads of the blue ffreams rejoice in the vale. The aged hero comes forth on his staff; his grey hair glitters in the beam. Dost thou not behold, son of the rock, a shield in Offian's hall? It is marked with the strokes of battle; and the brightness of its bosses has failed.

That

That shield the great Dunthalmo bore, the chief of streamy Teutha. Dunthalmo bore it in battle, before he fell by Ossian's spear. Listen, son of the rock, to the tale of other years!

RATHMOR was a chief of Clutha. The feeble dwelt in his hall. The gates of Rathmor were never thut; his feaft was always fpread. The fons of the stranger came. They bleffed the generous chief of Clutha. Bards raifed the fong, and touched the harp: joy brightened on the face of the fad! Dunthalmo came, in his pride, and ruthed into the combat of Rathmor. The chief of Clutha overcame: the rage of Dunthalmo rose. He came, by night, with his warriors; the mighty Rathmor fell. He fell in his halls, where his feast was often spread for strangers.

COLMAR and Calthon were young, the fons of car-borne Rathmor. They came, in the joy of youth, into their father's hall. They behold him in his blood; their bursting tears defeend. The foul of Dunthalmo melted, when he saw the children of youth. He brought them to Alteutha's * walls; they grew in the house of their foe. They bent the bow in his presence; and came forth to his wars. They saw the fallen walls of their fathers; they saw the green thorn in the hall. Their tears ruthed forth in secret. At times, their faces were sad. Dunthalmo beheld their gries: his darkening soul designed their death. He closed them in two caves, on the ecchoing banks of Teutha. The sun did not come there with his beams; nor the moon of heaven by night. The sons of Rathmor remained in darkness, and foresaw their death.

^{*} Al-teutha, or rather Balteutha, the town of Tweed, the name of Dunthalmo's feat. It is observable that all the names in this poem, are derived from the Galic language; which is a proof that it was once the universal language of the whole island.

THE daughter of Dunthalmo wept in filence, the fair-haired, blue-eyed Colmal *. Her eye had rolled in fecret on Calthon; his loveliness swelled in her foul. She trembled for her warrior; but what could Colmal do? Her arm could not lift the spear; nor was the sword formed for her side. Her white breast never rose beneath a mail. Neither was her eye the terror of heroes. What canst thou do, O Colmal! for the falling chief? Her steps are unequal; her hair is loose: her eye looks wildly through her tears. She came, by night, to the hall †. She Caol-mhal, a woman with finall eye-brows; finall eyebrows were a diffinguishing part of beauty in Offian's time: and he feldom fails to give them to the fine women of his poems.

[†] That is, the hall where the arms taken from enemies were hung up as trophies. Offian is very careful to make his stories probable:

armed her lovely form in fleel; the fleel of a young warrior, who fell in the first of his battles. She came to the cave of Calthon, and loosed the thong from his hands.

"ARISE, fon of Rathmor," fhe faid, "arife, the night is dark! Let us fly to the king of Selma +, chief of fallen Clutha! I am the fon of Lamgal, who dwelt in thy father's hall. I heard of thy dark dwelling in the cave, and my foul arose. Arife, fon of Rathmor, arife, the night is dark!" "Bleft voice!" replied the chief, " comest thou from the clouds to Calthon? The ghofts of his fathers have often descended in his dreams. fince the fun has retired from his eyes, and darkness has dwelt around him. Or art thou the son of Lamgal, the chief I often faw in Clutha? But shall I fly to Fingal, and Colmar my brother low? Will I fly to Morven, and the hero closed in night? No: give me that spear, son of Lamgal, Calthon will defend his brother !"

"A THOUSAND warriors," replied the maid, "firetch their fpears round car-borne Colmar. What can Calthon do against a host so great? Let us fly to the king of Morven, he will come probable; for he makes Colmal put on the arms of a youth killed in his first battle, as more proper for a young woman, who cannot be supposed strong enough to carry the armour of a full-grown warrior.

⁺ Fingal.

with war. His arm is stretched forth to the unhappy; the lightning of his sword is round the weak. Arise, thou son of Rathmor; the shadows will fly away. Arise, or thy steps may be seen, and thou must fall in youth!"

THE fighing hero rose; his tears descend for car-borne Colmar. He came with the maid to Selma's hall; but he knew not that it was Colmal. The helmet cover'd her lovely face. Her bosom heaved beneath the steel. Fingal returned from the chace, and found the lovely strangers. They were like two beams of light, in the midst of the hall of shells. The king heard the tale of grief; and turned his eyes around. A thousand heroes half-rose before him; claiming the war of Teutha. I came with my spear from the hill; the joy of battle rose in my breast: for the king spoke to Ossian in the midst of a thousand chiefs.

"Son of my strength," began the king, "take thou the spear of Fingal. Go to Teutha's ruthing stream, and save the car-borne Colmar. Let thy same return before thee like a pleasant gale; that my soul may rejoice over my son, who renews the renown of our fathers. Offian! be thou a storm in war; but mild when the soe is low! It was thus my same arose, O my son; be thou like Selma's chief. When the haughty Vol. I.

come to my halls, my eyes behold them not. But my arm is firetched forth to the unhappy. My fword defends the weak."

I REJUICED in the words of the king. I took my rattling arms. Diaran * rofe at my fide, and Dargo + king of spears. Three hundred youths

* Diaran, father of that Connal who was unfortunately killed by Crimora. his miftrefs.

† Dargo, the fon of Collath, is celebrated in other poems by Oslian. He is said to have been killed by a boar at a hunting party. The lamentation of his mistress, or wise, Mingala, over his body, is extant; but whether it is of Oslian's composition, I cannot determine. It is generally ascribed to him, and has much of his manner; but some traditions mention it as an imitation by some later bard. As it has some poetical merit, I have subjoined it.

HE spouse of Dargo comes in tears: for Dargo was no more! The heroes figh over Lartho's chief: and what shall sad Mingala do? The dark soul vanished like morning mist, before the king of spears: but the generous glowed in his presence like the morning star.

Who was the fairest and most lovely? Who but Collath's stately son? Who sat in the midst of the wife, but Dargo of the mighty deeds?

Thy hand touched the trembling harp: Thy voice was foft as fummer-winds. Ah me! what shall the heroes say? for Dargo fell before a boar. Pale is the lovely cheek; the look of which was firm in danger! Why hast thou sailed on our hills, thou sairer than the beams of the sun?

The daughter of Adonfion was lovely in the eyes of the valiant; the was lovely in their eyes, but the choic to be the spoule of Dargo.

But thou art alone, Mingala! the night is coming with its clouds; where is the bcd of thy repose? Where but in the tomb of Dargo? followed our fteps: the lovely ftrangers were at my fide. Dunthalmo heard the found of our approach. He gathered the ftrength of Teutha. He ftood on a hill with his hoft. They were like rocks broken with thunder, when their bent trees are finged and bare, and the ftreams of their chinks have failed. The ftream of Teutha rolled, in its pride, before the gloomy foe. I fent a bard to Dunthalmo, to offer the combat on the plain; but he fmiled in the darkness of his pride. His unsettled host moved on the hill; like the mountain-cloud, when the blast has entered its womb, and scatters the curling gloom on every fide.

They brought Colmar to Teutha's bank, bound with a thousand thongs. The chief is sad, but stately. His eye is on his friends; for we stood, in our arms, whilst Teutha's waters rolled between. Dunthalmo came with his spear, and pierced the hero's side: he rolled on the bank in his blood. We heard his broken sighs. Calthon rushed into the stream: I bounded forward on my spear. Teutha's race fell before us.

Why dost thou lift the stone, O bard! why dost thou shut the narrow house? Mingala's eyes are heavy, bard! She must sleep with Dargo.

Last night I heard the fong of joy in Lartho's losty hall. But filence dwells around my bed. Mingala rests with Dargo.

Night came rolling down. Dunthalmo rested on a rock, amidst an aged wood. The rage of his bosom burned against the car-borne Calthon. But Calthon stood in his grief; he mourned the fallen Colmar; Colmar slain in youth, before his same arose!

I EADE the fong of woe to rife, to footh the mournful chief; but he flood beneath a tree, and often threw his fpear on earth. The humid eye of Colmal rolled near in a fecret tear: the forefaw the fall of Dunthalmo, or of Clutha's warlike chief. Now half the night had paffed away. Silence and darknefs were on the field. Sleep refled on the eyes of the heroes: Calthon's fettling foul was fiill. His eyes were half-clofed; but the murmur of Teutha had not yet failed in his ear. Pale, and thewing his wounds, the ghoft of Colmar came: he bent his head over the hero, and raifed his feeble voice!

"SLEEPS the fon of Rathmor in his night, and his brother low? Did we not rife to the chace together? Purfued we not the dark-brown hinds? Colmar was not forgot till he fell: till death had blafted his youth. I lie pale beneath the rock of Lona. O let Calthon rife! the morning comes with its beams; Dunthalmo will dishonour the fallen." He passed away in his blaft. The rifing Calthon saw the steps of his departure-

He rushed in the found of his steel. Unhappy Colmal rose. She followed her hero through night, and dragged her spear bekind. But when Calthon came to Lona's rock, he found his sallen brother. The rage of his bosom rose; he rushed among the soe. The groans of death ascend. They close around the chief. He is bound in the midst, and brought to gloomy Dunthalmo. The shout of joy arose; and the hills of night replied.

I STARTED at the found: and took my father's spear. Diaran rose at my side; and the youthful strength of Dargo. We missed the chief of Clutha, and our fouls were fad. I dreaded the departure of my fame. The pride of my valour rose! "Sons of Morven," I faid, "it is not thus our fathers fought. They rested not on the field of firangers, when the foe was not fallen before them. Their firength was like the eagles of heaven; their renown is in the fong. But our people fall by degrees. Our fame begins to depart. What thall the king of Morven fay, if Ossian conquers not at Teutha? Rife in your steel, ye warriors; follow the found of Offian's courfe. He will not return, but renowned, to the ecchoing walls of Selma."

MORNING rose on the blue waters of Teutha. Colmal stood before me in tears. She told of the chief of Clutha: thrice the spear sell from her hand. My wrath turned against the stranger; for my soul trembled for Calthon. "Son of the seeble hand," I said, "do Teutha's warriors sight with tears? The battle is not won with grief; nor dwells the sigh in the soul of war. Go to the deer of Carmun, to the lowing herds of Teutha. But leave these arms, thou son of sear. A warrior may lift them in sight."

I TORE the mail from her shoulders. Her snowy breast appeared. She bent her blushing face to the ground. I looked in silence to the chiefs. The spear fell from my hand; the sigh of my bosom rose! But when I heard the name of the maid, my crowding tears rushed down. I blessed the lovely beam of youth, and bade the battle move!

WHY, fon of the rock, should Offian tell how Teutha's warriors died? They are now forgot in their land; their tombs are not found on the heath. Years came on with their storms. The green mounds are mouldered away. Scarce is the grave of Dunthalmo seen, or the place where he fell by the spear of Ossian. Some grey warrior, half blind with age, sitting by night at the slaming oak of the hall, tells now any deeds to his sons, and the fall of the dark Dunthalmo. The faces of youth bend sidelong towards towards his voice. Surprize and joy burn in their eyes! I found Calthon bound to an oak; my fword cut the thongs from his hands. I gave him the white-bosomed Colmal. They dwelt in the halls of Teutha.

THE

WAR of CAROS:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Caros is probably the noted usurper Carausius, by birth a Menapian, who affumed the purple in the year 284: and, feizing on Britain, defeated the Emperor Maximian Herculius in several naval engagements, which gives propriety to his being called in this poem the king of ships. He repaired Agricola's wall, in order to obstruct the incursions of the Caledonians; and when he was employed in that work, it appears he was attacked by a party under the command of Oscar the son of Ossan. This battle is the foundation of the present poem, which is addressed to Malvina the daughter of Toscar.

THE

WAR of CAROS:

A

P O E M.

RING, daughter of Toscar, bring the harp! the light of the fong rises in Ossian's foul! It is like the field, when darkness covers the hills around, and the shadow grows slowly on the plain of the fun. I behold my fon, O Malvina, near the mossy rock of Crona*. But it is the mist of the desart, tinged with the beam of the west! Lovely is the mist, that assumes the form of Oscar! turn from it, ye winds, when ye roar on the side of Ardven!

Who comes towards my fon, with the murmur of a fong? His stats is in his hand, his grey hair loose on the wind. Surly joy lightens his face. He often looks back to Caros. It is Ryno * of fongs, he that went to view the foe. "What does Caros king of ships?" faid the fon of the now mournful Oslian, " spreads he the wings + of his pride, bard of the times of old?" " He spreads them, Ofcar," replied the bard, " but it is behind his gathered heap 1. He looks over his stones with fear. He beholds thee terrible, as the ghost of night, that rolls the wave to his ships!"

^{*} Crona is the name of a fmall stream which runs into the Carron.

"Go, thou first of my bards," fays Oscar, " take the spear of Fingal. Fix a flame on its point. Shake it to the winds of heaven. Bid him, in fongs, to advance, and leave the rolling of his wave. Tell to Caros that I long for battle; that my bow is weary of the chace of Cona. Tell him the mighty are not here; and that my arm is young."

He went with the murmur of fongs. Ofcar reared his voice on high. It reached his heroes on Ardven, like the noise of a cave; when the fea of Togorma rolls before it; and its trees meet the roaring winds. They gather round my fon like the streams of the hill; when, after rain, they roll in the pride of their course. Ryno came to the mighty Caros. He struck his slaming spear. Come to the battle of Oscar, O thou that sittest on the rolling of waves. Fingal is distant far; he hears the songs of bards in Morven: the wind of his hall is in his hair. His terrible spear is at his side; his shield that is like the darkened moon! Come to the battle of Oscar; the hero is alone!

^{*} Ryno is often mentioned in the ancient poetry. He feems to have been a Bard, of the first rank, in the days of Fingal.

⁺ The Roman eagle.

¹ Agricola's wall which Caraufius repaired.

HE came not over the streamy Carun*. The bard returned with his song. Grey night grows dim on Crona. The feast of shells is spread. A hundred oaks burn to the wind; faint light gleams over the heath. The ghosts of Ardven pass through the beain, and shew their dim and distant forms. Comala † is half unseen on her meteor; Hidallan is sullen and dim, like the darkened moon behind the mist of night.

"Why art thou fad?" faid Ryno; for he alone beheld the chief. "Why art thou fad, Hidallan? hast thou not received thy fame?

The river Carron.

[†] This is the scene of Comala's death, which is the subject of the dramatic poem. The poet mentions her in this place, in order to introduce the sequel of Hidallan's story, who, on account of her death, had been expelled from the wars of Fingal.

The fongs of Offian have been heard; thy ghost has brightened in wind, when thou didst bend from thy cloud, to hear the fong of Morven's bard! "And do thine eyes," faid Oscar, "behold the chief, like the dim meteor of night? Say, Ryno, say, how fell Hidallan, the renowned in the days of my fathers? His name remains on the rocks of Cona. I have often feen the streams of his hills!"

Fingal, replied the bard, drove Hidallan from his wars. The king's foul was fad for Comala, and his eyes could not behold the chief. Lonely, fad along the heath he, flowly, moved, with filent fleps. His arms hang difordered on his fide. His hair flies loofe from his brow. The tear is in his down-cast eyes; a figh half-filent in his breast! Three days he strayed unseen, alone, before he came to Lamor's halls: the mostly halls of his fathers, at the stream of Balva*. There Lamor sat alone beneath a tree; for he had sent his people with Hidallan to war. The stream ran at his feet, his grey head rested on his staff. Sightless are his aged eyes. He hums the song of other times.

^{*} This is perhaps that small stream, still retaining the name of Balva, which runs through the romantic valley of Glentivar in Stirlingshire. Balva signifies a filent stream; and Glentivar, the sequestered vale.

The noise of Hidallan's feet came to his ear: he knew the tread of his son.

"Is the fon of Lamor returned; or is it the found of his ghoft? Haft thou fallen on the banks of Carun, fon of the aged Lamor? Or, if I hear the found of Hidallan's feet; where are the mighty in the war? where are my people, Hidallan, that were wont to return with their echoing shields? Have they fallen on the banks of Carun?"

"No: replied the fighing youth, the people of Lamor live. They are renowned in war, my father; but Hidallan is renowned no more. I must fit alone on the banks of Balva, when the roar of the battle grows."

"But thy fathers never fat alone," replied the rifing pride of Lamor. "They never fat alone on the banks of Balva, when the roar of battle rofe. Doft thou not behold that tomb? My eyes differn it not; there refts the noble Garmállon, who never fled from war! Come, thou renowned in battle, he fays, come to thy father's tomb. How am I renowned, Garmállon? my fon has fled from war!"

"King of the ffreamy Balva!" faid Hidallan with a figh, "why doft thou torment my foul? Lamor, I never fled. Fingal was fad for Comala:

Comala; he denied his wars to Hidallan. Go to the grev streams of thy land, he faid; moulder like a leafless oak, which the winds have bent over Balva, never more to grow!"

" AND must I hear," Lamor replied, " the lonely tread of Hidallan's feet? When thousands are renowned in battle, shall he bend over my grey streams? Spirit of the noble Garmállon! carry Lamor to his place; his eyes are dark; his foul is fad: his fon has loft his fame!"

" WHERE," faid the youth, " shall I fearch for fame to gladden the foul of Lamor? From whence shall I return with renown, that the found of my arms may be pleafant in his ear? If I go to the chace of hinds, my name will not be heard. Lamor will not feel my dogs, with his hands, glad at my arrival from the hill. He will not enquire of his mountains, or of the dark-brown deer of his defarts!"

" I MUST fall," faid Lamor, "like a leafless oak: it grew on a rock! it was overturned by the winds! My ghost will be seen on my hills, mournful for my young Hidallan. Will not ye, ye mists, as ye rise, hide him from my fight? My fon! go to Lamor's hall: there the arms of our fathers hang. Bring the fword of Garmállon; he took it from a foe!"

He went and brought the fword with all its fludded thongs. He gave it to his father. The grey-haired hero felt the point with his hand.

"My fon! lead me to Garmállon's tomb; it rifes beside that rustling tree. The long grass is withered; I hear the breezes whistling there. A little fountain murmurs near, and sends its water to Balva. There let me rest; it is noon: the sun is on our fields!"

HE led him to Garmállon's tomb. Lamor pierced the fide of his fon. They sleep together: their ancient halls moulder away. Ghosts are seen there at noon: the valley is filent, and the people shun the place of Lamor.

"MOURNFUL is thy tale," faid Ofcar, "fon of the times of old! My foul fighs for Hidallan; he fell in the days of his youth. He flies on the blaft of the defart, his wandering is in a foreign land. Sons of the ecchoing Morven! draw near to the foes of Fingal. Send the night away in fongs; watch the flrength of Caros. Ofcar goes to the people of other times; to the shades of filent Ardven; where his fathers fit dim in their clouds, and behold the future war. And art thou there, Hidallan, like a half-extinguished meteor? Come to my fight, in thy forrow, chief of the winding Balva!"

THE heroes move with their fongs. Ofcar flowly ascends the hill. The meteors of night fet on the heath before him. A distant torrent faintly roars. Unfrequent blasts rush through aged oaks. The half-enlightened moon finks dim and red behind her hill. Feeble voices are heard on the heath. Ofcar drew his fword!

"Come," faid the hero, "O ye ghofts of my fathers! ye that fought against the kings of the world! Tell me the deeds of future times; and your converse in your caves; when you talk together and behold your fons in the fields of the brave."

TRENMOR came, from his hill, at the voice of his mighty fon. A cloud, like the fleed of the flranger, supported his airy limbs. His robe is of the mist of Lano, that brings death to the people. His sword is a green meteor half-extinguished. His face is without form, and dark. He sighed thrice over the hero: thrice the winds of night roared around! Many were his words to Oscar; but they only came by halves to our ears: they were dark as the tales of other times, before the light of the song arose. He slowly vanished, like a mist that melts on the sunny hill. It was then, O daughter of Toscar, my son began sirst to be sad. He foresaw the fall of his race. At times, he was thoughtful and dark; like the fun when he carries a cloud on his face, but again he looks forth from his darkness on the green hills of Cona.

OSCAR passed the night among his fathers, grey morning met him on Carun's banks. A green vale furrounded a tomb which arose in the times of old. Little hills lift their head at a distance; and stretch their old trees to the wind. The warriors of Caros sat there, for they had passed the stream by night. They appeared, like the trunks of aged pines, to the pale light of the morning. Oscar stood at the tomb, and raised thrice his terrible voice. The rocking hills ecchoed around; the starting roes bounded away: And the trembling ghosts of the dead fled, shrieking on their clouds. So terrible was the voice of my son, when he called his friends!

A THOUSAND spears arose around; the people of Caros rose. Why, daughter of Toscar, why that tear? My son, though alone, is brave. Oscar is like a beam of the sky; he turns around and the people fall. His hand is the arm of a ghost, when he stretches it from a cloud; the rest of his thin form is unseen; but the people die in the vale! My son beheld the approach of the foe; he stood in the silent darkness of his strength. "Am I alone, said Oscar, in the midft of a thousand soes? Many a spear is there! many a darkly-rolling eye! Shall I sty to Ardven? But did my fathers ever sty? The mark of their arm is in a thousand battles. Ofcar too shall be renowned! Come, ye dim ghosts of my fathers, and behold my deeds in war! I may fall; but I will be renowned like the race of the ecchoing Morven." He stood, growing in his place, like a stood in a narrow vale! The battle came, but they fell: bloody was the sword of Oscar!

164 The WAR of CAROS:

THE noise reached his people at Crona; they came like a hundred streams. The warriors of Caros fled; Ofcar remained like a rock left by the ebbing fea. Now dark and deep, with all his steeds, Caros rolled his might along: the little streams are lost in his course; the earth is rocking round. Battle fpreads from wing to wing: ten thousand swords gleam at once in the sky. But why thould Offian fing of battles? For never more shall my steel shine in war. I remember the days of my youth with grief; when I feel the weakness of my arm. Happy are they who fell in their youth, in the midst of their renown! They have not beheld the tombs of their friend: or failed to bend the bow of their strength. Happy art thou, O Oscar, in the midst of thy rushing blast. Thou often goest to the fields of thy fame, where Caros fled from thy lifted fword.

DARKNESS comes on my foul, O fair daughter of Tofcar, I behold not the form of my fon at Carun; nor the figure of Oscar on Crona, The ruftling winds have carried him far away: and the heart of his father is fad. But lead me, O Malvina, to the found of my woods; to the roar of my mountain streams. Let the chace be heard on Cona; let me think on the days of other years. And bring me the harp, O maid, that I may touch it, when the light of my foul shall arife. Be thou near, to learn the fong; future times thall hear of me! The fons of the feeble hereafter will lift the voice on Cona; and, looking up to the rocks, fay, " Here Offian dwelt." They shall admire the chiefs of old, the race that are no more! while we ride on our clouds, Malvina, on the wings of the roaring winds. Our voices thall be heard, at times, in the defart; we shall fing on the breeze of the rock.

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

An address to Malvina, the daughter of Toscar. The poet relates the arrival of Cathlin in Selma, to folicit aid against Duth-carmor of Cluba, who had killed Cathmol, for the fake of his daughter Lanul. Fingal declining to make a choice among his heroes, who were all claiming the command of the expedition; they retired each to his hill of ghosts; to be determined by dreams. The spirit of Trenmor appears to Offian and Ofcar: they fail, from the bay of Carmona, and, on the fourth day, appear off the valley of Rathcol, in Inis-huna, where Duth-carmor had fixed his residence. Offian dispatches a bard to Duth-carmor to demand battle. Night comes on. The distress of Cathlin of Clutha. Offian devolves the command on Ofcar, who, according to the custom of the kings of Morven, before battle, retired to a neighbouring hill. Upon the coming on of day, the battle joins. Ofcar and Duth-carmor meet. The latter falls, Ofcar carries the mail and helmet of Duth-carmor to Cathlin, who had retired from the field. Cathlin is discovered to be the daughter of Cathmol, in disguise, who had been carried off, by force, by, and had made her escape from, Duth-carmor.

A

P O E M.

*COME, thou beam that art lonely, from watching in the night! The fqually winds are around thee, from all their echoing hills. Red, over my hundred ftreams, are the light-covered

* The traditions, which accompany this poem, inform us, that it went, of old, under the name of Laoi-Oi-lutha; i. e. the bymn of the maid of Lutha. They pretend also to fix the time of its composition, to the third year after the death of Fingal; that is, during the expedition of Fergus the son of Fingal, to the banks of Uisa-duthon. In support of this opinion, the Highland senachies have prefixed to connection with the rest of the piece. It has poetical merit; and, probably, it was the opening of one of Ossian's other poems, tho' the bards injudiciously transferred it to the piece now before us.

this poem, an address of Ossian, to Congal the young fon of Fergus, which I have rejected, as having no manner of

"Congal, fon of Fergus of Durath, thou light between thy locks, ascend to the rock of Selma, to the oak of the breaker of shields. Look over the bosom of night, it is streaked with the red paths of the dead: look on the night of ghosts, and kindle covered paths of the dead. They rejoice, on the eddying winds, in the feafon of night. Dwells there no joy in fong, white hand of the harps of Lutha? Awake the voice of the firing; roll my foul to me. It is a fiream that has failed. Malvina pour the fong.

I HEAR thee, from thy darknefs, in Selma, thou that watcheft, lonely, by night! Why didft thou with-hold the fong, from Offian's failing foul? As the falling brook to the ear of the hunter, defcending from his florm-covered hill; in a fun-beam rolls the echoing ftream; he hears, and shakes his dewy locks: such is the voice of Lutha, to the friend of the spirits of heroes. My swelling bosom beats high. I look back on the days that are past. Come, thou beam that art lonely, from watching in the night!

In the echoing bay of Carmona * we faw, one day, the bounding ship. On high, hung a broken kindle, O Congal, thy foul. Be not, like the moon on a fiream, lonely in the midft of clouds: darkness closes around it; and the beam departs. Depart not, son of Fergus, ere thou markest the field with thy sword. Ascend to the rock of Selma; to the oak of the breaker of shields."

Car-mona, bay of the dark brown bills, an arm of the sea, in the neighbourhood of Selma. In this paragraph are mentioned the signals presented to Fingal, by those who came to demand his aid. The suppliants held, in one hand, a shield

2

covered

a broken shield; it was marked with wandering blood. Forward came a youth, in arms, and stretched his pointless spear. Long, over his tearful eyes, hung loose his disordered locks. Fingal gave the shell of kings. The words of the stranger arose. "In his hall lies Cathmol of Clutha, by the winding of his own dark streams. Duth-carmor saw white-bosomed Lanul*, and pierced her father's side. In the covered with blood, and, in the other, a broken spear; the first a symbol of the death of their friends, the last an emblem of their own helples situation. If the king chose to grant succours, which generally was the case, he reached to them the shell of frasts, as a token of his hospitality and friendly intentions towards them.

It may not be difagreeable to the reader to lay here before him the ceremony of the Cran-tara, which was of a fimilar nature, and, till very lately, used in the Highlands. When the news of an enemy came to the residence of the chief, he immediately killed a goat with his own sword, dipped the end of an half-burnt piece of wood in the blood, and gave it to one of his servants, to be carried to the next hamlet. From hamlet to hamlet this tesser was carried with the utmost expedition, and, in the space of a few hours, the whole clan were in arms, and convened in an appointed place; the name of which was the only word that accompanied the delivery of the Cran-tara. This symbol was the manifesto of the chief, by which he threatened fire and sword to those of his clan, that did not immediately appear at his standard.

* Lanul, full eyed, a furname which, according to tradition, was bestowed on the daughter of Cathmol, on account of her beauty; this tradition, however, may have been founded on that partiality, which the bards have shewn to Cathlin of Clutha; for, according to them, no falshood could devel in the foul of the lovely.

ruthy defart were my steps. He fled in the seafon of night. Give thine aid to Cathlin to revenge his father. I sought thee not as a beam, in a land of clouds. Thou, like the sun, art known, king of echoing Selma!

Selma's king looked around. In his prefence, we rose in arms. But who should lift the shield? for all had claimed the war. The night came down; we strode, in silence; each to his hill of ghosts: that spirits might descend, in our dreams, to mark us for the field. We struck the shield of the dead: we raised the hum of songs. We thrice called the ghosts of our fathers. We laid us down in dreams. Trenmor came, before mine eyes, the tall form of other years! His blue hosts were behind him in half-distinguished rows. Scarce seen is their strife in mist, or their stretching forward to deaths. I listened; but no found was there. The forms were empty wind!

I STARTED from the dream of ghosts. On a fudden blast flew my whistling hair. Low-founding, in the oak, is the departure of the dead. I took my shield from its bough. Onward came the rattling of steel. It was Oscar * of

Lego

^{*} Oscar is here called Oscar of Lego, from his mother being the daughter of Branno, a powerful chief, on the banks of that lake. It is remarkable that Ossian addresses no poem to Malvina

Lego. He had feen his fathers. "As rufhes forth the blaft, on the bosom of whitening waves; so careless shall my course be, through ocean, to the dwelling of foes. I have seen the dead, my father! My beating soul is high! My same is bright before me, like the streak of light on a cloud, when the broad sun comes forth, red traveller of the sky!"

"Grandson of Branno," I faid; "not Ofcar alone thall meet the foe. I ruth forward, thro occan, to the woody dwelling of heroes. Let us contend, my fon, like eagles, from one rock; when they lift their broad wings, againft the ftream of winds." We raifed our fails in Carmona. From three thips, they marked my thield on the wave, as I looked on nightly Tonthena*, red traveller between the clouds. Four days came the breeze abroad. Lumon came Malvina, in which her lover Ofcar was not one of the principal actors. His attention to her, after the death of his fon, shows that delicacy of sentiment is not confined, as some fondly imagine, to our own polished times.

* Ton-thena, fire of the wave, was the remarkable flar mentioned in the seventh book of Temora, which directed the course of Larthon to Ireland. It seems to have been well known to those, who sailed on that sea, which divides Ireland from South-Britain. As the course of Ossian was along the coast of Inis-huna, he mentions with propriety, that thar which directed the voyage of the colony from that country to Ireland.

forward in mist. In winds were its hundred groves. Sun-beams marked, at times, its brown side. White, leapt the foamy streams, from all its echoing rocks.

A GREEN field, in the bosom of hills, winds filent with its own blue stream. Here, midst the waving of oaks, were the dwellings of kings of But filence, for many dark-brown years, had fettled in graffy Rath-col *; for the race of heroes had failed, along the pleafant vale. Duthcarmor was here, with his people, dark rider of the wave. Ton-thena had hid her head in the Iky. He bound his white-bosomed fails. His course is on the hills of Rath-col, to the seats of roes. We came. I fent the bard, with fongs, to call the foe to fight. Duth-carmor heard him, with joy. The king's foul was like a beam of fire; a beam of fire, marked with fmoak, rushing, varied, thro' the bosom of night. The deeds of Duth-carmor were dark, tho' his arm was strong.

NIGHT came, with the gathering of clouds. By the beam of the oak we fat down. At a dif-

^{*} Rath-col, avoody-field, does not appear to have been the refidence of Duth-carmor: he feems rather to have been forced thither by a ftorm; at least I should think that to be the meaning of the poet, from his expression, that Ton-thena had hid her bead, and that he bound his white-besomed fails; which is as much as to say, that the weather was stormy, and that Duthcarmor put in to the bay of Rathcol for shelter.

tance flood Cathlin of Clutha. I faw the changeful * foul of the firanger. As fladows fly over the field of grafs, fo various is Cathlin's cheek. It was fair, within locks, that rofe on Rath-col's wind. I did not rufh, amidft his foul, with my words. I bade the fong to rife.

"OSCAR of Lego," I faid, "be thine the fecret hill †, to-night. Strike the shield, like Morven's kings. With day, thou shalt lead in

* From this circumstance, succeeding bards seigned that Cathlin, who is here in the disguise of a young warrior, had fallen in love with Duth-carmor at a feast, to which he had been invited by her father. Her love was converted into detestation for him, after he had murdered her father. But as these rain-bows of heaven are changeful, say my authors, speaking of women, she selt the return of her former passion, upon the approach of Duth-carmor's danger. I myself, who think more savourably of the sex, must attribute the agitation of Cathlin's mind to her extream sensibility to the injuries done her by Duth-carmor: and this opinion is favoured by the sequel of the story.

