IN issuing THE FORFAR DIRECTORY FOR 1887, the Publisher begs to thank all those who have supplied information for it, and also Advertisers for their liberal patronage. He has used every endeavour to make it complete, accurate, and useful as a book of reference on matters connected with the Town, and hopes that it will be as favourably received as those of previous years—the success of which has been very gratifying.

LANTERNS were invented by King Alfred in 870, and London was lighted with them in 1415-16.

THE harpsichord was first made by Hans Rucker, in Germany, in 1510.

THE damask rose was introduced from the south of France in the sixteenth century.

MR. NASMYTH invented and patented the steam-hammer on the 9th of June, 1842.

ALMONDS came from the East, and were introduced into England in 1570.

ANTHEMS were first composed by Hilary, Bishop of Poitiers, and others, about 350.

THE Albert medal for saving life from shipwreck was instituted by Her Majesty, March 7, 1866.

THE Anabaptists (or those who baptise a second time) sprang up in 1521 at Wittenburg, in Saxony.

MARCH was the first month in the year, and the legal year began on the 25th until 1752, when it was made the third month.

ABSTINENTS were a mild sect of religionists who appeared in France and Spain about the year 500, and repudiated wine, flesh-meat, and marriage.

TRIMMERS was the name of a contemptible set of politicians, so called by the two great parties in England in the reign of Charles II.

THE invention of the trumpet is ascribed to the Etruscans. It was first sounded in England before the sovereign in the time of Offa, King of Mercia.

THE Alcoran (the divine book of the Mohammedans and the standard of the Arabic language) was composed by Mahomet about the year 610.

ADAMITES were a sect that arose in 130, and met naked in imitation of Adam before the fall; Prodicus was their leader. This sect was introduced into Germany in 1416, and revived in Poland in the fifteenth century.

TROY weight was first used at Troyes, in France.

ANEMOMETER invented by Wolf in 1709.

THE first aniline dyes patented by W. H. Perkins in 1856.

THE Greek anthology first printed at Florence, 1494.

A RELIGIOUS sect, the Antonines, first appeared in 329.

ARABLE land restrained, and pasture enforced, 1534.

ARBUTUS tree brought to England from the Levant, 1724.

OPIMUM was first cultivated in Turkey in the fifteenth century.

TEA was cultivated by the Chinese before A. D. 783.

OXYGEN gas was discovered by Priestley, Aug. 17, 1774.

THE first Roman aqueduct was built by the Censor Appius, B. C. 312.

ARGO was the first long ship built by the Greeks to carry the Argonauts, B. C. 1263.

THE Armstrong gun was first introduced into the artillery service of Great Britain, Feb. 26, 1859.

THE artichoke, native of Italy, was brought to England in the sixteenth century.

PENS were first made from quills in 635, and from steel in 1845.

THE Irish "Peep-o'-Day Boys," a species of "Moonlighters," first appeared in July, 1784.

St. PAUL'S CROSS, London, was pulled down by order of Parliament in 1643.

DISCOVERY of the colouring principle of orscille by a French chemist, 1829.

OPHITES were a religious sect which believed that the serpent who tempted Eve was a god, 187.

THE Antoninus wall was the third rampart built to check the inroads of the Northern barbarians into England, A. D. 140.

THE Marble Arch at Cumberland Gate, modelled on that of Constantine, 1828, and set up first in St. James's Park, London, was removed to its present site in 1851.

ARCHONTICS were a sect of Christian heretics who pretended that God engendered the devil, who begot Abel and Cain of Eve, and that woman was the work of Satan. The sect came into notice about 203.

THE name of the "Court of Arches" is derived from the arches below St. Mary-le-Bow Church, Cheapside, London. All ecclesiastical suits were held there until the removal of the court to Doctors' Commons in the middle of the sixteenth century, but occasional courts were held at Bow Church down to the year 1825.

ASPARAGUS was first produced in England in 1608.

ASSAY of gold and silver established in England, 1248.

THE ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY was founded in London in 1820.

AURICULA imported into England from the Alps, 1509.

AURICULAR confession first enjoined, 1215.

THE first aurora borealis was seen in London on Jan. 30, 1860.

AUTO-DA-FÉ, the public punishment of heretics, established 1203.

BAFFIN'S BAY first explored, 1616.

KISSING the Pope's toe first practised in 709.

KNITTING stockings invented in Spain, 1550.

LADY DAY is said to have been instituted in 350; but authorities declare that it was more probably in 700.

LABURNUM was brought into England from Hungary in 1576.

CLOTH and paper made of asbestos, A. D. 74; spun at Venice, 1500.

BACHELORS first taxed in England, May 1, 1685; tax increased upon their servants, 1785.

THE Koh-i-Noor Diamond was brought from India to England and presented to the Queen, June 24, 1850.

THE trade of bakers was established in Italy, B. C. 173; there existed a brotherhood of this craft in England in the year 1155.

BABE, a dwarf kept by the King of Poland, only thirty-three inches high, aged twenty-three, died in 1764.

THE Augsburg Confession of Faith drawn up by Melancthon, and by him and Luther presented to the Emperor Charles V., June 25, 1530.

TEETOTALER, as a term of designation of total abstainers from all intoxicating drinks, was first applied by a working man at Preston in June, 1832.

THE tea-tree was brought to England from China in 1769-70. Attempts to cultivate the plant for any useful purpose at Kew failed.

EIGHTEEN clasp knives, such as are used by sailors, were found in the stomach of William Cummins, a seaman, who swallowed them in drunken frolics. He died in Guy's Hospital March, 28, 1809.

THE paper currency known as assignats was made to support the credit of the French Republic, April, 1790; forged in England, 1793, to send into France; abandoned and the plates broken up in March, 1796. This led to a general bankruptcy.

WIT AND WISDOM.

THE best way to keep good acts in memory is to refresh them with new ones.

WASTE of wealth is sometimes retrieved; waste of health, seldom; but waste of time, never.

MANKIND generally seem willing to admit that the world revolves on its axis. The great mistake made is that each man thinks he is the axis.

IN the exhaustless catalogue of Heaven's mercies to mankind, the power we have of finding some germs of comfort in the hardest trials must ever occupy the foremost place.

EVERY day sends to their graves a number of obscure men, who have only remained in obscurity because their timidity has prevented them from making a first effort.

WOMAN has to wait until she is asked before she can marry. She has no voice in the matter until after the ceremony. Then she knows how to make up for lost time.

IT should be known that a small quantity of vinegar will generally destroy immediately an insect that may find its way into the stomach; and a little salad oil will kill an insect that may enter the ear.

WOMAN'S WRONGS.—"My dear," he remarked to his wife, "our club is going to have all the home comforts." "Indeed," sneered his wife, "and when is our home to have all the club comforts?" He gave it up, yet she wants an answer to her question.

