BY HIS VERY HUMBLE SERVANT,

THE AUTHOR.

PREFACE

TO THE

FIRST EDITION.

The following Grammar is intended for the use of Schools.* In matter and plan it differs a little from those Gaelic Grammars already published. It exhibits the principles not only of the written, but also of the spoken language. The materials are arranged in the simplest order, and the definitions expressed in the plainest words. In exhibiting the declension of nouns, a new classification, deduced from the nature of their changes, has been adopted. The conjugation of verbs has, in part, been remodelled: along with each example the verbal particles are given in their proper places, in order at once to shew their government and application. The department of Syntax has been minutely investigated; and such an outline of Prosody† is presented as was deemed sufficient for schools.

It was written for the use of the General Assembly's Highland Schools. The late venerable Principal Baird, and the Secretary of the Committee, encouraged the author to proceed with the work, but the patronage of the Committee it never obtained.

As the success of the work depends greatly upon the support of the English reader, a considerable portion of it is, on his account, devoted to the subject of pronunciation; and under this head is introduced a figured spelling, indicating the powers of the Gaelic combinations by means of single characters. The vocables which exemplify the orthography are so arranged, as also to illustrate the department of composition and derivation.

To elucidate all the rules, especially those of Syntax, and to familiarize the student with their application, copious exercises, drawn from various sources, have been provided. Several other improvements will be found in perusing the volume.

As errors must inevitably creep into a work of this kind, if the candid critic should discover any, and kindly point them out, the author will feel pleasure in correcting them when an opportunity occurs.

In conclusion, the author begs leave to acknowledge his obligations to those ladies and gentlemen who encouraged him to proceed with his work, by so liberally patronizing it themselves,* and by obtaining the patronage of the many distinguished names which adorn the list of Subscribers.

* To the family of GLENGARRY, deep gratitude is due for their liberal patronage, and successful support of this work. To R. Campbell, Esq. of Achnambrec, and to Mrs. Campbell, the author is also glad thus publicly to acknowledge his best thanks, for their disinterested generosity and friendship towards him on all occasions.

PREFACE

TO THE

SECOND EDITION.

The favourable reception given by the Public to the first edition, has induced the publishers to offer them a new impression of the Gaelic Grammar.

The author has carefully revised the whole; and though, in doing so, he saw no occasion to disturb the general plan of the work, yet he has here and there made a few alterations, by way of retrenchment or improvement; so that, it is hoped, this edition will be found no less deserving of public patronage than the one now exhausted.

PRACTICAL GAELIC GRAMMAR.

PART I.

ORTHOGRAPHY.

ORTHOGRAPHY treats of the division and powers of the alphabet, and of the proper spelling of words.

The Gaelic alphabet has only eighteen letters, viz., a, b, c. d, e, f, g, h, i, l, m, n, o, p, r, s, t, u. These are divided into vowels and consonants.* The vowels are a, o, u; e, i. A, o, u, are called broad vowels; e, i, small.

The consonants are either plain or aspirated. The plain consonants are b, c, d, f, g, l, m, n, p, r, s, t.

When followed by an h, these are called aspirate; as bh, ch, dh, fh, gh, mh, ph, sh, th.

L, n, r, have each two qualities of sound, a hard and a liquid; but h is not used after them to indicate either of these qualities.

• A vowel is a sound that can be pronounced alone; as a, i. A consonant is an articulation that cannot be formed without uttering a vowel before or after it; as f, b, (ef. bé.) A broad vowel is one that has a full, open expression; as a, o, u. A small vowel is one that has a slender, squeezed expression; as e in ceò, i in cir. Letters are the signs or pictures of the elementary sounds of a language.

Some pairs of the consonants are formed by means of the same organs of speech; but are uttered with a greater or less degree of force. Letters of the same organ are called kindred letters. Those pronounced with the greater force are termed sharp, and those with the lesser force flat.

KINDRED PLAIN CONSONANTS.

Sharp.....p, c, t. Flat.....b, g, d.

KINDRED ASPIRATES.

Sharp.....ph, ch.* Flat.....bh, mh, gh, dh.

The aspirate or secondary powers of the plain consonants may at one view be exhibited as follows:

1. 2. 3

The single characters by which the secondary or aspirate sounds are above represented, are not employed in Gaelic orthography, because they are obviously too few to prevent ambiguity. The primary letter is therefore always preserved in the spelling, and its secondary power or sound is denoted by writing h after it; so that instead of

v', v, f,  $\chi$  y, y, h, h, we use bh, fh, mh, ph, ch, dh, gh, sh, th, giving these double letters the pronunciation usually denoted by the single letters which are placed over them respectively.

* S and t aspirate lose their plain power entirely, and instead of acquiring a kindred power, they usurp that of h; so that these are really the only letters that are aspirated in Gaelic. The reamore propely reciprocate their kindred articulations, as bi (be) mo (mo). pòs (pòs). car (căr). dos (dos). gar (găr). bhi(ve) mho (vo). phòs (fòs). char (xăr). dhos (yos). ghar (yar). F aspirate becomes quiescent.

B, f, m, p, are named labials; c, g, gutturals; c, d, g, l, n, r, s, t, linguals; m, n, nasals.

SPELLING

Is the writing of words with the proper and established letters.

BULES FOR SPELLING.

I. In words of more than one syllable, the first vowel of each succeeding syllable must be of the same class

• An example will illustrate this further. The following sentence—Bha mo mhuime fo phàidheadh thall aig a' chòirnealair Dhònullach ùine thada, gus an do ghabh i galar à bàis 's an do shiubhail i,—might be written thus.—Va mo vuime fo fàidheadh hall aig a' xoirnealair Fonullach ùine 'ada, gus an do yabh i galar à bàis, 'san do hiubhail i,...But were we to adopt the latter mode of spelling, it is evident that, in every instance where an initial consonant underwent mutation, we should, under this system, entirely lose sight of such consonant, and consequently be in doubt whether a v related to a v or m; a y to a d or g; an h to an s or t. The orthography of the Welsh is founded on a principle pretty similar to that last instanced above; but the superiority of ours over it in point of perspicuity will be readily acknowledged by considering the following contrast.—

|     | Welsh.    |    | Gaelic.       |                |
|-----|-----------|----|---------------|----------------|
|     | merch,    |    | marc,         | a horse.       |
| dwy | ferch,    | da | mharc,        | 2 horses.      |
|     | câr agos, |    | caraid fagus, | a near friend. |
| ei  | gâr,      | ä  | charaid,      | his friend.    |
| fy  | nghâr,    | mo | charaid,      | my friend.     |

Attention to the above will show that all our double letters are employed in order to prevent ambiguity and confusion.

with the last vowel of its preceding syllable; as caileag, a girl; cuil-ean, a pup; pis-eag, a kitten; pògaidh, will kiss; las-air, a flame; faidheadaireachd, prophecy.

II. In the course of inflecting a primitive word, or combining a termination or compositive syllable therewith, if two vowels belonging to distinct syllables meet together, they must be separated by a silent dh. gh, or th; as clò, clò than, plaiden; là, là ithean, days; bì, bi-thidh, will be; ceò, mist; ceò-th-ar, misty; ceò-th-ran, a slight mist; brù, a protuberance, a belly; brudhach, brughach, or bruthach, a brae, a brow, a swelling ascent.

III. The prefixes é, es, di, im, in, are written éa or éu, eas, dio, iom, ion, before a broad root, but é,* es,+ di, im, in before a small root; as * "E, particle privative, non (in old Celtic). On la trouve en ce sens dans enormis Latin." M. Bullet, Mem. de. Lan. Celtique.

+ " Es particle privative; voyez esbyd, esgar." id. Es is always written eas in Gaelic; as eascar, a foe; eas-sith, disturbance, although es would as well express the sound of the syllable as it does in es-an, HE, p. 13 .- The prefix an is written an, ana, ain, aim, aimh; as an-am, unseasonable time. an-éibhinn, unjoyous. an-iarrtas, an over-demand. an-obair, supererogation. an-dàna, impudent. an-fhann, faint. an-uair, bad weather.

anabarrach, excessive. ana-caithteach, profuse, prodi-ana-miannach, exceedingly covetous. anamhor, exceedingly great. huge.

aimbeairt, poverty. anagna, an abuse, mal-practice, aimlisg, a pest, disturber. ana-paireach, causing exceeding aimhleas, harm, injury.

Broad root.
6a-dòchas, despair.
diomoladh, dispraise.
iomairt, a bustle.
ion-mholta, praiseworthy.
6-ceart, wrong.

Small root.
dilinn, a flood, &c.
im-shiubhal, perambulation.
infhir, marriageable.

IV. The letters c, d, g, l, n, r, s, t, and the aspipirates ch, gh, dh, must, when they have their small sound, be followed or preceded by a small vowel, but when their broad sound, they must be in contact with a broad vowel; as ecò, mist, ciod, what? dìg, a ditch; diog, a syllable; géug, a branch; dìol, usage, &c. lìon, fill; neul, a cloud; roid, a race; còir, justice; saic, sacks; tais, soft; tuit, fall; tòir, pursuit.

When one of these is initial and one final in a word, and both have the same quality, one vowel serves to govern the sound of each; as dig, a ditch; croch, to hang; lagh, law; crodh, kine; soc, a plowshare; grod, rotten; spog, a paw; corp, a body; cat, a cat; crich, to an end. But if they differ in quaco is written co, con, comh, coim, coimh, coi, coin; as, co-aontaich, consent. co-dhalta, a foster-brother. co-fharpais, emulation. co-chomunn, communion. conaltradh, conversation. conard, level, plain. conspaid, a dispute. contrachd, a curse.

comar, a confluence.
coimir, a match, equal.
coimeas, a comparison.
coingeis, } indifferent.

These changes are caused by attention to euphonia, and to express variety of pronunciation. We find similar changes take place in other languages for the like purpose; as ½μβαλλω for iν; συμμάσπτω for συν; iγκαλυπτω for iν; so ἀρ for ἀπο, κακ, καπ, for κατα, &c.; collige for conlege, comparo for conparo, cominus for commanus; cogo for conago, aufero for abfero, suffero for subfero, sustuli for substuli, corrigo for conrego, coitus for conitus, &c.

lity, then the syllable which they bound will have a diphthong; as calle, chalk; dail, a field; doirt, spill; dion, protect; grios, beseech; gliog, a click; nior, not; soigh, of luxury; toit, steam; toigh, dear.

The letters b, f, m, p, and the aspirates bh, mh, ph, sh, th, have no distinction of broad and small sound; and this rule, therefore, does not necessarily apply to them. Notwithstanding, to preserve the orthography from exceptions, and to assist the memory in applying the rule, it has been extended even to this immutable class of letters; as iom-lan, complete; abair, say; piob, a pipe; riota, brimstone; siobhalta, peaceable; clobair, a shepherd; neamh, heaven; Eiphit, Egypt; eathar, a boat; deifir, hurry; aibidil, an alphabet; soisheamh, tame, gentle.

V. L, n, r, when they have their liquid sounds, are written double in the middle and at the end of words, but never at the beginning; as fallus, sweat; cainnt, speech; beannaich, bless; connadh, fuel; earrann, a portion; currac, a cap; ball, a spot; clann, children; tarr, a belly.

VI. In spelling compound words, if the syllabic accent be on the first syllable, the component parts must be incorporated into one undivided term; as orcheard, a goldsmith; arm'chrios, a swordbelt; an'shocair, trouble, disease; ac'arsaid, a haven; ban'arach, a dairymaid; cas'ruiste, barefoot. But if the accent fall upon the last part of the compound, or if both its terms retain their primitive accents, then a hyphen must be inserted between the parts; as crithal'mhainn, an earthquake; maoim-sléibhe, a mountain torrent; leac-ùrlair, a floor-flag.

If the first part of the compound govern the second in the genitive, a hyphen is placed between them; as an art-bais, a winding-sheet; poll-bùiridh, a rutting pool; slig'e-chreachainn, a scallop shell; tigh-chaorach, a sheep-cot; gar'adh-drom'a, a march-dyke; fraoch-fal'oisg, the stumps of burned heather; adh'arc-fhidain, a powder-horn; leab'a-luach'rach, a bed of rushes; bail'e-marg'aidh, a market-toen; both'an-àiridh, a shieling-booth; bo ghamh'na, a farrow-cow; clach-lìomhaidh, a grindstone; cu-uis'ge, a water-spaniel; deoch-slainte, health, toast.

VII. In spelling compounds of the above character, if the first term be feminine, the initial consonant of the second term must be aspirated;" but if the first term be of the mas. gender, the initial consonant of the second remains plain; as,

mas. plain. fem. asp. cum'an-bain'ne, a milk-cuinn'eag-bhainn'e, a milk pail. cogue. fear-ciùil, a musician. abh'aidh-chiùil, a musicul maid'e-drom'a, a roof-tree. instrument. muil'ionn-gaoith'e, a wind-bo-dhara, a salacious cow. mill. glas-ghuib', a gag. tigh-fuin'e, a bakehouse. sgian-fhal'a, a fleam. seol-mar'a, a tide. slat-mhar'a, sea tangle. marsanda-pac'a, a peddler. cuach-phàdraic, plantain. poc'a-saic', a large sack. bean-shith', a female browtigh-tog'alach, a brewnie. slat-thomh'ais, an ellwand. house.

fem. sgoil-dann'sa, a dancing school. bain-seirbhiseach, a maid serbain-diuc, a duchess.

bain-léigh, a female physi-bain'tighearna, a lady. cian. ban-suirdhiche, a female wooer. bean-nighe, a washerwoman. binn-ditidh, sentence of conclach-réasoir, a hone. demnation.

When (1.) an adjective and a noun, or (2.) two adjectives, are compounded, the initial consonant of the second term must be aspirated, and separated by a hyphen; as,

1. dearbh-bhràthair, a brother. |beò-ghriosach, living embers. coi-cheangal, a covenant. og-mhadainn, carly dawn. sar-fhear, a chief, nobleman

ACCENTS.

The term accent has a twofold meaning in Gaelic grammar. 1. It signifies the stress laid upon a certain syllable of a word in pronunciation; as ban'arach, cunn'art: 2. It signifies a mark written over a vowel to denote its quantity or quality of sound, or both; as àrd, béus, è. The first may be called the syllabic, and the second the vocal accent.

VIII. When any vowel has a long sound, it is marked with a grave accent; as ban, fair, white; è, he;

tì, tea; cnò, a nut; cù, a dog.

IX. E and o have two qualities of long sound; 1. e like e in thère; 2. like ā in tāle, ei in véin, or é in French bonté. 1. o like o in fôr, côrn. 2. o like o in böld, söre. When e and o have their first long sound they are marked with a grave accent; but when their second, with an acute; as 1. nèamh, heaven, 2. léum, a leap, 1. mòr, great. 2. bóid, an oath.

The following words, when not combined with others in writing, can be distinguished only by the vocal accent.

Long. àm, time bàs, death bàn, fair, pale blàs, warmth Short. am, the, their* bas, a palm ban, of women blas. taste

PART II. PRONUNCIATION.

Each of the vowels has a long and a short quantity. The long quantity is marked with a grave accent; as ard, high; èud, zeal; (béum,* a taunt;) im, butter; òl, drink; (fóid,* a turf;) ùr, fresh. The short quantity is left unmarked; as, ag, doubt; eag, a notch; ion, proper; olc, bad; ud, yon.

In final unaccented syllables, all the vowels assume an obscure indefinite quality, just as the English vowels do in the words mustard, over, Stirling, cannon, martyr, &c. Hence the broad vowels are sometimes indiscriminately employed, as correspondents, in the termination of polysyllables; as agaibh or aguibh; acos or acus; sòlas or sòlus; claigeann, or claigiunn. So, in the oblique cases of nouns and adjectives, when the radical vowel changes in quality, a letter of the same class, supposed better to represent the change of pronunciation, is occasionally substituted in place of the radical character; as clann, cloinne; dall, doill; ceòl, ciùil; ceann, cinn; fear, fir; fras, froise. But sometimes this is not attended to even where the pronunciation of the radical vowel varies

The letter i represents the stenderest vocal sound in Gaelic. It is pronounced like French i, Italian j, or ee in English. In expressing this vowel the lips and jaws are so greatly distended from their natural position, that, in uttering any articulation before or after it in the same syllable, such articulation is necessarily affected by the slender squeezed quality of the vowel. A consonant thus influenced by the quality of i is said to have its small sound.

in quality; as arm, airm; tarbh, tairbh, &c.

TO THE CITS SMALL SOUNDS

* E and o have a long quality which is also denoted by an acute accent. See p. 8.

The letter e is sometimes a broad, sometimes a small vowel. When alone, or forming the initial of a syllable, it is broad; as è, esan, éisd. In the combination eu, when preceded by a consonant, e represents a diphthongal sound, composed of i short and the broad vowel é or è; as in céum, dèur, resolvable into ciém, dièr, or kýém, dyèr,* So also in teas, fead, e is resolvable into ties, fied, or tyes, fyed. In the diphthong eò, however, e has only halfits diphthongal sound, and is merely a substitute for i, into which letter, indeed, it resolves itself in the inflexion of many vocables in whose nominative it is represented by e; as ceann, cinn, fear, fir, ccòl, ciùil, cearc, circe, seòl, siùil, &c.

fâr, făt; thêre, pāle; lĕt, gåte; yîeld, wĭg, côrn, nō pŏt, bólt; trûe. pŭsh, up.

NOTE—A in gate is of the same quantity and quality with a in pale, but it is used here to denote a shorter quantity.

* Nothing but ignorance of the true nature of the vowel e could induce the practice of writing a broad vowel after it, in such instances as beuc, deud, geug, leum, neul, beurr, beus, céuta, èarr, fear, &c. E partakes of the small quality only when c, g, d, t, ch, gh, dh, l, n, r, s, precede it in the same syllable. The reason of this is obvious; for it is i, the prepositive of the diphthong, that really meets these letters and affects them. Whereas, when they come after e in the same syllable. they are then governed by the postpositive é or è broad, with which they really come in apposition; and it is as unnecessary to employ a broad servile after e in the latter situation, as it would be to use an i before it in the former. The practice of inserting an i between it and a final articulation, as in peic, seid, deich, meidh, Gréig, déigh, meil, féin, geir, réir, éisd, &c., completely proves the correctness of the view here taken of the vowel e. Were it a small vowel when pronounced in combination with a final consonant, why should another small vowel be employed to indicate the quality of such consonant?

THE CONSONANTS.

В.

B is pronounced as in Italian and other continental languages.

F, M, P,

C, G, D, T, CH, DH, GH.

Each of these represents two qualities of articulation. When combined in the same syllable with a, o, or u, their articulation is called broad; when with i, or before the diphthong e, (ie*), their articulation is called small. The English reader will form some notion of the broad and slender articulations, by attending to the different quality of the consonants in pronouncing the following words,—k+ in kore (core) is broad; k in key, king, is small: d in dore (door) broad; d in deer, due, small: g in go, got, broad; g in geese, guide, small: t in toe, tone, broad; t in tea, tune, small.

Ch broad is like gh in the Scotch words haugh, saugh, or ch in clachan. Ch small is like ch in the Scotch words hech, sich (a sigh), dreich (tedious), pech, &c., or the German ich, in manlich, &c.

Dh and gh broad are pronounced as the people of Northumberland, or such as have a burr in their speech, articulate rr in bur, purr, porridge, &c.; dh and gh small are pronounced as y consonant in the words ye, yet, you.

Each of these letters represents three articulations; or rather varieties of the same articulation. 1. They have a plain, broad, and small sound like English I, n, r, in land, live; name, need; ride, reach; as gaol, love: làn, fair; raon, a field; car, a trick; ris, to him. 2. A broad liquid sound like Italian I, n, r, in altro, uno; as in las, (lläs) to kindle; toll, a hole; nàraich (nnârich) to shame; dônn, brown; ramh (rrâmh) an oar; côrr, a remainder. 3. A small liquid sound, like gl, gn, liquid, in the French and Italian words serail, regner, gli, ogni; so lian (glian) as many as; niän (gniän) a daughter; léum (gläm) to jump; néul or nèul (gnèll) a cloud. The third sound of r is produced by bringing the tip of the tongue in contact with the upper teeth, and then pronouncing the murmur which the character represents.

S has only two sounds, the sharp, like s in so, sing, and the flat, like sh in shore, she.

BH, MH, SH, TH, FH, H.

Bh sounds like v in English.

Mh sounds also like v, but is always accompanied with a certain nasality which cannot be described upon paper.

Sh and Th sound like h in ho, he, him.

Fh is mute, except in fhuair, fhéin, fhathast, where the h is sounded, as hǔăĭr, hāne, hǔ-ust.

H sounds as in he, hard, hoar.

The Characters used in the Figured Spelling sound as follows:

as in French que

d as in Italian creduto, grande.

gh { sounding like rr in bur, } loch, each.

* W, in the figured spelling, indicates the pronunciation of the west Highlands, N, that of the north or mid Highlands, and c, that common to both. See page 21. It must, however, be observed, that exceptions are to be found to the general rules almost in every district.

+ Italic i in the figured spelling is not sounded. It shows merely that the consonant following it has that quality of articulation which it would have were i really pronounced in conjunction with it. This, in the orthography, is the true use of the postpositive vowel in all those combinations termed diphthongs; and of the prepositive e in ea, eo, eu. The same remark holds with respect to the last vowel of the combinations called triphthongs.

Before c and g, an (the) (their), and nan (of the), sound ung and nung, rhyming rung: and 'nan (in their) sounds nang.

an cù, ung qû, m. the dog. an gràdh, ung grâgh, m. the an cat, ung cat, m. the cat. love. an cleas, ung qlas, m. the trick. an gleann, ung glên, or gleun, m. the glen.

C is often pronounced xq, or chq, where it should be sounded k, or q.

C and g before e and i are always hard in native words; as, ceis, (kash): cis, (kish): géill, (gyagl): giomach, (gim'mux, gyum'muz). So also in the foreign names, Gideon, Gearmailt, Geintilich, Gilgal, Gihon, Cerub, Cis, &c. But we hear Ciprus, Cilicia, Cappadocia, Cirus, Ciréne, Cenchréa, Céphas, César, Cicero, Genébha, Gen'esis, pronounced sîprus, silisia, cappadosia, saoirus, siréne, senchréa, séphas, sésar, sis'ero, jenéva, jen'esis, by persons who ought to know better. If the Saxon pronunciation of foreign names must be followed in Gaelic, in spite of the clearest analogy, why not use j and s at once in the spelling, and write Jenesis, Sesar,* &c. rather than impose upon other characters, already appropriated, a burden which they have no right to bear?

PART III.

ETYMOLOGY.

Etymology treats of the sorts of words, or parts of speech, composing a language, and the different changes which they undergo to express variety of thought.

There are nine parts of speech; noun, article, adjective, pronoun, verb, adverb, preposition, conjunction, interjection. The first five are declinable, the rest indeclinable.

NOUN.

A noun is the name by which we express any thing whatever, as dan, a poem; suil, an eye. Nouns have gender, number, case, and form. Gender is either masculine or feminine; number is either singular or plural. The singular is that spelling of a noun which denotes one; as, dan, suil; the plural is that spelling which denotes more than one; as dain, sùilean, poems, eyes. Cases are particular modes of spelling the noun in both numbers, to express relation; as crioch dain, the end of a poem; le danaibh, with noems. There are four cases; nominative, genitive, dative, and vocative.

* In our own Bible cedar has been written séudar, and in the Irish Scriptures Cæsar is spelt Sésar. So when we adopt a word in J or G soft from a foreign language, we change J or G into D or S; as, for Jane, James, George, general, ginger, -we say Dine or Sine, Séumas, Deòrsa, or Seòrus, seanalair, dinseir, &c.

Form respects the initial consonant of a noun. When that letter is plain, the noun is said to be in its plain form; as, dan, sail. When h follows it, the noun is said to be in its aspirate form; as, dhan, shiil.

DECLENSION.

Is the arranging of the cases of nouns under their proper spelling, Declension depends upon gender, number, case, and form.

Nouns are declined either indefinitely or definitely. Without the article, they are declined indefinitely. There are five declensions, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, fifth.

INDEFINITE DECLENSION .- GENERAL RULES.

- 1. The nom. and accus. are alike in both numbers.
- 2. The gen. and voc. sing. of masculines, \ a
- 3. The nom. and voc. sing. of feminines, \( \) alike.*
- 4. The nom. and dat. sing. of masculines, are
- 5. The gen. and dat. sing. of feminines, \( \) alike.
  6. The nom. plural is either like the gen. sing., or
- it ends in a, or an.
  7. The gen. plural is either like the nom. sing., or
- like the nom plur.
  - 8. The gen. plur. indefinite is always aspirated.
- 9. The dative plur, is either like the nom. plur,, or ends in ibh.
- 10. The vocative plur, is like the nom. plur,, or ends in  $\alpha$ , from the nom, singular.

FIRST DECLENSION .- MASCULINES.

Rules.—1. The genitive sing, is formed by inserting i after the last vowel of the nominative,  $\dagger$

2. The nom. plur. is like the genitive singular. *

EXAMPLE.

|       | i. Dàn, mas. a poem. |       |                |          |  |  |
|-------|----------------------|-------|----------------|----------|--|--|
|       | $Nom_*$              | Gen.  | Dat.           | Voc.     |  |  |
| Sing. | Dàn,                 | Dàin, | Dàn,           | a Dhàin. |  |  |
| Plur. | Dàin,                | Dhàn, | Dàin,-dànaibh, | a Dhàna. |  |  |

The nom, plur, is sometimes made by adding a to the nom. sing.; as, dana. The vocative plur. is sometimes made like the nom. plur.; as, a dhàin; so, "a neòil dhorcha." Mordubh, B. i. 36. The dative plural in ibh, is formed from the nom. sing.; as, dàn, dànaibh.

FEMININES.

Rules.—1. The gen. singular is formed as above, and an e is added to the end of the case. 2. If i be the last vowel of the nom., the genitive is formed by simply adding the e. 3. The dative sing, is like the genitive; but it loses the final e. 4. The nom. plural is made by adding an to the nom, singular.

EXAMPLES.

ii. Brog. fem. a shoe.

Voc. Nom.Gen.Dat. Broig, Broige, a Bhròg. Sing. Brog, Plur. Brogan, Bhrog, Brogan, ibh, a Bhrògan. iii. Càraid, fem. a couple.

Nom.Gen. Dat. Voc. a Chàraid. Sing. Caraid. Càraide, Càraid, Plur. Càraidean, Chàraidean, Càraidean,-ibh, a Chàraidean.

The italic vowels are inserted into the plural, merely as correspondents.

Polysyllables form the genitive singular, without the final e, when its insertion would lengthen the word too much, or occasion a harshness, or a difficulty of pronunciation. Monosyllables also frequently drop the e, especially in verse. The termination -eag, makes the genitive in eig; as, caileag, a girl, caileige.

The nom and voc. plur, of class ii. often drop the final n; as, bròga, a bhròga, cearca-fraoich. The nom. and voc. of class iii. is often made in e; as, càraide, a chàraide.

Some monosyllables of this declension having a or o in their nom. singular, change a or o into u, in forming the genitive; and then follow the general rules already given.

So fras, f. a shower; cas, f. a fout; bas, f. a palm, &c. This irregularity appears to have arisen from too ready a compliance with a vicious pronunciation; as, though we pronounce the genitive of marbh, tarbh, garbh, &c. moirbh, toirbh, goirbh, yet we do not alter the vowel of the nominative. In Ross-shire, they still say Gaill, clainn, &c.: we sometimes spell cas, bas,

Many nouns of the foregoing character have a twofold plural, as pris, or preasan, bushes; debir, or deura, tears; meoir, or meuran, fingers; nid, or neadan, nests; lin, or libnta, nets; disg, or lasga, fishes, &c.

When the nom. plur. is twofold, the vocative is so too. The irregular plurals, however, seem to be but poetic variations, for the sake of rhyme or measure. Such also are the genitives, béil and Dé, for beòil and Dia, and many others.

Nouns ending in vowels, in chd, rr, idh, th; also polysyllables in air, eir, oir, are indeclinable" in the singular number.

The genitive singular is occasionally made by adding a short a to the nom. in chd, rr, th; as, reachda, corra, datha.

NOTES ON THE PLURAL NUMBER OF THE SECOND

DECLENSION.

Rules .- 1. Monosyllables ending in a vowel, if they have the plural, make it in an, to which th is prefixed, to prevent a hiatus; as, cnò, a nut, cno-than. 2. tchd, rr, and polysyllables, make their plural in an; as, uchdan, breasts; spărran, spars; dor'sairean, door-keepers; mar'sandan, merchants. 3.* Neuns in th are generally made plural, by adding an to the nom. singular.

4. Some dissyllables in e, form their nom. plur. in chan. Many of those in a, form it in ichan; as,† pelleire, balls. This, however, appears to be but a corrupt contraction of the proper plural in an, or a, like stoirme, for stoirmean, càirde, for càirdean; càraide, for càraidean; where stoirme and càraide are the proper genitives singular of the nouns stoirm and càraid.

• 3. Sometimes we find an i inserted before th, and the plural termination written in; as, roth, a wheel, roithin (A. Macdonald's Songs, p. 9, 21) suth, a strawberry, suithin, (id. p. 87.) This mode of spelling agrees quite with the pronunciation; and this pronunciation seems to have been adopted for the sake of perspicuity, viz. to distinguish the plural cases of these nouns from diminutives formed from their nom. sing., in the same manner as the plural is formed by the present practice; as,

N. S. Spoken plur. Dim. & N. P. flath, a chief flathan, a little chief flaithin. gathan, a little beam gath, a beam gaithin. goithin. gothan a small reed goth, a pipe reed bùth, a tent buthan, a small tent bùithin. guthan, a weak voice guithin. guth, a voice &c. &c.

As there appears an effort here, on the part of the language, to rid itself of an ambiguity, the orthography ought certainly to conform to the distinction marked by the pronunciation, as it has done in the case of cham.

† 4. The diversity in forming the plural of class ix. and the #### THIRD DECLENSION.

The terminations are various. The genitive singular is formed by adding a short a to the nominative; as àm, time, ăm'ă. The nominative plural is formed from the genitive singular by adding -nnan; as ăm'ă, ăm'ănnan. The dative plural is either like the nominative plural, or is formed from the nominative singular by adding ibh; as àmaibh. It is sometimes formed from the nominative plural by dropping final an, and adding ibh; as amannaibh.

like, arises partly from attention to euphony, partly to perspicuity. When the first syllable of the root has its articulations pronounced small, then ch is pronounced broad in the plural. When the final consonants of the root are broad, then, by way of variety, ch is pronounced small; as, délle, a plank, délleachan: bāta, a staff, bātaichean. This pronunciation and spelling serve also to distinguish the plurals bataichean, bātaichean, daltaichean, foster-sons; còtaichean, coats, &c., from batachan, a little staff; bātachan, a little boat; daltachan, a little foster-bild; còtachan, a little coat, &c.

Most of these are occasionally found following the analogies of the 2d Declension; and many noung of the 2d, at times

FOURTH DECLENSION.

Nouns of the 4th Declension are but few in number. They are all feminine. They mostly end in air, and form the genitive singular in ach, contracting the last syllable of the nominative. The nominative plural is formed from the genitive singular by inserting i before ach, and annexing the common termination on. The dative plural in ibh is formed from the nominative plural by dropping an.

EXAMPLE.

Las'air, f. a flame.

N. G. D. V.
S. las'air las'rach las'air a las'air.
P. las'raichean las'raichean las'raichean a las'raichean.

Thus decline

ac'air, an anchor. saoth'air, labour (no plur.) srath'air, a pack-saddle. peas'air, pease do. paidh'ir, a pair. ponair, beans faidhir, a fair. luach'air, rushes do. staidhir, a stair. soc'air, ease do. iuch'air, a key. an'ail, breath. cath'air, a chair. bar'ail, opinion.

Anail, barail, have, in their plural, an'ailean, bar'ailean. A imsir, season, dinneir, dinner, suip'eir, supper, make the genitive singular in ach; but their nominative plural aimsirean, dinneirean, suip'eirean. Inn'eir, manure, makes inn'earach, but has no plural.

FIFTH DECLENSION.

Nouns of the 5th Declension form the genitive singular by eliding the last vowel of the nominative.

EXAMPLE.

Màthair, f. a mother.

N. 6. D. V. S. màthair màthar màthair a mhàthair P. màthraichean mhàthraichean màthraichean, &c.

So athair, a father .- Bràthair, a brother, has the singular like màthair, but makes in the nominative 'plural, bràithrean. Piuth'ar, a sister, makes the genitive singular peath'ar, dative singular piuthair, and nominative plural peath'raichean.

FURTHER OBSERVATIONS ON THE PLURAL. 1. NOMINATIVE.

1. Some dissyllables of the 2d Declension, ending in a vowel, make the plural in nnan, as clòca, m. a cloah, clòcannan; calpa, m. a brawn, calpannan; uamha, f. a cave, uamhannan or uamhaichean; fairge,

a sea, fairgeannan or fairgeachan; faiche, a plain, faicheannan; oïche, a night, oïcheannan.*

2. Some having a liquid before the final vowel, prefix tt to an of the plural; as baile, a town, bailtean; mile, a thousand, miltean.

3. Some are made plural by the mere addition of an; as guite, a winnowing fan, guitean; aisne, a rib, aisnean; fride, a tetter, fridean; cuisle, a vein, cuislean; ite, a feather, itean, &c.