† This passage alludes to the well known custom among the ancient kings of Scotland, to retire from their army on the night preceding a battle. The story which Ossian introduces in the next paragraph, concerns the fall of the Druids. It is said in many old poems, that the Druids, in the extremity of their affairs, had solicited and obtained aid from Scandinavia. Among the auxiliaries there came many pretended magicians, which circumstance Ossian alludes to, in his description of the fon of Loda. Magic and incantation could not, however, prevail; for Trenmor, assisted by the valour of his son Trathal, entirely broke the power of the Druids.

war. From my rock, I shall see thee, Oscar, a dreadful form ascending in fight, like the appearance of ghosts, amidst the storms they raise. Why should mine eyes return to the dim times of old, ere yet the song had bursted forth, like the sudden rising of winds? But the years, that are past, are marked with mighty deeds. As the nightly rider of waves looks up to Tonthena of beams: so let us turn our eyes to Trenmor, the father of kings."

" WIDE, in Caracha's echoing field, Carmal had poured his tribes. They were a dark ridge of waves. The grey-haired bards were like moving foam on their face. They kindled the strife around, with their red-rolling eyes. Nor alone were the dwellers of rocks; a fon of Loda was there; a voice, in his own dark land, to call the ghosts from high. On his hill, he had dwelt; in Lochlin, in the midst of a leastless grove. Five stones lifted, near, their heads. Loud roared his rushing stream. He often raised his voice to the winds, when meteors marked their nightly wings; when the dark-robed moon was rolled behind her hill. Nor unheard of ghosts was he! They came with the found of eagle wings. They turned battle, in fields, before the kings of men.

"But, Trenmor, they turned not from battle. He drew forward that troubled war; in its dark fkirt was Trathal, like a rifing light. It was dark; and Loda's fon poured forth his figns, on night. The feeble were not before thee, fon of other lands! * Then rofe the strife of kings, about the hill of night; but it was foft as two fummer gales, shaking their light wings, on a lake. Trenmor yielded to his fon; for the same of the king had been heard. Trathal came forth before his father, and the foes failed, in echoing Caracha. The years that are past, my son, are marked with mighty deeds †."

In clouds rose the eastern light. The soe came forth in arms. The strife is mixed on Rath-col, like the roar of streams. Behold the contending of kings! They meet beside the oak. In gleams of steel the dark forms are lost; such is the meeting of meteors, in a vale by night: red light is scattered round, and men foresee the storm! Duth-carmor is low in blood! The son of Ossian overcame! Not harmless in battle was he, Malvina hand of harps!

^{*}Trenmor and Trathal. Offian introduced this epifode, as an example to his fon, from ancient times.

[†] Those who deliver down this poem in tradition, lament that there is a great part of it lost. In particular they regret the loss of an episode, which was here introduced, with the sequel of the story of Carmal and his Druids. Their attachment to it was founded on the descriptions of magical inchantments which it contained.

Nor, in the field, were the fteps of Cathlin. The ftranger flood by a fecret ftream, where the foam of Rath-col fkirted the mostly ftones. Above, bends the branchy birch, and ftrews its leaves, on wind. The inverted spear of Cathlin touched, at times, the stream. Ofcar brought Duth-carmor's mail: his helmet with its eagle-wing. He placed them before the stranger, and his words were heard. "The foes of thy father have failed. They are laid in the field of ghosts. Renown returns to Morven, like a rising wind. Why art thou dark, chief of Clutha? Is there cause for grief?

"Son of Offian of harps, my foul is darkly fad. I behold the arms of Cathmol, which he raifed in war. Take the mail of Cathlin, place it high in Selma's hall; that thou may ft remember the hapless in thy distant land." From white breasts descended the mail. It was the race of kings; the fost-handed daughter of Cathmol, at the streams of Clutha! Duth-carmor saw her bright in the hall, he had come, by night, to Clutha. Cathmol met him, in battle, but the hero fell. Three days dwelt the foe, with the maid. On the fourth she fled in arms. She remembered the race of kings, and felt her bursting foul!

WHY, maid of Toscar of Lutha, should I tell how Cathlin failed? Her tomb is at rushy Lumon, in a distant land. Near it were the steps of Sul malla, in the days of grief. She raised the song, for the daughter of strangers, and touched the mournful harp.

COME, from the watching of night, Malvina, lonely beam!

SUL-MALLA

O F

L U M O N:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

This poem, which, properly speaking, is a continuation of the last, opens with an address to Sul-malla, the daughter of the king of Inis-huna, whom Ossan met, at the chace, as he returned from the battle of Rath-eol. Sul-malla invites Ossan and Oscar to a feast, at the residence of her father, who was then absent in the wars. Upon hearing their name and family, she relates an expedition of Fingal into Inis huna. She casually mentioning Cathmor, chief of Atha, (who then assisted her father against his enemies) Ossan introduces the episode of Culgorm and Surandronlo, two Scandinavian kings, in whose wars Ossan himself and Cathmor were engaged on opposite sides. The story is imperfect, a part of the original being lost. Ossan, warned, in a dream, by the ghost of Trenmor, sets sail from Inishuna.

SUL-MALLA

OF

L U M O N:

A

POEM.

* HO moves fo stately, on Lumon, at the roar of the foamy waters? Her hair falls upon her heaving breast. White is her arm behind, as slow she bends the bow. Why dost

* The expedition of Offian to Inis-huna happened a flort time before Fingal paffed over into Ireland, to dethrone Cairbar the fon of Borbar-duthul. Cathmor, the brother of Cairbar, was aiding Conmor, king of Inis-huna, in his wars, at the time that Offian defeated Duth-carmor, in the valley of Rath-col. The poem is more interesting, that it contains so many particulars concerning those personages, who make so great a figure in Temora.

The exact correspondence in the manners and customs of Inis-huna, as here described, to those of Caledonia, leaves no room to doubt, that the inhabitants of both were originally the same people. Some may allege, that Offian might N 4 dost thou wander in desarts, like a light thro' a cloudy field? The young roes are panting, by their secret rocks. Return, thou daughter of kings! the cloudy night is near! It was the young branch of green Inis-huna, Sul-malla of blue eyes. She sent the bard from her rock, to bid us to her feast. Amidst the song we sat down, in Cluba's ecchoing hall. White moved the hands of Sul-malla, on the trembling strings. Half-heard amidst the sound, was the name of Atha's king: he that was absent in battle for her own green land. Nor absent from her soul was he; he came midst her thoughts by night. Ton-thena looked in, from the sky, and saw her tossing arms.

184 SUL-MALLA OF LUMON:

THE found of shells had ceased. Amidst long locks, Sul-malla rose. She spoke with bended eyes, and asked of our course thro' seas; " for of the kings of men are ye, tall riders of the transfer, in his poetical descriptions, the manners of his own nation to foreigners. This objection is easily answered. Why has he not done this with regard to the inhabitants of Scandinavia? We find the latter very different in their customs and superstitions from the nations of Britain and Ireland. The Scandinavian manners are remarkably barbarous and serce, and seem to mark out a nation much less advanced in a state of civilization, than the inhabitants of Britain were in the times of Offian.

wave *." "Not unknown," I faid, "at his ftreams is he, the father of our race. Fingal has been heard of at Cluba, blue-eyed daughter of kings. Nor only, at Cona's ftream, is Offian and Ofcar known. Foes trembled at our voice, and thrunk in other lands."

"Not unmarked," faid the maid, "by Sul-malla, is the shield of Morven's king. It hangs high, in my father's hall, in memory of the past; when Fingal came to Cluba, in the days of other years. Loud roared the boar of Culdarnu, in the midst of his rocks and woods. Inis-huna sent her youths, but they failed; and virgins wept over tombs. Careless went Fingal to Culdarnu. On his spear rolled the strength of the woods. He was bright, they faid, in his locks, the first of mortal men. Nor at the feast were heard his words. His deeds passed from his foul of fire, like the rolling of vapours from the face of the wandering fun. Not careless looked the blue eyes of Cluba on his stately steps. In white bosoms rose the king of Selma, in the midst of their thoughts by night. But the winds bore the stranger to the ecchoing vales of his roes. Nor loft to other lands was he, like a meteor that finks in a cloud. He came forth, at times, in his brightness, to the distant dwelling of foes. His fame came, like the found of winds, to Cluba's woody vale *."

^{*} Sul-malla here discovers the quality of Ossian and Oscar, from their flature and flately gait. Among nations, not far advanced in civilization, a superior beauty and stateliness of person were inseparable from nobility of blood. It was from these qualities, that those of family were known by strangers, not from tawdry trappings of state injudiciously thrown round them. The cause of this distinguishing property, must, in fome measure, be ascribed to their unmixed blood. They had no inducement to intermarry with the vulgar: and no low notions of interest made them deviate from their choice. in their own fphere. In states, where luxury has been long established, beauty of person is, by no means, the characteristic of antiquity of family. This must be attributed to those enervating vices, which are inseparable from luxury and wealth. A great family, (to alter a little the words of the historian) it is true. like a river, becomes confiderable from the length of its course, but, as it rolls on, hereditary distempers, as well as property, flow successively into it.

" DARKNESS

^{*} Too partial to our own times, we are ready to mark out remote antiquity, as the region of ignorance and barbarism. This, perhaps, is extending our prejudices too far. It has been long remarked, that knowlege, in a great measure, is founded on a free intercourse between mankind; and that the mind is enlarged in proportion to the observations it has made upon the manners of different men and nations. If we look, with attention, into the history of Fingal, as delivered by Ossian, we shall find that he was not altogether a poor ignorant hunter, confined to the narrow corner of an island. His expeditions to all parts of Scandinavia, to the north of Germany, and the different states of Great Britain and Ireland, were very numerous, and performed under such a character, and at such times, as gave him an opportunity to mark the undifguised

"DARKNESS dwells in Cluba of harps: the race of kings is distant far; in battle is my father Conmor: and Lormar* my brother, king of streams. Nor darkening alone are they; a beam, from other lands, is nigh; the friend of strangers † in Atha, the troubler of the field. High, from their misty hills, look forth the blue eyes of Erin; for he is far away, young dweller of their fouls! Nor, harmles, white hands of Erin! is Cathmor in the skirts of war; he rolls ten thousand before him, in his distant field."

"Not unfeen by Offian," I faid, "rushed Cathmor from his streams, when he poured his undifguifed manners of mankind. War and an active life, as they call forth, by turns, all the powers of the foul, present to us the different characters of men: in times of peace and quiet, for want of objects to exert them, the powers of the mind lie concealed, in a great measure, and we see only artificial passions and manners. It is from this consideration I conclude, that a traveller of penetration could gather more genuine knowlege from a tour of ancient Gaul, than from the minutest observation of all the artificial manners, and elegant resinements of modern France.

* Lormar was the fon of Conmor, and the brother of Sulmalla. After the death of Conmor, Lormar succeeded him in the throne.

† Cathmor, the fon of B rbar-duthul. It would appear, from the partiality with which Sul-malla speaks of that hero, that she had seen him, previous to his joining her father's army; tho' tradition positively afferts, that it was, after his return, that she fell in love with him.

188 SUL-MALLA OF LUMON:

ftrength on I-thorno *, ifle of many waves! In ftrife met two kings in I-thorno, Culgorm and Suran-dronlo: each from his ecchoing ifle, ftern hunters of the boar!"

"THEY met a boar, at a foamy fiream: each pierced him with his fpear. They firove for the fame of the deed; and gloomy battle rofe. From ifle to ifle they fent a fpear, broken and flained with blood, to call the friends of their fathers, in their founding arms. Cathmor came, from Erin, to Culgorm, red-eyed king: I aided Suran-dronlo, in his land of boars."

"We rushed on either side of a stream, which roared thro' a blasted heath. High broken rocks were round, with all their bending trees. Near were two circles of Loda, with the stone of power; where spirits descended, by night, in dark-red streams of sire. There, mixed with the murmur of waters, rose the voice

^{*} I-thorno, fays tradition, was an island of Scandinavia. In it, at a hunting party, met Culgorm and Suran-dronlo, the kings of two neighbouring isles. They differed about the honour of killing a boar; and a war was kindled between them. From this episode we may learn, that the manners of the Scandinavians were much more savage and cruel, than those of Britain. It is remarkable, that the names, introduced in this story, are not of Galic original, which circumstance affords room to suppose, that it had its foundation in true history.

voice of aged men, they called the forms of night, to aid them in their war."

* HEEDLESS I stood, with my people, where fell the foamy stream from rocks. The moon moved red from the mountain. My fong, at times, arose. Dark, on the other side, young Cathmor heard my voice; for he lay, beneath the oak, in all his gleaming arms. Morning came; we rushed to sight: from wing to wing is the rolling of strife. They fell, like the thistle's head, beneath autumnal winds.

In armour came a flately form: I mixed my flrokes with the chief. By turns our flields are pierced: loud rung our fleely mails. His helmet fell to the ground. In brightness thone the foe. His eyes, two pleasant flames, rolled between his wandering locks. I knew Cathmor of Atha, and threw my spear on earth. Dark, we turned, and filent passed to mix with other foes."

^{*} From the circumstance of Ossian not being present at the rites, described in the preceding paragraph, we may suppose that he held them in contempt. This difference of sentiment, with regard to religion, is a fort of argument, that the Caledonians were not originally a colony of Scandinavians, as some have imagined. Concerning so remote a period, mere conjecture must supply the place of argument and positive proofs.

190 SUL-MALLA OF LUMON:

- "Not fo passed the striving kings*. They, mixed in ecchoing fray; like the meeting of ghosts, in the dark wing of winds. Thro' either breast rushed the spears; nor yet lay the foes on earth! A rock received their fall; half-reclined they lay in death. Each held the lock of his foe; each grimly seemed to roll his eyes. The stream of the rock leapt on their shields, and mixed below with blood.
- "THE battle ceased in I-thorno. The strangers met in peace: Cathmor from Atha of streams, and Ossian, king of harps. We placed the dead in earth. Our steps were by Runar's bay. With the bounding boat, afar, advanced a ridgy wave. Dark was the rider of seas, but a beam of light was there, like the ray of the sun, in Stromlo's rolling smoak. It was the daughter † of Suran-dronlo, wild in brightened looks.

Her thought

^{*} Culgorm and Suran dronlo. The combat of the kings and their attitude in death are highly picturefque, and expressive of that ferocity of manners, which distinguished the northern nations.

[†] Tradition has handed down the name of this princes. The bards call her Runo-forlo, which has no other fort of title for being genuine, but its not being of Galic original; a diftinction, which the bards had not the art to preserve, when they seigned names for foreigners. The highland senachies, who very often endeavoured to supply the desciency, they thought they found in the tales of Offian, have given us the continuation of the flory of the daughter of Suran-dronlo. The catastrophe is so unnatural, and the circumstances of it so ridiculously pompous, that, for the sake of the inventors, I shall conceal them.

Her eyes were wandering flames, amidst disordered locks. Forward is her white arm, with the spear; her high-heaving breast is seen, white as foamy waves that rise, by turns, amidst rocks. They are heautiful, but terrible, and mariners call the winds!"

"Come, ye dwellers of Loda!" fhe faid, come, Carchar, pale in the midft of clouds!

The wildly beautiful appearance of Runo-forlo, made a deep impression on a chief, some ages ago, who was himself no contemptible poet. The flory is romantic, but not incredible, if we make allowances for the lively imagination of a man of genius. Our chief failing, in a ftorm, along one of the islands of Orkney, faw a woman, in a boat, near the shore, whom he thought, as he expresses it himself, as beautiful as a sudden ray of the sun, on the dark-beaving deep. The verses of Oslian, on the attitude of Runo-forlo, which was so fimilar to that of the woman in the boat, wrought fo much on his fancy, that he fell desperately in love. The winds, however, drove him from the coast, and, after a few days, he arrived at his residence in Scotland. There his passion increased to fuch a degree, that two of his friends, fearing the confequence, failed to the Orkneys, to carry to him the object of his defire. Upon enquiry they foon found the nymph, and carried her to the enamoured chief; but mark his furprize, when, instead of a ray of the fun, he saw a skinny fisherwoman, more than middle aged, appearing before him. Tradition here ends the ftory: but it may be easily supposed that the passion of the chief foon subfided.

192 SUL-MALLA OF LUMON:

Sluthmor, that stridest in airy halls! Corchtur, terrible in winds! Receive, from his daughter's spear, the foes of Suran-dronlo. No shadow, at his roaring streams; no mildly-looking form was he! When he took up his spear, the hawks shook their founding wings: for blood was poured around the steps of dark-eyed Surandronlo. He lighted me, no harmless beam, to glitter on his streams. Like meteors, I was bright, but I blasted the foes of Suran-dronlo."

Nor unconcerned heard Sul-malla, the praife of Cathmor of thields. He was within her foul, like a fire in fecret heath, which awakes at the voice of the blaft, and fends its beam abroad. Amidft the fong removed the daughter of kings, like the voice of a fummer-breeze; when it lifts the heads of flowers, and curls the lakes and flreams. The ruftling found gently fpreads o'er the vale, foftly-pleafing as it faddens the foul.

By night came a dream to Offian; formless flood the shadow of Trenmor. He seemed to strike the dim shield, on Selma's streamy rock. I rose, in my rattling steel; I knew that war was near, before the winds our fails were spread; when Lumon shewed its streams to the morn.

COME from the watching of night, Malvina, lonely beam!

THE

WAR of INIS-THONA:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Reflections on the poet's youth. An apostrophe to Selma.

Ofcar obtains leave to go to Inis-thona, an island of Scandinavia. The mournful story of Argon and Ruro, the two fons of the king of Inis-thona. Ofcar revenges their death, and returns in triumph to Selma. A foliloout by the poet himself.

THE

WAR of INIS-THONA:

A

P O E M.

OUR youth is like the dream of the hunter on the hill of heath. He fleeps in the mild beams of the fun; he awakes amidft a florm; the red lightning flies around: trees shake their heads to the wind! He looks back with joy, on the day of the fun; and the pleasant dreams of his rest! When shall Offian's youth return? When his ear delight in the found of arms? When shall I, like Oscar, travel in the light of my steel? Come, with your streams, ye hills of Cona! listen to the voice of Offian. The fong rises, like the fun, in my soul. I feel the joys of other times!

I BEHOLD thy towers, O Selma! the oaks of thy shaded wall: thy streams found in my ear; thy heroes gather around. Fingal sits in the O 2 midst. midst. He leans on the shield of Trenmor: his spear stands against the wall; he listens to the song of his bards. The deeds of his arm are heard; the actions of the king in his youth! Ofcar had returned from the chace, and heard the hero's praise. He took the shield of Branno* from the wall; his eyes were filled with tears. Red was the cheek of youth. His voice was trembling, low. My spear shook its bright head in his hand: he spoke to Morven's king.

"FINGAL! thou king of heroes! Offian, next to him in war! ye have fought in your youth; your names are renowned in fong. Ofcar is like the mist of Cona; I appear and I vanish away. The bard will not know my name. The hunter will not fearch in the heath for my tomb. Let me fight, O heroes, in the battles of Inis-Thona. Distant is the land of my war! ye shall not hear of Oscar's fall! Some bard may find me there; some bard may give my name to song. The daughter of the stranger shall see my tomb, and weep over the youth, that came from afar. The bard shall say, at the feast, "hear the song of Oscar from the distant land!"

^{*} This is Branno, the father of Everallin, and grandfather to Oscar; he was of Irish extraction, and lord of the country round the lake of Lego. His great actions are handed down by tradition, and his hospitality has passed into a proverb.

"OSCAR," replied the king of Morven; "thou thalt fight, fon of my fame! Prepare my dark-bofomed thip to carry my hero to Inisthona. Son of my fon, regard our fame; thou art of the race of renown! Let not the children of ftrangers fay, feeble are the fons of Morven! Be thou, in battle, a roaring ftorm: mild as the evening fun in peace! Tell, Ofcar, to Inisthona's king, that Fingal remembers his youth; when we ftrove in the combat together, in the days of Agandecca."

They lifted up the founding fail; the wind whistled through the thongs * of their masts. Waves lash the oozy rocks: the strength of ocean roars. My fon beheld, from the wave, the land of groves. He rushed into Runa's founding bay, and fent his sword to Annir of spears. The grey-haired hero rose, when he saw the sword of Fingal. His eyes were full of tears; he remembered his battles in youth. Twice had they listed the spear, before the lovely Agandecca: heroes stood far distant, as if two spirits were striving in winds.

"But now," began the king, "I am old; the fword lies ufcless in my hall. Thou, who art of Morven's race! Annir has feen the battle of fpears; but now he is pale and withered, like the oak of Lano. I have no fon to meet thee with joy, to bring thee to the halls of his fathers. Argon is pale in the tomb, and Ruro is no more. My daughter is in the hall of strangers: she longs to behold my tomb. Her spouse shakes ten thousand spears; he comes * a cloud of death from Lano. Come, to share the feast of Annir, son of ecchoing Morven!"

Leather thongs were used among the Celtic nations, inflead of ropes,

198 The WAR of INIS-THONA:

THREE days they feasted together; on the fourth, Annir heard the name of Oscar. They rejoiced in the thell †. They pursued the boars of Runa. Beside the fount of mostly stones, the weary heroes rest. The tear steals in secret from Annir: he broke the rising sigh. "Here darkly rest," the hero said, "the children of my youth. This stone is the tomb of Ruro; that tree sounds

+ To rejoice in the shell is a phrase for feasing sumptuously and drinking freely.

^{*} Cormalo had resolved on a war against his father in law Annir king of Inis-thona, in order to deprive him of his kingdom: the injustice of his designs was so much resented by Fingal, that he sent his grandson, Oscar, to the assistance of Annir. Both armies came soon to a battle, in which the conduct and valour of Oscar obtained a compleat victory. An end was put to the war by the death of Cormalo, who sell in a single combat, by Oscar's hand. Thus is the story delivered down by tradition; though the poet, to raise the character of his son, makes Oscar himself propose the expedition.

over the grave of Argon. Do ye hear my voice, O my fons, within your narrow house? Or do ye speak in these rustling leaves, when the winds of the desart rise?"

"KING of Inis-thona," faid Ofcar, "how fell the children of youth? The wild boar rushes over their tombs, but he does not disturb their repose. They pursue deer * formed of clouds, and bend their airy bow. They still love the sport of their youth; and mount the wind with joy."

"CORMALO," replied the king, "is a chief of ten thousand spears. He dwells at the waters of Lano †, which sends forth the vapour of death. He came to Runa's ecchoing halls, and sought the honour of the spear ‡. The youth was lovely as the first beam of the sun; sew were they who could meet him in fight! My heroes yielded to Cormalo: my daughter was seized in his love.

^{*} The notion of Offian concerning the state of the deceased, was the same with that of the ancient Greeks and Romans. They imagined that the souls pursued, in their separate state, the employments and pleasures of their former life.

[†] Lano was a lake of Scandinavia, remarkable, in the days of Oslian, for emitting a pestilential vapour in autumn. And thou, O valiant Duchomar, like the mist of marshy Lano; when it fails over the plains of autumn, and brings death to the bost.

FINGAL, B. I.

[‡] By the honour of the spear is meant the tournament practifed among the ancient northern nations.

200 The WAR of INIS-THONA:

Argon and Ruro returned from the chace; the tears of their pride defcend: they roll their filent eyes on Runa's heroes, who had yielded to a stranger. Three days they feasted with Cormalo: on the fourth young Argon fought. But who could fight with Argon! Cormalo is overcome. His heart fwelled with the grief of pride; he refolved, in fecret, to behold the death of my fons? They went to the hills of Runa: they purfued the dark-brown hinds. The arrow of Cormalo flew in fecret; my children fell in blood. He came to the maid of his love; to Inis-thona's long-haired maid. They fled over the defart. Annir remained alone. Night came on and day appeared; nor Argon's voice, nor Ruro's came. At length their much-loved dog was feen; the fleet and bounding Runar. He came into the hall and howled; and feemed to look towards the place of their fall. We followed him: we found them here: we laid them by this mostly stream. This is the haunt of Annir, when the chace of the hinds is past. I bend like the trunk of an aged oak; my tears for ever flow!

"ORONNAN!" faid the rifing Ofcar, "Ogar king of fpears! call my heroes to my fide, the fons of ftreamy Morven. To-day we go to Lano's water, that fends forth the vapour of death. Cormalo will not long rejoice: death is often at the point of our fwords!"

THEY came over the defart like flormy clouds, when the winds roll them along the heath: their edges are tinged with lightning; the ecchoing groves foresee the florm! The horn of Oscar's battle is heard; Lano shook over all its waves. The children of the lake convened around the sounding shield of Cormalo. Oscar fought, as he was wont in war. Cormalo fell beneath his sword: the sons of dismal Lano fled to their secret vales! Oscar brought the daughter of Inis-thona to Annir's ecchoing halls. The face of age is bright with joy; he blest the king of swords!

How great was the joy of Offian, when he beheld the distant sail of his son! it was like a cloud of light that rises in the east, when the traveller is sad in a land unknown; and dismal night, with her ghosts, is sitting around in shades! We brought him, with songs, to Selma's halls. Fingal spread the seast of shells. A thousand bards raised the name of Oscar: Morven answered to the sound. The daughter of Toscar was there; her voice was like the harp; when the distant sound comes, in the evening, on the soft-rustling breeze of the vale!

202 The WAR of INIS-THONA.

O LAY me, ye that fee the light, near fome rock of my hills! let the thick hazels be around, let the rufling oak be near. Green be the place of my reft: let the found of the distant torrent be heard. Daughter of Tofcar, take the harp, and raise the lovely fong of Selma; that sleep may overtake my foul in the midft of joy; that the dreams of my youth may return, and the days of the mighty Fingal. Selma! I behold thy towers, thy trees, thy shaded wall! I see the heroes of Morven; I hear the fong of bards! Ofcar lifts the fword of Cormalo: a thousand youths admire its fludded thongs. They look with wonder on my fon: They admire the strength of his arm. They mark the joy of his father's eyes; they long for an equal fame. And ye shall have your fame, O sons of streamy Morven! My foul is often brightened with fong; I remember the friends of my youth. But fleep descends, in the found of the harp! pleafant dreams begin to rife! Ye fons of the chace fland far diffant, nor diffurb my reft. The bard of other times holds discourse with his fathers, the chiefs of the days of old! Sons of the chace, stand far distant! disturb not the dreams of Offian!

THE

S O N G S

o f

S E L M A.

ARGUME'NT.

Address to the evening star. An apostrophe to Fingal and his times. Minona sings before the king the song of the unfortunate Colma; and the bards exhibit other specimens of their poetical talents; according to an annual custom established by the monarchs of the ancient Caledonians.

THE SONGS of SELMA.

TAR of descending night! fair is thy light in the west! thou liftest thy unshorn head from thy cloud: thy steps are stately on thy hill. What doft thou behold in the plain? The stormy winds are laid. The murmur of the torrent comes from afar. Roaring waves climb the distant rock. The slies of evening are on their feeble wings; the hum of their course is on the field. What dost thou behold. fair light? But thou dost smile and depart. The waves come with joy around thee: they bathe thy lovely hair. Farewel, thou filent beam! Let the light of Offian's foul arife!

AND it does arise in its strength! I behold my departed friends. Their gathering is on Lora, as in the days of other years. Fingal comes like a watry column of mist; his heroes are around: And fee the bards of fong, grey-haired Ullin! flately Ryno! Alpin *, with the tuneful voice! the foft complaint of Minona! How are ye changed, my friends, fince the days of Selma's feast? when we contended, like gales of fpring, as they fly along the hill, and bend by turns the feebly-whiftling grafs.

haired

MINONA + came forth in her beauty; with down-cast look and tearful eye. Her hair slew flowly on the blaft, that rushed unfrequent from the hill. The fouls of the heroes were fad when she raised the tuneful voice. Often had they feen the grave of Salgar 1, the dark dwelling of white-bosomed Colma ||. Colma left alone on the hill, with all her voice of fong! Salgar promifed to come: but the night descended around. Hear the voice of Colma, when the fat alone on the hill!

^{*} Alpin is from the fame root with Albion, or rather Albin, the ancient name of Britain; Alp, high Island, or country. The prefent name of our island has its origin in the Celtic tongue; fo that those who derived it from any other, betrayed their ignorance of the ancient language of our country. Brait or Braid, extensive; and in, land.

⁺ Offian introduces Minona, not in the ideal scene in his own mind, which he had described; but at the annual feast of Selma, where the bards repeated their works before Fingal.

I Sealg-'er, a buiter.

^{||} Cul math, a woman with fine hair.

COLMA.

It is night; I am alone, forlorn on the hill of florms. The wind is heard in the mountain. The torrent pours down the rock. No hut receives me from the rain; forlorn on the hill of winds!

Rise, moon! from behind thy clouds. Stars of the night arife! Lead me, fome light, to the place, where my love refts from the chace alone! his bow near him, unftrung: his dogs panting around him. But here I must fit alone, by the rock of the mostly stream. The stream and the wind roar aloud. I hear not the voice of my love! Why delays my Salgar, why the chief of the hill, his promise? Here is the rock, and here the tree! here is the roaring stream! Thou didst promise with night to be here. Ah! whither is my Salgar gone? With thee I would fly, from my father; with thee, from my brother of pride. Our race have long been foes; we are not foes, O Salgar!

CEASE a little while, O wind! fiream, be thou filent a while! let my voice be heard around. Let my wanderer hear me! Salgar! it is Colma who calls. Here is the tree, and the rock. Salgar, my love! I am here. Why delayeft thou thy coming? Lo! the calin moon comes forth. The flood is bright in the vale. The rocks are grey on the fleep. I fee him not on the brow. His dogs come not before him, with tidings of his near approach. Here I must fit alone!

Wно lie on the heath befide me? Are they my love and my brother? Speak to me, O my friends! To Colma they give no reply. Speak to me: I am alone! My foul is tormented with fears! Ah! they are dead! Their fwords are red from the fight. O my brother! my brother! why haft thou flain my Salgar? why, O Salgar! hast thou slain my brother? Dear were ye both to me! what shall I say in your praise? Thou wert fair on the hill among thousands! he was terrible in fight. Speak to me; hear my voice; hear me, fons of my love! They are filent; filent for ever! Cold, cold are their breafts of clay! Oh! from the rock on the hill; from the top of the windy fleep, fpeak, ye ghosts of the dead! speak, I will not be afraid! Whither are ye gone to rest? In what cave of the hill shall I find the departed? No feeble voice is on the gale: no answer halfdrowned in the fform!

I sit in my grief! I wait for morning in my tears! Rear the tomb, ye friends of the dead. Close it not till Colma come. My life flies away like a dream: why should I stay behind? Here shall I rest with my friends, by the stream of the founding rock. When night comes on the hill; when the loud winds arise; my ghost shall stand in the blast, and mourn the death of my friends. The hunter shall hear from his booth. He shall scar but love my voice! For sweet shall my voice be for my friends: pleasant were her friends to Colma!

in

Such was thy fong, Minona, foftly-blufhing daughter of Torman. Our tears descended for Colma, and our fouls were fad! Ullin came with his harp; he gave the fong of Alpin. The voice of Alpin was pleafant: the foul of Ryno was a beam of fire! But they had rested in the narrow house: their voice had ceased in Selma. Ullin had returned, one day, from the chace. before the heroes fell. He heard their strife on the hill; their fong was foft but fad! They mourned the fall of Morar, first of mortal men! His foul was like the foul of Fingal; his fword like the fword of Ofcar. But he fell, and his father mourned: his fifter's eyes were full of tears. Minona's eyes were full of tears, the fifter of car-borne Morar. She retired from the fong of Ullin, like the moon in the west, when the foresees the shower, and hides her fair head in a cloud. I touched the harp, with Ullin; the fong of mourning rose!

Ryno.

The wind and the rain are past: calm is the noon of day. The clouds are divided in heaven. Over the green hills slies the inconstant fun. Red through the stony vale comes down the stream of the hill. Sweet are thy murmurs, O stream! but more sweet is the voice I hear. It is the voice of Alpin, the son of song, mourning for the dead! Bent is his head of age; red his tearful eye. Alpin, thou son of song, why alone on the silent hill? why complainest thou, as a blast in the wood; as a wave on the lonely shore?

ALPIN.

My tears, O Ryno! are for the dead; my voice for those that have passed away. Tall thou art on the hill; fair among the sons of the vale. But thou shalt fall like Morar*; the mourner shall sit on thy tomb. The hills shall know thee no more; thy bow shall lie in the hall, unstrung!