ONE day, just as an English officer had arrived at Vienna, the Empress, knowing that he had seen a certain princess much celebrated for her beauty, asked him if it was really true that she was the most beautiful woman he had ever seen. "I thought so yesterday," he replied.

For my part, when I hear of the marrying and giving in marriage that is constantly being transacted, I can only sigh for those who are multiplying earthly ties which, though powerful enough to detach their hearts and thoughts from heaven, are so brittle as to be liable to be snapped asunder by every breeze.—GEORGE ELIOT.

THE late Dean Stanley was once travelling in a railway carriage, when a bustling man exclaimed, "I should like to meet the Dean of Westminster. I'd put a question to him that would puzzle him." "Very well," said a voice out of another corner, "now is the time, for I am the Dean." The man was rather startled, but presently recovered, and said, "Well, sir, can you tell me the way to heaven?" "Nothing easier," answered the Dean; "you have only to turn to the right and go straight forward."

CIRCUMSTANCES are beyond the control of man; but his conduct is in his own power.

PRIDE is increased by ignorance; those assume the most who know the least.

IT is not our beliefs that frighten us half so much as our fancies.

THE disappointment of manhood succeeds to the delusion of youth; let us hope that the heritage of age is not despair.

My daughter, if the cross comes to you as a wife, you must carry it as a wife. You may say, "I will forsake my husband," but you cannot cease to be a wife.—GEORGE ELIOT.

THE true should welcome all truth. It is a half-faith that trembles for its own existence at every rumour of a new discovery in science. A strong faith fears nothing. God is one; He will not contradict Himself.

Better to hunt in fields for wealth unthought,
Than fee the doctor for a nauseous draught.
The wise for cure on exercise depend;
God never made His work for man to mend.

WE are ruined, not by what we really want, but by what we think we do; therefore, never go abroad in search of your wants. If they be real wants they will come home in search of you: for he that buys what he does not want, will soon want what he cannot buy.

BRUSH AND PENCIL.—It is not a waste of time to test the natural capacity for drawing and painting. If the faculty exists, it is sure to develop under any sort of attentive culture and practice. If it does not exist, the pastime growing out of the attempt to find out whether it is there or not is a good filipp to the mind.

IT being agreed at a party of twelve, equally composed of ladies and gentlemen, that a disputed question should be settled by the opinion of the majority, the six ladies expressed themselves opposed to the six gentlemen, and claimed the victory. A gentleman objected to this, as the number of votes was equal, saying that they were "half and half." "True," replied a witty fair one, "but we are the better halves."

AN American strolled into a fashionable church just before the service began. The sexton followed him up, and tapping him on the shoulder, and pointing to a small cur that had followed him into the sacred edifice, said, "Dogs are not admitted." "That's not my dog," replied the visitor. "But he follows you." "Well, so do you." The sexton growled, and removed the dog with unnecessary violence.

A MAN of maxims only is like a Cyclops with one eye, and that eye placed in the back of his head.

CONSIDER how few things are worthy of anger, and you will wonder that any but fools should be in wrath.

There are nettles everywhere, But smooth, green grasses are more common still;
The blue of heaven is larger than the cloud.—MRS. BROWNING.

IF there were no enemy, there could be no conflict; were there no trouble, there could be no faith; were there no fear, there could be no hope.

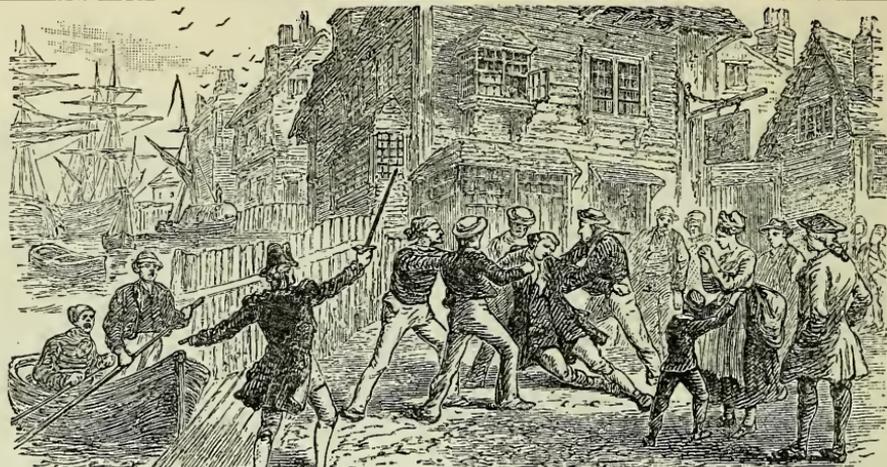

FINE sense and exalted sense are not half so valuable as common sense. There are forty men of wit for one man of sense; and he that will carry nothing about him but gold, will be every day at a loss for want of reader change.

THERE are two beings in each of us—the animal and the angel: our business is to resist the one in order that the other may reign supreme, up to the moment when, freed from its burdensome shackles, it can take flight towards higher and better regions.

HOME TENDERNESS.—No matter how busy a man may be, he should find time every day to tell his wife he loves her. No matter what social demands may be made upon the woman, she should find time to kiss her husband and give him one of the smiles that were so sweet to him when he came courting her. No matter what their daily cares, the parents should find time to take the children upon their knees and caress them with kind words and tender touches.

THE little I have seen of the world teaches me to look upon the errors of others in sorrow, not in anger. When I take the history of one heart that has sinned and suffered, and represent to myself the struggles and temptations it has passed through—the brief pulsations of joy, the feverish inquietude of hope and fear, the pressure of want, the desertion of friends—I would fain leave the erring soul of my fellow-man with Him from whose hand it came.

IT is needful to be very careful what habits we fall into. It is almost easier to give up life than fixed habits. It is said of Sir David Wilkie, the painter, that he had a drawing way of pronouncing the word "really," which he used very often. A friend once said to him, "Do you know that people complain of your continual 'rea-al-ly?'" After musing for an instant, Wilkie rejoined, "Do they, 'rea-al-ly?'" "Don't repeat it!" cried the friend, "it annoys me." Wilkie looked up smiling. "'Rea-al-ly?'" said he.