Many, if not all, of these depart from the general rule, (p. 40), either to avoid ambiguity or a harsh sound. It eachan is a weaver's pirn; ais neachan, a small rafter; cnis leachan, a lancet; tein eachan, a little fire; bail eachan, a village; aithn-eachan, a token, &c.

4. Nouns ending in idh sometimes drop dh in the plural, and take nnan; as burraidh, a blockhead, burr'ainnean; stoc'aidh, a stocking, stoc'ainnean. Many nouns in adh which form the g. s. in idh, follow this analogy: as tul'gadh, a stagger, tul'gainnean; gàradh, a dyke, gàrainnean, &c.

5. Many dissyllables in ach add an to their genitive singular to form the nominative plural; as aodach, cloth, g. s. aodaich, r. p. aodaichean; so clad'ach, cladaichean; mull'ach, mull'aichean; saothach, saoth'aichean; maigh'each, maigh'ichean, &c.‡

But gentiles and patronymics in ach follow class I. of the

† This t is inserted to give nerve to the faint syllable bounded by the two liquids, as well as to distinguish some plurals from others; for instance, ainean, fish livers, would sound like aithnean without the t, and so of other words. It was for a like reason, probably, that the Greeks inserted a σ sharp, flat, or aspirate, into the genitive of their 3d Declension; as μίλι-το; Ξίνοδῶν-τος, Πάρι-δος, κόρυ-θος, &c.

These plurals are formed from the genitive, to distinguish them from diminutives in an formed from the nom.; as mull'achan, a little hill; aodachan, a small web of cloth; saoth'achan, a small vessel; &c. v. p. 49, *3.

6. Many monosyllables ending in l or n take* t an; as réul, a star, réultan; cuil, a nook, cuiltean; so tuil, tuiltean; cuan, cuaintean; leòn, leòintean; lòn, liointean; tàin, tàintean; raon, raointean; gùn, gùintean; pian, piantan; lìon, lìontan: sian, siantan; beann, beanntan; lann, a swordblade, lanntan; lann, a swordblade, lanntan; lann, a star, bann, a hinge, bannan and banntaichean; dlò, dlòintean; sliabh, sléibhtean.

7. The following masculines in ar follow the analogy of the 4th Declension in forming the plural, though in the singular they are of the 1st Declension; leabh'ar,‡ leabhraichean, tob'ar, us'gar, mead'ar, eath'ar, loc'ar, seòmbar. So also là or lăth'a', makes làithean, làithin, or lăth'aichean; dag, dag'a, dagaichean; gin'i, gineachan; nì, nichean, or nithean.

v. p. 41.

8. A few suffer contraction in forming the plural;

+ Some of these are sometimes lengthened out by the poets to fill up their verse; as sian tainnean, beann tainnean, &c.

Ist Declension; as Alb'annach, a Scotsman, Albannaich; Fran'gach, a Frenchman, Frangaich. Dònullach, a Macdonald, Dònullach; Gui'neach, a Campbell, Gui'nich; Tòiseach, a MacIntosh, Tòisich, &c. The following dissyllables in ach follow the analogy of gentiles; cléireach, a clerk; bal'ach, a lad; canach, a porpus; manach, a monk; šarr'ach, a sping; èarrach, the rim of a barrel, &c.; òganach, a youth; bod'ach, a churl; sionn'ach, a foot; sear'ach, a foot; coil'each, a cock; giom'ach, a lobster; ciom'ach, a captive, &c.

as dor'us, dorsan; éubhall, éubhlan, or éibhlean; übh'all, ùbhlan; sabh'al, saibhlean; gabhar or gobhar, gabhair, gobhair, or gòbhra; lădh'ar, lâdhran; răthad, ràidean; ionga, iongan, or ìneau; aingeal, aingil, ainglean, or aingh'lean; gobh'ainn, goibh'nean; fiacaill, fiaclan; inn'is, ìnnsean, or ìnnseachan; tomhas, tòimhsean; căraid, càirdean—cur'rac, a cap, has cur'raicean; glùn, a knee, glùinean; agh, a heifer, aigh'ean, aighin; lean'abh, a child, lean'aban; clàidheamh, a sword, clàidhean; muil'ionn, a mill, muinlean, or muillean; righ, rìghrean, duin'e, daoine; cao'ra, caoraich.

9. Many nouns do not admit of a plural; as feòil, ar'an, iasg, bainne, leann, fraoch, coirce, eòrna, tòrradh, càise, gruth, méug, mòine, &c.

II. DATIVE.

1. Nouns of the 4th and 5th Declension form the dative plural in ibh from their nominative plural; as lasraichean, d. p. lasraichibh; màthraichean, d. p. màthraichibh.

2. Irregular nouns also form this dative plural from their nominative plural; as luirgnean, d. p. luirgnibh; guaillean, guaillibh.

3. When the nominative plural ends in anan or nnan, the dative plural is twofold; being either formed from the nominative singular or plural; as clòcanan, d. p. clòcaibh, or clòcannaibh; calpannan, calpaibh, or calpannaibh; anamannan, anamaibh, or anamannaibh; burrainnean, burraidhibh, or burrainnibh.

ARTICLE.

There is in Gaelic only one article, viz. the definite. Its declension depends upon the gender, number, case, and initial letter of the word before which it is used. The article has three cases, nominative, genitive, dative. It has three forms in the singular number, and one in the plural. It is declined thus:

NOUNS BEGINNING WITH VOWELS.

When nouns commencing with vowels are used definitely, they assume the aspirate form by taking hin some of their cases, between the article and their initial vowel.

* Initial sc, sg, sm, sp, st, are never aspirated.

+ S, after this t- becomes mute, and the t is articulated instead. Some writers aspirate the safter t; as an t-shuil; but this appears to be improper, because h is sounded in the combination sh, and will not therefore suffer the t to be pronounced.

Rules.-1. Masculine definites beginning with a vowel take t- before their nominative singular.

2. Feminines aspirate the genitive singular; and both masculines and feminines aspirate the nominative and dative plural.

GENDER OF NOUNS.

Nouns signifying inanimate objects are, in Gaelic, only masculine or feminine. This arises from the nature of the adjective. The adjective has only two forms; one, proper to be joined with a noun denoting a male animal; as duine coir; another, proper to be joined with a noun denoting a female animal; as, bean choir. As the adjective has thus only two varieties of form, every noun signifying an object devoid of life must necessarily appear connected with one or other of these. If a noun denoting an inanimate object is usually joined with the male form of the adjective, such noun is, in grammar, said to be masculine; if with the female form, such noun is said to be feminine. In grammar, therefore, gender means the propriety of joining a certain form of an adjective to any particular substantive; or the fitness of connecting any noun denoting an inanimate object with a particular form of an adjective.

In tracing the principle which regulates the gender of nouns signifying objects devoid of sex, we find that the last vowel of the nominative singular is the best index to the gender of monosyllables, and the termination to that of derivatives. The following rules will lead to discover the gender of most Gaelic substantives: but they have many exceptions.

GENERAL RULES.

1. Nouns signifying males are masculine; except sgalag, a farm servant, which follows the gender of its termination.

2. Nouns denoting females are feminine; except boirionnach,* or bainionnach, a female; mart, a cow; capall, a horse or mare; which are grammatically masculine; and cailin, a maiden or damsel, which is sometimes used as a masculine, and sometimes as a feminine noun.

SPECIAL RULES.

1. Monosyllables having a single broad vowel, or a broad diphthong in the nominative singular, are masculine; except ad, a hat; spåg, a claw, cas, a foot, &c. v. Exercises.

2. Monysyllables having a single small vowel, or a diphthong with a small postpositive in the nominative singular, are mostly feminine, except im, butter, mir, a piece, snaim, a hnot, &c. v. Exercises.

3. The names of the elements, seasons of the year, days of the week, of metals, colours, grain, vegetables, liquors, and timber, are for the most part masculine.

4. The names of the celestial bodies, of diseases, musical instruments, countries, and reptiles, are for the most part feminine.

TERMINATION.

1. Derivatives in ach, air, ear, eir, iche, ire, diminutives in an, abstract nouns in as, and verbal nouns in adh, are masculine.

2. Nouns compounded with the prefix ban, diminutives in ag or og, derivatives in achd, abstract nouns in e, are feminine.

The males of animals are sometimes distinguished from the females by different words; as Male. Femule. Female. Athair, a father, Each, a horse. màthair làir Amadan, a fool, òinseach Fear, a man, bean Bodach, anold man, cailleach Fleasgach, a bachelor, maidionn Boc, a buck, maoiseach Gille, a lad, caile Bràthair, a brother, piuthar Giullan, a boy. caileag Coileach, a cock, cearc Mac, a son, inghean* Cù, a dog, Oide, a stepfather, gala muime Damh, an ox, stag, atharla, agh Reatha, a ram, caora Drachd, a drake, tunnag, lach Tarbh, a bull, bó.

Sometimes there is only one word for male and female, in which case the sex meant is distinguished several ways; as

1. By prefixing the term ban (i.e. bean, a female), to the word denoting the male; as * Commonly written nighean, nion, nian. In Irish and Manks this word begins with a vowel in the nominative, like as we find it in the older Scottish publications. The n has become a part of the nominative from following the Irish practice of joining the n of the article to the noun; as a ninghean, for an inghean; a nuair, a nadhair, for an uair, an adhair, &c.

Male. Female.
Coisiche, a traveller, banachois'iche
Diùc, a duke, ban-diùc

Marsanta, a merchant, banamhars'anta

Morair, a lord, bana-mhor'air Fear-ogha, a grandson, banogha.

2. By affixing the adjective firionn,* male, to denote the masculine, and boirionn, female, to indicate the feminine.

| MI    |          | Female. |         |       |          |

3. By prefixing boc, a buch, to the female of wild animals, and coileach, a cock, to that of birds.

Female.
Earba, a roe
Gobhar a goat
Maigheach, a hare
Smeòrach, a thrush

Male, boc-earba boc-goibhre boc-maighich coileach-smeòraich,

ADJECTIVE.

An adjective is a word which denotes some property or quality belonging to a noun; as cù glas, a grey dog; gaisgeach treun, a valiant hero.

Adjectives, like nouns, have gender, number, case, and form.

* When the term to which boirionn is added is masculine, the adjective agrees with it in gender, at the very same time that an individual of the female sex is signified; and when the term to which firionn is joined is feminine, the adjective is then of the feminine gender, though an object of the male sex be signified; as, cat boirionn, piseag fhirionn.

The nom. feminine is formed from the nom. masculine, by aspirating an initial consonant; as, bàn, m. bhàn, f. fair; caol, m. chaol, f. small; donn, m. dhonn, f. brown, &c.* Adjectives beginning with vowels, are the same for either gender in the nom. singular. Monosyllables make the plural in a or e; those ending in a vowel, and polysyllables, have all the plural cases like the nom. singular. Adjectives are of the first declension, or of the second only.

EXAMPLES.

Polysyllables in ach, al, ar, or, mhor, are declined in the singular, like ban. They seldom take final e in the genitive feminine.

RULES.

- 1. The genitive and vocative singular masculine, are aspirated without or with the article.
- 2. The nominative, dative, and vocative feminine are aspirated with or without the article.
- 3. The dative singular definite is aspirated in both genders; as, aig an tigh mhòr, at the great house; ris an té bhig, to the little girl; but, aig tigh mòr, at a great house.

S' Mion, minute, is indeclinable. Daingionn, tight, and polysyllables in ionn follow orlon. Sometimes an a is added to the genitive feminine, as cearra, bochda, miona. The plural of these seldom has a. In the Scriptures we find ceart and seamh inflected ceirt and seimh; but though the inserted i serves to distinguish a case, yet it so alters the pronunciation, as almost to render the vocables unintelligible to the hearer. See Psalm cvii. 31; cviii. 8; cvix. 1.

OBSERVATIONS.

1. Some adjectives suffer contraction in the genitive singular feminine, as uasal gentle, noble, g. s. mas. uasail, fem. uaisle. for masaile; isiol, iseal, low, g. s. mas. isil, fem- isle, for isile; leathann, broad, g. s. mas. leathainn, fem. leathainn, leithne, léithne, or leithe; sleomhainn, sleek, slippery, g. s. mas, shleomhainn, fem. sleomhainn, or sleòmhna; reamhar, fat, thick, g. s. mas. reamhair, fem. reamhra; salach, foul, g. s. mas. shalaich, fem. sailche. The following, ending in a vowel, insert i before their final consonant; granda or gnada, ugly, g. s. mas. ghnàide, or ghràinde, fem. gnàide, or gràinde; tana thin, g. s. mas. thana, fem. taine; fada, long, g. s. mas. fhada, fem. faide. Bed, lively, active, g. s. mas. bhed, makes the g. s. fem. sometimes beotha; and clì, left, wrong, g. s. m. chlì, has sometimes the g. s. fem. clithe; odhar, pale, has g. s. mas. idhir or odhair, fem. idhir, or, contracted, idhre; bodhar, deuf, makes g. s. mas. bodhair, fem. buidhre,* for bodhaire.

2. Compound adjectives are declined like simple ones; as éuslan, sick; fior-ghlan, pure; ion-mholta, praise-worthy;

mòr-chumhachdach, magnipotent.

3. Those adjectives which are irregular in their g. s. fem. form their dative as if they were regular; as air a' chloich shleomhain, on the slippery stone. Gnàda has the dat, singfem, ghnàide.

COMPOUND NOUNS.

[It will be obvious to the attentive reader, that it was necessary to exhibit the flexion of the adjective before introducing these and proper names to his notice.]

Compound nouns incorporated into one term, and having the accent on the first syllable, are declined like simple nouns; as, ban'arach. Those whose component parts are separated by a hyphen, and which have an adjective or inseparable preposition for their antecedent term, suffer no change on the termination of that term; but they are otherwise declined like simples.† Compounds having a hyphen, and whose first part governs the second in the genitive, have both terms inflected; the prefixed, * So mo is by some pronounced and spelt mu; so ord becomes uird, &c. Vide p. 37.

like a noun of its proper gender and declension; the subjoined, like an adjective agreeing therewith. But here the antecedent term only assumes the plural form.† When an adjective is the leading term, the subjunctive then takes the plural form.‡ It is evident that, in the former case, the subjoined term is used also as an adjective.

EXAMPLES.

An t-ard-shagart, § m. the high priest.

|    | · Sing.          | Plur.             |
|----|------------------|-------------------|

| G. | na   | muice-mara  | nam mucan-mara |
| D. | an l | mhuic-mhara | na mucan-mara  |

If the prepositive term is fem., and the initial letter of the accessary term is a vowel,—in forming the g. s., the final e is elided; as, sguab-hrlair, g. s. na sguaib-hrlair, not sguaibe; crois-iarna, a yarn reel, na crois-iarna, not croise; tigh-fuine, a bakehouse, an tigh-fhuine, not tighe. Compounds, whose prepositive term is fear, take luchd in the plural; as, fear-colais, an acquaintunce, luchd-colais; fear-ciuil, luchd-ciuil; fear-astair, luchd-astair [9]

PROPER NAMES

Are declined as follows:—Diarmad, m. Dermid, Mao'rasg, f. Morasg, an Fhraing, f. France.

As guàth-fhocail, lùth-chleasan, mòr-raidean, &c. § So decline ùr-ros, rua'-bhoc, bàn-chu, cas-shruth, &c. § So decline boc-earba, cu-uisge, poit-chàil, &c.

To gens in French is used as the plural of homme.

Rules.—1. The g. s. mas. is aspirated. 2. The g. s. fem. is plain. 3. ‡ With the article Proper Names, follow the analogy of other nouns.

COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES.

There are three modes expressive of comparison, which may be called the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd comparative. The first mode is the same in form with the g.s. fem., as,

| Pos.  | g. s. and 1st compar. | Pos g. | s. and 1st compar. |
|-------|-----------------------|--------|--------------------|
| bàn   | bàine, fairer         | gorm   | guirme, bluer      |
| còir  | còire, civiler        | cruinn | cruinne, rounder   |
| mall  | moille, slower        | borb   | buirbe, fiercer    |
| crìon | crine, less           | lag    | laige, weaker      |

Indeclinables of the second declension, add a or e to the nom. singular, as,

Pos. 1st compar.
bochd bochda, poorer leamh leamha, more impudent beurr beurra, keener sèamh sèamha, milder

1st compar.
mear meara, more sportive réith réithe, plainer cearr cearra, l'further wrong, chith clithe, f more improper

Adjectives which suffer contraction, or become otherwise irregular in forming the g.s. fem., have the 1st compar. also contracted or irregular; as,

| Pos.     | g. s. & 1st comp.            | Pos         | g. s. & 1st comp.                |
|----------|------------------------------|-------------|----------------------------------|
| uasal    | uaisle, gentler              |             | taine, thinner                   |
| leathann | leithneléithneleithe | fadabeò | faide, longerbediha, activer |

Pos. g. s. & 1st comp.
reamhar reamhra, fatter.
salach sailche, fouler.

luath, fann, fiar, teann, form their 1st compar.; luaithe, fainne, fiaire, tinne, as though the g. s. fem. were regular.

Odhar, pale, has idhir, or idhre; bodhar, deaf, makes buidhre.

The 2nd comparative is formed from the 1st, by changing the final vowel into id; and the 3rd from the 2d, by changing id into ad; as

Pos. 1st compar. 3rd. cruinnead. cruinn cruinne cruinnid laige laigid laigead. lag truime truimid truimead. trom bòidhche bòidhchid boidhchead. bòidheach

Many adjectives do not admit of the 2d compar. Adjectives which want the second compar, want also the 3d. The three modes admit of the aspirate form, but suffer no other inflection.

The positive, preceded by the particles ro, gle,—or mo's, tuille's, pailt, fior," anabarrach, &c., expresses a comparison which may be called the absolute; as ro gheal, too or very white; mo's beag, too small, rather small; tuille's mor, more than large, i e. too large; foo thoidheach, truly beautifut; anabarrach trom, exceedingly heavy. Here the particles serve merely to extend the meaning of the positive; but there is no comparison expressed, Preceded by the particle co or cho, the positive expresses a comparison, which may be called the comparison of equality, because it is employed to signify that two or more objects spoken of, are possessed of an equal degree of the quality denoted by the adjective; as, tha ise cho glic riusta, she is as wise as thou; tha 'n t-anart so cho geal ris an t-sneachda, this linen is as white as snow.;

The 1st compar is used when one object is represented as may therefore the called the comparative of superiority; as, Is mise's luaithe na thusa, I am swifter than thou; an truime 'chlach sin an is so'? Is that stone heavier than this? This comparative requires the particle na, than, after it. With the verb (bi) to be, it requires nas' immediately before, and na after it; as, tha iad nas boidluche na ise, they are pretiter than she. This comparative is often used as a noun of the fem, gender; as chine mhòr, Matth. viii. 28, so moille, f. deluy; crine, f. niggardliness; uaisle, f. gentility.

Expressions, like the English comparative, preceded by the article are formed thus: mar is sine 's ann is dona, the older the worse; mar is lugha 's ann is fearr, the less the better.

The 2nd compar, is used in propositions beginning with the verb "is," to intimate that the subject derives some comparative advantage, or suffers comparatively, from something mentioned in the proposition; as, is bigid e sid, it is the less for you; cha bheartaichid e sin, he will not be the wealthier for that.

The 3rd compar, is used, (i.) after the verb "rach;" as, tha mhin a' dol an daoiread, meal is getting dearer, bi'dh gach la 'dol an giorrad;† theid gach craobh an ciataichead. (ii.) After the verb "cuir," as, na cuir an lugbad à cliù, do not diminish her prate; a chur à pris 'am mòid. (iii.) It is used as an abstract noun feminine, signifying a measure or degree of the quality expressed by the adjective, but it is indeclinable in termination, and wants the plural; as, bòidhehead mios a' Mhâigh, the lovetiness of the month of May; le gloinead à h-uisge. D. M'I., p.

thusa; cho geal 's an sneachd. As seems here to be contracted for agus; and there appears to be an ellipsis, to be supplied thus: Cho glic agus [a tha] thusa, cho geal agus a tha 'n sneachd, as wise as thou (art),  $\frac{2}{3}$ e.

* This particle is generally written ni 's. In Irish, we find it nis, nios, and ni sa. It appears to be a contraction of neasa, the compar. degree of fagus or fogus, near. Nas loses s before the verb bu; as Bha e na' b' àirde na sìn, It was taller than that. Bha e ni 's is ungrammatical, v. Parsing, infra.

+ This may be, and often is expressed, by using the 1st compar., preceded by nas, with the verb rach or fas; as tha 'n là dol nas faide, or a' fas nas faide.

104. (iv.) It often appears after the prepositions air and ann; as, air a lughad, however small it may be,—let it be ever so small; air fheobhas, let it be ever so good. 'S ann air ä theothad, ä chaoilead, &c., It is rather hot, small, &c. 'An deirgead, 'an grinnead, 'am mìnead, 'an tinnead. A. M.D.

(an coud mhac thar coig fichead; or,

101st thar a choig fichead 1 &c.

From 1 to 10 the noun follows its numeral; from 10 to 20 it is placed between the units and tens, both in the cardinal and ordinal series.

It is to be observed that fichead, ceud, m'le, muillion, whether single or combined, do not admit of a plural noun. noun connected with them must be in the nominative singular. Dà requires its noun in the dative singular aspirate.* Fichead.

* This peculiarity has led some to suppose that the Gaelic has a dual number. But as the adjective, pronoun, and verb, have nothing to correspond with this supposed dual, and as we aspirate the noun after aon as well as after dà, and place the nominative singular after fichead, ceud, mile, &c., we have as good reason to imagine a unal, vicesimal, and centesimal number, as a dual.

ceud, mile, in combined expressions, are not used in the plural; but when they are employed as nouns they make ficheadan, céudan, miltean; as, mharbhadh na ficheadan diu, scores of them were killed. " Brùchdaidh iad 'n än céudan á Breatainn They will pour in hundreds from Britain and 'us á h-Eirinn." from Ireland.

The cardinal numbers, when used absolutely, are nouns feminine, as an tri bheag so, a' cheithir mhor sin.

Multiplicative expressions are formed by subjoining the noun uair, time, to the numerals; as, aon uair, once, da uair, twice, &c. When the word uair signifies hour, these expressions denote the hours of the day; as aon uair, one o'clock, &c.

Proportional expressions have the word fillte, fold, preceded by the numerals; as aon fhillte, single, da fhillte, double, tri fillte, triple. The distributive numbers, after leth, half, trian, third, ceith-reamh or ceathramh; quarter, are formed by placing cuid, part, after the ordinals, coigeamh, &c.; as an coigeamh cuid, &c., the 5th part, &c.

The following collective numeral nouns fem, are applied to persons only.

These require the genitive plural indefinite of the noun which accompanies them; as dithis mhac, 2 sons; triùir bhalachan, 3 boys, &c. They require an adjective plural; as an triùir bheaga sin; Thug e duais do 'n t-seachdnar mhòra, He rewarded the 7 great (champions). Dithis has deise in the genitive.

Dithis is often used for dà, or a dhà, in its absolute sense; as An toir mi leam ach an t-aon each? Bheir, thoir leat dithis. Am foghain aon chlach? Cha 'n fhoghain; féumaidh mi dithis, or a dhà.

* Except aon, fichead, ceud, mile, muillion, which are masculine; as an t-aon beag so, am fichead mór sin; b'e 'n ceud tomult e. Fhuair e am mile sin a bharrachd leatha.

In Ireland they say triùir bó bainne, 3 milh cows; còigmhear caoirigh, 5 sheep; and in Cantyre they frequently apply the above nouns to any objects of which they speak in a collective sense; as cia mhèud caoirigh a cheannaigh thu? Mhoire cheannaigh mi triùir. 'D é na cairtean mòine thug thu dhachaidh? Cha d' thug ach triùir.

PRONOUN.

There are in Gaelic eight classes of pronouns, viz., personal, possessive, relative, demonstrative, interrogative, indefinite, compound, and prepositional pronouns.

PERSONAL PRONOUNS

Are words substituted in place of nouns, phrases, or clauses of discourse, to avoid repeating these too frequently. The personal pronouns have a simple and an emphatic form, and are declined as follows:

| 1.2.3. | N.mi, mhi,tu, thu, |         | I, me. | 1. N. sinn2. sibh3. iad. | sinne,sibhse, | we, us. ye, you. they, them | e, i, iad, are sometimes written se, si, siad.* Esan and iadsan are sometimes contracted esa, iadsa, and es', or eis', iads'. The emphatic increase in a and e is generally elided before a rowel, except the e of sinne, which cannot be dropped without destroying the emphatic form.

The inseparable word fein, t self, is occasionally joined to both forms of the personal pronouns to express a greater degree of emphasis, as mi féin, myself; iad féin, themselves. Sometimes, also, to make an expression very emphatical, the simple and emphatic pronoun, together with féin, are employed, in which case the emphatic form takes the lead; as mise mi-féin, I myself, &c.

In familiar language féin is often doubled; as 'S e féin féin a thubhairt e, It was his very self who said it.

POSSESSIVE PRONOUNS

Are adjectives corresponding to the personal pronouns; and are prefixed to any object said to belong to a person. They are indeclinable.

|    | Singular. | Pron.                    | 1  | Plural.   | Pron.       |     |
|----|-----------|--------------------------|----|-----------|-------------|-----|
| 1. | mo, m',   | my, (muh)                |    |           | our, (åir)  |     |
| 2. |           |                          |    | bhur, ur, | your, (air, |     |
| 3. | { ä,      | his, its, her, its, (uh) | 3, | ën, äm,   | their, (un, | um) |

These, to express emphasis, take the same syllables which the personal pronouns assume in their emphatic form, save that se of the first person is changed into sa. These syllables are written after the noun to which the simple possessive is prefixed, and are separated from it by a hyphen; thus

 do phib-sa, thy pipe.
 \( \text{\tilde{a}} \) bhròg san, his shoe.
 \( \text{\tilde{a}} \) sùil-se,* her eye.

 † 'ur guth-se, your voice.
 än each-san, their horse.
 äm fìon-san, their wine.

When one or more adjectives follow the noun, the emphatic

Gu'm b' ait nar dùsgadh. Wm, Ross.

Gu dé nur naigheachd? &c.

† Ar and 'ur take n. between them and a vowel; as ar n.athair, 'ur n.aodann; and à, her, takes h.; as à h.athair. In the north Highlands ar and 'ur are pronounced nar and nur; as syllable is added to the adjective, or to the last of two or more; as mo thigh beag-sa, mo thigh beag ur-sa. Féin is sometimes used instead of these particles, and marks a stronger emphasis than they; as mo thigh féin, my own house. Sometimes both are used together, in which case féin comes last; as do shùil ghorm-sa féin, thy very own blue eye, even thine own blue eye.

Before a vowel, o of mo do is elided; as m' ad, my hair, ry hay gold; m' fhalt, my hair. Preceded by the preposition ann, mo do often become am, ad; as 'am laimh, in my hand; for ann mo laimh; 'ad shuil, in thine eye; for ann do shuil. Sometimes the nn of ann and the a of am, ad, are dropped; as 'm bige, in my youth; a'd ciginn, in thy necessity. This contraction is generally written a'm', a'd', there the latter apostrophe is superfluous, because it is not o of the pronoun that is superfluous, do it is inverted form.

A', his, its, before one, or between two vowels, is often omitted: as a am, his time, written 'am; tha a each marbh, written tha 'each marbh, his horse is dead. But we may well avoid this elision by changing the construction, and say, an tam aige, an t-each aige; and when the thing possessed is plural, or conveys a collective idea, we may say, a chuid each, aodaich, dir, &c., instead of a eich, a aodach, 'dr, &c.

RELATIVE PRONOUNS

Are such as refer to a preceding word, called their antecedent. They are indeclinable.

a, (uh,) who, whom, which, that.
nach, (năy,) who not, whom not, which not, that not.

EXAMPLES.

Am fear a thuit an'té a thàinig na fir a dh'fhalbh an té a thubhairt mi na daoin' a bhrath thu

The man who fell the woman who came the men who departed the woman whom I mentioned the men whom you betraved

+ This is the proper contraction for as mo, as do, or a mo, a do; as a m' shealladh, for as mo shealladh: a' d' phòca, for as do phòca.

* This d'is pronounced, and almost always written, t', though very improperly. But it is still more improper to use a hyphen in place of the (') as is sometimes done; as t-ordag for d'ordag.

an taobh air am bi thu. an t-sligh' air an téid i. an duine nach d' thàinig. an ni'an nach faca mi. the side on which you shall be.
the way on which she goes.
the man who came not.
the girl whom I have not seen

The want of inflection in these relatives, makes it difficult at times to determine whether to refer them to the subject or object in a sentence. Thus, a' bhean a dh' fhàg mi, signifies either, The woman whom I forsook, or, who forsook me: An ni'an nach faca mi, The girl whom I have not seen, or, who has not seen me. This uncertainty takes place invariably when the antecedent and object are rational beings; but the sense generally determines the reference, when the subject is a rational being, and the object is an inferior animal, or a thing without life. When the verb is transitive, however, and expresses an action which the inferior animal is capable of performing, the reference is still ambiguous; as, 'Se so an t-each a bhuail mi, This is the horse which I struck; or, which kicked me.*

When the antecedent is followed by circumstances, or words in apposition, or when it is a clause or quotation, some term† is introduced immediately before the relative, for the purpose of recalling the antecedent to its natural position,‡ and making the reference more distinct; as, An ti a ta beannaichte agus a mhàin cumhachdach, Righ nan righ, agus Tighearna nan tighearnan, neach 'na aonar aig am bheil neo-bhàsmhorachd.

1 Tim. vi. 15; also verse 20, 21.

Na, what, all that, all, follows the construction of a relative, but it has never any antecedent expressed. It is per-

This ambiguity may be avoided, by using the auxiliary verb dean after the relative, and turning the active verb into the infinitive mood; as, A' bhean a rinn m' fhàgail; a' bhean a rinn m' fhàgail.

† That is immediately after the antecedent. The practice of introducing a word of intermediate reference between the relative and antecedent, when they are separated by clauses circumstances, is common in most languages; but it is indispensable in Gaelic, from the defective nature of the relatives, haps a contraction for an fheadh a, or an oighe a," the extent, the quantity, the totality which; it is used like that and what in English; as,

Na tha so de dh-iasg! | What (a quantity) of fish is here!

Chuala mi na thubhairt thu, I heard what (all that) you said.

Ciod a ghabhas tu air na th' What will you take for all you agad 's a' bhàta?

have in the boat?

Nach tioram an talamh agus Is not the ground dry and (afna rinn e dh-uisge?

Tha mi coma air son na chaill I care not for what I lost.

Is mor na rinn thu dh-astar.

Great is what you have made of distance.

Reic na th' agad.+

Sell all you have.

DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

Are adjectives, which distinguish one or more objects from others spoken of, and point out their distance from, or proximity to the speaker. They are,

So, (shoh) this, these.
Sid (shit)
sud (shut)
\data{ut}
\tag{vn, yonder.}
This world.

Na làithean so.

This world.

 Mr. Stewart conjectures it is abridged for an ni a, the thing which.

† So in the Manks, Creck ny t'ayd, Mark xi. 21; Luke viii. 22; Matthew xix. 21. In Irish, the corresponding expression is, Reic a bhfuil agad; where the n of na is omitted. It is worthy of remark, that the Manks expression is precisely the same with the Scottish; and that these two dialects very often coincide in their construction more than either does with the Irish.

Na craobhan sin. An cù beag sin. An tigh mòr ud. These trees.
That little dog.
You large house.

Preceding their nouns these become adverbs; as,

Sid am baile. So a' bheinn. Sud an t-àite. Sin iad a' tighin. Yonder is the town.
This is the hill.
Yonder is the place.
There they are coming.

INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

INDEFINITE PRONOUNS.

There are no single words in Gaelic which can properly be called indefinite pronouns. The terms corresponding with those denominated indefinite pronouns in English, &c., are generally expressions compounded of nouns and adjectives, as follows:

Bith, being.

Air bith any being, any ever.

Fear air bith, air bhith, or sam ) any man, any one, whoever, bith. whichever.

Duine air bith any man, any person, whoever, whichever.

Gin sam bith. Té air bith, f. any woman, any one, f. whoever, whichever.

†Co ) air bith whoever, whichever, whatever, whatsoever. Ciod ) sam bith.

Ni ) air bith anything, whatever. or Rud ) sam bith.

Eigin, some.

Fear-ĕigin

some man, some one, some person, somebody. Neach -Cuid -

Té-ĕigin, f. some woman, some one.

Ni-ĕigin something, somewhat.

Eile, other.

Dad any thing.

any other thing, any thing else, any thing more. Dad tuille

* Or, perhaps the world; like the Welsh byd.

+ So in Manks, Quoi-erbee. Gen. xliv. 2. Cia air bith is sometimes contracted cia bith, and pronounced ge bith. This pronunciation has produced the vitious form ge b'e. But ge b'e is evidently a corruption of ged bu e, though it were, though it was, written in old Irish, gidh bé and giodh be, (see Gen. xliv. 9, and Lhuyd A. B. tit. ii. p. 175. sub voc. ullus, et p. 135 voc. quocunque, quodvis,) which bears no analogy what. ever to cia bith: for ged does not at all enter into the composition of these indefinite expressions. If bith is the proper word in the combination cia bith, the form cia b'e must therefore be a corruption. We sometimes find the word bith repeated in the expression, as cia bith air bith, what being in being, i.e. whoever, contracted, cia b'air bith, and sometimes we have it cia b'air sam bith, and cia bith sam bith.