Thou wert fwift, O Morar! as a roe on the defart; terrible as a meteor of fire. Thy wrath was as the storm. Thy fword in battle, as lightning in the field. Thy voice was a stream after rain; like thunder on diffant hills. Many fell by thy arm; they were confumed in the flames of thy wrath. But when thou didft return from war, how peaceful was thy brow! Thy face was like the fun after rain; like the moon in the filence of night; calm as the breaft of the lake when the loud wind is laid.

^{*} Mor-er, great man,

NARROW is thy dwelling now! dark the place of thine abode! With three steps I compass thy grave, O thou who wast so great before! Four stones, with their heads of moss, are the only memorial of thee. A tree with fcarce a leaf, long grafs, which whiftles in the wind, mark to the hunter's eye the grave of the mighty Morar, Morar! thou art low indeed. Thou hast no mother to mourn thee; no maid with her tears of love. Dead is the that brought thee forth. Fallen is the daughter of Morglan.

WHO on his staff is this? who is this, whose head is white with age? whose eyes are red with tears? who quakes at every flep? It is thy father *, O Morar! the father of no fon but thee. He heard of thy fame in war; he heard of foes dispersed. He heard of Morar's renown; why did he not hear of his wound? Weep, thou father of Morar! weep; but thy son heareth thee not. Deep is the sleep of the dead; low their pillow of dust. No more shall he hear thy voice; no more awake at thy call. When shall it be morn in the grave, to bid the slumberer awake? Farewel, thou bravest of men! thou conqueror in the field! but the field shall see thee no more; nor the dark wood be lightened with the splendor of thy steel. Thou hast left no son. The song shall preserve thy name. Future times shall hear of thee; they shall hear of the fallen Morar!

[.] Torman, the fon of Carthul, lord of I-mora, one of the western isles.

The grief of all arose, but most the bursting figh of Armin*. He remembers the death of his son, who sell in the days of his youth. Carmor † was near the hero, the chief of the ecchoing Galmal. Why bursts the sigh of Armin, he said? Is there a cause to mourn? The song comes, with its music, to melt and please the soul. It is like soft mist, that, rising from a lake, pours on the silent vale; the green slowers are silled with dew, but the sun returns in his strength, and the mist is gone. Why ^{*} Armin, a hero. He was chief or petty king of Gorma, i. e. the blue island, supposed to be one of the Hebrides.

[†] Cear-mor, a tall dark-complexioned man.

art thou fad, O Armin, chief of fea-furrounded Gorma?

SAD! I am! nor finall is my cause of woe! Carmor, thou hast lost no fon; thou hast lost no daughter of beauty. Colgar the valiant lives; and Annira sairest maid. The boughs of thy house ascend, O Carmor! but Armin is the last of his race. Dark is thy bed, O Daura! deep thy sleep in the tomb! When shalt thou awake with thy songs? with all thy voice of music?

ARISE, winds of autumn, arife; blow along the heath! streams of the mountains roar! roar, tempests, in the groves of my oaks! walk through broken clouds, O moon! show thy pale face, at intervals! bring to my mind the night, when all my children fell; when Arindal the mighty fell; when Daura the lovely failed! Daura, my daughter! thou wert fair; fair as the moon on Fura *; white as the driven fnow; fweet as the breathing gale. Arindal, thy bow was strong. Thy spear was swift in the field. Thy look was like mist on the wave: thy shield, a red cloud in a fform. Armar, renowned in war, came, and fought Daura's love. He was not long refused: fair was the hope of their friends !

· Fuar-a, cold island.

214 THE SONGS OF SELMA.

ERATH, fon of Odgal, repined: his brother had been flain by Armor. He came difguifed like a fon of the fea: fair was his skiff on the wave; white his locks of age; calm his ferious brow. Fairest of women, he said, lovely daughter of Armin! a rock not distant in the fea, bears a tree on its fide; red shines the fruit afar! There Armor waits for Daura. I come to carry his love! She went; fhe called on Armar. Nought answered, but the fon * of the rock, Armor, my love! my love! why tormentest thou me with fear? hear, fon of Arnart, hear: it is Daura who calleth thee! Erath the traitor fled laughing to the land. She lifted up her voice: the called for her brother and her father. Arindal! Armin! none to relieve your Daura!

HER voice came over the fea. Arindal my fon descended from the hill; rough in the spoils of the chace. His arrows rattled by his side; his bow was in his hand: five dark grey dogs attend his steps. He saw sierce Erath on the shore: he seized and bound him to an oak.

^{*} By the fon of the rock the poet means the ecchoing back of the human voice from a rock. The vulgar were of opinion, that this repetition of found was made by a spirit within the rock; and they, on that account called it mac talla; the fon tube dwells in the rock.

Thick wind the thongs * of the hide around his limbs; he loads the wind with his groans. Arindal afcends the deep in his boat, to bring Daura to land. Armar came in his wrath, and let fly the grey-feathered thaft. It fung; it funk in thy heart, O Arindal my fon! for Erath the traitor thou diedit. The oar is stopped at once; he panted on the rock and expired. What is thy grief, O Daura, when round thy feet is poured thy brother's blood! The boat is broken in twain. Armar plunges into the fea, to rescue his Daura or die. Sudden a blast from the hill came over the waves. He funk, and he rose no more.

ALONE, on the fea-beat rock, my daughter was heard to complain. . Frequent and loud were her cries. What could her father do? All night I flood on the thore. I faw her by the faint beam of the moon. All night I heard her cries. Loud was the wind; the rain beat hard on the hill. Before morning appeared, her voice was weak. It died away, like the eveningbreeze among the grass of the rocks. Spent with grief the expired. And left thee Armin alone: gone is my strength in war! fallen my pride among women! When the storms alost arise: when the north lists the wave on high; I sit by the sounding shore, and look on the fatal rock. Often by the setting moon, I see the ghosts of my children. Half-viewless, they walk in mournful conference together. Will none of you speak in pity? They do not regard their father. I am sad, O Carmor, nor small is my cause of woe!

^{*} The poet here only means that Erath was bound with leathern thongs.

216 THE SONGS OF SELMA.

Such were the words of the bards in the days of fong; when the king heard the music of harps, the tales of other times! The chiefs gathered from all their hills, and heard the lovely found. They praised the voice * of Cona! the first among a thousand bards! But age is now on my tongue; my foul has failed! I hear, at times, the ghosts of bards, and learn their pleasant song. But memory fails on my mind. I hear the call of years! They fay, as they pass along, why does Offian fing? Soon shall he lie in the narrow house, and no bard shall raise his fame! Roll on, ye dark-brown years; ye bring no joy on your course! Let the tomb open to Offian, for his firength has failed. The fons of fong are gone to rest. My voice remains, like a blaft, that roars, lonely, on a fea-furrounded rock, after the winds are laid. The dark moss whistles there; the distant mariner sees the waving trees!

[.] Offian is sometimes poetically called the voice of Cona.

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPICPOEM.

In SIX BOOKS.

ARGUMENT to BOOK I.

Cuthullin, (general of the Irish tribes, in the minority of Cormac, king of Ireland) fitting alone beneath a tree, at the gate of Tura, a castle of Ulster, (the other chiefs having gone on a hunting party to Cromla, a neighbouring hill) is informed of the landing of Swaran, king of Lochlin, b. Moran, the fon of Fithil, one of his fcouts. He convenes the chiefs; a council is held, and disputes run high about giving, battle to the enemy. Connal, the petty king of Togorma, and an intimate friend of Cuthullin, was for retreating till Fingal, king of those Caledonians who inhabited the north-west coast of Scotland, whose aid had been previously follicited, should arrive; but Calmar, the son of Matha, lord of Lara, a country in Connaught, was for engaging the enemy immediately. Cuthullin, of himfelf willing to fight, went into the opinion of Calmar. Marching towards the enemy, he missed three of his bravest heroes, Fergus, Duchomar, and Cathba. Fergus arriving, tells Cuthullin of the death of the two other chiefs; which introduces the affecting episode of Morna, the daughter of Cormac. The army of Cuthullin is descried at a distance by Swaran, who fent the fon of Arno to observe the motions of the enemy, while he himself ranged his forces in order of battle. The fon of Arno returning to Swaran, describes to him Cuthullin's chariot, and the terrible appearance of that hero. The armies engage, but night coming on, leaves the victory undecided. Cuthullin, according to the hospitality of the times, fends to Swaran a formal invitation to a feast, by his bard Carril, the fon of Kinfena. Swaran refuses to come. Carril relates to Cuthullin the story of Grudar and Brassolis. A party, by Connal's advice, is fent to observe the enemy; which closes the action of the first day.

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POE M.

In SIX BOOKS.

BOOK I.

CUTHULLIN* fat by Tura's wall: by the tree of the rufling found. His spear leaned against a rock. His shield lay on grass, by his side. Amid his thoughts of mighty Carbar*, a hero slain by the chief in war; the scout † of ocean comes, Moran ‡ the son of Fithil!

* Cuthullin the fon of Semo and grandfon to Caithbat a druid celebrated in tradition for his wisdom and valour. Cuthullin when very young married Bragela the daughter of Sorglan, and passing over into Ireland, lived for some time with Connal, grandfon by a daughter to Congal the petty king of Ulster. His wisdom and valour in a short time gained him fuch reputation, that in the minority of Cormac the supreme king of Ireland, he was chosen guardian to the young king, and fole manager of the war against Swaran king of Lochlin. After a feries of great actions he was killed in battle somewhere in Connaught, in the twenty-seventh year of his age. He was so remarkable for his strength, that to describe a strong man it has passed into a proverb, " He has the strength of Cuthullin." They shew the remains of his palace at Dunscaich in the Isle of Skye; and a stone to which he bound his dog Luath, goes still by his name.

"ARISE," fays the youth, "Cuthullin, arife. I fee the ships of the north! Many, chief of men, are the foe. Many the heroes of the seaborne Swaran!" "Moran!" replied the blue-eyed chief, "thou ever tremblest, son of Fithil! Thy fears have increased the foe. It is Fingal, king || of desarts, with aid to green Erin of streams." "I beheld their chief," says Moran, tall as a glittering rock. His spear is a blasted

* Cairbar or Cairbre, fignifies a firong man.

† Cuthullin having previous intelligence of the invasion intended by Swaran, sent scouts all over the coast of Ullin or Ulster, to give early notice of the first appearance of the enemy, at the same time that he sent Munan the son of Stirmal to implore the affishance of Fingal. He himself collected the flower of the Irish youth to Tura, a castle on the coast, to stop the progress of the enemy till Fingal should arrive from Scotland. We may conclude from Cuthullin's applying so early for foreign aid, that the Irish were not then so numerous as they have since been; which is a great presumption against the high antiquities of that people. We have the testimony of Tacitus that one legion only was thought sufficient, in the time of Agricola, to reduce the whole island under the Roman yoke; which would not probably have been the case had the island been inhabited for any number of centuries before.

1 Moran fignifies many; and Fithil, or rather Fili, an inferior bard.

|| Fingal the fon of Comhal and Morna the daughter of Thaddu. His grandfather was Trathal, and great grandfather Trenmor, both of whom are often mentioned in the poem. pine. His shield the rising moon! He sat on the shore! like a cloud of mist on the silent hill! Many, chief of heroes! I said, many are our hands of war. Well art thou named, the Mighty Man: but many mighty men are seen from Tura's windy walls."

"He fpoke, like a wave on a rock, who in this land appears like me? Heroes stand not in my presence: they fall to earth from my hand. Who can meet Swaran in fight? Who but Fingal, king of Selma of storms? Once we wrestled on Malmor*; our heels overturned the woods. Rocks fell from their place; rivulets, changing their course, sled murmuring from our side? Three days we renewed the strife; heroes stood at a distance and trembled. On the fourth, Fingal says, that the king of the ocean fell! but Swaran says, he stood! Let dark Cuthullin yield to him, that is strong as the storms of his land!"

"No!" replied the blue-eyed chief, "I never yield to mortal man! Dark Cuthullin thall be great or dead! Go, fon of Fithil, take my fpear. Strike the founding thield of Semo +.

^{*} Meal-mor, a great bill.

[†] Cabait, or rather Cathbait, grandfather to the hero, was fo remarkable for his valour, that his shield was made use of to alarm his posterity to the battles of the family. We find Fingal making the same use of his own shield in the 4th book. A horn was the most common instrument to call the army together.

It hangs at Tura's ruftling gate. The found of peace is not its voice! My heroes shall hear and obey." He went. He struck the bossy shield. The hills, the rocks reply. The found fpreads along the wood: deer ftart by the lake of roes. Curach * leaps from the founding rock; and Connal of the bloody spear! Crugal's + breast of snow beats high. The son of Favi leaves the dark-brown hind. It is the shield of war, faid Ronnar! the spear of Cuthullin, faid Lugar! fon of the fea put on thy arms! Calmar lift thy founding fteel! Puno! dreadful hero, arise! Cairbar from thy red tree of Cromla! Bend thy knee, O Eth; defcend from the ffreams of Lena. Ca-olt stretch thy fide as thou movest along the whistling heath of Mora: thy fide that is white as the foam of the troubled fea, when the dark winds pour it on rocky Cuthon ‡.

Now I behold the chiefs, in the pride of their former deeds! Their fouls are kindled at the battles of old; at the actions of other times. Their eyes are flames of fire. They roll in fearch of the foes of the land. Their mighty hands are on their fwords. Lightning pours from their fides of fteel. They come like ftreams from the mountains; each rushes roaring from his hill. Bright are the chiefs of battle, in the armour of their fathers. Gloomy and dark their heroes follow, like the gathering of the rainy clouds behind the red meteors of heaven. The founds of crathing arms ascend. The grey dogs howl between. Unequal bursts the song of battle. Rocking Cromla * ecchoes round. On Lena's dusky heath they stand, like mist that shades the hills of autumn: when broken and dark it settles high, and lifts its head to heaven!

^{*} Cu raoch fignifies the madness of battle.

⁺ Cruth-geal, fair-complexioned.

Il Cu-thon, the mournful found of waves.

"HAIL," faid Cuthullin, "fons of the narrow vales! hail, hunters of the deer! Another fport is drawing near: It is like the dark rolling of that wave on the coast! Or shall we fight, ye fons of war! or yield green Erin † to Lochlin! O Connal ‡ speak, thou first of men! thou breaker of the shields! thou hast often fought with Lochlin: wilt thou lift thy father's spear?

^{*} Crom-leach fignified a place of worship among the Druids. It is here the proper name of a hill on the coast of Ullin or Ulster.

[†] Ireland to called from a colony that fettled there called Falans. Innis-fail, the island of the Fa-il or Falans.

[†] Connal, the friend of Cuthullin, was the fon of Caithbait prince of the Tongorma or the island of blue waves, probably one of the Hebrides. His mother was Fioncoma the daughter of Congal. He had a fon by Foba of Conachar-nessar, who was afterwards petty king of Ulster. For his services in the war against Swaran he had lands conferred on him, which, from his name, were called Tir-chonnuil or Tir-connel, i. e. the land of Connal.

" CUTHULLIN!" calm the chief replied, " the fpear of Connal is keen. It delights to Thine in battle; to mix with the blood of thoufands. But the' my hand is bent on fight, my heart is for the peace of Erin . Behold, thou first in Cormac's war, the fable fleet of Swaran. His masts are many on our coast, like reeds in the lake of Lego. His ships are forests cloathed with mist, when the trees yield by turns to the fqually wind. Many are his chiefs in battle. Connal is for peace! Fingal would shun his arm the first of mortal men! Fingal, who scatters the mighty, as flormy winds the heath; when streams roar thro' ecchoing Cona: and night fettles with all her clouds on the hill!

"FLY, thou man of peace," faid Calmar +, " fly," faid the fon of Matha; "go, Connal, to thy filent hills, where the fpear never brightens in war! Purfue the dark-brown deer of Cromla: stop with thine arrows the bounding roes of Lena. But, blue-eyed fon of Semo, ^{*} Erin, a name of Ireland; from ear or iar West, and in an island. This name was not always confined to Ireland, for there is the highest probability that the Ierne of the ancients was Britain to the North of the Forth. For Ierne is faid to be to the North of Britain, which could not be meant of Ireland. STRABO, 1. 2. & 4. CASAUB. 1. 1.

Cuthullin, ruler of the field, featter thou the fons of Lochlin*; roar thro' the ranks of their pride. Let no veffel of the kingdom of Snow bound on the dark-rolling waves of Inis tore †. Rife, ye dark winds of Erin rife! roar whirlwinds of Lara of hinds! Amid the tempest let me die, torn, in a cloud, by angry ghosts of men; amid the tempest let Calmar die, if ever chace was sport to him, so much as the battle of shields!"

"CALMAR!" Connal flow replied, "I never fled, young fon of Matha! I was fwift with my friends in fight; but fmall is the fame of Connal! The battle was won in my prefence; the valiant overcame! But, fon of Semo, hear my voice, regard the ancient throne of Cormac. Give wealth and half the land for peace, till Fingal thall arrive on our coaft. Or, if war be thy choice, I lift the fword and fpear. My joy shall be in the midst of thousands; my foul thall lighten through the gloom of the fight!"

"To me," Cuthullin replies, "pleafant is the noise of arms! pleafant as the thunder of heaven, before the shower of spring! But gather all the shining tribes that I may view the sons of war! Let them pass along the heath, bright as the fun-shine before a storm; when the west wind collects the clouds and Morven ecchoes over all her oaks! But where are my friends in battle? The supporters of my arm in danger? Where art thou, white-bosom'd Câthbar? Where is that cloud in war, Duchômar*? Hast thou left me, O Fergus†! in the day of the storm? Fergus, first in our joy at the feast! son of Rossa! arm of death! comest thou like a roe from Malmor. Like a hart from thy echoing hills? Hail thou son of Rossa! what shades the foul of war?"

^{*} The Galic name of Scandinavia in general.

[†] The Orkney islands.

"Four stones;" replied the chief, "rise on the grave of Cathba. These hands have laid in earth Duchômar, that cloud in war! Cathba, son of Torman! thou wert a sun-beam in Erin. And thou, O valiant Duchômar, a mist of the marshy Lano; when it moves on the plains of autumn, bearing the death of thousands along. Morna! fairest of maids! calm is thy sleep in ^{*} Dubhchomar, a black well made man.

[†] Fear-guth, the man of the word; or a commander of an army.

[†] This passage alludes to the manner of burial among the ancient Scots. They opened a grave fix or eight feet deep: the bottom was lined with fine clay: and on this they laid the body of the deceased, and, if a warrior, his sword, and the heads of twelve arrows by his side. Above they laid another stratum of clay, in which they placed the horn of a deer, the symbol of hunting. The whole was covered with a sine mold, and four stones placed on end to mark the extent of the grave. These are the sour stones alluded to here.

the cave of the rock! Thou hast fallen in dark-ness, like a star, that shoots across the defart; when the traveller is alone, and mourns the transfent beam!"

"SAY," faid Semo's blue-eyed fon, " fay how fell the chiefs of Erin? Fell they by the fons of Lochlin, firiving in the battle of heroes? Or what confines the firong in arms to the dark and narrow house?"

"CATHBA," replied the hero, "fell by the fword of Duchômar at the oak of the noify freams. Duchômar came to Tura's cave; he fpoke to the lovely Morna. Morna*, fairest among women, lovely daughter of strong-armed Cormac! Why in the circle of stones? in the cave of the rock alone? The stream murmurs along. The old tree groans in the wind. The lake is troubled before thee; dark are the clouds of the sky! But thou art snow on the heath; thy hair is the mist of Cromla; when it curls on the hill; when it shines to the beam of the west! Thy breasts are two smooth rocks seen from Branno of streams. Thy arms, like two white pillars, in the halls of the great Fingal.

"FROM whence," the fair-haired maid replied, "from whence, Duchômar, most gloomy of men? Dark are thy brows and terrible! Red are thy rolling eyes! Does Swaran appear on the fea? What of the foe, Duchômar?" " From the hill I return, O Morna, from the hill of the dark-brown hinds. Three have I flain with my bended yew. Three with my long bounding dogs of the chace. Lovely daughter of Cormac, I love thee as my foul! I have flain one flately deer for thee. High was his branchy head; and fleet his feet of wind." " Duchômar!" calm the maid replied, "I love thee not, thou gloomy man! hard is thy heart of rock; dark is thy terrible brow. But Câthba, young fon of Torman*, thou art the love of Morna. Thou art a fun-beam, in the day of the gloomy fform. Sawest thou the fon of Torman, lovely on the hill of his hinds? Here the daughter of Cormac waits the coming of Câthba!"

^{*} Muirne, or Morna, a woman beloved by all.

"Long shall Morna wait," Duchomar faid, "long shall Morna wait for Câthba! Behold this sword unsheathed! Here wanders the blood of Câthba. Long shall Morna wait. He fell by the stream of Branno! On Croma I will raise his tomb, daughter of blue-shielded Cormac! Turn on Duchômar thine eyes; his arm is strong as a storm." "Is the fon of Torman fallen?" faid the wildly bursting voice of the maid. "Is he fallen on his ecchoing hills, the youth with the breast of snow? The first in the chace of hinds? The soe of the strangers of ocean? Thou art dark * to me, Duchômar, cruel is thine arm to Morna! Give me that sword, my soe! I love the wandering blood of Câthba!"

^{*} Torman, thunder. This is the true origin of the Jupiter Taramis of the ancients,

HE gave the fword to her tears. She pierced his manly breast! He fell, like the bank of a mountain-stream, and stretching forth his hand, he spoke. " Daughter of blue-shielded Cormac! Thou hast slain me in youth! The sword is cold in my breast: Morna, I feel it cold. Give me to Moina + the maid. Duchômar was the dream of her night! She will raife my tomb; the hunter shall raise my fame. But draw the sword from my breast. Morna, the steel is cold!" She came, in all her tears, the came; the drew the fword from his breaft. He pierced her white side! He fpread her fair locks on the ground! Her bursting blood founds from her fide: her white arm is stained with red. Rolling in death she lay. The cave re-ecchoed to her fighs."

"PEACE," faid Cuthullin, "to the fouls of the heroes! their deeds were great in fight. Let them ride around ‡ me on clouds. Let them

^{*} She alludes to his name, the dark man.

⁺ Moina, foft in temper and person.

It was the opinion then, as indeed it is to this day, of some of the Highlanders, that the souls of the deceased hovered round their living friends; and sometimes appeared to them when they were about to enter on any great undertaking.

shew their features of war. My foul shall then be firm in danger; mine arm like the thunder of heaven! But be thou on a moon-beam, O Morna! near the window of my rest; when my thoughts are of peace; when the din of arms is past. Gather the strength of the tribes! Move to the wars of Erin! Attend the car of my battles! Rejoice in the noise of my course! Place three spears by my side: follow the bounding of my steeds! That my soul may be strong in my friends, when battle darkens round the beams of my steel!

As rushes a stream of foam from the dark shady deep of Cromla; when the thunder is travelling above, and dark-brown night fits on half the hill. Through the breaches of the tempest look forth the dim faces of ghosts. So fierce, so vast, fo terrible rushed on the fons of Erin. The chief like a whale of ocean, whom all his billows purfue, poured valour forth, as a stream, rolling his might along the shore. The fons of Lochlin heard the noise, as the found of a winterftorm. Swaran ftruck his boffy thield: he ealled the fon of Arno, "What murmur rolls along the hill, like the gathered flies of the eve? The fons of Erin descend, or rustling winds roar in the distant wood! Such is the noise of Gormal, before the white tops of my waves arise. O fon of Arno, afcend the hill; view the dark face of the heath!"

HE went. He trembling, fwift returned. His eyes rolled wildly round. His heart beat high against his fide. His words were faultering, broken, flow. " Arife, fon of ocean, arife, chief of the dark-brown thields! I fee the dark, the mountain-stream of battle! The deepmoving strength of the fons of Erin! The car, the car of war comes on, like the flame of death! the rapid car of Cuthullin, the noble fon of Semo! It bends behind like a wave near a rock; like the fun-flreaked mift of the heath. Its fides are emboffed with stones, and sparkle like the fea round the boat of night. Of polished yew is its beam: its feat of the smoothest bone. The sides are replenished with spears; the bottom is the foot-stool of heroes! Before the right side of the car is feen the fnorting horse! The high-maned, broad-breafted, proud, wide-leaping, firong steed of the hill. Loud and refounding is his hoof; the spreading of his mane above is like a ftream of smoke on a ridge of rocks. Bright are the fides of the fleed! his name is Sulin-Sifadda!"

"Before the left fide of the car is feen the fnorting horse! The thin-maned, high-headed, strong-hoosed, fleet, bounding son of the hill: his name is Dustronnal, among the stormy sons of the fword! A thousand thougs bind the car on high. Hard polished bits thine in a wreath of foam. Thin thougs bright-studded with gems, bend on the stately necks of the steeds. The steeds that like wreaths of mist fly over the streamy vales! The wildness of deer is in their course, the strength of eagles descending on the prey. Their noise is like the blast of winter, on the sides of the snow-headed Gormal.

Within the car is feen the chief; the firongarmed fon of the fword. The hero's name is Cuthullin, fon of Semo king of shells. His red cheek is like my polished yew. The look of his blue-rolling eye is wide, beneath the dark arch of his brow. His hair flies from his head like a flame, as bending forward he wields the spear. Fly, king of ocean, sly! He comes, like a storm, along the streamy vale!

"When did I fly," replied the king? When fled Swaran from the battle of spears? When did I shrink from danger, chief of the little foul? I met the storm of Gormal, when the foam of my waves beat high. I met the storm of the clouds; shall Swaran fly from a hero? Were Fingal himself before me, my foul should not darken with sear. Arise to battle, my thousands! pour round me like the ecchoing main. Gather round the bright steel of your king; king; firong as the rocks of my land; that meet the florm, with joy, and firetch their dark pines to the wind!"

LIKE autumn's dark florms, pouring from two ecchoing hills, toward each other approached the heroes. Like two deep ftreams from high rocks meeting, mixing, roaring on the plain; loud, rough and dark in battle meet Lochlin and Innis-fail. Chief mixes his ftrokes with chief, and man with man; steel, clanging, founds on fleel. Helmets are cleft on high. Blood burits and fmokes around. Strings murmur on the polithed yews. Darts ruth along the fky. Spears fall like the circles of light, which gild the face of night. As the noise of the troubled ocean, when roll the waves on high. As the last peal of thunder in heaven, fuch is the din of war! Though Cormac's hundred bards were there, to give the fight to fong; feeble was the voice of a hundred bards to fend the deaths to future times! For many were the deaths of heroes; wide poured the blood of the brave!

MOURN, ye fons of fong, mourn the death of the noble Sithâllin *. Let the fighs of Fiona rife, on the lone plains of her lovely Ardan.

^{*} Sithallin fignifies a bandsome man; Fiona, a fair maid; and Ardan, pride.

They fell, like two hinds of the defart, by the hands of the mighty Swaran; when, in the midst of thousands, he roared; like the shrill fpirit of a storm. He sits dim, on the clouds of the north, and enjoys the death of the mariner. Nor flept thy hand by thy fide, chief of the ifle of mist †! many were the deaths of thine arm. Cuthullin, thou fon of Semo! His fword was like the beam of heaven when it pierces the fons of the vale; when the people are blafted and fall, and all the hills are burning around. Dufronnal I fnorted over the bodies of heroes. Sifadda || bathed his hoof in blood. The battle lay behind them, as groves overturned on the defart of Cromla; when the blast has passed the heath, laden with the spirits of night!

WEEP on the rocks of roaring winds, O maid of Inistore *! Bend thy fair head over the waves, thou

⁺ The Isle of Sky; not improperly called the isle of mist, as its high hills, which catch the clouds from the western ocean, occasion almost continual rains.

I One of Cuthullin's horses. Dubhstron gheal.

^{||} Sith-fadda, i. e. a long ftride.

^{*} The maid of Inistore was the daughter of Gorlo king of Inistore or Orkney islands. Trenar was brother to the king of Iniscon, supposed to be one of the islands of Shetland. The Orkneys and Shetland were at that time subject to the king of Lochlin. We find that the dogs of Trenar are fensible at home of the death of their master, the very instant he is killed. It was the opinion of the times, that the fouls of thou lovelier than the ghost of the hills; when it moves, in a fun-beam, at noon, over the silence of Morven! He is fallen! thy youth is low! pale beneath the sword of Cuthullin! No more thall valour raise thy love to match the blood of kings. Trenar, graceful Trenar died, O maid of Inistore. His grey dogs are howling at home; they see his passing ghost. His bow is in the hall unstrung. No found is in the hill of his hinds!

As roll a thousand waves to the rocks, so Swaran's host came on. As meets a rock a thousand waves, so Erin met Swaran of spears. Death raises all his voices around, and mixes with the sounds of shields. Each hero is a pillar of darkness; the sword a beam of sire in his hand. The field ecchoes from wing to wing, as a hundred hammers that rise, by turns, on the red son of the surnace. Who are these on Lena's heath, these so gloomy and dark? Who are these like two clouds and their swords like lightning above them? The little hills are troubled around; the rocks tremble with all their moss. Who is it but Ocean's fon and the heroes went immediately after death to the hills of their country, and the scenes they frequented the most happy time of their life. It was thought too that dogs and horses saw the ghosts of the deccased.

car-borne chief of Erin? Many are the anxious eyes of their friends, as they fee them dim on the heath. But night conceals the chiefs in clouds, and ends the dreadful fight!

It was on Cromla's thaggy fide that Dorglas had placed the deer †; the early fortune of the chace, before the heroes left the hill. A hundred youths collect the heath; ten warriors wake the fire; three hundred chufe the polith'd flones. The feast is smoaking wide! Cuthullin, chief of Erin's war, resumed his mighty soul. He stood upon his beamy spear, and spoke to the son of songs; to Carril of other times, the grey-haired fon of Kinsena ‡. "Is this feast spread for me alone and the king of Lochlin on Erin's shore; far from the deer of his hills, and sounding halls of his feasts? Rife, Carril of other times; earry my words to Swaran. Tell him from the roaring of waters, that Cuthullin gives his feast.

[†] The ancient manner of preparing feafts after hunting, is handed down by tradition. A pit lined with fmooth stones was made; and near it stood a heap of smooth stat stones of the flint kind. The stones as well as the pit were properly heated with heath. Then they laid some venion in the bottom, and a stratum of the stones above it; and thus they did alternately till the pit was full. The whole was covered over with heath to confine the steam. Whether this is probable I cannot say; but some pits are shewn, which the vulgar say, were used in that manner.

I Cean-feana, i. e. the head of the people.

Here let him liften to the found of my groves, amidst the clouds of night. For cold and bleak the blustering winds ruth over the foam of his feas. Here let him praise the trembling harp, and hear the fongs of heroes!"

OLD Carril went, with foftest voice. He called the king of dark-brown shields! " Rife from the skins of thy chace, rife, Swaran king of groves! Cuthullin gives the joy of shells. Partake the feast of Erin's blue-eyed chief!" He answered like the fullen found of Cromla before a fform. "Though all thy daughters, Inis-fail! should firetch their arms of fnow; should raife the heavings of their breasts, and foftly roll their eyes of love; yet, fixed as Lochlin's thousand rocks, here Swaran should remain; till morn, with the young beams of the east, thall light me to the death of Cuthullin. Pleafant to my ear is Lochlin's wind! It rushes over my feas! It fpeaks aloft in all my shrouds, and brings my green forests to my mind: The green forests of Gormal, which often ecchoed to my winds, when my fpear was red in the chace of the boar. Let dark Cuthullin yield to me the ancient throne of Cormac: or Erin's torrents thall they from their hills the red foam of the blood of his pride!"

"Sap is the found of Swaran's voice," faid Carril of other times! "Sad to himfelf alone," faid the blue-eyed fon of Semo. "But, Carril, raife the voice on high; tell the deeds of other times. Send thou the night away in fong; and give the joy of grief. For many heroes and maids of love, have moved on Inis-fail: And lovely are the fongs of woe that are heard in Albion's rocks; when the noife of the chace is past, and the streams of Cona answer to the voice of Offian *."

"In other days †," Carril replies, "came the fons of Ocean to Erin! A thousand vessels bounded on waves to Ullin's lovely plains. The fons of Inis-fail arose, to meet the race of dark-brown shields. Cairbar, first of men, was there, and Grudar, stately youth! Long had they strove for the spotted bull, that lowed on

* The Cona here mentioned is that small river that runs through Glenco in Argyleshire. One of the hills which environ that romantic valley is still called Scornasena, or the hill of Fingal's people.