AMONG the most famous families in Worcestershire two or three centuries ago were the Charlton Dinelys. They traced a descent from the Royal House of Plantagenet; they possessed extensive estates, and flourished until the close of the seventeenth century, when the last male heir died. Hereupon the estates fell into the hands of SIR JOHN DINELY GOODERE, Bart., of Charlton and Burghope, whose abduction and murder is the subject of our illustration. For a series of years he lived on bad terms with his brother, Captain Samuel Goodere, R.N. A mutual friend, however, a Mr. Smith, attorney-at-law, of College Street, Bristol, invited the brothers to dine with him, with a view of effecting a reconciliation. At dinner Sir John and the captain appeared to be as good friends as ever, and as the latter was departing he took leave of the baronet in the most affectionate manner imaginable. It was then dark and about six o'clock in the evening. Early in the morning of that day Captain Goodere had ordered dinner for six men at the "White Hart" on College Green. The latter were dressed like seamen, and in conversation during dinner mentioned very frequently a man named Mahony. In the afternoon, after dinner was over, Captain Goodere sent to the landlord of the "White Hart" the order to make tea for the six men, "which greatly surprised him; it being very uncommon drink for Jack Tars." They all eventually went away of a sudden, and joined Captain Goodere, who pointed out to them the stately figure of his brother, the baronet, on his way home. Acting up to previous arrangement, one of the six seized the old gentleman, and they all dragged him along towards the Rope Walk, where was a gang of twelve more of them, who were ready to assist according to the captain's instruction. The victim was hurried towards the Hot-wells, where a boat was waiting to receive him. Captain Goodere was directing the gang all the time, and when his brother cried out, "Murder! murder! I am Sir John Dinely Goodere," the captain stopped his mouth with his cloak, so that the people, not knowing his name, only asked what was the matter. The explanation given to these inquirers was that Sir John was a thief and a murderer, and having made his escape from the ship, they were going to take him aboard to secure him in order for his trial. Having got the victim into the boat, he was allowed a little more liberty. He spoke to his brother thus:—"Brother, I know you have an intention to murder me. I beg that, if you are resolved to do it, you would do it here, and not give yourself the trouble of taking me down to your ship." To which the captain replied, "No, brother, I am going to prevent your rotting upon land; but however, I would have you make your peace with God this night;" and so, without more ado, Captain Goodere hurried his brother aboard the ship Ruby, the crew of which were told "that they need not mind his noise, because he was mad; and that he had brought him on board on purpose to prevent his making away with himself." The victim was then conveyed to the purser's cabin, and all of the ruffians, except two, named Mahony and White, were ordered ashore, with directions to conceal themselves and keep out of the way of inquiry. The conspirators in the outrage were rewarded by Captain Goodere with a guinea each. None of them belonged to Goodere's ship, but to another lying out, by name the Vernon Schooner. It was the night of the 23rd January, 1742, upon which the outrage was committed. Sir John was kept in the purser's cabin till five o'clock in the morning of the following day, when the outrage was consummated. Lieutenant Berry, the cooper of the ship, and his wife witnessed the whole transaction through a crevice in the partition. The agreement between Goodere, White, and Mahony was, that Mahony should have £200, White £150, and what money the deceased had in his pockets, and his gold watch. After the agreement was concluded, Mahony and White went about their bloody work, the captain standing sentry, with his drawn sword in one hand and a pistol in the other, to kill the first person that should make any opposition to what they were about. The first thing they did was to take a handkerchief out of the baronet's pocket; White held his hands, while Mahony put it about his neck, and then each of them pulled as hard as he could, in order to strangle him at once; but Sir John making a desperate struggle, the ruffians could not effect it so as to prevent his crying out, "Murder! for God's sake don't kill me! take all I have, but save my life! Dear brother! What, must I die? Help! help! murder!" &c. To prevent further noise, Captain Goodere ordered Mahony to take a cord he had laid ready. Mahony then slipped off the handkerchief, and put the cord about Sir John's neck, which cord had a noose at the end; then Mahony, holding the cord in one hand, thrust the other in the victim's throat, and his knee against his stomach. In the meanwhile White held his hands, and took out of his pocket eight guineas and a gold watch. Then White came directly to Captain Goodere, and acquainted him with what was done, and showed him his brother's watch and money. The captain then asked Mahony and White whether the job was quite completed. They answered, "Yes." Then he gave Mahony and White what money he had about him, and bade them get ashore directly, that they might the more easily make their escape before daylight came. The manner in which the diabolical murder was first brought to light, notwithstanding that it had been witnessed by officers of Goodere's ship, was somewhat singular. Mr. Smith, the gentleman at whose house Sir John Dinely Goodere and his brother spent a sociable hour together the day before, accidentally heard that a person who had the appearance of a gentleman was hurried in a very violent manner over College Green, and that a gentleman, who, by the description of him, answered to the person of the captain, assisted. Mr. Smith, knowing the ship was to sail the first fair wind, and remembering that the brothers left the house nearly together, thought the captain had taken Sir John on board with intent to destroy him when he came upon the high seas. This suspicion, being strengthened by other circumstances, made so deep an impression on his mind, that early in the morning he applied himself to Henry Coombe, Esq., the mayor, for an officer to go and search the ship before she sailed out of the liberty of the city. The officer the mayor thought fit to send was the water-bailiff, with proper assistance, and full orders to search the ship for Sir John Dinely Goodere, Bart. The officer obeyed his orders; and coming to the ship, the cooper, his wife, and Lieutenant Berry acquainted him that they had been just consulting about the affair, and discovered to him what they knew of the whole matter, the captain being then safe in his cabin. The water-bailiff sent immediately this account to the city magistrates, who reinforced him with a strong guard to secure the captain, but before the guard came the cooper and lieutenant had done the business. On the 26th of March, Captain Goodere, Matthew Mahony, and Charles White were arraigned for the murder. Captain Goodere's defence was that he was innocent; that his brother was a lunatic, and had strangled himself in a fit of frenzy. All were sentenced to death, and accordingly executed and hung in chains to the north of the Hot-wells, in sight of the place where the ship lay when the murder was committed.

The deceased gentleman was a Herefordshire baronet, and the fourth son of Sir Edward Goodere. The family had formerly enjoyed the honour of knighthood, and had been of considerable note and esteem in their respective counties. His father, Sir Edward Goodere, was created a Baronet of Burghope, in Herefordshire (the seat of the family), in the sixth of Queen Anne; and afterwards had a seat in the House of Commons, as knight of the shire for the county of Hereford. Before the death of Sir Edward, a person named Dinely, a relation, who was possessed of a very plentiful fortune, and who lived near Evesham, in Worcestershire, having a great respect for the late Sir John, made him his heir, on condition that he should change his name; for which purpose he obtained an Act of Parliament. Sir John, when young, was not very tractable, and his father sent him on a voyage to the East Indies. As he could not learn much gentility on board ship, he returned to his father (who had some thought of getting him a commission in the Royal Navy), and expressing a dislike of being sent from home, declared he would never more go to sea; and it is said, his father on this declaration of his told him he was more fit for a boat-wain than to enjoy the title of baronet.

HOLY ISLAND.

