

BANN 3. SCS. BC.3

For the Library of the Faculty of Advocates from the Editor.

The Buke of the Howlat.

The Buke of the Howlat. By Holland.

Printed at Edinburgh.
MPCCCFFBB.

THIS EDITION OF

THE BUKE OF THE HOWLAT

IS RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED

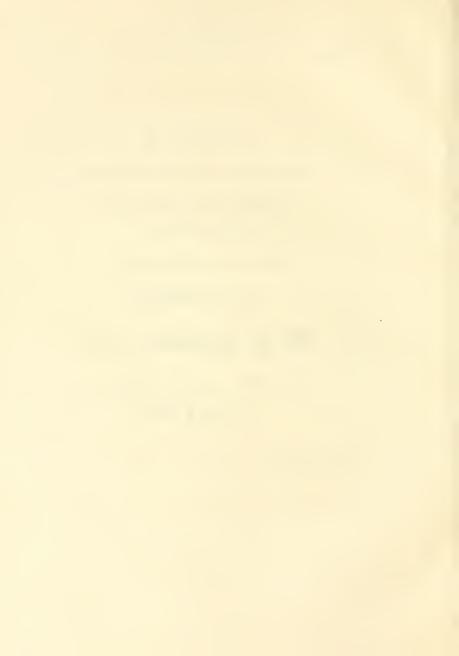

AND PRESENTED

TO THE PRESIDENT
AND MEMBERS

Of the Bannatyne Club

DAVID LAING.

October 23, 1823.

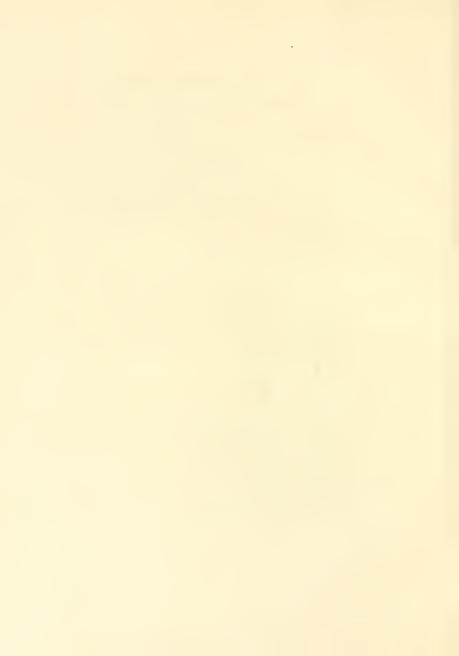

THE BANNATYNE CLVB,

FEBRUARY MDCCCXXIII.

SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART. President.

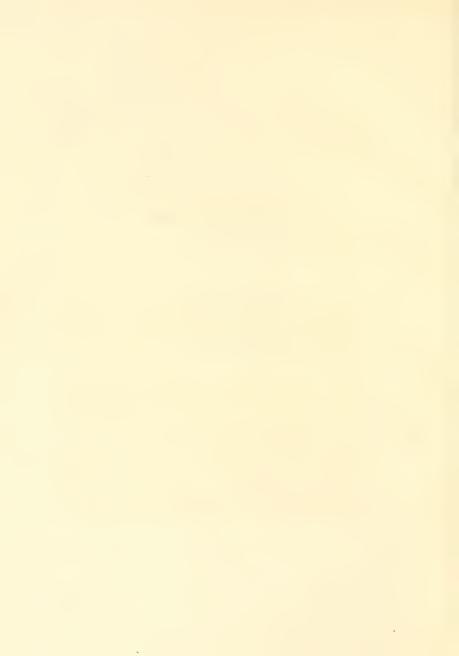

THOMAS THOMSON, ESQ. VICE-PRESIDENT, THE LORD CHIEF BARON OF SCOTLAND, THE LORD CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF THE JURY COURT, LORD BANNATYNE, LORD ELDIN, SIR WILLIAM ARBUTHNOT, BART. JAMES BALLANTYNE, ESQ. ROBERT BELL, ESQ. HENRY COCKBURN, ESQ. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE, ESQ. DAVID CONSTABLE, ESQ. ROBERT DUNDAS, ESQ. ROBERT GRAHAM, ESQ. HENRY JARDINE, ESQ. THOMAS KINNEAR, ESQ. DAVID LAING, ESQ. REVEREND DOCTOR JOHN LEE, JAMES MAIDMENT, ESQ. GILBERT LAING MEASON, ESQ. JOHN ARCHIBALD MURRAY, ESQ. ROBERT PITCAIRN, ESQ. JAMES SKENE, ESQ. GEORGE SMYTHE, ESQ. PATRICK FRASER TYTLER, ESQ.

MEMBERS ADMITTED

25TH NOVEMBER, 1823.

THE EARL OF MINTO,
GEORGE CHALMERS, ESQ.
WILLIAM BLAIR, ESQ.
J. T. GIBSON CRAIG, ESQ. JUN.
ANDREW SKENE, ESQ.
THOMAS MAITLAND, ESQ.

THE PREFACE.

The allegorical Poem of the Howlat was composed about the middle of the fifteenth century. Although it has been regarded by criticks, and certainly without much injustice, as a prolix and very uncouth performance. still it is by no means to be considered as wholly destitute of claims to attention. The forced style of alliteration adopted by the author, has, it is true, imparted to his work a certain degree of obscurity, whilst the singular want of propriety shewn in the construction of the fable may likewise, in some measure, contribute to render it less attractive:—yet, after all, as it serves to fill up a chasm in the history of our poetical literature, the reader's curiosity may be excited, if we attempt to throw some light on the dark veil of allegory under which its primary argument is usually supposed to be concealed.

The Poem itself comes to us in the form of a moral fable, illustrative of the danger of pride; but an idea has been started by an ingenious writer, that, under this ostensible character, there lay concealed an invective against the person and government of James the Second of Scotland. "The length and nature of this Poem," says Mr Pinkerton, "founded on a trite fable, and the long panegyrick on the House of Douglas, convinced me that 'more was meant than meets the ear;' and the lines (in Stanza LXXVI.)

' We cum pure, we gang pure, bath King and Comon; Bot thow rewll the richtouss, thy crowne sall ourere,' certify the idea that the Howlat is no other than the King James II.—a prince little deserving such a satire."

Such a hypothesis may be thought too plausible to be entirely rejected; yet, if such a design did really exist, it was probably nothing more than a subordinate object of the author. But even this admission may perhaps appear too great to an attentive reader of the poem,—which is dated from Ternoway, the seat of the Earls of Moray; and which we are told was composed to please the Countess of Moray, dowit or wedded to a Douglas:—

¹ Pinkerton's Scotish Poems, &c. Vol. I. p. xxix. The reader will observe, that the reading of thy crownc in these lines is not warranted by either of the old manuscript copies.

"Thus for ane Dow of Dunbar drew I this dyte, Dowit with ane Dowglas, and baith war thai dowis."2

The lady here meant is Mary Dunbar, who, in or before the year 1447, brought that Earldom to her husband, Archibald Douglas, third son of James, seventh Earl of Douglas.—But in order more fully to comprehend the tendency of the fable, as well as to fix the precise time when it was written, it will be necessary to advert in a more particular manner to the History of the old Douglas days.

Subsequent to the period when the reins of government were assumed by James II., that house, already the most potent in the kingdom, had received a great accession of power through the influence which William, eighth Earl of Douglas, possessed over the councils and affections of the youthful monarch. By his means, the younger branches of the family were raised to considerable dignities: for, as the excellent old historian of their race says of him, "he was as kind and forward to advance his friends, as he had been to quell his enemies." One of his brothers, Hugh, was created Earl of Ormond; another of them, John, received the title of Lord of Balveny; whilst a third, Archibald, as already has been mentioned, obtained in marriage the daughter of James Dunbar, Earl of Moray, who had died without male issue; by which alliance, he procured the right and title to that earldom. This, it may be added, he obtained through his brother's influence, to the prejudice of James, second Lord Crichton, who, previous to the father's death, had been espoused to the elder daughter. But soon after the marriage of James II. with Mary of Gueldres, in 1449, the favour and power of Douglas began sensibly to fail; till at length, partly in consequence of repeated acts of tyranny and oppression, joined to the representations of his enemies during his absence abroad, the King's affections were entirely alienated from him; and it was deemed prudent to endeavour, by all possible means, to curb his exorbitant power and influence. This object was conceived to be the more urgent, inasmuch as the confederacy which Douglas had entered into with the Earls of Crawford, Ross, and some other of the Scotish nobles, for their mutual protection, was sufficient to alarm the monarch for his own safety, and the security of the kingdom.—But the fate of the Earl of Douglas, who, in February 1452, was stabbed by the King's own hand, is well known, and need hardly be recapitulated.³

² Stanza LXXVII. lines 1 and 2.

William was succeeded in the earldom by his second brother, Sir James, Master of Douglas, who had been educated for the church; and who, along with the Earl of Ormond, and several other friends and relatives, had accompanied Douglas to the town of Stirling. They immediately rose up in arms to revenge such an atrocious act; and, in contempt of the royal authority, they dragged the safe-conduct which Douglas had received, through the streets, 'at the tail of an ill-favoured spittle-jade, or mare;' speaking 'richt sclanderfully' of the ³ On the Monday before Fastrens-even, 21st February, Douglas having received a safe-conduct under the Great Seal, subscribed by all the Lords who at that time were with the King, by which they pledged themselves, "that suppos the King wald brek the band forsaid, that thai suld let it at thair power," he was prevailed on to visit the Court, then held at the Castle of Stirling. "And this samyn Monunday, (in the words of a contemporaneous writer,) he passit to the castell, and spak with the King, that tuke richt wele with him be apperans, and callit him on the morne to the dyner and to the supper, and he come and dynit and sowpit. And thai said, thar was a band betwix the said Erll of Dowglas, and the Erll of Ros, and the Erll of Craufurd. And efter supper, at sevyne houris, the King then beand in the inner chalmer and the said erll, he chargit him to breke the forsaid band. He said he mycht nocht, nor wald nocht. Than the King said, Fals tratour, sen yow will nocht I sall, and stert sodanly till him with ane knyf, and straik him in at the coler, and down in the body. And thai sayd that Pa-

King, and all that were implicated in the Earl's death. After this, having collected their force, they burnt the town of Stirling, and continued to excite great commotions in the southern parts of Scotland:—but at length James—who had most anxiously endeavoured, in a Parliament convened for the express object, to vindicate himself from the charge of treachery, and the violation of publick faith,—partly by strenuous as well as lenient measures, succeeded in inducing them to return to their allegiance.⁴

There seems but little reason to doubt that the How-LAT was composed in the course of the year 1453, during this interval of reconciliation. The author, in a long digression, gives a particular description of the green-tree of Douglas, with its armorial bearings; and the manner in which he speaks of its four branches, shews that he certainly means James, ninth Earl of trik Gray straik him nixt the King, with ane poll ax on the hed, and straik out his harnes. And syne the gentillis that war with the King, gaf thaim ilkane a straik or twa with knyffis."—Chronicle of James II. King of Scots, 4to, p. 46.

—Published from Asloan's Manuscript by Thomas Thomson, Esq.

The reader may compare this account with the narrative of the excellent old historian of the family, David Hume of Godscroft, whose work ought to be familiar to every one who feels interested in the ancient annals of our country.

⁴ Pinkerton's History, vol. I. p. 220.