• Fear, in the sense one, is applied to all nouns masculine, whether signifying persons or things; and tć, in the same sense, to all nouns feminine.

† Uile, when prefixed to its noun, signifies each, every, like the French tout in its distributive sense; as, fluair a h-uile fear ä chuid féin, each man got his own; cha robh a h-uile duine cho rathail riutsa, every one was not so fortunate as thou. It sometimes has gach before it; as, gach uile latha, every other day. Gach is never connected with a plural noun; and as uile, in the above connection, has precisely the same signification with gach, it seems improper to say na h-uile dhaoine; an h-uile eich, na h-uile lamhan, &c. The latter expressions, indeed, have no authority in Scottish Gaelic. The former must, therefore, be considered as an Iricism. Uile, when placed after its noun, signifies all, or whole; as, an saoghal uile, all the world, or, the whole world; olaibh uile dheth, drinh ye all of it.

*Cuid Càch A chéile Le chéile

Gach aon a chéile each one his fellow, one another.

* Cuid in this expression signifies any indefinite number of a whole, and cach all the rest of it.

† Gach is written cecha and ceach in Lhuyd's Ar. Br., and cach in O'Brien's Irish Dic. It seems to be the same word with the French chaque. See Lhuyd, A. B. tit. i. p. 23, col. 3.

PREPOSITIONAL PRONOUNS

Are combined terms, made up by uniting the several personal pronouns with a simple preposition. For the purpose of coalescing better, and sometimes for the sake of distinction, the letters either of the preposition or pronoun, and occasionally of both, are changed. The third person singular has always two forms distinctive of gender; but all the other persons have only the same form for both genders. Such of them as begin with the letter d, are occasionally aspirated for sound's sake, according to their connexion in discourse with other articulations. Some of them also vary a little in orthography, as dut, duit; leam, lium; uat, uait; riut, riuit, to suit variety of dialect.* The following table exhibits the principal and most analogical of these varieties.

Some minor critics condemn the spelling uat, dhut, riut, &c.; but it is plain from etymology, that these forms are preferable to uait, dhuit, riuit, where the i serves no purpose but that of marking a provincial and corrupt pronunciation.

mar, (contracted for maille,) and with cuid, (causa euph. cuide,) along with, as,

From this table we see, that, in combining with the preposition, mi is generally changed into am; tu into ad;  $\hat{c}$ , in a few instances, remains undisguised,—after a liquid, it is dropped; and twice it is changed into a, its kindred broad vowel; i is generally changed into e guttural. The pronoun remains entire in the 1st and 2nd persons plural. The d of iad is aspirated throughout, as orradh, acadh, anntadh; but it has note been the practice to write the aspiration in any instance, except leotha, uatha, and riutha, where dh has been changed into th, as better representing the pronunciation. Dhoibh is still pronounced dhoidh in the North Highlands.

Diam, diat, are usually spelt diom, diot; but as all the other pronouns of the 1st person end in am, and those of the 2nd in at or ad, I have ventured to reduce diom, diot, to the same analogy.

In Irish, the preposition fo is sometimes spelled fuidh. As it is seldom pronounced fuidh in Scotland, however, and as this spelling of it clashes with another vocable of a very different signification, and as the spelling fo agrees best with the combined terms fo-th-am, fo-thad, fo-tha, foipe, &c. I have excluded fuidh altogether. Uirre (a form of oirre) has been

1. s. mar-rium, 2. mar-riut, 3. mar-ris, m. mar-rithe, f. }
1. p. mar-ruinn, 2. mar-ruibh, 3. mar-riu. cuide-rium, &c. along with me, &c.

làmh-rium, &c. beside me, &c.

The Welsh combine some of their pronouns with prepositions, in nearly the same manner; as, presenting a strong feature of analogy between the two languages.

*Fuidh, or fuith, an interjection of disgust; in Scotch, fich!

+ Although fo, as an uncombined preposition, appears under various forms in Lhuyd's Irish Dictionary, as fa, faoi, fuidh, rejected for a similar reason. And as perspicuity requires a distinction between the singular and plural persons, orra has been omitted in the 3rd pers. sing. feminine. Consistency requires f in aisfe and asta, as well as in innfe and annta.

Tharam, tharad, has no 3rd pers. sing. masc. combined like the rest of the list. But thairte is sometimes used in the fem.; as also thairpe, which seems more analogical, as it coincides with foipe, uimpe, uaipe, roimpe, and troimpe.

Eadarainn wants the incorporated persons in the singular, instead of which the preposition and pronoun are written separate;* as, Dia eadar mi's tu; eadar mise's tusa; eadar i 's an tigh. The 3rd person plural is commonly written eatorra; but as the penultimate syllable is not pronounced or but ur, and as a represents this obscure sound, as well as o, there does not appear any good reason for changing the radical form of the preposition.

VERB.

A verb is a word that expresses motion or action, either bodily or mental; † as, bris, break; saoil, think.

fu, (in voce fum,) futha, &c.,—yet in composition it is always written fo; as, fobhailte, suburbs; fobhoidhe, subflavus, fois-griobhadh, subscription, &c. See Ar. Britan. Tit. ii., under the word Sub, &c. It is always written fo in the Manks; sometimes fuidh, and sometimes fo, in the Gaelic S. S.

 The plural pronouns are also sometimes separated from the preposition; as, eadar sinn 's am bàs, between us and death; eadar sibh 's a bhi loisgte, between you and being burned; eadar iad 'sam baile mor, between them and the city.

+ With respect to their nature or species, verbs are either transitive, which have an object upon which their energy terminates; as, Thog mi clach, I lifted a stone: or intransitive, expressing some motion of their agent, which affects himself merely; as, ghrisnich Iain, John shuddered; chaidil Niall, Neil slept; Lèum Alastair, Alexander jumped, &c.

With regard to their form or model, transitive verbs are ac-

With regard to their form or model, transitive verbs are active or passive. Intransitive verbs are of the active form; but they and the verb bi. to be, have also an impersonal form Verbs are always followed by a noun or pronoun, denoting the person who moves or acts; as, ghluais an duine; shaoil mi: or they have the agent incorporated in their own form; as, brisibh, break ye; thiginn, I would come; shooil-eamaid, we should suppose. Personal termination, however, is but of rare occurrence in Gaelic verbs.

The accidents of a Gaelic verb are, model or voice, mood, form, tense, number, and person. The voices are two, active and passive. The moods are five; imperative, indicative, subjunctive, conditional, infinitive. The indicative and conditional have each three forms; interrogative, responsive, and hypothetical. The responsive form is twofold; negative and affirmative. The other modes have each one form. The tenses are three; present, past, and future. The verbs of being only have a simple present tense.* Other verbs mark present time, by combining their infinitive with the present of Bi. The numbers are two; singular and plural.† There is only one conjugation.‡ It is divided into two branches. The first embraces verbs tional, are distinguished by personal terminations.

The conjugation of verbs is effected by prefixing particles, by occasionally aspirating an initial consonant, and by affixing a termination to the root. Sometimes all these operate together; sometimes the particle and aspiration only; and sometimes the aspiration alone.

|| The reason for this division is, that verbs of the second branch vary a little in their initial change from those of the first.

REGULAR VERBS.

The root is the second person singular imperative, from which all the other parts are derived. Active and intransitive verbs have a present participle, made up by prefixing the particle aig or ag to their infinitive; as, ag or a' briseadh, a-breaking; ag or a' saoilsinn, supposing. The g of ag is generally omitted before a consonant, as, a' léughadh. Transitive verbs have also a past or passive participle, formed by adding te to their root; as, briste, broken. Many of them, however, want this part.

BRANCH 2nd. Verbs beginning with b, c, d, g, m, n, s, t BRANCH 1st.

* It would be a great improvement on the orthography, to write the persons in this tense, without the final adh at all; for adh, in this situation, is scarcely pronounced. The te sufficiently represents the derivation and sound of the syllable. The editor of the Poems of Ossian, ed. Edin. 1818. has often judiciously retrenched the termination in question, without anywise injuring his author. There are also some examples of this improvement in the Gaelic Bible.

* The t should be doubled here: but I have followed the common orthography, although its defect is obvious in the past conditional passive.

FORMATION OF THE PERSONS AND TENSES.

From the foregoing sketch of the verb it will be seen that all the tenses of the active voice are formed from the root by adding to it those terminations printed in italics. The passive voice is likewise formed from the root by postfixing the syllables ar and adh. The past conditional, however, is evidently formed from the past participle.

In all the parts, except the imperative active, and the preterite conditional, both active and passive, the verbal form is the same for each person in both numbers. The terminations -am, -amaid, -ibh of the imperative, and -inn, -amaid of the conditional active, supply the place of the personal pronouns. It is indispensably necessary, however, to repeat the subject after all the other persons, else the verb will assert nothing. From this it would appear that the pronouns,* as well as the prepositive verbal particles, are really constituent parts of the verb; for, divested of these, the bare word strictly denominated the verb, is obviously but of little practical utility.

• From this it may be inferred that the syllables forming the personal terminations of the Greek and Latin verbs are nothing else than the personal pronouns incorporated with the assertive word, after having undergone euphonic changes for the sake of coalescence, like the Gaelic pronouns incorporated with prepositions. See pp. 80, 81. There is a considerable resemblance between some of the terminations of the Greek verb and the emphatic syllables added to the Gaelic personal pronouns.

SUBSTANTIVE VERB.

In Gaelic there are two substantive verbs, Bi and Is. The first is used as an auxiliary, and is conjugated as follows:

Bì, (to) be. intrans.

IMPERATIVE.

Singular. Plural.

Pers.
1. bitheam (bǐ'um), let me be.* Pers.

Or, may I be! + Or, may I not be: As the verb is the same for each person in both numbers, it is unnecessary to print the same word six times over. The learner has only to repeat the pronouns in the above order after every temporal change of the verb, and it answers the same purpose.

+ The infinitive is generally written without the final aspi-

COMPOUND TENSES.

The participle iar bhith, placed after the simple tenses of its own verb, forms compound tenses expressive of more minute subdivisions of time; but few of these are ever used, except the preterite tenses: as bha mi iar bhith ann roimhe so mur b' e thusa, I had been there before this time were it not for thee.

OBSERVATIONS.

The pres, interrog, of Bi is oftener written am bheil than am beil; the latter, however, appears to be the proper form, as the particle am does not aspirate the b in any other part of the verb: as am bi? am bithinn?

The present responsive negative is always written cha'n 'eil, from a supposition, perhaps, that the full form is cha an 'eil. But, to correspond with the interrogative, the negative should be cha'm bheil, or cha bheil, contracted cha 'eil. It seems probable that the n has been introduced to prevent a hiatus, and if so, the first apostrophe is evidently improper.

In negations cha is always used in the spoken language; ni is used in the older poetry, and sometimes in the scriptures: ni-n becomes ni-m before b, f, m, p. Robh appears to be contracted for ro bha, an old form of do bha " In the north Highlands robh still takes do before it; as an d'robh? cha d'robh. Affirmative ta is oftener written tha than ta, in compliance with a vicious pronunciation. We sometimes see it spelt ata, or a ta, which, perhaps, is a form borrowed from the Irish verb; or, more probably, a is but the euphonic letter which is commonly thrown in between consonants that do not well coalesce, + for the purpose of smoothing the pronunciation; as mara ta, geda tha, &c., and which, in this instance, has been improperly united to the verb, instead of being added to the word preceding it.

Lhuyd's Ir. Dic. vo. ro; and Ar. Br. tit. ix. p. 302, col. 1. † This euphonic a is of constant occurrence in speaking; as in gleanna gairidh, gacha ràidhe, gura mi, ma'sa tu, &c.

In verse, ta mi is often contracted tàim, and ta iad tài'd or tàid. In Sutherland, Ross-shire, and other parts of the north Highlands, the future indicative terminates in as; as bitheas, mi, tu, e, &c. The future hypothetical affirm. ends all-wheres in as; as ma bhitheas e agad, ged bhriseas tu botal.

It is in compliance with this propensity to euphonia that the prefixes an, ban, &c. become, before certain letters, ana, bana, as in anabarrach, banacharaid, &c. Proper attention has not always been paid to this in the orthography; but as it is unquestionably a fixed principle in the pronunciation, it ought to be attended to in writing.

• The present tenses of all active and neuter verbs, are supplied by adding their present participle to the verb to be, as above. Neuter verbs also, instead of the present participle, more frequently take the infinitive, preceded by a possessive pronoun, and the preposition ann; as, tham i ann mo sheasamb, I am standing; contracted, tha mi'nam sheasamh, or, tha mi'm sheasamh, &c.

INFINITIVE.

 $\begin{array}{cccc} \operatorname{do} & \operatorname{do$

ii. A set of compound tenses, having an active or passive, but generally a passive signification, are made up by affixing the present participle to the impersonal form of the verb Bi; as,

IMPERATIVE.

INDICATIVE.

Present.

A possessive pronoun, corresponding to the person of the nominative, is sometimes placed between ag and the infinitive; as thathas 'g am mhùchadh, on m'étouffe: so, tha thù 'g ad chràdh; tha iad 'g am pianadh; tha 'n crodh 'g än leigeil, • Féin, following the infinitive, in examples like these, renders the expression active and reflected; as, tha thu 'g ad chràdh féin, you torment yourself; unless Bi impersonal be the auxiliary, in which case féin only adds emphasis to the passive sense; as, thathas 'gän losgadh féin; bitear 'g än ruagadh féin fathast.

the kine are a-milking, or in being milked.* In some districts, the vowel of the preposition is transposed, and the possessive pronoun written in full; as, tha miga mo phisuadh, on me tourmente; bha thu ga do thomhas, you were getting measured; bha sibh ga nur phidheadh; bhathas ga na falach, she was concealed; they were concealing her.+

iii. The infinitive, (preceded by iar.) placed after the simple tense of bi, forms another set of compound tenses of an active signification; as, Bitheam iar briseadh, let me have broken; ta mi iar briseadh, I have broken, &c. A possessive pronoun, placed before the infinitive, renders the sense passive; as, tha mi iar mo bhriseadh, I am broken, or, I have been broken. Féin, following the infinitive, renders this latter form active and reflected; as, tha thu iar do 'losgadh fein, thou hast burned thyself. Here féin may be placed before the infinitive, and the possessive changed for the corresponding personal pronoun; as that thu iar thu féin a losgadh.

iv. The fourth set of compound tenses are composed of the simple tenses of bi, followed by the passive participle; as,

Bitheam briste, let me be broken, &c. Tha mi briste, I am broken, &c.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE MOODS AND TENSES.

I. MOODS.

1. The imperative mood commands, forbids, entreats, or dissuades; as, bi'd thosd! be silent! Na h-abair facal, speak not a word. Na dean sin, O don't do so.

It sometimes expresses a wish or imprecation; as, Na leigeadh

+ In the 3rd person, a takes n before it, to avoid running into the preceding a; as, bitear ga ná càineadh: bithear ga ná phòsadh am màireach.

Dia! God forbid! Na faiceamsa la eile! May I never see another day! The na in this case is generally written nav; as, nar leigeadh Dia! May God not permit!

2. The indicative mood interrogates, denies, or affirms absolutely: as, an do chuir thu 'n sìol? Have you sown the seed? Am beil thu beò? Art thou alive? Cha do chuir, I did not sow; I have not sown. (No.+) Chuir, I did sow; I have. (Yes.) &c.

The hypothetical form expresses some exception, supposition, and the like, implied in the particle preceding the verb; as, mur heil airgiod agad cha'n fhaigh thu'm bathar, If you have not cash, you shall not get the goods. Ma's e Donchadh a bhris an gunna, tha e'n ain-fhios ormsa, if it was Duncan that broke the gun, I am ignorant of it.

- 3. The subjunctive mood is used when one assertion is subjoined to another; as thuirt thu gu'n do bhris mi 'n gunna. You said that I broke the gun. Tha e 'g ràdh gu'm fac' e fiadh, He says that he saw a deer.
- 4. The conditional mood interrogates, denies, or affirms, under certain limitations, and has generally the hypothetical form subjoined to the absolute; as, am posadh tu Ceit na 'm biodh airgiod aice? Would you marry Catherine if she had cash? Cha ghabhainn i ged bhiodh béinn òir aice, I would not have her, though she had (should have) a mountain of gold. It is used to express will, power, &c., like the English potential mood; as, bhithinn 'an so an dé mur cumadh an stoirm mi, I would have been here yesterday, if the storm had not prevented me. Choisicheamaid á so do Ghleann-ruaidh ann an tri làithean, we could walk from this to Clenroy in three days. Leagainn craobh dhiubh sin le buille, I could fell one of these trees with a (single) stroke. It is sometimes used subjunctively; as, tha mi 'creidsinn gu'n deanadh tu sin, I dare say THAT you could do so. Shaoil iad nach bithinn beò, they thought THAT I should not live;

Or nara, see p. 96. In Irish, and in our own more ancient compositions, this word is written nior, niar.

B' fhearr gu'm bithinn sgaoilt' As na còrdaibh so! Would that I were freed from these bonds!

Sometimes optatively; as, Gu'm beannaicheadh Dia thu! May God bless thee! Gu'n tigeadh do rìgheachd, May thy hingdom come. Gu'n deònaicheadh am Freasdal sin, May Providence grant that.*

The hypothetical form expresses a condition, provision, or event, limited by the particle which precedes the verb; as Na 'n tigeadh an latha gheibheamaid falbh, If day were come,

we could get setting off.

Sometimes the conditional clause is not expressed; as, Am biodh tu toileach dol a dh' America, Eòbhain? Would you like to go to America, Evan? Bhitheadh. H would. The conditional clause will appear by supplying the ellipsis, thus; Am biodh tu toileach dol a dh' America, Eòbhain, (na'm biodh dòigh, seòl, or, cothrom agad air?) Bhitheadh, (na'm biodh dòigh, &c., agam air.)

5. The infinitive mood is a noun expressing the force or effect of the verbal action; as briseadh, mas. a breaking, breach, fracture, &c. togail, fem. a lifting, building, rearing, hoisting, elevating; an edifice; leagadh, mas. a falling, a fall, lapse, &c. It is regularly declined, and sometimes admits of a plural; as togail, gen. togalach, fear-togalach, a lifter, rearer, builder, &c.—togailean, edifices, structures; leagainnean, falls, tumbles; an togail, the building, na togailean, the buildings.

* Perhaps, however, these three sentences and the like are only elliptical examples of the subjunctive use of this mood, having tha mi guidhe understood; as, tha mi guidhe gu'm beannaicheadh Dia thu, &c.

† When, in this mood, the 1st person responds to a question, he does not adopt that form of the verb proper to himself, but that proper to the 2d and 3d person; as, Am biodh tu toileach? Bhitheadh, or cha bhitheadh, not bhithim. So likewise in the plural, Am biodh sibh toileach? Bhitheadh, cha bhitheadh; not bhitheadh; unless when emphasis is required; as, cha bhiodh sibh toileach? Bhitheamaid, yes we would; we would indeed. But if the word sin follows the verb in the answer, then the persons, both in the singular and plural, employ that form of the verb proper to themselves; as, An cuireadh tu geall? Would you bet? Chuireadh, I would do that. An cuireadh sibh geall? Chuireadh, (emphatic, chuireamaid, but dhauriam sin, platic, chuireamaid, but dhauriamaid sin, or chuireamaid sin.

6. There is no part of the active voice that can, strictly speaking, be denominated a participle. The infinitive, preceded by the preposition ag, at, corresponds in meaning to the present participles of Latin, French, and English verbs,+ and preceded by iar, after, to the participle of the past time; $\frac{1}{2}$ but when unaccompanied by any of these particles, the infinitive * Ps. iii. 3. So crann-togalach, a crane for raising heavy weights.

Stewart's Gram. 2d Edition, pp. 94, 95.

+ As docens, a' teagasg; ambulans a' coiseachd; minans, a' maoitheadh; donnant, a' tabhairt, coulant, a' ruith; traduisant. ag atharrachadh; breaking, a' briseadh; falling, a' tuiteam, &c. Here the Gaelic expression a' teagasg, &c. exactly corresponds to docens, &c. But take away the particle a' (the representative of ag), and teagasg, &c. no longer have the signification of participles. Teagasg must now be translated by doctrina or docendum; coiseachd by ambulatio, or ambulan. dum; maoitheadh by minatio; tabhairt by donation; ruith by coulure; atharrachadh by traduction; briseadh by a break, breach, fracture, &c.; tuiteam by a fall, lapse, tumble, &c. This clearly shows that these infinitives are real nouns. Preceded by ag and iar they have no gender; but when used alone they assume gender according to their termination. In Latin, French, and English, the present participle may be used as an adjective; as ardens amator, le François coulant, a smiling look, &c.; but the Gaelic participle admits of no such application. We cannot say leannan a' losgadh, an Fhraingis a' ruith, gnùis a gàireachdainn; we must use an appropriate adjective with the nouns; as leannan dian, an Fhraingis ruith. teach, or réith; sealladh gàireach, or mìogach. Neither can the infinitive, preceded by ag, be employed as a noun like amans, amant, assailant, in Latin and French; because the noun to which ag is prefixed always includes in it the notion of time and action; both of which are excluded from amans and amant when employed in the capacity of nouns.

includes no idea of time, which is essential to the nature of a participle.

The passive participle is an adjective denoting the completed state of the verbal energy; as maide briste, a broken stick; cas bhriste, a fractured leg; daoine ledinte, wounded men. It sometimes admits of comparison; as 'S e so a's duinte na sin, this is closer than that.

II. TENSES.

1. The present tenses of bi and is express present existence or condition; of other verbs, present motion or action; as Tha mi 'n so, I am here; Is tu tha fuar, you are (very) cold; Tha e 'briseadh chlach, he is breaking stones; Thathas a' togail an tighe, They are building the house, the house is a building; Tha 'n tigh 'gä thogail, The house is at its building, a-building, in building; Thathas 'gar marbhadh, They are killing us, we are killed. or n being killed. +

+ Whether this manner of expression was known to the translators of the Gaelic Scriptures it is difficult to say, as no instance of it occurs in the sacred volume. However, if it had been used in rendering Rom. viii. 36, both the import and spirit of the original would have been better preserved. The version

* This mode of speech answers precisely to the Latin passive voice, domus ædificatur. The English, French, and Italian passive voice, (as it is called) bears no analogy to it. In these languages the action is not represented as going on at the time marked by the auxiliary. The house is built, and la maison est batie properly signify that the building of the house is past and finished at the time the words are spoken, without any reference to the time when the action of building was performed. The expressions are similar to the Gaelic ones,-Tha an tigh togte, or iar a thogail, which are totally different in signification from domus ædificatur, and thathas a' togail an tighe. These last intimate that the work of building is in progress (without any reference to how far it has advanced) at the time the words are uttered. The difference in signification between Thathas a' roinn na Gallia 'nä tri earannan, and Tha a'Ghallia roinnte or iar à roinn 'n à tri earannan, is as great as that between Gallia dividitur in tres partes, and Gallia divisa est in tres partes.

2. The past tenses express past existence, state, or action, without limitation; as, Bha tuil ann uair, There was a flood once; Bha e bothd roimhe so, He was poor before now. Hence the simple past indicative is sometimes used for the English perfect and pluperfect indicative; as, Nach d'thàinig iad fathast? Did they not, or have they not come yet? Dh' imich Abram gu ruig an t-àit' anns an robh à bhùth an toiseach; gu àite na h-altarach a rinn e'n sin air tis. Gen, xiii. 3.

The past conditional is generally rendered by could, would, should, and might, of the English past potential, but never by should or ought denoting obligation;—sometimes by the pluperfect subjunctive, especially the hypothetical form; and occasionally by the imperfect indicative, when a custom or habit is spoken of; as Bhithin toileach do a shealg, I should like to go a hunting; Chluimteadh osna throm nam marbh, The deep groans of the dead might be heard, or were heard; Bhiomaid 'an Eirinn 'an tri latha, We might be in Ireland in the course of three days; Ambiteadh fada 'dol thairis? Would it take a long time to go across? Na'm bithinn an so an dé, phàidhin thu, If I had been here yesterday, I would have paid you.

This tense respects future as we'll as past time; as Ged thigeadh i'm màireach, cha b'e 'beatha, Thongh she should como to-morrow, she would not be welcome. When it respects past time the past indicative is often used in one of the clauses instead of the past conditional; as Na'n robh ùin' agam sgrìobhainn an litir dhuit, "If I had had time, I would have written the letter for you; Mur tigeadh tusa 's an rathad bha e marbh, If you had not come in the way he was dead (should have died).

3. The future tenses denote future existence or actions indeterminately; as, Bithidh fearann math an so, This will be good land (yet); c'àit' an teid thu? whither will you yo? 'nuair a bheir e suas an rìgheachd do Dhia, when he shall have delivered up the hingdom to God; 'nuair a chuireas an corp truaillidh so neo-thruaillidheachd uime, when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption. The future indicative is often which we have of the passage, re-rendered into English, is— "according as it is written, For thy sake we were killed all the day, we were accounted as sheep for the slaughter."

translated by the English present when a habit or custom is spoken of; as Truaillidh droch chomhluadar deagh bhéusan, Evil communications corrupt good manners; aithnichear a chraobh air à toradh, a tree is known by its fruit; cha bhi an nàrachan tréubhach, the bashful is (never) successful; bi'dh fear na h-aon bho uair gun bhainne, the man who has only one cow must sometimes want milh.\(^1\)

Active. Dean, na dean. Impera. Infin. Deanamh, &c. Pres. par. a'deanamh.

Passine Deanar, na deanar. Deanta, done, made.

1 The personal pronoun is sometimes found joined to the 1st person singular; as Chualam guth 'am aisling féin, Ossian. In old poetry chluinn is used as the past affirmative of this verb, as,

'S bìnn leam na h-eòin, chluinn mi na h-eòin, Na h-eòin, na h-eòin bhòidheach, bhinne!

Dr. Smith has, Do'n talamh chluinn le tosd ä ghuth, ii. hymn, 3. 2 The fut. indic. is used for the present; as An cluim thu? Do you hear? Cluinnidh, I do.

| Imper. Ruig. na ruig. Infin. Ruigsinn. ruigheachd. | Ruigear, na ruigear. |

<sup>5</sup> In the future t is pronounced d. Some people therefore write déid, déidear; others d' theid, d' theidear. The former is as allowable as t' athair for d' athair. The latter, however, is improper, because do is never used before the future negative. As it would be improper to say an do theid? so also is it to say ni 'n do theid, cha d' theid, &c.

<sup>1</sup> An do ruig? cha do ruig, are also in good use. These are always used in combination with the noun dlios or dleas, due, debt, or right; as, An do ruig thu 'dhleas (vulgo leas) dol ann? Did you require to go? Cha ruig mi leas sgilling a phàidheadh. I need not pay a penny. An ruigear a leas so a charachadh? Is it necessary to remove this? Need or must this be removed?

10. Thig, Come.

Imper. Thig. na tig. 1
Infin. Tighin, teachd, &c. 2

INDICATIVE.

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this verb t is sounded d, except in tighin and teachd: hence it is liable to the same mis-spelling with the parts of toir and rach already mentioned. The Irish imperative of thig is tarr. Some trace of this latter verb is still found in cha tàrr mi e, or air, I cannot come at it. Ma thàrras mis' thu, 's tu 'gheibh e, If I get hold of you, I will make you (suffer). Cha tàrr mi dol ann an diugh, I cannot come at (manage) to go to-day. With leam, leat, leis, &c., tarr forms a defective verb, used only in the past indicative; as tharr leam, (it came with me), methought. * Tharr leat gu'n robh coslas garg air. It seemed to you to have a fierce aspect. In Scotland tarr also signifies to go; as tarr as, set off quickly; tharr iad as, they took to their heels, they made their escape. Tig is used also to signify become, please, answer suit, &c.; as, Is math a thig boinneid dhut. Nach tig feòil riut? Thigeadh sin rium gu gasda. Cha tig an cota glas cho math do n-a h-uile fear.

2 Teachd is a contraction of tigheachd.

1. Many neuter verbs want the imperative. See Exercises.

2. Some have only the infinitive active; as, léursainn, seeing, sight; bilistearachd, a hankering in order to get food; baigearachd, begging; gàireachdaich, laughing, &c. These and the like are used either as nouns, or after the particles a', ri, le, &c., proper to the infinitive.

3. Arsa, orsa, or osa, said, quoth, is thus declined:

INDICATIVE, PAST.

Orsa mise, thusa, esan sinne sibhse, iadsan said I, thou, he we, ye, they.

So ŏi Fionn, said Fingal; ŏi an inghean, said the maid. Orsa is probably corrupted from do radh se ('o ra' se, 'or'se). In Irish it is written ar se, which, combined and influenced by caol ri caol, has become arsa. In Scotland the form osa is generally used; as, os' ise.

4. The following are commonly used only in the second person singular and plural imperative.

1 Feuch - - - Feuchaibh, Behold.
2 Siuthad - - Siuthadaibh, Say away.
3 Tiugainn - Tiugainnibh, Come alony.

4 Perhaps Tar romhad, t'romhad, come forward.

5 In the Manks teb signifies to offer. In Welsh, tebig means like, likely. From this it would seem that the root teab signifies to be or make like: so that theab mi tuiteam, &c. coincides with the English expression, I was like to fall.

CONTRACTED.

OBSERVATIONS.

In translating is mi, combined with another verb, it very often happens that one verb in the English, is tantamount to wo in the Gaelic expression; as, Is mi a tha duilich mat of cirich dhuit, I am sorry for what befel you. Is mi nach 'eil gu math, I am not well; (literally, It is I who am not well.) But the Gaelic expression, being more emphatical, generally requires some intensive word or phrase in the English, to exhibit its import more forcibly; as, Is mi nach robh toilichte, I was not (at all) pleased. Is e a bhitheas dorch' an nochd, it will be (very) dark to-night.

The conditional mode of is is supplied from the indicative, and can be distinguished from it only by its connection in a sentence; as, Bu truagh do chor na'n tigeadh am bàs ort, Miserable would your state be, if death should seize you. Bu tu'n t-amadan na 'n rachadh tu 'n urras air, you would be a fool, should you become security for him.

The verb is never expressed in the present indic. interrog. or negative, or after the particles am, gur, mur, nach, &c.; yet the particles and pronouns, by themselves, convey a question or proposition to the mind, as distinctly and effectively as though the verb were expressed; as, co thu? Who (art) thou? An tu Cailean? (Art) thou Colin? Nach esan do brâthair? (Is) he not your brother? Chan'n or so. This (is) not gold, &c.

The conjunction agus, and a personal pronoun, or a noun, without the verb, have also the effect of a present participle; as, Leig leam 's migutinn, Let me be, and I sick; or, precisely like the broad Scotch, Let me alane, an me no weel. So, also • This participle may be variously rendered; as, An sin thuirt Iob, 's e freagairt, then Job, answering, said. Thaining

Righ! gur muladach thà mi, 'S mi gun mhìre gun mhànran, Anns an talla 'm bu ghnàth le Mac Leòid.

Accompanied by a possessive pronoun, corresponding to the personal one connected with aque, this participle, prefixed to the infinitive of any verb, is equivalent to the present participle of an English verb; as,

†'S mi m' shuidhe m' ònar Air tulaich bhòidhich, 'S mi 'g gabhail òrain, &c.

Sitting alone on a beautiful hillock, singing a song, I, &c. An òladh tu deoch 's tu d' ruith? Could you drink a draught running? Ann marcaich thu each 's e 'nä léum? Can you ride a horse galloping? i. e. at the gallop.

iad 's mi 'g éirigh, they came when, or as I was getting up. Na falbh 's an t-uisg' ann, do not go while it is raining. Thainig i 's tigh 's i làn fala, she came in all bloody. Ciod am math 'as in 's e briste? What is the use of that, seeing that it is broken? Na biodh eagal ort, 's mise' n so, ne timeas, me presente.

+ Sometimes the agus, or 's, is not expressed; as,
Mi 'm shuidhe 'n deireadh bàta, &c.
Sitting in the stern of a boat, I, &c.

Sometimes another pres. part. accompanies 's, or the pronoun, without adding any thing to the sense; as,

Mi 'n diugh a' fàgail na tìre, &c. Leaving the country to-day, I, &c.

Sometimes a past participle follows; and, in that case, the phrase is rendered into English by a circumlocution; as, Na ceannaich an fheòil sin's i iar lobhadh, do not purchase that meat, for it is putrid; in Scotch—dinna buy that flesh, an' it rotten,—where it will be observed, that the particle iar corresponds to ed, t, or en, of the past part. of English verbs.

COMPOSITE VERBS.

Is, in collocation with nouns or adjectives followed by a prepositional pronoun, forms a kind of expressions which, perhaps, may not improperly be called composite verbs.* Expressions of this composite structure are very numerous, and their united effect is generally equivalent to neuter and active verbs, which are expressed by one word in English, &c.; as, Is loghnadh leam, I wonder; Is beag orm, I hate; Is mòr agam, I esteem. These are conjugated like the simple verb is, only that the prepositional pronouns proper to the expression are substituted instead of the personal, thus:

Is toigh leam, I love.

The object of these verbs is placed next after the pronoun; as, Is toigh leam Anna; I love Anna. Bu bheag orm Màiri; I disliked Mary.

Many expressions of this structure are rendered by the English verb consider: as Is ard leam, I consider (it) high. Is beag leam,—little. Is binn leam,—melodious. Is cruaidh leam,—hard, severe. Is daor leam,—dear. Is luath leam, is trath leam,—soon, early. †

REFLECTED ACTION OF VERBS.