HOLY ISLAND measures from east to west about two miles and a quarter in length, and its breadth from north to south is scarcely a mile and a half. At the north-west part there runs out a slip of land about a mile in length; the circumference of the entire island comprehends about eight miles. It is included in the county of Northumberland, to which it is joined at low water by flat sands, over which a practicable road for vehicles leads to the island. The island derives its name from a monastery founded on it in 635 by Oswald, King of Northumbria. Its ruins were described by Scott as "a solemn, huge, and dark red pile." Years ago, in the middle of what was called the Market Place—it was a square, from which branched a few irregular narrow streets—there stood the stump of an old Market Cross, which was called the "Petting Stone." Over this stone newly-married couples were made to leap for luck. In the place of this remnant of a curious custom, modern improvement a long time since erected a Norman cross. There is a castle on the island, situate to the east of the village, on a basaltic rock about 90 feet high. It dates from a very early period. In 1646 it was garrisoned by Parliament, and in 1715 an abortive attempt was made by two Jacobites to hold it for the Pretender. The village, not so large as it used to be, is now a favourite summer resort.

JOHN HEMLING, the clever miniature painter of the Flemish School, was indebted to a very extraordinary and casual incident for the education which gave him his honoured position in later years. The incident is depicted in the illustration. It was at the early age of fourteen that he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of the great painter, John Van Eyck, under somewhat peculiar circumstances. The boy's father, known as “tall Hans,” was a farmer, and periodically attended the market of the important mercantile town of Bruges with his produce and game for sale, and was a very successful business man. He complained of his “good-for-nothing son,” who dreamt day and night of the great painter, Van Eyck, and as his father said, “blackened all his walls and tables with his drawings.” The boy was attending his father as usual one October day at his stall in the Bruges marketplace, but the lad's thoughts were far away, and he stood as one in a dream. Presently one of his father's eccentric but well-to-do customers appeared, Margrew Vandermeer, the goldsmith's widow, who always had sharp words for “tall Hans” over the price of his produce. On being informed the price of one of the birds which she had examined, she burst out in her usual way and complained of its being thin and sick and not worth the money. “Tall Hans” became quite rude, and the altercation was attracting several persons to the scene. Suddenly, in the midst of the disturbance, an exclamation burst from Margrew's servant, “Ah! that is just like Margrew,” and all eyes were turned to the speaker, and from her to the boy, who unperceived had sketched a caricature ture of Magrew Vandermeer on a corner of the table. This evoked much laughter and amusement from those around. The old lady was much incensed, and would have rubbed out the amusing sketch, but several hands were at once stretched out to protect it. During the disturbance a tall, mild-looking man walked slowly across the market-place. His brown velvet dress was trimmed with fur, and he had a black cap on his long wavy hair. He was accompanied by young men similarly dressed who seemed to show him considerable respect. On his approaching the group and seeing a disturbance, he asked what was the matter, and at once a way was made for him by the people, when he went up to the table; but the boy ran to him, and falling upon his knees before him, exclaimed, "Ah! noble master, Van Eyck, do not look at my bad work." The great painter, however, bent over the drawing, and attentively studied it. The boy jumped up and stood by his side, whereupon the painter asked him his name. "John Hemling," said Van Eyck.—"John Hemling, will you become my pupil?" The boy echoed a cry of delight, and with gleaming eyes exclaimed, "Indeed I will!" He could say no more, but pressed the artist's hand to his heart.

Magrew Vandermeer never forgave the boy for the caricature of her he had drawn, and later in life, when the clever and successful artist solicited from her the hand of her daughter Ursula, she sternly refused him. The disappointment was so great that he joined the army, and after enduring the hardships of war, he ultimately retired into the Carthusian Monastery of Miraflores, where he died.

It may add to the interest of the episode to briefly refer to the master, Eyck. He was born about 1390, and was taken charge of by Hubert, his elder brother, who made him his disciple. Under this tuition John learned to draw and paint, and mastered the properties of colours from Pliny. Later, Hubert admitted him into partnership, and both were made Court painters to Philip of Charolais. After the breaking-up of his own household, John became his own master, and took an engagement as painter to John, King of Bavaria, at that time resident at the Hague as Count of Holland. From the Hague he returned, in 1424, to take service with Philip, now Duke of Burgundy, and from that time till his death John Van Eyck remained the faithful servant of his prince, who never treated him otherwise than generously. Philip the Good sent him with the Embassy to beg the hand of Isabella of Portugal, the portrait of whom, by Eyck, fixed the duke's choice. He settled finally at Bruges, one of his most successful pupils being young Hemling.

WOLSEY'S TOWER.

THE village of Esher, pleasantly situated on a hill to the south of Thames Ditton and Molesey, is a picturesque and interesting spot. Among its many scenes of attraction is Esher Place, the grounds of which extend from the village down to the banks of the Mole. Here, about a mile from Esher station, and in the rear of Sandown Park, stands the curious Gothic building and castellated gateway of our illustration, and which is always styled in the neighbourhood "Wolsey's Tower." Though it was not built by that statesman, it was once tenanted by him shortly before his fall from the king's good graces, and when he had begun to have reason to cry aloud, "Farewell, a long farewell to all my greatness." And doubtless here he often walked at eventide; and on the grassy banks of the Mole, which flowed deep and full beneath his windows, mused upon the transitory nature of royal favour. This gateway is all that now remains of a house which, from a survey of the manor of Esher taken early in the reign of Edward VI., appears to have been "sumptuously built, with divers offices, an orriard and gardens." There was also, we are told, a park adjoining, three miles in circuit, well stocked with deer. In the early part of the last century, the mansion of Esher Place consisted of little more than this old tower or gateway; but Mr. Hy. Pelham, brother of the Duke of Newcastle, and then owner of the property, made considerable additions to the building in a style supposed to correspond with the original; "but," says Mr. Edward Walford, "rather in the Gingerbread Gothic fashion of Strawberry Hill." The additions, consisting of wings and offices, were designed by Kent, the architect of the eastern front of Kensington Palace; but they were inferior to the central part of the edifice, and, as Walpole himself remarks, "were proofs how little he conceived either the principles or graces of Gothic architecture."

The name of Kent, however, whom Walpole styles "the inventor of an art that realises painting," has been inseparably connected by the poet with

"— Esher's peaceful grove,
Where Kent and Nature vie for Pelham's love."

Several engravings of the house and grounds at Esher have been published at different times: one of the earliest, a bird's-eye view by Kniff and Kip another and larger plan was engraved by Rocque in 1737; another was published in the same year by Buck, and in 1759 yet another appeared.