Douglas, and his three brothers, Archibald, Earl of Moray; Hugh, Earl of Ormond; and John, Lord of Balveny, who are, indeed, specially mentioned by name. -From this circumstance, it is evident, that, had the composition of the poem taken place immediately subsequent to the death of Earl William in 1452, we might at least have expected to find some allusion to an event which struck at the very root of all the grandeur and power of that house. The mere representation of the King, under the degrading form of an owl, complaining to the other birds of his deformity, would, at that time, be altogether insufficient to express the sentiments which the adherents of Douglas entertained of their Monarch; although it might well enough serve to dimly shadow forth their feelings, when more caution and reserve, on their part, was necessary in any allusion to the King's person. But however this may be, no possible doubt can be entertained but that the Howlat must be dated previous, at least, to the battle of Arkinholm, in Dumfries-shire, which took place in May 1455: for, on that occasion, the Douglases having again appeared in open rebellion, Archibald, Earl of Moray, husband of the lady to whom the poem is addressed, was slain; and his brother, Hugh, Earl of Ormond, taken prisoner and executed. In the following month, the whole family of Douglas was attainted, and forced into exile. Well might Lyndsay, alluding to their fate, exclaim,

" Quhare bene the douchtie Erlis of Dowglas, Quhilkis royallie, into this regioun rang? Forfalt and slane! quhat neidith mair process, Dame Curia thame dulfullie down thrang." 5

Of the personal history of the author, whose name was Holland, no kind of information has been discovered. We are even left in ignorance of his christian name; but the poem carries with it the most convincing proof that he was a strenuous adherent of the noble and powerful family of Douglas. The sirname of Holland is, however, so uncommon, and the coincidence of situation and attachment so remarkable, as almost to place it beyond suspicion that the author of the Howlat may have been the Sir Richard Holland, whose name occurs in an Act of Parliament, March 1482; in which a reward is offered for the apprehension of those cummyn of gentill blude,

⁵ Lyndsay's Works, vol. 1. p. 319. "Dame Curia," says Mr Chalmers, "is an allegorical personage of Lyndsay's creation; and frequently brought forward by him. She guided the destinies of the court, and is frequently employed in hurling down courtiers from their eminence."

who were followers of the exiled Earl of Douglas.⁶ But from the manner in which our author is mentioned by Dunbar, and by Sir David Lyndsay, along with the other Scotish makurs, or poets, whom they commemorate, we may readily infer, that he was esteemed as a writer of some distinction; and Lyndsay, who connects his name with those of Merser, Henryson, and three other of their contemporaries, says with emphasis:—

"Thocht they be deid, thair libellis bene livand, Quhilkis to reherse, makis reidaris to rejoise."

⁶ This is an act "for resisting and staynching of the tressoun of the traitour, James of Douglace, quhilk is now cummyng to the hordonris." Besides the reward offered, as above-mentioned, there is a free remission to others who should forsake Douglas and come over to the King; but from this act of grace, Holland is specially excepted. This clause of the act is in the following words:—

[&]quot;Except the personis that pleses his hienes to except, That is to say, the tratouris, Jamis of Douglace, Alexander Jarding, Schir Richard Holland, and Maister Patrick Halyburtou, priestis, and other sic like tratouris that ar sworne Inglismen, and remanys in Ingland,"—Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, vol. 11. p. 139.

From this we learn, (supposing the person named to be our author,) that he was a priest, to whom the title of Schir in those days was given, and from whence originated the usual designation of their being the Pope's Knights. Thus Lyndsay says, [&]quot;The pure priest thinkis he gettis na richt, Be he nocht stilit like an knicht, And callit Schir, before his name; As Schir Thomas, and Schir Williame."

No other of Holland's libellis, or writings, has reached our times, except the Howlar, which was first printed in the year 1792,7 from the copy preserved in Bannatyne's Manuscript, (written in 1568;) but the editor appears to have been singularly unfortunate in a transcriber; numerous passages which were of themselves sufficiently obscure, having been rendered absolutely unintelligible. The text of the present edition is taken from a transcript made some years ago, but since, very carefully collated with the more ancient copy, contained in a valuable manuscript, in the Auchinleck Library, which appears to have been compiled in the earlier part of the sixteenth century, (about the year 1515,) by one John Asloan, or Sloane; and which, in every respect, in so far as the Howlat is concerned, is indisputably superior to The various readings afforded by a careful the other. collation of these two manuscripts, (the onlycopies known to be extant,) are not of much importance; but such of them as seemed worth noticing, will be found in the Appendix, together with a few Notes, illustrative of the poem.

As the reader may be gratified to see a facsimile of the ancient manuscript, which has been followed, a few lines are accordingly given from the end of the poem, to which is subjoined, the autograph of the transcriber.⁸

⁷ In the Appendix subjoined to Pinkerton's Collection of Scotish Poems, reprinted from scarce editions. London, 1792, 3 vols. post 8vo.

In midde of muzzay. Jeppodut Golland Lynboy & tym-b. (2mbay

Jundondey-time of y Goldat

It may be proper, however, before expressing any sentiments as to the poetical merit of the Howlat, to give a brief summary of the fable, for the benefit of those readers who may not be very conversant with writings so antiquated and obscure. They will, by this means, be better enabled to judge for themselves respecting the notions which some people have entertained of its satirical tendency; particularly, should any one, anxious to vindicate the character of the Scotish Monarch, propose the question,

⁸ This, as well as the other ornaments in the volume, were executed by Mr Lizars; that on the title-page being taken from a very clever design by Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe, Esq., for which, and for many similar favours, I owe my best and most grateful acknowledgments.

⁹ In the following summary, much unnecessary trouble has been saved, in availing myself of an elaborate analysis of this poem, by the late Alexander Thomson, Esq.—kindly communicated to me by Dr Robert Anderson, from the collections of his lamented friend, which were intended for a History of Scotish Poetry; but in which no considerable progress seems to have been made.

" Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in't?"

The poet walks out at the soft season of the year, and, sitting down by the side of a river, (of the pleasures of which place, he declines giving any particular description, in order to avoid prolixity, having, as he says, mekle matter in meter to gloss)—he hears a piteous lamentation, uttered by an owl in a holly tree, who was looking with horror at his own visage in the water. The Owl resolves to appeal to the Pope of Birds, in the hopes, that, through the prayers and intercession of his holiness, Dame Nature may be prevailed upon to alter his appearance, and to schape him a schand bird. Accordingly, he comes to the Peacock, who is Pope, and falling reverently on his knees, receives his braid benesoun or benediction. The Pope having heard his complaint, and considering it a weighty affair, directs his secretary, the Turtle, to summon a general council; and the Swallow, as both herald and messenger, is dispatched on this errand. The different birds belonging to the Spiritual estate assemble, and the ecclesiastical dignities allotted to each of them are described. The council proceeds to deliberate on the case; but a variety of opinions being expressed, it is thought preferable to defer coming to any decision, until the concurrence of the State Temporal is obtained. The Swallow is again sent off with letters, and finds the Eagle, or Emperor, in the Tower of Babylon, who graciously receives the message, and summoning his train of attendants, immediately sets out with them on their journey. They speedily arrive in Europe, and reach the forest in which the general convocation is held. The Emperor's attendants are then enumerated by the poet, among whom we find the Woodpecker, as pursuivant, bearing his arms, and those of the King of France, and the King of Scotland. Next to the arms of Scotland, are those of the Douglasses, who are designated by our author as the weir-wall, or bulwark of their country; and, it is easy to see by the manner in which he speaks of them, the strength of his attachment to that family. The stanzas descriptive of their noble ancestor, who was chosen by Robert the Bruce, when on his death-bed, to carry his heart to the Holy Land, are very animated. After this romantick episode, he proceeds to describe the blazons of the other branches of the family; but with all his minuteness, the author is afraid he has not said enough; and more than once refers the readers to professed heralds, to tell them the haill.

Returning then to the fable, the temporal birds are welcomed by the Prelates, and kindly invited to dinner by the Pope. They are arranged at table by the Falcon, who is marshall: the Stork being appointed steward during flesh-time; and the Soland-Goose during the season of Lent, for this special reason, that from the firmament he could fung the fische deid. In the midst of the banquet, the Thrush, and some other birds, as minstrels, enter, and sing a hymn to the Virgin Mary; which is followed by a curious list of musical instruments. The Jay, in the capacity of a juggler, is next introduced, who exhibits several wonderful exploits. He is succeeded by the Rook, in the character of a bard from Ireland, who begins to repeat an absurd rhapsody of the genealogy of the Irish Kings; for which, and some other of his falsehoods, he is sharply rebuked. But his continued insolence and loquacity is ehecked by the entrance of the Lapwing and the Cuckoo, as two flyrand fools, who seize on him, and pull him by the hair, and defile him so. that, to use the author's expressive words,

"The bard smaddit lyke a smaik smorit in a smedy."

After which, the two fools, to the great amusement of the company, fall by the ears, and abuse each other.—At length the council proceed to business, and the request contained in the Owl's petition is readily granted. They offer up their prayers to Dame Nature, who descends, and, willingly acceding to their united desires, bids each of the birds lend the Owl one of its feathers, which she engages to join together before her departure. This being done, the fortunate petitioner is suddenly changed from his despised shape, and becomes the fairest bird in all Scotland; the transition, however, having the effect also of changing his behaviour to extreme haughtiness and arrogance, which at length become so intolerable, that the birds apply again to Nature for redress. She grants it, with the same condescension as formerly; and the Owl, thus despoiled of all his borrowed plumage, and reduced to his original despised and deformed condition, gives vent to his feelings in several excellent moral reflections on the dangerous effects of pride. The author concludes with mentioning the cause of his writing the poem, and the place where the adventure is said to have occurred.

Such is a brief outline of this fable, of the poetical merits of which, there can be but one opinion.¹⁰ Although

¹⁰ The following is the opinion of an ingenious writer, already named, with regard to Holland's merits as a poet:—

[&]quot;To the character of an original inventor," Mr Thomson says, "the author of the Houlate has but a slender claim; for besides having taken the story of his poem from the fable of the Jackdaw with borrowed feathers, he is indebted to Chaucer's Assemble of Foules, for some of its principal decorations. The catalogue of birds, and the personification of Nature, are, both of them, imitations of Chaucer; but the former is inferior, in every respect, to the characteristic sketches of his master; and the latter is so little suited to the situation in which it stands, as clearly shews it to have been an exotic, transplanted from a much more poetical soil.

[&]quot;Drayton has a poem entitled the Oml; but there is no similarity between it and the Houlate, either in the subject, or the manner of treating it. But the want of propriety in this poem is a blemish still greater than that of originality. Nothing in composition can be more absurd, than the custom of investing birds and beasts with dignities ecclesiastical and civil; and putting dialogues into their mouths, upon moral, religious, or political topics. Perhaps, however, the candid reader may be inclined to think this more excusable in a writer of the fifteenth century, when he recollects that the very same impropriety was committed by the author of the Hind and Panther, almost at the close of the seventeenth.

[&]quot;The adoption of Mr Pinkerton's hypothesis would furnish us with a still more striking coincidence (or rather contrast) between Holland and Dryden. The intention of the former in writing the Houlate, was to depreciate James II. of Scotland: to extoll James II. of England, and recommend his religion, was that of the latter. But the discovery of this allegorical meaning gives no fresh merit to the Scotlish poem, as the satire in the one is equally unjust, and equally culpable, with the panegyrie in the other."—MS. Critique on the Howlat, p. 16, &c.

the details are occasionally amusing, it is still confessedly a dull performance, exhibiting, neither in conception nor execution, any extraordinary degree of poetical ta-But dull as the poem generally may be, there is a redeeming beauty in the episode of James, Lord of Douglas; and it might be difficult to point out any similar passage in our old poetical writers, in which animated description is combined with so much tenderness and feeling. Moreover, the poem is remarkable for its language, no less than for its versification, in the structure of which, it bears a marked resemblance to some of the more ancient of our metrical romances; although the style is neither so difficult nor so obscure as that of Golagrus and Gawane, or of Raulf Coilyear, the romances more especially alluded to. If, after what has been stated, any reader is inclined to believe that this poem contains a covert satire on James II., with regard to his ambitious dispositions, he must at least concede, that the satire is not of the most pungent and caustick nature. But such a notion really derives little, if any, support from the poem itself, in which we can find no direct allusions either to the personal character of the King, or to the state of Scotland in his reign; nor does the situation of James, at any period of his life, accord with that implied by the adoption of such an hypothesis. Besides, the idea of the author's having made use of an allegorical fable for any such purpose, might be controverted on the grounds, that at that early period our writers had not resorted to such a mode of composition: they had, in fact, no experience of the power and extensive influence of political satire, which belongs to a much more advanced and polished state of society. On the whole, we may conclude with observing, that the author has displayed considerable ingenuity and descriptive power, and has preserved several curious sketches of the manners of the time; and that although the poem of THE HOWLAT is in some measure obscured by the unfortunate preference which has been given to the alliterative style that prevailed so much in our ancient poetical literature, it must nevertheless be always regarded as one of the most singularly curious productions of the age to which it belongs.

Edinburgh, October 1823.