When the energy of a transitive verb terminates on its own subject, the verb is said to be reflected or reciprocal; as, Bhris mi mo chas, I broke my leg; Lot mi mi-féin, I have wounded myself; Is toigh leam mi-féin, I love myself. Reflected verbs are • Ma bha gràdh agam oirre dh' fhuaraich e, if I had a love for her, it has cooled. Na'm bu toigh leam i, telongs to the conditional; na is never joined to the past indic. Na'm bu duin' thu, cha deanadh tu e, wert thou a man, &c.

† Composite verbs cannot always be rendered by another verb into English; some of them require a particular turn, which practice alone can teach; as, Theid mi aun ge b'oil leat, I will go in spite of you. Is mor ort sin a dheanamh, That is rather too much for you to do, i. e. you are hardly a match for that.

conjugated in every respect like the active voice of Bris. The personal pronoun is repeated after the nominative, at each change of person, as the object of the verbal action; the word féin follows the latter pronoun. If a noun be the object, it is preceded by a possessive pronoun, corresponding to the person of the nominative; as, Bhris e a chas, Bhris i a cas. In this latter case, fein may also follow the object, if emphasis be expressed; as, Gar do chasan féin, warm your own feet.

IMPERSONAL VERBS.

Active and neuter verbs are called impersonal, when the passive form is used without any nominative* expressed; as, Tuigear as, [one] may understand from it, i. e. one may take the hint; Fasar sgith de 'n cheòl a's binne, [one] becomes tired of the sweetest melody; Shaoileas gu'n d' fhalbh e, [it] was thought he had gone; Cha bhiteadh fada ri sin, [one] would not be long in doing that.

"To the class of impersonals, is to be referred a certain part of active and neuter verbs, which has not yet been mentioned. In formit resembles the future passive. In signification it is active, present, and affirmative. In the course of a narration, when the

+ Although the effect of the tense above mentioned, is " to represent the occurrences narrated as present, yet in significa-

An infinitive, simply, or with its regimen, or a subjunctive clause, seems at times to supply the place of a nominative; as, féumar sgur (it) is necessary to desist; (we) must drop. Faodar amharc air an righ, (it) is allowable to look at the king. Na'n saoilteadh an t-airgiod fhaotainn. Na'n saoilteadh gu'm faighteadh an t-airgiod, &c. A prepositional pronoun sometimes follows an impersonal verb; as, ghuileadh leam, flebatur á me, ghuileadh leinn, flebatur á nobis, &c.

speaker wishes to enliven his style, by representing the occurrences narrated as present, and passing actually in view,—instead of using the past times, he adopts the part of the verb now described, employing it impersonally.* One or two examples will serve to exhibit the use and effect of this anomalous tense."

"Shuidh an òg-bhean air sgeir, 'us à sùil air an lear. Chunnaic i long a' teachd air barraibh nan tonn. Dh' aithnich i aogas à leannain, 'us chlig à cridhe 'n à com. Gun mhaille gun tàmh buailear a dh' fhìos na tràighe; agus faighear an laoch 's à dhaoine m' à thimchioll. The young woman sat on a rock, and her eye on the sea. She spied a ship coming on the tops of the waves. She perceived the likeness of her lover and her heart bounded in her breast. Without delay or stop she hastens to the shore; and finds the hero with his men around him."—Stewart's Grammar, pp. 115, 116.

The following is a specimen of the Irish form of this impersonal verb.

" Casas Cromshuil 's a ghiolla air Bhrian, na dhiaigh sin, air an bhothar ann so thall. Bhi Brian indiaigh bolgam  $\delta l$ ;

tion it is really and necessarily past; because all the actions which it can be used in describing, must have passed before we can employ it in relating them.

* The pronouns of the 3rd person are sometimes used after this form of the verb, to prevent ambiguity; as fagar e esan far an d'fhuair iade. Faicear ivid esan a' tighin 'nis still, agus gabhar 'nis chòmhail, they see him coming at full speed, and set out to meet him. This tense produces just the same effect as the present indicative did among the Latins in describing past actions, and as it does still in French and English. Vide Ovid's Metam. i. vii. 261—290. Caes. Bel. Gal. passim.

†, This form of expression is seldom found in any of our printed books, "It is, however, universally known and acknowledged as an established idiom of the Gaelic, very common in the mouths of those who speak it, and in animated narration almost indispensible." Id.

AUXILIARY VERBS.

The use of ta and is, as auxiliaries, has been already shown. Power, duty, or incumbency, are also expressed, as in English, by means of auxiliaries. The verbs principally used for this purpose are, faod, is urrainn, is éudar, is éiginn, is còir, and féumaidh, or fimridh. These are combined with the infinitives of the principal verbs, which they modify as follows:

POTENTIAL AND INCUMBENT MOOD.

|              | Is còir dhomh   |                | n, Iought, should | { get a wife, &c. |
| PAST TENSE.+ |                 |                |                   |                   |
|              | Dh' fhaodainn   | sgriòbhadh     | I might,          | ( ,, ,            |
|              | B' urrainn mi   | &c.            | I could, & c.     | write, &c.        |

* When the principal verb has an object, it comes between itself and the auxiliary; as faodaidh mi litir a sgrìobhadh, I may write a letter.

+ Used indefinitely for the English past, perfect, and pluperfect; as, dh' fhaodadh i bhi mar sin, She may have been so. Dh' fhaodamaid a bhi réith roimhe so, We might have been ready ere now. Bu chòir dha sin a dheanamh an dé, He ought to have done that uesterday.

The irregular verbs, Dean and Rach, are also employed as auxiliaries. The active of dean, combined with a noun, is equivalent to an active or neuter verb formed from that noun;* as, Na dean goid, do not make stealing, i. e. do not steal;=na goid; Rinn e gàire, he made a laugh, i. e. he laughed; = ghàir e. So, Deanaibh deifir,=deifrichibh; rinn iad cadal,=chaidli iad.

The infinititive of an active verb, conjoined with dean, as above, requires a possessive pronoun before it, to distinguish the person meant; as, Andrinn iad do ghortachadh?—An do ghortaich iad thu? Ni iad ä mharbhadh,—marbhaidh iad e. Dean do gharadh,=Gar thu-féin.

The passive tenses of Dean, or the active tenses of Rach, connected as above, with the infinitive of a transitive verb, form expressions equal to the passive voice of that verb; as, Rinneadh ä mharbhadh, his killing was made,=chaidh ä mharbhadh, his killing went or passed,=mharbhadh e, he was killed. So, An d'rinneadh à tiolacadh? or An deachaidh à tiolacadh?=An do thiolaiceadh?? In phrases of this structure, if the object of the infinitive be a noun, an emphatic or demonstrative pronoun, or if the action be reflected, the infinitive must be preceded by the verbal particle do; as, Ni mi do chean a bhriseadh. Ni mi

By means of this auxiliary, a noun which has no verbal form is elegantly made to express energy; as, Dean guth, make a voice, i. e. speah. Rinn iad bron, they made sorrow, i. e. they sorrowed or grieved. Ni iad pudhar, they will make (i. e. commit) have. Sometimes the auxiliary is used, in preference to a principal tense, merely to express emphasis; as, Ma dh' iarras c mi, if he ash mc; but mu ni e m' iarraidh, if he do ash me.

na sùilean a chur asad. Cha dean sin ean a shaoradh. Theid so a threabhadh an diugh. Dean thus' thu-féin a cheasnachadh.

The verbs cuir, cùm, gabh, leig, thoir, &c., combined with nouns and prepositions, help also to form expressions whose import is generally better exhibited by simple verbs than by a literal translation; as, Cuir saad ort féin, bestir yourself. Cum air do làimh, restrain your hand. Ghabh e air a bhi gu tinn, he pretended to be sich. Ghabh iad orm, they beat me. Gabh fois, rest, be still. An do ghabh thu aig an dorus? Have you secured the door? Leig aomadh 's a' phosta, incline the post. Thoir buille do'n chù, strike the dog. So, cuir bun a Dia—trust. Chuir sinn ri iomradh—we plied the oar, v. Exercises.

IRREGULAR FORMATION OF THE INFINITIVE.

The infinitive is generally formed by adding adh to the root (p. 87); as, mol, praise, mol-adh; bris, breah, bris-eadh.

 Some verbs suffer a contraction of their final syllable, before adding adh; as,

| synable, i | before adding adir; as, |               |

NOTES.

1. A is in some districts pronounced \(\epsilon\), and as es.

2. Ag, chiefly used before the infinitive, signifies action; as ag ol, in the act of drinking. Aig is generally used before nouns; as aig an dorus, at the door; aig baile, at home.

3. Air denotes imposition; as, air a' bhord, on the table,air muin eich, on horseback ;-incumbency ; as, tha air dol ann, he is bound to go; bha mòrlanachd oirnn, we were obliged to do extra service ;-claim, as, tha comain agad orm, Iam under an obligation to you; tha gini agam ort, you owe me a guinea. It is translated by for; as, bheir mi dhuit crùn air do bhiodaig, I will give thee a crown for thy dirk ;-at; as, bha e air an fhéill, he was at the fair ; -over, as chaidh agad orra, you overcame them, &c. In old Gaelic this preposition was written ar. In Gillies's collection it is often spelled eir, as it is universally pronounced.

4. A', as, signify motion beginning in and proceeding out of an object or place; as, thainig e as an uisge, -out of the water; dh'éirich ceò as an talamh,—out of the earth; dh'fhalbh mi á Narachan creagach,—from rocky Narachan; thainig so á h-Eirinn,-from Ireland. As, as an adverb, denotes extinction; as chaidh an solus as, the light is extinguished; chaidh as dha, he is gone; leig as sin, let-go that.

5. In Irish, ann is written in, inn, and ionn, and is the same with the Latin in, the Welsh yn, &c. Ann denotes existence; as, tha fras ann, there is a shower; 's ann ann tha 'n t-uisge, what rain there is !—into; as cuir uisge 's an t-saothach, into the dish; —rest; as, tha e's an leaba,—in bed; tha min anns an t-sac,—in the sack;—motion in; as, tha 'n t-iasg a' snàmh 's an uisge, swimming in the water;—among; as, tha an crodh 's an fhochann, the kine are among the braird; tha neadan's an fhraoch,—among the heath—thither, there; as, tha mise 'dol do'n sgoil, an teid thus' ann? I am going to school, will you go thither? Cha teid mi ann an diugh, I will not go thither to day;—already; as, beairtich an t-each, harness the horse. Bheairtich mi ann e, I have harnessed him already.'

· See Lhuyd, tit. ii. voce, tergum.

6. De of, off, has been always confounded with do, to. It is impossible, however, that the same particle can have two such opposite significations as of and to. What Dr. Stewart has written to show that the root of diom, diot, &c. must have been small, is quite conclusive. To which it may be added' that de often appears undisguisedly, in its own appropriate sense, in expressions where do can not by any possibility be admitted; as Gearr sgoon dhe so dhomh; thoir plos dhe sin do Niall; thoir de 'n bhòrd an leabhar; tha thu gu math dheth, &c. Lhuyd also translates the Latin de, e, ex, by de (Ar. Br. tit, ii, in loco). Deth in the Manks is always written

De signifies parting or separation ;<sup>2</sup> as mìr de chrè a piece of clay; cuid de 'n airgiod, part of the money; gearr slis de 'n chàise, cut a slice of, or off, the cheese; sgud e 'n ceann de 'n ùraisg; he chopped the head off the satyr; chuir e dheth ä chòta, he put off his coat.

7. Do denotes motion towards or into; as Rach do 'n sgoil, go to the school; chaidh e do 'n Eadailt, he went to Italy;

<sup>2</sup> De in the Welsh signifies to part or separate; and di (dith) privation; both of which fall in with the appropriate signification of de.

This use of ann is like that of else in the Scotch; as Gang an' do what I bad ye. I've done 't else. Ann denoting emphasis is often redundant; as cha dubhairt mise sin αnn, I did not s y so (at all.) Cha-n'eil mise 'g iarraidh sin ann, I do not demand that (at all)—any such thing.

chaidh iad do'n uamha, they went into the cave. It is sometimes rendered by for; as dean biadh do'n phaiste, for the child; boinneid do Challum,—for Malcolm;—of; as mac do Shéumas, a son of James's; piuthar do Cheit, a sister of Catherine's; \(^1\)—by; as do bhrigh, by virtue; a chionn, because; but most generally by to after active verbs having two objects; as leig cead da, let leave to it, i. e. let it alone;—after certain adjectives; as dlùth dhomh, near to me; féumail dhuit, useful to thee, &c.

8. Gu signifies motion terminated; as, thàinig an long gu tir,—to shore; chaidh sinn gu mullach na beinne,—to the top of the mountain; gu so, thus far; gu cinnteach, to certain, i. e. certainly. Thug e litir gu m' athair,—to my father; a bhliadhna gus an diugh, this day twelvemonth; a mhìos gus an dć; yesterday was a month. Before the infinitive, gu intimates the beginning of motion; as, tha iad gu falbh, they are about going, on the point of going; tha e gu bualadh, he is for striking, ready to strike, about to strike.

9. Ri, before an infinitive, or other noun, like ag, denotes action; as the eri brogan, he is at (i. e. making) shoes. Be ar in himaigh, he was at prayer, (i. e. praying.) It is rendered by against; as, a' dol ri bruthach, going against an ascent, i. e. up; ri gaoith 's ri h-uisge, against wind and rain; -to; as cosail ri mac an duine, like to the son of man; abair ri d' athair, say to your father; cuir ris a' bhùntata, add (earth) to the potatoes; seas ri m' thaobh, stand to (by) my side. Cum taice rium, keep support to me, (i. e. support me); thoisich iad ri cur, they have begun to sow; tha eri tighin, he is to come; during; as, ri m' latha, during my life; ri linn an treas Deòrsa, during the reign of George III.; ri teas an latha, during the heat of the day: in; as, dheanadh tu ri h-uair e, yon would do it, in (the space of) an hour; choisicheadh duin' ann ri dà latha, a man might travel thither in two days.

10 Feadh is a noun, signifying mixture; as, tha càth feadh na mine, there is seed among the meal; mil 'us bainne feadh a chéile, honey and milk mingled together; feadh an fheòir, among the grass; theid sinn feadh na coille an diugh, we shall go through the wood to-day. It is often preceded by air; as, air feadh an tighe, through the house; cuir sin air feadh so, mix that among this.

 Gun denotes privation or negation. Preceding a noun, it has the same effect as not, or,—less in the termination of English words; as, gun chron, harmless; gun bhrigh, sapless, senseless; gun nàire, shameless, &c.

COMPOUND PREPOSITIONS

PART IV.

FORMATION OF DERIVATIVES.

The Gaelic, like most other languages, consists of a number of roots or primitive words, from which are formed other words called derivatives. A primitive word is one which cannot be traced up to any simpler than itself; as am, bó, căr, dös, éug, &c. A derivative word is one formed from a primitive by prefixing a syllable, or adding a termination, —or both; as from ceart, right, just; mi-cheart, un-just, wrong; ceart-as, justice, ceart-aich, adjust, mi-cheart-as, injustice.

I. PREFIXES.

The syllables prefixed, and their signification, are as follows. v. p. 30, 31.

1. An, ao, as, ea, eas, éu, di, mi, neo,—corresponding to not, less, de, ex, im, in, super, &o.; as nos, custom, habit; annos, 'what is not common, a rarity, delicacy; dion, sheller, tightness; ao-dion, want of shelter, a leak, &c.; caoin, soft, mild, kind; as-caoin, rough, rude, uncivil; slån, whole, hale; &a-slan, unsound, diseased, sick; car a friend; eas-car, a foe; cail, constitution, appetite, pith; éu-cail, want of appetite, constitutional infirmity, sickness, weakness; mol, to praise; dimol, to discommend, revile, abuse; glan, nure, clean; di-ghlan² impure, bastard; lachd, milk; di-leachd, wanting milk, a babe deprived of the mother, an orphan; baigh, love, regard, kindness; mì-bhaigh, (usually mìomhadh) travail, toil, fatigue, suffered under the unkindly influence of a storm at sea, or on land:—so alt, a joint; mi alt, a disjointed state, inconvenience; sealbh, luck; mi-shealbh, (mialabh) misfortune; thr, sense, shrewdness, mì-thur; abaich, ripe, mi-abaich, neo-abaich; nì, a thing, neo-ni, nothing.

<sup>2</sup> An is generally privative; it is sometimes intensive; as teas, heat, ain-teas, excessive heat, inflammation; neart, strength, ain-neart, oppression, wrong, injury. In Welsh this prefix is much used in composition as a negative; as an-amser, an-aimsir; an-eirif, anàireamh; anflas, an-bhlas; anfynych, ainmhinic; anghrwm, anchrom; anhallt, anhalawg, anhoraeth, &c. from saillte, salach, torrach.

Ath = again, next, re. Airis, relate, imitate; ath-airis, imitation, mimickry, relate again; buail, strike; ath-bhuail, repercuss, reflect; tog, to lift, build; ath-thog, to lift again.

In Welsh this prefix is written ad, at, and signifies a going on, over or to; re; as adanadl, ath-anail, respiration; adlosgi, athloisg, burn again; adnawf, ath-shnàmh, a swim back; adgrymu, ath-chrom, &c.

3. Ban signifies woman, female, = ess, ix. lady, &c. Bàrd, a poet; bana-bhard, a poetess; celleadair, or cileadair, an administrator; ban-cheileadair, an administratrix; ruidire, a knight; ban-ruidire, a knight's lady; dannsair, a dancer; ban-of dì and slàn, q. d. di-shlan, unwhole!

dannsair, a danceuse; treabhaiche, a husbandman; ban-treabhaiche, contr. bantr'ach, a woman left to work a farm after her husband's death, a husbandman's relict, a widow. 1

4. Bith, cath, sior, signify incessant, continual; as deanamh, doing; bith-dheanamh, constant working; bith-dheanas, (corrup, bichiontas), constant habit, usualness; bruidhin, talk; eath-bhruidhin, constant talk; ruith, to run; a flow; siorruith, incessant flowing; eternal.

5. Co, con, &c. (v. p. 5.) signify together, = con, col, cor, com, co; ac, ap, sym, syn, &c.; as, Aonta, at one, in accord; co-aonta, accord, consent; bann, a band, bond, tie; co-bhann, a coreant; cur, a putting, or placing; co-chur, application; itheach, (obsol.), -vorous, greedy; coimh-itheach, contr. coimh-each, greedy, surly, inhospitable; feitheamh, a waiting, tarrying; coinf heitheamh, contr. coinneamh, and coinne, a meeting together, an appointment.

6. <sup>2</sup>Do means difficult, uneasy, and is opposed to so, easy, facile, gentle; as Car, a turn; so-char, a good turn, a benefit; do-char, a bad turn, hurt, injury; so-cair, ease, leisure; do-shocair, contr. do'cair, hardship, misfortune, &c.; sèamh, meek, quiet, still; soi-sheamh, peaceable, domesticated, tame; doi-sheamh, cross, restive, &c.; léun, peaceable, visible; soi-leur, clear, bright, doi-leur, darh, gloomy; so-léursainn, obvious; do-thuigsinn, incomprehensible.

<sup>4</sup> So, prefixed to the infinitive of a verb, nearly answers to the termination -able, -ible; as so-dheanamh, practicable, easy to do; so-ghiùlan, portable. Do in the same connection expresses difficulty, or rather impossibility; as do-léughadh, il-

7. Il or iol, signifies many, = mult, poly, &c. It is perhaps the Welsh fill (a twist, ply) aspirated, fhill. This particle is found prefixed to many Irish words; but it is seldom employed in Scotland as a prefix; ioma, many, is used instead; as Scotland.

Ireland.

8. ioma-chearnach, iol-chearnach, polyangular. ioma-chainnteach, iol-chainnteach, polyglot. ioma-dhathach, iol-dhathach, many-coloured.

9. Im, iom, or ioma, signifies about, around, complete; as, Siubhal, motion, travel; im-shiubhal, perambulation; slan, whole, entire; iom-shlan, contr. iomlan, perfectly whole; gaoth, wind; ioma-ghaoth, a whirlwind; cubhaidh, fit, proper; iom-chubhhaidh, contr. iomchaidh, highly becoming, or proper.

10. In, or ion, means fit, proper, worthy. Miann, desire; ion-mhiann, corrup, ionmhuinn, deserving of choice, desirable, amiable, beloved; aon, one; ion-aon, a like one; a par, match; alike, equal, same; snath, yarn; in-shnath, corrup, inneadh, inneach, match yarn, equal yarn, woof.

II. AFFIXES.

I. NOUNS.

Derivative nouns are of various terminations: as a, ach, ad, adh, achd, ag, an, as, e, ear, idh, ridh, &c. v. pp. 23—28.

1. Danns, v. dance, dannsa, 1 m. dancing. Rol, v. roll, rola, m. a roll or scroll.

legible; do-labhairt, ineffable; do-ruigsinn, inaccessible; do-chreidsinn, incredible. The past participle, instead of the infin. is sometimes improperly used with these; as so-bhuailte, do-sgaoilte, for so-bhuailadh, do-sgaoileadh. But these forms seem to be of Irish extraction, like urlar-buailte, aodach-caithte, Eoin Baiste, which literally mean, a beaten floor, worn clothes, baptized John;—in Scotland we say urlar-bualaidh, aodach-caithimh, &c.

2. Buidhe, a. yellow; buidheach, f. f. jaundice. Moigh, f. a plain; moigheach, f. a hare. Ceard, m. an artizan; ceardach, f. a workshop. Gaisege, f. bravery; gaisgesch, m. a champion. Marc, m. a horse; marcach, m. a rider. Caoin, soft, mild; caoineach, cóineach, fine moss, down. Coille, f. a wood; coilleach, f. a forest. Duille, f. a leaf; duilleach, m. foliage. Fiadh, m. a deer; fiadhach, m. deer-hunting, the chase. Droighionn, f. thorn; droighneach, f. a thorn-brake, m. lumber. Albainn, f. Scotland; Albannach, m. a Scotchman.

3. Gile, f. whiter; gilead, whiteness. Glaine, purer; glain-ead, f. purity, v. p. 24, 63, 64,

4. Arm, m. a weapon; armachd, f. armour. Barr, m. top, summit; bărrachd, f. superiority. Căr, m. a turn, trick; cărachd, f. wrestling, trickry. Domhain, deep; doimhneachd, f. depth. v, p. 26, 30.

5. Cas, coise, f. a foot, stalk; coiseag, corrup. cuiseag, f. a stem, tender plant, v. p. 25.

6. Bòrd, m. a board, table; bòrdan, m. a small board, a stool. Cù, m. a dog; cùilean, m. a little dog, a pup. Duine, m. a man; duineachan, m. a manikin. v. v. 25, 40.

7. Amaid, f. a foolish woman; amaideas, m. folly. Caol, small, narrow; caolas, m. a strait (Kyles); deireadh, m. rear, stern; deireas, m. want, fail, ailment, mishap. v. p. 27.

8. Dearg, compar. deirge, redder; n. f. redness, v. p. 24, 63.

¹ Of nouns in ach many are primitives; as lach, each, &c. Some derivatives are common; as toiteach, a steamer; òganach, m. a youth; bratach, f. a flag; gruagach, f. a damsel. Some denote agents; as peacach, m. a sinner; suirdheach, a vooer; éiseach, f. the curber, or crupper of a saddle. Some are collective; as giùbhsach, f. a fir-forest; bruanach, f. a quantity of brohen stuff. Many are gentiles; as Abrach, m. a Lochaberman; Dùitseach, m. a Dutchman;—or patronymics; as Camarnonach, Dònullach, Frisealach, a Cameron, Macdonald, Fraser. Some denote a sect or party; as Debrsach, a Papist; Baisseach, a Baptist; Sadusach, a Sadducee, &c. Ach is sometimes subjoined to another termination for the purpose of expressing ridicule or irony; as smògairneach, m. a broad clunsy creature; gugarlach, a mis-shapen lump of a fellow; plaosgairneach, a queer-looking, smiling, slow-speaking person.

9. Aitich, v. cultivate, inhabit; àitiche, m. a cultivator, inhabitant. Buain, v. reap; buanaiche, m. a reaper; trediriche,

m. a guide. v. p. 29, 30.

10. Buail, strike; buailtear,<sup>2</sup> m. a thrasher. Bag, m. a bag or pouch; baigear, m. a pockman, a beggar. Leisg, f. laziness; leisgire, m. a singaard. Sthiche, contr. sithche, siche, m. a fairy; slochaire, m. a triffing puny creature, a brat, imp, (body). Slaid, f. theft, pillering, sloidire, (corrup. sloightire,) m. a thief, roque, scoundrel. v. p. 29.

<sup>1</sup> All polysyllables in iche signify agents. They seem to be derived from verbs in ich, which are now obsolete; as, deargaich, maraich, planndaich, ràmhaich, &c. The final e appears to be the noun tε, a person, a man, in its aspirate state, thε, as coisichthe, &c. In Scotland tε is now applied only to females, and tt, its opposite, to males; whereas, in Ireland, tε is masculine, and them.* (Neilson's Gram. p. 146, n. 30.)

That ti was of old applied to females in Scotland, appears from R. M'D.'s Collection, p. 56, where the poet, addressing a lady, says:

Ti cho taitneach riut cha n-fhaic mì Ann an dreach no 'm fiamhachd. —

—so, old people still construe tì as a noun feminine: as tì mhòr nan dùl. Mac na Tì's àirde. A Thì mhòr nam feairt, &c.

<sup>2</sup> Nouns in ear, air, ire, for the most part denote persons or agents. They should all terminate in ear, which is just fear, man, aspirated, and pronounced fr, rhyming er in error. This termination is found under various forms in several languages; as nailer, sailor, esquire, pillar, sentry, sectary, (martyr?) pioneer, &c. in English:—beurrier, birloir, danceur, bélandre, bernardière, bibliothéaire, &c. in French:—actor, creator, lanarius, &c. in Latin:—crythaur, cofiadur, cofrestyr, clerur bwdiar, &c. in Welsh.

Many agents in ear are formed from the infinitives of active verbs by sharpening the termination adh; as dath, to colour, dye; dathadh, colouring; dathadair, a dyer; so breabadair, a * In the Irish Bible té is used as the nom. mas, and ti as denoting the object, v. Prov. xxvi 8, &c. Matth. xxv. 16—28, &c.

11. Smug, m. snot, phlegm; smugaid, f. a spitite. Brisg, brittle, orimp; briosgaid, f. a biscuit. Coc, to raise erect, cock; cocaid, f. the hair in cockernony, a coquette. Càr, a-kin, dear; càraid, f. a couple, brace. Glac, f. the grasp; glacaid, f. a handful. Gleothaisg, or glebsg, f. a silly female; glebsgaid, f. a silly senseless woman. Gar and goir, near; gairid, goirid, short; n. m. short space, or out.

12. Iompa, f. entreaty; impidh, f. persuasion. Braid, f. theft; braididh, m.a thief, rascal. Mos, m. dirt, filth; moisidh.

m. a dirty fellow, the devil. See p. 28.

13. Cas, a foot; easrwidh, f. ta party of foot, infantry; esòlruidh, f. the Muses; eachruidh, f. cavalry; laochruidh, f. a band of heroes, the brave; gasruidh, macruidh, òigridh, the youth, the young men, collectively.

For other terminations which cannot be so easily explained.

II. ADJECTIVES.

Derivative adjectives end in ach, mhor, ail, idh, ta, ra or ion.

weaver; fuineadair, a baker; crochadair, a hangman; and many, in imitation of this, are formed from nouns; as, cungadair, a druggist, feòladair, a flesher, leabhradair, a bookseller, &c.

<sup>2</sup> Some derivatives in ear, ire, throw away the mas. termination, and add id to form the feminine; as omharlair, a blockhead, omharlaid; bumalair, a fumbler, bumarlaid; spliugaire, a blobbery fellow, spliugaid, a blowze, or flab; glagaire, a blatterer, or blusterer; glagaid, a noisy female: so amadan, a fool or idiot makes amaid or aimid.

This termination is probably the old noun ruith (Welsh rhawd) a troop, band; the same with the Saxon rout and Dutch

1.  $Ach^1 = -y$ , -ous, -ful, -able, -ed, -ing, &c. Fras-ach, showery; copious. Navach, bashful, shameful. Buailteach, subject, exposed, or liable to. Freagarrach, answerable, fitted, convenient. Loisgeach, burning, flaming, painful. Meógach, wheyey. Papanach, popish. Cărach, tricky. Aobhach, joyous, Annosach, uncommon, rare.

2, Mhor<sup>2</sup> (v. p. 29.) = -al, -ant, all-, -ous, -some, -y, &c. Dreachmhor, elegant. Greannmhor or greannar, smiling, affable, pleasant, smart.

3. Anhail, ail, eil. Agail, doubtful. Banail, feminine, modest. Cosdail, expensive. Deiseal, towards the right hand. Eisgeil, satyrical, abusive. Foirmeil, stately, portly, affected, pompous, &c. Iseal, low, cheap. Uasal, high-born, noble, generous. v. p. 29.

4. Idh = y in watery, snowy, &c. Aognaidh, deathlike, pale, grim. Beachdaidh, observant, sure, certain. Crìostaidh, Christian. Deòmhnaidh, devilish. Eagnaidh, prudent, wise. Fialaidh, liberal, generous. Gàbhaidh, fearful, huge. Gnùsgaidh, grim, gloomy, austere. Falchaidh, hidden, unseen.

Ruftery. It is pronounced ry, and is found also in cavalry, tenantry, yeomanry, cavalerie (i. e. capall-ruith), &c.

1 In Welsh, ach is written og or awg; as cigawg, full of flesh, cloriawg (clarach), having a cover, coesawg (cosach), legged, &c

Mawr in Welsh; as an adj. termination fawr and awr; as nerthfawr, neartmhor; clodfawr, cliùthmhor, &c. Mhor is usually contracted 'or, and this being pronounced ar is sometimes spelled ar to suit the pronunciation.

<sup>3</sup> The Irish always write this termination amhail or amhail. It means like; as, bardamhail, poetlike, gaisgeamhuil, brave-like. The Greek ½µaλ-a, and Latin s-imil-is, appear to be modifications of it. In the British, efel (evel) signifies similar; and ail, second, like. The former is compounded of ef, or efe, he, and el, other, q. d. ef-el (e-fé-eile), another he or it. Efel, therefore, means a co-like, and corresponds to the Gaelic ion-aon, alike, a par. From amhail (abail, afail, ail) is derived the Latin alis; capitalis, mortalis; hence capital, mortal, mortel, &c.; ly, comely, faintly, &c.; the Welsh awl, al, el, il; corffawl, cychawl, meddal, isel, hychwil, &c.; ≡corpail, cuachail, maothail, iseal, mucali, &c.

Mortaidh, killing, toilsome, oppressive. Iarnaidh (ironv), dusky, swarthy, bronze.

5. ta, da. Crosta (forbidden), perverse, cross, passionate. Gléusta (tuned), accurate, trimmed diligent, active. Fòsta, married. Taghta (chosen), choice, excellent. Sàthsta, sàsta, satisfied, full. Aosda, aged, old. Snasda, secure, well-knit, firm. Allda (cliffv), wild savage. Fasanda, fashionable. vide

p. 29. 6. ra, rra. Acarra, compassionate, ruthful. Deisearra, southern, dexter, ready, convenient. Eagarra, nicely laid or joined, exact, nice. Corporra, bodily, corporeal. Danarra, bold, shameless, dauntless. Measarra, temperate, respectable.

7. ion, ionn, inn, eann. Coitcheann, common. Mairionn, durable, existent. Tarsuinn, transverse, cross. See p. 28.

III. VERBS.

 Verbs are derived from nouns or adjectives without rdding any termination; as Dubh, a. black; ink; dubh. v. blacken. Car, m. a turn, twist, trick; car, v. to roll, cheat, deceive. Sgåil, m. a shade; sgåil, v. to shade.

2. A few add ir to a primative verb, noun, or adjective; as, Tog. v. lift, raise; togair, desire, incline. Lom, a. bare; lomair, to clip, shear, poll. Mag, f. a paw, magair, to yo on all-foars. Ruamh, m. a spade, ruamhair, delve: so sugair, to sport.

3. A great many nouns and adjectives take the syllable ich to form neuters; or transitives denoting causation; as, Aoguaich,

3 This word is generally pronounced coicheanta in Scotland. It seem to be a corruption of coimh, or comhdheanta, (done by adl, cotholic) as bicheanta is of bithdheanta. Coitchionn, the general spelling, admits of no analysis.

<sup>4</sup> A cuphonic letter is sometimes inserted between the root and the termination; as, bras-n-aich or brosnaich, incite, stir up, provoke. Cais-l-ich shahe, toss. Or a letter is thrown out from the root to soften the sound; as, ccist, ccasnaich; blath, to grow pale, to fade. Cuairtich, encircle, surround. Deasaich, make ready, prepare. Gealaich whiten. Lasaich, slacken. Teannaich, tighten. See p. 27, 28.

Most of these are the past participles of verbs. It will be observed, however, that, in their capacity of adjectives, they have in some measure departed from their original signification.

PART V.

SYNTAX.

Syntax, or construction, teaches how to connect and arrange words together so as to form sentences. It is divided into two parts, concord and government. Concord is the agreement or correspondence of two or more words in number, gender, case, or person. Government is the power or influence which one word has over some form of another, to indicate the relation between the ideas which the words represent.

I. CONCORD.

I. ARTICLE AND NOUN.

R. i. The article agrees with its noun in form,* number, gender and case; as, An, cuan, am bord, a' ghaoth; na dàin, the poems; nan dùl, of the elements; nam bàn, &c.