IN Grecian history there is not a more unique figure of a tyrant than that of POLYCRATES, who ruled in the island of Samos, from about the year 537 B.C., when the island succumbed helplessly to his despotism. He secured himself against his enemies by attracting the support of the poorer citizens through his liberality, and by an alliance with Amasis, King of Egypt. He prospered greatly, and his fame was wide in Greece. His ships and bowmen enabled him to gratify his rapacity for war, which he made indiscriminately on friends and foes alike, declaring, "it is said, with grim humour, that he "gratified his friends more by returning them their own than by not taking it at all." His court was one of extraordinary magnificence and splendour, and whatsoever he did, into whatever warfare he plunged himself, he met with invariable success. Islands fell before him, as well as cities on the mainland, Rhemen being among the former, which he attached by a chain to the neighbouring island of Delos, and dedicated it to the Delian Apollo. He conquered and captured the Lesbians in a sea-fight, when they would have succoured Miletus, and he employed them in the digging of a moat round his fortress. The abnormal prosperity of Polycrates was his curse. It filled his ally and guest Amasis with fear. The latter wrote to Polycrates, reminding him that God is jealous, and the man who was elevated very high must needs fall very low. Therefore Amasis besought him that he would avert the jealous wrath of Heaven, and he adjured him to voluntarily cast from him the most precious thing he was possessed of to propitiate the heavenly powers. In the possession of Polycrates was a superb signet-ring, the work of one Theodorus of Samos, consisting of emeralds set in gold, and this was prized by the tyrant beyond all else. Having hearkened to Amasis and regarded his counsel, Polycrates threw the imperial signet into the sea. The gods, however, rejected the offering, for shortly afterwards a fisherman brought a large fish to the ruler, in which, upon being opened, was found the ring. When Amasis heard of this, he felt that Polycrates was doomed, and he renounced the alliance, that he might not in future have to lament the fall of a friend. Before the forebodings of Amasis were fulfilled, however, the latter died; but misfortune came to Polycrates soon enough. When the Persians, under King Cambyses, were preparing to invade Egypt, Polycrates, anxious to conciliate the growing power of Persia, sent forty ships to their help. But the squadron, largely manned by malcontents (of whom Polycrates wished to get rid in this way), had hardly reached the island of Capartus when the crews mutinied, and turned the ships' heads back to Samos. They defeated the tyrant in an action at sea, but were themselves overthrown on land, and were compelled to flee the island. Having taken refuge in Sparta, they prevailed upon the Spartans to make war on Polycrates. A powerful Spartan armament

(2) a great breakwater round the harbour; and (3) the great Temple of Hera, patron goddess of Samos, said by Herodotus to be the largest he had ever seen. The Temple of Hera would seem to have been begun before the time of Polycrates. He imported Spartan and Molossian hounds, goats from Naxos and Scyros, sheep from Attica and Miletus. The splendour of his palace is testified by the design which, many centuries later, Caligula formed of rebuilding it. Foreign artists worked for him at large wages; from Athens he brought Damocedes, the greatest physician of the age, at a salary of two talents. Polycrates was also a patron of letters; he collected a library, and lived on terms of intimate friendship with the poet Anacreon, whose verses were full of his references to his patron. The philosopher Pythagoras, however, quitted Samos in order to escape his tyranny.

laid siege to Samos, but had to retire, after forty days, without effecting its object. Not very long afterwards Orates, the Persian satrap, by working on the avarice and ambition of Polycrates, lured him to Magnesia, where they crucified him. The island, impoverished and devastated, was afterwards given to a brother of Polycrates. Herodotus says of Polycrates that he was the first within historical times who aimed at the sovereignty of the seas, and his ambitious schemes embraced not only the Greek islands, but also Ionia. In magnificence none of the Greek tyrants, save those of Syracuse, could compare with him. According to Aristotle, his great public works were executed for the purpose of employing his subjects, and diverting their thoughts from the recovery of their freedom. There were three great engineering and architectural works for which Samos was remarkable: (1) a tunnel about 1,400 yards long dug through a mountain, and serving to bring water to the capital;

Edinburgh. It is pleasantly situated on the shore of the Frith of Clyde, immediately opposite to the island of Bute, and there are few situations which exhibit more romantic scenery. Adjacent to the town is the battle-field of Largs, where Alexander III. defeated Haco, King of Norway, in 1263. This Haco the Fifth was surnamed the Old, and he was, on the death of his father, excluded from the throne on account of his supposed illegitimacy. He, however, became king in 1223, after his mother, to establish his rights, had undergone the ordeal of fire. He greatly increased the prosperity of Norway, and he also added to his kingdom Iceland and Greenland. His dispute with Alexander III. of Scotland was in regard to the sovereignty of the Hebrides, and he set sail in 1263 on a great expedition against the west of Scotland. He took possession of Arran and Bute; but suffered such a severe defeat at Largs that he was compelled to put to sea again. He sailed to Orkney, where he died.

THERE is probably no conspiracy in the history of the sixteenth century which can be regarded as more remarkable than that of the "Holy Maid of Kent" and her numerous accomplices. ELIZABETH BARTON lived at the house of Thomas Cobbe, in the parish of Aldington, in Kent, and happening to be visited with sickness by which her brain became weakened, she had many epileptic seizures. In her trances she saw visions and uttered words and prophecies having connection with King Henry VIII.'s endeavour to divorce Queen Catherine. She confided these to her parish priest, Richard Masters, who made them known to Dr. Bocking, a canon of Canterbury, through whom they became widely known, and were everywhere proclaimed to be Divine revelations, and she obtained the description of the "Holy Maid of Kent." Though she recovered her perfect health "by diet and physic, and by the course of nature, which expelled the matter, being the cause of her sickness," yet "by the counsel and confederacy of Dr. Bocking and Richard Masters," she did "falsely practise, use, and show unto the people diverse and miraculous sundry alterations of her sensible parts of her body, craftily uttering in her said feigned and false trances divers and many virtuous and holy words tending to the rebuke of sin, and in reproving of such new opinions as then began to spring in this realm." By these arts she was made the instrument of stirring the people of England against the divorce of Catherine by Henry. The chapel of Aldington became the centre of many pilgrimages, and the scene of many excited and tumultuous assemblies. Here she would be brought, and in an apparent state of trance went through the facial contortions she could not help in her sickness, and spoke words professing to be inspired of God, while they were the coachings of her fellow-conspirators. On one occasion more than 2,000 persons repaired to the chapel to witness her dissimulation. She afterwards became a nun in the priory of St. Sepulchre, and continued in her pretended reception of revelation from God. By her cloaked hypocrisy, she was reputed amongst many people of the realm to be a very holy woman, inspired by God, when, in fact, she never had vision or revelation, as she subsequently openly confessed herself.