SINCE the foregoing Preface was written, the Editor has been kindly favoured with the following communication from SIR WALTER SCOTT, which he is happy to have it in his power to present to the reader; and which probably will satisfy most people on the point at issue:—

"After the opinions entertained and expressed on the subject by great antiquaries, it may seem bold to doubt whether the Howlar contains any political allusion either to James II., or to the state of Scotland; or, indeed, whether it means any thing more than a mere apologue, with such a fanciful adaptation of the characteristicks and peculiarities of the various tribes of birds to the classes of mankind, as has been made in our own time in the witty and ingenious poem called "The Peacock at Home,"—the authoress of which, we will venture to say, never heard of Sir Richard Holland, or read a word of his Howlat, though the pieces bear a singular resemblance to each other. Another satire of the same kind appeared at Paris, about the beginning of the Revolution, in which the various orders of Catholic clergy are ludicrously classified, as birds, according to the system of Linnæus.

"The strong argument by which alone the general opinion has been hitherto supported, is, that the author, an avowed friend and eulogist of the great House of Douglas, must necessarily be an enemy of the reigning family, and willing to depress or insult the character of James II., as the enemy of his friends and patrons. To this we allow its full weight; and if we could find in the piece, from beginning to end, any thing peculiarly allusive to the person of James II., or the events of his reign, we are ready to admit, that, arguing a priori, we should be apt to recognize such allusion as a libel on that prince, and as being a very natural appendage or corollary to a panegyric on the House of Douglas. If the poem had satirized pride or violence in oppression and abusion of power, as such faults would have corresponded with the charges which the Douglas faction had brought against the King: Or, suppose that James had been a Polish monarch, called to the throne by the suffrages of the nobles over whom he is afterwards accused of tyrannizing, the parable of the Howlat in his borrowed feathers would have been applicable, and the catastrophe of the apologue would have conveyed a striking inuendo. But James II. came to a hereditary throne in the ordinary course of succession; and owed his sovereignty neither to the compassion and patronage of the "Pape," nor to any special surrender of privileges on the part of the nobles. His authority was native to him, and he held the kingdom on the same terms on which his nobles held their estates, as the lawful owner of the throne of his ancestors. Indeed, it is particularly worthy of notice, that when the author mentions the King of Scotland distinctly, and by name, it is in his character of an independent and hereditary sovereign, giving the lie to his own satire, if we are to understand that he elsewhere likened James II. to the Owl in borrowed feathers.

Our soverane of Scotland, Quhilk sall be lord and ledar— Our braid Britaine all quhar, As Sanct Margaretis air.

If it be alleged that this description is introduced merely as a device to conceal his satire, and screen the author from consequences, it may be replied, First, That in or about the year 1453, a friend of the House of Douglas, writing in the forest of Ternoway, at a time when general publication was out of the question, would probably have had little cause to dread the vengeance of his Sovereign. Secondly, That unless there be points of satirical resemblance which the lapse of ages may have obscured, it would never answer the purpose of a satirist to cover his meaning so entirely, that when his production is read from one end to the other, no point of resemblance occurs between his libel and its object, which might not be equally applicable to any King and people of the period. It would be idle to express a positive opinion on a subject obscured by the mist of so many ages; but until some coincidence is shewn, stronger than any which we are able to perceive betwixt the fable of the Howlat and the History of James II., we cannot but think it equally probable, that instead of writing a satire, Hol-LAND amused his leisure at Ternoway by compiling a poetical apologue, upon a plan used not only by Chaucer. but by many of the French minstrels, without any view whatever to local or national politics. The praises of the Douglasses are introduced in an inartificial manner; but such digressions are not uncommon in the authors of a rude age. The hymn to the virgin (Stanza Lvi.) is just such an effusion of episodical devotion, as the panegyric on the Douglasses is a burst of friendly enthusiasm. Nay, the very circumstance, that they are brought forward without parable, or without disguise, seems to make against the opinion that there is a political allegory in the rest of the poem Had the Douglas been introduced as the eagle or falcon, there would have been better reason to suppose that the King was sketched under the character of the Howlat. On the whole, judging from the tenor of the poem and all that we know of the history of the period, we can only sum up with the remark, that if Holland be actually a satirist, he has been one of the most cautious that ever wrote verse, since it is so hard to discover in what his satire consists; or, in other words, he has hidden his meaning so completely, that it is impossible for a modern author distinctly to apprehend it."

The following passage from Henry the old Scotish Minstrel,—the most romantick of all our ancient writers, had escaped my recollection when I was engaged in drawing up the foregoing preface; but it is not too late to be brought forward as a corroborative proof of what is so clearly and satisfactorily stated in the above communication. There is to be found in it a most distinct reference to the poem of the Howlat, which is regarded as nothing more than a moral fable. This is the more curious, as it is contained in a work supposed to have been written about the year 1470, by one, who, if not personally acquainted with our author, was at least his contemporary. The lines occur in that part of the minstrel's narrative, where he describes the contention which took place before the battle of Falkirk, when Sir William Wallace refused to yield up his accustomed post of honour, at the time that Stewart of Bute insisted on leading the vanguard of the army. Stewart upon this upbraids Wallace for pride, and addressing our valourous and immortal champion, says, "by thee I tell a tale."

"" Say furth,' quoth he, 'off the farrest yhe can.'
Whhappyly his taill thus he began:—
'Wallace,' he said, 'thow takis the mekill cur;
So feryt it, be wyrkyng off Natur,
How a Howlat complend of his fetherame,
Qunill Deym Natur tuk off ilk byrd, but blame,
A fayr fethyr, and to the Howlat gaiff;
Than he through pryd reboytyt all the layff.
Quhar off suld thow thi senyhe schaw so he?
Thow thinkis nan her at suld thi falow be.
This makis it, thow art cled with our meu,
Had we our awin, thin war bot few to ken.'

At thir wordis gud Wallace brynt as fyr:

Our haistely he ansuerd him in ire,

'Thow leid,' he said, 'the suth full oft has ben,

Thar, and I baid, quhar thow durst nocht be seyn

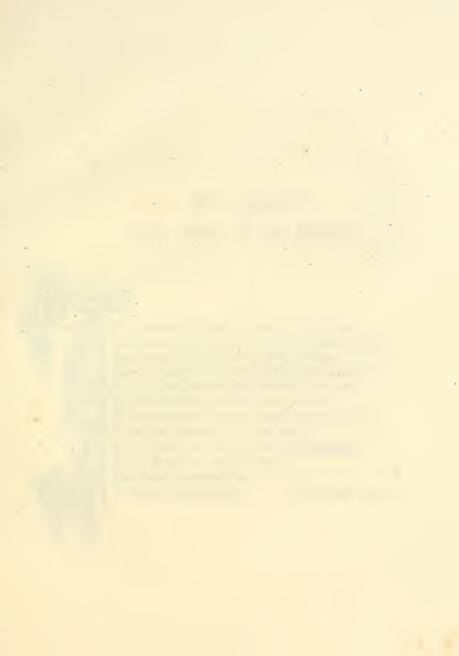

Contrar enemys, na mar, for Scotlandis rycht

Than dar the Howlat quhen that the day is brycht.'"

WALLACE,—BY HENRY THE MINSTREL.—Buke X. 130, &c.

The Buke of the Howlat.

This riche Revir down ran, but resting or rus, Throws and forest on fold, that farly was fair; all the brayis of the brym bair branchis abus, and birdis blythest of ble, on blossomes bair; The land sowne was and le, with lyking and sus, and for to lende by that laike, thorth me sevar, Becaus that thir hartes in heirdis couth hus, Pransand and prunzeand, be pair and be pair: Thus sat I in solare, sekerly and sure, Content of the fair sirth, Yekke mair of the mirth, als blyth of the birth That ground bure.

333.

The birth that the ground bure was browdin on breidis, Mith girs gaye as the gold, and granes of grace, Gendis and medicyne for mennis all neidis; helpe to hert, and to hurt, heilfull it was. Undir the Cirkill folar thir fauorus feidis Max nuriff be dame Watur, that noble mastres; Bot all thar names to nevyn as now, it north neid is, It was prolief and lang, and lenthing of space, and I have mekle matic in metic to glos. Of ane nothir sentence and waike is my eloquence; Tharfor in haiff will I hens To the purpos.

Off that purpos in the place, be pryme of the day, I herd ane petuos appele, with ane pur mane, Solpit in sorowe, that sadly couth say, Wa is me, wretche in this warld, wilsome of wane, With mair murnyng in mynd than I meyne may, Rolpit reuthfully roth in a rude rane; Of that serly on fold, I fell in affray, Pirar that noys in nest I nechit in ane I sawe ane Howlat, in haist, under ane holyne, Lukand the saike throwe, and saw his awne schadowe, At the quhilk he couth growe, And maid gowlyne.

U.

the grat grylly grym, and gaif a gret zowle, Chenerand and chydand with churliche cheir: Duhy is my far, quoth the tyle, fassonit to foule, App forms and my fetherem, untrely, but feir; App neb is netherit as a nok, I am bot and Dwle; Aganis natur in the nicht, I walk in to weir; I dare do nocht on the day, bot droupe as a doule, Mocht for schame of my schape in pert till appeir: Thus all thir sowlis, for my filth, has me at seid, That be I seyne in thar sicht, To luke out on day licht, Sum dyng me to deid.

Sum bird will bay at my beike, and some will me byte, Sum skripe me with strorne, sum skrym at myn e; I se be my schadowe my schape has the wyte: Duhom sall I blame in this breth, a bysyn that I be, Is name bot dame Watur I bid norht to nyte, Till 'accuse' of this caise, in case that I be; Bot quha sall mak me ane mendis of hir worth a myte, That thus has maid on the mold ane monstour of me: I will appele to the Pape, and pas till him plane; For happin that his halpnace,
Throw prayer may purchace,
To reforme my soule face,

And than war I sane.

UII.

Fayne wald I wyte, quoth the tyle, or I furth fure, Duha is fader of all foule, passour and pape; That is the plesant Pacok, precious and pure, Constant and kirklyk under his cler cape, Hyterit, as the maner is, manswet and mure, Schroude in his schene weid, schand in his schap, Sad in his sauctitud, sekerly and sure, I will go to that gud, his grace for to grap. Of that bourde I was blythe and bade to behald, The Howlet wylest in wyce, Raikit under the rys,

To the Pacoke of pryce, That was Pape cald.

UIII.

Before the Pape, quhen the pur present him had, With six courtasty as he couth, on kness he fell; Said Aue Raby, he the rud J am richt rad for to behald zour halynes, or my tale tell; I may nocht suffys to se zour sanctitud sad. The Pape wyslie I wis, of worschipe the well, Saif him his braid benesoun, and baidly him had, That he suld speecely specke and spair nocht to spell. I come to speir, quoth the spreit, in to speciall, Duhy I am formed so sowle,
Ay to zowt and to zowle,
As an horrible Owle,

Æ.

I am netherit ane Dwll thus be Watur,
Lykar a fule than a fowle in figur and face;
Bylyn of all birdis that ever body bure,
Withoutin caus or crym, kend in this cale:
I have appelle to zour presence, precious and pur,
Askis helpe in till haist at zour halynes,
That ze wald cry apon Crist, that all has in cur,
To schape me a schand bird in a schort space;
And till accus Watur, this is no nay;
Thus, throw zour halynes, may ze
Hake a sair soule of me,
Or elses dredles I de

Dr myne end day.

Off thi deid, quoth the Pape, pite I haife, Bot apon Natur to plepne, it is percell; I can nocht fay sudanelye, so me Crist saif, Bot I sall rall my cardinallis and my counsall, Patriarkis and prophetis of serit the saif; Thay salve semblit full sone, that thow se sall. He callit on his cubicular within his conclaif, That was the proper Pape Jaye provde in his apparale; Bad send for his serretar, and his sele sone, That was the Turtour trewest, Ferme, saithfull, and sast,

That bure that office honest,

FI.