† This epifode is introduced with propriety. Calmar and Connal, two of the Irish heroes, had disputed warmly before the battle about engaging the enemy. Carril endeavours to reconcile them with the story of Cairbar and Grudar; who, tho' enemies before, fought fide by fide in the war. The poet obtained his aim, for we find Calmar and Connal perfectly reconciled in the third book.

Golbun's † ecchoing heath. Each claimed him as his own. Death was often at the point of their fleel! Side by fide the heroes fought; the flrangers of Ocean fled. Whose name was fairer on the hill, than the name of Cairbar and Grudar! But ah! why ever lowed the bull, on Golbun's ecchoing heath. They saw him leaping like snow. The wrath of the chiefs returned!"

"On Lubar's ‡ graffy banks they fought; Grudar fell in his blood. Fierce Cairbar came to the vale, where Braffolis ||, faireft of his fifters, all alone, raifed the fong of grief. She fung of the actions of Grudar, the youth of her fecret foul! She mourned him in the field of blood; but fill the hoped for his return. Her white bosom is feen from her robe, as the moon from the clouds of night, when its edge heaves white on the view, from the darkness, which covers its orb. Her voice was softer than the harp to raise the fong of grief. Her soul was fixed on Grudar. The fecret look of her eye was his. "When shalt thou come in thine arms, thou mighty in the war?"

"TAKE, Brassolis," Cairbar came and faid, take, Brassolis, this shield of blood. Fix it on high within my hall, the armour of my foe! Her foft heart beat against her side. Distracted, pale, she slew. She found her youth in all his blood; she died on Cromla's heath. Here rests their dust, Cuthullin; these lonely yews sprung from their tombs, and shade them from the storm. Fair was Brassolis on the plain! Stately was Grudar on the hill! The bard shall preserve their names, and send them down to suture times!"

[†] Golb-bhean, as well as Cromleach, fignifies a crooked bill.

¹ Lubar, a river in Ulster. Lalbar, loud, noisy. Brassolis signifies a woman with a white breast.

" PLEASANT is thy voice, O Carril," faid the blue-eyed chief of Erin. "Pleafant are the words of other times! They are like the calm shower of spring; when the fun looks on the field, and the light cloud flies over the hills. O ftrike the harp in praise of my love, the lonely fun-beam of Dunscaith. Strike the harp in the praise of Bragéla; she that I left in the Isle of Mist, the spouse of Semo's son! Dost thou raise thy fair face from the rock to find the fails of Cuthullin? The fea is rolling distant far; its white foam deceives thee for my fails. Retire, for it is night, my love; the dark winds fign in thy hair. Retire to the halls of my feafts; think of the times that are past. I will not return till the storm of war is ceased. O Connal, speak of war and arms, and fend her from my mind. Lovely with her flowing hair is the whitebosomed daughter of Sorglan."

CONNAL, flow to fpeak, replied, "Guard against the race of Ocean. Send thy troop of night abroad, and watch the strength of Swaran. Cuthullin! I am for peace till the race of Selma come; till Fingal come, the first of men, and beam, like the fun, on our fields!" The hero struck the shield of alarms, the warriors of the night moved on! The rest lay in the heath of the deer, and slept beneath the dusky wind. The ghosts of the lately dead were near, and swam on the gloomy clouds: And far distant, in the dark silence of Lena, the teeble voices of death were faintly heard.

^{*} It was long the opinion of the ancient Scots, that a ghost was heard shrieking near the place where a death was to happen soon after. The accounts given, to this day, among the vulgar, of this extraordinary matter, are very poetical. The ghost comes mounted on a meteor, and surrounds twice or thrice the place destined for the person to die; and then goes along the road through which the surral is to pass, shrieking at intervals; at last, the meteor and ghost disappear above the burial place.

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

BOOK II,

ARGUMENT to Book II.

The ghost of Crugal, one of the Irish heroes who was killed in battle, appearing to Connal, foretels the defeat of Cuthullin in the next battle; and earnestly advises him to make peace with Swaran. Connal communicates the vision: but Cuthullin is inflexible; from a principle of honour he would not be the first to sue for peace, and he resolved to continue the war. Morning comes; Swaran proposes dishonourable terms to Cuthullin, which are rejected. The battle begins, and is obstinately fought for fome time, until, upon the flight of Grumal, the whole Irish army gave way. Cuthullin and Connal cover their retreat: Carril leads them to a neighbouring hill, whither they are foon followed by Cuthullin himfelf, who descries the fleet of Fingal making towards the coast; but, night coming on, he lost fight of it again. Cuthullin, dejected after his defeat, attributes his ill success to the death of Eerda his friend, whom he had killed fome time before. Carril, to fhew that ill fuccess did not always attend those who innocently killed their friends, introduces the episode of Comal and Galvina.

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

In SIX BOOKS.

BOOK II.

mountain stream, beneath the aged tree. A stone, with its moss, supported his head. Shrill thro'the heath of Lena, he heard the voice of night. At distance from the heroes he lay; the son of the sword seared no soe! The hero beheld, in his rest, a dark-red stream of sire rushing down from the hill. Crugal sat upon the beam, a chief who sell in sight. He sell by the hand of Swaran, striving in the battle of heroes. His sace is like the beam of the setting moon.

R 3

^{*} The scene here described will appear natural to those who have been in the highlands of Scotland. The poet removes him to a distance from the army, to add more horror to the description of Crugal's ghost by the loneliness of the place.

moon. His robes are of the clouds of the hill. His eyes are two decaying flames! Dark is the wound of his breaft! "Crugal," faid the mighty Connal, fon of Dedgal famed on the hill of hinds! "Why fo pale and fad, thou breaker of the shields? Thou hast never been pale for fear! What disturbs the departed Crugal?" Dim, and in tears, he stood and stretched his pale hand over the hero. Faintly he raised his feeble voice, like the gale of the reedy Lego!

" My fpirit, Connal, is on my hills: my corfe on the fands of Erin. Thou shalt never talk with Crugal, nor find his lone steps in the heath. I am light as the blaft of Cromla. I move like the shadow of mist! Connal, fon of Colgar, I fee a cloud of death: it hovers dark over the plains of Lena. The fons of green Erin must fall. Remove from the field of ghosts." Like the darkened moon he retired, in the midst of the whistling blast. "Stay," faid the mighty Connal, " flay my dark-red friend. Lay by that beam of heaven, fon of the windy Cromla! What cave is thy lonely house? What green-headed hill the place of thy repose? Shall we not hear thee in the storm? In the noise of the mountain-fream? When the feeble fons of the wind come forth, and fcarcely feen, pass over the defart?"

The foft-voiced Connal rose, in the midst of his sounding arms. He struck his sheld above Cuthullin. The son of battle waked. "Why," said the ruler of the car, "comes Connal through my night? My spear might turn against the sound; and Cuthullin mourn the death of his friend. Speak, Connal; son of Colgar, speak, thy counsel is the sun of heaven!" "Son of Semo!" replied the chief, "the ghost of Crugal came from his cave. The stars dim-twinkled through his form. His voice was like the sound of a distant stream. He is a messenger of death! He speaks of the dark and narrow house! Sue for peace, O chief of Erin! or sly over the heath of Lena."

"HE fpoke to Connal," replied the hero, "though flars dim-twinkled through his form! Son of Colgar, it was the wind that murmured across thy ear. Or if it was the form * of Crugal, why didst thou not force him to my sight? Hast thou enquired where is his cave? The house of that fon of wind? My sword might find that voice, and force his knowlege from Crugal.

The poet teaches us the opinions that prevailed in his time concerning the state of separate souls. From Connal's expression, "That the stars dim-twinkled through the form of Crugal," and Cuthullin's reply, we may gather that they both thought the soul was material, something like the widuhou of the ancient Greeks.

But finall is his knowlege, Connal, he was here to-day. He could not have gone beyond our hills! who could tell him there of our fall?" "Ghofts fly on clouds and ride on winds," faid Connal's voice of wifdom. "They reft together in their caves, and talk of mortal men."

"THEN let them talk of mortal men; of every man but Erin's chief. Let me be forgot in their cave. I will not fly from Swaran! If fall I must, my tomb shall rife, amidst the same of future times. The hunter thall thed a tear on my stone; forrow thall dwell round the high-bosomed Bragéla. I fear not death, to fly I fear! Fingal has feen me victorious! Thou dim phantom of the hill, shew thyself to me! come on thy beam of heaven, shew me my death in thine hand; yet I will not fly, thou feeble fon of the wind! Go, fon of Colgar, firike the shield. It hangs between the spears. Let my warriors rife to the found, in the midst of the battles of Erin. Though Fingal delays his coming with the race of his stormy isles; we thall fight, O Colgar's fon, and die in the battle of beroes!"

The found fpreads wide. The heroes rife, like the breaking of a blue-rolling wave. They flood on the heath, like oaks with all their branches branches round them; when they eccho to the fiream of froft, and their withered leaves are ruflling to the wind! High Cromla's head of clouds is grey. Morning trembles on the half-enlightened ocean. The blue mift fwims flowly by, and hides the fons of Inis-fail!

"RISE ye," faid the king of the dark-brown shields, "ye that came from Lochlin's waves. The fons of Erin have fled from our arms; purfue them over the plains of Lena! Morla, go to Cormac's hall. Bid them yield to Swaran; before his people fink to the tomb; and filence spread over his ifie." They rose rustling like a flock of sea-fowl, when the waves expel them from the shore. Their found was like a thousand streams that meet in Cona's vale, when after a stormy night, they turn their dark eddies, beneath the pale light of the morn.

As the dark thades of autumn fly over the hills of grafs: fo gloomy, dark, fucceffive came the chiefs of Lochlin's ecchoing woods. Tall as the flag of Morven moved flately before them, the king. His flaining thield is on his fide, like a flame on the heath at night. When the world is filent and dark, and the traveller fees fome ghoft fporting in the beam! Dimly gleam the hills around, and thew indiffinely their oaks! A blaft from the troubled ocean removed the fettled mist. The sons of Erin appear, like a ridge of rocks on the coast; when mariners, on shores unknown, are trembling at veering winds!

" Go, Morla, go," faid the king of Lochlin, " offer peace to these! Offer the terms we give to kings, when nations bow down to our fwords. When the valiant are dead in war; when virgins weep on the field!" Tall Morla came, the fon of Swarth, and flately flrode the youth along! He fpoke to Erin's blue-eyed chief, among the leffer heroes. " Take Swaran's peace," the warrior fpoke, " the peace he gives to kings, when nations bow to his fword. Leave Erin's streamy plains to us, and give thy spouse and dog. Thy spouse high-bosom'd, heaving fair! Thy dog that overtakes the wind! Give these to prove the weakness of thine arm; live then beneath our power!"

"Tell Swaran, tell that heart of pride, Cuthullin never yields. I give him the dark rolling fea; I give his people graves in Erin. But never thall a ftranger have the pleafing fun-beam of my love. No deer thall fly on Lochlin's hills, before fwift-footed Luäth." "Vain ruler of the car," faid Morla, "wilt thou then fight the king? The king whose ships of many groves could carry off thine isle? So little is thy green-hilled Erin to him who rules the flormy waves!" "In words I yield to many, Morla. My fword shall yield to none. Erin shall own the sway of Cormac, while Connal and Cuthullin live! O Connal, first of mighty men, thou hear'st the words of Morla. Shall thy thoughts then be of peace, thou breaker of the shields? Spirit of fallen Crugal! why didst thou threaten us with death? The narrow house shall receive me, in the midst of the light of renown. Exalt, ye sons of Erin, exalt the spear and bend the bow: rush on the soe in darkness, as the spirits of stormy nights!"

THEN difinal, roaring, fierce, and deep the gloom of battle poured along; as mift that is rolled on a valley, when florms invade the filent fun-shine of heaven! Cuthullin moves before in arms, like an angry ghost before a cloud; when meteors inclose him with fire; when the dark winds are in his hand. Carril, far on the heath, bids the horn of battle found. He raises the voice of fong, and pours his foul into the minds of the brave.

"WHERE," faid the mouth of the fong, "where is the fallen Crugal? He lies forgot on earth; the hall of thells * is filent. Sad is the

The ancient Scots, as well as the present Highlanders, drunk in shells; hence it is that we so often meet, in the old poerry, with the chief of shells, and the balls of shells.

fpouse of Crugal! She is a stranger * in the hall of her grief. But who is the, that, like a sunbeam, slies before the ranks of the foe? It is Degrena †, lovely fair, the spouse of fallen Crugal. Her hair is on the wind behind. Her eye is red; her voice is shrill. Pale, empty is thy Crugal now! His form is in the cave of the hill. He comes to the ear of rest; he raises his feeble voice; like the humming of the mountain-bee; like the collected slies of the eve! But Degrena salls like a cloud of the morn; the sword of Lochlin is in her side. Cairbar, she is fallen, the rising thought of thy youth. She is fallen, O Cairbar, the thought of thy youthful hours!"

FIERCE Cairbar heard the mournful found. He rushed along like ocean's whale. He saw the death of his daughter: He roared in the midst of thousands. His spear met a son of Lochlin; battle spreads from wing to wing! As a hundred winds in Lochlin's groves; as fire in the pines of a hundred hills; so loud, so ruinous, so vast the ranks of men are hewn down. Cuthullin cut off heroes like thistle; Swaran wasted Erin. Curach fell by his hand, Cairbar of the bosty shield! Morglan lies in lasting rest! Ca-olt trembles as he dies! His white breast is stained with blood; his yellow hair stretched in the dust of his native land! He often had spread the feast where he fell. He often there had raised the voice of the harp: when his dogs leapt around for joy; and the youths of the chace prepared the bow!

^{*} Crugal had married Degrena but a little time before the battle, confequently she may with propriety be called a stranger in the hall of her grief.

⁺ Deo-grena fignifies a sun beam.

STILL Swaran advanced, as a stream, that bursts from the defart. The little hills are rolled in its course; the rocks are half-sunk by its side! But Cuthullin stood before him, like a hill, that catches the clouds of heaven. The winds contend on its head of pines; the hail rattles on its rocks. But, firm in its strength, it stands, and shades the silent vale of Cona! So Cuthullin shaded the sons of Erin, and stood in the midst of thousands. Blood rises like the sount of a rock, from panting heroes around. But Erin salls on either wing, like snow in the day of the sun.

"O sons of Erin," faid Grumal, "Lochlin conquers on the field. Why strive we as reeds against the wind? Fly to the hill of dark-brown hinds." He sted like the stag of Morven; his spear is a trembling beam of light behind him. Few sted with Grumal, chief of the little soul; they fell in the battle of heroes, on Lena's eccho-ing heath. High on his car, of many gems, the chief of Erin flood. He flew a mighty fon of Lochlin, and fpoke, in hafte, to Connal. "O Connal, first of mortal men, thou hast taught this arm of death! Though Erin's fons have fled, thall we not fight the foe? Carril, fon of other times, carry my friends to that bushy hill. Here, Connal, let us stand, like rocks, and save our flying friends."

CONNAL mounts the car of gems. They firetch their thields, like the darkened moon, the daughter of the flarry fkies, when she moves, a dun circle, thro' heaven; and dreadful change is expected by men. Sithfadda panted up the hill, and Sronnal haughty steed. Like waves behind a whale behind them rushed the foe. Now on the rising side of Cromla stood Erin's few sad sons; like a grove through which the slame had rushed, hurried on by the winds of the stormy night; distant, withered, dark they stand, with not a leaf to shake in the gale.

CUTHULLIN flood beside an oak. He rolled his red eye in silence, and heard the wind in his bushy hair; the scout of ocean came, Moran the son of Fithil. "The ships," he cried, "the ships of the lonely isles. Fingal comes the first of men, the breaker of the shields! The waves soam before his black prows! His masts with fails are like groves in clouds!" "Blow," faid Cuthullin, "blow ye winds that rush along my isse of miss. Come to the death of thousands, O king of resounding Selma! Thy fails, my friend, are to me the clouds of the morning; thy ships the light of heaven; and thou thyself a pillar of fire that beams on the world by night. O Connal, first of men, how pleasing, in grief, are our friends! But the night is gathering around! Where now are the ships of Fingal? Here let us pass the hours of darkness; here wish for the moon of heaven."

The winds come down on the woods. The torrents rush from the rocks. Rain gathers round the head of Cromla. The red stars tremble between the flying clouds. Sad, by the side of a stream whose found is ecchoed by a tree, sad by the side of a stream the chief of Erin sits. Connal son of Colgar is there, and Carril of other times. "Unhappy is the hand of Cuthullin," said the son of Semo, "unhappy is the hand of Cuthullin, since he slew his friend! Ferda, son of Damman, I loved thee as myfels!"

"How, Cuthullin, fon of Semo! how fell the breaker of the shields? Well I remember," faid Connal, "the son of the noble Damman. Tall and sair he was like the rain-bow of heaven." Ferda from Albion came, the chief of a hundred hills. In Muri's * hall he learned the fword, and won the friendship of Cuthullin. We moved to the chace together; one was our bed in the heath!

Deugala was the fpouse of Cairbar, chief of the plains of Ullin. She was covered with the light of beauty, but her heart was the house of pride. She loved that fun-beam of youth, the fon of noble Damman. Cairbar, said the white-armed Deugala, give me half of the herd. No more I will remain in your halls. Divide the herd, dark Cairbar! "Let Cuthullin," said Cairbar, "divide my herd on the hill. His breast is the seat of justice. Depart, thou light of beauty!" I went and divided the herd. One snow-white bull remained. I gave that bull to Cairbar. The wrath of Deugala rose!

"Son of Damman," begun the fair, "Cuthullin hath pained my foul. I must hear of his death, or Lubar's stream shall roll over me. My pale ghost shall wander near thee, and mourn the wound of my pride. Pour out the blood of Cuthullin or pierce this heaving breast." "Deugala," faid the fair-haired youth, "how shall I slay the son of Semo? He is the friend of my fecret thoughts. Shall I then lift the fword?" She wept three days before the chief, on the fourth he faid he would fight. "I will fight my friend, Deugala! but may I fall by his fword! Could I wander on the hill alone? Could I behold the grave of Cuthullin?" We fought on the plain of Muri. Our fwords avoid a wound. They flide on the helmets of fleel; or found on the flippery shields. Deugala was near with a fmile, and faid to the fon of Damman: "Thine arm is feeble, fun-beam of youth! Thy years are not strong for fleel. Yield to the fon of Semo. He is a rock on Malmor."

^{*} A place in Ulster,

"THE tear is in the eye of youth. He faultering faid to me: "Cuthullin, raife thy boffy shield. Defend thee from the hand of thy friend. My foul is laden with grief: for I must slay the chief of men!" I sighed as the wind in the cleft of a rock. I listed high the edge of my steel. The fun-beam of battle fell: the first of Cuthullin's friends! Unhappy is the hand of Cuthullin since the hero fell!

"MOURNFUL is thy tale, fon of the car," faid Carril of other times. "It fends my foul back to the ages of old, to the days of other years. Often have I heard of Comal, who flew the friend he loved; yet victory attended his fteel: the battle was confumed in his prefence!

COMAL was a fon of Albion; the chief of an hundred hills! His deer drunk of a thousand streams. A thousand rocks replied to the voice of his dogs. His face was the mildness of youth. His hand the death of heroes. One was his love, and fair was the! the daughter of mighty Conloch. She appeared like a fun-beam among women. Her hair was the wing of the raven. Her dogs were taught to the chace. Her bowfiring founded on the winds. Her foul was fixed on Comal. Often met their eyes of love. Their course in the chace was one. Happy were their words in fecret. But Grumal loved the maid. the dark chief of the gloomy Ardyen. He watched her lone steps in the heath; the foe of unhappy Comal!

ONE day, tired of the chace, when the mist had concealed their friends, Comal and the daughter of Conloch met, in the cave of Ronan. It was the wonted haunt of Comal. Its fides were hung with his arms. A hundred shields of thongs were there; a hundred helms of founding feel. "Reft here," he faid, "my love Galbina: thou light of the cave of Ronan! A deer appears on Mora's brow. I go; but I will foon return." "I fear," the faid, "dark Grumal my foe: he haunts the cave of Ronan!

I will rest among the arms; but soon return, my love!"

HE went to the deer of Mora. The daughter of Conloch would try his love. She cloathed her fair fides with his armour: The strode from the cave of Ronan! He thought it was his foe. His heart beat high. His colour changed, and darkness dimmed his eyes. He drew the bow. The arrow flew, Galbina fell in blood! He run with wildness in his steps: he called the daughter of Conloch. No answer in the lonely rock. Where art thou, O my love? He faw, at length, her heaving heart, beating around the arrow he threw. "O Conloch's daughter, is it thou? He funk upon her breaft! The hunters found the hapless pair; he afterwards walked the hill. But many and filent were his steps round the dark dwelling of his love. The fleet of the ocean came. He fought, the strangers fled. He fearched for death along the field. But who could flay the mighty Comhal! He threw away his dark-brown shield. An arrow found his manly breaft. He fleeps with his loved Galbina at the noise of the founding furge! Their green tombs are feen by the mariner, when he bounds on the waves of the north.

F I N G A L,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

BOOK III.

ARGUMENT to Book III.

Cuthullin, pleafed with the flory of Carril, infifts with that bard for more of his fongs. He relates the actions of Fingal in Lochlin, and death of Agandecca the beautiful fifter of Swaran. He had scarce finished when Calmar the son of Matha, who had advised the first battle, came wounded from the field, and told them of Swaran's design to surprise the remains of the Irish army. He himself proposes to withfland fingly the whole force of the enemy, in a narrow pass, till the Irish should make good their retreat. Cuthullin, touched with the gallant propofal of Calmar, refolves to accompany him, and orders Carril to carry off the few that remained of the Irish. Morning comes, Calmar dies of his wounds; and, the ships of the Caledonians appearing, Swaran gives over the pursuit of the Irish, and returns to oppose Fingal's landing. Cuthullin ashamed, after his defeat, to appear before Fingal, retires to the cave of Tura. Fingal engages the enemy, puts them to flight; but the coming on of night makes the victory not decifive. The king, who had observed the gallant behaviour of his grandfon Ofcar, gives him advices concerning his conduct in peace and war. He recommends to him to place the example of his fathers before his eyes, as the best model for his conduct; which introduces the episode concerning Fainafillis, the daughter of the king of Craca, whom Fingal had taken under his protection, in his youth. Fillan and Ofcar are dispatched to observe the motions of the enemy by night; Gaul the son of Morni desires the command of the army, in the next battle; which Fingal promifes to give him. Some general reflections of the poet close the third day.

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

In SIX BOOKS.

BOOK III*.

"PLEASANT are the words of the fong," faid Cuthullin! "lovely the tales of other times! They are, like the calm dew of the morning on the hill of roes; when the fun is faint on its fide, and the lake is fettled and blue in the vale. O Carril, raife again thy voice; let me hear the fong of Selma: which was fung in my halls of joy, when Fingal king of thields was there, and glowed at the deeds of his fathers."

"FINGAL! thou dweller of battle," faid Carril, "early were thy deeds in arms. Lochlin

S 4

^{*} The second night, since the opening of the poem, continues; and Cuthullin, Connal, and Carril still sit in the place described in the preceding book. The story of Agandecca is introduced here with propriety, as great use is made of it in the course of the poem, and as it, in some measure, brings about the catastrophe.

was confumed in thy wrath, when thy youth strove with the beauty of maids. They smiled at the fair-blooming face of the hero; but death was in his hands. He was strong as the waters of Lora. His followers were the roar of a thou-fand streams. They took the king of Lochlin in war; they restored him to his ships. His big heart swelled with pride; the death of the youth was dark in his foul. For none ever, but Fingal, had overcome the strength of the mighty Starno*. He sat in the hall of his shells in Lochlin's woody land. He called the grey-haired Sniván, that often sung round the circle † of Loda: when the stone of power heard his voice, and battle turned in the field of the valiant!

"Go; grey-haired Snivan," Starno faid, go to Ardven's fea-furrounded rocks. Tell to the king of Selma; he the faireft among his thousands, tell him I give him my daughter, the loveliest maid, that ever heaved a breast of snow.
Her arms are white as the foam of my waves.
Her foul is generous and mild. Let him come with his bravest heroes, to the daughter of the ^{*} Starno was the father of Swaran as well as Agandecca. His fierce and cruel character is well marked in other poems concerning the times.

[†] This passage most certainly alludes to the religion of Lochlin, and the stone of power here mentioned is the image of one of the deities of Scandinavia.

fecret hall!" Snivan came to Selma's hall: Fair-haired Fingal attended his fleps. His kindled foul flew to the maid, as he bounded on the waves of the north. "Welcome," faid the dark-brown Starno, "welcome, king of rocky Morven: Welcome his heroes of might; fons of the diftant ifle! Three days within my halls shall ye feast; three days pursue my boars; that your fame may reach the maid who dwells in the fecret hall."

STARNO defigned their death. He gave the feast of shells. Fingal, who doubted the foe, kept on his arms of steel. The sons of death were asraid: They fled from the eyes of the king. The voice of sprightly mirth arose. The trembling harps of joy were strung. Bards sung the battle of heroes: They sung the heaving breast of love. Ullin, Fingal's bard, was there: the sweet voice of resounding Cona. He praised the daughter of Lochlin; and Morven's † high-descended chief. The daughter of Lochlin overheard. She left the hall of her secret sigh! She came in all her beauty, like the moon from the cloud of the east. Loveliness was around her as light. Her steps were the music of songs. She faw the youth and loved him. He was the stolen figh of her foul. Her blue eye rolled on him in fecret: the bless the chief of resounding Morven.

[†] All the North-west coast of Scotland probably went of old under the name of Morven, which fignifies a ridge of very high hills.

The third day with all its beams, shone bright on the wood of boars. Forth moved the dark-browed Starno; and Fingal, king of shields. Half the day they spent in the chace; the spear of Selma was red in blood. It was then the daughter of Starno, with blue eyes rolling in tears; it was then she came with her voice of love and spoke to the king of Morven. "Fingal, high descended chief, trust not Starno's heart of pride. Within that wood he has placed his chiefs. Beware of the wood of death. But, remember, son of the isle, remember Agandecca: fave me from the wrath of my father, king of the windy Morven!"

The youth, with unconcern, went on; his heroes by his fide. The fons of death fell by his hand; and Gormal ecchoed around! Before the halls of Starno the fons of the chace convened. The king's dark brows were like clouds, His eyes like meteors of night. "Bring hither," he faid, "Agandecca to her lovely king of Morven! His hand is flained with the blood of my people; her words have not been in vain!" She came with the red eye of tears. She came with loofely flowing locks. Her white breaft heaved with broken fighs, like the foam of the fireamy Lubar. Starno pierced her fide with fleel. She fell, like a wreath of fnow, which flides from the rocks of Ronan; when the woods are ftill, and eccho deepens in the vale! Then Fingal eyed his valiant chiefs, his valiant chiefs took arms. The gloom of battle roared; Lochlin fled or died. Pale, in his bounding thip he closed the maid of the fostest foul. Her tomb afcends on Ardven; the fea roars round her narrow dwelling.

"BLESSED be her foul," faid Cuthullin; "bleffed be the mouth of the fong! Strong was the youth of Fingal; firong is his arm of age. Lochlin shall fall again before the king of ecchoing Morven. Shew thy face from a cloud, O moon; light his white fails on the wave: And if any strong spirit * of heaven sits on that low-hung cloud; turn his dark ships from the rock, thou rider of the storm!

^{*} This is the only paffage in the poem that has the appearance of religion. But Cuthullin's apostrophe to this spirit is accompanied with a doubt, so that it is not easy to determine whether the hero meant a superior being, or the ghosts of deceased warriors, who were supposed in those times to rule the storms, and to transport themselves in a gust of wind from one country to another.

Such were the words of Cuthullin at the found of the mountain-stream; when Calmar ascended the hill, the wounded fon of Matha. From the field he came in his blood. He leaned on his bending spear. Feeble is the arm of battle! but firong the foul of the hero! " Welcome! O fon of Matha," faid Connal, " welcome art thou to thy friends! Why burits that broken figh, from the breaft of him who never feared before? And never, Connal, will he fear, chief of the pointed feel! My foul brightens in danger: in the noise of arms. I am of the race of battle. My fathers never feared."

" CORMAR was the first of my race. He sported through the storms of waves. His black skiff bounded on ocean; he travelled on the wings of the wind. A fpirit once embroiled the night. Seas fwell and rocks refound. Winds drive along the clouds. The lightning flies on wings of fire. He feared and came to land: then blushed that he feared at all. He ruthed again among the waves to find the fon of the wind. Three youths guide the bounding bark: he flood with fword unsheathed. When the low-hung vapour passed, he took it by the curling head. He fearched its dark womb with his fteel. The fon of the wind forfook the air. The moon and ftars returned! Such was the boldness of my race. Calmar is like his fathers. Danger flies from the lifted fword. They best fucceed who dare!"

But now, ye fons of green Erin, retire from Lena's bloody heath. Collect the fad remnant of our friends, and join the fword of Fingal. I heard the found of Lochlin's advancing arms! Calmar will remain and fight. My voice shall be such, my friends, as if thousands were behind me. But, fon of Semo, remember me. Remember Calmar's lifeless corfe. When Fingal shall have wasted the field, place me by some stone of remembrance, that future times may hear my fame; that the mother of Calmar may rejoice in my renown."

"No: fon of Matha," faid Cuthullin, "I will never leave thee here. My joy is in unequal fight: my foul increases in danger. Connal, and Carril of other times, carry off the fad sons of Erin. When the battle is over, fearch for us in this narrow way. For near this oak we shall fall, in the stream of the battle of thousands!" O Fithil's fon, with slying speed rush over the heath of Lena. Tell to Fingal that Erin is fallen. Bid the king of Morven come. O let him come, like the fun in a florm, to lighten, to reftore the isle!

Morning is grey on Cromla. The fons of the fea afcend. Calmar flood forth to meet them in the pride of his kindling foul. But pale was the face of the chief. He leaned on his father's fpear. That fpear which he brought from Lara, when the foul of his mother was fad; the foul of the lonely Alcletha, waining in the forrow of years. But flowly now the hero falls, like a tree on the plain. Dark Cuthullin flands alone like a rock in a fandy vale. The fea comes with its waves, and roars on its hardened fides. Its head is covered with foam; the hills are ecchoing around.

Now from the grey mist of the ocean, the white-sailed ships of Fingal appear. High is the grove of their mass, as they nod, by turns, on the rolling wave. Swaran saw them from the hill. He returned from the fons of Erin. As ebbs the resounding sea, through the hundred isses of Inistore; so loud, so vast, so immense returned the sons of Lochlin against the king. But bending, weeping, sad, and slow, and dragging his long spear behind, Cuthullin sunk in Cromla's wood, and mourned his sallen friends. He seared the sace of Fingal, who was wont to greet him from the fields of renown!

" How many lie there of my heroes! the chiefs of Erin's race! they that were chearful in the hall, when the found of the shells arose! No more shall I find their steps in the heath. No more shall I hear their voice in the chace. Pale, filent, low on bloody beds, are they who were my friends! O spirits of the lately dead, meet Cuthullin on his heath. Speak to him on the wind, when the ruftling tree of Tura's cave refounds. There, far remote, I shall lie unknown. No bard thall hear of me. No grey stone shall rife to my renown. Mourn me with the dead, O Bragela! departed is my fame." Such were the words of Cuthullin, when he funk in the woods of Cromla!

FINGAL, tall in his ship, stretched his bright lance before him. Terrible was the gleam of the fleel: it was like the green meteor of death, fetting in the heath of Malmor, when the traveller is alone, and the broad moon is darkened in heaven.

"THE battle is past," faid the king. "I behold the blood of my friends. Sad is the heath of Lena! mournful the oaks of Cromla. The hunters have fallen in their strength: the fon of Semo is no more. Ryno and Fillan, my fons, found the horn of Fingal. Afcend that hill on the shore; call the children of the foe.

Call them from the grave of Lamdarg, the chief of other times. Be your voice like that of your father, when he enters the battles of his strength. I wait for the mighty stranger. I wait on Lena's thore for Swaran. Let him come with all his race; strong in battle are the friends of the dead !"