She professed to see letters written in characters of gold, sent to her by Mary Magdalene, which contained both revelations and exhortations. When the king was at Calais, attending the Mass of the Blessed Sacrament, she professed to have seen the Sacrament taken away from the priest by an angel, and administered unto herself. Elizabeth affected to have communication with God on the subject of the divorce of Catherine—she asked "of Almighty God to know whether God was displeased with the King's Highness for proceeding in the said divorce and separation of the marriage between his Highness and the said Lady Catherine." She professed to have had revealed to her in answer that God was highly displeased with his Majesty, and in case he desisted not from his proceedings in "the said divorce and separation, but pursued the same and married again, that then within one month after such marriage he should no longer be king of this realm, and in the reputation of Almighty God should not be a king one day, nor one hour—that he should die a villain's death." The revelation had further informed Elizabeth that there was a root with three branches, and till they were plucked up it should never be merry in England. The root was supposed to be the late Lord Cardinal, the first branch the king, the second the Duke of Norfolk, and the third the Duke of Suffolk. This insidious conspiracy against the king grew to such proportions that his Majesty's wrath was aroused. Elizabeth Barton and her confederates were relegated to the Star Chamber, where, before the King's Council, they confessed their hypocrisy and dissimulated sanctity, and traitorous purposes and intents. They were adjudged to stand at St. Paul's Cross, where each of them should declare their subtle, crafty, and superstitious doings. This they did upon the following Sunday; but for the treason they had committed, the matter was respited to the Parliament next following, where all of them were attainted by Act of Parliament, and were sentenced to be hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn. The sentence was carried into effect on the 21st of April, 1533. Elizabeth Barton had previously given utterance to the following words:—"Hither am I come to die, and I have not been the only cause of mine own death, which most justly I have deserved; but also I am the cause of the death of all these persons, which at this time here suffer; and yet, to say the truth, I am not so much to be blamed, considering that it was known unto these learned men that I was a poor wench without learning, and therefore they might have safely perceived that the things that were done by me could not proceed in no such sort; but their capacities and learning could right well judge from whence they proceeded, and that they were altogether feigned; but because the things which I feigned were profitable unto them, therefore they much praised me, and bare me in hand that it was the Holy Ghost and not I that did them; and then I, being puffed up with their praises, fell into a certain pride and foolish phantasy with myself, and thought I might feign what I would, which thing hath brought me to this case, and for the which now I cry God and the King's Highness most heartily mercy, and desire all you good people to pray to God to have mercy on me, and on all them that here suffer with me."

CLOCK TOWER, LEICESTER.

LEICESTER.

FEW towns have such an interesting ancient history as the capital of Leicestershire, a conspicuous object in which is illustrated on this page. The Roman history of the place is remarkable. It was founded, it is said, by the King Lear of Shakespeare; it formed one of the five Danish burghs or commonwealths. A Parliament was held there in the reign of Henry V.; and Richard III., defeated and killed at Bosworth, was buried in a Franciscan convent which then stood near St. Martin's Church. At one time the town was fortified, and had a strong castle. The town is a very handsome one. The great increase of Leicester in recent times is chiefly due to the hosiery trade. For two centuries this has been almost entirely concentrated about Chesterfield and Market Harborough, Ashby-de-la-Zouche and Newark, Leicester being the centre of the woollen trade as Nottingham is of the silk, cotton, and merino. Hand-knitting was an important industry here in the latter part of the sixteenth century, and the stocking knitting-frame was introduced into Leicester soon afterwards.

THE late Mr. S. Hubert Burke says, in his entertaining "Historical Portraits of the Tudor Dynasty," that the private lives of the Plantagenets furnish materials for the most romantic narratives, of which readers of history know but little. The love-affairs of the Tudor family never ran in a straight or smooth channel. Our illustration gives a love-scene of QUEEN ELIZABETH'S at Greenwich Palace. The Duke of Anjou, through his first messenger Simier, was a suitor for Elizabeth; and the queen, after some refusals, consented to receive Simier, provided he came without parade and kept secret the object of his mission. The messenger's bearing made a great impression upon her Majesty; in fact, he became her favourite, and she never seemed so cheerful and so happy as when in his society. After the lapse of some time, and when the queen was pressed for an answer, she replied that she could not make up her mind to marry one whom she had never seen. Anjou thereupon travelled in disguise, and arrived at Greenwich Palace in September, 1578. Elizabeth was enraptured with her new lover, who was introduced to her by Lady Leighton, and only a few days of private courtship, conducted in "the most delicate and loving manner," sufficed to render him happy with the assurances of a speedy union. Upon Anjou taking leave, the queen burst into tears and kissed the prince several times. When Anjou returned to London, there had been intrigues and cabals at work to frustrate the marriage, but it was on this visit that the incident of our illustration occurred. On the 22nd of November, 1581, the queen settled down for the winter at Greenwich Palace. She was taking her morning walk in the gallery with Anjou by her side, and Leicester and Walsingham a distance behind, when suddenly the French ambassador was introduced. After some preliminary conversation, the queen addressed the French envoy in these words:—“Write to your royal master that the duke (Anjou) will be my husband.” With a sudden impulse she turned upon the prince, kissed him, took a ring from her finger and placed it on his hand. She then sent for the ladies and gentlemen of her household, and presented Anjou to them as their future master, the “husband whom she loved.” Couriers were despatched to Paris with the news, Parliament was summoned, and all was to be finally settled in a few weeks. The queen, however, was only playing a deceptive game, and when this had gone so far, her ingenuity was taxed to set Anjou aside without insulting him. In public Elizabeth affected the deepest sorrow at Anjou's departure, whilst privately she danced for joy; but Anjou was made acquainted with the deception being practised upon him. On some occasions Elizabeth assured her courtiers that her love for the French prince could never change, at another time that she could not marry a Catholic. One day, in a fit of passion, she swore she would not be Anjou's wife if it would make her empress of the universe. Anjou, on the other hand, professed a passionate and noble love for the Queen of England, and burst into tears. The fickle queen dried his tears. On a subsequent occasion she kissed him before the whole congregation in St. Paul's Cathedral, and whilst the clergy were engaged in Divine service. Later, on the anniversary of her coronation, she placed a ring on Anjou's finger, and from that time, Camden says, the prince was looked upon as her betrothed husband. On New Year's Day, after a tournament at which Anjou had exerted himself, the queen ran to him, kissed him repeatedly before the people, and subsequently led him by the hand to his bedchamber, that he might repose for awhile; and on the next morning her Majesty, accompanied by one of her ladies, visited him before he left his bed, and made inquiries as to “a good night's rest.” Ultimately, however, the engagement ended like so many others. The Fates seemed to have conspired against any match for Golden Eliza, who continued to be content with the romantic title of the “Virgin Queen.”

QUEEN VICTORIA.

(24) Her Majesty QUEEN VICTORIA, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and Empress of India, to-day completes her 68th year, and on the 20th of next month will complete the jubilee of her beneficent reign. Her age has been exceeded by six only of the Sovereigns of England, namely, Queen Elizabeth, who attained the age of 69 years; James II., who lived 68 years; George II., 77 years; George III., 82 years; George IV., 68 years; and William IV., 72 years. Her Majesty succeeded to the Throne on the 20th of June, 1837, on the death of her uncle, King William IV., and she will consequently complete the fiftieth year of her reign on that day. This length of reign has been exceeded by two only of the Monarchs of England—viz., Henry III. and George III., the former of whom reigned fifty-six years, and the latter for the long period of nearly sixty years. An extraordinary Gazette was issued on the 20th of June, 1837, announcing the death of William IV., in the following terms:—

“Windsor Castle, Tuesday, June 20th.

“It has pleased Almighty God to release from his sufferings our Most Excellent and Gracious Sovereign, King William IV.