The Pape commandit but hone, to wryte in all landis, Be the said servetar, that the sele zemyt, for all statis of kirk that wnder Crist standis, To semble to his summondis, as it wele semyt. The trewe Turtour has tane with the tythandis, Done dewlie his det, as the deir demyt; Syne bely send the letteris in to seir landis With the Swallowe, so swyst in special expressit The Papis harrald, at poynt in to present, for he is forthwart to ste, and ay will have entre, In hous and in hall hie,

Duhat fuld I tell ony mair of thir materis, Bot thir lordis belyf the letteris has tane, Refauit thaim with reverence, to reid as efferis; And richely the harvaldis rewardit ilkane, Than bufk thai but blyn, mony bewschyris, Grathis tham but gruching that gait for to gane. All the statis of the kirk out of steid steris, And I fall not zow richt now that names in ane, How thai apperit to the Pape, and present thaim age Fair farrand and fre,
In a gudly degre,
And manlyke as thocht me,

FIII.

All thus in Day, as I ment, in a mornyng, Come four Falandis full fair in the first front, Present tham as patriarkis in thar appering, Benyng of obedience, and blyth in the bront: A college of cardinalis come syne in a lyng, That war Crannis of kynd, gif I richt compt; Whith red hattis on hed, in haile takynning Off that deir dignite, with worschipe ay wont: Thir ar soulis of effect, but fellony or seid, Spirituale in all thing, Leile in thar leving, Tharsor in dignite digne, Thay dure to thar deid.

FJU.

zit endurand the daye to that deir drewe, Swannis suowchand full swyth, swetest of swar, In quhyte rocatis arrayd; as I richt knewe That thai war dischopis blist, I was the blythar; Stable and steidfast, tender and trewe, Off sewe wordis, full wys, and worthy thai war: Thar was Pyotis, and Partrikis, and Pluwaris ynewe, as abbotis of all ordouris that honorable ar; The Se Hawis war monkis, the blak and the quhyte, The Goule was a gryntar,
The Surrthbak a sellerar,
The Scarth a fische fangar,

FII.

Parfytlye thir Pikmawis, as for priouris, With that party habitis present tham that; decremis contemplatif, clene charterouris, With toppit hudis on hed, and clething of hair, by forowfull and sad at evin sang and houris, Was neuer leid saw thaim sauch, bot drowpand and dar; alkyn chennonis eik of other ordouris, all maner of religioun, the less and the mair; Eryand Crawis and Cais, that cravis the corne, War pure freris forthward, That with the leif of the lard, Utill cum to the corne zard. At ewyn and at morn,

FUI.

Jit or ewyn enterit come that bur office,
Dbeyand thir bischoppis, and bydand tham by,
Gret Ganeris on ground, in gudly awys,
That war demyt, but dowt, denys dearthy;
Thaj war residence raith, and airly will tyse
To kepe the college cleine, and the clergye.
The Tok in his cleir cape, that crawis and cryis,
Was chosyn chauntour full cheif in the channonry.
That come the Curlewe a clerk, and that full cunnand,
Chargit as chancillar,
For he couth wryte wounder fair,
With his neb for mistar,

FUIJ.

Apon the fand zit I fawe, as thefaurer tane, With grene almous on hed, sehir Gawane the Drak; The archedene, that ourman, ay prechand in plane, Correker of kirkmen was elepit the Claik.

The Martoune, the Murcoke, the Myresnype in ane, Lichtit, as serit men, law by that saike.

The Ravyne, rolpand rudly in a roche ran, Was dene rurale to reid, rank as a raike;

Duhill the sardnir was said, held he na hous;

Bot in wylandis townis,

At vicaris and persounis,

For the procuracionnis,

FUIII.

The crops Capone, a clerk under cleir weidis, full of cherite, chaff, and unchangeable, Mas officiale but les that the law leidis In caussis consistoriale, that ar coursable. The Sparrowe Menus he west for his vyle deidis, Lyand in lichory, laith, unloveable. The Feldiser in the forest, that sebilly him seidis Be ordour ane hospitular was ordanit full able. The Cowschotis war personis in thar apparale. The Dow Moyis messinger, Rownand are with his seir, Ulas a corate to heir Consessionis hale.

FJF.

Confes cleir can I nocht, nor kyth all the case, The kynd of that cummyng, that companyis eike; The maner, nor the multitud, so mony that was: All Se sowle, and Seid sowle, was nocht for to seik. This ar na sowlis of reif, nor of richnes, Bot mansweit, but malice, manerit and meike, and all apperit to the Pape, in that ilk place, Salus his sanctitud with spirituale speike. The Pape gas his benesoun, and blistit thaim all. Duhen thaj war rangit on rawis Of thar come, the haile caus Mas se heir sall.

The Pape said to the Dwle, Propone thin appele, Thy lamentable langage, as lykis the best. I am desormed, quoth the tyle, with faltis full feile, Be Watur netherit ane Dwle noyus in nest, Wireche of all wretchis, fra worschipe and wele; all this trety has he tald be termes in test: It neidis north to renewe all myn vnhele, Sen it was menit to zour mynd, and maid manifest. Bot to the poynt petnos he prayit the Pape To call the clergy with cure, and se gif that Wature
Ayeth resorm his signur

FFJ.

Than fairlie the fader thir fowlis he franyt
De thar counsall in this rais, sen the richt thai knewe;
Sifthai the howlat mucht helpe, that was so hard paynit?
And thai weraly awysit, sull of wertewe,
The maner, the mater, and how it remanyt;
The circumstance, and the sait, all couth thai argewe.
Yony allegiance leile, in leid north to layne it,
Off Arestotill, and ald men, scharplie thai schewe;
The Prelatis thar apperans proponit generale;
Sum said to, and sum fra,
Haith pro and contra

Thus argewe thai all.

FFIJ.

Thus argeme thaj ernistly wounder oftlys;
Syne ' to the ' samyn forsuth thaj assent haile;
That sen it nechit Matur, thar alleris mastris,
Thaj couth north trete but entent of the Temperale.
Tharfor thaj counsall the Pape to writ in this wys,
To the Athile emperour, sourcane in saile,
To adress to that dyet, to deme his awys,
With dukis, and with digne lordis, darrest in dale,
Erlles of ancestry, and otharis ynewe.
So that the Spirituale staite,
And the secular consait,
Ayreht all gang in a gait Tender and trewe.

FFIJJ.

The trewe Turtour and traiff, as I eir tauld, Urait thir letteris at lenth, lelest in leid; Syne throw the Papis precept planly thaim zald To the Swallowe so swyft, harrald in hed, To ettill to the emperour, of ancestry auld: he wald nocht spair for to spring on a gud speid: Fand him in Babilonis towr, with bernis so bald, Truell kingis with crowne, and dukis but dreid. he gas thir lordis belyve the letteris to luke; Duhilk the riche emperour, and all othar in the hour, Ressauit with honour, Baith princis and duke.

FFJU.

Duhen thai confauit had the cais, and the credence, Be the harrald in hall hove thai north ellis, Bot bownis out of Babulone with all obediens, Seikis our the falt fe, fro the fouth fellis, Enteris in Ewrope, fre but offens, Walis wyllie the wayis, be woddis and wellis, Duhill thai approrfse to the Pape in his prefens, At the forfaid triff guhar the trete tellis. Thai fand him in a forest, frely and fair: Thai halsit his halynas; And ze fall heir in schort space, Duhat worthy lordis thar was, Gif zour willis war.

FFU.

That was the Egill fo grynn, gretest on ground is, Athill emperour our all, most awfull in erd.
Ernes ancient of air kingis that cround is, Mirt his restitud forsuth secoundlic apperd;
Duhilk in the sermament through fors of that slight foundis, Perfes the sone, with that sight selecuth to herd.
Seir Falconnis, that gentilly in bette haboundis, War deir dukis, and digne, to deme as efferd.
The Falcone, sarest on slight formed on fold, Was an erll of honour,
Garschell to the emperour,
Boith in hall and in bowr, rfUJ.

Gois Halkis war governouris of the gret oilf, Cholin chiftanis, chevalrus in charge of weris, Garchonis in the mapamond, and of mychtis molf, Mirt dukis in dignite, quhom no dreid deris. Spar Halkis, that speecly will compas the cost, War kene knychtis, of kend clene of maneris, Blyth bodyis, and beld, but baret or boist, With eyne celestiale to se, circulit as saphiris. The Specht was a pursevant, productill apper; That raid befor the emperour, In a cot 'of' armour,

Of all kynd of colour,

Cumly and cleir.

rruij.

he bure rumly to knawe be connysaunce cleir Thre crownis, and a crucifix, all of cler gold; The burde with orient perle plantit till apper, Dicht as a dyademe digne, deir to behold, Circulit on ilk syde with the sapheir, The jaspis joynit in gem, and rubyis in rold. Syne twa keyis our croce, of filuer so cleir, In a feild of asure sammit on fold; The Papis armes at poynt to blason and beir. As series for a persewant, That will wayage awant; Atmes to weir.

FFUIII.

Sone in a feild of filner, lecoundlie he berig, Ane Egill ardent of air, that etlis fo hie : The memberis of the famph foull displait as efferis, ferme formpt on fold, ap fet for to fle; All of fable the felf, quha the futh levis, The beke bypertit breme of that ilk ble : The Empriour of Almane the armes he weris, As fignifer fouerane: And fyne couth I fe Thre flour delycis of Fraunce, all of tyne gold, In a feild of aluve, The thrid armes in honour, That bloutit so bold. The faid persevant bure

FFIF.

Tharwith lynkit in a lyng, be levit men approvit, he bure a Iron as lord, of gowlis full gap, Daid maikles of mucht, on mold quhar he movit, Riche rampand as rope, tyke of array: Df pure gold was the ground, guhar the grym hovit, With dowble tressour about, slourit in fap; And flour delycis on loft, that mony leid lovit, De gowlis lygnit, and fet, to schawe in affay; Dur fouerane of Scotland his armes to knawe, Duhilk fall be lord and ledar, Dur braid Brettane all quhar, And the signe schawe. As fanct Wergaretis air,

FFF.

Mert the sourcame signe was sekirly sene,
That servit his serenite ever sernable,
The armes of the Dowglas douchty bedene, knawin throw all Cristindome be conglance able;
Df Scotland the wer wall, wit ze but wene,
Dur sais force to desend, and unsalzeable;
Baith barmekyn and bar to Scottis blud bene,
Dur lois, and our lyking, that lyne honorable.
That word is so wonder warme, and ever zit was,
It synkis sone in all part
Df a trewe Scottis hart,
Resoland ws inwart

To heir of Dowglas.

xxxI.

Off the doughty Dowglas to dyte I me dres; That arms of ancestry honorable ay, Duhilk oft blythit the Bruse in his distres, Tharfor he blisset that blud bald in assay. Reid the writ of that werk, to zour witnes, Furth on my matir to muse I muse as I may. The said persevantis gyde was grathit I ges, Brust with ane grene tre, gudly and gay; That bure branchis on breid blythest of hewe; On ilk beugh till embrace, Urittin in a bill was, Dowglas, Tendir and trewe!

fff33.

Syne schir schappy to schawe, many schene scheld With tuscheis of trass silk tichit to the tre; Ilk branche had the birth burly and beld, Four sourist our all gretest of gre.

Ane in the crope heigh, as cheif I beheld, Duhilk bure in till asure, blythest of ble, Siluer sternis so fair; and part of the feld Was siluer, set with ane hert, heirly and hie, Of gowlis full gracious, that glemyt so gay: Syne in asure the mold, I lyoun crownit with gold,

Of siluir ze se shold,

FFFIII.

Duhilk rasyn be rognoscence quarterly was, With barris of best gold it brynt as the syr; and othir signes, forsuth syndry I ges, Off metallis and rolouris in tentfull atyr. It was tyrefull to tell, dyte, or addres, all that deir armis in dewlye desyre. Bot part of the principale neuertheles I sall hais me to hewe hartlie but hyre. Thar lois and thar lordschipe of sa lang dait, That bene cot armouris of eild, Tharin to harrald I held;
Bot sen thaj the Brus beld, I wryt as I wait.

fffJU.

In the takinnyng of trenth, and constance kend, The colour of asure, and hevinliche hewe, For this to the Dowglas that senze was send, As selest, all Scotland fra scaith to reskewe. The silver in the sampn half, trewly to tend, Is cleir corage in armes, quha the richt knewe. The bludy hart that that here the Brus at his end, With his estate in the seid, and nobillis ynewe, Addit in thar armes, for honorable caus, As his tenderest and deir.

In his maiss misser:

As salbe said to thow heir

FFFU.