FAIR Ryno as lightning gleamed along: Dark Fillan rushed like the shade of autumn. On Lena's heath their voice is heard. The fons of ocean heard the horn of Fingal. As the roaring eddy of ocean returning from the kingdom of fnows; fo ftrong, fo dark, fo fudden came down the fons of Lochlin. The king in their front appears, in the difmal pride of his arms! Wrath burns on his dark-brown face: his eyes roll in the fire of his valour. Fingal beheld the fon of Starno: he remembered Agandecca. For Swaran with the tears of youth had mourned his white-bosomed fister. He fent Ullin of fongs to bid him to the feaft of shells: For pleafant on Fingal's foul returned the memory of the first of his loves!

ULLIN came with aged steps, and spoke to Starno's fon. "O thou that dwelleft afar, furrounded, like a rock, with thy waves! come to the feast of the king, and pass the day in rest. To-morrow let us fight, O Swaran, and break the ecchoing fhields." "To-day," faid Starno's wrathful fon, "we break the ecchoing fhields: to-morrow my feaft shall be spread; but Fingal shall lie on earth." "To-morrow let his feaft be spread," faid Fingal with a smile. "To-day, O my sons, we shall break the ecchoing shields. Ossian, stand thou near my arm. Gaul, lift thy terrible sword. Fergus, bend thy crooked yew. Throw, Fillan, thy lance through heaven. Lift your shields, like the darkened moon. Be your spears the meteors of death. Follow me in the path of my same, Equal my deeds in battle."

As a hundred winds on Morven: as the streams of a hundred hills; as clouds fly fuccessive over heaven; as the dark ocean assails the shore of the defart: fo roaring, so vast, so terrible the armies mixed on Lena's ecchoing heath. The groan of the people spread over the hills: it was like the thunder of night, when the cloud bursts on Cona; and a thousand ghosts shriek at once on the hollow wind. Fingal rushed on in his strength, terrible as the spirit of Trenmor; when, in a whirlwind, he comes to Morven, to fee the children of his pride. The oaks refound on their mountains, and the rocks fall down before him. Dimly feen, as VOL. I. lightens T lightens the night, he ftrides largely from hill to hill. Bloody was the hand of my father, when he whirled the gleam of his fword. He remembers the battles of his youth. The field is wasted in his course!

RYNO went on like a pillar of fire. Dark is the brow of Gaul. Fergus rushed forward with feet of wind. Fillan like the mist of the hill. Offian, like a rock, came down. I exulted in the strength of the king. Many were the deaths of my arm! dismal the gleam of my sword! My locks were not then so grey; nor trembled my hands with age. My eyes were not closed in darkness; my feet failed not in the race!

Who can relate the deaths of the people? Who the deeds of mighty heroes? when Fingal, burning in his wrath, confumed the fons of Lochlin? groans fwelled on groans from hill to hill, till night had covered all. Pale, flaring like a herd of deer, the fons of Lochlin convenc on Lena. We fat and heard the fprightly harp, at Lubar's gentle ftream. Fingal himself was next to the foe. He liftened to the tales of his bards. His godlike race were in the fong, the chiefs of other times. Attentive, leaning on his shield, the king of Morven fat. The wind whistled through his locks; his thoughts are of the days of other years. Near him on his bending fpear, my young, my valiant Ofcar flood. He admired the king of Morven: his deeds were fwelling in his foul!

"Son of my fon," begun the king, "O Ofcar, pride of youth! I faw the shining of thy sword. I gloried in my race. Pursue the same of our fathers; be thou what they have been, when Trenmor lived, the first of men, and Trathal the father of heroes! They fought the battle in their youth. They are the song of bards. O Ofcar! bend the strong in arm: but spare the feeble hand. Be thou a stream of many tides against the soes of thy people; but like the gale, that moves the grass, to those who ask thine aid. So Trenmor lived; such Trathal was; and such has Fingal been. My arm was the support of the injured; the weak rested behind the lightning of my steel."

"OSCAR! I was young like thee, when lovely Fainafollis came: that fun-beam! that mild light of love! the daughter of Craca's * king! I then returned from Cona's heath, and few were in my train. A white-failed boat appeared far off; we faw it like a mist, that rode on ocean's wind. It soon approached. We saw the fair. Her white breast heaved with sights. The wind was in her loose dark hair: her rosy cheek had tears. "Daughter of beauty," calm I said, "what sigh is in thy breast? Can I, young as I am, defend thee, daughter of the sea? My sword is not unmatched in war, but dauntless is my heart."

[•] What the Craca here mentioned was, is not, at this distance of time, easy to determine. The most probable opinion is, that it was one of the Shetland isles. There is a story concerning a daughter of the king of Craca in the fixth book.

"To thee I fly," with fighs fhe faid, "O prince of mighty men! To thee I fly, chief of the generous shells, supporter of the feeble hand! The king of Craca's ecchoing isle owned me the sunbeam of his race. Cromala's hills have heard the sighs of love for unhappy Fainasóllis! Sora's chief beheld me fair; he loved the daughter of Craca. His sword is a beam of light upon the warrior's side. But dark is his brow; and tempests are in his soul. I shun him, on the roaring sea; but Sora's chief pursues."

"REST thou," I faid, "behind my fhield; rest in peace, thou beam of light! The gloomy chief of Sora will fly, if Fingal's arm is like his foul. In some lone cave I might conceal thee, daughter of the sea! But Fingal never slies. Where the danger threatens, I rejoice in the storm of spears." I saw the tears upon her cheek.

cheek. I pitied Craca's fair. Now, like a dreadful wave afar, appeared the ship of stormy Borbar. His masts high-bended over the sea behind their sheets of snow. White roll the waters on either side. The strength of ocean founds. "Come thou," I said, "from the roar of ocean, thou rider of the storm! Partake the feast within my hall. It is the house of strangers."

THE maid stood trembling by my side. He strew the bow. She fell. "Unerring is thy hand," I said, "but seeble was the foe!" We fought, nor weak the strife of death! He sunk beneath my sword. We laid them in two tombs of stone; the haples lovers of youth! Such have I been in my youth, O Oscar; be thou like the age of Fingal. Never search thou for battle; nor shun it when it comes.

"FILLAN and Ofcar of the dark-brown hair! ye, that are fwift in the race! fly over the heath in my presence. View the sons of Lochlin. Far off I hear the noise of their fear, like distant sounds in woods. Go: that they may not fly from my sword, along the waves of the north. For many chiefs of Erin's race, lie here on the dark bed of death. The children of war are low; the sons of ecchoing Cromla."

The heroes flew like two dark clouds: two dark clouds that are the chariots of ghosts; when air's dark children come forth to frighten haples men. It was then that Gaul*, the son of Morni, stood like a rock in night. His spear is glittering to the stars; his voice like many streams.

"Son of battle," cried the chief, "O Fingal, king of shells! let the bards of many songs footh Erin's friends to rest. Fingal, sheath thou thy sword of death; and let thy people sight. We wither away without our same; our king is the only breaker of shields! When morning rises on our hills, behold, at a distance, our deeds. Let Lochlin feel the sword of Morni's son; that bards may sing of me. Such was the custom heretofore of Fingal's noble race. Such was thine own, thou king of swords, in battles of the spear."

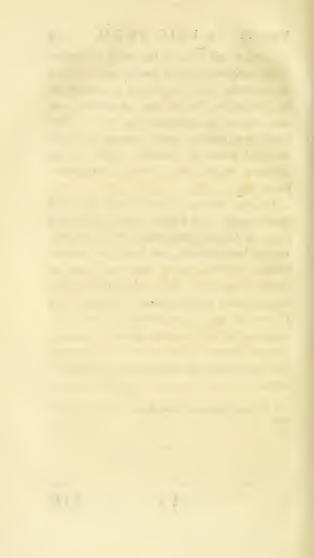

"O son of Morni," Fingal replied, "I glory in thy fame. Fight; but my spear shall ^{*} Gaul, the fon of Morni, was chief of a tribe that difputed long, the pre-eminence, with Fingal himself. They were reduced at last to obedience, and Gaul, from an enemy, turned Fingal's best friend and greatest hero. His character is something like that of Ajax in the Iliad; a hero of more strength than conduct in battle. He was very sond of military fame, and here he demands the next battle to himself. The poet, by an artisce, removes Fingal, that his return may be the more magnificent.

be near, to aid thee in the midst of danger. Raise, raise the voice, ye sons of song, and lull me into rest. Here will Fingal lie, amidst the wind of night. And if thou, Agandecca, art near, among the children of thy land; if thou sittest on a blast of wind, among the high-throwded masts of Lochlin; come to my dreams †, my fair one. Shew thy bright face to my foul."

MANY a voice and many a harp, in tuneful founds arofe. Of Fingal's noble deeds they fung; of Fingal's noble race: And fometimes, on the lovely found, was heard the name of Offian. I often fought, and often won, in battles of the fpear. But blind, and tearful, and forlorn I walk with little men! O Fingal, with thy race of war I now behold thee not! The wild roes feed on the green tomb of the mighty king of Morven! Bleft be thy foul, thou king of fwords, thou most renowned on the hills of Cona!

⁺ The poet prepares us for the dream of Fingal in the next book.

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

BOOK IV.

ARGUMENT to BOOK IV.

The action of the poem being suspended by night, Oslian takes that opportunity to relate his own actions at the lake of Lego, and his courtship of Evirallin, who was the mother of Ofcar, and had died fome time before the expedition of Fingal into Ireland. Her ghost appears to him, and tells him that Ofcar, who had been fent, the beginning of the night, to observe the enemy, was engaged with an advanced party, and almost overpowered. Offian relieves his fon; and an alarm is given to Fingal of the approach of Swaran. king rifes, calls his army together, and, as he had promifed the preceding night, devolves the command on Gaul the fon of Morni, while he himself, after charging his sons to behave gallantly and defend his people, retires to a hill, from whence he could have a view of the battle. The battle joins; the poet relates Ofcar's great actions. But when Ofcar, in conjunction with his father, conquered in one wing, Gaul, who was attacked by Swaran in person, was on the point of retreating in the other. Fingal fends Ullin his bard to encourage him with a war fong, but notwithstanding Swaran prevails; and Gaul and his army are obliged to give way. Fingal, descending from the hill, rallies them again: Swaran defifts from the pursuit, posfesses himself of a rising ground, restores the ranks, and waits the approach of Fingal. The king, having encouraged his men, gives the necessary orders, and renews the battle. Cuthullin, who, with his friend Connal, and Carril his bard, had retired to the cave of Tura, hearing the noise, came to the brow of the hill, which overlooked the field of battle, where he faw Fingal engaged with the enemy. He, being hindered by Connal from joining Fingal, who was himfelf upon the point of obtaining a complete victory, fends Carril to congratulate that hero on his fuccess.

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

In SIX BOOKS.

BOOK IV *.

HO comes with her fongs from the hill, like the bow of the showery Lena? It is the maid of the voice of love! The white-armed daughter of Toscar! Often hast thou heard my fong; often given the tear of beauty. Dost thou come to the wars of thy people? to hear ^{*} Fingal being asleep, and the action suspended by night, the poet introduces the story of his courtship of Evirallin the daughter of Branno. The episode is necessary to clear up several passages that follow in the poem; at the same time that it naturally brings on the action of the book, which may be supposed to begin about the middle of the third night from the opening of the poem. This book, as many of Ossian's other compositions, is addressed to the beautiful Malvina the daughter of Toscar. She appears to have been in love with Oscar, and to have affected the company of the father after the death of the son.

the actions of Ofcar? When shall I cease to mourn, by the streams of resounding Cona? My years have passed away in battle. My age is darkened with grief!

" DAUGHTER of the hand of fnow! I was not fo mournful and blind. I was not fo dark and forlorn, when Everallin loved me! Everallin with the dark-brown hair, the white-bosomed daughter of Branno! A thousand heroes fought the maid, she refused her love to a thousand. The fons of the fword were despised: for graceful in her eyes was Offian! I went, in fuit of the maid, to Lego's fable furge. Twelve of my people were there, the fons of streamy Morven! We came to Branno, friend of strangers! Branno of the founding mail! "From whence," he faid, " are the arms of fleel? Not easy to win is the maid, who has denied the blue-eyed fons of Erin! But bleft be thou, O fon of Fingal! Happy is the maid that waits thee! 'Tho' twelve daughters of beauty were mine, thine were the choice, thou fon of fame!"

He opened the hall of the maid, the darkhaired Everallin. Joy kindled in our manly breafts. We bleft the maid of Branno. "Above us on the hill appeared the people of flately Cormac. Eight were the heroes of the chief. The heath flamed wide with their arms. There Colla: Colla; there Durra of wounds, there mighty Toscar, and Tago, there Frestal the victorious stood; Dairo of the happy deeds: Dala the battle's bulwark in the narrow way! The sword stamed in the hand of Cormac. Graceful was the look of the hero! Eight were the heroes of Ossan. Ullin stormy son of war. Mullo of the generous deeds. The noble, the graceful Scelacha. Oglan, and Cerdal the wrathful. Dumariccan's brows of death! And why should Ogar be the last; so wide renowned on the hills of Ardven?"

"OGAR met Dala the strong, face to face, on the field of heroes. The battle of the chiefs was, like wind, on ocean's foamy waves. The dagger is remembered by Ogar; the weapon which he loved. Nine times he drowned it in Dela's side. The stormy battle turned. Three times I broke on Cormac's shield: three times he broke his spear. But, unhappy youth of love! I cut his head away. Five times I shook it by the lock. The friends of Cormac sled. Whoever would have told me, lovely maid, when then I strove in battle; that blind, for saken, and forlorn I now should pass the night; firm ought his mail to have been; unmatched his arm in war!"

On * Lena's gloomy heath, the voice of music died away. The unconstant blast blew hard. The high oak shook its leaves around. Of Everallin were my thoughts, when in all the light of beauty she came. Her blue eyes rolling in tears. She stood on a cloud before my sight, and spoke with feeble voice! "Rise, Ossian, rise and save my son; save Oscar prince of men. Near the red oak of Luba's stream, he sights with Lochlin's sons." She sunk into her cloud again. I covered me with steel. My spear supported my steps; my rattling armour rung. I hummed, as I was wont in danger, the songs of heroes of old. Like distant thunder Lochlin heard. They sted; my son pursued."

"I called him like a distant stream. Oscar return over Lena. "No further pursue the foe," I said, "though Ossian is behind thee." He came; and pleasant to my ear was Oscar's sounding steel. "Why didst thou stop my hand," he said, "till death had covered all? For dark and dreadful by the stream they met thy fon and Fillan! They watched the terrors of the night. Our fwords have conquered fome. But as the winds of night pour the ocean, over the white fands of Mora, fo dark advance the fons of Lochlin, over Lena's ruftling heath! The ghosts of night shrick afar: I have feen the meteors of death. Let me awake the king of Morven, he that smiles in danger! He that is like the sun of heaven, rising in a storm!"

^{*} The poet returns to his subject. If one could fix the time of the year in which the action of the poem happened, from the scene described here, I should be tempted to place it in autumn. The trees shed their leaves, and the winds are variable, both which circumstances agree with that season of the year.

FINGAL had flarted from a dream, and leaned on Trenmor's shield; the dark-brown shield of his fathers; which they had lifted of old in war. The hero had feen, in his rest, the mournful form of Agandecca. She came from the way of the ocean. She flowly, lonely, moved over Lena. Her face was pale like the mist of Cromla. Dark were the tears of her cheek. She often raifed her dim hand from her robe. her robe which was of the clouds of the defart: the raifed her dim hand over Fingal, and turned away her filent eyes! "Why weeps the daughter of Starno?" faid Fingal, with a figh; "why is thy face fo pale, fair wanderer of the clouds?" She departed on the wind of Lena. She left him in the midst of the night. She mourned the fons of her people, that were to fall by the hand of Fingal.

THE hero started from rest. Still he beheld her in his soul. The sound of Oscar's steps approached. The king saw the grey shield on his side: For the saint beam of the morning came over the waters of Ullin. "What do the soes in their fear?" said the rising king of Morven; "or sly they through ocean's foam, or wait they the battle of steel? But why should Fingal ask? I hear their voice on the early wind! Fly over Lena's heath: O Oscar, awake our friends!"

THE king flood by the flone of Lubar. Thrice he reared his terrible voice. The deer flarted from the fountains of Cromla. The rocks flook on all their hills. Like the noise of a hundred mountain-streams, that Burst, and roar, and foam! like the clouds, that gather to a tempest on the blue face of the sky! so met the sons of the defart, round the terrible voice of Fingal. Pleasant was the voice of the king of Morven to the warriors of his land. Often had he led them to battle; often returned with the spoils of the foe!

"Come to battle," faid the king, "ye children of ecchoing Selma! Come to the death of thousands. Comhal's fon will see the fight. My sword shall wave on the hill the defence of my people in war. But never may you need it, warriors:

warriors: while the fon of Morni fights, the chief of mighty men! He shall lead my battle; that his fame may rife in fong! O ye ghosts of heroes dead! ye riders of the storm of Cromla! receive my falling people with joy, and bear them to your hills. And may the blaft of Lena carry them over my feas, that they may come to my filent dreams, and delight my foul in rest! Fillan and Ofcar, of the dark-brown hair! fair Ryno, with the pointed feel! advance with valour to the fight. Behold the fon of Morni! Let your fwords be like his in strife; behold the deeds of his hands. Protect the friends of your father. Remember the chiefs of old. My children, I will fee you yet, though here ye should fall in Erin. Soon shall our cold, pale ghosts meet in a cloud on Cona's eddying winds."

Now like a dark and flormy cloud, edged round with the red lightning of heaven; flying westward from the morning's beam, the king of Selma removed. Terrible is the light of his armour; two spears are in his hand. His grey hair falls on the wind. He often looks back on the war. Three bards attend the son of same, to bear his words to the chiefs. High on Cromla's side he fat, waving the lightning of his sword, and as he waved we moved.

VOL. I.

Joy rifes in Oscar's face. His cheek is red. His eye sheds tears. The sword is a beam of fire in his hand. He came, and finiling, spoke to Offian. "O ruler of the fight of fleel! my father, hear thy fon! Retire with Morven's mighty chief. Give me the fame of Offian. . If here I fall: O chief, remember that breaft of fnow, the lonely fun-beam of my love, the white-handed daughter of Tofcar! For, with red cheek from the rock, bending over the stream, her fost hair slies about her bosom, as the pours the figh for Ofcar. Tell her I am on my hills, a lightly-bounding fon of the wind; tell her, that in a cloud, I may meet the lovely maid of Toscar." Raife, Oscar, rather raife my tomb. I will not yield the war to thee. The first and bloodiest in the strife, my arm shall teach thee how to fight. But, remember, my fon, to place this fword, this bow, the horn of my deer, within that dark and narrow house, whose mark is one grey stone! Ofcar, I have no love to leave to the care of my fon. Evirallin is no more, the lovely daughter of Branno!

SUCH were our words, when Gaul's loud voice came growing on the wind. He waved on high the fword of his father. We rushed to death and wounds. As waves, white-bubbling over the deep, come fwelling, roaring on; as rocks of ooze meet roaring waves: fo foes attacked and fought. Man met with man, and fteel with fteel. Shields found, and warriors fall. As a hundred hammers on the red fon of the furnace, fo rose, fo rung their swords!

GAUL rushed on, like a whirlwind in Ardven. The destruction of heroes is on his sword. Swaran was like the fire of the desart in the ecchoing heath of Gormal! How can I give to the fong the death of many spears? My sword rose high, and slamed in the strife of blood. Ofcar, terrible wert thou, my best, my greatest son! I rejoiced in my secret soul, when his sword slamed over the slain. They sled amain through Lena's heath. We pursued and slew. As stones that bound from rock to rock; as axes in ecchoing woods; as thunder rolls from hill to hill, in dismal broken peals; so blow succeeded to blow, and death to death, from the hand of Oscar and mine.

BUT Swaran closed round Morni's son, as the strength of the tide of Inistore. The king half-rose from his hill at the fight. He half-assumed the spear. "Go, Ullin, go, my aged bard," begun the king of Morven. "Remind the mighty Gaul of war. Remind him of his fathers. Support the yielding fight with song; for fong enlivens war." Tall Ullin went, with flep of age, and spoke to the king of swords. "Son * of the chief of generous steeds! high-bounding king of spears. Strong arm in every perilous toil. Hard heart that never yields. Chief of the pointed arms of death. Cut down the foe; let no white fail bound round dark Inistore. Be thine arm like thunder. Thine eyes like fire, thy heart of folid rock. Whirl round thy sword as a meteor at night; lift thy shield like the flame of death. Son of the chief of generous steeds, cut down the foe. Destroy!" The hero's heart beat high. But Swaran came with battle. He cleft the shield of Gaul in twain. The sons of Selma sled.

FINGAL at once arose in arms. Thrice he reared his dreadful voice. Cromla answered around. The sons of the desart stood still. They bent their blushing faces to earth, ashamed at the presence of the king. He came, like a cloud of rain in the day of the sun, when slow it rolls on the hill, and fields expect the shower. Silence attends its slow progress aloft; but the tempest is soon to arise. Swaran beheld the terrible king of Morven. He flopped in the midst of his course. Dark he leaned on his spear, rolling his red eyes around. Silent and tall he seemed as an oak on the banks of Lubar, which had its branches blasted of old by the lightning of heaven. It bends over the stream: the grey moss whistles in the wind: so stood the king. Then slowly he retired to the rising heath of Lena. His thousands pour around the hero. Darkness gathers on the hill!

^{*} The curom of encouraging men in battle with extempore rhymes, has been carried down almost to our own times. Several of these war songs are extant, but the most of them are only a group of epithets, without either beauty or harmony, utterly desittate of poetical ment.

FINGAL, like a beam from heaven, shone in the midst of his people. His heroes gather around him. He sends forth the voice of his power. "Raise my standards on high; spread them on Lena's wind, like the stames of an hundred hills! Let them sound on the winds of Erin, and remind us of the fight. Ye sons of the roaring streams, that pour from a thousand hills, be near the king of Morven! attend to the words of his power! Gaul strongest arm of death! O Oscar, of the future fights! Connal, son of the blue shields of Sora! Dermid of the dark-brown hair! Ossian king of many songs, be near your father's arm!" We reared the sunbeam * of battle; the standard of the king!

^{*} Fingal's standard was distinguished by the name of funbeam; probably on account of its bright colour, and its being studded with gold. To begin a battle is expressed, in old composition, by lifting of the sun-beam.

Each hero exulted with joy, as, waving, it flew on the wind. It was fludded with gold above, as the blue wide fhell of the nightly sky. Each hero had his flandard too; and each his gloomy men!

"Behold," faid the king of generous shells, "how Lochlin divides on Lena! They stand I ke broken clouds on a hill; or an half confumed grove of oaks; when we see the sky through its branches, and the meteor passing behind! Let every chief among the friends of Fingal take a dark troop of those that frown so high: Nor let a son of the ecchoing groves, bound on the waves of Inistore!

"MINE," faid Gaul, "be the feven chiefs, that came from Lano's lake." "Let Inistore's dark king," faid Ofcar, "come to the sword of Ossian's fon. To mine the king of Iniston," faid Connal, "heart of steel!" "Or Mudan's chief or I," faid brown-haired Dermid, "shall sleep on clay-cold earth." "My choice, though now so weak and dark, was Terman's battling king; I promised with my hand to win the hero's dark-brown shield." "Blest and victorious be my chiefs," faid Fingal of the mildest look. "Swaran, king of roaring waves, thou art the choice of Fingal!"

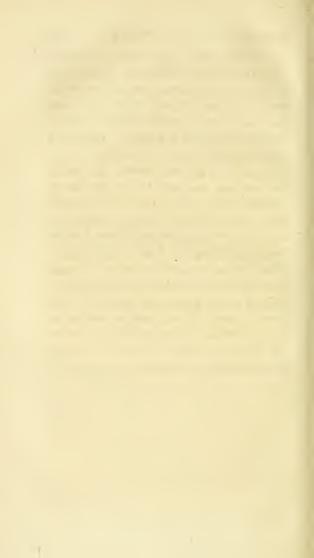

Now, like an hundred different winds, that pour through many vales; divided, dark the fons of Selma advanced, Cromla ecchoed around! How can I relate the deaths, when we closed in the strife of arms! O daughter of Tofcar! bloody were our hands! The gloomy ranks of Lochlin fell, like the banks of the roaring Cona! Our arms were victorious on Lena: each chief fulfilled his promife! Befide the murmur of Branno thou didft often fit, O maid! thy white bofom rofe frequent, like the down of the fwan when flow the fwims on the lake, and fidelong winds blow on her ruffled wing. Thou haft feen the fun retire, red and flow behind his cloud: night gathering round on the mountain, while the unfrequent blaft roared in the narrow vales. At length the rain beats hard: thunder rolls in peals. Lightning glances on the rocks! Spirits ride on beams of fire! The firength of the mountain-streams comes roaring down the hills. Such was the noise of battle, maid of the arms of fnow! Why, daughter of Toscar, why that tear? The maids of Lochlin have cause to weep! The people of their country fell. Bloody were the blue fwords of the race of my heroes! But I am fad, forlorn, and blind: no more the companion of heroes. Give, lovely maid, to me thy tears. I have feen the tombs of all my friends!

It was then, by Fingal's hand, a hero fell, to his grief! Grey-haired he rolled in the dust. He listed his faint eyes to the king: "And is it by me thou hast fallen," faid the fon of Comhal, "thou friend of Agandecca! I have seen thy tears for the maid of my love in the halls of the bloody Starno! Thou hast been the soe of the soes of my love, and hast thou fallen by my hand? Raise, Ullin, raise the grave of Mathon; and give his name to Agandecca's fong. Dear to my soul hast thou been, thou darkly-dwelling maid of Ardven!"

CUTHULLIN, from the cave of Cromla, heard the noise of the troubled war. He called to Connal chief of fwords; to Carril of other times. The grey-haired heroes heard his voice. They took their pointed spears. They came, and faw the tide of battle, like ocean's crowded waves: when the dark wind blows from the deep, and rolls the billows through the fandy vale! Cuthullin kindled at the fight. Darkness gathered on his brow. His hand is on the fword of his fathers: his red-rolling eyes on the foe. He thrice attempted to rush to battle. He thrice was stopt by Connal. "Chief of the ifle of mist," he said, "Fingal subdues the foe. Seek not a part of the fame of the king; himfelf is like the florm!"

" THEN, Carril, go," replied the chief, "go, greet the king of Morven. When Lochlin falls away like a ftream after rain: when the noise of the battle is past. Then be thy voice fweet in his car to praife the king of Selma! Give him the fword of Caithbat. Cuthullin is not worthy to lift the arms of his fathers! Come, O ye ghosts of the lonely Cromla! ye fouls of chiefs that are no more! be near the steps of Cuthullin; talk to him in the cave of his grief. Never more shall I be renowned, among the mighty in the land. I am a beam that has shone; a mist that has fled away: when the blast of the morning came, and brightened the shaggy fide of the hill! Connal! talk of arms no more: departed is my fame. My fighs shall be on Cromla's wind; till my footsteps cease to be feen. And thou, white-bosom'd Bragela, mourn over the fall of my fame: vanguished, I will never return to thee, thou fun-beam of my foul!"

F I N G A L,

AN ANCIENT

EPICPOEM.

BOOK V.

ARGUMENT to BOOK V.

Cuthullin and Connal ftill remain on the hill. Fingal and Swaran meet; the combat is described. Swaran is overcome, bound and delivered over as a prisoner to the care of Ossian and Gaul the son of Morni; Fingal, his younger sons, and Oscar, still pursue the enemy. The episode of Orla a chief of Lochlin, who was mortally wounded in the battle, is introduced. Fingal, touched with the death of Orla, orders the pursuit to be discontinued; and calling his sons together, he is informed that Ryno, the youngest of them, was slain. He laments his death, hears the story of Lamdarg and Gelchossa, and returns towards the place where he had left Swaran. Carril, who had been sent by Cuthullin to congratulate Fingal on his vistory, comes in the mean time to Ossian. The conversation of the two poets closes the action of the fourth day.

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

In SIX BOOKS.

BOOK V.

N Cromla's refounding fide, Connal spoke to the chief of the noble car. Why that gloom, son of Semo? Our friends are the mighty in fight. Renowned art thou, O warrior! many were the deaths of thy steel. Often has Bragela met, with blue-rolling eyes of joy: often has she met her hero, returning in the midst of the valiant; when his sword was red with slaughter; when his foes were filent in the fields of the tomb. Pleasant to her ears were thy bards, when thy deeds arose in song.

But behold the king of Morven! He moves, below, like a pillar of fire. His strength is like the stream of Lubar, or the wind of the ecchoing Cromla; when the branchy forests of night are torn from all their rocks! Happy are thy people, O Fingal! thine arm shall finish their wars. Thou art the first in their dangers: the wisest in the days of their peace. Thou speakest and thy thousands obey: armies tremble at the found of thy steel. Happy are thy people, O Fingal, king of resounding Selma! Who is that so dark and terrible coming in the thunder of his course? who but Starno's son to meet the king of Morven? Behold the battle of the chiefs! it is the storm of the ocean, when two spirits meet far distant, and contend for the rolling of waves. The hunter hears the noise on his hill. He sees the high billows advancing to Ardven's shore!

Such were the words of Connal, when the heroes met, in fight. There was the clang of arms! there every blow, like the hundred hammers of the furnace! Terrible is the battle of the kings; dreadful the look of their eyes. Their dark-brown shields are cleft in twain. Their steel slies, broken, from their helms. They fling their weapons down. Each ruthes to his hero's grasp: Their sinewy arms bend round each other: they turn from side to side, and strain and stretch their large spreading limbs below. But when the pride of their strength arose, they shook the hill with their heels.

Rocks tumble from their places on high; the green-headed buthes are overturned. At length the strength of Swaran fell: the king of the groves is bound. Thus have I feen on Cona; but Cona I behold no more! thus have I feen two dark hills, removed from their place, by the strength of the bursting stream. They turn from side to side in their fall; their tall oaks meet one another on high. Then they tumble together with all their rocks and trees. The streams are turned by their side. The red ruin is seen asar.

"Sons of distant Morven," faid Fingal: "guard the king of Lochlin. He is strong as his thousand waves. His hand is taught to war. His race is of the times of old. Gaul, thou first of my heroes; Ossian king of songs, attend. He is the friend of Agandecca; raise to joy his grief. But, Oscar, Fillan, and Ryno, ye children of the race! pursue Lochlin over Lena; that no vessel may hereaster bound, on the dark-rolling waves of Inistore!

THEY flew fudden across the heath. He flowly moved, like a cloud of thunder, when the fultry plain of fummer is filent and dark! His fword is before him as a fun-beam; terrible as the streaming meteor of night. He came toward a chief of Lochlin. He spoke to the fon of the wave. "Who is that fo dark and fad, at the rock of the roaring stream? He cannot bound over its course: How stately is the chief! His bossy shield is on his side; his spear, like the tree of the defart! Youth of the dark-red hair, art thou of the soes of Fingal?"

"I AM a fon of Lochlin," he cries, "firong is my arm in war. My fpouse is weeping at home. Orla shall never return!" "Or fights or yields the hero," faid Fingal of the noble deeds? "foes do not conquer in my presence: my friends are renowned in the hall. Son of the wave, follow me, partake the feast of my shells: pursue the deer of my desart: be thou the friend of Fingal." "No:" faid the hero, "I affist the feeble. My strength is with the weak in arms. My sword has been always unmatched, O warrior: let the king of Morven yield!" "I never yielded, Orla, Fingal never yielded to man. Draw thy sword and chuse thy foe. Many are my heroes!"

"Does then the king refuse the fight," said Orla of the dark-brown shield? "Fingal is a match for Orla: and he alone of all his race!" "But, king of Morven, if I shall fall; as one time the warrior must die; raise my tomb in the midst: let it be the greatest on Lena. Send, over the dark-blue wave, the sword of Orla to the fpouse of his love; that she may shew it to her son, with tears, to kindle his soul to war."
"Son of the mournful tale," faid Fingal,
"why dost thou awaken my tears? One day the warriors must die, and the children see their useless arms in the hall. But, Orla, thy tomb shall rise. Thy white-bosomed spouse shall weep over thy sword."

THEY fought on the heath of Lena. Feeble was the arm of Orla. The fword of Fingal defeended, and cleft his shield in twain. It fell and glittered on the ground, as the moon on the russled stream. "King of Morven," said the hero, "lift thy sword and pierce my breast. Wounded and faint from battle, my friends have left me here. The mournful tale shall come to my love, on the banks of the streamy Lota; when she is alone in the wood; and the russling blass in the leaves!"