“His Majesty expired at twelve minutes past two o'clock this day.”

As it is a recognised maxim in England that “the King never dies,” the time of the decease of King William IV. was also that of the accession to the Throne of Queen Alexandrina Victoria, or, as she was afterwards designated, Queen Victoria. The declaration made by the young Queen on entering upon the responsibilities of her high position shows the high estimate she had formed of the duties of the Sovereign of these realms, and her spirit of devotion to the welfare of the people over whom she was called to rule. “This awful responsibility,” she said, “is imposed upon me so suddenly, and at so early a period of my life, that I should feel myself utterly oppressed by the burden were I not sustained by the hope that Divine Providence, which has called me to this work, will give me strength for the performance of it, and that I shall find, in the purity of my intentions and in my zeal for the public welfare, that support and those resources which usually belong to a more mature age and to longer experience.” Forty-nine years have gone by since these words were penned, yet who to-day can doubt either the purity of the intentions or the zeal for the public welfare, which, through a long and beneficent reign, have been displayed by Her Majesty the Queen? “I place my firm reliance,” wrote Her Majesty, “upon the wisdom of Parliament, and upon the loyalty and affection of my people.” The English people are never likely to forget the one great private sorrow of Her Majesty's reign, which was likewise its greatest public calamity. Prince Albert was no common man, just as he was no common husband. He was the highest possible type at once of the perfect domestic character and the far-seeing intelligent statesman. The deep love with which his beautiful and tender nature had inspired the wife, was heightened by the lofty reverence the Sovereign was compelled to feel for his cultivated and penetrating intellect, coupled with the conscientious and self-obliterating assiduity he brought to every task of state. By the premature death of the Prince Consort the Queen lost, at one blow, the closest friend and the most trusty counsellor. It was natural that the woman's nature should be utterly unstrung by so absolute and crushing a bereavement, nor could the anguish be dissembled because the grieving widow happened to be the occupant of a throne. All these feelings and circumstances the English people well understood; and greatly as they regretted to be deprived of the constant presence of a Sovereign they loved and honoured so completely, they continued to make every allowance for a sentiment that, wherever displayed or in whatever walk of life, does honour to human nature. Her Majesty, however, has recently emerged from her retirement, to the satisfaction of that human nature which craves for some visible sign of the existence of things it reverences and worships. No doubt the mere word monarchy has considerable power over the English people, for it represents the history, the grandeur, the order, the continuity of the past. But the champions of monarchy wish ever and again to see the Monarch. The Crown is yet a phrase to conjure with; but it is the wearer of the Crown that reigns in the hearts of the English people. Nor is it any exaggeration to say that, of all the Sovereigns that have sat upon the English Throne, none have been so uniformly popular and so universally beloved as Queen Victoria. Now the nation is celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of her accession. In half a century a Monarch has abundant opportunities of offending the sentiment, of coming into conflict with the interests of the nation; and even an able, victorious, and popular King like Edward III. did not escape some eclipse of the favour in which he had been held by his subjects. But at no moment has the tie of confidence and affection between the Crown and the nation been overclouded during the present reign. As we have said, only a great personal sorrow has darkened that long and otherwise happy era. The scrupulous observance by the Queen of her constitutional obligations has never been interrupted. The Queen has never been for a party. She has always been for the State. Whatever may be her private and personal opinion as to the wisdom or folly of this or that public measure, she has never given expression to it; and legislation which, perhaps, the community now sees to have been hasty and unwise, has promptly received her sanction after being passed by the two Houses of Parliament.

APPIUS CLAUDIUS was the most influential member of the Decemviri of Rome. The Decemviri was a famous body composed of ten patrician lawgivers, who were deputed to draw up a code of laws for Rome upon the basis of information collected by a commission in Greece. A dispute had arisen between the Plebeians and the Patricians as to the constitution of the council of lawgivers, but the latter had prevailed, and they were entrusted with the government of the State during the year they held office. A succeeding Decemviri, however, among the members of which was only one of the previous council—viz., Appius Claudius—conducted themselves with marked tyranny. Every species of outrage, notably by the notorious Appius, was committed upon the Plebeians, and such a despotic altitude did the Decemviri assume that they refused to retire when the period of their office had closed, and they defied the re-election of successors. It was in this state of public feeling that the life of the beautiful VIRGINIA was sacrificed, ere her honour could be outraged by the brutal Appius Claudius. He had long cast envious eyes upon the maiden, who was the daughter of a Plebeian leader, and in order to obtain possession of her he induced Marcus Claudius, one of his clients, to declare that she was his slave. A mock trial took place in the Forum before a large concourse of people. The judge was Appius Claudius, who, by his verdict, adjudged Virginia to the plaintiff. Outraged at the result, the father rushed to the front, and plunging a knife into his daughter's heart, saved her from dishonour. This sacrifice of Virginia still further excited the Plebeians, who triumphed in the deposition of the Decemviri, and re-established the old constitution. Appius Claudius died in prison by his own hand, or was strangled by order of the Tribunes, and Marcus Claudius was banished.

RUGBY SCHOOL.

The school buildings at Rugby form a very striking group, and although there may be architectural defects, yet their situation and their memories are great substitutes for elaborate and perfect design. The effect from the close, where huge elms cast their shadows over the greensward, and alternately mask or disclose the various portions of the structures, is one of no little beauty. There is not at Rugby either the park-like scenery of the playing-fields by the strong stream of the Thames, or the antique courts of Winchester. We have not the picturesque clustering of the buildings on the hill of Harrow, nor their wide outlook over a broad valley and the margin of a great metropolis. At Rugby all is of the present century as regards the buildings—all is of the quiet and homely Midlands as regards the scenery. There is, nevertheless, much quiet beauty among its shady lanes and its gently sloping pastures; and the school is a standing memorial of what can be done by one strong man without the prestige of an ancient name or of a titled founder—without the gentis loci of buildings three centuries old, or of a long line of distinguished scholars. Rugby School numbers among its old boys a goodly list of men distinguished in the battle-field, the law, the Church, and the State: Hodson, of Indian fame, Sir Ralph Abercrombie, and Field-Marshal Combermere; Cave, the originator of the Gentleman's Magazine; Walter Savage Landor and Dean Stanley; Macready the actor; Deans of Westminster, Durham, and Llandaff; Lord Derby, Lord Selborne, M. Waddington, Sir Richard Temple, Sir Thomas Brassey, Sir R. A. Cross, &c. &c.