The roye Robert the Brus the rayke he awowit, Whith all the hart that he had, to the haily graif; Syne quhen the dait of his deid derthy him dowit, Whith lordis of Scotland, lerit, and the laif, as worthy, wyfest to waile, in worschipe allowit, To James lord 'of' Dowglas thow the gre gaif, To ga with the kingis hart; thairwith he nocht growit; Bot said to his sourcane, So me God saif! Zour gret giftis and grant ay gracious I fand; Bot now it movis all ther maist, That zour hart nobillast To me is closit and cast, rrrug.

I love zon mair for that loils ze lippyn me till,
Than ony lordshipe or land, so me our Lord leid!
I fall waynd for no wye to wirk as ze will,
It wis, gif my werd wald, with zon to the deid.
That with he lowtit full lawe: tham lykit full ill,
Baith lordis and ladyis, that stude in the steide.
Off commoun nature the cours be kynd to sulfill.
The gud king gaif the gaist to God for to reid;
In Cardros that crownit closit his end.
Now God for his gret grace,
Set his sault in solace!
And we will speike of Dowglace, Duhat way he couth wend.

fffUII.

The hert cosslye he couth clos in a cler cace, and held all hale the behest he height to the king: Come to the haly graf, throw Goddis gret grace, With offerandis, and vrisons, and all vthar thing; Dur Saluatouris sepultur, and the sammy place, Duhar he rais, as we reid, richtuis to ryng; With all the relykis raith, that in that rowne was, he gart hallowe the hart, and syne couth it hyng, about his hals full hende, and on his awne hart. Oft wald he kiss it, and cry, D shour of all chewasty!

Duhy leif J, allace! quhy

And thow deid art!

FFFUIII.

Hy deir, quoth the Dowglas, art thow deid dicht?
Hy singular sources, of Saronis the wand!
How bot I semble for this fault with Sarazenis mycht,
Sall I never sene be into Scotland;
Thus in describe of the faith he sure to the feeht,
With knychtis of Christindome to kepe his command.
And quhen the batallis so brym, brathly and bricht,
War joyned thraly in thrang, mony thousand;
Amang the hethin men the hert, hardely he stang,
Said, Wend on, as thou was wont,
Throw the batell in bront;
Ay formast in the front,

FFFJF.

And I fall followe the in faith, or feve to be fellit;
As this lege man leile, my lyking thow art.
That with on Hahownis men manly he mellit,
Braid throw the battallis in bront, and but thaim backwart.
The wyis quhat the wicht went wat in wa wellit;
Was name so shur in the strid micht stand him a start.
Thus frayis he the fals solk, trewly to tell it,
Aye quhil he concrit and come to the kingis hart.
Thus seile feildis he wan, are worschipand it.
Throwout Crissindome kid
Was the deidis that he did:
Till on a time it betid, he bownyt till a batall, and the beld wan, Dur set all the sathanas syde Sarazenis mycht: Syne followit fast on the chace, quhen thaj ste can, Full serily feile has he seld, and slane in the slicht. As he relevit I wis, so was he war than, Of ane wy him allane, worthy and wicht, Circulit with Sarazenis, mony 'a' sad man, That tranognetit with a trayne apon that trewe knycht. Thow sall nocht de the allane, quoth the Dowglas! Sen I se the our set, To feeht sor the saith sete, I sall devoid the of det, FLJ.

he rulchit in the gret rowte, the knycht to reskewe, feile of the fals folk, that fied of befor, Relevit in on thir twa, for to tell trewe, That thai war sampn ourset; tharfor I murn sore. Thus in desence of the faith, as sermes ynewe, and pite of the prys knycht that was in thore, The doughty Dowglas is deid and adewe, With los and with lyking, that lestis evir mor. His hardy men tuke the hart syne vyon hand: Duhen thai had beryit thar lord, With mekle mane to remord, Thai maid it hame be restord

FLIJ.

Be this resoun we reid, and as our Roy levit, The Dowglas in armes the bludy hart beris; for it, bled he his blud, as the bill brevit:
And in batallis full braid, under baneris,
Throw full chevalrus chance he this hert chevit,
fra walyit wyis, and wicht, worthy in weris;
Hony galiard gome was on the ground levit,
Duhen he it flang in the feld, felloun of feris,
Hyne reskewand it agane the hethin mennis harmes.
This hert red to behald,
Throw thir ressonis ald,
The bludy hart it is cald,

FLIII.

The sternis of ane nothic strynd steris so fair, ane callit Hurray, the riche lord of renovnis, Deit, and a doughter had till his deir air, Dff all his tressour untald, towris and townis: The Dowglas in thaj dayis, doughty all quhar, Archebald the honorable in habitaciounis, Alcodit that wlonk wicht, worthy of ware, Alith rent and with riches; and be thaj ressouis he bure the sternis of chait in his stele weidis; Blyth, blomand, and bright, Throw the Hurrayis might:

And sa throw Goddis forsicht, The Dowglas succedis.

FLJU.

The lyon lanfand on loft, lord in effeir, for gud caus, as I ges, is of Gallaway. Duhen that rebellit the crowne; and couth the king deir, he gaif it to the Dowglas, heretable ay:
Du this was gif he couth wan it on weir;
Duhilk for his fourranc saike he set till assay;
Kelit downe that capitanis, and couth it conquir;
Haif it situe, as we fynd, till our Scottis say.
Tharfor the Iyoun he bure, with loving and lois,
Of silver semely and sure,
In a field of asure,
Crownit with gold pure,
To the purpos.

FLU.

The forest of Ettrik, and othair ynewe,
The landis of Lawdir, and lordschipis sere,
Usith dynt of his dert swerd, the Dowglas so dewe,
Usin wichtly of weir, wit the but weir,
Fra sonnis of the Saronis. Now gif I sall schewe
The order of thar armis, it was to tell trix;
The barris of best gold that thai hale knewe
It suld ws occupy all day; tharsor I end heir,
Referris me to harraldis, to tell zow the hale.
Of other scheldis, so schene,
Sum part will I mene,
That war on the tre grene,

Unorthy to wale.

fluj.

Secund lyne, in a feld of filuer, rertane,
Df a kynde rolour thre roddis J kend
With dowble treffur about, burely and bane,
And flour delyris so fair trewe till attend.
The tane and the tother of gowlis full gane,
the bure quarterly, maid that nane micht amend;
The armes of the Dowglas, thairof was J fayne;
Duhilk aft fandit with force, his fa till offend:
Of honorable ancestry thir armis of eld
Bure the cril of Hurray,
As sad signe of assay,
this fell fais till aftray,
In a fair feild.

fluij.

Ane nothir, cell of Demond, also he bure
The said Dowglas armis, with a differens.
And richt so did the feed, guhar he furth sure;
Zaipe thocht he zong was, to saynd his offens.
It semyt that thai sid war forsuth I assure.
Thir four scheldis of pryce in to presence
War chenzeit so chevaleus, that no creatur
Of lokis nor lynr, mycht lous worth a sence.
Syne ilk braunche, and beugh, 'bowit' thaim till:
And ilk scheld in that place
Thar tennend or man was,
Or ellis thar allyas,

At thar awin will.

FLUIJI.

All thir hieast in the crope four helmes full fair, And in that tymeralis tryid, trewly that here, The plesand Podne in a part, provde to repair; And als kepit ilk armes that I said eir, The rouch Modwys wyld, that bastounis have, Dur growin grysly and growe grym in essei; Hair awfull in all thing saw I never air Baith to walk, and to ward, as watchis in weir: That terrible selloun my spreit assrayd, So serd full of santasy, I durst nocht kyth to opy All othir armes thar by,

FLJF.

Tharfor of the said tre I tell north the teynd,
The birth, and the branchis, that blomyt so brayd:
Duhat sele armes on lost, louely to lend,
Ds lordingis and sere landis, gudly and glad,
The said persewant bure, quhar he away wend,
On his garment so gay, of ane hie haid,
I leif thaim blasonde to be with harvaldis hende;
And I will to my first mater, as I cir maid:
And begyn, quhar I lest, at lordingis deir,
The court of the Empriour,
How thas come in honour,
Thir sowlis of rigonr,
Utith a greet resr.

Than cerit thir Occlesions that mountis so hie, furth borne bacheleris bald on the bordouris; Busardis, and Beldkytis, as it mycht be, Soldiouris and sumptermen to that senzeouris. The Pitill and the Pype Gled cryand pewewe Befor thir princis ay past, as pert purviouris, for that couth chewis chikinnis, and perches pultre, To cleke fra the commonis, as kyngis caytouris; Syne huse hover, and behald the herbery place. Robyn Reddress nocht ran, Bot raid as a hensman; And the litill we Aran

LJ.

That was the haralois fa the hobby but fable, Stanchalis, Acropis, Arecht to thai Acro lordis, With alkyn officeris in erd, awenand and able; So mekle was the multitud no mynd it remordis. Thus assemblit thir legis, spris fenzeourable, all that war fowlis of reif, the richt quha recordis, for the Temperalite tretit in table, The Acro Empriouris Ayle thus Haitly reflord is. The Pape, and the patriarkis, prelatis, I will, Melcummit thaim wouly, but weir, With haly fermonis feir, Pardoun, and prayer,

LII.

The blistic Pape in the place prayit tham ilkane To remayne to the meit, at the mydday; And that grantit that gud, but gruching, to gane: Than till a wortheliche wane went that that way; Past till a palace of pryce plesand allane, Was erekit rially, tyke of array, Pantit and apparalit proudly in pane, Sylit semely with silk, suthly to say. Braid burdis, and benkis, ourheld with bancouris of gold, Cled our with elene elathis, Railit full of richas, The essal was arras

L333.

All thus that muse to the meit: and the merschale Gart bring watter to welche, of a well cleir:
That was the Falcoune so fair, frely but fale
Bad birnis burdis vp braid, with a blyth cheir.
The Pape passit till his place, in his pontificale,
The athill Empriour anone neight him neir.
Kyngis, and patriarkis, kend with cardinalis hale,
Address that to that deis, and dukis so deir.
Bischopis bounis to the burd, and merschionis of mychtis;
Erllis of honouris,
Abbotis of ordouris,
Prowessis and priouris,
And mony kene knychtis.

LJU.

Denys, and digniteis, as I eir demyt, Scutiferis, and lawyeris, and bachilleris blyth: I pres nocht all to report; ze hard thaim expremit; Bot all war merschalit to meit meikly and myth: Syne seruit semely in saile, forsuth as it semyt, With all curis of cost that cukis couth kyth. In sletche tyme, quhen the sische war away stemyt, Duha was sewart bot the Stork, sallwart and skyth: Syne all the sentryne but leis, and the lang reid, and als in the adwent, The Soland sewart was sent; for he couth fro the sirmament frang the sische deid.

LU.

The Boytour callit was ruke, that him weile kend In craftis of the ketchyne, cosligk of curis. Hany sawouris sals with sewarts he send, and confectionis on source that philik surth suris. Hony man metis, get I suld mak end, It neidis north to renewe all that naturis; Duhar sie statis will steir, that stylis till oftend, be wait all worschip and welth dayly inducis. Syne, at the myddis of the meit, in come the mensivalis, The Havis and the Werle syngis,

Dillis, and Stirlingis,

The blyth Lark that begynnis, And the Mychtingales.

LUJ.

And that notis anone, gif I richt newyne,
War of Warp the myld; this maner I wis;
Spaile temple of the Trinite, erounit in hevin!
Daile moder of our maker, and medicyn of mys!
Spaile succour and salf for the synnis sevyne!
Spaile bute of our baret, and beld of our blis!
Spaile grane full of grace that growis so cwyn!
Ferme our seid to the set quhar this son is.
Spaile lady of all ladyis, lichtest of seme!
Spaile chalmer of chastite!
Spaile charbunkse of cherite!
Spaile! blist mot thow be

LUII.

spaile blist throw the bodword of blyth Angellis! Spaile princes that completis all prophecis pur! Spaile blythar of the Baptist, within this bowallis, Off Elizebeth this ant, aganis natur! Spaile speciose most specifyit with the spiritualis! Spaile ordanit or Adam, and ay till indur! Spaile our hope, and our helpe, quhen that harme alis! Spaile alterar of Eua in ane but vre! Spaile well of our weilfair! we wait nocht of ellis; Bot all committis to the, Saull and lyf, ladge!

Row for this frute make we fre, Fro fendis that fell is.