R. ii. The article is placed immediately before its noun; as, An dile, am biadh, a' ghlas.

blàitich; clisg, clisnich; meath, mčilich, &c. Many suffer contraction; as. éiginn éig'nich; saothair, saoth'raich; meomhair, meòmh'raich, &c. In the North ich is often changed into ig; as, cuibhrig, for cuibhrich, cover; inndrig, for inndrich, enter. Ich signifies to cause or make, like en in frighten, soften, which is perhaps the Celtic verb dean, do, make, aspirated diean, (yen, en.)

· See p. 49, 59.

NOTES.

1. If an adjective precede the noun, the article must precede the adjective; 1 as 'a cheud aithne, an dara salm.

2. The governing noun never takes the article; as, Iasg na mara,2 (The) fish of the sea; except the governing part of hyphened compounds; as, a' chearc-fhraoich; am boc-goibhre. 3. The article is used before proper names, to mark emphasis or distinction; as Fhreagair an Dearg, Dargo replied.

Thuirt an t-Oscar bu mhòr brìgh.

4. The article is commonly prefixed to the names of foreign kingdoms and states; as an Fhraing, France; an Olaind, Holland :- to names of virtues and vices; as, 'Si 'n stuain ionmhas an duine ghlic; 'S e 'm peacadh a thug am bàs air an t-saoghal; and to words used in a general or collective sense; as, an duine, man; a' mhin, meal; an lion, lint, &c. 'S e 'n copar a's luachmhoire na 'n t- iarunn.3

5. The article is used with a noun following the interrogatives có, cia, ciod: as, Co am fear a tha'n sid? Cia 'n rathad a théid mi? Ciod an rud a th' agad? Also with a noun followed by a demonstrative pronoun; as, An t-aite so, na daoin ud: And before a noun, preceded by an adjective, and the verb Is: as. Is truagh an duine mi, I am a miserable man. Bu mhòr na bradain iad, They were large salmon.

6. In the dative singular, the letters of the article sometimes

2 So in Hebrew and Welsh. Vid. Noble's Heb. Rudiments, § 85, and Richard's Wel. Gr., construc. of Art., ad fin.

<sup>1</sup> In this event the article agrees in form with the initial letter of the adjective, not of the noun; as, an treas fear, not am treas fear: the third man.

suffer a transposition for sound's sake; as dha na ghaoith; Ossian, Fingal, 124: roimh na chlaigionn; o na bhonn, Gillies's Collect, p. 15; for do 'n ghaoith, roi'n chlaigionn, o'n bhonn.

The phrase na h-uile là, uair, am, &c, though sometimes used, is improper, because the plural article is joined with a noun singular.<sup>1</sup>

II. ADJECTIVE AND NOUN.

R. i. An adjective agrees with its noun, in number, gender, and case; as, Baile mor, clach gheal; bailtean mòra, clachan, geala, eich ghlasa.

R. ii. The adjective, when in the same clause with its noun, is generally placed after it; as, Dh' ith na bà caola na bà reamhra. When not in the same clause, it sometimes precedes, sometimes follows its noun; as, Is fuar an là an diugh. Tha 'n oïche so dorcha.

NOTES.

1. Some monosyllables are placed before their nouns, such as ard, ban, binn, bog, buan, beò, blath, caol, ciùin, caomh, cas, ciar, cian, deagh, dearg, droch, dù, daor, dall, fliuch,

&lt;sup>1</sup> a in a h-uile, when preceded by do, de, fo, o, &c., takes n-before it: as, do n-a h-uile fear, for do a h-uile fear. This probably gave rise to na in these expressions.

This rule holds good only when the adjective follows its noun in the same member of a sentence, i. e. when it qualifies the nominative or object, or is in the subject or predicate of a proposition; as, Tha baile mor 'an so. Sin clach gheal. Is bean bhrònach mise. Is duine truagh am peacach. Sgrios na nàimhdean am baile mor. Cháirich iad a' chlach gheal. But when it is used adverbially, or to qualify the verb, then the adjective, whatever its position, remains in the nom. sing. mas. whatever be the gender or number of the substative to which it relates; as, Tha a' chlach sin geal. Is môr Diana man Ephésianach. Tha na clachan sin yeal. Is geal na clachan iad sin. Tha thu 'g ràdh gu'm beil do lamh goirt. Nach gorm suilean a' phàiste?

frith, feall, fuar, fad, fàs, fionn, fior, fir, garg, géur, glas, gorm, geal, grinn, lag, làn, las, leisg, liath, lom, mear, mion, mean, mòr, òg, trom, tlàth, ùr, &c.; as, cruaidh dhéuchainn, a strenuous effort; lag dhòchas, faint hope; deagh mhisneach, good courage; àrd-shagart, &c.

2. An adjective referring to two nouns of different genders agrees with the nearer; as, eòrn' agus peasair mhath, good barley and pease. Peasair agus eòrna math.

3. An adjective qualifying a noun whose plural ends in an,

1 "Such adjectives, placed before their nouns, often combine with them, so as to represent one complex idea, rather than two distinct ones; and the adjective and noun, in that structure in the considered as one complex term, than as two distinct words, and written accordingly; as, bigfhear a goung man. Garbhchriochan, rude regions." Stewart's Gram. p. 152.

When an adjective and noun combine in the manner above described, the accent of the accessory term is transferred to the antecedent; as, fear og, a young man; oigear, a youth; crìochan garbh'a, Garbh'chriochan; talamh glas', lay land; glas'tălămh, &c. To write compounds of this character as one undivided word would be quite proper, were some provision made in the orthography to simplify their appearance," as in the case of digear, seanair, dughlas, morair, uabheist-contracted for sean athair, dubh ghlas, mor fhear, uamh bheist ;but in Garbhchriochan, ruadhbhoc, deaghghean drochdhuine, gnathfhocal, &c., such clusters of uncombineable or quiescent consonants occur, that there is much difficulty in separating the parts so as to read them with fluency. Besides, they do not so forcibly strike the mind when not viewed separately. Some mark of distinction seems therefore necessary between the terms. Accordingly, we find that the recommendation of Dr. Stewart has not been followed; but that compounds of the above description are written with a hyphen; + as, gnathfhocal, naomh-ionad, cuairt-ghaoth, &c.

a, or bh, is in the plain form; as, neadan beaga, feara mòra; anns na neadaibh beaga. But if the noun plural be of the first declension, or have the dative like the nominative plural, the adjective which follows it is aspirated; as nid bheaga, fir mhòra; did mhatha; bàird agus pìobairean matha; pìobairean agus bàird mhatha.

4. Some collective nouns occasionally take an adjective plural with their nominative singular; as, clann bheaga, muinntir òza, young people; but in other cases they require it in the singular; as, cleas na cloime bige, after the manner of children.

III. NOUNS IN APPOSITION.

R.i. Substantives denoting the same person or thing agree in case; as, Tearlach Stiùärt, Charles Stuart; Righ Séumas, King James.

NOTES

1. Surnames are joined to proper names like adjectives; as, Abastair Donullach, Alexander Donaldson: Màiri Dhonullach, Mary Donaldson.

2. Mac is used in apposition with a masculine proper name, and nic with a feminine; as, Callum mac Phàdruic, Malcom Paterson: Ceit nic Phadruic, Catherine Paterson.

3. Each of two nouns agreeing in the vocative requires the particle a; as a Thearlaich, a ruin, Charles, my darling; a Mhàiri, a ghaoil, Mary, my love.

4. An appellative in apposition with a proper name takes no article; as Eobhan-ciobair, Evan (the) shepherd; Ioseph saor, Joseph (the) carpenter;—unless the appellative be a

As in the case of an adjective preceding its noun, the two substantives composing these names unite so closely, that they ought rather to be considered together as one complex term than as two distinct words, and accordingly connected with a hyphen.

compound term; as, Alastair, an ceard-umha, Alexander the coppersmith. Ailean, am muillear-luaidh, Alan, the fulling-miller.

5. A term added to a name and surname describing the person's trade, profession, &c., requires the article; as, Alastair Tàillear, an clachair, Iain Caimbeul, am maor.

6 Nouns in apposition take their adjectives between them; as, Donull ruadh tàillear, Donald roy (the) tailor; Eobhan ban cobair, Fair Evan (the) shepherd. If there be two or more adjectives, the article accompanies the latter noun; as, Eachann glas bg, an tuathanach, Young wan Hector, the farmer. Morrag bheag chiar, a' bhanarach, Little swarthy Sal, the dairymaid. v. supra, note 5.

7. Proper names of sovereigns are placed in the nominative, though apposed with a title in the genitive; as, Mac righ Séumas.<sup>1</sup> Ri linn ban-righ Màiri, In the reign of queen Mary.

8. A term in apposition having the article, is put in the nominative, though the antecedent noun be in the genitive; as,

Each Iain Chaimbeil, am maor.

9. Though the former of two nouns in apposition be gowerned in the dative, the latter is in the nominative; as, "do bhràithribh uile, mic (not macaibh) an rìgh," I Kings i. 9 "Rì Sarai à bhean," Gen, xii. 11. Ghabh e gaol air Mòraig, maidionn òg nan ciabh tlàth, (not maidinn oig), He fell in love with Mòrag, (the) young maid of the soft tresses.

IV. PRONOUNS AND THEIR ANTECEDENTS.

1. Personal and possessive pronouns agree with their nouns in number, gender, and person; as, 'Sgrìobh mo bhràthair li-

i. 12; ii. 3, 24; viii. 65.

On consideration it will be found, that every deviation of Gaelic syntax from a general rule has its rationale. If a proper name following a title were aspirated, the sense would be completely changed; for Mac righ Shéumais would signify the son of the king of Seumas, which expression would present the idea that Seumas was the king's territory, not his name.

tir, agus chuir e do Dhun-éidin i. Chaill esan  $\ddot{a}$  nàire agus ise  $\ddot{a}$  mothachadh.

2. A masculine noun, denoting an object of the female sex, requires a pronoun feminine; as, Is deas am boirionnach i, She is a handsome woman; is alainn à cruth.

3. Nouns preceded by gach, ioma, and a' h-uile, are generally referred to by a plural pronoun; as, Chaidh gach duine gu 'n aite, Each man went to their place. D. M·1. Edin. 1790, p. 74. Gach righ a thòisich 'ad aghaidh ghabh iad mar ragha an diùtha, id. pl 16. Gach duine 'bha dha 'n än nàimhdean, Chinn iad dha 'n än càirdean matha, id. See Exod. xvi. 16, 29. Ps. exxxv. 11. metr. vers.

4. The pronouns of the 1st and 2d person are also apposed with nouns, &c. of the 3d person; as Na 'm bu mhi e, If I were he.

5. Two or more singular subjects require a pronoun plural; as, Chaidh Iain agus Lachann a shealg, ach tillidh iad air än ais feasgar.

6. If a sentence or clause be the antecedent, the pronoun referring to it is in the 3d person masculine; as, Ged dh'òlamaid botal bu shuarach e. Fhuair e a chuid de 'n dileab: ach cha do leig e air e.2

7. If a collective noun be the antecedent, the pronoun is in the 3d person plural; 5 as, Is aon sluagh a t'ann, agus aon teanga ac uile; agus thòisich iad air so a dheanamh. Rachamaid agus cuireamaid an cainnt thar a cheile, Gen. xi. 6, 7.

8. Both the pronoun (personal or possessive) and the noun are sometimes expressed together; as, Fear do dhealbh bu tearc e, A man of your form he was rare. Cha n-e sin an ni a ta mi 'g ä iargainn, That is not the thing which I am lumenting it. An té a ta thu suirdhe oirre, The girl who thou art courting at her, i. e. whom you are courting.

9. After a preposition ending in a vowel o of mo, do, my, thy, is elided; as, cuid de m' bhron (pr. quch'em vrôn), part of my sorrow. Do d' bhràthair (dot vrâh'er), to thy brother. Ri d' athair (ri tăh'er) to thy father.

10. Interrogative pronouns precede the nouns to which they refer; as, Có d'athair? Co iad na fr ud? An interrogative conjoined with a personal pronoun or a noun, asks a question without the help of the verb Is; as, C' ainm dhuit? What (is) thy name? Co na fir tha sud? Who (are) they you men? See Obs. on the verb Is.

11. Interrogatives precede the prepositions which govern them; as, Co air a tha sibh a' bruidhinn? About whom are you talking? Ciod mu'm beil thu'g gearn? Cia us a thàinig iad ?2 Whence came they?

1 v. Noble's H. R. § 93. This construction most commonly takes place with the relative; as, An duine a fhuair thu ä chuid. The man who you received his property (i. e. whose property). Sid a' bhean a bha sinn a's tigh aice, Yon is the woman who we were in her house (i. e. in whose). So, an té a fhuair sinn an t-uan o a bràthair. Gaisgeach a theich na tréin as a lathair, A hero from whose presence the brave fled. would be improper to use two prepositions in this last example, and say Gaisgeach o 'n do theich na tréin as a lathair. passage in Rev. xx. 11. "neach d' an do theich neamh agus talamh o a ghnuis," seems therefore not to be conformable to the Gaelic idiom. It should rather have been, neach a theich neamh agus talamh o, (or roimh) a ghnùis. v. also John xi. 2. The preposition governing the relative may often be placed immediately before it, in which case the personal pronoun is omitted: as, An te air am beil thu suirdhe; Na daoine a tha thu 'bruidhin orra, or air am beil thu bruidhin.

<sup>2</sup> Co is often improperly used for cia; as, Co as a thainig na daoine? This properly means, out of whom came the men? whereas the purport of the question is, whence came the men? Co dheth a rinneadh thu? Co ann a chuireas mi'm bainne? Co leis a chàireas mi so? and the like, are liable to the same objection, for, in strict propriety, co applies to persons only.

[Followed by a relative, co interrogates about an individual unseen or unknown; as, Co 'tha sin? who is there? Co 'rinn so? who did this? If the subject of inquiry be in view, or if its gender be known, then a personal pronoun corresponding to the subject in gender, &c. usually follows the interrogative; as, Co è am fear ud? who is he you one? Co  $i\alpha d$  na h-uaislean  $\sin$ ? Co  $i^1$  am boiríonnach beag ud? Co is sometimes used in the genitive; as, A broinn co an d' thainig an eigh? Job xxxviii. 29: In Irish, Cia an bhrù as a ttanic an cuisne? In the Manks, Ass quoi 'n vreïn haink y rio?

Cia is used before adjectives; as, Cia f had, a Thighearna, bhios fearg ort? Ps. lxxix. 5. Cia f ad, a Dhe? Ps. lxxiv. 10. Sometimes before nouns; as, Cia 'n rathad? what way? which way? how? Job xxxviii. 24. Cia 'n còs 's a bheil tuinidh an t-saoi? In what cave is the hero's abode? Oss. p. 119. l. 49. It is generally employed when the interrogation is exclamatory; as, Cia lionmhor d' oibre, a Thighearna! Ps. civ. 24. Nach, however, is perhaps oftener used in the spoken language when a question is put with admiration; as, Nach ciatach a labhair e! Nach uamhasach mòr an claidheamh sin! Cood is applied to things2 only; as, Ciod 'ta so? Ciod an rud 'tha sin? Ciod th 'air d' aire? what do you mean? It is used in asking the nature of things; as, Ciod am fiodh a th' ann? what (sort of) wood is it? Ciod an t-eun 'tha sin? what (kind of) bird is that ?

Co, cia,3 ciod, are sometimes used, without interrogation, as a

v. supra, p. 179, note 2d.

<sup>2</sup> The pronoun e is often used after ciod, referring to the masculine noun ni understood; as, Ciod e urnaigh? i. e. Ciod e (an ni ris an canar) urnaigh? what is it, (the thing called) prayer? In colloquial speech, ciod e is universally corrupted into gu dé or go dé. This is further abridged into 'dé, which is employed in asking questions about any subject whatever; as, 'Dé do naidheachd? &c. This corruption is also fixed in the Irish; as, Go de ta tu ag iarraidh? what are you in quest of?

3 Cia appears to be the imperative of the obsolete verb ci, * We still have the word chì, I see or shall see, which must have sprung from the root cl, though now it is only used as the future of the irregular verb faic. v. Lite ...'s Ir. Dic. 7. cl.

kind of demonstratives, as, Tha fios agam co thu. I know who thou art. Cha n-aithne dhomh cia 'n taobh a théid mi. I know not what way to go. Nochd dhuinn ciod a their sinn ris. Job xxxvii. 19.]

V. A VERB AND ITS SUBJECT.

R. i. A verb agrees with its nominative <sup>1</sup> in number and person; as, Sgrìobh thusa, Write thou; thigeadh esan, Let him come.

to see, and the pronoun è, united into one word, ciè or cia (so do è has become da; fo è fotha). Hence it means to show, give, hand, or reach; as, C'è sin, Show me that, let me see that; c'è dhomh 'n clobha, give or hand me the tongs; c' i do làmh, give me your hand; c'iad na daoine,† let me see, show me, the men. From these and the like examples cia appears plainly to include a verb. In our older writings it was used, as still in Ireland, for co; as, Cia chuairticheas do bhith, a Dhé? D. Buchanan, i. l. 41. Cia chreid ar n-iomradh? Isa. liii. 1. Ir. vers. The probable analysis of it here is ci è, show him, or ci e a, show him who; in English, simply who? From being used to distinguish or separate one or more objects from among a number, this verb naturally took an interrogative turn. every connexion, however, it retains its primitive signification; as, cì e, or cia d' each-sa ('näm measg sin), show me, let me see your horse (among these); or, as more commonly expressed in English, Which is your horse? &c. A Dhia, cia mòrdha d'ainm! O God, behold how great is thy name !

I The 1st person singular past subjunctive (when that tense is used optatively), sometimes, in poetry, takes the termination of the 2d and 3d person singular; as, A righ gu faiceadh mi slàn thu! O may I see thee in health! Gillies' Collec. p. 61. The termination is at other times thrown out, and the pronoun united to the verb; as, gu faiceam (faic-mi, faic-im). As it is just mi that is here transposed, it ought to be separated from the verb by a hyphen, not incorporated with it, and written am or eam; as that both disguises the etymology of the syllable, and confounds the person with the 1st pers. sing, imperative.

† It is more usual to hear expressions like these pronounced with an aspiration between ci and the pronoun; as, ci dh-è 'n ladar; ci dh-i do làmh; ci dh-iad na daoine.

R. ii. The nominative is most commonly placed nest after the verb; as, Is e; Bha sinn. An cuala tu? Didst thou hear? Nach d'thàinig Callum? Has Malcom not come?

NOTES.

- 1. No nominative is expressed along with those parts of the verb which have personal terminations; as, larraibh air tus rìoghachd Dhe, Mat. vi. 33. Na tugaibh breth, id. vii. 1. Thiginn gu luath, I would come readily. [The expression Fosglaibh sibhse dorsa nan nial, Open ye the gates of the clouds, Ossian, Croma, 3, 5. is therefore erroneous, where the personal pronoun is repeated after the termination ibh. It should have been, Fosglaibh-se dorsa nan nial, which corresponds with the measure of the verse, and is unobjectionable in point of grammar. We might as well say, Thiginn mise, as Fosglaibh sibhse.]
- 2. In the responsive form, either affirmative or negative, the nominative is seldom expressed; as, Am faca tu iad? Chunnaic. Yes. Chan-fhaca. No. But when the answer is emphatical, or made by Is, the nominative must be repeated; as, Chan-fhaca tu e? Chunnaic mi. I did. Chan-fhaca th. You did Not. An i bh' ann? Chan-i. No. 'Si, Yes.
- 3. In poetry the nominative is sometimes placed before its verb; as, Mise gu bràth cha dìrich, Ise gu dìlinn cha teirinn, R. M°D. p. 29. Never ascend shall I, never descend will she.

- 4. Relative pronouns always precede their verbs; as, Co'm fear a theich? An rud nach faigh thu. 'S e so na f huair mi.
- 5. After the verb Is, the predicate comes before the subject: as, Is math am bàrd Alastair. Bu duine treun e. He was a valiant man. If the predicate want the article, its adjective follows it; as, Is latha dorcha so. This is a dark day but Is dorch' an latha so, This day is dark.

&#x27; It is sometimes otherwise; as Is tu mo rùn, Thou art my darling. Is iad do bhràithrean, They are thy brothers. If the verb be suppressed, the place of the personal pronoun is transposed; as, mo rùn thu, for is tu mo rùn: so, cas a shiubhal nan

- 6. An infinitive and its regimen is often the subject to a verb; as, Is math thu a thighin. It is good that you have come.
- 7. By a pleonasm the same verb has sometimes a noun and pronoun together for its subject; as, Luchd a' chruidh, bi'dh iad a's tigh, The cow-graziers they will be in. Chaidh e'n caisead mo bhruthach, My ascent it has become steeper. Vide p. 179, n. 8.
- 8. Of two verbs united by a conjunction, the latter only, in general, has the nominative expressed; as, Cha d' ith 's cha d' ol m' sian an diugh. Dh' fhalbh, 'us thàinig iad, They went, and have returned.
- 9. The article, an adjective, or a branch of the sentence somettines intervenes between the verb and its subject; as, Thuit a' theath at Their gach fear. Chitear, aig toiseach a' thhird, chobair; There is seen, at the head of the table, a shepherd.
- 10. The verb is sometimes understood; as, Mu'n cuairt a' ghlaine, (Put) round the glass. A nall sin, a bhean, (Send) that over, mistress.
- 11. The nominative is suppressed in poetry, though rarely; as, Iordain, c' arson a phill air d' ais? Jordan, why returnedst back? Ps. exiv. 5. metr. vers.
- 12. Participles agree with subjects of any number or gender; as, Tha 'n samhradh a' tighin. Bha na mnathan a' buain. Toirm fheadanan (fheadan) 'g än gleusadh. Tha 'n obair crìochnaichte. Bha na dorsan dùinte.

stùc thu, for Bu tu cas, &c. Sgipear ri la gaillinn' thu, for Bu tu 'n sgipear, &c. The noun and pronoun are used in the 3d person without pleonasm; as, Is e mo ghràdh Alostair, Alexander he is my love. B' iad mo ghaol na gaisgich, The heroes they were (the objects of) my love. 'S i 'n luran i, She is the dandu, she, i.e. what a jewel she is!

II. GOVERNMENT.

OF THE ARTICLE. v. p. 50, 51, and 60, 61.

II. OF NOUNS.

R. i. A noun denoting the possessor of any object is put in the genitive; as, Nighean tuathanaich. A farmer's daughter. Tigh m' athar, my father's house. Mullach nam beann. Ioseph an t-saoir, The carpenter's Joseph.

R. ii. The name signifying the possessor is always placed last; as, Sgiath Thréunmhoir, Trénmor's shield. Fear Mhurlagain, The proprietor or renter of Murlagan. Bean na Curra, The proprietrix or lady of Curr. Eobhan a' bhàta, Evan of the boat, i. e. the boatman. Cu-chaorach, a sheep-dog, &c.

NOTES.

1. Possession is often denoted, as in Hebrew, by the mere position of the nouns, without any sign of case; as, Mac Iehoiada; Foighidin Iob Ceann dràchd. Toiseach bàta. 2. The genitive is to be understood actively or passively according to the sense; as, Gradh Dhia, God's love towards us, or ours towards him.

The governed noun is sometimes plain, sometimes aspirated; as, Cas cuirce, cearc-fhraoich : Leitir-mhorair; Dail-choinnidh,2 Dalwhinny, v. p. 7.

<sup>1</sup> To this rule are to be referred expressions like the following; geinn dir, a wedge of gold; braisd airgid, a silver brooch; mac gaoil, a son of love, i. e. a dear son. Alastair cridhe, Alexander of heart, i. e. darling, R. McD. p. 26. Loch mo chridhe, id p. 28. La an àidh, day of happiness, i. e. glorious or charming day. A mhic cridhe, son of heart, i. e. dear fellow, &c.

3. A noun denoting an individual of a species is plain; as, ceann tairbh (the head of a bull. Adharc goibhre, a goat's horn.

4. A proper name masculine is aspirated; as, Saighdearan Thearlaich. Anna Dhònuill, Donald's Anna. A proper name feminine is plain; 1 as, Moladh Moraig, Morag's eulogy. Feillbride, St. Bridget's vigil. Feill-moire, Marymas. Brathair Ceite. Piuthar Seonaid.—Proper names of places of class 1, 3, 5, and 6, are aspirated whether masculine or feminine; as, Muinntir Chlàidich. Fear Dhail-chuilidh. Crodh Bhail'-anàbaidh. Donull Cheann-loch-iall .-- If the proper name of a person be preceded by a title, the title is aspirated, and the name suffers no flexion; as, Mac Shir Tormaid, Sir Norman's son. Fearann dhiùc Gòrdan, Tigh Chaiptein Ros. v. p. 178, n. 7.

5. When a governed appellative noun becomes itself to govern another noun in the genitive, the former is usually left in the nominative : as, ola fras-lin (for ola froise lin), oil of lint-seed. Ceann tigh-Challum (for tighe). So clach air muin clach Mhic Leoid, (for cloiche) Proverb. Measg clann nan daoin', Ps. xii. 1. ed. 1715. Air barraibh sgiath na gaoith', id. Ps. xviii, 10.

6. A single proper name in regimen, or a succession of them, is put in the genitive; as, Mac Ioseiph an t-saoir, The son of Braighe, a' Chorpaich, na Cluainean : - 3d, of two nouns combined as above; as, Aird-seile, Dail-chuilidh :- 4th, of an article, noun, and adjective, or other noun; as am Baile-meadhonach, an Torra-beithe: -5th, of a noun, article, and noun; as, Bail'-an-àbaidh, Cul-na-càpaig, Caolas-nan-con : or-6th, of three or more nouns: as, Ceann-loch-iall, Caolas-mhic-phadraic, Druim-tigh'-mhic-ghille-chatain.

In Argyleshire, however, and some other parts of the Highlands, a proper name feminine is aspirated; as, Fear Mhuire, Matth. i. 6. Tobar-mhoire, Bràthair Cheit. Bainis Shednaid. In this case, if an adjective accompany the governed noun, instead of agreeing therewith in the genitive, it is put in the nominative; as, Bràthair Cheit mhór. Bainis Sheonaid bhan. Paiste Mhairi Ruadh,—for Ceite moire, Seonaide bàine, Mairi Ruaidhe, &c.

the carpenter's Joseph. Fionn mac Cumhail mhic Trathuil mhic Tréunmhoir.

7. Some nouns govern the infinitive; as, Lamh a sgapadh an dir, Hand to scatter (i. e. liberal in spending) gold; cas a shiubhal an fhirich, foot to wander (i. e. good at travelling among) the wilds. Sometimes a is omitted; as, Lamh thogail an ail, Hand to rear (good at rearing) young cattle.

8. After a word of quantity, the genitive or the preposition de may be used; as, moran bainne, or de bhainne, a great deal of milk. Paliteas caise, or de chaise, plenty of cheese.

9. Possession is sometimes denoted by the prepositions aig, do, 2 le; as, Sin an t-each aig Séumas, That is James's horse; So an t-each agamsa. This is mine. Is mae dhòmhsa an t-òganach so. This youth is a son of mine. Co leis so? Whose is this? Leamsa. Mine. Duine le Dia, A man af God.

10. The article or an adjective sometimes comes between the governing and governed noun; as, Turus fada cuain, A long sea-voyage. Tùr nan clach lìomha. Tùr Garrannach uasal nan clach snaidhte, The noble Garrian tower of hewn stones.

III. OF PRONOUNS.

POSSESSIVE.

 Mo, do, and ä, his, aspirate the word which follows them; as, mo cheann, do chasan, ä shullean. Mo dheagh charaid, My excellent friend. Air m' fhùrinn, By my troth. A, her, ar, ur or bhur, än, äm do not aspirate; as a ceann, a suilean, ar cinn, ur màthair, än teaghlach, äm brathair.

2. These pronouns always precede their nouns.

IV. OF ADJECTIVES.

1. An adjective prefixed to a noun, verb, or to another adjec-

<sup>2</sup> So in Hebrew, Gen. xxv. 20, sister to Laban; Piuthar do Laban. Vide Parkhurst's Lex. 5, 17.—and Noble's Rud. §

90.

If the governed noun have an adjective or regimen, de only must be used; as, slat de dh-anart caol. Phund de dh-im ur. Culaidh de fhionnadh chàmhal, Matth. iii. 4. Peiteag de bhian ròin; stiallaire de chaile dhuibh.

tive, aspirates either; as dearg-shuil, a red eye, ard-mhol, highly-extol, (v. p. 7, 8, bot.) But a word in d, t, s, following sean, old, is plain; as sean or seann duine, an t seann tuadh, an seann sluagh. The old man, tenantry, people.

2. Adjectives of fulness govern the genitive; as, Lan dir, full of gold. Lan tholl, full of holes. When an adjective follow the regimen, instead of the genitive, the preposition de is used after the adjective; as, Lan de chraobhan mora, rather than chraobh mora, full of large trees. Adjectives of scarcity or want, generally take de; as, Gann de storas, scarce of wealth. Both classes take de when the noun which they govern has the article; as, Lun de 'n chaitheamh, full of consumption. Gann de 'n tombaca, scarce of tobacco.

3. Adjectives signifying willingness and their opposites, govern the infinitive; as, Tha mi tolleach fallsh, I am willing to go.

Deònach do phòsadh, willing to marry thee.

4. Adjectives signifying profit or disprofit, require a preposition after them; as, Math aig fairge, good at sea.—air a' chatan,—for a cold.—air astar,—on a journey.—air òrain,—at (singing) songs.—ann an caonnaig.—in a row.—gu dol's an ruaig,—in a retreat.—a. bhualadh bhuillean,—at dealing blows. So, Math d' ā mhàthair,—ri fuachd,—m' ā chuid.—Trom air bròzan.—Ole air pàidheath, &c. 5

5. An adjective preceding its adjunct, suffers no flexion in termination; as, Clann an aon duine. The children of the same man. Os ceanu an àrd-doruis. Above the lintel.

V. NUMERALS.

1. Aon, dà, and a' cheud, aspirate their nouns; as, aon

<sup>1</sup> The prepositive particles an, ath, comh, &c. being of the nature of adjectives, also aspirate the words to which they are prefixed. v. p. 34.

3 To this are to be referred expressions like these; Fada no rid dhomh'bhi ann, Whether I be there long or not; Bea g-fhear; aon chaora; an1 ceud fhear; a' cheud uair, the first time. After gon a noun in d, t, s, is plain; as, aon duine; aon deise, one suit; aon tigh; aon té, one femule; aon sluagh, one people.

2. Dà governs its noun in the dative singular: as, dà chois, dà laimh, dà fhear. The plural is never joined with it. If the noun be followed by an adjective, the adj. is put in the nom. sing. fem.;2 as, dà bhradan mhòr, two large salmon. Dà léig bhuadhach, mheallach, ghuamach. A. M'Donald's Songs, p. 107. After a preposition, the adjective is put in the dative singular; as, do dhà nighin dig; to two young girls. Aig an dà chaileig bhig; Air dà sgilling shasonnaich, for two shillings. Though the noun be governed, it still remains in the singular; as, cearn an dà mheòir, the ends of the two fingers. Buinn ä à choise, the soles of both his fect. So, clann na dà mhnà, The children of both wives. Prìs an dà eich. Màl an dà thighe. Fradhare mo dhà shùl'.

VI. OF VERBS.

R. i. An active verb governs its object in the accusative,2 as, Bris an t-aran, Break the bread. Thog iad tigh, They have built a house.

R. ii. The object is placed immediately after the no mor leat e; Trom no atrom ort iad; elliptical idioms for cia dhiu bhios mi ann fada no goirid, &c.

1 Often a' cheud fhear. But though an adjective ecede its noun, the article must agree with that not s, am moraire, a' bhan mhoraire, an t-òigear, an òg-bher 74. 1.

2 In poetry, it is sometimes put in the nom, pr as, dà bhradan mhòra, dà nighin bheaga,

3 Neuter verbs have sometimes an object after mem; as, Phirich e'm monadh, He ascended the hill. Theirinn sinn am bruthach, We descended the brae. But the object has a pre; osition sometimes expressed before it; as, Dhirich e ris a' mhonadh ; Theirinn sinn leis a' bhruthach.

nominative; as Thog iad na siùil, They hoisted the sails. Mharbh e fiadh, He shot a deer.

NOTES.

1. An adverb sometimes intervenes between the nominative and the object; as, Rinn e min a' chlach, He made the stone smooth. Cuir direach e, Set it pependicular. Leigibh gu ciùin sios e, Let it down softly.

2. In poetry the object sometimes precedes the verb; as Creud e Dia, no creud e 'ainm,

Cha tuig na h-aingle 's àirde 'n glòir.

What God is, or what his name, the angels most exalted in glory cannot comprehend. D. Buchanan, Hymn, i. 1. 1, 2,

3. The object is sometimes the branch of a sentence or clausular noun; 2 as, Chi mi gu'm beil thu toilichte, I see that thou art satisfied. Chuala mi a' CAOIDH E.

4. A neuter verb may have a kindred noun as its object;

as. Mu'n caidil thu cadal 'a bhàis. 'Ruith mi mo réis.

5. Many active and neuter verbs require a preposition or adverb after them to complete their sense; as Leig as mo lanh, Let-go my hand. Buail air an obair. Cuir seachad an gunna, Lay-by the gun. Cùm an àird do cheann, Keep-up your head.