"No;" faid the king of Morven, "I will never wound thee, Orla. On the banks of Lota let her fee thee, escaped from the hands of war. Let thy grey-haired father, who, perhaps, is blind with age. Let him hear the sound of thy voice, and brighten within his hall. With joy let the hero rise, and search for his son with his hands!" "But never will he find him, Fingal;" faid the youth of the streamy Lota. "On Vol. I.

Lena's heath I must die: foreign bards shall talk of me. My broad belt covers my wound of death. I give it to the wind!"

THE dark blood poured from his fide, he fell pale on the heath of Lena. Fingal bent over him as he dies, and called his younger chiefs. "Ofcar and Fillan, my fons, raife high the memory of Orla. Here let the dark-haired hero rest, far from the spouse of his love. Here let him rest in his narrow house far from the found of Lota. The feeble will find his bow at home; but will not be able to bend it. His faithful dogs howl on his hills; his boars, which he used to pursue, rejoice. Fallen is the arm of battle! the mighty among the valiant is low!" " Exalt the voice, and blow the horn, ye fons of the king of Morven! Let us go back to Swaran, to fend the night away on fong. Fillan, Ofcar, and Ryno, fly over the heath of Lena. Where, Ryno, art thou, young fon of fame? Thou art not wont to be the last to answer thy father's voice!"

"Ryno," faid Ullin first of bards, " is with the awful forms of his fathers. With Trathal king of shields; with Trenmor of mighty deeds. The youth is low, the youth is pale, he lies on Lena's heath!" "Fell the swiftest in the race," faid the king, "the first to bend the bow? Thou fcarce hast been known to me? why did young Ryno fall? But fleep thou foftly on Lena, Fingal shall foon behold thee. Soon shall my voice be heard no more, and my footsteps cease to be feen. The bards will tell of Fingal's name. The stones will talk of me. But, Ryno, thou art low indeed! thou hast not received thy fame. Ullin, strike the harp for Ryno; tell what the chief would have been. Farewel. thou first in every field! No more shall I direct thy dart! Thou that hast been so fair! I behold thee not. Farewel." The tear is on the cheek of the king, for terrible was his fon in war. His fon! that was like a beam of fire by night on a hill; when the forests fink down in its courfe, and the traveller trembles at the found! But the winds drive it beyond the fleep. It finks from fight, and darkness prevails.

"Whose fame is in that dark-green tomb," begun the king of generous shells? "four stones with their heads of moss stand there! They mark the narrow house of death. Near it let Ryno rest. A neighbour to the brave let him lie. Some chief of same is here, to sly, with my fon, on clouds. O Ullin, raise the songs of old. Awake their memory in their tomb. If in the field, they never sled, my son shall rest by their X 2 fide. He shall rest, far-distant from Morven, on Lena's resounding plains!"

" HERE," faid the bard of fong, " here rest the first of heroes. Silent is Lamderg * in this place: dumb is Ullin, king of fwords: And who, foft finiling from her cloud, shews me her face of love? Why, daughter, why fo pale art thou, first of the maids of Cromla? Dost thou fleep with the foes in battle, white-bosomed daughter of Tuathal? Thou hast been the love of thousands, but Lamderg was thy love. He came to Tura's mosfy towers, and, striking his dark buckler, fpoke:" "Where is Gelchoffa, my love, the daughter of the noble Tuathal? I left her in the hall of Tura, when I fought with great Ulfada. Return foon, O Lamderg, she faid, for here I fit in grief. Her white breaft rose with fighs. Her cheek was wet with tears. But I fee her not coming to meet me; to footh my foul after war. Silent is the hall of my joy! I hear not the voice of the bard. Bran + does ^{*} Lamh-dhearg fignifies bloody hand. Gelchossa, white legged. Tuathal, furly. Ulfadda, long beard. Ferchios, the conqueror of men.

[†] Bran is a common name of grey-hounds to this day. It is a custom in the north of Scotland, to give the names of the heroes mentioned in this poem, to their dogs; a proof that they are familiar to the ear, and their fame generally known.

not shake his chains at the gate, glad at the coming of Lamderg. Where is Gelchossa, my love, the mild daughter of the generous Tuathal?"

"Lamderg!" fays Ferchios fon of Aidon, "Gelchoffa moves stately on Cromla. She and the maids of the bow pursue the flying deer!" "Ferchios!" replied the chief of Cromla, "no noise meets the car of Lamderg! No sound is in the woods of Lena. No deer fly in my fight. No panting dog pursues. I see not Gelchoffa my love, fair as the full moon setting on the hills. Go, Ferchios, go to Allad † the greyhaired son of the rock. His dwelling is in the circle of stones. He may know of the bright Gelchoffa!"

"The fon of Aidon went. He fpoke to the ear of age. Allad! dweller of rocks: thou that trembleft alone! what faw thine eyes of age?" "I faw," answered Allad the old, "Ullin the fon of Cairbar. He came, in darkness, from Cromla. He hummed a furly fong, like a blast [†] Allad is a druid: he is called the fon of the rock, from his dwelling in a cave; and the circle of stones here mentioned is the pale of the druidical temple. He is here consulted as one who had a supernatural knowlege of things; from the druids, no doubt, came the ridiculous notion of the second sight, which prevailed in the highlands and isses.

in a leafless wood. He entered the hall of Tura, "Lamderg," he said, "most dreadful of men, sight or yield to Ullin." "Lamderg," replied Gelchossa, "the son of battle, is not here. He sights Ulsada mighty chief. He is not here, thou sirst of men! But Lamderg never yields. He will sight the son of Cairbar!" "Lovely art thou," said terrible Ullin, "daughter of the generous Tuathal. I carry thee to Cairbar's halls. The valiant shall have Gelchossa. Three days I remain on Cromla, to wait that son of battle, Lamderg. On the sourch Gelchossa is mine; if the mighty Lamderg slies."

"ALLAD!" faid the chief of Cromla, "peace to thy dreams in the cave. Ferchios, found the horn of Lamderg, that Ullin may hear in his halls. Lamderg, like a roaring ftorm, afcended the hill from Tura. He hummed a furly fong as he went, like the noife of a falling ftream. He darkly flood upon the hill, like a cloud varying its form to the wind. He rolled a ftone, the fign of war. Ullin heard in Cairbar's hall. The hero heard, with joy, his foe, He took his father's fpear. A fmile brightens his dark-brown cheek, as he places his fword by his fide. The dagger glittered in his hand. He whiftled as he went.

the

GELCHOSSA faw the filent chief, as a wreath of mift afcending the hill. She ftruck her white and heaving breaft; and filent, tearful, feared for Lamderg. "CAIRBAR, hoary chief of shells," faid the maid of the tender hand. " I must bend the bow on Cromla. I see the darkbrown hinds!" She hasted up the hill. In vain! the gloomy heroes fought. Why should I tell to Selma's king, how wrathful heroes fight? Fierce Ullin fell. Young Lamderg came, all pale to the daughter of generous Tuathal! "What blood, my love, the trembling faid? what blood runs down my warrior's fide?" " It is Ullin's blood, the chief replied, thou fairer than the fnow! Gelchossa, let me rest here a little while. The mighty Lamderg died!" " And fleepest thou so soon on earth, O chief of shady Tura? three days the mourned befide her love. The hunters found her cold. They raised this tomb above the three. Thy fon, O king of Morven, may rest here with heroes!"

And here my fon shall rest, said Fingal, The voice of their same is in mine ears. Fillan and Fergus! bring hither Orla; the pale youth of the stream of Lota! Not unequalled shall Ryna lie in earth, when Orla is by his side. Weep, ye daughters of Morven! ye maids of the streamy Lota weep! Like a tree they grew on the hills. They have fallen like the oak of the defart; when it lies across a stream, and withers in the wind. Ofcar! chief of every youth! thou feest how they have fallen. Be thou like them, on earth renowned. Like them the song of bards. Terrible were their forms in battle; but calm was Ryno in the days of peace. He was like the bow of the shower seen far distant on the stream; when the sun is setting on Mora; when silence dwells on the hill of deer. Rest, youngest of my sons! rest, O Ryno, on Lena. We too shall be no more. Warriors one day must fall!"

X 4

SUCH was thy grief, thou king of fwords, when Ryno lay on earth. What must the grief of Ossian be, for thou thyself art gone! I hear not thy distant voice on Cona. My eyes perceive thee not. Often forlorn and dark I sit at thy tomb; and feel it with my hands. When I think I hear thy voice, it is but the passing blast. Fingal has long since fallen asleep, the ruler of the war!

THEN Gaul and Offian fat with Swaran, on the foft green banks of Lubar. I touched the harp to please the king. But gloomy was his brow. He rolled his red eyes towards Lena. The hero mourned his host. I raised mine eyes to Cromla's brow. I saw the son of generous Semo. Sad and flow he retired, from his hill. towards the lonely cave of Tura. He faw Fingal victorious, and mixed his joy with grief. The fun is bright on his armour. Connal flowly strode behind. They funk behind the hill, like two pillars of the fire of night: when winds purfue them over the mountain, and the flaming heath refounds! Befide a stream of roaring foam his cave is in a rock. One tree bends above it. The ruthing winds eccho against its sides. Here rests the chief of Erin, the fon of generous Semo. His thoughts are on the battles he loft. The tear is on his cheek. He mourned the departure of his fame, that fled like the mist of Cona. O Bragela, thou art too far remote, to cheer the foul of the hero. But let him fee thy bright form in his mind: that his thoughts may return to the lonely fun-beam of his love!

Who comes with the locks of age? It is the fon of fongs. "Hail, Carril of other times! Thy voice is like the harp in the halls of Tura. Thy words are pleafant as the shower, which falls on the funny field. Carril of the times of old, why comest thou from the son of the generous Semo?"

"OSSIAN, king of fwords," replied the bard, "thou best can raise the song. Long hast thou been known to Carril, thou ruler of war! Often have I touched the harp to lovely Evirallin. Thou too haft often joined my voice, in Branno's hall of generous shells. And often, amidst our voices, was heard the mildest Evirallin. One day she fung of Cormac's fall, the youth, who died for her love. I faw the tears on her cheek, and on thine, thou chief of men! Her foul was touched for the unhappy, though she loved him not. How fair among a thousand maids, was the daughter of generous Branno!"

"Bring not, Carril," I replied, "bring not her memory to my mind. My foul must melt at the remembrance. My eyes must have their tears. Pale in the earth is she, the fostly-blushing fair of my love! But sit thou on the heath, O bard, and let us hear thy voice. It is pleasant as the gale of spring, that sighs on the hunter's ear; when he awakens from dreams of joy, and has heard the music of the spirits of the hill!"

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM,

BOOK VI,

ARGUMENT to BOOK VI.

Night comes on. Fingal gives a feast to his army, at which Swaran is present. The king commands Ullin his bard to give the fong of peace; a custom always observed at the end of a war. Ullin relates the actions of Trenmor, great orandfather to Fingal, in Scandinavia, and his marriage with Inibaca, the daughter of a king of Lochlin who was ancestor to Swaran; which consideration, together with his being brother to Agandecca, with whom Fingal was in love in his youth, induced the king to release him, and permit him to return, with the remains of his army, into Lochlin, upon his promise of never returning to Ireland, in a hostile manner. The night is fpent in fettling Swaran's departure, in fongs of bards, and in a conversation in which the story of Grumal is introduced by Fingal. Morning comes. Swaran departs; Fingal goes on a hunting party, and finding Cuthullin in the cave of Tura, comforts him, and fets fail, the next day, for Scotland; which concludes the poem.

FINGAL,

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POE M.

In SIX BOOKS.

BOOK VI.

The clouds of night come rolling down. Darkness rests on the steeps of Cromla. The stars of the north arise over the rolling of Erin's waves: they shew their heads of fire, through the slying mist of heaven. A distant wind roars in the wood. Silent and dark is the plain of death! Still on the dusky Lena arose in my ears the voice of Carril. He sung of the friends of our youth; the days of former years! when we met on the banks of Lego: when we fent round the joy of the shell. Cromla, answered to his voice. The ghosts of those he sung came in their russling winds. They were seen to bend with joy, towards the sound of their praise!

BE thy foul bleft, O Carril, in the midft of thy eddying winds. O that thou wouldst come to my hall, when I am alone by night! And thou dost come, my friend. I hear often thy light hand on my harp; when it hangs, on the distant wall, and the feeble found touches my ear. Why dost thou not speak to me in my grief, and tell when I shall behold my friends? But thou passest away in thy murmuring blast; the wind whistles thro' the grey hair of Ossian!

Now, on the fide of Mora, the heroes gathered to the feaft. A thousand aged oaks are burning to the wind. The strength * of the shells goes round. The fouls of warriors brighten with joy. But the king of Lochlin is silent. Sorrow reddens in the eyes of his pride. He often turned toward Lena. He remembered that he fell. Fingal leaned on the shield of his fathers. His grey locks slowly waved on the wind, and glittered to the beam of night. He saw the grief of Swaran, and spoke to the first of bards.

[•] The ancient Celtæ brewed beer, and they were no strangers to mead Several ancient poems mention wax lights and wine as common in the halls of Fingal. The Caledonians in their frequent incursions to the province might become acquainted with those conveniencies of life, and introduce them into their own country, among the booty which they carried from South Britain.

"Raise, Ullin, raise the song of peace. O sooth my soul from war. Let mine ear forget, in the sound, the distinal noise of arms. Let a hundred harps be near to gladden the king of Lochlin. He must depart from us with joy. None ever went sad from Fingal. Ofcar! the lightning of my sword is against the strong in sight. Peaceful it lies by my side when warriors yield in war."

"TRENMOR *," faid the mouth of fongs, " lived in the days of other years. He bounded over the waves of the north: companion of the storm! The high rocks of the land of Lochlin: its groves of murmuring founds appeared to the hero through mist: he bound his white-bosomed fails. Trenmor purfued the boar, that roared through the woods of Gormal. Many had fled from its presence: but it rolled in death on the fpear of Trenmor. Three chiefs, who beheld the deed, told of the mighty firanger. They told that he stood, like a pillar of fire, in the bright arms of his valour. The king of Lochlin prepared the feaft. He called the blooming Trenmor. Three days he feasted at Gormal's windy towers; and received his choice in the combat. The land of Lochlin had no hero, that yielded not to Trenmor. The shell of joy went round with fongs, in praise of the king of Morven. He that came over the waves, the first of mighty men!"

Treamor was great grandfather to Fingal. The fory is introduced to facilitate the difmission of Swaran.

Now when the fourth gray morn arofe, the hero launched his ship. He walked along the silent shore, and called for the rushing wind: For loud and distant he heard the blast murmuring behind the groves. Covered over with arms of steel, a fon of the woody Gormal appeared. Red was his cheek and fair his hair. His skin like the snow of Morven. Mild rolled his blue and smiling eye, when he spoke to the king of swords.

"STAY, Trenmor, flay thou first of men, thou hast not conquered Lonval's son. My sword has often met the brave. The wise shun the strength of my bow." "Thou fair-haired youth," Trenmor replied, "I will not fight with Lonval's son. Thine arm is seeble, sunbeam of youth. Retire to Gormal's dark-brown hinds." "But I will retire," replied the youth, "with the sword of Trenmor; and exult in the sound of my same. The virgins shall gather with smiles, around him who conquered mighty Trenmor. They shall sigh with the sighs of love, and admire the length of thy spear; when I shall carry it among thousands; when I lift the glittering point to the fun."

"Thou shalt never carry my spear," faid the angry king of Morven. "Thy mother shall find thee pale on the shore; and, looking over the darkblue deep, fee the fails of him that flew her fon!" "I will not lift the spear," replied the youth, "my arm is not firong with years. But, with the feathered dart, I have learned to pierce a distant foe. Throw down that heavy mail of steel. Trenmor is covered from death. I first. will lay my mail on earth. Throw now thy dart, thou king of Morven !" He faw the heaving of her breaft. It was the fifter of the king. She had feen him in the hall; and loved his face of youth. The spear dropt from the hand of Trenmor: he bent his red cheek to the ground. She was to him a beam of light that meets the fons of the cave; when they revisit the fields of the fun, and bend their aching eyes!

"Chief of the windy Morven," begun the maid of the arms of fnow. "Let me rest in thy bounding ship, far from the love of Corlo. For he, like the thunder of the desart, is terrible to Inibaca. He loves me in the gloom of pride. He shakes ten thousand spears!" "Rest thou in peace," said the mighty Trenmor, "Rest behind the shield of my sathers. I will not sly from the chief, though he shakes ten Vol. I.

thousand spears!" Three days he waited on the shore. He sent his horn abroad. He called Corlo to battle, from all his ecchoing hills. But Corlo came not to battle. The king of Lochlin descends from his hall. He seasted on the roaring shore. He gave the maid to Trenmor!

" KING of Lochlin," faid Fingal, " thy blood flows in the veins of thy foe. Our fathers met in battle, because they loved the strife of spears. But often did they feast in the hall: and fend round the joy of the shell. Let thy face brighten with gladness, and thine ear delight in the harp. Dreadful as the florm of thine ocean, thou hast poured thy valour forth; thy voice has been like the voice of thousands when they engage in war. Raife, to-morrow, raife thy white fails to the wind, thou brother of Agandecca! Bright as the beam of noon, she comes on my mournful foul. I have feen thy tears for the fair one. I fpared thee in the halls of Starno; when my fword was red with flaughter; when my eye was full of tears for the maid. Or doft thou chuse the fight? The combat which thy fathers gave to Trenmor is thine! that thou mayest depart renowned, like the fun fetting in the west!"

"KING of the race of Morven," faid the chief of refounding Lochlin! "never will Swaran fight with thee, first of a thousand heroes! I have seen thee in the halls of Starno: few were thy years beyond my own. When shall I, I faid to my foul, lift the spear like the noble Fingal? We have fought heretofore, O warrior, on the side of the shaggy Malmor; after my waves had carried me to thy halls, and the feast of a thousand shells was spread. Let the bards fend his name who overcame to suture years, for noble was the strife of Malmor! But many of the ships of Lochlin have lost their youths on Lena. Take these, thou king of Morven, and be the friend of Swaran! When thy sons shall come to Gormal, the feast of shells shall be spread, and the combat offered on the vale."

"Nor ship," replied the king, " shall Fingal take, nor land of many hills. The defart is enough to me, with all its deer and woods. Rife on thy waves again, thou noble friend of Agandecca. Spread thy white fails to the beam of the morning; return to the ecchoing hills of Gormal." "Bleft be thy foul, thou king of shells," faid Swaran of the dark-brown shield. " In peace thou art the gale of fpring. In war the mountain-storm. Take now my hand in friendship, king of ecchoing Selma! Let thy bards mourn those who fell. Let Erin give the fons of Lochlin to earth. Raife high the mostly stones of their fame: that the children of the north hereafter may behold the place, where their fathers fought. The hunter may fay, when he leans on a mosfy tomb, here Fingal and Swaran fought, the heroes of other years. Thus hereafter shall he say, and our same shall last for ever!"

"SWARAN," faid the king of hills, "to-day our fame is greatest. We shall pass away like a dream. No found will remain in our fields of war. Our tombs will be lost in the heath. The hunter shall not know the place of our rest. Our names may be heard in song. What avails it, when our strength hath ceased? O Ossian, Carril, and Ullin, you know of heroes that are no more. Give us the song of other years. Let the night pass away on the sound, and morning return with joy."

WE gave the fong to the kings. An hundred harps mixed their found with our voice. The face of Swaran brightened, like the full moon of heaven; when the clouds vanish away, and leave her calm and broad, in the midst of the sky!

"Where, Carril," faid the great Fingal, "Carril of other times! Where is the fon of Semo? 'he king of the ifle of mist? has he retired, like the meteor of death, to the dreary cave of Tura?" "Cuthullin," faid Carril of other times, "lies in the dreary cave of Tura.
His hand is on the fword of his strength. His thoughts on the battles he lost. Mournful is the king of spears; till now unconquered in war.
He fends his sword to rest on the side of Fingal:

For, like the florm of the defart, thou hast feattered all his foes. Take, O Fingal, the fword of the hero. His fame is departed like mist, when it slies, before the rustling wind, along the brightening vale.

"No:" replied the king, "Fingal shall never take his sword. His arm is mighty in war: his same shall never fail. Many have been overcome in battle; whose renown arose from their fall. O Swaran, king of resounding woods, give all thy grief away. The vanquished, if brave, are renowned. They are like the sun in a cloud, when he hides his face in the south, but looks again on the hills of grass!

"Grumal was a chief of Cona. He fought the battle on every coast. His foul rejoiced in blood. His ear in the din of arms. He poured his warriors on Craca; Craca's king met him from his grove: for then, within the circle of Brumo*, he fpoke to the stone of power. Fierce was the battle of the heroes, for the maid of the breast of snow. The same of the daughter of Craca had reached Grumal at the streams of Cona: he vowed to have the white-bosomed maid, or die on ecchoing Craca. Three days they strove together, and Grumal on the fourth was bound. Far from his friends they placed him, in the horrid circle of Brumo; where often, they faid, the ghosts of the dead howled round the stone of their fear. But he afterwards shone, like a pillar of the light of heaven. They fell by his mighty hand. Grumal had all his fame!"

^{*} This passage alludes to the religion of the king of Craca.

"RAISE, ye bards of other times," continued the great Fingal, "raife high the praife of heroes: that my foul may fettle on their fame; that the mind of Swaran may ceafe to be fad." They lay in the heath of Mora. The dark winds ruftled over the chiefs. A hundred voices, at once, arofe: a hundred harps were firung. They fung of other times; the mighty chiefs of former years! When now shall I hear the bard? When rejoice at the same of my fathers? The harp is not strung on Morven. The voice of music ascends not on Cona. Dead, with the mighty, is the bard. Fame is in the desart no more.

MORNING trembles with the beam of the east; it glimmers on Comla's side. Over Lena is heard the horn of Swaran. The sons of the ocean gather around. Silent and sad they rise on the wave. The blast of Erin is behind their sails. White, as the mist of Morven, they float along the sea. "Call," said Fingal, "call my dogs, the long-bounding fons of the chace. Call white-breafted Bran and the furly firength of Luath! Fillan, and Ryno; but he is not here! My fon refts on the bed of death. Fillan and Fergus! blow the horn, that the joy of the chace may arife: that the deer of Cromla may hear and flart at the lake of roes."

The shrill found spreads along the wood. The fons of heathy Cromla arife. A thousand dogs fly off at once, grey-bounding through the heath. A deer fell by every dog; three by the white-breasted Bran. He brought them, in their flight, to Fingal, that the joy of the king might be great! One deer fell at the tomb of Ryno. The grief of Fingal returned. He saw how peaceful lay the stone of him, who was the sirst at the chace! "No more shalt thou rise, O my son, to partake of the feast of Cromla. Soon will thy tomb be hid, and the grass grow rank on thy grave. The sons of the feeble shall pass along. They shall not know where the mighty lie.

"OSSIAN and Fillan, fons of my firength. Gaul, chief of the blue fleel of war! let us afcend the hill to the cave of Tura. Let us find the chief of the battles of Erin. Are these the walls of Tura? grey and lonely they rise on the heath. The chief of thells is sad, and the halls are filent and lonely. Come, let us find Cuthullin, and give him all our joy. But is that Cuthullin, O Fillan, or a pillar of fmoke on the heath? The wind of Cromla is on my eyes. I distinguish not my friend."

"FINGAL!" replied the youth, " it is the fon of Semo! Gloomy and fad is the hero! his hand is on his fword. Hail to the fon of battle, breaker of the shields?" "Hail to thee," replied Cuthullin, " hail to all the fons of Morven! Delightful is thy prefence, O Fingal, it is the fun on Cromla; when the hunter mourns his absence for a season, and sees him between the clouds. Thy fons are like flars that attend thy courfe. They give light in the night. It is, not thus thou hast feen me, O Fingal, returning from the wars of thy land: when the kings of the world * had fled, and joy returned to the hill of hinds!" " Many are thy words, Cuthullin," faid Connan + of fmall renown. "Thy words are many, fon of Semo, but where are thy deeds in arms? Why did we come, over ocean, to aid thy feeble fword? Thou flyest to thy cave of grief, and Connan fights thy battles. Refign to me these arms of light. Yield them, thou chief of Erin!" "No hero," replied the chief, "ever sought the arms of Cuthullin; and had a thousand heroes sought them, it were in vain, thou gloomy youth! I fled not to the cave of grief, till Erin sailed at her streams."

^{*} This is the only passage in the poem, wherein the wars of Fingal against the Romans are alluded to: the Roman emperor is distinguished in old composition by the title of king of the everld.

⁺ Connan was of the family of Morni. He is mentioned in feveral other poems, and always appears with the fame character. The poet passed him over in silence till now, and his behaviour here deserves no better usage.

"Youth of the feeble arm," faid Fingal, "Connan cease thy words! Cuthullin is renowned in battle; terrible over the world. Often have I heard thy fame, thou stormy chief of Inis-fail. Spread now thy white fails for the isle of mist. See Bragela leaning on her rock. Her tender eye is in tears; the winds lift her long hair from her heaving breast. She listens to the breeze of night, to hear the voice of thy rowers*; to hear the song of the sea! the sound of thy distant harp!

Long thall the liften in vain. Cuthulling thall never return! How can I behold Bragela, to raife the figh of her breaft? Fingal, I was always victorious, in battles of other spears!"

"And hereafter thou shalt be victorious," faid Fingal of generous thells. "The same

^{*} The practice of finging when they row is universal among the inhabitants of the northwest coast of Scotland and the isles. It deceives time, and inspirits the rowers.

of Cuthullin shall grow, like the branchy tree of Cromla. Many battles await thee, O chief! Many shall be the wounds of thy hand! Bring hither, Oscar, the deer! Prepare the feast of shells. Let our souls rejoice after danger, and our friends delight in our presence!"

WE fat. We feafted. We fung. The foul of Cuthullin rofe. The ftrength of his arm returned. Gladness brightened along his face. Ullin gave the fong; Carril raised the voice. I joined the bards, and sung of battles of the spear. Battles! where I often fought. Now I fight no more! The same of my former deeds is ceased. I sit forlorn at the tombs of my friends!

Thus the night paffed away in fong. We brought back the morning with joy. Fingal arose on the heath, and shook his glittering spear. He moved first toward the plains of Lena. We followed in all our arms.

"Spread the fail," faid the king, "feize the winds as they pour from Lena." We rose on the wave with songs. We rushed, with joy, through the soam of the deep.

LATHMON:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Lathmon, a British prince, taking advantage of Fingal's absence on an expedition in Ireland, made a descent on Morven, and advanced within sight of Selma, the royal residence. Fingal arrived in the mean time, and Lathmon retreated to a hill, where his army was surprized by night, and himself taken prisoner by Ossian and Gaul the son of Morni. The poem opens, with the sist appearance of Fingal on the coast of Morven, and ends, it may be supposed, about noon the next day.

LATHMON:

A

P O E M.

SELMA, thy halls are filent. There is no found in the woods of Morven. The wave tumbles alone on the coaft. The filent beam of the fun is on the field. The daughters of Morven come forth, like the bow of the shower; they look towards green Erin for the white fails of the king. He had promifed to return, but the winds of the north arose!

Who pours from the eastern hill, like a stream of darkness? It is the host of Lathmon. He has heard of the absence of Fingal. He trusts in the wind of the north. His soul brightens with joy. Why dost thou come, O Lathmon? The mighty are not in Selma. Why comest thou with thy forward spear? Will the daughters of Morven sight? But stop, O mighty stream, in thy course! Does not Lathmon behold these fails? Why dost thou vanish, Lathmon, like the mist of the lake? But the squally storm is behind thee; Fingal pursues thy steps!

THE king of Morven had flarted from fleep. as we rolled on the dark-blue wave. He firetched his hand to his spear, his heroes rose around. We knew that he had feen his fathers, for they often descended to his dreams, when the sword of the foe rose over the land; and the battle darkened before us. "Whither haft thou fled. O wind?" faid the king of Morven. " Dost thou ruftle in the chambers of the fouth, purfuest thou the shower in other lands? Why dost thou not come to my fails? to the blue face of my feas? The foe is in the land of Morven, and the king is abfent far. But let each bind on his mail, and each affume his shield. Stretch every fpear over the wave; let every fword be unsheathed. Lathmon * is before us with his host: he that fled + from Fingal on the plains of Lona. But he returns, like a collected stream, and his roar is between our hills."

Such were the words of Fingal. We rushed into Carmona's bay. Offian ascended the hill: He thrice struck his bossy thield. The rock of

^{*} It is faid by tradition, that it was the intelligence of Lathmon's invasion, that occasioned Fingal's return from Ireland; though Offian, more poetically, ascribes the cause of Fingal's knowlege to his dream.

[†] He alludes to a battle wherein Fingal had defeated Lathmon.

Morven replied; the bounding roes came forth. The foe was troubled in my prefence: he collected his darkened hoft. I flood, like a cloud on the hill, rejoicing in the arms of my youth.

MORNI* fat beneath a tree, at the roaring waters of Strumon; his locks of age are grey: he leans forward on his staff; young Gaul is near the hero, hearing the battles of his father. Often did he rife, in the fire of his foul, at the mighty deeds of Morni. The aged heard the found of Ossian's shield: he knew the sign of war. He started at once from his place. His grey hair parted on his back. He remembered the deeds of other years.

" My fon," he faid to fair-haired Gaul, " I hear the found of war. The king of Morven is returned, his fignals are foread on the wind. Go to the halls of Strumon; bring his arms to Morni. Bring the shield of my father's latter years, for my arm begins to fail. Take thou thy armour, O Gaul; and rush to the first of thy battles. Let thine arm reach to the renown of thy fathers. Be thy course in the sield, like the eagle's wing. Why shouldst thou fear death, my son? the valiant fall with same; their shields turn the dark stream of danger away; renown dwells on their aged hairs. Dost thou not see, O Gaul, how the steps of my age are honoured? Morni moves forth, and the young meet him, with awe, and turn their eyes, with silent joy, on his course. But I never sled from danger, my son! my sword lightened through the darkness of war. The stranger melted before me; the mighty were blasted in my presence."

^{*} Morni was chief of a numerous tribe, in the days of Fingal, and his father Comhal. The last mentioned hero was killed in battle against Morni's tribe; but the valour and conduct of Fingal reduced them, at last, to obedience. We find the two heroes perfectly reconciled in this poem.

⁺ Stru'-moné, fiream of the hill. Here the proper name of a rivulet in the neighbourhood of Selma.

GAUL brought the arms to Morni: the aged warrior is covered with steel. He took the spear in his hand, which was stained with the blood of the valiant. He came towards Fingal, his son attended his steps. The son of Comhal arose before him with joy, when he came in his locks of age.

CHIEF of roaring Strumon! faid the rifing foul of Fingal; do I behold thee in arms, after thy strength has failed? Often has Morni shone in fight, like the beam of the ascending sun; when he disperses the storms of the hill, and brings peace to the glittering fields. But why didst thou not rest in thine age? Thy renown is in the fong. The people behold thee, and blefs the departure of mighty Morni. Why didft thou not reft in thine age? The foe will vanish before Fingal!

Son of Comhal, replied the chief, the strength of Morni's arm has failed. I attempt to draw the sword of my youth, but it remains in its place. I throw the spear, but it falls short of the mark. I feel the weight of my shield. We decay like the grass of the hill: our strength returns no more. I have a son, O Fingal, his soul has delighted in Morni's deeds; but his sword has not been listed against a soe, neither has his same begun. I come with him to war; to direct his arm in sight. His renown will be a light to my soul, in the dark hour of my departure. O that the name of Morni were forgot among the people! that the heroes would only say, "Behold the father of Gaul!"

King of Strumon, Fingal replied, Gaul shall lift the fword in fight. But he shall lift it before Fingal; my arm shall defend his youth. But rest thou in the halls of Selma; and hear of our renown. Bid the harp to be strung; and the voice of the bard to arise, that those who fall may rejoice in their same; and the soul of Morni brighten with joy. Offian! thou hast fought in Vol. I.

battles: the blood of strangers is on thy spear: thy course be with Gaul, in the strife; but depart not from the side of Fingal! less the soe should find you alone, and your same sail in my presence.

I saw * Gaul in his arms; my foul was mixed with his. The fire of the battle was in his eyes! he looked to the foe with joy. We fpoke the words of friendship in secret; the lightning of our swords poured together; for we drew them behind the wood, and tried the strength of our arms on the empty air.