LUIII.

Fro this gree to this ground lat this grace glyde!
As thow art grantar tharof, and the gevar;
Mow sourcease quhar thow sittis, be this sonis syd,
Send sum succour downs some to the synnix!
The fends is our felloune sa, in the we conside,
Thow moder of all mercy, and the menar.
For ws wappit in wo in this warld wyde,
To this son mak this mane and this maker.
Mow lady luke to the leid that the so leile lusis,
Thow seker trone of Salamon,
Thow worthy wand of saron,
Thow joyns steis of Gedion,

LUJF.

All thus our lady that lovit, with lyking and lyft, Genficalis, and muliciants, mo than I mene may. The plattery, the lytholis, the loft lytharift, The crovde, and the monycordis, the gittyrnis gay; The rote, and the recordour, the ribupe, the rift, The trumpe, and the talburn, the tympane but tray; The lift pype, and the lute, the fydill in fift, The dullet, the dulfacordis, the schalme of affay; The amyable organis viit full oft; Claryonis lowde knellis, Portatiuis, and bellis, Cymbaclanis in the cellis,

Duhen thai had fongyn, and faid, foftly and schour; And playit, as of paradys, it a poynt war; In com jayand the Ja, as a juglour, With eastis, and with cawtelis, a quaynt caryar: he gart thaim se, as it semyt, in the sampn hour, hunting at herdis, in holtis so hair; Sound saland on the se schippis of towr; Bernes batalland on burde, brym as a bair; he couth cary the cowpe of the kingis des, Syne seve in the sed Bot a blak bunwed; he couth of a hennis hed Agake a mane mes.

LFJ.

he gart the Empriour trowe, and trewly behald, That the Corne Crake, the pundar at hand, had pyndit all his prys hors in a pundfald, for caus that etc of the corne in the kirkland. He couth wirk wounderis quhat way that he wald: Wak of a gray gus a gold garland; A lang sper of a betill for a berne bald; Wobillis of nut schellis, and filner of sand. Thus jowkit with juperdys the jangland Ja: Fair ladyis in ryngis, knychtis in caralyngis, LFII.

Sa come the Ruke with a reed, and a rane roch, a bard owt of Irland with Banachadee!
Said, Gluntow guk dynyd dach hala mischy doch;
Raike hir a rug of the rost, or scho sall ryine the.
Gich macmory ach mach mometir moch loch;
Set hir downe, gif hir drink; quhat Dese alis the?
Decrement, D Donnall, D Dochardy droch;
Thir ar his Irland kingis of the Irischerye:
D Knewlyn, D Conochor, D Gregre Hakgrane;
The Schenachy, the Clarschach,
The Ben schen, the Ballach,
The Crekery, the Corach,

LF333.

Hony lesingis he maid; wald let for no man To speik quhill he spokin had, sparit no thingis. The dene rurale, the Ravyn, reprovit him than, Bad him his lesingis less befor that lordingis. The barde worth brane wod, and bitterly routh ban, how Corby message, quoth he, with sorowe now syngis; Thow is hit out of Noyes ark, and to the erd wan, Taryit as a tratour, and brocht na tythingis; I fall ryine the, Ravyne, baith guttis and gall. The dene rurale worthit reid, Stawe for schame of the steid. In the hie hall.

LFJU.

In come twa flyrand fulis with a fonde fair, The Tuchet, and the gukkit Golk, and zeid hiddy giddy; Ruschit baith to the bard, and ruggit his hair; Callit him thrys thevisnek, to thrawe in a widdy. Thai fylit 'him' fra the fortope to the fut thar: The barde, smaddit lyke a smaik smorit in a smedy, Ran fast to the dure, and gaif a gret rair; Sorht wattir to wesehe him thar out in ane ydy. The lordis leuch apon loft, and lyking thai had, That the barde was so bet:
The fulis fonde in the slet, and mony mowis at mete

LFU.

Syne for ane figonale of frut thai straif in the steid; The Tuchet gird to the Golk, and gaif him a fall, Raif his taile fra his rig, with a rath pleid; The Golk gat whe agane in the gret hall, Tit the Tuchet be the tope, ourtivoit his hed, Flang him stat in the fyre, fetheris and all. the cryid, Allace, with ane rair, revyn is my reid! I am ungraciously gorrit, baith guttis and gall: 3it he lap fra the lowe right in a lyne. Duhen thai had remelis raucht: Thai forthorht that thai faucht; Ristle samp and saucht, And sat downe syne.

LfuJ.

All thus thir hathillis in hall heirly remanit,
With all welthis at wis, and worlchipe to vale:
The Pape begynnis the grace, as greably ganit;
Whosche with thir worthyis, and went to counsall.
The pure Powlatis appele completly was planyt,
Dis falt and his foule forme, unstely but faile:
For the quhilk, thir lordis in leid nocht to layne it,
he besocht of sucour, as souerane in saile,
That thai wald pray Matur his prent to renewe;
for it was haile his behest,
At thar alleris request,
Wycht dame Matur arrest

LfUIJ.

Than rewit thir riallis of that rath mane, Baith Spirituals and Temperals, that kend the case; And, considerand the caus, concludit in ane, That thai wald Natur beseike, of hir gret grace, To discend that sampn hour as that somerane, At thar allaris instance, in that ilk place. The Pape and the patriarkis, the prelatis iskane, Thus pray thai as penitentis; and all that thar was. Duhar throw dame Matur the trast discendit that tyde, At that haile instance;
Authom thai ressaid with reverens,
And bowsome obeysance,

Lfulll.

It nedis north, quoth Matur, to renewe ourth De zour entent in this tyde, or forthir to tell; I wait zour will, and quhat way, ze wald that I wrocht To reforme the Powlat, of faltis full fell, It fall be bone, as ze deme, dreid ze richt north: I confent in this caile to zour counfall, Sen my felf for zour faike hiddir has forth, ze fall be specially sped, or ze mayr spell: Mow iska foull of the sirth a fedder fall ta, and sen the Howlat, sen ze
Off him have sir pete;
And I fall gar thaim sampn be To growe or I ga.

LFJF.

Than ilk foule of his flicht a fedder has tane, and lent to the howlat in half, hartlie but hone. Dame Watur the novillest neight in ane; for to ferme this federem, and dewly has done; Gart it ground, and growe gayly agane, On the famyn howlat, semely and sone. Than was he schand of his schape, and his schroude schane Off alkyn colour most else beldit abone; The farest soule of the firth, and hendest of hewes; So clene, and so colourlyke, That no bird was him lyke, fro Burone to Berwike,

LFF.

Thus was the Howlat in herde herely at hicht, flour of all fowlis, throw fedderis so fair, he lukit to his lykame that lemyt so licht, So propir plesand of prent, provde to repar: he thoeht him maid on the mold makles of mycht, as sourcane him awne self, throw bewte he bair, Counterpalace to the Pape, our princis, I plicht; So hiely he hyit him in Luciferis lair, That all the fowlis of the firth he desowlit syne. Thus left he no man his peir; Sif ony nech wald him neir, he bad tham rebaldis overe,

LFFJ.

The pape, and the patriarkis, and princis of prow, I am cummyn of that kyn, be colingage knawin; So fair is my fetherem I had no falowe; Apy schrowde and my scheneweid schir to be schawin. All birdis he rebalkit, that wald him nocht bowe; In breth as a batall wright full of bost blawin, With unloveable latis north till allow: Thus werit he the walentyne thraly and thrawin, That all the fowlis with assent assemblit agane and pleazeit to Matur Of this intollerable injur; So hie, and so haltane.

LFF33.

So pompos, impertinat, and reprovable, In erces, our arrogant, thir birdis ilkane Besorht Natur to res that unsufferable.
That with that lady a lyte leuch hir allane: My first making, quoth scho, was unamendable, Thocht I alterit, as ze all askit in ane, 3it sall I preis zow to pleis, sen it is possible. Scho callit the howlat in haist, that was so haltane: Thy pryde, quod the Princess, approchis our hie, Lyke Luciser in estaite; and sen thow art so elate, as the Ewangelist wrait, LFFIJJ.

The rent, and the ritches, that thow in rang, Was of othir mennis all, and north of this awne; Wow ilk fowle his awne fedder fall agane fang; And mak the catif of kynd, till him felf knawin. As scho has demyt that has done thraly in thrang. That with dame Watur has to the hevin drawin: Ascendit sone, in my sicht, with solace and sang. And ilk sowle tuke the slicht: schortly to schawin, held hame to thar hant, and thar herbery: Duhar that war wont to remane, All thir gudly ar gane; And thar levit allane, The howlat and J.

Lefgu.

Than this Howlat hidowis of hair and of hyde, Put first fro poverte to pryce, and princis awne per; Syne degradit fra grace, for his greet pryde, Bannyt bitterly his birth, bailefull in beir: he welterit, he wrythit, he waryit the tyde, That he was wrocht in this warld wofull in weir: he crepillit, he rrengit, he carfully cryd, he folyit, he forowit, in sighingis seir. he said, Allace! Jam lost, lathest of all, Bysyn in baile best, Jamay be sampill heir est
That pryde neuer zit left his seir, but a fall.

LFFU.

I centh north won in to welth wretch 'that I' wask, I was so wantoun of will, my werdis ar wan; Thus for my hight I am hurt, and harmit in haist, Cairfull and caytif for crast that I can: Duhen I was hewit as heir all thir hieast, Fra rule, ressoun, and right redies I ran; Tharfor I ly in the lyme, lympit, lathast: Row mark zour mirour be me, all maner of man, 3e princis, 'prelattis' of pryde for penneis and prowe, That pullis the pure ay, 3e fall syng as I say,
All zour welth will away, Thus I warn zow.

LffUJ.

Think how bair thow was borne, and bair ay will be, For ourht that ledis, of this lell in ony session; Thy eude, thy claithis, nor this cost, cummis north of the, Bot of the frute of the erd, and Godis susons: Duhen ilk thing has the awne, suthly we se, Thy nakit cors bot of clay, a fouse carioun, hatit, and hawles; quhar of art thow hie? We cum pure, we gang pure, baith king and commoun. Bot thow reuse the richtuis, this roome sall orece. Thus said the howlat on hight: Now God for his gret micht, Set our sawlis in sight

Lefuij.

Thus for ane Dow of Dunbar drew I this Dyte, Dowit with ane Dowglas; and boith war thaj dowis: In the forest forsaid, frely partyte, Of Terneway, tendir and tryde, quho so trast trowis. War my wit as my will, than suld I wele wryte; Bot gif I sak in my leid, that north till allow is, 3c wyse, for zour worschipe, wryth me no wyte: Now blyth ws the blist barne, that all berne bowis he sen ws syking and lyf everlassand!— In mirthfull moneth of Way, In myddis of Hurraye, Thus on a tyme be Ternway, happinnit HOLLAND.

Heir endis The Buke of the Howlat.

'Scriptum' Per 'manum' M. Joannis Alloan. The Appendix.

APPENDIX.

 \mathbf{I}_{T} has not been thought necessary to point out such differences betwixt the two manuscript copies of the Howlar, as consist merely of variations in the orthography; unless when they happen to give the passage a more intelligible aspect.

Stanza I. l. 3, 'The blemes;' by adopting this reading, the line would signify that 'the flowers, or blossoms fairest of colour, glanced with the rays of the sun' See Dr Jamieson's Dictionary.—1. 7, 'the seasoun'

The four last lines of this stanza, in Bannatyne's MS. are as follows; along with the same as they occur in Pinkerton's edition, which will serve as a specimen of its general inaccuracy:—

Bann. MS.

Thus, throw the cliftis so cleir, Alone, but fallow or feir, I raikit till a reweir

That ryally reird.

Pink. Edit.
Thus throw the clifts so clere
Above, but fallow or fere,

I waikit till a reweir

That ryallye rered.

St. II. l. 'or rove;' l. 3. 'that brym,' and 'above;' l. 5, 'love was;' l. 7. 'coud hove;' l. 12, 'als was blyth.'

St. III. l. 3, 'all mennis;' \(\frac{1}{2}, \frac{1}{6}, \frac{1}{6} \) maistres;' l. 7, 'nedis;' l. 10, 'ane uthir.'