6. Active verbs which transfer their regimen to some person or thing mentioned, govern the accusative, and take a preposition before the object receiving the benefit or injury; as, Thug iad urram do 'n righ, They gave honour to (honoured) the king; Bhuail e clach air Alastair, He struck a stone on Alexander, i. e. He struck Alexander with a stone.

He healed every soul-disease. D. Buchanan, Hymn ii. l. 55.

The object of the verb, or of the preposition, is often understood; as, Leig (fois) leis a' phàiste, Let the child alone. Cui air a' phoit, i.e. Cuir a' phoit air (an eine), Put on the pot. Togamaid birnn, (sup. ar breacain or rr u-eallaichean,) Let us set off; verbatim, Let us lift on us our pluids, or burdens, similar to the Hebrew expression. Let us gird our loins.

7. The passive form of active and neuter verbs is followed by the preposition let as, Cha togar leam fonn air choir, By me the song cannot be raised a-right. Gillies, p. 55. Ghuileadh leinn gu goirt, We went bitterly. Ps. exxxvii. 1. Cla mar dh' fhaodar leinn? How can we? Id. 4.

8. Transitive verbs which require a preposition in the active, are also followed by the same in the passive voice; as, Thugadh urram do 'n righ, Honour was given to the king. Bhuaileadh clach air Alastair, Alexander was struck with a stone.

9. An impersonal verb takes do after it; as, Thuit do'n latha 'bhi fliuch, It happened to be a wet day. Thachair dhomh falbh, I happened to go.

10. Bu, was, aspirates the following consonant, except d, t; as, Bu bheag a mhath, It was of little use. Bu dearg a leachd, Red was her cheek. Bu treun an duin' e, He was a brave man.

11. The infinitive governs its object, after it, in the genitive; as, A' briseadh arain, breaking bread, Acts ii. 36. A' seideadh bagraidh agus àir, breathing threatening and slaughter. Id. ix. 1. A' siubhal bheann, wundering the hills. Dol a phòsadh mnà, going to marry a wife. If its object precede the infinitive, it is governed in the accusative; as. Chum fuil a dhòrtaih, to shed blood. Gu réis a ruith, to run a race. Gu an snàth a dhath, to dye the yarn. When the infinitive is in regimen, it is subject to the same restrictions with other nouns; as, A' gabhail òran-an--samhraidh; ag òl desch-a-doruis, a' dùnadh dorus-cùil an tighe. See p. 186. n. 5.

12. Participles are followed by the prepositions of their own verbs; as. A' busladh air an obair, beginning the work. Iar urram a thoirt do 'n righ, after having given honour to the king. Bha ar breacain suainte umainn, our platids were wrapped about us.

192 SYNTAX.

13. Iar, an déigh, an déis, and taréis, preceding the infinitive, require do after them; as, Iar do'n t-samhradh tighin, after summer came, or when summer comes. Iar éirigh do'n ghréin, after the sun arose, or when the sun shill arise.

14. One verb governs another in the infinitive: as, Faodaidh tu falbh, you may go. Theid sinn a dh' iasgach, we shall go to fish. 1. The infinitive sometimes takes a preposition before it; as. Tha iad ri tighin, they are to come. Tha a' bhean gu laidhe, the woman is about to accouch. Tha sinn a' dol' g' an iarraidh, we are going to seek them. 2. Bi, and verbs of motion. require a (do) before the infinitive; as, Féumaidh sibh a bhi tapaidh, ye must be clever. Tha mi 'dol a chur, I am going to sow. 3. Verbs followed by a proposition, (as abair ri) impersonals, (as éirich, tachair, tuit) and such as are of the nature of auxiliaries, (as faod, féum, fimir, theab, is coir, is éudar, &c.) govern the infinitive plain without a preposition; as Abair ri Sine tighin, tell Jane to come; Iarr air Eobhan bualadh, tell Evan to strike; Na leigibh le Pàraic losgadh, do not permit Patrick to fire; unless its object2 precede the infinitive, in which case do (a) must follow the object; as, Abair ri Mòir òran a ghabhail, tell Mòr to sing a song; Abair ri Donachadh urchair a losgadh, tell Duncan to fire a shot.

15. Gu, gus, los, brath, chum, air tì, 'an rùn, before the infinitive, express purpose or intention; as, Chaidh e g' äm pòsadh. An ann los mo bhualadh a tha thu? Do you mean to strike me? Am beil thu brath an t-airgiod a phàidheadh? Do you intend to pay the money? Thug e thairis e chum à chéusadh. Matth. xxvii. 26.—'An comhair and 'an impis intimate that the verbal action is, or was, just upon the eve of taking effect; as, Tha'n tigh' an comhair tuiteam, The house is upon the eve of falling (almost down). Bha iad 'an impis sgàineadh le gàireachdainn, They were well-nigh bursting with lauchter.

VII. OF ADVERBS.

1. The simple adverbs, ro, glé, fir; cha, do, do or a, ni, nior or nar, precede and aspirate the words which they modify; as, Ro mhath, very good. Glé bhochd, fir bhochd, very poor. Cha bhi. Do bhris mi. Cha do gheall thu. Do bhriseadh e. Do bhriseadh leat. Do or a bhriseadh, to break. Nior ghabh se gràin, Ps. xxi. 24. and xxxi. 8, metr. ver. Nior chluinneam sgeul marbh ort! May I hear no death tale of thee! R. M'D. p. 122. Nar a mheal mi mo shlàinte! May I not enjoy my health! A. Mac Dougald's Songs, p. 41. line 8, 9.

2. Compound adverbs, as gu fior, gu garg, &c., are generally placed either between the subject and object, or after the object of the verbs which they modify; as, Thuirt e gu math e, he spoke it well. Na cronaich mi gu garg, Ps. vi. 1 – The adverb is placed immediately after a verb in the imperative mood; as,

Cuirear gu h-obann gu nàir' iad, Ps. vi. 10.

3. Cha takes n- before the following vowel or f aspirate; as, Cha n-òl mi; cha n-fhaod ind.—Ni takes h before a vowel, m before a labial, and n before a lingual; as. Ni h-eagal leam 's ni 'n càs, Ps. xxiii. met. ver .- Ni 'm bi mi fada beò.

4. The particle gu is expressed only before the first of two or more adjectives; as, Gu fallain, fuasgait. Gu furanach, fallaidh, fàilteach: unless with conjunctions; as, Gu dubh's gu dona, unluckily and badly. Gu fial's gu farsainn, liberally and extensively. Gu math no gu sath, well or ill.

VIII. OF PREPOSITIONS.

R.i. The simple prepositions, aig, air, ann, &c., govern the dative of nouns, and incorporate with the pronouns which they affect; as, aig mnaoi, in the possession of a woman; air a' bhòrd, on the table. Anns an t-sùil; air na fearaibh. Agam, for ag mi; annaibh, for ann sibh, &c.

R. ii. The compound prepositions govern the genitive; as, 'An aghaidh an t-srutha, in the face of the stream, i. e. against. Air son airgid, for the sake of money, i. e. for.—The genitive is here governed by the noun which follows the preposition.

NOTES.

1. De, do, fo, fa, mar, mu, roimh, tre, troi, aspirate a noun without the article; de, do, fo, fa, mu, roimh, tre, troi, also aspirate a noun singular having the article; as, de châise, of cheese; do dhuine; fo gheilt, under fear.—De 'n châise, of the cheese; do 'n chù, to the dog; fo 'n chirc, under the hen.—De and do take dh. between them, and a vowel or f aspirate; as, de dh. asg, of fish; do dh. losa, to Jesus.

Sometimes de and do are changed into a; as, graim a dharan; dol a dh-fhaicinn. Sometimes the dhalone remains; as, Chaidh i 'dh-Eirinn; and often, in careless speaking, every trace of the preposition is lost; as, Chaidh e Ghlasgho, where nothing appears to govern the aspirate form of the noun.

2. Air, in some phrases, aspirates its regimen; as, air ghoil, boiling; air bhoile, mad; air thalamh, on earth.

3. The euphonic particle an or am, is inserted between the preposition ann and a noun singular or plural, used indefinitely; as, Ann an tigh, in a house; ann am baile; ann an tighean; ann am bailtean. Before the article or a relative, ann is writ-

ten anns; as, anns an tigh; anns a' bhaile; anns na tighean; anns na bailtean;—An càs anns an robh iad, the danger in which they were; Cor anns nach 'eil e, A condition in which he is not. Bha brìgh anns na thubhairt e, There was substance in what he said.

Ann and a possessive pronoun, preceding a noun, are to be translated by the indefinite article; as, I ha e ann a sharo (contracted, 'm' sharor), he is a carepenter. Bha e 'na shaighdear. Bi'dh iad 'nän daoine foghainteach. When the pronoun precedes a noun signifying an object without life, the expressions often tantamount to a present participle in English; as, Tha i'na cadal, 2 She is sleeping, or asleep. Bha iad 'näm fallus, They were perspiring. Tha iad 'näm teann-uith, They are running at full speed.

4. Os,3 seach, and eadar, govern the nominatve; as, os ceann

In the house of bondage; am baile Bhóid, in Rothesay; am bail' eile, in another town. This ellipsis is always left unmarked; but as am, an may in this connexion be mistaken for the article, they should be written 'am, 'an, for the sake of distinction; as, am bail' eile, The other town; 'am bail' eile, IN another town.

1 Anns is frequently contracted 's; as, 'S an tigh; 's an floghar, in autumn; 's an dùthaich; 's an tìr, &c. In some instances 'he article is dropped altogether, and the first and last letters of the preposition remain; as, a's tigh, a's dorus,—for anns an tigh, &c. When this contraction takes place before a vowel, or f, t- is prefixed to the noun; as, a's t-carrach; a's t-floghar, for anns an earrach, &c.

Here mo, do, often become am ad; as, Bha thu ann ad shasmh, You were standing. Bl a mi ann am mharsanta treis, I veus a merchant for some time. The preposition is then often omitted; as, Bha mi am chadal; bha thu ad dhùsgadh. After a vowel, am and ad generally lose the  $\alpha$ ; as, Bha mi 'm chadal, bha thu 'd dhùsgadh.

<sup>3</sup> In the North Highlands, os governs the genitive; as, Os do chinn, above thee. In some places, os is pronounced fos; as, fos do chionn; cha ghabh mi fos làimh e, I will not undertake it. In this form it governs the dative: n-is inserted before it and an initial vowel; as, fos n-àird, fos n-ear, fos n-losal; or, os n-àird, &c.

an doruis, Above the door. Cha téid sinn seach an drochaid, We will not go beyond the bridge. Is laidir thusa seach Coinneach, You are strong in comparison with Kenneth. Eadar am bogha 's an t-sreang, Between the bow and the bow-string. When eadar signifies between, it requires the plain form; when it means both, it takes the aspirate: as, Eadar mise 's tusa bitheadh e; Between me and thee let it (the matter) be. Eadar bheag 'us mhór, Both great and small.

5. Gus and mar take the nominative of a noun definite; as, Gus a' bhàs, Unto death. Ràinig e gus an long, It reached to the ship. Mar a' ghealach, as the moon. Mar na réultan, as the stars. Mar do bhean, As or for thy wife.

6. Far, bharr, chum, and trìd, govern the genitive; as Far an rathaid, R. Mac D. p. 22. Bharr na cathrach, Off the chair. Trid Chriosta. Trid incorporates with the pronouns tusa and esan, making trìd-sa, through thee; trìd-san, through him. Trìomsa, through me, is rare.

7. A. gu, le, ri, are used before consonants; as. á Dùn, from

- Down; gu bàs, to death; le minidh, with an awl; ri briseadh, breaking: h- is often inserted between these and a vowel; as, d- birini; gu h-ealamh; le h-oillt. As, gus, leis, ris, are employed before the article, relatives, and possessive pronouns; as, As an doire, from the groce; am fear leis an leis e, the man to whom it belongs; sin rud ris nach aidich mi, that is a matter which I will not admit; gus do bhualadh, to strike thee.
- 8. It is usual to repeat the preposition before each noun; as, Gun athadh, gun nàire, without fear or shame. Ri cur 's ri cliathadh, sowing and harrowing.

IX. OF CONJUNCTIONS.

1. Agus, 'us, neo, no, air dheagh, ach, couple like cases of nouns and tenses of verbs;' as, Piob agus bratach, A bag-pipe and pennon. Gruth 'us uachdar, Curds and cream. Esan neo ise, He or she. Falbh, ach na fuirich, Go, but do not tarry. Gabh, air dheagh fàg e, Take, or leave it.

Sometimes they unite different forms of the noun and tenses of verbs; as \(\tilde{a}\) bhean agus Ceit, his wife and Catherine. Donull b\(\tilde{a}\) negus mo bhr\(\tilde{a}\) their. Dean suidhe, air neo gabhar ort, Sit down, or else you shall be whipped.

2. Cho or co in comparison takes ri after it; as, cho sean ris na cnuic, As old as the hills. Thuirt esan e, cho math ri Pàraic, He said it as well as Patrick. Sometimes agus, as, follows cho; as, Bi cho math agus an dorus fhosgladh, Be so good as to open the door.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF CIRCUMSTANCES.

1. Cause, manner, and instrument.

The cause, manner, and instrument take le before them; as, Chlisg mi le h-eagal, I started with fear. Dh' fhalbh e le sraonadh, He went off in dudgeon. Bhuail i le cloich e, She struch him with a stone. Tuitidh iad leis a' chlaidheamh, They shall fall by the sword. Tha iad iar corpachadh leis an acras, They are half dead with hunger. The cause sometimes takes ann; as, Shiubhail e' sa' bhric, He died of the small-pox; the manner, mar; as, Labhair e mar blurraidh, He spoke like a fool: or air; as, Rinn iad air seòl neònach e, They did it in a queer way. Dean a' cheist air dòigh eile, Solve the question another way.

2. Measure, weight, price.

The words denoting measure and weight are followed by air; as Mil' air fad, A mile in length. Slat air àirde, A yard in height. Phund air chudrom, A pound in weight. Ann is used after the verb bi; as, Tha clach ann, It is a stone weight. Tha leth-cheud phund 's a' mhult sin, That wedder is fifty pound weight. Bha sè ceud punnd 's a' mhart.

The word of price is preceded by air or air son; as, Gheibh thu air crùn e, You shall have it for a crown. Bheir mi dhut air gini e, I will give it you for a guinea. Gheibh i air sgillinn-shasonnaich deagh ribean, She can have a good ribbon for a shilling.

3. Time.

Time is variously construed. 1. Sometimes with a preposition; as, Air an là an diugh, This day. Air an t-seachdain so 'chaidh, Last week. 'S an latha, In the daytime; per day. 'S a' bhliathna, a-year, per annum. Air an ath ghealaich, next Ri h-uine, through time, in process of time, by and by. 2. Sometimes absolutely; as An diugh, to-day. Thig iad am maireach, They will come to-morrow. 3. Sometimes the word denoting time is governed by another preceded by a preposition; as, 'An ceann seachdain, mios, ràidhe, bliathna, &c. At the end of (i. e. in the course of) a week, &c. Mu thoiseach an carraich, About the beginning of spring. 4. Without a preposition; as, and an latha, all the day. Re na h-oiche, all night long. 5. The nouns latha, oïche, &c., when used in narration to express an indeterminate point of past time, take the preposition do after them; as, Latha do Phadraic 'na mhur (a day to Patrick in his house), i.e. One day as Patrick was in his house; or. On a day when Patrick, &c. Latha dhuinn air machair Alba, one day as we were on the plains of Scotland. So, Là a' siubhal sléibhe dhomh. Oïche dhomh's mi 'n iomall tîre. Bha latha dhà, there was a time; " once of his days."

7. Gead, seal, creal, speal, greal, feam, sceap, deas, geas, sealbh, neart, dealt, dearc, leann, gearr (a hare), &c sometimes make the q. s. in a.1

8. Seòd, sgeòd, fleòd, spreòd, leòn, ceòs, dreòs, leòr, are regular-like Seol, seoil. (p. 38, vii )-Deoch, f. makes dighe or dibhe. Geòb, leób, leŏg, fleŏg, &c. are indeclinable.

9. Leud, m. néul, sgéul, éun, féur, meur, léus, gléus, like Déur, (p. 38, vii.)-Beud, céud, déud, mèud, séud, méug, réul, béum, céum, féum, géum, léum, féun, péur, béus, &c .- téud, f. réum, stréup, spéur, &c. are indeclinable. 1 Géug, f. makes q. s. géige; bréug, bréige; léug, léige; tréun, m. tréin, &c.

10. Sliabh, m. liadh, bian, iasg, riasg, &c. like Fiadh, (p. 38, vii.) Stiall, f. makes the g. s. stéille; srian, sréine; grian, gréine; dias, déise; mias, mèise; criadh, créadha. Siab, m. miagh, ciall, gial, triall, fiamh, giamh, miann, rian, sian, trian, are indeclinable.2 Ciabh sometimes has céibh; biadh, bìdh, or béidh; fiach (debt), féich; pian, péin; blian, bléin; and cias, ceòis; sian has siain, and trian, triain,

(p. 199) Cloch, f. has g. s. cliche; crìoch, crìche; -clob, pìob, sgrìob, make cìoba, pìoba, sgrìoba; but these are better written cib. pib, sgrib (p. 6.) - Riof has the q. s. riofa; sion, sine, &c.

THIRD DECLENSION, p. 41.

12. Gab, goc, pic, bad, sad, brod, stad, ag, taibh, falbh, loch, m. luch, f. luach, righ, sal, col, sult, cron, seinn, f. srann, f. conn, rule seems to be, that, if they were inflected, both the ear and the eve might mistake them for other vocables altogether different in signification; as, Ceil, conceal; fil, a poet; gin, beget; one; leis, to a thigh, or with him; mise, I, me, &c.

When the final consonant of a noun does not admit of attenuation, it is very common in writing, though not in speaking, to add a short a to the nominative to form the genitive. Hence many of these indeclinables (in § 6, 7, 8, &c.) may fall

sannt, plannt, draund, sunnd, samh, stamh, ear, iar, cor, bàrc, fiars, tart, mort, surd, durd, eas, tosd, casg, treasg, at, prat, Sec.

13. What is the plural of Bas, blas, blas, sal, adh, samh, sannt, snath, gal, creamh, gart, falbh, tosd, tart, sult, neach, cron, cor, clann, sìol, féur. gorm, falt, pronn, ceòl, crodh, àile. àille, coirce, bainne, buntata, aran, tombaca, mill-cheo, fèarna, darach, mòine, flichne, ìota, bruichinn, béurla, beatha, Fraingis, Duitse, cuigse, toradh, solus, airgiod, mulad, siucar, Bran. Fionn, Arasaig, làr, sàs, gràn, féin, dream, fìon, òr, crodh?

Of what gender are they? v. p. 48, § 9.

14.1 Tell the gender of ad, ath, bas, brath, breug, bruach, eas, carr, clach, caor, corc, creach, cnuac, cnò, cràg, craobh, cual, creag, cuach, dealt, dearc, deoch, èarr, eang, eag, fras, fáth, fròg, fead, fearg, fréumh, gèarr, géug, glac, gaoth, gas, glas, gàg, iall, lach, luch, làmh, léug, loth, leac, leas, lorg, long, màg, maol, mealg, nèamh, neart, pàg, pòg, srad, screab, slat, srann, sgreamh, speach, sceap, steall, spag, spog, sron, sguab, sealg, speal, tearr ?

15.2 Geinn, bil, rìgh, taibh, pìnnt, ainm, tigh, stìm, bréid,

Aigne,3 cruinne, foid, glaine, leabhar, naidheachd, salm, tobar, talamh, tonn, ti (tea), teaghlach, fàsach, dàn, ciall, &c.

<sup>3</sup> These and a few other nouns are used as masculines in some districts, and as feminines in others. Glaine should be f. (p. 24); naidheachd, or nuaidheachd, should be f. (p. 26); leabhar and tobar mas. (p. 27)-Cruinne, talamh, tonn, are mas. in the nominative, but fem. in the genitive !+ In the greater part of the Highlands talamh is used as a masculine, and in Ireland as a feminine noun, throughout. (Neilson's Gram. p. 98.) This is consistent; for the gender of a noun when once fixed, ought surely to remain the same in every case.

16. What is the feminine of àrach, bobug, burraidh, cùirtear, bùirdeasach, fuineadair, gaisgeach, liosadair, marcus, nàrachan, omharlair, pàiste, rucaire, slaodaire, tamhasg, ùtlaiche, bìlistear?

NOTE ON GENDER. p. 52-54.

Dissyllables ending in a, e, abh, ac, ad, al, am, an, ar, as, us, ach, adh, art, asg, oll, onn, ull, are generally masculine. Dissyllables ending in achd, ead, id, ag, ap, inn, ig, il, ri, s, ich, are generally feminine. There are many exceptions, however. See the new edition of the "Gaelie Primer."—Obs. When the articulation of the final consonant is broad and harsh, the noun is commonly masc.; but when small and slender, the noun is commonly feminine. Perhaps no other language employs means so musical to distin_uish the gender of nouns.

IV. ON ADJECTIVE.

1. What is the nom. fem. of bras, claon, dona, fìor, gann, meata, pòsta, sàr, teann, fliuch;—àrd, eòlach, ìseal, òrdha, ùr? (v. p. 56, top.)

By shifting the gender of this word, our Bible translators have created the following unparalleled solecism. Gen. iii. 17, 19. "Ann and oilghios ithidh tu dheth. Am fallus do ghnùse ithidh tu aran, gus am pill thu dh' ionnsuidh na talmhainn oir aisde thugadh thu," &c.—Besides the absurdity of a casual gender, here there is also an improper reference of ro, in reflecting on the denunciation contained in the words quoted, the mind naturally recurs to the name of the leading term in the sentence, (the nominative), not to any accidental inflexion of it. This will be evident if the question be put, "Cia as a thugadh mi?" The answer must be, "As an talamh thugadh thu," and this determines that aisde should be as.

 Decline dubh, garbh, caoch, frasach, góbhlach, lònach, ruadh, àrd, lag, truagh, ìosal, uasal, cam, amh, làn, slàn, mòr, bradach, cutach, frangach, fionnar, fonnar, sultor, greannor, neartmhor:—ait, bìnn, ciùin, cosail, cianail, aimrid, glic, taisleisg.—(like Bàn, p. 56).

3. Seamh, leamh; like Deas; -mear, sean, like Breac; -ciar, fial, like Liath ;-(p. 57, vii.)

4. Còmhanta, dàna dorcha, gasta, solta, tana;—bruite, daite, paisgte, ruiste;—agail, beathail, spòrsail; eaguaidh, tapaidh, dìblidh, like Beò, &c. in the singular, (p. 57, viii.)

5. Compare marbh, sean, crìon, mion, fior, breagh, uasal, dubh, tapaidh, fadalach, gaisgeanta, glòirionn, blàth, moibeach, ciatach (p. 61, 62.)

Note.—Nouns sometimes take the intensive particle ro before them; as chan-eil an ro acras orm, I am not very hungry; Cha robh an ro chabhag ort, you were not in a very great hurry.

V. ON NUMBERS.

1. Write the Gaelic of—127; 251; 902; 3876; 9801; 11164; 100100; 9999; 7948016. The first book of Ossian's Temora. The iii. book of Fingal. The xix. Psalm, 7th verse. Genesis xi. 19. The xxxv. hymn. The 9th line of the 4th page. 90 sheep. 160 bulls. 67 hundred men. 100 twice-by far. Thrice as much. More than you suppose. Tell them out by twenties. Count them by threes. Hundreds of them fell. He is above 3 score. How many are there? 3 score, 16 thousand and 90.

VI. ON PRONOUNS.

Translate—I am here. Could you do it? She was not there. You told a lie. No, but you did. Have you hurr yoursel?? It was himself told me. I had it from his own lips. He is the very image of his father. I am the true vine, ye are the branches. Then he answered and said, "Whatever they do, do not you imitate them."

This is my hat, where is yours? This slate is mine. Is that your sister? Is she your sister? His house is larger than mine. Her gown is better made than Eliza's. Our cow has more milk than theirs. Your time is not more precious than ours. My little black pony. Thy very pretty new book. (v. p. 71, 72.) 2. (p. 72.) Correct—mo àirde, do iarrtas, do cislean, do uaireadair, mo fheusag, t-or, t-ughse, t-urnaigh, a'd' sheasamh, a'm' aisling, cuir ad' chiste e. Thoir 'am làmh e.

3. Translate-This man, these trees, that farm, those persons, you hill, youder he is, youder mountains, they are youder. This is the place. Here are the cattle. There it is. What is that? Who are they these? (v. p. 74.)

4. Which way shall I go? What do you want? What did he say? Which of them did it? Whether will she ride or walk? How many daughters has he? How many fish did he take? (v. p. 75.)

5. Which of the men do you want? Any one of them. Which daughter is he for? Any of them. Whoever said so is a liar. There was nobody¹ at home. I am for none. Any one of the girls. Some one of the boys. You can have what-ever you want. You must marry some woman. I will tell it to no person. He has something to tell me. They had nothing to say. Have you anything? No, I have nothing. Some person struck me. Has she any thing else? No, nothing whatever. Some say he is dead, others say not. Give her some of that, and keep the rest. Some of the men stood, others fled, the rest were killed. Give me a pin. I have none. Buy one of these hats, or one of the watches. I will buy neither of them. (p. 77, 78.)

6. Let each take one. Give the girls apples a-piece. Every one got his own share. They attacked each other. They are tearing one another to pieces. They went off together, and both died.

7. Correct-na h-uile fear; na chuile latha; na h-uile dhuine; na h-uile fir; ged do thréigeadh na h-uile dhaoine mi; ged do chailleadh t-athair na h-uile eich a th' aige. Cha n-eil na h-uile bhàird cho mhath r'à chéile. Tha na h-uile 'nam peacachaibh, agus buailteach do 'n bhàis;—uile an latha; uile am fùdar; thig crìoch air na h-uile nithibh; uile na th' agad;—their mi dhut m' uile. v. p. 77, note †

<sup>1</sup> We have no terms corresponding to nobody, none, &c. The negative form of the verb, in combination with an indefinite pronoun, converts its signification from affirmative to negative; thus, not any one, is no one, none; not any thing, is nothing, &c.

VII. ON VERBS.

1. Conjugate Blais, béum.—Caidil, creach.—Dòirt, dual,—Guil, gràchd.—Masg, maoidh.—Plùch, paisg.—Séid, seas-

-Tog, traisg. (v. p. 97-106.)

2. Alsig, aom. Eug, éisd. Iarr, innis. 'Ol, oïrpich. 'Up, ùraich. Eurr, airis.—Fan, fàg, fill, figh, freasdail, faigh, fliuch.— Lean, léum, lodair, luaisg, lém.— Nigh, nàraich, naisg. Ruag, ruith, ràn, reamhraich.— gàin, sgaoil, sgoch, screag, scor, smàl, smiùr, spoth, stad, streap.

NOTE .- DEFECTIVE VERBS.

3. (Obs. 1. p. 124.) Such as acain, amais, caochail, cinnich, cop, foghain, lùisir, saoil, sòr, tachair, triall, tonn, &c. These are sometimes used after the particle na; but clàist, còn, cumh, dùraig, éug, faod, suirdhe, tàr, teasd, &c., hardly admit of na.

- 4. Na deansa sin, ciod sam bith a ni càch. Diongamsa righ Innse-con. Cumaibhse suas an ceann eile. Dheanamaide rud nach deanadh sibhse. Gheibhinnse éisdeachd far nach faodadh tusa do bheul fhosgladh. Na'n tigeamaidne cha robh a' chùis mar sin. Cha bhithinnse fada ris. Ged chosdainnse mo chuid de 'n t-saoghal ris, bheir mì sgoil do m' mhac. Air an aobhar sin bithibhse coilionta mar a ta bhur n-Athair air nèamh.
- 5. Parse the following sentences. Leig leam. Siuthadaibh, a chlann. Thigeadh iad a's tigh. Nach e sin do chuid-sa? Chaidh a' ghealach fotha. Cha d' fhuair iad iasg.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Those parts of the verb which have personal terminations assume the pronominal increase sa, se, ne or e, to express emphasis. By means of these, the Gaelic indicates opposition or contrast with peculiar felicity; and every native speaker is so conversant with the nature and effect of the emphatic increase that he always applies it with the utmost ease and propriety.

An do thill air au làn? Nach d'òl iad tuillidh? Bios tu riusgadh ceòil dhut? Mur tig thu's tigh, cailleas tu'n spòrs. H-ugad! buaileas e thu. Am bris mi so, a dhuine? Ma dh' fhalbh e, slàn leis. Mur d'fhuair e fuasgladh, 's truagh' à chor. Mur do thill iad fathast, bi'dh iad anamoch. C' uin' a sguireas sibh de'n obair? Seall mar thilgeas mi so. Nach luath a ruitheas a' phiseag? Ged do thuit sinn éiridh sinn.

Ged do1 chaidh e ann, cha b' fheairrd e e. Ged1 dh'éirich iad air, cha do ghearain e.

<sup>1</sup> In the past indic. affir. of verbs beginning with a consonant do after ged is generally suppressed; as ged thuit mi, or geda thuit. Though I fell or did fall. Hence, " ged ghlaodh iad rium" is a past tense, and signifies, Though they called unto me. (Stewart, p. 144, 177.) -do is not used with the future indicative; hence the impropriety of "ged do gheibh." It ought to be "ged gheibh." So, ged their mi sin; though I (shall) say so ;-ged bheireas tu orm; ged chluinneas i sgéul, &c. Ged abair, ged bheir, ged chluinn, ged fhaic, ged fhaigh, &c., are not general expressions, and seem hardly grammatical. As the verbs which occur in them are irregular, no rule deduced from their application ought to interfere with the established construction of regular verbs after ged. - Ged (like mar and a) aspirates the consonant of the verb before which it is immediately placed; as, ged bhriseas tu e, ged ghlaodhas iad rium. To agree with this, verbs beginning with a vowel or f. also take dh (dh') between them and that conjunction; as, ged dh'òlas tu sin cha dean e dolaidh ort, Though you (shall) drink that, it will not injure thee .- So, ged dh' innseas mi ort, ged dh'éireadh dhomh falbh, ged dh'fhaodainn sin a ràdh, &c. Ged éirich dragh, 's ged bhagair bàs, is therefore not grammatical. What part of the verb is ged éirich? Bhagair is the past indic. affir.; the same tense ought to precede the conj. agus. But the past of éirich is dh'éirich; it should therefore be ged dh'éirich dragh, &c. ; but this would make the expression assertive. Though trouble did arise and death did threaten, whereas the meaning is, Though trouble should arise, and death should threaten,-to express which we must say, Ged dh cireadh dragh, 's ged bhagradh bàs, v. Luke xvi. 31. Prov. xi. 21; xxvii. 22. Job xiii. 15.

6. Saoil sibh an do thìll iad? Saoil 'na¹ smaoinich mi idir mar bhà. Guma fada beò thu, 'us ceò as do thigh! Guma slan a chi mi mo chailin dileas donn! 'Am measg nam ban gur sgàthan thu. An duirt iad gur mis' a bh' ann? Gu ma h anamoch dhoibh! Gum beil thu gu bòidheach, baindidh, banail. Gur gile2 mo leannan na'n eal' air an t- snàmh. Gu'n d' thug mi 'n ionnsaidh bhearraideach. Ma ta, gur truagh mi leat. Seall gu'n dean sibh cabhag, a nis. Feucham fein gu'm bi sibh tapaidh 's nach meataich am fuachd sibh. Feuch an tog thu so. Seall nach bris thu sin. An abradh tu sid mar thuirt is' e? Theirinn na b' fhearr e. Nach faodadh sibh dol a's tigh? Dh' fhaodadh. Cha n-fhaodamaid. Dh' fhaodamaid sin, p. 109, note. Thogainn fonn gun bhi trom air nion donn Thorr-a chaisteil. Dheanainn sùgradh ris an ni'n duibh. Dheanadh tu teadhair de 'n ròinneig. An sgrìobhadh tusa cho math sin? Ghabhainnse òran cho math rint. Chuireamaide suas le rud sam bith. Gheibheadh e e, na 'n gabhadh e e. Cha n-abrainn nach dean e'n t-uisge.

fhuair thu e. Na'n robh iad iar falbh an dé, bha iad dhachaigh roimhe so, p. 112.—Na'n d'fhalbh iad an dé, bhiodh iad aig an tigh roimhe so. Na'm falbhadh iad an de, bhiodh iad air än ais an nochd. Na'm falbhadh iad am màireach, bhiodh iad an earar 'an Irt. Na 'n tugadh tu dhomh an rud a bha mi 'g iarraidh chuir thu comain orm.¹ Ged shuidheamaid ré na h-öiche, cha bhiomaid réith. Ged nach tigeadh ach triùir, tòisichidh sinn. Na 'm faiceadh tu mar thigeadh i, 'S co math gu'm féghnadh sgian ann. Shaoil iad nach bithinn beò. Saoil sibh am faigheadh sibh so a dheanamh an diugh? <sup>1</sup> When a noun feminine is contracted in the genitive singular, as trompaid' for trompaide, laimh' for laimhe, &c. it is the practice of the Scripture writers to aspirate the adjective which accompanies such noun; as, A' smuaineachadh beairt' dhiomhanaich, Ps. i. l. metr. ver. An aimsir téinn' is trioblaid' mhoir, Ps. x. i. instead of beairte dìomhanaich, trioblaide moire. So, mar bhoisge fuaimneach droighinn fhaoin, Para. xiv. 5 .-I am not aware of any reason why the adjective should not agree with its noun in cases like those just instanced. Whatever reason there may be, however, there surely can be none for violating the concord when the noun is not contracted; yet the same authorities furnish us with examples; as, re uine bhig, Rev. xx, 3, "Ni m' anam uaill is gàirdeachas an Dia mo shlainte chaoimh," Para. xxxvi, 1. In connexion with nouns mas, the adjectives would have the same form which they have here with nouns fem.; as, ceann an leinibh bhig; Gu tigh än athar chaoimh. Para. liii. 7. and liv. 4 .- This makes the error quite palpable. To write ré uine bhig, is just as improper as it would be to write cul na laimhe chlith; uachdar mo choise dheis, searrach na laire dhuinn, &c. v. Ps. lxxvi. 10. Ixxvii, 5, 10. xxxvii, 10. cxxxix, 13.