NIGHT came down on Morven. Fingal fat at the beam of the oak. Morni fat by his fide with all his grey waving locks. Their words were of other times, of the mighty deeds of their fathers. Three bards, at times, touched the harp: Ullin was near with his fong. He fung of the mighty Comhal; but darkness gathered †

* Offian speaks. The contrast between the old and young heroes is strongly marked. The circumstance of the latter's drawing their swords is well imagined, and agrees with the impatience of young soldiers, just entered upon action.

[†] Ullin had chosen ill the subject of his song. The darkness which gathered on Morni's brown, did not proceed from any distike he had to Comhal's name, though they were foes, but from his fear that the song would awaken Fingal to a remembrance of the seuds which had subsisted of old between the families. Fingal's speech on this occasion abounds with generosity and good sense.

on Morni's brow. He rolled his red eye on Ullin: at once ceased the fong of the bard. Fingal observed the aged hero, and he mildly spoke. "Chief of Strumon, why that darkness? Let the days of other years be forgot. Our fathers contended in war; but we meet together, at the feast. Our swords are turned on the foe of our land: he melts before us on the field. Let the days of our fathers be forgot, hero of mostly Strumon!"

" KING of Morven," replied the chief, " I remember thy father with joy. He was terrible in battle; the rage of the chief was deadly. My eyes were full of tears, when the king of heroes fell. The valiant fall, O Fingal! the feeble remain on the hills! How many heroes have passed away, in the days of Morni! Yet I did not shun the battle; neither did I fly from the firife of the valiant. Now let the friends of Fingal rest; for the night is around; that they may rife, with strength, to battle against carborne Lathmon. I hear the found of his hoft. like thunder moving on the hills. Offian! and fair-haired Gaul! ye are young and fwift in the race. Observe the foes of Fingal from that woody hill. But approach them not, your fathers are not near to shield you. Let not your fame fall at once. The valour of youth may fail!"

We heard the words of the chief with joy. We moved in the clang of our arms. Our steps are on the woody hill. Heaven burns with all its stars. The meteors of death fly over the field. The distant noise of the soe reached our ears. It was then Gaul spoke, in his valour: his hand half-unsheathed the sword.

"Son of Fingal," he faid, "why burns the foul of Gaul? My heart beats high. My fleps are difordered; my hand trembles on my fword. When I look towards the foe, my foul lightens before me. I fee their fleeping hoft. Tremble thus the fouls of the valiant in battles of the fpear? How would the foul of Morni rife if we fhould rush on the foe! Our renown would grow in fong: Our fleps would be flately in the eyes of the brave."

"Son of Morni," I replied, "my foul delights in war. I delight to shine in battle alone, to give my name to the bards. But what if the foe should prevail; can I behold the eyes of the king? They are terrible in his displeasure, and like the slames of death. But I will not behold them in his wrath! Ossian shall prevail or fall. But shall the same of the vanquished rise?

They pass like a shade away. But the same of Ossian shall rise! His deeds shall be like his fathers. Let us rush in our arms; son of Morni, let us rush to sight. Gaul! if thou shouldstreturn, go to Selma's losty Hall. Tell to Evirallin that I fell with same; carry this sword to Branno's daughter. Let her give it to Oscar, when the years of his youth shall arise."

"Son of Fingal," Gaul replied with a figh; "fhall I return after Offian is low? What would my father fay, what Fingal the king of men? The feeble would turn their eyes and fay, "Behold Gaul who left his friend in his blood!" Ye fhall not behold me, ye feeble, but in the midft of my renown. Offian! I have heard from my father the mighty deeds of heroes; their mighty deeds when alone; for the foul increases in danger."

"Son of Morni," I replied and firode before him on the heath, "our fathers shall praise our valour, when they mourn our fall. A beam of gladness shall rise on their souls, when their eyes are full of tears. They will say, "Our sons have not fallen unknown: they spread death around them." But why should we think of the narrow house? The sword defends the brave.

But death purfues the flight of the feeble; their renown is never heard."

WE rushed forward through night; we came to the roar of a fiream, which bent its blue courfe round the foe, through trees that ecchoed to its found. We came to the bank of the stream, and faw the sleeping host. Their fires were decayed on the plain; the lonely steps of their fcouts were diffant far. I ffretched my fpear before me to support my steps over the stream. But Gaul took my hand, and spoke the words of the brave. " Shall the fon of Fingal ruth on the fleeping foe? Shall he come like a blast by night, when it overturns the young trees in fecret? Fingal did not thus receive his fame, nor dwells renown on the grey hairs of Morni, for actions like thefe. Strike, Offian, strike the thield, and let their thousands rife. Let them meet Gaul in his first battle, that he may try the strength of his arm."

My foul rejoiced over the warrior: my bursting tears came down. "And the foe shall meet thee, Gaul!" I said: "the same of Morni's fon shall arise. But rush not too far, my hero: let the gleam of thy steel be near to Ossian. Let our hands join in slaughter. Gaul! dost thou not behold that rock? Its grey side dimly gleams gleams to the stars. Should the foe prevail, let our back be towards the rock. Then shall they fear to approach our spears; for death is in our hands!"

I STRUCK thrice my ecchoing shield. The starting foe arose. We rushed on in the sound of our arms. Their crouded steps fly over the heath. They thought that the mighty Fingal was come. The ftrength of their arms withered away. The found of their flight was like that of flame, when it rushes thro' the blasted groves. It was then the spear of Gaul flew in its strength: it was then his fword arofe. Cremor fell: and mighty Leth. Dunthormo ftruggled in his blood. The steel rushed through Crotho's side, as bent, he rose on his spear; the black stream poured from the wound, and hiffed on the halfextinguished oak. Cathmin faw the steps of the hero behind him, he ascended a blasted tree; but the spear pierced him from behind. Shrieking, panting, he fell. Moss and withered branches purfue his fall, and firew the blue arms of Gaul.

Such were thy deeds, fon of Morni, in the first of thy battles. Nor slept the sword by thy side, thou last of Fingal's race! Ossian rushed forward in his strength; the people fell before him; as the grass by the staff of the boy, when he whistles along the field, and the grey beard of the thistle falls. But careless the youth moves on; his steps are towards the defart. Gray morning rose around us, the winding streams are bright along the heath. The soe gathered on a hill; and the rage of Lathmon rose. He bent the red eye of his wrath: he is silent in his rising grief. He often struck his bossy thield; and his steps are unequal on the heath. I saw the distant darkness of the hero, and I spoke to Morni's son.

CAR-BORNE chief of Strumon, dost thou behold the foe? They gather on the hill in their wrath. Let our steps be towards the king †. He shall rise in his strength, and the host of Lathmon vanish. Our fame is around us, warrior, the eyes of the aged ‡ will rejoice. But let us sty, son of Morni, Lathmon descends the hill. "Then let our steps be slow," replied the fair-haired Gaul; "less the foe say, with a smile, "Behold the warriors of night. They are, like ghosts, terrible in darkness; they melt away before the beam of the cast." Osian, take the fhield of Gormar who fell beneath thy fpear. The aged heroes will rejoice beholding the deeds of their fons."

⁺ Fingal.

[‡] Fingal and Morni,

Such were our words on the plain, when Sulmath * came to car-borne Lathmon: Sulmath chief of Dutha at the dark-rolling stream of Duvranna †. "Why dost thou not rush, son of Nuäth, with a thousand of thy heroes? Why dost thou not descend with thy host, before the warriors sty? Their blue arms are beaming to the rising light, and their steps are before us on the heath!"

"Son of the feeble hand," faid Lathmon, "thall my hoft defcend! They are but two, fon of Dutha; thall a thousand lift their steel! Nuäth would mourn, in his hall, for the departure of his fame. His eyes would turn from Lathmon, when the tread of his feet approached. Go thou to the heroes, chief of Dutha. I behold the stately steps of Ossian. His same is worthy of my steel! let us contend in fight."

^{*} Suil-mhath, a man of good eye fight.

[†] Dubh-bhranna, dark mountain-fiream. A river in Scotland, which falls into the fea at Banff, fill retains the name of Duvran. If that is meant in this paffage, Lathmon must have been a prince of the Pictish nation, or those Caledonians who inhabited of old the eastern coast of Scotland.

246 L A T H M O N:

THE noble Sulmath came. I rejoiced in the words of the king. I raised the shield on my arm; Gaul placed in my hand the sword of Morni. We returned to the murmuring stream; Lathmon came down in his strength. His dark host rolled, like clouds, behind him: but the son of Nuäth was bright in his steel!

"Son of Fingal," faid the hero, "thy fame has grown on our fall. How many lie there of my people by thy hand, thou king of men! Lift now thy fpear against Lathmon; lay the fon of Nuäth low! Lay him low among his warriors, or thou thyself must fall! It shall never be told in my halls that my people fell in my presence; that they fell in the presence of Lathmon when his sword rested by his side: the blue eyes of Cutha would roll in tears; her steps be lonely in the vales of Dunlathmon!

"NEITHER shall it be told," I replied, "that the fon of Fingal fled. Were his steps covered with darkness, yet would not Ossian sly! his foul would meet him and say, "Does the bard of Selma fear the foe?" "No: he does not fear the foe. His joy is in the midst of battle!"

LATHMON came on with his fpear. He pierced the thield of Offian. I felt the cold fleel by my fide. I drew the fword of Morni. I cut the fpear in twain. The bright point fell glittering on earth. The fon of Nuäth burnt in his wrath. He lifted high his founding shield. His dark eyes rolled above it, as bending forward, it shone like a gate of brass! But Ossian's spear pierced the brightness of its bosses, and sunk in a tree that rose behind. The shield hung on the quivering lance! but Lathmon still advanced! Gaul foresaw the fall of the chief. He stretched his buckler before my sword; when it descended, in a stream of light, over the king of Dunlathmon!

LATHMON beheld the fon of Morni. The tear started from his eye. He threw the sword of his fathers on earth, and spoke the words of the brave. "Why should Lathmon fight against the first of men? Your souls are beams from heaven; your swords the slames of death! Who can equal the renown of the heroes, whose deeds are so great in youth? O that ye were in the halls of Nuäth, in the green dwelling of Lathmon! then would my father say, that his son did not yield to the weak! But who comes, a mighty stream, along the ecchoing heath? the little hills are troubled before him; a thousand ghosts are on the beams of his steel; the ghosts of those who are to fall*, by the arm of the king of resounding Morven. Happy art thou, O Fingal, thy sons shall fight thy wars. They go forth before thee; they return with the sleps of their renown!"

Fingal came, in his mildness, rejoicing in fecret over the deeds of his son. Morni's face brightened with gladness; his aged eyes look faintly through tears of joy. We came to the halls of Selma. We sat around the feast of shells. The maids of song came into our presence, and the mildly blushing Evirallin! Her hair spreads on her neck of snow, her eye rolls in secret on Ossian. She touched the harp of music; we blessed the daughter of Branno?

FINGAL rose in his place, and speke to Lathmon king of spears. The sword of Trenmor shook by his side, as high he raised his mighty arm. "Son of Nuäth," he said, "why dost thou search for same in Morven? We are not of the race of the seeble; our swords gleam not over the weak. When did we rouse thee, O Lathmon, with the sound of war? Fingal does not delight in battle, though his arm is strong! My renown grows on the fall of the haughty. The light of my fleel pours on the proud in arms. The battle comes; and the tombs of the valiant rife; the tombs of my people rife, O my fathers! I at last must remain alone! But I will remain renowned; the departure of my foul shall be a stream of light. Lathmon! retire to thy place! Turn thy battles to other lands! The race of Morven are renowned; their foes are the sons of the unhappy!"

^{*} It was thought, in Offian's time, that each perfon had his attending fpirit. The traditions concerning this opinion are dark and unfatisfactory.

DAR-THULA:

A

POEM.

ARGUMENT.

It may not be improper here, to give the flory which is the foundation of this poem, as it is handed down by tradition. Usnoth lord of Etha, which is probably that part of Argyleshire which is near Loch Eta, an arm of the sea in Lorn, had three fons, Nathos, Althos, and Ardan by Sliffama, the daughter of Semo and fifter to the celebrated Cuthullin. The three brothers, when very young, were fent over to Ireland, by their father, to learn the use of arms, under their uncle, Cuthullin, who made a great figure in that kingdom. They were just landed in Ulster when the news of Cuthullin's death arrived. Nathos, though very young, took the command of Cuthullin's army, made head against Cairbar the usurper, and defeated him in several battles. Cairbar at last having found means to murder Cormac the lawful king, the army of Nathos shifted sides, and he himfelf was obliged to return into Ulfter, in order to pass over into Scotland.

Dar-thula, the daughter of Colia, with whom Cairbar was in love, refided, at that time, in Selama, a castle in Ulster: she saw, fell in love, and fled with Nathos; but a storm rising at sea, they were unfortunately driven back on that part of the coast of Ulster, where Cairbar was encamped with his army. The three brothers, after having defended themselves, for some time, with great bravery, were overpowered and slain, and the unfortunate Dar-thula killed herself upon the body of her beloved Nathos.

The poem opens, on the night preceding the death of the fons of Ufnoth, and brings in, by way of epifode, what paffed before. It relates the death of Dar-thula differently from the common tradition; this account is the most probable, as sucide feems to have been unknown in those early times: for no traces of it are found in the old poetry.

DAR-THULA:

A

POE M.

AUGHTER of heaven, fair art thou! the filence of thy face is pleafant! Thou comest forth in loveliness. The flars attend thy blue course in the east. The clouds rejoice in thy presence, O moon: They brighten their darkbrown fides. Who is like thee in heaven, light of the filent night? The stars are ashamed in thy prefence. They turn away, their fparkling eyes. Whither dost thou retire from thy course, when the darkness of thy countenance grows? Hast thou thy hall, like Offian? Dwelleft thou in the shadow of grief? Have thy fisters fallen from heaven? Are they who rejoiced with thee, at night, no more? Yes! they have fallen, fair light! and thou doft often retire to mourn. But thou thyfelf shalt fail, one night; and leave thy blue path in heaven. The flars will then litf their heads: they, who were ashamed in thy presence, will rejoice. Thou art now clothed VOL. I. Аз with with thy brightness. Look from thy gates in the sky. Burst the cloud, O wind, that the daughter of night may look forth! that the shaggy mountains may brighten, and the ocean roll its white waves, in light.

NATHOS* is on the deep, and Althos, that beam of youth. Ardan is near his brothers. They move in the gloom of their course. The sons of Usnoth move in darkness, from the wrath of Cairbar † of Erin. Who is that dim, by their side? the night has covered her beauty! Her hair sighs on ocean's wind. Her robe streams in dusky wreaths. She is, like the fair spirit of heaven, in the midst of his shadowy mist. Who is it but Dar-thula‡, the first of Erin's maids? She has sled from the love of Cairbar, with blue-shielded Nathos. But the winds deceive thee, O Dar-thula. They deny the woody Etha, to thy fails. These are not the mountains of Nather the strength of the strengt Nathos fignifies youthful, Ailthos, exquifite beauty, Ardan, pride.

[†] Cairbar, who murdered Cormac king of Ireland, and usurped the throne. He was afterwards killed by Oscar the son of Ossan in a single combat. The poet, upon other occasions, gives him the epithet of red-haired.

[†] Dar-thúla, or Dart-'huile, a woman with fine eyes. She was the most famous beauty of antiquity. To this day, when a woman is praised for her beauty, the common phrase is, that she is as lovely as Dar-thula.

thos; nor is that the roar of his climbing waves. The halls of Cairbar are near: the towers of the foe lift their heads! Erin firetches its green head into the fea. Tura's bay receives the thip. Where have ye been, ye fouthern winds! when the fons of my love were deceived? But ye have been fporting on plains, purfuing the thiftle's beard. O that ye had been ruftling, in the fails of Nathos, till the hills of Etha arofe! till they arofe in their clouds, and faw their returning chief! Long haft thou been abfent, Nathos! The day of thy return is paft!

But the land of strangers saw thee, lovely: thou wast lovely in the eyes of Dar-thula. Thy sace was like the light of the morning. Thy hair like the raven's wing. Thy soul was generous and mild, like the hour of the setting sun. Thy words were the gale of the reeds; the gliding stream of Lora! But when the rage of battle rose, thou wast a sea in a storm. The clang of thy arms was terrible: the host vanished at the sound of thy course. It was then Dar-thula beheld thee, from the top of her mosty tower: from the tower of Seláma*, where her sathers dwelt.

" LONELY

The word fignifies either beautiful to behold, of a place with a pleasant or wide prospect. In early times, they built

A 2 2 their

"Lovely art thou, O stranger!" she said, " for her trembling foul arose. Fair art thou in thy battles, friend of the fallen Cormac +! Why doft thou rush on, in thy valour, youth of the ruddy look? Few are thy hands, in fight, against the dark-browed Cair-bar! O that I might be freed from his love !! that I might rejoice in the prefence of Nathos! Bleft are the rocks of Etha! they will behold his fleps at the chace! they will fee his white bosom, when the winds lift his flowing hair!" Such were thy words, Dar-thula, in Seláma's mosfy towers. But, now, the night is around thee. The winds have deceived thy fails. The winds have deceived thy fails, Darthula! Their bluftering found is high. Ceafe a little while, O north wind. Let me hear the voice of the lovely. Thy voice is lovely, Darthula, between the ruftling blafts!

"ARE these the rocks of Nathos?" she said, "This the roar of his mountain-streams? Comes that beam of light from Usnoth's nightly hall?

their houses upon eminences, to command a view of the country, and to prevent their being surprized: many of them, on that account, were called Seláma. The samous Selma of Fingal is derived from the same root.

† Cormac the young king of Ireland, who was privately murdered by Cairbar.

[†] That is, of the love of Cairbar.

The mist spreads around; the beam is feeble and distant far. But the light of Dar-thula's soul dwells in the chief of Etha! Son of the generous Usnoth, why that broken sigh? Are we in the land of strangers, chief of ecchoing Etha!"

"THESE are not the rocks of Nathos," he replied, "nor this the roar of his streams. No light comes from Etha's halls, for they are distant far. We are in the land of strangers, in the land of cruel Cairbar. The winds have deceived us, Dar-thula. Erin lifts here her hills. Go towards the north, Althos: be thy steps, Ardan, along the coast; that the foe may not come in darkness, and our hopes of Etha sail." "I will go towards that mostly tower, to see who dwells about the beam. Rest, Dar-thula, on the shore! rest in peace, thou lovely light! the sword of Nathos is around thee, like the lightning of heaven!"

He went. She fat alone; she heard the rolling of the wave. The big tear is in her eye. She looks for returning Nathos. Her soul trembles at the blast. She turns her ear towards the tread of his feet. The tread of his feet is not heard. "Where art thou, son of my love! The roar of the blast is around me. Dark is the cloudy night, But Nathos does not return. What detains thee, chief of Etha? Have the foes met the hero in the strife of the night?"

HE returned, but his face was dark. He had feen his departed friend! It was the wall of Tura. The ghoft of Cuthullin stalked there alone: The sighing of his breast was frequent. The decayed stame of his eyes was terrible! His spear was a column of mist. The stars looked dim through his form. His voice was like hollow wind in a cave: his eye a light seen afar. He told the tale of grief. The soul of Nathos was sad, like the fun in the day of mist, when his sace is watry and dim.

"Why art thou fad, O Nathos?" faid the lovely daughter of Colla. "Thou art a pillar of light to Dar-thula. The joy of her eyes is in Etha's chief. Where is my friend, but Nathos? My father, my brother is fallen! Silence dwells on Seláma. Sadness spreads on the blue streams of my land. My friends have fallen, with Cormac. The mighty were slain in the battles of Erin. Hear, son of Usnoth! hear, O Nathos, my tale of grief."

"EVENING darkened on the plain. The blue fireams failed before mine eyes. The unfrequent blaft came ruflling, in the tops of Seláma's groves. My feat was beneath a tree, on the walls of my fathers. Truthil past before my foul: the brother of my love: He that was abfent in battle, against the haughty Cairbar! Bending on his spear, the grey-haired Colla came. His downcast face is dark, and sorrow dwells in his foul. His sword is on the side of the hero: the helmet of his fathers on his head. The battle grows in his breast. He strives to hide the tear."

"DAR-THULA, my daughter," he faid, "thou art the last of Colla's race! Truthil is fallen in battle. The chief of Seláma is no more! Cairbar comes, with his thousands, towards Seláma's walls. Colla will meet his pride, and revenge his fon. But where shall I find thy fafety, Dar-thula with the dark-brown hair! thou art lovely as the sun-beam of heaven, and thy friends are low! "Is the son of battle fallen," I said, with a bursting sigh? Ceased the generous soul of Truthil to lighten through the field? My safety, Colla, is in that bow. I have learned to pierce the deer. Is not Cairbar, like the hart of the defart, father of fallen Truthil?"

"THE face of age brightened with joy. The crouded tears of his eyes poured down. The lips of Colla trembled. His grey beard whiftled in the blaft. "Thou art the fifter of Truthil," he faid; "thou burneft in the fire of his foul. Take, Dar-thula, take that fpear, that brazen shield, that burnished helm: they are the spoils of a warrior, a son of early youth! When the light rises on Seláma, we go to meet the car-borne Cairbar. But keep thou near the arm of Colla, beneath the shadow of my shield. Thy father, Darthula, could once defend thee; but age is trembling on his hand. The strength of his arm has failed. His soul is darkened with grief."

WE passed the night in sorrow. The light of morning rose. I shone in the arms of battle. The grey-haired hero moved before. The sons of Seláma convened, around the sounding shield of Colla. But sew were they in the plain, and their locks were grey. The youths had fallen with Truthil, in the battle of car-borne Cormac. "Friends of my youth!" said Colla, "it was not thus you have seen me in arms. It was not thus I strode to battle, when the great Confadan fell, But ye are laden with grief. The darkness of age comes like the mist of the defart. My shield is worn with years! my sword fword is fixed * in its place! I faid to my foul, thy evening shall be calm: Thy departure like a fading light. But the storm has returned. I bend like an aged oak. My boughs are fallen on Seláma. I tremble in my place. Where art thou, with thy fallen heroes, O my beloved Truthil! Thou answerest not from thy rushing blass. The foul of thy father is fad. But I will be fad no more, Cairbar or Colla must fall! I feel the returning strength of my arm. My heart leaps at the found of war.

The hero drew his fword. The gleaming blades of his people rose. They moved along the plain. Their grey hair streamed in the wind. Cairbar sat at the seast, in the silent plain of Lona. He saw the coming of the heroes. He called his chiefs to war. Why ‡ should I tell

[•] It was the custom of ancient times, that every warrior at a certain age, or when he became unfit for the field, fixed his arms, in the great hall, where the tribe feasted, upon joyful occasions. He was afterwards never to appear in battle; and this stage of life was called the time of fixing of the arms.

[†] Lona, a marshy plain. Cairbar had just provided an entertainment for his army, upon the defeat of Truthil the son of Colla, and the rest of the party of Cormac, when Colla and his aged warriors arrived to give him battle.

[†] The poet, by an artifice, avoids the description of the battle of Lona, as it would be improper in the mouth of a

tell to Nathos, how the strife of battle grew? I have feen thee, in the midst of thousands, like the beam of heaven's fire: it is beautiful, but terrible; the people fall in its dreadful courfe. The spear of Colla slew. He remembered the battles of his youth. An arrow came with its found. It pierced the hero's fide. He fell on his ecchoing shield. My foul started with fear. I firetched my buckler over him; but my heaving breaft was feen! Cairbar came, with his spear. He beheld Seláma's maid. Joy rose on his dark-brown face. He stayed the lifted fteel. He raifed the tomb of Colla. He brought me weeping to Seláma. He spoke the words of love, but my foul was fad. I faw the thields of my fathers; the fword of car-borne Truthil. I faw the arms of the dead; the tear was on my cheek! Then thou didft come, O Nathos: and gloomy Cairbar fled. He fled like the ghost of the defart before the morning's beam. His hoft was not near: and feeble was his arm against thy ficel! Why art thou fad, O Nathos! faid the lovely daughter of Colla?

woman, and could have nothing new, after the numerous descriptions, of that kind, in the rest of the poems. He, at the same time, gives an opportunity to Dar-thula to pass a fine compliment on her lover.

"I HAVE met," replied the hero, " the battle in my youth. My arm could not lift the spear. when danger first arose. My soul brightened in the presence of war, as the green narrow vale, when the fun pours his streamy beams, before he hides his head in a storm. The lonely traveller feels a mournful joy. He fees the darknefs, that flowly comes. My foul brightened in danger before I faw Seláma's fair: before I faw thee, like a star, that shines on the hill, at night: the cloud advances, and threatens the lovely light! We are in the land of foes. The winds have deceived us, Dar-thula! The strength of our friends is not near, nor the mountains of Etha. Where shall I find thy peace, daughter of mighty Colla! The brothers of Nathos are brave! and his own fword has thone in fight. But what are the fons of Ufnoth to the hoft of dark-browed Cairbar! O that the winds had brought thy fails, Ofcar + king of men! Thou didst promise to come to the battles of fallen Cormac! Then would my hand be strong, as the flaming arm of death. Cairbar [†] Oscar, the son of Ossan, had long resolved on the expedition, into Ireland, against Cairbar, who had assassinated his friend Cathol, the son of Moran, an Irishman of noble extraction, and in the interest of the samily of Cormac.

would tremble in his halls, and peace dwell round the lovely Dar-thula. But why dost thou fall, my foul? The fons of Usnoth may prevail!"

"And they will prevail, O Nathos!" faid the rifing foul of the maid. "Never shall Darthula behold the halls of gloomy Cairbar. Give me those arms of brass, that glitter to the passing meteor. I see them dimly in the darkbosomed ship. Dar-thula will enter the battle of steel. Ghost of the noble Colla! do I behold thee on that cloud? Who is that dim beside thee? Is it the car-borne Truthil? Shall I behold the halls of him that slew Seláma's chief? No: I will not hehold them, spirits of my love!"

Joy rose in the face of Nathos, when he heard the white-bosomed maid. "Daughter of Seláma! thou shinest along my soul. Come, with thy thousands, Cairbar! the strength of Nathos is returned! Thou, O aged Usnoth, shalt not hear that thy son has sled. I remember thy words on Etha; when my sails began to rise: when I spread them towards Erin, towards the mostly walls of Tura! "Thou goest," he said, "O Nathos, to the king of shields! Thou goest to Cuthullin, chief of men, who never sled from danger. Let not thine arm be feeble: neither be thy thoughts of flight; left the fon of Semo should fay, that Etha's race are weak. His words may come to Ufnoth, and fadden his foul in the hall. The tear was on my father's cheek. He gave this shining fword!"

"I came to Tura's bay: but the halls of Tura were filent. I looked around, and there was none to tell of the fon of generous Semo. I went to the hall of thells, where the arms of his fathers hung. But the arms were gone, and aged Lamhor * fat in tears. Whence are the arms of fleel, faid the rifing Lamhor? The light of the fpear has long been abfent from Tura's dufky walls. Come ye from the rolling fea? Or from Temora's † mournful halls?

"We come from the fea," I faid, "from Ufnoth's rifing towers. We are the fons of Slis-sáma‡, the daughter of car-borne Semo. Where is Tura's chief, fon of the filent hall? But why should Nathos ask? for I behold thy tears. How did the mighty fall, fon of the [·] Lamh-mhor, mighty hand.

[†] Temora was the residence of the supreme kings of Ireland. It is here called mournful, on account of the death of Cormac, who was murdered there by Cairbar who usurped his throne.

t Slis feamha, foft bosom. She was the wife of Usroth and daughter of Semo the chief of the ifte of miss.

lonely Tura?" "He fell not," Lamhor replied, "like the filent star of night, when it slies through darkness and is no more. But he was like a meteor that shoots into a distant land. Death attends its dreary course. Itself is the sign of wars. Mournful are the banks of Lego; and the roar of streamy Lara! There the hero fell, son of the noble Usnoth." "The hero fell in the midst of slaughter," I said with a bursting sigh. "His hand was strong in war. Death dimly sat behind his sword."

WE came to Lego's founding banks. We found his rifing tomb. His friends in battle are there: his bards of many fongs. Three days we mourned over the hero: on the fourth, 1 struck the shield of Caithbat. The heroes gathered around with joy, and shook their beamy fpears. Corlath was near with his hoft, the friend of car-borne Cairbar. We came like a ftream by night. His heroes fell before us. When the people of the valley rofe, they faw their blood with morning's light. But we rolled away, like wreaths of mift, to Cormac's ecchoing hall. Our fwords rose to defend the king. But Temora's halls were empty. Cormac had fallen in his youth. The king of Erin was no more!

Sadness feized the fons of Erin. They flowly, gloomily retired: like clouds that, long having threatened rain, vanish behind the hills. The fons of Usnoth moved, in their grief, towards Tura's founding bay. We passed by Seláma. Cairbar retired like Lano's mist, when driven before the winds. It was then I beheld thee, O Dar-thula, like the light of Etha's sun." Lovely is that beam!" I said. The crowded sigh of my bosom rose. "Thou camest in thy beauty, Dar-thula, to Etha's mournful chief. But the winds have deceived us, daughter of Colla, and the soc is near!"

"Yes! the foc is near," faid the rushing strength of Althos †. "I heard their clanging arms on the coast. I saw the dark wreaths of Erin's standard. Distinct is the voice of Cairbar ‡. Loud as Cromla's falling stream. He had seen the dark ship on the sea, before the [‡] Cairbar had gathered an army, to the coast of Usser, in order to oppose Fingal, who prepared for an expedition into Ireland to re-establish the house of Cormac on the throne, which Cairbar had usurped. Between the wings of Cairbar's army was the bay of Tura, into which the ship of the sons of Usnoth was driven: so that there was no possibility of their escaping.

[†] Althos had just returned from viewing the coast of Lona, whither he had been fent by Nathos, the beginning of the night.

dusky night came down. His people watch on Lena's plain. They lift ten thousand swords." "And let them lift ten thousand swords," faid Nathos with a smile. "The sons of car-borne Usnoth will never tremble in danger! Why dost thou roll with all thy soam, thou roaring sea of Erin? Why do ye rustle, on your dark wings, ye whistling storms of the sky? Do ye think, ye storms, that ye keep Nathos on the coast? No: his soul detains him, children of the night! Althos! bring my father's arms: thou sees them beaming to the stars. Bring the spear of Semo †. It stands in the dark-bosomed ship!"

HE brought the arms. Nathos covered his limbs, in all their shining steel. The stride of the chief is lovely. The joy of his eyes was terrible. He looks towards the coming of Cairbar. The wind is ruslling in his hair. Darthula is silent at his side. Her look is sixed on the chief. She strives to hide the rising sigh. Two tears swell in her radiant eyes!

[†] Semo was grandfather to Nathos by the mother's fide. The spear mentioned here was given to Usnoth on his marriage, it being the custom then for the father of the lady to give his arms to his son-in-law.

[&]quot; ALTHOS !"

"ALTHOS!" faid the chief of Etha, "I fee a cave in that rock. Place Dar-thula there. Let thy arm, my brother, be firong. Ardan! we meet the foe; call to battle gloomy Cairbar. O that he came in his founding ffeel, to meet the fon of Usnoth! Dar-thula! if thou shalt escape, look not on the fallen Nathos! Lift thy fails, O Althos, towards the ecchoing groves of my land."

"Tell the chief*, that his fon fell with fame; that my fword did not shun the fight. Tell him I fell in the midst of thousands. Let the joy of his grief be great. Daughter of Colla! call the maids to Etha's ecchoing hall! Let their songs arise for Nathos, when shadowy autumn returns. O that the voice of Cona, that Ossian, might be heard in my praise! then would my spirit rejoice in the midst of the rushing winds." "And my voice shall praise thee, Nathos, chief of the woody Etha! The voice of Ossian shall rise in thy praise, son of the generous Usnoth! Why was I not on Lena, when the battle rose? Then would the sword of Ossian defend thee; or himself fall low!"

WE fat, that night, in Selma round the flrength of the shell. The wind was abroad, in the oaks. The spirit of the mountain * roared. The blaft came ruftling through the hall, and gently touched my harp. The found was mournful and low, like the fong of the tomb. Fingal heard it the first. The crouded fighs of his bosom rose. "Some of my heroes are low," faid the grey-haired king of Morven. "I hear the found of death on the harp. Offian, touch the trembling firing. Bid the forrow rife; that their spirits may fly with joy, to Morven's woody hills!" I touched the harp before the king, the found was mournful and low. "Bend forward from your clouds," I faid, " ghofts of my fathers! bend. Lay by the red terror of your courfe. Receive the falling chief; whether he comes from a diffant land, or rifes from the rolling fea. Let his robe of mist be near; his fpear that is formed of a cloud. Place an half-extinguished meteor by his fide, in the form of the hero's fword. And, oh! let his countenance be lovely, that his friends may delight in his prefence. Bend from your clouds," I faid, " ghofts of my fathers! bend!"