St. IV. l. 1, 'in that place;' l. 2, 'peteous;' \(\frac{1}{2}, \frac{1}{3}, \frac{1}{6} \) sowplit in;' l. 8, 'nycht in ane;' l. 13, 'a gowlyne.' \(\frac{1}{2} \)

St. v. l. 2, 'hedand and ;' l. 3, 'my face;' t l. 4, 'fetherein;' l. 6, 'I waik;' t l. 9, 'the fowlis;' t l. 13, 'to my deid.'

St. vi. 1. 2, 'skirp me;' 1. 4, 'a besum;' 1. 6, 'till accuse in this caus.'t—
'accuse' has been substituted instead of 'agus,' which is the reading in Asloan's MS.—1. 7, 'mak me amendis.'

St. vii. l. 5, 'mansueit and demure;' l. 6, 'and schand;' l. 10, 'violent of vyce.'

St. viii. l. 1, 'quhen that;' l. 3, '.ave.;' l. 8, 'speciallie.' St. ix. l. 3, 'byssym;' l. 6, 'to ask helpe;' l. 11, 'mak.' St. x. l. 2, 'bot of Natur;' l. 5, 'prophetis ourc lerit all the lawe;' l. 8, ' papingo proude.'

St. xII. l. 1, 'quhat sall;' l. 2, 'thir letteris;' l. 7, 'of kirk.'

St. xm. l. 2, 'Phesandis,' 1. 1. 3, 'presentit tham;' l. 12, 'ding.' St. xv. l. 3, 'chertouris;' l. 4, 'clethis of hair;' l. 5, 'at all houris.'

St. xvi. l. 1, 'enterit that bure;' l. 9, 'a cunnand.'

St. xvII. l. 2, 'Drake;' l. 4, 'correcter of;' l. 6, 'men of law;' l. 7, 'ruch ran.'1

St. xvIII. l. 12, ' a curate.'

St. xix. l. 11, 'thar coming.'

St. xx. l. 3, 'the foull.'

St. xxi. l. 2, 'sen that the richt;' 1 l. 5, 'the mater, the maner.' St. xxii. l. 2, 'and syne to the.' The two last words are wanting in Asloan's MS.-l. 10, 'that Spirituale.'

St. xxIII. l. 1, 'heir tauld.'

St. xxiv. l. 2, 'hufe thai;' l. 7, 'till thai.'

St. xxv. l. 4, 'secound;' l. 6, 'percying the ;' l. 9, 'fermyt on fold.' St. xxvi. l. 3, 'of mycht;' l. 5, 'Spark Halkis; l. 8, 'circulit with.'

St. xxvII. l. 1, 'be conscience;' l. 2, 'clene gold;' l. 3, 'plant till;' l. 6, ' the gem and rubyis inrold.'

St. xxvIII. l. 1, 'secound;' l. 13, 'that blenkit.'t

St. XXIX. l. 4, 'ryell of array;' l. 6 and 7, these two lines are entirely omitted in Asloan's MS.

St. XXXI. l. 3, ' in distres;' l. 12, the second ' O' does not occur in Bann. MS.

St. xxxII. l. 2, 'ticht to;' l. 9, 'full gay;' l. 12, 'se schold.'

St. XXXIII. l. 5, 'it wer lere for to tell.'

St. xxxv. l. 1, 'to rayk;' l. 6, 'thay the gre;' l. 10, 'all thir.'

St. xxxvi. l. 3, ' no way.' St. xxxvII. l. 4, 'orisons.'t

St. xxxvIII. l. 5, 'than in ;' l. 7, 'and blicht ;' l. 10, 'as thow wont.'

St. xxxix. l. 1, 'or with fays be ;' l. 9, 'thus fell;' l. 11, 'deidis he did.'

St. xL. l. 2, 'set on the;' l. 4, 'slane in ficht;' l. 5, 'relevit was;' l. 6, 'ane wycht;' l. 7, 'mony a sad;' t. 13, 'in this.'
St. xLl. l. 2, 'fell of;' l. 6, 'the pretius knycht that was in pane thore;'

1. 7, ' deid down adewe ;' l. 10, ' bureit thair.'

St. XLIL 1: 7, 'galiard grome;' l. 9, 'reskewand agane the.'

St. XLIV. l. 3, 'caus the king ;' l. 5, of weir ;' l. 6, 'soueranis ;' tl. 7, 'his capitanis.'

St. xLv. l. 5, 'of Saxonis;' l. 7, 'thocht I thame hale knewe;' l. 8, 'suld occupy us all ;' l. 9, 'referring.'t

St. XLVI. l. 4, 'trewly to tend;' l. 6, 'quarterly, that;' l. 8, 'quhilk oft was fayn.'I

St. xLvII. l. 7, 'changit so.'

3

St. XLVIII. l. 1, 'Als hieast;' l. 3, 'in a port;' l. 5, 'the rouch bustcous bair; l. 7, 'saw I nevair; 1. 8, 'wechis; l. 10, 'so feidfull.'

St. XLIX. l. 1, 'the tend;' l. 4, 'in feir landis;' l. 6, 'off his;' l. 8, ' to my mater.

St. L. l. 1, 'Merlionis;' l. 4, 'subject men;' l. 5, 'cryand pewé;' l. 6, 'as pairt of;' l. 13, ' that wretchit dwerch was.'

St. Li. l. 6, 'quha richtly recordis;' l. 9, 'the prelatis;' l. 10, 'thame wysalie.'

St. LII. l. 12, 'wes the arras.' St. LIII. l. 7, 'cardinalis all.'

St. Liv. l. 1, 'as are;' l. 9, 'but les.'

St. Lv. l. 3, 'sawouris sawce; ' l. 4, 'of force; ' l. 5, 'mane metis;' l. 8, welth and worschip.

St. Lvi. l. 1, 'in ane ;' 1. 5, 'and salue.' ;

St. LVII. l. 1, 'bod wird;' l. 8, 'altare;' l. 13, 'fra feindis.'

St. LVIII. l. 12, ' flece of.'

St. LIX. l. 1, 'thai lofe;' l. 7, 'the cithill;' l. 8, 'dulset and;' l. 11, 'Portatisis;' l. 12, 'Symbaclanis.'

St. Lx. l. 1, 'a schour;' l. 4, 'with cantelis;' l. 13, 'a man.

St. Lxi. l. 2, 'Corneraik;' l. 3, 'poyndit;' 'pryndfald;' l. 4, 'becaus thai;' 1. 9, 'jupceis.'

St. LXII. l. 3, 'dynydeach;' l. 4, 'ryve;' l. 5, 'Misch makmory ach mach mountir;' l. 8, 'are the,' and 'the Erchrye.'

St. LXIII. l. 5, 'barde wox;' l. 8, 'as tratour;' l. 9, 'rywe;' l. 10, 'than the dene rurale worth reid.'

St. Lxiv. l. 2, 'the Tuquheit;' l. 5, 'fylit him.'

St. Lxv. l. 3, 'fra his heid;' l. 9, : lycht in lyne;' l. 12, 'kissit syne.'

St. LXVI. l. 1, 'athillis;' l. 9, 'present to.'
St. LXVII. l. 2, 'that kennit;' l. 8, 'penitent.'
St. LXVIII. l. 4, 'to reasoun;' l. 8, 'or I mair;' l. 11, 'haue pete.'

St. LXIX. l. 2, 'lent the ;' l. 4, 'federein ;' l. 5, 'and gane ;' l. 7, 'was the ;' l. 12, 'fro Byron.'

St. Lxx. l. 7, 'with the Pape;' l. 12, 'rebaleis.'

St. LXXI. l. 2, 'consignage;' l. 3, 'fetherein;' l. 8, 'viciit;' l. 13, 'so hautanc.'

St. LXXII. l. 1, 'impertinax;' l. 4, 'that with that lady allyt;' l. 8, 'hautane.'

St. LXXIII. l. 4, 'till thy self;' 1. 8, 'and schortly;' 1. 9, 'and to;' l. 11, ' and gane.'

St. LXXIV. l. 4, 'bailfully;' l. 8, 'and sorowit;' l. 10, 'bysym.'

St. LXXV. l. 1, 'wretch wayest;' l. 2, 'in will;' l. 5, 'was of hewit;' l. 7, 'the lathest;' l. 8, 'mek zour;' l. 9, 'prelettis of pryde. Asloane's MS. has 'prencis,' or 'princis,' repeated.

St. LXXVI. l. 3, 'claithis, thi cost;' l. 7, 'hafles;' l. 11, 'thy gret.'

St. LXXVII. l. 4, 'Terway;' l. 6, 'gif lak;' l. 12, 'thus in.'

In the above list, I have put a mark (‡) to such of the readings as seem to be preferable to those in Asloan's manuscript, although they have not been adopted. Notwithstanding all the vigilance made use of to make the text as accurate as possible, the following errata require to be corrected. If any others should have likewise escaped, I flatter myself that they are not of much importance.

St. xvi. l. 5, 'Thai war,' read 'Thai mak.'—St. xxii. l. 6. 'Emperour;' this word, which is contracted in the MS. in this, and in one or two other places, should have been printed 'Empriour.'—St. xxxiv. l. 8, 'Estate,' read 'Estatis.'—St. xLv. l. 7, 'That thai,' read 'Thocht I thaim.'—St. 46, l. 8, 'Aft,' read 'Off;' l. 9, 'Armis, read 'Armes.'—St. xLvii. l. 9, 'bowit,' dele the inverted commas.

St. 1. In the myddis of May.—Beyond all question, the most extensive and singular specimen of alliterative composition in the English language, is the Visions of Piers Plomman, which Fame has ascribed to Robert Langland, who flourished about the year 1370, and who, by the bye, is claimed as a native of Scotland, by David Buchanan, one of our older biographical writers, in his unpublished treatise De Scriptoribus Scotia illustribus. Much curious information concerning alliterative verse is contained in the preface to the splendid edition of the Visions, by the late Dr Whittaker. But I need not enlarge on a subject on which so much has been said; nor attempt to point out the motives which led authors, at successive and different times, to adopt this favourite practice of bringing together, (in the words of Sir Philip Sidney,) "Rimes Running in Ratiling Romes."

In reference to the alliterative style of the Howlat, Mr George Chalmers, in the preface to his elaborate edition of Sir David Lyndsay's Works, says, "If it be inquired, by what artifices of composition the poets of these times sacrificed common sense to far-fetched conceits, they will be found in two sources; their desire of alliteration, and their passion for antiquated phraseology. In obtaining the first object, they searched for words having the same prefixes, without any analogy of sense; and in quest of the last, they went beyond the old English, into the Anglo-Saxon speech, as they found it in vulgar use. They thus sacrificed sense to sound, and facility to facture."—Not so, however, according to Holofernes, in Love's Labour's Lost; who, in his "ex-temporal epitaph" on the "Death of the Deer," says, "I will something affect the letter, (that is, I will practise alliteration; and, gentle reader, pray mark the reason)—for it argues facility."

St. v.—The complaint of this melancholy bird, as Mr Alexander Thomson, in his MS remarks on this poem, has observed, is not like that of the Owl in

Gray's Elegy, complaining to the moon

" Of such as, wand'ring near her secret bower, Molest her ancient solitary reign"—

But rather resembles that of Shakespeare's Richard, when descanting on his own deformity.

St. XIII.—XIX.—In these stanzas, the different birds belonging to the State Temporal, with their several dignities, are minutely described. "Some ingenuity," as SirWalter Scott, in a MS. note, observes, "is displayed in selecting the points of connection betwixt the particular species of birds, and the ranks and orders assigned to each. The author has anticipated Dryden, who describes the Catholic clergy, on account of their early and vigilant church service, under character of 'the bird which warned Saint Peter of his fall'—for Holland informs us,

'The Cok in his cler cap that crawis and cryis, Was chosyn Chantor.'

The mendicant friars are slily described under the guise of

' Crying Crawis and Cais that cravis the corn.'

—The solitary Heron is a contemplative Chartreux. Extensive notes," Sir Walter adds, "might be written on this part of the poem;" which, however, the editor will not at present attempt.

St. x1x. l. 4, 'Se fowle and seid fowle.'—Chaucer also speaks of "Waterfoulis" and "Seed-foulis"—In his poem, the "Assemblie of Foulis," all the birds are gathered before the "noble Goddesse, Nature, on St. Valentine's Day, to choose their makes;" but before proceeding to mention their names, the poet separates them in the following manner:—

"This noble Empresse, full of all grace, Bad every foule take her own place, As they were wont alway, fro yere to yere, On Sanct Valentine's day, standen here.