&lt;sup>2</sup> This example was suggested by a passage in Acts. ix, 21. " Nach e so esan a bha sgrios ann an Ierusalem iadsan," &c. which is totally repugnant to the Gaelic idiom. A personal pronoun is never made the object after the infinitive preceded by ag; thus every child would laugh at "Tha e a' bualadh MI, THU, or IAD," &c. We must say, "thate 'g am bhualadh

The article is never prefixed to a noun when such noun governs another in the genitive, (except to a hyphened one, as an ceann-tighe), or when the latter is preceded by a possessive pronoun. As, therefore, it would be nonsense to say, "Air mullach an tighe mo sheanar Thormaid," so is it equally nonsensical to print the above passage as classical Gaelfe. It may be corrected thus: A'siubhal ann an céumaibh creideimh ar n-athar, Abraham; or, Ag imeachd ann an céumaibh a' chreidimh sin a bha aig ar n-athair, Abraham. v. Syntax of the Article, Note 2.

4 These expressions in Gen. xviii. 28, 31, 32, are altogether out of the Scottish idiom. The original Irish is better, where chiggar is not aspirated. "Air son eachhuidh chinjir" is not expressive of the sense intended to be conveyed.—The words literally signify, For the waxt (or poveriy) of fives. It should be,—An sgrios thu am baile air fad, chionn chignear a bhi dhth air an àireimh?—"Air son fhichead," means, for twenties; "air sgàth dheichnear," for the sake of tens; tor, fichead and deichnear are here in the gentitive plural.

(v. p. 189. § 2.) A noun indefinite preceded by any numeral between då and aon-deug is put in the gentitive plaral; but the initial aspiration of the noun is transferred to the numeral; as, Fad thri làithean, During three days; Fenr cheithir mart; 'An ceann chóig ràidhean; Réshia miosan; Lan sheachd bascaidean; Lòn dheich fesr. When the article accompanies the noun, the numeral loses the aspiration; as, Luach nan deich tastan; Feur nan ceithir mart; 'An ceann nan cóig ràidhean, &c.

' The Gaelic admits but of little variety in the transposition of sentences. The example above cannot be legitimately collecated otherwise than as exhibited. Where a sentence is formed by means of an auxiliary verb, however, we have a little more scope for variety;—thus we can say, "Chuir thu cul rim' theagasg," "you rejected my instruction;" and by inversion, "Rim' theagasg chuir thu cul," and "Thu cul rim' theagasg chuir,"—both ornate and poetical dispositions of the sentence;—and, finally, we may say;—"Thu rim' theagasg chuir cul,"—and—Cul rim' theagasg chuir thu."

VII. OF THE VERBAL NOUN, OR INFINITIVE, P. 189.

11. Chuir m' athair mi dh'iarraidh an òrd agus a' ghèimhleag. Tha mi sgùth de dh-òl meug agus blàthach. Tha an long a' togail na siùil. Bha iad a' tiolacadh Eachann Dubh an diugh. Co a tha 'g airis an sgéul? Cò tha 'gabhail òran? Cò a bha lìonadh am meadar? Bha sinn a' buain dearcan. An ann a' cur càl a thu thu? Tha na seilleanan a' deothal mil as gach lus. Cha triú tàmh air ach ag éughach nisge-beatha agus leann. Sann a' fua'gheal curraicean agus bannan agus pion-airean a bhiodh Mairi bhan bg. Tha cuideigin a' gleusadh fidhioll no clàrsach as tigh ud. The student who aims at being a respectable speaker and writer of this ancient language should acquire a thorough knowledge of this rule, violations of which are so frequent both in speaking and writing. This is especially the case when a clause or phrase intervenes between the infinitive and its regimen, as in the last example. As I am most anxious to aid the student to the utmost of my power, I think I cannot, on the present occasion, do him a greater service than to repeat the above examples in their correct grammatical form, that, by contemplating them under both aspects, the rule may be the more indelibly impressed upon his memory.-Chuir m' athair mi dh'iarraidh an ùird, agus na gèimhleige. Tha mi sgìth de dh-bl meig agus blàthach or blàicha. Tha an long a' togail nan seòl. Bha iad a' tìolacadh Eachainn Dhuibh (or, eugh. caus. Duibh,) an diugh. Có a tha'g airis an sgeòil? Co bha 'gabhail òrain? Có a bha lìonadh a' mheadair? Bha sinn a' buain dhearc. An ann a' cur càil a tha thu? Tha na seilleanan a' deothal meala as gach lus. Cha teid tàmh air ach ag éughach uisge-bheatha agus leanna, 'S ann a' fuaigheal churraicean agus bhann 'us phionnar a bhiodh Mairi bhan òg: Tha cuideigin a' gléusadh fàdhle no clàrsaiche as tigh ud. Bi'dh i 'reic [mar is trice, uair 'san t-seachduin,] ime ùir, chearc, siabuinn bhuig, anairt, siucair dhuibh, agus trealaiche bige mar sin. Feuch, tha mise 'cur fa'r comhair [air an là'n diugh] beannachaidh agus mallachaidh.

Ås a further exercise let us translate the following phrases into Gaelic, to be imitated by the studious learner, as they exemplify all the possible varieties of this branch of Syntax. I want a horse; Tha mi 'g iarraidh eich. I want horses; Tha mi 'g iarraidh each. I want the horse; Tha mi, &c. an eich. I want the horses; Tha mi, &c. nan each. Killing a deer; A'marbhadh féidh—the deer; an fhéidh. Killing deer; A 'marbhadh fhiadh.—the deer, (plur.)—nam fiadh. Going to cut a tree; Dol a ghearradh eraoibhe. G. to cut the tree; Dol a ghearradh na craoibh. G. to cut the tree; Do a ghearradh chraobh. G. to cut the trees; D. a ghearradh na craoibh. When the regimen of the infinitive happens to be another verbal noun preceded by a possessive pronoun,-then, the verbal noun in regimen suffers no inflection in fine; as, Tha iad ag iarraidh mo mharbhadh: (not mo mharbhaidh.1) A noun under the government of a verbal noun preceded by ag, is also left in the nominative, when an infinitive preceded by do or a follows such noun ; -as, Am beil sibh ag iarraidh "am fiodh"2 a losgadh? Am beil sibh a' togairt "na caoirich" a cheannach? An robh thu 'smuaineachadh " am boirionnach" a phòsadh? Here, the combinations "am-fiodh-a-losgadh," " na-caoirich-a-cheannach," " am - boirionnach-a-phòsadh," are a clumsy species of nouns, such as the scantiness of single terms to express the varieties of man's ideas, sometimes obliges every language to invent; as, " The new cloth-water-proofingestablishment,"—qualis-essei-natura-montis qui cognoscerent, misit.—Cæsar, B. G. lib. i. cap. xxi:—Ce qui s'opposa le plus à notre débarquement, fut la-grandeur-de-nos-vaisseaux. Id. lib. iv. cap. xxii. Traduc, par M. de Wailly, &c.

Supposing a butcher should say "Tha Rob ag iarraidh mo hnharbhaidh;" or a farmer, "tha Rob ag iarraidh mo bhualaidh;" the former would signify that Robert wished to have all the butcher's killing or slanghtering to do; and the latter, that Robert wished to have the doing of all the farmer's thrashing.

A great many compound nouns, consisting of an infinitive and its regimen, are constantly employed in the Gaelic; as. Bogadh-nan-gad, bualadh-nam-bas, garadh-chul-chas, treabhadh-an-fhuinn, fàsgadh-nan-dòrn, lionadh-na-mara, rùsgadhnan-caorach, cur-air-leth-nan-uan, &c. There is also a large class of compounds made up of a noun, article and noun; such as oran-an-t-samhraidh, clach-an-teinntein, beul-an-latha, Cas-a-mhogain, clag-a-chàil, bean-an-tighe, deoch-an-doruis, mullach-an-tighe, bonn-a-sia, &c. When such combinations as these come under the government of a verbal or other noun. it is, in speaking, a pretty general, if not the universal practice, to leave the leading part of the compound uninflected in fine. Thus we are accustomed to hear, "Ri linn bogadh-nan-gad, (not bogaidh); àm cur-an-t-sìl, (not cuir); a' seinn oran-ant-samhraidh, (not orain); piuthar bean-an-tighe, (not mnà); ag ol deoch-an-doruis, (not dibhe); nion Cas-a-mhogain, (not Coise), &c. In the same manner we would say, Tha e a' socrachadh clach-an-teinntein; seall e 'pogadh bean-na-bainse! Tha mi 'moladh bean-a-ghobhainn; Tha mi 'faicinn piutharan-t-sagairt, &c. This construction may be defended upon the ground that it is the whole compound, and not any single part of it that is affected by the governing word. The component parts of the compound, taken together,2 seem to be considered the same as if the name were only one word, and, hence, from its nature, indeclinable. It is not-(disunitedly)-

<sup>2</sup> This seems to be quite the fact, when the following combinations and syntax are considered. Tha mi coma air son bas-bhualadh-nam-ban, (not boise-bhualaidh.) Am beil thu 'faicinn tonn-luasgaidh.a' bhàta? (not tuinn-luasgaidh.) Lagh timchioll - ghearradh-nan-Iùdhach,—àm gart-ghlanadh au

Again, the construction is defensible on account of the smooth and easy flow it affords the language when the leading term (in compounds such as have been described), happens to be qualified by one or more adjectives; as, "Tha mi faicinn pinthar bhèidheach òg an t-sagairt;" instead of "Tha mi faicinn peathar bòidhech òige an t-sagairt;" and, in the plural, "Tha mi faicinn pheathraichean bòidheach òga an t-sagairt," both of which appear extremely stiff and formal, but which our grammatical rule will inevitably compel us to adopt, if we lay aside the exceptive clause of it.

Let it not be supposed, however, that what has been advanced is meant as any thing more than an attempt at discovering the reason why the speakers of the Gaelic so generally employ this peculiar construction. I entertain no sanguine hope that I have been completely successful; but what I have laid down may perhaps induce some mind of wider capacity to investigate the matter more projoundly."

The substance of the note regarding the above anomaly, given in the former edition, is now inserted here, because of its close relation to the subject above discussed.

1. When one appellative governs another in the genitive plain, the governed noun is used intefinitely; as cas gaothair, a hound's leg; cròs féidh, a deer's antler; cid tuim, the back of a knoll; mac Dònuill, a Donald's son; mac dé, the son of a god; àcc. So also, when either of the nouns, or both, are compounded of two terms, united by a hyphen; as druim circe-fraoich, the back of a heath-hen; sùil fionnain-fheoir, the eye of a grasshopper; dorus-cùil tighe, the back door of a house; bart-ùrlair seòmair, the carpet of a room.

2. But when an appellative governs a proper name in the genitive aspirate; we shall find that the common noun,—in

I apprehend that few, if any, Gaelic scholars ever studied this subject to its full extent. I freely communicate the result of my researches. I shall be glad to be corrected by any scholar who can prove them wrong.

that connection, -is not, as in the above examples, employed indefinitely, but definitely; as Gàradh Chàradail, the garden of Carradale; sliabh Chuil-fhodair, the moor of Culloden; mac Dhonuill, the son of Donald; Mac Dhia or Dhé, the son of God. This is also the case when the governed noun is preceded by the article, or by a possessive pronoun; as bean an tighe, the woman of the house, (the mistress); mac mo pheathar, the son of my sister; fear na Comaraich, the proprietor of Applecross.

When another noun governs a noun circumstanced as above, I believe the practice of the speakers of Gaelic, is not, in all instances, uniform, in viva vace expressing the relation between such nouns. Some say "nighean yiuthar m'athar;" others, "nighean peathar m'athar." So we hear Corran Airde-goibhre, rugha Chuile-ceana; fear Shroin-a'chridheagain; and also Corran Aird-ghobhar, rugha Chuil-cheana; fear Shroine-cridheagain. Now, both of these modes of construction must be right, or one of them wrong. The expression "Airde-goibhre," is wrong, because the nominative of the word is Aird-chobhar; and the last term, which is in the gen. plur. cannot, without totally spurning the analogy of grammar, he turned into the genitive singular, in any of the cases of the word. We might as properly say, "bus coin caorach." If we say rugha Cuile-ceana, it is equally proper to say, "Latha Cuile-fodair;" if the latter is wrong, we must say, "rugha Chuil-cheana."—In all cases where a noun is the final term of a compound proper name, - it suffers no inflection,* as traigh Charraig-fhearghuis; caisteal Dhun-éidin, bean Fhasadh-bradaig, tigh Ghlas-choirein, mullach Mham-chluainidh, &c. But when the final term of a compound is an adjective, then the adjective changes with all the changes of the noun; as an Eaglais bhreac, blar na h-Eaglaise brice, chaidh e do'n Eaglais bhric, &c. No doubt it is in imitation of this that Corran Airde-goibhre, fear Airde-seile, and rugha Cuile-ceana, &c. became modes of expression in the mouths of persons who learned grammar merely by the lug, without ever at all dreaming of the philosophy of the thing. But the ear, though a good assistant to, is a bad teacher of, the science, as the errors already pointed at fully demonstrate.

other in succession, it is obvious from the expressions "im chasa gaothair," "garadh chul chas," and "ola chasa caorach," &c., that in so far as two were concerned, their government was managed, sometimes at least, just as in the Greek and Latin. It is when three or more affect each other in their turn, that the main difficulty lies; as lorg sinteige coise gaothair; meadhain droma circe-fraoich: fradharc sùla fionnain fheòir: glas doruis-chùil tighe; glas doruis-chùil tighe peathar m'athar; prìs brait-urlair dheirg 'us uaine choirneil mhòir Dhruima'choire-bhuidhe, &c. In the construction of such combinations of words as these, we have only a well known principle of universal grammar to guide us now .-- as, for want of ancient writings, and of patronage, those who would, CANNOT investigate this, and many other curious matters to a certain conclusion. It is plain, however, that the " modern Gael" were very much averse to (or from) this voltage battery of genitives; seeing that they had several other neat and eloquent modes of expressing themselves, in cases where the construction under review happened to bother them; as, instead of craobhan ùbhlan gàraidh Chàradail-" na craobhan ùbhlan a 'tha 'n gàradh Chàradail;"-bràighe sléibhe Chuil-fhodair',-"braighe Chuil-fhodair; - piuthar mnatha mic Dhonuill, - "piuthar na mna aig mac Dhonuill;"-dòruinn fulangais mic Dhéan dòruinn a dh'fhuiling Mac Dhé;"-piuthar mna an tighe,-" pinthar bean-ar-tighe;"-ogha nighinne mic mo pheathar,-" ogha do nighinn mic mo pheathar;"- Baile seanar mnà fir na Comaraich,-" am baile bh'aig seanair na mnà th'aig fear na Comaraich. As the Gaelic stands now, those who write the language should attend to this, and not allow themselves to be carried away, as we often observe they are, by translating foreign constructions, and thus marring and destroying the language (as friends) sooner than her enemies could possibly do so, maugre all their political machinations.

Correct,—Siubhal na glaise meòir; faich Airde-gàsraig; Deòrsa-Cuile-pàil; mac bhrathar m'athar; a dh'aindeoin fir Shasonn; tha an saor ag càradh cathrach cuilce peathar mna an tighe òsda. (p. 191. 11.)

'S a' gheamhradh bi gu curraiceach, gu brògach, gu brochanach.—Cha ith mi tuillidh. Cha Gudar dhomh falbh. Cha airidh air duais thu. Cha faod thu focal do ràdh. Ni bean mì dbut. Ni faigh e i. Ni mair so faoa. Ni d'òl mì deur. Ni gabh mì dad uat. Ni robh mì aun. Ni eili beò. Ni bì sian air thu.

IX. OF PREPOSITIONS.

Na spion ite á cearc. Sin am fear aig Mor bhàn. Loisg e air tunnag fhiachaich. Fuaigh sin le iall. Bla sinu amach ri gaoth us uisge. Cuir am bóla fo d' sgiath. A bheil thu air aon bhròg? Tha 'us air aon chas. Is nòs sin a chaidh á thaoibh. Thoir so do 'n mhuc. Thug thu sin o'n nighean. Còrd ris a' bhantrach. Thuirt i riam e as an aoduinn—An d' thug sìbh an aire don ghruagach dhonn? Lo sg thu air a mhaigheach. Bha iad ag obair san iolann. Croch so air a chraobh sin thall. Thoir dram do na bàird agus na picbairibh. Bha mi giarraich air Mòr tòiseachadh air an oibir. Co ris a their thu na tha san roiràdh sin?—their dón léughadear. Tog de 'bhi sìneadh air na caoraibh 's air na damhaibh mar sin.—An lathair Dé. Am fianuis mo shùilean. Air feadh an laoi. Am neasg an t-saiunn agus a' mhin. Air muin an teach glas. Os ceann an tigh. A dol thar uilld-an-tiùcair, seach na dìrchaide, gu ruig na h-eaglaise. Thar bhlàr is chàthar 'us bheann. Le biadh is deoch. Gun dùth no deireas.

"Is neoni mi gun seirc is gràdh." Duine gun mhart, no caora, no gobhar. Cuir a' bhròg air Cas dheas do pheathar.

X. OF CONJUNCTIONS.

Tigh agus ghàradh. Fear no mnaoi. Cha tusa ach Pheigi. Fuirich air dheagh falbhadh. Màiri agus ä bràthair.—Cho mòr agus creag. Bi cho math ris an tigh iùl domh. Ma buaillas e thu, teich So mar cuireas sibh e. Mur àbhaist dhut a dheanamh coma leat e. Seall am do shil e. Saoil an mair e fada? Ged bhuail thu mi cha dean mi gearan. Bitheadh nara robh.

When a preposition governs a noun fem. which, itself governs another noun in the genitive,—the government of the preposition is often disregarded in speaking, as an sgùmain, vid. Ruth iv. 9.

Sìn amach do spògan, Sìn amach do spògan buidhe Cuide ri cas Seonaid."

So, Iarr air bean an tighe tigh'n an so. Thoir siol do chearc

3 This is an attempt at introducing another foreign construction into the Gaelic. It must be the attempt of some learned corrector of the press, one might think; for the translators of <sup>1</sup> It is always better to repeat the preposition before each noun to preserve the construction; and this is usually done in speaking, as duine gun athadh gun nàire; cha n-eil mi air nihisg no air mhearaichinn. What it is that governs bh in the following verse is incomprehensible; "Agus chaochail iad glòir an Dé neo-thruaillidh gu dealbh a rinneadh, agus ri eunlaith, agus ainmhidhibh ceithir-chosach agus bhéisdibh snàigeach."-Rom. i. 23. Edin. 1826.

O! gràdhaichibh Dia a naoimh air fad. Is an-aoibhinn dhuibh, a chinn-iùil challa! Matth. xxiii. 16. Na deanaibh mar so, mo mhic!1 1 Samuel ii. 24, vide Isa, xlix, 13. An ceann deich agus tri fichead bliadhna, Isa. xxiii., summary. Suil air son sula, fiacail air son fiacla Is iad daoine ludah luibh a mhòir2-thlachd. Tha mi 'g iarraidh aoin achtiinge bige ort. O! dhaoine tartmhor thigibh chum sruth pailt nan uisge bed, Para, xxvi. 1.

Air inneal-ciuil nan teuda deich. This position of the numeral is a bold poetic license, unexampled, perhaps, in the lan-the Scriptures never put a noun in the dative, when such noun follows in apposition with one previously under the government of a preposition. Vide Genes. xii. 11. Ri Sarai, a thean, 2d Samuel vi. 23 Aig Michal, nighean Shauil. V. also chap. viii. 8. Edin. 1826.

1 The translators of the Bible very frequently forgot the rules which they had resolved to follow in their version. Here we have the vocative plur, of mac made mhic, (which is also the voc. singular) and in Jeremiah vi. 1. we have the form mhaca as the vocative plural! They seem to have been much puzzled with the word talamh in every respect. This extraordinary vocable has a nom. masculine with them, and a genitive singular feminine! It has also two vocatives singular, viz. O! thalamh, Jerem. vi. 18.; and, a thalaimh, Ps. cxiv. 7! Neither of these is the right form. Talamh is a noun mas. (Ps. lxvii. 6; and Ps. xcvii. 4, metr. version,) its genitive is talmhainn or talmhann, (and sometimes talmhanta) and the vocative sing. of nouns masc, is like the gen, even when irregular (except such as suffer contraction) as from cù, coin, a choin; mac, mic, a mhic; so the voc. of talamh should be, a thalmbainn.

2 When an adjective precedes its noun, the termination of the adjective remains fixed; as og-bhean, gaol na h-òg-mhna, aig an èg-mhuaoi, &c.; a mhoir-thlachd is, therefore, wrong; -but, probably, the form mhoir, used here, was adopted to mark the genitive of tlachd; which, being an indeclinable noun, its own form could not indicate; and probably, also, the word digear, or dig-fhear might occur to the writer as a model to imitate. But to imitate a bad model is not to write correct grammar. Oigear is a child of Caol ri Caol-moir-thlachd can claim no kindred with him.

guage. The ear is now so familiarized with the melody of the line, that—"Air inneal ceòlmhor nan deich teud," would, perhaps, offend it.

Though an adjective, when a word of more than one syllable, is always placed ofter its noun, yet Ossian occasionally inserts it before; as, caoin chonaigh nam bàn-bhroilleach òigh, Temora, vii. 322. Galnadona, 90. Cuchuillin nan gorm-bhallach sgiath, Fingal, i. 335.

Air bualadh dha an dorus dh'fhosglar dha.—The word governed by the infinitive after iar should be placed immediately before or after it; as, Iar dha an dorus a bhualadh, or, Iar bualadh an doruis dha. The following line is, therefore, not properly arranged.—"'S air toirt da buidheachais do Dhia."

Hymn xxxv. 2.

Fuaraichidh gràdh mhòran, Matth. xxiv. 12. The word mòran is a collective noun mas., and signifies a great quantity or number; as moran sluaigh, a multitude of people; moran éisg, a great many fish; mòran feòir, a great quantity of grass or hay, &c. In Gaelic, morain, and mhoran are as improperly employed in the plural, as muches, manies, great deals. would be in English. The using of moran in the plural adds nothing to its force or signification; and probably it was never employed in that number till the Scriptures were clothed in a Gaelic garb .- This uncommon use of words mars the propriety of the established phraseology. It introduces a new sort of language, which people must acquire before it can convey information to their minds. It is not leaving the matter so plain as-" that he who runs may read." Yet, in the Scriptures, we find many similar new applications of words, and changes on vocables with which we are totally unacquainted in our colloquial speech .- The word eunlaidh is a collective noun singular, like digridh, macraidh, eachraidh, &c. and it is so used in Genes. xl. 17, 19, &c. In the New Testament, however, this same word assumes a plural, Matth. xiii. 4, na h-èunlaith. though its signification is here precisely what it was in the place quoted of the Old Testament. In 1 Corinth. it again assumes a most extraordinary appearance, Chap. xv. 39, èunlaithibh! No person could ever dream of such syntactical monstrosity, save one who had forgotten his mother tongue and its propriety, and luxuriated in the contemplation of the detailed beauties of the Roman 3d and 4th declension! Who ever heard of na h-digridh, the youths? aig na h-digridhibh? &c. ; yet aig eunlaithibh is exactly as unidiomatic as aig na h-digridhibh would be. The quantity of matter of this sort in the Lible is beyond what many are aware of. The word madraidh is another collective noun signifying the genus Ca-In Matt. vii. 6, however, we seem to have the word as the dat. plur. of madadh, a dog, instead of madaibh, for we never call one dog madraidh; - madraibh is like euplaithibh. Toradh, again, is a general term for fruit, return or produce of every sort from the earth, save that of trees and shrubs, which is distinguished by the word meas. This word toradh is never used in the plural save in the Bible. But an unlearned person reading toraibh, might perhaps mistake the word for toraibb, the d. p. of tora, an auger, or torraibh, the d. p. of torr, a mound, like the honest woman, who, hearing the parable of the prodigal son read, and mistaking the placisa therein mentioned for the " shells of eggs," exclaimed, that she " wondered where they could get so many hens as could supply provision to a treud mhuc!" I asg is a Gaelic word, signifying "fish," in general. Generic terms never assume the plural in Gaelic. Specific ones do, as dà bhradan, two salmon, dà adaig, two haddocks, ceithir sgadain, four herrings, &c. A solecism similar to that we have been exemplifying, occurs also in the Scriptures; as regards this word, and the general term aran, Matth. xiv. summary; cuig aranaibh, agus uà iasg, &c. v. 17. The terms arain and lasg do not here mean what is intended, but five serts of bread, and two kinds of fish .- Many other improprieties and inconsistencies of this kind occur in the Sacred volume, besides errors of the Press, of enormous disgrace to the Church. But as we understand there is a new and correct edition a-preparing, under the auspices and practised eyes of some of our namliest Doctors, it is to be hoped that their lucubrations will be instrumental in completely purifying the text and the language in the course of their labours of love; and whether they adopt the corrections hinted at above or not, the public are very welcome to them in the mean time.

(1.) A simple preposition, written anns before the article and relatives, (b. 155, and 194, n. 3)—(2.) The definite article mass written an before c, d, &c. (p. 49, n. 1.)—(2.) A noun mass sing dative, governed by anns, (p. 153); formed from the noun mas, tos, tols, a beginning, front, van, by postfixing -ach to the gen, sing. (p. 168.)—(4.) A verb active, 3 persing, past. Indicative affirm. (p. 98, *), having Dia for its nominative; formed from cruth, m. a shape, form, or figure, by adding -ich, (p. 172.)—(5.) A proper noun mas, sing, of the 2d declension. (p. 39,)its plural is diathan; but in Irish and in our version of the S. 8. dee; it is non, to the verb chruthaich, and placed immediately after it, (p. 183, R. ii.)—(6.) The definite article plural agreeing with its noun nearthan, in gender, number, and case, (Syntax, R. i.)—(7.) A noun femplur, object of the verb chruthaich, placed next after the subject, (p. 189, R. ii.)—(8.) A conjunction connecting the object 7 with 10.—(9.) The same with 2.—(10.) A noun mas, sing, object of the verb 4.

&quot;Every language has its own peculiar idiom. In translating "in principio," "i v å272", or "au commencement," a High-lander would say, "An tus," an tos," or "an toireach," vida 1 John i. 1, and iii. 8, 11. A literal translation of TUUNTI here is as in proper as "do'n tis" would be of "an ocommencement." If there is an elipsis of the word time in the sentence, (which seems to be the case.) anns is then inadmissible, because the article is rever used before a noun that governs another in the genitive, (Syntax, R. i. note 2d.) "Anns an toiseach," means "In the bow of a ship or vessel; as "Anns an deireadh" does in the stern.—" Anns an toiseach na bliadhna," is as good Gaelic as "anns an toiseach hine," or "anns an deireadh au t-saoghail."

(2.) Fhuilear, a noun mas, sing, aspirate form, governed by cha (p. 193, n. 1.)-(3.) A prepositional pronoun, made up of do, to, and tu thou, -combined dotu, and contracted dut :pronounced by some duit, and written so accordingly, in despite of the analogy of composition .- (1, 2, 3,) Second pers. sing. respons. negative, pres. indic. of the composite verb "Is" fhuilear dhomh, dhut, dha, dhi, dhuinn, dhuibh, dhoibh, (p. 132), chiefly used in the negative forms, -nach fuilear? cha nfhuilear, cha b' fhuilear, &c .- [In our dictionaries (such as they are) fuilear or uilear, is marked as being an adjective. It uppears plainly, however, to be a noun; as, cha d' fhuair thu d' fhuilear, you did not get your desert, or what you required. Tha m' fhuilear agam, I have what I require, quod mihi sufficit, enough, a sufficiency. Mo thruaighe! be sin am fuilear bochd, Wae's me, it's a puir aneuch that. Cha n-fhuilear is used to express necessity need, &c like must and require in English ; as cha n-fhuilear dhut deich puinnd Shasonnach, you will require £10 Stg.; cha n-fhuilear dhut éirigh moch, you must rise early. From fuilear, perhaps, is derived the French verb falloir, faillir, and consequently the English fail, and failure. Fuilear itself is, perhaps, the verb fuil, (an old form of beil, bheil; in Irish an bhfuil? a bhfuil, ni bhfuil, &c.) and the noun ledir or ledr, enough, abundance, joined into one term, fuilleor. The composition of the term being by degrees overlooked or forgotten, it came, in process of time, to be considered and treated as a mere noun. ]-(4.)-A numeral adjective, restricting 5 .- (5.) A noun fem. plur.; first declension; singular slat, gen. slaite, dat. slait. (p. 36, ii.); plur. slatan, and sometimes slata, object of the infinitive a ghabhail, understood. (6.) A simple preposition, usually, but erroneously, written do. even by D.D.'s-do 'n anart, to the linen; de 'n anart, of or off the linen, (v. p. 157, n. 6 .- (7.) The definite art., an; a being sunk after de .- (8.) A noun sing. mas. 1st declen., gen, anairt, (like Dan, p. 36,) in the dative, governed by de, (p. 193.)-(9.) A demonstrative pronoun indeclinable. (p. 74.) (10.) gu, a simple preposition having no government, being here used adverbially before the infinitive a dheanamh, understood.—(11.) a noun sing. fem. 2d declension, (p. 39, plur. léintean (p. 47, n. 6), in the accusative case, as the object of a dheanamh, (p. 191, n. 11.)

(1.) 'S the 3d pers. sing. pres. indicative affirm. of the defective verb Is, (p. 127) denoting existence, much like the Hebrew word W', (v. Parkhurst in loco.)-(2.) Ioma, written also iomadh and iomad, and pronounced ima and iuma, &c., an adjective indeclinable, always prefixed to its noun, (like gach, p. 77); as, ioma fear, many a man, 's ioma bliadhna o sin; many is the year since that, that is many a year ago: ioma refuses a plural noun (like gach and uile): it points to an aggregate number of the persons or things represented by its noun; as " Is ioma fear tha 'n geall ort, many a person (many a man) has a regard for thee. A noun mas. sing., 1st declen.; gen. cuir, (p. 37, iv.), a turn, twist, trick, coil, event .- (4.) A relative pronoun sing. indeclinable, (p. 72.)—(5.) dh' the aspirate form of the verbal particle do, used in this state before verbs beginning with a vowel or f pure, in the past indic. affir., as dh' fhaod mi; in the future hypothetical, ged dh' fhaodas mi; and after the relative a, as here, a dh' fhaodas, (p. 102, 103.) -(5, 6.) dh' fhaodas, 3d pers. sing. future indic. act. of the auxiliary verb faod, (p. 125.)-a dh' fhaodas, like ma dh' fhaodas; here modifying tigh'n (which may to come, which may come on mankind, which may befall men.)-(7.) A simple preposition, on, upon, ever, about .- (9.) The definite article mas. plur., agreeing with its noun fearaibh .-(10.) A noun mas, plur, dat.; governed by the preposition air. (p. 193.)*-(11.) Theag', contraction for theagamh, asp. form of the mas. noun teagamh, doubt, suspicion, chance, infinitive of the obsolete verb teag, to meet, happen, (p. 109, n. 5); in Irish teagmham; forms its infinitive like dean, caith, &c. (p. 143, n. 5); governed in the aspirate form by the preposition air, understood; air theagamh, on chance, perhaps, an adverbial phrase; so air thuiteamas, by accident, accidentally; air choir, on right, a-right, rightly, &c .- (12.) Gu, a conjunction, that, modifying the verb gabh; it is used in some districts without the 'n, as " theag gu gabh, gu bì, &c.; in others taking 'n or 'm after it for sound's sake, as gu'n gabh, gu 'm bì, &c .- (12, 13.) The 3d person plur. fut. subjunctive active of the verb, gabh, take; united here with the noun gaol, love, to form the active verb to love, - " gabh gaol air," take love for, i. e. " fall in love with, i. e. love, (p. 139); the antecedent verb is understood, Tha e air theagamh gu'n gabh iad gaol, &c .- (14.) A personal pronoun, simple form, 3d pers. plur. mas.; nom. to the verb gabh, placed after it, and representing fir or feara .- (15.) A noun mas, sing., 1st declen ; gen. sing. gaoil, object of the verb gabh, placed after the nom. (p. 189, R. ii.) - (16.) A simple preposition. - (17.) The definite art. sing. fem., dative case, written an before d, f, l, &c. (p. 49), but a' before b, c, g, &c.—(18.) A noun sing, fem, a female * In the spoken language the nom. plur. is commonly employed after simple prepositions; as, aig na daoine, fo na getaplayed, leis na ràimh, ris na mnathan, air na fir, do na bàird, fo na h-eich, air än cinn, &c. In verse our best writers use either the nom. or the dat. in ibh as is most convenient. This is sufficiently established by the following authorities: Ossian, "na do raoin," p. 43; 'nä airm, p. 45; v. also pp. 40, 50, 53, 54, 56, 84, 91, 99, 100, &c. Smith's Psalms, new version, "r'a nàimh," p. 3; "le m' dheòir, "p. 7; also pp. 12, 13, 17, 36, 29, 54, &c. VII. SPECIMEN OF PARSING IN GAELIC.