* Ufnoth.

Such was my fong, in Selma, to the lightlytrembling harp. But Nathos was on Erin's

^{*} By the fpirit of the mountain is meant that deep and melancholy found which precedes a fform; well known to those who live in a high country.

shore, furrounded by the night. He heard the voice of the foe, amidst the roar of tumbling waves. Silent he heard their voice, and rested on his spear! Morning rose, with its beams. The sons of Erin appear, like grey rocks, with all their trees, they spread along the coast. Cairbar stood, in the midst. He grimly smiled when he saw the foe. Nathos rushed forward, in his strength: nor could Dar-thula stay behind. She came with the hero, listing her shining spear. "And who are these, in their armour, in the pride of youth? Who but the sons of Usnoth, Althos and dark-haired Ardan?"

"Come," faid Nathos, "come! chief of high Temora! Let our battle be on the coast, for the white-bosomed maid. His people are not with Nathos; they are behind these rolling seas. Why dost thou bring thy thousands against the chief of Etha? Thou didst fly * from him, in battle, when his friends were around his spear." "Youth of the heart of pride, shall Erin's king sight with thee? Thy fathers were not among the renowned, nor of the kings of men. Are the arms of soes in their halls? Or the shields of other times? Cairbar is renowned in Temora, nor does he sight with feeble men!"

^{*} He alludes to the flight of Cairbar from Seláma.

The tear flarted from car-borne Nathos. He turned his eyes to his brothers. Their spears slew, at once. Three heroes lay on earth. Then the light of their swords gleamed on high. The ranks of Erin yield; as a ridge of dark clouds before a blast of wind! Then Cairbar ordered his people, and they drew a thousand bows. A thousand arrows slew. The sons of Usnoth fell in blood. They fell like three young oaks, which stood alone on the hill: The traveller saw the lovely trees and wondered how they grew so lonely: the blast of the desart came, by night, and laid their green heads low; next day he returned, but they were withered, and the heath was bare!

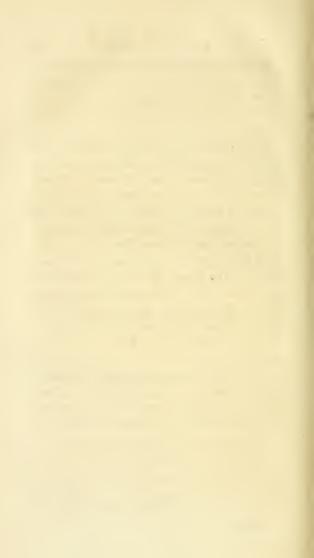

DAR-THULA flood in filent grief, and beheld their fall! No tear is in her eye. But her look is wildly fad. Pale was her cheek. Her trembling lips broke short an half-formed word. Her dark hair flew on wind. The gloomy Cairbar came. "Where is thy lover now? the carborne chief of Etha? Hast thou beheld the halls of Usnoth? Or the dark-brown hills of Fingal? My battle would have roared on Morven, had not the winds met Dar-thula. Fingal himself would have been low and forrow dwelling in Selma!" Her shield fell from Darthula's arm. Her breast of snow appeared. It appeared:

appeared; but it was flained with blood. An arrow was fixed in her fide. She fell on the fallen Nathos, like a wreath of fnow! Her hair fpreads wide on his face. Their blood is mixing round!"

"DAUGHTER of Colla! thou art low!" faid Cairbar's hundred bards. "Silence is at the blue streams of Seláma. Truthil's * race have failed. When wilt thou rise in thy beauty, first of Erin's maids? Thy sleep is long in the tomb. The morning distant far. The sun shall not come to thy bed and say, "Awake Dar-thula! awake, thou first of women! the wind of spring is abroad! The slowers shake their heads on the green hills. The woods wave their growing leaves. Retire, O sun, the daughter of Colla is asseep. She will not come forth in her beauty. She will not move, in the steps of her loveliness!"

Such was the fong of the bards, when they raifed the tomb. I fung over the grave, when the king of Morven came; when he came to green Erin to fight with car-borne Cairbar!

^{*} Truthil was the founder of Dar-thula's family.

THE

DEATH of CUTHULLIN.

Å

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Cuthullin, after the arms of Fingal had expelled Swaran from Ireland, continued to manage the affairs of that kingdom as the guardian of Cormac, the young king. In the third year of Cuthullin's administration, Torlath, the son of Cantéla, rebelled in Connaught; and advanced to Temora to dethrone Cormac. Cuthullin marched against him, came up with him at the lake of Lego, and totally defeated his forces. Torlath fell in battle by Cuthullin's hand; but as he too-eagerly pressed on the enemy, he was mortally wounded. The affairs of Cormac, though, for sometime, supported by Nathos, as mentioned in the preceding poem, fell into confusion at the death of Cuthullin. Cormac himself was slain by the rebel Cairbar; and the re-establishment of the royal family of Ireland by Fingal, furnishes the subject of the epic poem of Temora.

THE

DEATH of CUTHULLIN:

A

P O E M.

Is the wind on the thield of Fingal? Or is the voice of past times in my hall? Sing on, sweet voice, for thou art pleasant. Thou carriest away my night with joy. Sing on, O Bragela, daughter of car-borne Sorglan!

"IT is the white wave of the rock, and not Cuthullin's fails. Often do the mists deceive me, for the ship of my love! when they rife round some ghost, and spread their grey skirts on the wind. Why dost thou delay thy coming, son of the generous Semo? Four times has autumn returned with its winds, and raised the seas of Togorma*, since thou hast been in the roar care.

^{*} Togorma, i. e. the island of blue waves, one of the Hebrides, was subject to Connal, the son of Caithbat, Cuthullin's friend. He is sometimes called the son of Colgar, from one of that name who was the sounder of the family. Connal, a sew days before the news of Torlath's revolt, came to Temora, had sailed to Togorma, his native isle; where he was detained by contrary winds during the war in which Cuthullin was killed.

battles, and Bragéla distant far! Hills of the isle of mist! when will ye answer to his hounds? But ye are dark in your clouds. Sad Bragéla calls in vain! Night comes rolling down. The face of ocean fails. The heath-cock's head is beneath his wing. The hind sleeps, with the hart of the desart. They shall rise with morning's light, and feed by the mostly stream. But my tears return with the fun. My sighs come on with the night. When wilt thou come in thine arms, O chief of Erin's wars?"

PLEASANT is thy voice in Offian's ear, daughter of car-borne Sorglan! But retire to the hall of shells; to the beam of the burning oak. Attend to the murmur of the sea: it rolls at Dunscai's walls: let sleep descend on thy blue eyes. Let the hero arise in thy dreams!

CUTHULLIN fits at Lego's lake, at the dark rolling of waters. Night is around the hero. His thousands spread on the heath. A hundred oaks burn, in the midst. The feast of shells is smoaking wide. Carril strikes the harp, beneath a tree. His grey locks glitter in the beam. The rustling blast of night is near, and lifts his aged hair. His song is of the blue Togorma, and of its chief, Cuthullin's friend! "Why art thou absent, Connal, in the day of the gloomy storm? The chiefs of the south have convened, against the car-borne Cormac. The winds detain thy fails. Thy blue waters roll around thee. But Cormac is not alone. The fon of Semo fights his wars! Semo's fon his battles fights! the terror of the flranger! He that is like the vapour of death, flowly borne by fultry winds. The fun reddens in its prefence: The people fall around."

SUCH was the fong of Carril, when a fon of the foe appeared. He threw down his pointless spear. He spoke the words of Torlath! Torlath, chief of heroes, from Lego's sable surge! He that led his thousands to battle, against carborne Cormac. Cormac who was distant far, in Temora's * ecchoing halls: he learned to bend the bow of his fathers; and to lift the spear. Nor long didst thou lift the spear, mildly-shining beam of youth! death stands dim behind thee, like the darkened half of the moon, behind its growing light! Cuthullin rose before the bard †, that came from generous Torlath. He offered

^{*} The royal palace of the Irish kings; Teamhrath, according to some of the bards.

[†] The bards were the heralds of ancient times; and their persons were sacred on account of their office. In later times they abused that privilege; and as their persons were inviolable, they satyrised and lampooned so freely those who were not liked by their patrons, that they became a public nuisance. Screened under the character of heralds, they grossy abused the enemy when he would not accept the terms they offered.

him the shell of joy. He honoured the son of songs. "Sweet voice of Lego!" he said, "what are the words of Torlath? Comes he to our feast or battle, the car-borne son of Cantéla *?"

" HE comes to thy battle," replied the bard, " to the founding strife of spears. When morning is grey on Lego, Torlath will fight on the plain. Wilt thou meet him, in thine arms, king of the ifle of mist? Terrible is the spear of Torlath! it is a meteor of night. He lifts it, and the people fall! death fits in the lightning of his fword!" "Do I fear," replied Cuthullin, "the fpear of car-borne Torlath? He is brave as a thousand heroes: but my foul delights in war! The fword rests not by the fide of Cuthullin, bard of the times of old! Morning shall meet me on the plain, and gleam on the blue arms of Semo's fon. But fit thou, on the heath, O bard! and let us hear thy voice. Partake of the joyful shell; and hear the fongs of Temora!"

"This is no time," replied the bard, "to hear the fong of joy: when the mighty are to meet in battle, like the firength of the waves of Lego. Why art thou fo dark, Slimora †! with all thy filent woods? No flar trembles on thy top. No moon-beam on thy fide. But the meteors of death are there: the grey watry forms of ghosts. Why art thou dark, Slimora! with thy filent woods?" He retired, in the found of his fong. Carril joined his voice. The music was like the memory of joys that are past, pleasant and mournful to the foul. The ghosts of departed bards heard on Slimora's fide. Soft founds spread along the wood. The filent valleys of night rejoice. So, when he sits in the silence of the day, in the valley of his breeze, the humming of the mountain bee comes to Ossian's ear: the gale drowns it in its course; but the pleasant sound returns again! Slant looks the sun on the field; gradual grows the shade of the hill!

^{*} Cean-teola', bead of a family.

⁴ Slia'mer, great bill.

"RAISE," faid Cuthullin, to his hundred bards, "the fong of the noble Fingal: that fong which he hears at night, when the dreams of his rest descend: when the bards strike the distant harp, and the faint light gleams on Selma's walls. Or let the grief of Lara rise: the sighs of the mother of Calmar*, when he was fought, in vain, on his hills; when she beheld his bow in the hall. Carril, place the shield of Caithbat on that branch. Let the spear of Cuthullin be near; that the found of my battle may rife, with the grey beam of the east." The hero leaned on his father's shield: the song of Lara rose! The hundred bards were distant far: Carril alone is near the chief. The words of the song were his: the sound of his harp was mournful.

^{*} Calmar, the fon of Matha. His death is related at large in the third book of Fingal. I'e was the only fon of Matha; and the family was extinct in him. The feat of the family was on the banks of the river Lara, in the neighbourhood of Lego, and probably near the place where Cuthullin lay; which circumftance fuggefied to him, the lamentation of Alclétha over her fon.

"ALCLETHA* with the aged locks! mother of car-borne Calmar! why doft thou look toward the defart, to behold the return of thy fon? These are not his heroes, dark on the heath: nor is that the voice of Calmar. It is but the distant grove, Alclétha! but the roar of the mountain wind!" "Who† bounds over Lara's stream, sister of the noble Calmar? Does not Alclétha behold his spear? But her eyes are dim! Is it not the son of Matha, daughter of my love?"

"IT is but an aged oak, Alcletha!" replied the lovely weeping Alona ‡. "It is but an oak,

* Ald-cla'tha, decaying beauty: probably a poetical name given the mother of Calmar, by the bard himself.

[†] Alcletha speaks. Calmar had promised to return, by a certain day, and his mother and his sister Alona are represented as looking, with impatience, towards that quarter where they expected Calmar should make his first appearance.

¹ Aluine, exquisitely beautiful.

Alclétha, bent over Lara's stream. But who comes along the plain? forrow is in his speed. He lifts high the fpear of Calmar. Alcletha, it is covered with blood!" "But it is covered with the blood of foes *, fifter of car-borne Calmar! His fpear never returned unstained with blood: nor his bow from the firife of the mighty. The battle is confumed in his presence: he is a flame of death. Alona! Youth + of the mournful fpeed! where is the fon of Alcletha? Does he return with his fame, in the midft of his ecchoing shields? Thou art dark and filent! Calmar is then no more. Tell me not, warrior, how he fell. I must not hear of his wound!" Why dost thou look towards the defart, mother of low-laid Calmar ?

Such was the fong of Carril, when Cuthullin lay on his shield. The bards rested on their harps. Sleep sell softly around. The son of Semo was awake alone. His soul was fixed on war. The burning oaks began to decay. Faint red light is spread around. A seeble voice is heard! The ghost of Calmar came! He stalked dimly along the beam. Dark is the wound in his fide. His hair is diffordered and loofe. Joy fits pale on his face. He feems to invite Cuthullin to his cave.

[·] Alcletha speaks.

[†] She addresses herself to Larnir, Calmar's friend, who had returned with the news of his death.

" Son of the cloudy night!" faid the rifing chief of Erin. "Why dost thou bend thy dark eyes on me, ghost of the noble Calmar? Wouldest thou frighten me, O Matha's fon! from the battles of Cormac? Thy hand was not feeble in war: neither was thy voice for peace. How art thou changed, chief of Lara! if thou now dost advise to sly! But, Calmar, I never fled. I never feared the ghosts of night. Small is their knowlege, weak their hands; their dwelling is in the wind. But my foul grows in danger, and rejoices in the noise of steel. Retire thou to thy cave. Thou art not Calmar's ghost. He delighted in battle. His arm was like the thunder of heaven!" He retired in his blast with joy, for he had heard the voice of his praise.

THE faint beam of the morning rofe. The found of Caithbat's buckler spread. Green Erin's warriors convened, like the roar of many streams. The horn of war is heard over Lego. The mighty Torlath came? "Why dost thou come with thy thousands, Cuthullin," said the chief of Lego. I know the strength of thy arm.

Thy foul is an unextinguished fire. Why fight we not on the plain, and let our hosts behold our deeds? Let them behold us like roaring waves, that tumble round a rock: the mariners hasten away, and look on their strife with fear.

"Thou rifest, like the sun, on my soul," replied the son of Semo. "Thine arm is mighty, O Torlath! and worthy of my wrath. Retire, ye men of Ullin, to Slimora's shady side. Behold the chief of Erin, in the day of his same. Carril! tell to mighty Connal, if Cuthullin must fall, tell him I accused the winds, which roar on Togorma's waves. Never was he absent in battle, when the strife of my same arose. Let his sword be before Cormac, like the beam of heaven. Let his counsel sound in Temora, in the day of danger!

He rushed, in the found of his arms, like the terrible spirit of Loda *, when he comes, in the roar of a thousand storms, and scatters battles from his eyes. He sits on a cloud over Lochlin's feas. His mighty hand is on his sword. Winds lift his flaming locks! The waining moon halflights his dreadful face. His features blended in darkness arise to view. So terrible was Cuthullin in the day of his fame. Torlath fell by his hand. Lego's heroes mourned. They gather around the chief, like the clouds of the defart. A thoufand fwords rose at once; a thousand arrows flew; but he flood like a rock in the midft of a roaring fea. They fell around. He strode in blood. Dark Slimora ecchoed wide. The fons of Ullin came. The battle fpread over Lego. The chief of Erin overcame. He returned over the field with his fame. But pale he returned! The joy of his face was dark. He rolled his eyes in filence. The fword hung, unsheathed, in his hand. His spear bent at every step!

^{*} Loda, in the third book of Fingal, is mentioned as a place of worship in Scandinavia: by the spirit of Loda, the poet probably means Odin, the great deity of the northern nations. He is described here with all his terrors.

"CARRIL," faid the chief in fecret, "the flrength of Cuthullin fails. My days are with the years that are past. No morning of mine shall arise. They shall feek me at Temora, but I shall not be found. Cormac will weep in his hall, and say, "Where is Erin's chief?" But my name is renowned! my same in the song of bards. The youth will say in secret, O let me die as Cuthullin died. Renown cloathed him like a robe. The light of his same is great.

Draw

Draw the arrow from my fide. Lay Cuthullin beneath that oak. Place the shield of Caithbat near, that they may behold me amidst the arms of my fathers!"

" AND is the fon of Semo fallen?" faid Carril with a figh. " Mournful are Tura's walls. Sorrow dwells at Dunfcäi. Thy fpouse is left alone in her youth. The fon + of thy love is alone! He shall come to Bragela, and ask her why the weeps. He thall lift his eyes to the wall, and fee his father's fword. "Whofe fword is that?" he will fay. The foul of his mother is fad. Who is that, like the hart of the defart, in the murmur of his course? His eyes look wildly round in fearch of his friend. Connal, fon of Colgar, where haft thou been, when the mighty fell? Did the feas of Cogorma roll around thee? Was the wind of the fouth in thy fails? The mighty have fallen in battle, and thou wast not there. Let none tell it in Selma, nor in Morven's woody land. Fingal will be fad, and the fons of the defart mourn!"

[†] Conloch, who was afterwards very famous for his great exploits in Ireland. He was so remarkable for his dexterity in handling the javelin, that when a good marksiman is described, it has passed into a proverb, in the north of Scotland, He is unerring as the arm of Conloch.

By the dark rolling waves of Lego they raifed the hero's tomb. Luäth*, at a diffance, lies. The fong of bards rose over the dead.

"BLEST † be thy foul, fon of Semo. Thou wert mighty in battle. Thy strength was like the strength of a stream: thy speed like the eagle's wing. Thy path in battle was terrible: the steps of death were behind thy sword. Blest be thy soul, son of Semo, car-borne chief of Dunscäi. Thou hast not fallen by the sword of the mighty, neither was thy blood on the spear of the brave. The arrow came, like the sting of death in a blast: nor did the secble hand, which drew the bow, perceive it. Peace to thy soul, in thy cave, chief of the isse of miss!"

"The mighty are difperfed at Temora: there is none in Cormac's hall. The king mourns in his youth. He does not behold thy return. The found of thy shield is ceased: his foes are gathering round. Soft be thy rest in thy cave,

^{*} It was of old, the custom to bury the favourite dog near the master. This was not peculiar to the ancient Scots, for we find it practised by many other nations in their ages of heroisin. There is a stone shewn still at Dunscai in the isle of Sky, to which Cuthullin commonly bound his dog Luath. The stone goes by his name to this day.

[†] This is the fong of the bards over Cuthullin's tomb. Every ftanza closes with fone remarkable title of the hero, which was always the custom in funeral elegies.

chief of Erin's wars! Bragéla will not hope for thy return, or fee thy fails in ocean's foam. Her steps are not on the shore: nor her ear open to the voice of thy rowers. She sits in the hall of shells. She sees the arms of him that is no more. Thine eyes are full of tears, daughter of carborne Sorglan! Blest be thy foul in death, O chief of shady Tura!"

THE

BATTLE of LORA:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Fingal, on his return from Ireland, after he had expelled Swaran from that kingdom, made a feaft to all his heroes: he forgot to invite Ma-ronnan and Aldo, two chiefs, who had not been along with him in his expedition. They refented his neglect; and went over to Erragon king of Sora, a country of Scandinavia, the declared enemy of Fingal. The valour of Aldo foon gained him a great reputation in Sora: and Lorma the beautiful wife of Erragon fell in love with him. He found means to escape with her, and to come to Fingal, who resided then in Selma on the western coast. Erragon invaded Scotland, and was slain in battle by Gaul the son of Morni, after he had rejected terms of peace offered him by Fingal. In this war Aldo fell, in a single combat, by the hands of his rival Erragon; and the unfortunate Lorma afterwards died of grief.

THE

BATTLE of LORA:

A

P O E M.

SON of the diftant land, who dwellest in the fecret cell! do I hear the found of thy grove? or is it thy voice of fongs? The torrent was loud in my ear; but I heard a tuneful voice. Dost thou praise the chiefs of thy land: or the spirits * of the wind? But, lonely dweller of rocks! look thou on that heathy plain. Thou feest green tombs, with their rank, whistling grass: With their stones of mostly heads. Thou feest them, fon of the rock, but Ossian's eyes have failed.

A MOUNTAIN-STREAM comes roaring down and fends its waters round a green hill. Four mostly stones, in the midst of withered grass, rear their heads on the top. Two trees, which the storms have bent, spread their whistling branches around. This is thy dwelling, Erragon; this thy narrow house: the sound of thy shells have been long forgot in Sora. Thy shield is become dark in thy hall. Erragon, king of ships! chief of distant Sora! how hast thou sallen on our mountains? How is the mighty low? Son of the secret cell! dost thou delight in songs? Hear the battle of Lora. The sound of its steel is long since past. So thunder on the darkened hill roars and is no more. The sun returns with his silent beams. The glittering rocks, and green heads of the mountains smile!

[·] Alluding to the religious hymns of the Culdees.

The bay of Cona received our ships * from Erin's rolling waves. Our white sheets hung loofe to the mass. The boisterous winds roared behind the groves of Morven. The horn of the king is sounded; the deer start from their rocks. Our arrows slew in the woods. The feast of the hill is spread. Our joy was great on our rocks, for the fall of the terrible Swaran. Two heroes were forgot at our feast. The rage of their bosoms burned. They rolled their red eyes in secret. The sigh bursts from their breasts. They were feen to talk together, and to throw their spears on earth. They were two dark clouds, in the midst of our joy; like pillars of mist on the settled sea. They glitter to the sun, but the mariners fear a fform.

* This was at Fingal's return from his war against Swaran.

[†] Erragon, or Ferg-thonn, fignifies the rage of the waves; probably a poetical name given him by Offian himfelf; for he goes by the name of Annir in tradition.

" RAISE my white fails," faid Ma-ronnan, " raife them to the winds of the west. Let us rush, O Aldo, through the foam of the northern wave. We are forgot at the feaft: but our arms have been red in blood. Let us leave the hills of Fingal, and ferve the king of Sora. His countenance is fierce. War darkens around his fpear. Let us be renowned, O Aldo, in the battles of other lands!"

THEY took their fwords, their shields of thongs. They ruthed to Lumar's refounding bay. They came to Sora's haughty king, the chief of bounding fleeds. Erragon had returned from the chace. His spear was red in blood. He bent his dark face to the ground: and whistled as he went. He took the strangers to his feasts: they fought and conquered in his wars.

At no returned with his fame towards Sora's lofty walls. From her tower looked the fpoufe of Erragon, the humid, rolling eyes of Lorma. Her yellow hair flies on the wind of ocean. Her white breast heaves, like snow on heath; when the gentle winds arife, and flowly move it in the light. She faw young Aldo, like the beam of Sora's fetting fun. Her foft heart fighed. Tears filled her eyes. Her white arm fupported her head. Three days she fat within the hall, and covered her grief with joy. On the fourth she fled with the hero, along the troubled sea. They came to Cona's mostly towers, to Fingal king of spears.

" Albo of the heart of pride!" faid Fingal rifing in wrath: " shall I defend thee from the rage of Sora's injured king? who will now receive my people into their halls? Who will give the feast of strangers, fince Aldo, of the little foul, has dishonoured my name in Sora? Go to thy hills, thou feeble hand. Go: hide thee in thy caves. Mournful is the battle we must fight, with Sora's gloomy king. Spirit of the noble Trenmor! When will Fingal cease to fight? I was born in the midst of battles*, and my steps must move in blood to the tomb. But my hand did not injure the weak, my steel did not touch the feeble in arms. I behold thy tempefts, O Morven, which will overturn my halls; when my children are dead in battle, and none remains to dwell in Selma. Then will the feeble come, but they will not know my tomb. My ^{*} Comhal the father of Fingal was slain in battle, against the tribe of Morni, the very day that Fingal was born; so that he may, with propriety, be said to have been born in the midst of battles.

renown is only in fong. My deeds shall be as a dream to future times!"

His people gathered around Erragon, as the storms round the ghost of night; when he calls them, from the top of Morven, and prepares to pour them on the land of the stranger. He came to the shore of Cona. He sent his bard to the king; to demand the combat of thousands; or the land of many hills! Fingal sat in his hall with the friends of his youth around him. The young heroes were at the chace, far distant in the desart. The grey-haired chiefs talked of other times; of the actions of their youth; when the aged Nartmor* came, the chief of streamy Lora.

"This is no time," faid Nartmor," to hear the fongs of other years: Erragon frowns on the coast, and lists ten thousand swords. Gloomy is the king among his chiefs! he is like the darkened moon, amidst the meteors of night; when they fail along her skirts, and give the light that has failed o'er her orb." "Come," faid Fingal, "from thy hall, come daughter of my love: come from thy hall, Bosmina †, maid of streamy Morven! Nartmor, take the steeds of the strangers. Attend the daughter of Fingal! Let her bid the king of Sora to our feaft, to Selma's shaded wall. Offer him, O Bosmina, the peace of heroes, and the wealth of generous Aldo. Our youths are far distant. Age is on our trembling hands!"

^{*} Neart-mor, great strength. Lora, noisy.

[†] Bof-mhina, foft and tender band. She was the youngest of Fingal's children.

398 The BATTLE of LORA:

SHE came to the host of Erragon, like a beam of light to a cloud. In her right hand was feen a sparkling shell. In her lest an arrow of gold. The first, the joyful mark of peace! The latter, the fign of war. Erragon brightened in her presence as a rock, before the sudden beams of the sun; when they issue from a broken cloud, divided by the roaring wind!

"Son of the diffant Sora," began the mildly blushing maid. "Come to the feast of Morven's king, to Selma's shaded walls. Take the peace of heroes, O warrior! Let the dark sword rest by thy side. Chusest thou the wealth of kings? Then hear the words of generous Aldo. He gives to Erragon an hundred steeds, the children of the rein: an hundred maids from distant lands; an hundred hawks with sluttering wing, that fly across the sky. An hundred girdles *

^{*} Sanctified girdles, till very lately, were kept in many families in the north of Scotland; they were bound about women in labour, and were supposed to alleviate their pains, and to accelerate the birth. They were impressed with several mystical figures, and the ceremony of binding them about the woman's wait, was accompanied with words and gestures which shewed the custom to have come originally from the druids.

shall also be thine, to bind high-bosomed maids. The friends of the births of heroes. The cure of the sons of toil. Ten shells studded with gems shall shine in Sora's towers: the bright water trembles on their stars, and seems to be sparkling wine. They gladdened once the kings of the world*, in the midst of their ecchoing halls. These, O hero, shall be thine; or thy white-bosomed spouse. Lorma shall roll her bright eyes in thy halls; though Fingal loves the generous Aldo: Fingal! who never injured a hero, though his arm is strong!"

"SOFT voice of Cona!" replied the king, "tell him, he fpreads his feaft in vain. Let Fingal pour his fpoils around me. Let him bend beneath my power. Let him give me the fwords of his fathers: the shields of other times; that my children may behold them in my halls, and fay, "These are the arms of Fingal." "Never shall they behold them in thy halls!" faid the rising pride of the maid. "They are in the hands of heroes, who never yielded in war. King of ecchoing Sora! the storm is gathering on our hills. Dost thou not foresee the fall of thy people, son of the distant land?"

^{*} The Roman emperors.

400 The BATTLE of LORA:

SHE came to Selma's filent halls. The king beheld her down-cast eyes. He rose from his place, in his strength. He shook his aged locks. He took the sounding mail of Trenmor. The dark-brown shield of his fathers. Darkness filled Selma's hall, when he stretched his hand to his spear: the ghosts of thousands were near, and foresaw the death of the people. Terrible joy rose in the face of the aged heroes. They rushed to meet the foe. Their thoughts are on the deeds of other years: and on the same that rises from death!

Now at Trathal's ancient tomb the dogs of the chace appeared. Fingal knew that his young heroes followed. He ftopt in the midft of his course. Oscar appeared the first; then Morni's son, and Némi's race. Fercuth * shewed his gloomy form. Dermid spread his dark hair on wind. Ossian came the last. I hummed the song of other times. My spear supported my steps over the little streams. My thoughts were of mighty men. Fingal struck his bossy shield; and gave the dismal sign of war. A thousand swords at once unsheathed, gleam on the waving heath. Three grey-haired sons of song, raise the tuneful, mournful voice. Deep and dark with founding steps, we rush, a gloomy ridge, along: like the thower of a storm, when it pours on a narrow vale.

^{*} Fear-cuth, the fame with Fergus, the man of the word, or a commander of an army.

THE king of Morven fat on his hill. The fun-beam of battle flew on the wind. The friends of his youth are near, with all their waving locks of age. Joy rofe in the hero's eyes when he beheld his fons in war: when he faw us amidft the lightning of fwords, mindful of the deeds of our fathers. Erragon came on, in his ftrength, like the roar of a winter ftream. The battle falls around his fteps: death dimly flalks along by his fide!

"Who comes," faid Fingal, "like the bounding roe, like the hart of ecchoing Cona? His shield glitters on his side. The clang of his armour is mournful. He meets with Erragon in the strife! Behold the battle of the chiefs! It is like the contending of ghosts in a gloomy storm. But fallest thou, son of the hill, and is thy white bosom stained with blood? Weep, unhappy Lorma, Aldo is no more!" The king took the spear of his strength. He was sad for the fall of Aldo. He bent his deathful eyes on the soe: but Gaul met the king of Sora. Who can relate the fight of the chiefs? The mighty stranger fell!

VOL. I.

402 The BATTLE of LORA:

" Sons of Cona!" Fingal cried aloud, "flop the hand of death. Mighty was he that is low. Much is he mourned in Sora! The ftranger will come towards his hall, and wonder why it is fo filent. The king is fallen, O ftranger. The joy of his house is ceased. Listen to the found of his woods. Perhaps his ghost is murmuring there! But he is far distant, on Morven, beneath the fword of a foreign foe." Such were the words of Fingal, when the bard raifed the fong of peace. We stopped our uplifted fwords. We spared the feeble foe. We laid Erragon in a tomb. I raifed the voice of grief. The clouds of night came rolling down. The ghost of Erragon appeared to fome. His face was cloudy and dark; an half-formed figh is in his breaft. " Bleft be thy foul, O king of Sora! thine arm was terrible in war!"

LORMA fat, in Aldo's hall. She fat at the light of a flaming oak. The night came down, but he did not return. The foul of Lorma is fad! "What detains thee, hunter of Cona? Thou didft promife to return. Has the deer been diffant far? do the dark winds figh, round thee, on the heath? I am in the land of ftrangers, where is my friend, but Aldo? Come from thy founding hills, O my best beloved!"

HER eyes are turned toward the gate. She listens to the rustling blast. She thinks it is Aldo's tread. Joy rifes in her face! But forrow returns again, like a thin cloud on the moon. "Wilt thou not return, my love? Let me behold the face of the hill. The moon is in the east. .Calm and bright is the breast of the lake! When shall I behold his dogs, returning from the chace? When shall I hear his voice, loud and distant on the wind? Come from thy founding hills, hunter of woody Cona!" His thin ghost appeared, on a rock, like a watry beam of feeble light: When the moon rushes sudden from between two clouds, and the midnight shower is on the field! She followed the empty form over the heath. She knew that her hero fell. I heard her approaching cries on the wind, like the mournful voice of the breeze, when it fighs on the grafs of the cave!

SHE came. She found her hero! Her voice was heard no more. Silent she rolled her eyes. She was pale, and wildly fad! Few were her days on Cona. She funk into the tomb. Fingal commanded his bards; they fung over the death of Lorma. The daughters of Morven mourned her, for one day in the year, when the dark winds of autumn returned!

404 The BATTLE of LORA.

Son of the distant land *! Thou dwellest in the field of fame! O let thy song arise, at times, in praise of those who fell. Let their thin ghosts rejoice around thee; and the soul of Lorma come on a feeble beam †: when thou liest down to rest, and the moon looks into thy cave. Then shalt thou see her lovely; but the tear is still on her cheek!

* The poet addresses himself to the Culdee.

+ Be thou on a moon-beam, O Morna, near the window of my rest; when my thoughts are of peace; and the din of arms is past.

FINGAL, B. I.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