That is to saie, the foules of rauine Were highest set, and then the foules smale That eaten, as that Nature would encline As worme or thing, of which I tell no tale But water foule, sate lowest in the dale; And foules that liueth by sede, sat on the grene, And that so many, that wonder was to sene."

St. xxvII.—The armorial bearings described in this and some of the following stanzas, might receive some illustration from the Register of Armes, by Sir David Lyndsay of the Mount, lately published from the original manuscript. The description of the arms of the "Empriour of Almane," by our author, corresponds to those of the "Empriour of Rome," by the Lord Lyon King at Arms, who has in the same manner blazoned the armorial bearings of the Earl of Douglas; of Douglas, Earl of Murray; and of Douglas, Earl of Ormond; but with some differens, which it is unnecessary in this place to be at the trouble of pointing out.

St. xxix.—As descriptive of the Royal Arms of Scotland, I may copy a passage from a small tractat of the Scots Original, preserved in Asloan's manuscript, which the reader may compare with the corresponding passage in Fordun.—Scotichronicon, Vol. I. p. 47.

"Then the Kingis son, callit to name Fergus Ferherd, gadderit gret power of Scottis men, and come out our Scotland major, or Ireland, in less Scotland, and tuke the crowne of it, and was our first king, and brocht the armes of Scotland. The quhilkis remaynis zit—ane Red rampand Lyoun, in a scheld of gold; viz.

Albion in terris rex primus germine Scotis
Illorum turnis rubri tulit arma leonis,
Fergusius fulvo Ferherd rugientis in aruo.
Liliger ille leo rosidus nunc pingiter auro
Christum tercentis terdenes prefuit annis."—Fol. 95.

The following extract presents the subject in a more ludicrous point of view, being indeed taken from one of those exaggerated satirical accounts of our country, in which the English people, even to a later period than the times of Swift or of Churchill, seem to have delighted themselves, as affording them a vent to their national antipathy. "The arms of the kingdom was anciently a Red Lyon Rampant in a field of gold; but An. Dom. 787, they had the augmentation of the double tressure, for assisting the French King; but his Majesties arms in Scotland is a mere Hysteron Proteron—the pride of the people being such, as to place the Scots arms in the dexter quarter of the escutcheon, and make the unicorn the dexter supporter, with the thistle at his heel, with a suitable motto- 'Nemo mc impune laccssct,' true enough; whoever deals with them, shall be sure to smart for't: The thistle was wisely placed there, partly to shew the fertility of the country-Nature alone producing plenty of these gay flowers-and partly as an emblem of the people; the top thereof having some colour of a flower, but the bulk and substance of it is only sharp and poysonous pricks."—A Modern Account of Scotland, 1679, 4to, p. 3. St. XXIX.—The latter lines of this stanza are very curious, and have been considered as a prophetick enunciation of the Union of the crowns of Scotland and England, about a century and a half before that event was accomplished in the person of James VI. A curious prediction of this kind is detailed in Bishon Spotiswood's History.

St. xxx.—The history of the Douglasses, during the time of our author, offers much curious and important matter of enquiry, had this been a suitable place for entering on the subject. The fate of William, Eighth Earl of Douglas, has been alluded to in the preface. His brother and successor, James, after the discomfiture at Arkinholm, in 1455, and the forfeiture of his title and estates, (Acta Parl. vol. II. p. 42 and 75.) which immediately followed, retired to England, where he long lived in retirement, without any further attempt to disturb the publick tranquillity. At length, however, in the year 1485, he was induced to make an excursion into his native land, when he was taken prisoner, and sentenced by James the Third to be confined in the Abbey of Lindores—a fate which he met with great resignation; observing, "He that may no better be, must be a Monk." He entered in holy orders—having, as it is said, been brought up in his youth with a view to church preferment—and died there, 15th April, 1488. His epitaph may be seen in Cranfurd's Peerage,

St. xxx. l. 5.—Bellenden, in his translation of Hector Bocce's Croniklis, uses the same term of commendation, when speaking of "the illuster surname of Dowglas, quhilkis," he says, "war evir the sicker targe and weirmal of Scotland aganis Inglismen; and wan many landis be their singular manheid and vassalage;" he afterwards adds, that "sen that surname was put down, Scotland has done few vailyhent dedis in England."—fol. CCx. Godscroft repeats these words whilst vindicating that family from the charges usually madagainst them:—"Truely," he says, "if we shall speake without partiality, their greatnesse was so usefull to their king and country, that Hector Bocchias stickes not to say, the Donglasses were ever the sure buckler and warre-wall of Scotland, and wonne many lands by their singular manhood and vassalages; for they decored this realme with many noble acts, and by the glory of their martiall deeds."-p. 207.

St. XXXII.—If we reject the notion of the poem containing a satire on King James II., it might the more readily admit of a doubt, whether it was not written previous to the death of Earl William, in 1452, since the manner in which the then Earl of Douglas is spoken of, seems to be equally applicable to either of the brothers. The probability, however, is in favour of what is elsewhere stated at sufficient length: otherwise the author most assuredly would not have limited the green-tree of Douglas to four branches; and it would have been a most inexcusable oversight in Holland, when describing the members of that family, to which he appears to have been so much attached, and mentioning the younger brothers so particularly, had he passed over in silence the second brother, and the presumptive heir of succession to the earldom.

St. xxxv.-xll.—In some respects, Holland, in the Episode contained in these stanzas concerning the 'gud Schir James,' or, as he is sometimes called, 'the Black Douglas,' has greatly exceeded his illustrious predecessor, the Archdeacon of Aberdeen, with whose metrical history of the Bruce, he was evidently acquainted. Several lines might be quoted, with which there is too close a similarity to suppose it to have been merely accidental. On this subject, Wyntown, the Prior of Lochlevin, is remarkably concise; contenting himself with referring his readers to Barbour. There was no great loss sustained, probally, in his so doing; as it is not likely that he would have added anything to the interest of his predecessor's narrative. After telling us, that in 1320, King Robert lay in lang sicknes in Cardross, and that his body was interred in the Kirk of Dunfermline, he merely adds,

"And gnd Jamys of Dowglas His Hart tuk, as fyrst orderyd was For to bere in the Holy Land. How that that wes tene on hand, Well purportis Browsys buk, Quhay will tharof the matere luke."

St. XLIII. - Since writing the preface, I observe that " Archibaldus Moraviæ Comes," appears as one of the witnesses to a publick deed, 28th June, 1445. -(Acta Parl. vol. 11. p. 59.) The earliest mention of him under that title, which I had then discovered, was in the curious paper, of date, 25th August, 1447, printed by Hay of Drumboote, (in his Vindication of Elizabeth More; Edin. 1723, 4to, p. 65, &c.) determining the priority of birth in favour of James, over Archibald, who, it appears, were twin-brothers; in which Sir James is designated as "of Heriotmuir;" and his brother is expressly called "Archibald of Douglas, Erle of Murrawe." The succession was thus amicably adjusted, in the event that, "gif it sall happen the said [William] Lord Erle, to decesse withoutyn ayrs of his body lauchfullie to be gottin."-The name of Archibald, Earl of Murray, is again mentioned, in 1449, as one of the conservators of a truce with England .- (Rymeri Foedera, XI. 253, &c.) But the former deed is sufficient to shew that the marriage was celebrated as early as 1445. From Godscroft we learn that it was subsequent to the death of the Earl of Murray, the father of the lady. There is usually a sad want of dates in ascertaining such minute points of history.

St. XLIV.—The name of the Earl of Ormond occurs likewise among the witnesses in the deed above referred to, in June 1445. The title therefore must have been conferred on him not long after his brother, the Earl of Douglas, had gained the ascendancy in matters of state.

St. xLiv. I. 3, 'And right so did the ferd.—On the margin of Bannatyne's MS., opposite these words, is affixed the name of "Lord Balveny;" younger brother, as here described, of the Douglasses.

St. LIX.-Lord Hailes, who speaks of the Howlat as a verbose work, adds, that it must have merit with antiquaries, from the stanzas describing "the kyndis of instruments, the sportaris, (jugglers,) the Irish bard, and the fulis." Many of the musical instruments here mentioned, are likewise named by Gawin Douglas, in his Palice of Honour. His words are,

> " In modulatioun hard I play and sing Faburdoun, priksang, discant, countering, Cant organe, figuratioun, and gemmell; On croud, lute, harp, with mony gudlie spring; Schalmes, clariounes, portatives, hard I ring, Monycord, organe, tympane, and cymbell, Sytholl, psalterie, and voices sweet as bell," &c.

Edit. Edin. 1579, p. 14.

St. Lx.-Lxt.-The wonderful exploits of the juggler here described may remind some readers of the curious stanza, in Douglas's Palice of Honour, of a similar nature; where the author says,

> "The Nigromansie thair saw I eik anone, Of Benytas, Bongo, and Freir Bacone, With mony subtill point of Juglairy : Of Flanders peis maid mony precious stone, Ane greit laid sadill of a siching bone, Of ane nutemug thay maid a Monk in hy, Ane paroche kirk of ane penny pye: And Benytas of ane mussill maid an aip, With mony uther subtill mow and jaip."

Edit. Edin. 1579, p. 56.

St. XII.-" One is naturally arrested by the character of the Irish Bard, who breaks in at the banquet like a sturdy beggar, reciting in alternate lines the Irish gibberish by which he proposed to deserve entertainment; and expressing in English his coarse and unmannerly wants and demands. The jargon he speaks is too much corrupted, I fear, to be intelligible."-Manuscript Note by Sir W. Scott.

If such was the usual conduct of the strolling bards in those days, we need not be much surprised in finding them classed with sornaris, sturdy beggars, and other misterfull men, who were denounced as vagrants, and proceeded against accordingly. There is an Act of Parliament in the year 1449, against bardis, or "ony that makis thaim fulis that ar nocht bardis, or sic lik ytheris rynaris aboute."—(Acta Parl. Vol. 11. p. 36.)

In this stanza, as the writer of the manuscript critique on the poem has observed, "there are some lines wholly Irish, which have as uncouth and forbidding an appearance, as the scene in the Punic or Carthaginian language, which Plantus has inserted in one of his comedies.—(Poenulus, Act. v. Sc. 1.)"

LXII

St. LxLiv.—"The order of the entertainment is given very correctly; and may be considered as a picturesque delineation of a banquet of the period. There is first a religious hymn to the Virgiu; then a vocal and instrumental concert; then the deceptions and tricks of a juggler or conjuror; then the intrusion of the Irish bard, with behaviour as rude as his dialect—his combat with the two professed fools—and the fight of the two fools or jesters with each other—all of which were amusements peculiar to the period. In paintings of the older schools, we often see such strange associations as persons of quality feasting at the high dais, while beggars attend in the porch, and dwarfs and jesters are gamboling or fighting on the floor."—Manuscript Note by Sir W. Scott.

St. LXVIII.—" If nothing more were meant by the Owl, than the bird commonly so called, I should scarcely think the improvement of his form, what the critics call a Dignus Vindice Nodus, a cause of sufficient importance to warrant the introduction of such a Prosopopæia as Nature."—Manuscript Critique, &c. p. 12.

St. LXXVI. 1. 9.—In a note to the preface, (p. 2,) the false reading of THY CROWKE in Pinkerton's edition is taken notice of; as on these words part of the strength of his argument is founded. But except in one other instance, I have not thought it necessary to trouble either the reader or myself in pointing out the errors which have crept into that edition of the Howlat; which, indeed, without any sort of exaggeration, might perhaps be termed the most inaccurate copy of any old Scotish poem which has in our days been submitted to the publick. The blame, however, (it is but just to remark,) does not rest with the editor, who, in this, as well as in other instances, was obliged to trust to persons who were not very competent to the task.

In the conclusion to the preface, a curious passage in Blind Harry's Wallace, alluding to the Howlat, is given; and it is rather singular, that the comparison which is there made use of, should have been adopted from so fabulous a writer by our old historian, John Major, whose words again have been re-echoed by subsequent writers.—Historia, etc. Paris, 1521, fol. LXXI.

EDINBURGH:

PRINTED BY JAMES BALLANTYNE AND COMPANY.

MDCCCXXIII.