1 2 3 4 5
"Tha biodag air Mac Thómais,
6 7 8 9 10 11 12

lowed by a possessive pronoun of the gender and number of the subject, comes before the predicate; as, Tha Dònull ann ā mhaor, (contracted 'nā mhaor), Tha Màiri 'nā banaraich, Bha na daoine 'nān saighdearaibh, Bha sinn 'nar cadal, &c. So, tha mi a'm' umha an in fuaim, no a'm' chiombal, &c. 1 Corin. xiii. 1, 2, 11, and xii. 29; Cha n-eil e ach 'nā thruaghan, &c. When ann comes immediately after the verb, it excludes the possessive pronoun; as, Cha n-eil ann an Iain ach duine bochd; or, by inversion, cha n-eil ann an Iain ach duine bochd; or, by inversion, cha n-eil ann an Iain ach duine bochd; or, by inversion; cha n-eil ann it is combined with ann; as, cha n-eil innte ach dinseach, cha n-eil annaibh ach droch dhaoine, &c. This construction is disregarded in 1 Cor. xv. 10. Tha mi duine is no Gaelic;—tha mi an duine is none either;—"tha mi an nì a ta mi," is a barbarism, and has no sense whatever. It should have been, Is mi an ni a's mi, or tha mi mar a tà mi, or anns a' chor' 's a bheil mi. This solecism occurs again in Galat, ii. 6, and in 1 John iii. 2. The proper idiom is observed in 2 Cor. xii. 11. From this syntax we see the impropriety of nì before the comparative, as Tha thu ni's (i. e. ann ad ni a's) miosa na esan, v. p. 63.

• When an adjective, accompanying a noun in an oblique case, is preceded by an intensive particle or adverb, the adjective is not, in speaking, made to agree in case with the noun. We do not say Duirich e ri beinn ro chais; Phòs Mòr 'na caileig fior òig. Shuidh sinn air mullach beinne glé àirde, Modh Dearcnach, an Seòl Aidmheach,—an Tra thà.—(2.) Biodag, Ainm aonarra, boireanta, de'n cheud Charachadh, 's a' Char Ainmeach.—(3.) Air, Roilide.—(4.) Mac, Ainm aonar, fearanta; anns a' char Lideach; fo cheannas air.—(5.) Thómais, Ainm aonar, fearanta, 's a' char Bhuinteach Chaigeneach, a' nochdadh gu'm buin 'mac'' do Thómas.—(6.) 'S, gearradh air son agus —(7.) Gur, Roilide gnìomhain.—(9.) Gu, Roilide gnìomhain in a' cleachdadh mar fhòir gnìomhain.—(9.) Gu, Roilide gnìomhain; 'm litir bhìnneanta a's gnàth a chur air thoiseach air b. f. m. p.—(10.) Fóghnadh, an 3°. neach aonarra de'n ghnìomhain; 'm litir bhìnneanta a's gnàth a chur air thoiseach air b. f. m. p.—(10.) Fóghnadh, an 3°. neach aonarra de'n ghnìomhain foghain,—am Modh Murrach,—an Seòl Aidmheach,—an Tra bhà.—(11.) Syian, Ainm boireanta, 's a' Char Ainmeach aonarra.—(12.) Da, Gearradh air son do è.

On Bi and Is.1

There is a nice distinction in the application of these two verbs which the English cannot always express. Attention to the following examples will make it familiar to the learner.

Is and a bheinn sin,

Tis a high hill that.

Is dubh do shuilean,
Black are your eyes.
Is ioma rud tha 'n sin,
Many a thing is there.

Tha a' bheinn sin àrd,
That hill is high.
Tha do shùilean dubh,
Your eyes are black.
Tha ioma rud 'an sin,
There are many things there.

Chuir sinn an cath air lom faiche anabarrach farsainge; but ri beinn [a bha] ro chas—caileig ['usi] fìr òg—beinne [a bha] glé àrd, &c .- Vide Matth. ii. 16.

The Spanish verbs Ser and Estar are employed in that language much the same as Is and Bi in Gaelic. "I saffirms simply of its object, although that object be expressed by two or more words; as, Is mi Dònull, Is mòr na daoin' iad. Bi has a twofold object, and shows the subject and predicate distinctly from each other; as, Tha Dònull aig an dorus, Bha na mnathan a' buain." (Dr. Neilson, p. 126.) The predicate is placed immediately after Is, and unites with it in forming the assertion; as, Is-fuar an latha so, This is a cold day. The subject is placed next after Bi, and the attribute follows the subject; as, Tha an latha so fuar, This day is cold.

Is doill na daoine sin,
These are blind men.
Is Frangach an duine sin,
Is rud neonach sin.
'Is faide so na sin.
'Is feairrde breug gobhal.
Bu tric 'an cron iad,
'Offen were they in skaith.
'Is o'r so, 's cha phràis,
Is tu Tearlach.
Is Tearlach thu.

Tha na daoine sin 'nän doill, These men are blind. That is a Frenchman. Tha sin 'nä rud neònach, <sup>1</sup>Tha so nas faide na sin.

Bha iad tric 'an cron,
They were often in skaith.
This is gold, not brass.
Thou art Charles.
Thou art a Charles.

On Shall and Will.

Eadar-theangaich—Ciod ris an coimeas mi 'n saoghal so? An dean sinn math no cron doibh? An toir mi dhuit tuille dhe so? An cuir sinn a mach am bàta? An leig sinn ma sgaoil

¹ Sometimes the expression with either verb approaches so near in meaning as to be incapable of two different versions.

When the 2d compar. follows Is, the expression cannot be varied with tha.

The position of the verb here gives the English somewhat of the Gaelic turn. So, Dear did he pay for it, Bu daor a dhiùbhail e air; Cold now is his heart in the tomb, Is fuar an diugh's an tuam ä chrìdh; and so generally when the nominative is transposed in English.

&lt;sup>4</sup> Bi cannot be used as the representative of Is in instances like these. We cannot say, Tha so or, Tha thu Tearlach, &c. see above, p. 239. Two pronouns sometimes follow Is in expressions like these; as, 'S e d' athair e, 'S i bhainis i, 'S iad na daoin' iad, &c. But fein excludes the latter pronoun; as b'e'n gill' e,—but, b'e fein an gille. v. Genes. iii. 20, and supply i.

Bheir thu Iosa mar ainm air. Beiridh òigh mac. Saoraidh e ä shluagh o äm peacadh. Cha n-ann air aran a-mhàin a thig duine beò. Na dean goid. Gràdhaichidh tu do choimhearsnach mar thu féin. Cha bhruich thu meann ann am bainne à mhàthar.

Bheir mi dhut deagh thuarasdal ma ghabhas tu agam. Bheir sinn dhuibh gach nì a gheall sinn, ma sheasas sibh dìleas. Ma ni thu m' iarrtas, samhlaichidh mi ri duine glic thu. Ma's miann leat mo leigheas is urrainn thu. Pàidhidh mi 'm màireach sibh.

Cuir ceart—Will¹ I put out the cows? Will we get fish horse, do you think? Will I get a good price for this horse, do you think? Will we put up the sails? I don't think we will. I will² fall if I will² sit there. He shall not give five pounds for that horse. She shall be very sorry for her brother. Shall she marry Donald? He will be like a tree growing by a river's side. I shall not send the people away fasting.

NOTES.

Note (A.) p. 94.

The word commonly used before the infinitive to form the past participle is air. There are several reasons, however, or believing that this is not the proper particle: 1. the contrary signification of air in the following and similar seutences -Tha 'n saighdear daonnan air siubhal, on the march. Tha n saighdear air siubhal, The soldier HAS departeD. Tha athair air falbh, Away on a journey. Tha m' athair ir falbh do Dhun-éidionn, My father HAS GONE to Edinburgh. Bha am ministear air baisteadh a' phàiste, ar the child's baptism. Bha am ministear air baisteadh a' phàiste, The minister HAD baptised the child. From these and the like examples, it is obvious that air, when applied to time, denotes present time, and means on, at, for; whereas the particle proper to the infinitive denotes past time, and signifies after. 2. This further appears from its application in Acts xix. 41, Agus air dha so a radh sgaoil e 'n co-thional, And when (i. e. after) he had thus spoken, &c .- Acts xx. 2. Agus air dha dol troimh na crìochaibh sin, &c. And when (i. e. after) he had gone over those parts, &c .- and in hundreds of other instances. 3. From our frequently substituting the phrase. an déis, or an déigh, instead of the said particle; as, Air dhomh dùsgadh, or an déigh dhomh dùsgadh. 4. From the practice of other dialects of the Celtic :- The Irish sometimes make use of taréis, after, where we use air; Acts xv. 33, Agus air fuireach ré ùine dhoibh, &c .- in Irish, Agus tair éis iad fhuireach, &c. The Manks employ erreish (taréis) where the Irish write air or ar, and we air, or an déigh. Acts xviii. 23: As erreish da v'er vaarail tammylt dy hraa ayns shen; in Irish, Agus ar nfanmhuin dó ar feadh tamuill, &c. after he had spent, &c. The Welsh, also, as Lhuyd informs us in his Cornish Grammar, p. 248, col. 2, use the preposition gwedi (after) before the infinitive, to form the past participle. 5. Air never means after. It is not so translated in Lhuyd's Ir. Dic., nor in any of our Scottish ones. It is not used before the infinitive by the best Irish grammarians, as Vallancy, Neilson, &c. They employ iar, which signifies an déigh (Lhuyd, Ir. Dic. in v. iar, also Ar. Br. tit. ii. p. 124, col. 2, voc. post, postea, &c.), and which, without any doubt, is the proper particle.

The words ais, déigh, iar, as well as cul, are all substantives, signifying back or hind. The first three are now never used alone; but, when standing in connexion with other words, their original meaning is still apparent; as in Seas air d'ais, stand a-back. Chaidh iad air an ais, they went back-wards. Co tha d' dhéigh ? who is be-hind you? or coming after you? An robh iad air thoiseach no air dhéigh ort? Whether were they before or behind you? Iar is now hardly employed in any connexion except before the infinitive.<sup>2</sup> But when we consider the terms, deas, tuath, ear, and iar, which obviously relate to the position of the human body with respect to the rising sun, we easily come at the meaning of iar, and plainly perceive how it signifies west, and back, or hind. As the sun in his daily succession passed from view in the west, or in that direction denominated back (iar), hence arose the idea of applying the words an déigh, iar, &c., to past time. was not peculiar to the Celts; for we find that the Saxons also used their terms aft, hind (compar. after, hinder), or back, for the same purpose; as, After I fell asleep, An deigh, or iar dhomh tuiteam 'am chadal. She came after me, Thainig i a'm dhéigh. After coming in he took food, Iar dha teachd a's tigh ghabh e biadh. You are behind your time, Tha thu 'n deigh d'uine. Your watch is behind, Tha d' uaireadair air à h-ais. The season is far back, Tha 'n aimsir fad air à h-ais.

<sup>2</sup> It is found as a prefix in a few instances; as in iar-guin, after-pains; iar-mad, posterity; iar-odha, a great grandson (orgrandson after the grandson); iar-fhlath, an after-chief, a squire or knight, a chief's follower, an Earl; in all which instances it has the signification contended for.

&lt;sup>1</sup> In the Cornish, er is upon, and uar, after. Iar is found spelled ior and iur in Lhuyd's Ir. Dic. In Bedel's Ir. Bibd, ar is used for air and iar; so is er in the Manks Scriptures. As air and iar are pronounced exactly alike in Gaelic, it seems probable that the misapplication of the one for the other has partly arisen from that circumstance, as well as from want of attention to their opposite signification.

So in Gaelic, Na bruadair Ghréugach chaidh gu léir air chùl. The Grecian dreams (fancies) are all gone behind the back, i. e. passed away. Is fada o'n chaidh an cleachdadh sin air chùl.]

Note (B.) p. 178, § 8.

In Gaelic it is not usual, as in Greek and English, to prefix the article to a common noun following a person's name, to intimate his trade or profession; as, Ίωσηφ ὁ τεκτων, Joseph the carpenter; 'Iwaven; & fiologos, John the Divine. According to the Gaelic idiom, such phrases would run, Ioseph-saor, Iaindiadhair, Joseph-carpenter, John-divine, like a name and surname in English. A proper name and an app llative thus connected are pronounced closely together; as, Dŏnŭll-cèard', 1 Măiri-bhàrd', Eŏhhăn-tàillear, even when an adjective intervenes; as, Donull-ban-chobair, Eobhan-ruadh-taillear, and a rush is made over all the syllables constituting the expression, till we arrive at the accented one of the appellative. But the article is sometimes used before the common noun, which, being a definition of the proper name, is the subject of a new proposition; as, Alastair, an ceard-umha, (p. 178, n. 5.) In pronouncing the two nouns in this last case, a short pause is made after the leading one; as, Murchadh, am muillearluaidh'.2 When the proper name is governed in the genitive, the appellative, if it want the article, agrees with it; as, Mac Ioseiph shaoir, the son of Joseph the carpenter, nighean Dho-nuill-chìobair, the daughter of Donald the shepherd. But if the common noun have the article, it does not agree with the proper name, but remains still in the nominative, as being the subject of a verb understood; so we say, Mac Alastair an ceard-umha, The son of Alexander the coppersmith, Tigh rester-John'.

2 So likewise in English, Malcolm, the joiner; John, the gardener; Thomas, the butler; Peter, the waiter.

246 Notes.

Mhurchaidh am muillear-luaidh, The house of Murdoch the fuller. In like manner, if we admit the article before the appellative in the expression Ioseph-saor, and say Ioseph an saor; though the proper name be governed in the genitive, we must keep an saor in the nominative; as, Mac Ioseiph an saor. Nor does this disagreement between the proper name and the term which defines it create any ambiguity; for it is always understood, from the position of the words, that the latter term is used to restrict or explain the one immediately before it; i. e. an saor here refers to Ioseph, not to mac; if it referred to mac, the collocation would have been, an saor, mac Ioseiph.

Notwithstanding the universal observance of this rule by the speakers of Gaelie, the translators of the S. S. have departed from it in many instances where the sense could be properly exhibited only by adhering to the rule. And it is not a little surprising that the acute and learned Dr. Stewart should have given his voice in favour of a foreign construction, which, wherever it is employed, conveys a sense different from the signification intended. Thus, by a common idiom of the Gaelie, Ioseph an t-saoir, signifes—The carpenter's Joseph (i. e. some Joseph under his control, as his son, grandson, nephew, apprentice, servant); mac Joseiph an t-saoir, therefore, must signify, The son of the carpenter's Joseph.<sup>3</sup> The expression, Tigh Dhonuill a' chiobair, would, according to the Bible synvide Matth, xiv. 3. Mark vi. 17.

&#x27; So, in English, the carpenter is understood to agree with Joseph, purely from the position of the words; there is not even a subaudition of the particle of; its introduction, indeed, would alter the sense of the expression to—The son of Joseph of the carpenter.

tax, mean, The house of Donald the shepherd.1 But no Highlander could ever attach that meaning to it. The legitimate expression is, Tigh Dhonuill-chìobair .- From all this it is evident, that the Bible rule, instead of marking "the relation of nouns to each other, which, (as Dr. Stewart says) without it, would, in many instances, remain doubtful," marks not at all the relation intended, but, on the contrary, most completely destroys it; for, in the expression the carpenter's Joseph's son, or the son of the carpenter's Joseph, it is obvious both from the form and collocation of the words, that neither Joseph nor his son is the carpenter.2 Indeed the relation which the rule aims to denote, can be indicated no other way than by expelling the article, or by putting the second noun in the nominative, as before explained; for the other mode of expression is already appropriated to mark a totally different kind of relation.

1 The expression rather means, in English, the house of Donald of the shepherd; that is the house of some Donald belonging to the shepherd, not the house of Donald the shepherd himself.

2 If, as in other instances, our translators had followed the Greek idiom, and rendered ή εεφαλη Ίωαννου του βαπτιστου, ceann Eoin a' Bhaistich, Παυλου του ἀποστολου ή ἐπιστολη, litir Phoil an abstoil, the Gaelic would signify, The head of the Baptist's John, The epistle of the apostle's Paul; so Taisbean Eoin an Diadhair, may be taken as the Gaelic of-The Revelation of the Divine's John. In these instances, at least, they have preserved the Gaelic idiom, Ceann Eoin-Bhaiste, Litir an Abstoil-Phoil. They would have been right, however, in rendering Ιωαννης & βαπτιστης, or βαπτιζων, " Eoin-Baisteach, or Baistear ; for Eoin Baiste, means not John the Baptist, but baptized John.+

PART VIII.

PROSODY

Treats of the quantity of syllables and the measure of verse. Verse is language confined to a particular number of measured syllables called feet. A line* is a certain number of such feet; as.

s', l 2 3 4 Lĕig-| dhīot' ăn-| cād' ăl, ă-| chūil'ĕin mŏ-| rūin.

QUANTITY

Is the length or shortness of a syllable, or the time occupied in pronouncing it. Some syllables are long; as, àrd, féin, fill, òg, ùr;—some are short; as, åd fråls, leis, rls, dös, trüs. The quantity of a long syllable is reckoned double that of a short one; thus, bàs == båäs. In musical notation the quantity may be exhibited thus:—

* A stanza is a certain number of lines; as

'Sann aig O'Nèill do bhi an teach O'm faicteadh gach linne 's gach loch; Chìteadh, o mhullach, a mach, Beachaidh 'cur meala gu moch,

Two lines are called a couplet, three a triplet, and four a quatrain; as,

Air Alld-ghartain ghlacas bradan,

2. Ban-iasg ghasda lan-mhaiseach.

Tha mo chridh' iar fàs trom, 3. 'S taobh mo leap' iar fàs lóm, Cha togar leam fónn air chòir.

B'àird ä shleagh na crann siùil, Bu bhinne na teud-chiùil ä ghuth ; 4. Snàmhaiche a b' fhèarr na fraoch Cha do leig ä thaobh ri sruth

Tha mi sgìth | 'smi leam fhìn | h-ùile là am | ònar.

Here the crotchets represent long quantity, and the dotted quavers represent accented syllables of short quantity.

Music to a verse in a different mode, alters the species of the feet; but the total of the quantities will still remain equal. Thus the 1st stave in 2 time becomes where, as above, we have 4 long and 6 short syllables.

ACCENT.

When we utter a word of two or more syllables, we pronounce one of the syllables with a stronger impulse than the rest; as in mor'ăn, făd'ăl, di-māirt', di-dōmh'nŭich, brčab'ădăir, seămă-guad', dur'ūdān: this impulse is denominated the accent, or ictus. The vowel of an accented syllable is sometimes a long one; as càird'eil, còrd'adh; sometimes a short one; as fărr'aid, fir'eăch.

It is the accent that regulates the motion or march of verse; as

|              |           | 'ry pleas' | ure.  |
|--------------|-----------|------------|-------|
| Dŏ ghruaidh' | eăn ruit' | each ros'  | ach.  |

| Φυσιεί       | 2.500!    | THE THUN!  | 015.* |

* The ancients had many peculiar measures, to which our modern ears are not made; but where the ancient measures

FEET.

A foot is two or more syllables variously accented, and containing a certain quantity; as,

| Feet of 2 Syllables. |         |  | ables. | Feet of 3 Syllables. |               |               |
|----------------------|---------|--|--------|----------------------|---------------|---------------|
| ,                    | Spondee |  |        | pīos'mōr'.           | l. Dactyl     | dū'rŭdăn.     |
|                      | pyrrhic |  |        |                      |               | căbăr-fēidh'. |
|                      | trochee |  |        |                      | 3. amphibrach | băn-ōg lăch.  |
|                      | iambus  |  |        | tĭr-mör'.            | 4. tribrach   | ăm'ădăn.      |

Measuring verse, or resolving it into feet, is called scanning. In Gaelic, as in English, the measure of verse is indicated by the accent and number of syllables, and not by such rules as grammarians have devised for measuring the poetry of the ancients.* An accented syllable, of whatever quantity, is to be considered long in scanning; as,

This line consists of four iambic feet; and, except in one instance, the quantity and ictus perfectly coincide:

Nă spēur- ăn ārd- ă's āill- ĭdh dreach'.

This, however, is not uniformly the case; for in a long composition, it would perhaps be impossible to insert syllables of the legitimate quantity into every position requiring them; † hence the accented syllable of a foot may be long or short, according to the poet's taste or fancy. Thus, correspond in movement with our modern ones, we find that the accent produces the same effect there as in our own language.

* It was ignorance of this fact that led the author of Phingalēis to say, "Gaelica lingua nil dactylos curat, aut spondeos, aliosve, quos NOVERIM, pedes," pref. p. 49; and Mr. Logan to affirm that HE does not think Gaelic can be scanned, v. Mackenzie's Gaelic Bards, introduction.

+ To be so formal would indeed make poetical composition too monotonous, and would besides be an oppressive check upon variety, one of the constituent charms of poetry.

l 2 3 4 Tha' e- nis'e 'n- áite- cum'hann-Se' 'na- chrùban- dubh'ach- déurach-

The ictus here indicates the measure to be trochaic; but, if we attend merely to the quantity, we shall find only three trochees in the couplet, viz. āitč, crūbăn, déurāch; the rest are pyrrhies. The accent, therefore, regulates the measure.

In the following lines, also, we find the ictus beating regu-

| 1   | 2                | 3            | 4        |  |
|---|------------------|--------------|----------|--|
| Thŭg' mĭ 'n-  | őïch'ĕ 'n-       | rāoir' 'săn- | āir'ĭdh- |  |
| Ōïch'ĕ-   | dhŏmh' 's mĭ 'n- | ĭom'al-      | tīr'-ĕ-  |  |
| Thŭirt'ĭ-   | riūm' nă-        |              | făid'ĕ-  |  |
| Cleăs' ăn-  | fhĭr' ă-         | dh'ōl'ăn-    | gĭn'ĭ-   |  |
| The quantity, therefore, does not regulate the measure. |                  |              |          |  |

Monosyllables, when considered alone, have no syllabic accent. But two or more of them succeeding each other in a line, are so combined and accented, as to suit the ictus of the measure in which they are employed; as, > l 2 3 4 'Si' deoch- slaint' an- righ' as- fearr' leinn-

* A measure may be variously divided; but it seems best to portion it into that sort of feet of which it principally consists. This line makes 31 iambic feet; but otherwise it may be considered as an amphibrach and two trochees:

Do bheatha | 'Thearlaich | Stiubhairt. |

This measure more properly runs in amphibrachs of four feet; thus,- l 2 3 4

Dö bheul mär | än t-sirist | se milis | ri 'phogádh. |
Thá leth taobh | ná leachin | le mais iar | á chomhdách. [

So also,

Bhá'n suāich'eán | tăs àraĭdh | 's nă h-àrmŭinn | dă réir, | Brĕid sròil rĭ | crănn àrd 'ŭs | tŏrc làidĭr | năch géill.

Stǔ mārc'aĭch | năn srānn'eăch | ăs fār'ŭm | aĭch'céum.* |

* Into what feet soever we divide a line, the accents, being last two lines the feet are evidently of the same species, although the quantities of the accented syllables in each are quite at opposites. The few writers who have touched the subject of Gaelie prosody seem not to have adverted to this,—that it is the ictus that characterises the feet; and that hence, the poets, in the same composition, frequently insert accented syllables of different quantities into the same region of a verse; as,

Fhuáir thú meás' Nách éil trío' Ann ám meásg' | Bhreat'ánnách,— Bánc án öit' Bhí fo d' sgöid', Ann án cöir' | dhleas'dánnáich.

Here the foot, "fhuair thu mĕas'," and banc an ōir'," are obviously of the same kind, viz. both anapaests; and what makes them so is similarity of ictus, not of final quantity. Hence, in scanning, an accented syllable, though short in quantity, must be accounted long, in order to maintain uniformity of feet.

The following measures consist chiefly of dactyls.

- 'Nlāth'á bhá | mīs''ánn án | tīgh' cheánn lóch | Iū' gũ'n | Thách'áir á | ghrūag'ách | chūl dónn | orm.
- + Chūnn'a'c mǐ | brūa'dăr 'chŭir | smūaiı'eăn gŭ | leōı' ŏrm. | Bhā' mĭ 'am | chād'ál 'sgŭ'n | dhūisg' sŭd | mi, |

7. Heroic Measure.

In the measures hitherto exemplified, the ictus and the number of syllables maintain a considerable degree of regularity. The measure called heroic, is also pretty regular as to the number of its syllables, of which a line contains seven or eight; as,

Chunn'aic | mis'e | tigh'n' o'n | tùr Maigh'dionn | ùr le | man'tull | donn;

An Cleireach caol cam.

Cod'al | dhomh's' air | tul'aich | uain'e | Air taobh' | tragh'ad | ri la' | luain'e ; |

But it is very variable, both in ancient and modern compositions, in the choice of feet for its different regions.*

Heroic measure sometimes runs quite smoothly in iambs of  $3\frac{1}{3}$  or 4 feet; as,

Thāin'īg | ōirnn' dŏ | Alb'aĭnn | crois' Gōill' mŭ'n | cūairt' dhŭinn | āir'gặch | slios.'

Ailean Dall.

* The 1st 2d and 3d foot is sometimes an iamb, a trochee, or a pyrrhic; the 4th a long syllable, an iamb, or a pyrrhic.

The following specimens exhibit some of the peculiarities of this measure; but, being restricted to certain limits, we cannot present examples of them all.

8. Ossianic Measures.

The poetry once common among the older Highlanders, and which is attributed to Ossian, is in general couched in the heroic stanza of four lines, exemplified under the last head; as,

| Thă 'lāmh | ăir ăn      | lāinn' ăg | ēirĭgh.  |

Fingal, VI. 380.

Generally, however, these originals are very irregular in their structure. We find in them lines of 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and even Il syllables. It is not easy to account for this diversity. It would be rash to attribute the fault to the bard. It must be laid to the charge of his reciters and editors; for, in many instances, what appear to be irregularities could easily be adjusted by the application of a little grammatical acumen, without in any degree injuring the sense of Ossian.

RHYME.

Rhyme is that quality of vocal sound which occurs at the end of a line, imitative of a similar quality at the end of a preceding line; as > Làmh thréun 's gach càs, Cridh' àrd gun sgàth.

Eirich, a lunndaire, gu grad, 'S thoir ort an seangan beag gun stad.

- * The following are proofs of this statement :-
- 5. Tha Gur | ach, iosal. Smith's S. D. p. 260.
- 6. Ri Lod | uinn nan | Gall treun. | Cath Loda I. 74.
- 7. Mur till | mac Ròin | ne a | thriath. | ib. 75. 8. Bhean bhan | ail tha | triall na | h-aonar. | ib. 76.
- 9. No ri | m'thaobh biodh | do thuin | eadh fo | làr. | ib. 45. | 10. An àit | e tach | airt do | gharbh shruth | nan sliabh. |
- 11. Mar fhal | asg air | Laoire | 's gach gaoth | 'ga sheide. | Smith's S. D. p. 264. l. 18.

The general flow of Ossianic verse, however, is in 7 or 8 syllables, and, in this last case, every line (in general) has four of the syllables accented, and consequently contains four dissyllabic feet; as

'Sĕ gūth' | āu'ām' | mö rūin' | ă t' ānn' | 'S āin'mīc | ăn āis' | līng Mhāl | mhīn' thŭ | Fčsg'lāibh | sĕ tāl' | lā năn | spčur Āith'rīch | ĕ Ōs' | căir nān | cruāidh'-bhēum', | A rhyme*---corresponding with a final one---often occurs in, or about, the middle of every succeeding line; as

An uair 'bha Gàidhlic aig na h-eòin, 'Sa thuigeadh iad glòir nan dàn,

Bu tric an còmhradh 's a' choill,

Air ioma poinng, ma's fìor am bàrd. E. Maclachlan.

The vocal sound, at the first pause in a verse, is sometimes echoed throughout a stanza; as,

Bean a's àillidh' bàn-chul téudach, Fiamh à gàir' mar àine gréine; Súil mar àirneig bàrr na géige, Bilean blàth nan tlàth-phong céutach.

'Sa' mhaduinn chiùin-ghil, 'an àm dhomh dùsgadh, Aig bun na stùice b'e 'n sùgradh leam

An dreathann sùrdail 's ä rifeid-chiùil aig',

A' cur nan smùid dheth, gu lùthor bìnn;

An druid 's am brù-dhearg, le mòran ùnaich, Ri ceileir sùnndach bu shiùbhlach rann.

Ri ceileir sunndach bu shiubhlach rann.

D. Macintyre.

Sometimes the echo is interrupted by a new rhyme, and then resumed; or it continues half through the staff,—where a new sound is adopted, which is echoed to the end of the stanza; as,

Iseabal òg an òr-fhuilt bhuidhe,

Do ghruaidh mar ròs, do phòg mar ŭbhal; Do bheul meachar, dreachar grìnn, O'n tigeadh na h-òrain cheòlmhor bhìnn.

Do leachda caoineil gu dearcach braoileagach, Breac le faoireagan 's cruinn-dearg ceann;

* This adds a peculiar charm to Gaelic verse quite unknown to other languages. Verse, constructed without this intermediate rhyme, is considered harsh and prosaic. Our Gaelic version of the Psalms, however meritorious for strength of expression, is altogether destitute of the beautiful accord produced by the middle rhyme.

Stacan fraighneasach nach bu ghann: Am bèarnan-brìde 'sa' pheighinn rìoghail,

Am bèarnan-bride 'sa' pheighinn rìoghail, 'S an canach mìn-gheal, 's am mìslean anns

A h-uile mìr dheth o'n bhun a's ìsle Gu h-ionad cìrein na crìche 's àird'.

In some measures there is a double rhyme in each line of a stanza; as

'Si an trómpaid—'s na hörgain Bu ghlan prónndal—'us mönmhor 'Nuair a lómteadh—gach cörra-mheur

Nuair a lomteadh—gach corra-mhei Nach bu tróm—air an t-sörchan

Bu phóngail—an törman Gu fónn mhor—ach töirmeil

An an teóghlach—a Mhŏrair ri àbhachd. Id.

Doireachan nan géug Coille 'sam bi féur 'S foineasach an spréidh Bhios a chònaidh ann. Graodhainn bu gheal céir Faoghaid air än déigh 'S laoghach leam an sréud A bha sròineiseach. Id.

Mixed Measures.

The following measures, consisting of various kinds of feet, will afford the student materials for exercising himself in the business of Scanning.

* Gach la | fo phramh dhomh |
'S gun fhios | aig cach air |
Cha dean | mi manran |

*'Se coire | Cheathaich |
Nan aighean | siubhlach |
An coire | runach |
A's urar fonn. |

'S cha seinn mi ceol.

Mo ghaol air | an Lachunn | ach ur | Gu'n togainn | do chliu thar cheud. | †

Mo ghaol | air an Lach | unnach ur | Gu'n tog | ainn do chliu | thar cheud. |

Co air so | a thogas | mi fonn mo dhain, | Mur tog mi | e air | Anna bhain, | an ailleag og | Do'm buin, le coir, | mo chion a mhain? | 'Si 's aillidh | e sealladh, | gradhaiche | gealladh, | Blath-bhilich' | mealaich' pog. |

Togaidh mi | tuille de'n | t-suirdhe | 'Sioma | iorghuill | ri a' streap | * 'S lionmhar | dridfhortan | a bhuail mi | Ged nach d' fhuair mi | cnuachd no breab. | Air allaban, | ao ill ū ŏ, | + # Le faireachadh, | hō ĭll ō, | Ri h-amaideachd, | ao ill u o, | 'S cuis fhanaid e, I ho ill o.

Ailean Dall.

Gur mairg | a bheir geill | Do'n t-saogh | al gu leir | 'S tric a chaoch | ail e cheum | gabhaidh. |

Mary Macleod.

Do chul | mar an lion | 'nä mhile | camag | Nach greann | ach fo chir | 'us siod 'ga | cheangal | Do dheud | mar na dis | ne dionach | daingionn | Beul binn | a ghabh-ail | nan oran. |

Bheirinn | mo phog | do'n og | mhnaoi shomult | A dh' fhas | gu boin | eanta caoin | Gu mil eant comhn | art seoc | ail foinneamh | Do chomh | radh gheibh | mi gu saor. |

The utility of some knowledge of prosody, to the composer of verses, will appear from an examination of the structure of the above stanza. The bard sets out with a pyrrhic for his first foot. Proceeding merely by the "rule of ear," he shortens the long syllables (mor and cuirt*) in the same region of the 2d and 6th lines; he neglects a syllable in the 3d and 7th lines,+ but paces equally with every other foot in this region. In the 2d region all the feet are faultless. So are they in the 3d; save that in the 2d, 4th, 6th and 8th line, instead of iambs he has placed amphibrachs. + These observations are not made to blame the bard, but to show the use of prosody. We know that he was ignorant of the art, and blind. Instead, therefore, of blaming we admire him; we admire the accuracy of his ear, the propriety of his words, the perfect consonance of his rhymes, and the uncommon sweetness of his versification.

To suit the measure this must sometimes be done, especially where, as here, the vocable required is very appropriate. Although strictness requires the foot to be smor mô, yet how effectively does the poet sound his grief and anxiety by the long yowel, and the nause necessary in pronouncing it.