The history of the town of Rugby is not remarkable. Before the days of the Norman Conquest we hear nothing of it. At that time it was a small village, which appears in Domesday Book under the name of Rocheberie, which is held by Dugdale to be derived from roche, a rock or stone quarry, and berie, a court or house of importance. At this period it belonged to Turchill of Warwick. There was a castle on a rising ground close to the town, which still bears the name of Castle Mount. Dug-dale is of opinion that this castle is one of those erected by King Stephen in order to maintain himself against the Empress Maud, and that it was demolished in the following reign. At any rate it makes no figure in history, and all traces of it have disappeared. The family to whom the manor belonged wrote their name as Rokeby, one of the forms under which the place is designated. The house of Rokeby became extinct in the male line in the reign of Edward I. By Leland, in the time of Henry VIII., Rugby (so called for the first time) is only casually mentioned as a small market town;

indeed, even in the days of Lawrence Sheriffe, the founder of the school, the number of its inhabitants would hardly have entitled it to the appellation of more than a village.

MONT CÉNIS.

(15) Nearly twenty years ago one of the greatest triumphs of engineering skill was consummated by the opening of this railway through the Alps. Mont Cénis is a pass of the Cottian Alps, between Savoy and Piedmont, the highest point of which is 6,775 feet above the level of the sea. The pass was used from the earliest times; but the road was bad and dangerous. In 1810 an excellent road, begun by the orders of Bonaparte in 1803, was completed at an expense of £300,000. By this Napoleon III. sent his troops into Italy in his campaign against Austria in 1859. The most remarkable tunnel in the world is that of Mont Cénis. It is fully $\frac{1}{2}$ miles long. It was constructed as an experimental line at a cost of £8,000 per mile by Mr. Fell, upon a principle patented nearly fifty years before by Mr. Vignolles and Mr. Ericsson, and first tried on the Cromford and High Peak line in England. The chief features of this plan are horizontal wheels, which, when the break is applied, grasp a central rail, and thus enable trains to traverse curves of 135 feet radius, and to ascend and descend with safety gradients of one in fifteen, and even one in twelve. From Lansiebourg, where the pass properly begins, the line climbed on the outer edge of Napoleon's road in six sweeping zigzags with a gradient of one in fifteen to one in twelve and a half to the top, a distance of six miles and a third, and a height of 2,240 feet. On the side of Italy it descended 5,211 feet to Susa, curling in its course like a serpent. The maximum speed here allowed was fifteen miles an hour, but with the central line brakes moderately applied, the train run easily down the steep and circuitous incline. The carriages were on the American model, with entrance behind and seats arranged in the omnibus fashion, and each had a guard and two breaks.

THE charming river Bidassoa, which forms part of the boundary between France and Spain, was the scene of one of the most memorable incidents of the Peninsular campaign. The river rises in Spain, and flowing south-west by north, enters the Bay of Biscay. At every bend in the river the road along its banks brings the traveller suddenly on some new and striking feature. The pleasing combination of wood and rock, overhanging the beautifully winding stream, contrasted with the barren grandeur of the mountain summits which tower above them, present an infinitude of delightful prospects. The oak, the chestnut, and the walnut are the most conspicuous trees along the valley and the slopes of the inferior hills, whilst among the crevices of the rocks the evergreen box tree grows with surprising luxuriance, and by its deep verdure relieves, while it contrasts in a very charming manner with the bright silver tints of the surrounding rocks clothed with lichens. Fuenterabia is situate at the mouth of the river. It is a thoroughly old Spanish town, full of picturesque characters, fallen ramparts and grand houses, half-ruined, celebrated by Milton in connection with "the dolorous rout" of Roncesvalles, which is forty miles distant. In former times it was a strong frontier fortress. It was here the Prince of Condé was repulsed in 1638. The river widens below the bridge into a tidal rio or estuary. It was also on the island, at the mouth of the Bidassoa, that the Treaty of the Pyrenees was concluded in 1659. The episode represented in our illustration occurred in the year 1813, when, after the victory at Vittoria, the British army under Wellington drove the French across the Pyrenees into their own country. It is unnecessary here to enter into the origin of the Peninsular War. That is told succinctly enough in Mr. H. R. Clinton's History (the Chandos Classics). Suffice it to describe Wellington's feat at this historical embouchure in the teeth of the French army, a feat which has been fitly described as one of the most daring of military exploits. The French occupied the strongly fortified position on the dizzy heights of the immense mountain group, the Rhune, the Commissari, and the Bayonette, on the right bank of the river; the bridges were broken down, and every known ford was commanded by cannon, leaving Soult in security from an attack, save in the upper course of the river. The French line of entrenchments had been strengthened on the most vulnerable points by abattis, or breastworks formed of felled trees, and the softer twigs being cut off, laid side by side with the branches turned towards the enemy.

For the construction of these defences the numerous orchards in the district had been cut down. Clinton says that Wellington's design was with his left and centre to storm the entrenchments on these mountains which pointed towards the French centre, and to separately assail Maucunis in Reille's corps and Taupin's divisions in Clause's corps with such speed that their reserves could not be brought into action in time. By this skilful combination the river road from Irun to Vera would be gained, and the fort of Puenterabia must necessarily fall into the hands of the allies. All the preparations were made with secrecy.

The Duke had ascertained from some Basque fishermen the existence of a ford close to the sea, nearly opposite Puenterabia, practicable only for three or four hours at neap tides, but at other times covered with sixteen feet of water. These fishermen fixed the marks for Wellington's purpose, and their movements in doing so were mistaken by Soult for their ordinary avocations. Wellington marched his columns unseen behind the hills on the left bank during the night of the 6th-7th of October, and under the cover of a thunderstorm he placed guns and howitzers on the St. Marcial ridge. Several feints had been made to mislead Soult as to the real point of attack, and the French continued busy with their entrenchments. The tents were left in statu quo, no change was visible in the disposition of the allies till, on a rocket being sent up from the steeples of Puenterabia as the signal at seven o'clock on the morning of the 7th, the British troops were seen to emerge seven columns at once on a line of five miles, the lowest winding like serpents across the wet sands to the several points of passage. So unexpected was the movement that the passage was completed, and the allies' lines were drawn up on the French side of the Bidassoa before a single French gun was fired. Soult was absent at Espelette; the sound of the heavy cannonade roused him to the point of real attack, and he hurried back to repulse it; but before his arrival the encampments on the Bidassoa were lost. The first division, says the writer already referred to, drove back the enemy's right to the Croix des Bouquets heights; these, the key of the position, were won by a furious charge of the 9th Regiment. The entrenchment above Biaritz was defended successfully in front, but its left was turned by Freyre's Spaniards, the Mandale mountain was carried, and now Reille's corps, thrown into disorder along its whole line, fell back by the royal road of Bayonne with the loss of 400 men and eight guns. The allies in this conflict lost 600 men, half of them Spaniards. Clause's divisions were equally surprised in the second combat of Vera, while the Boar's Rock, an isolated ridge, was simultaneously assailed at both ends when the rocket appeared, and, when the ridge was won, a concentric movement was made upon the redoubt on the higher range behind. The shouts of the combatants, the rattle of musketry, and all the confusion of war like struggle, reached in the wooded hollows, and the white wreaths of smoke veiled as with mist the hills around. Very soon the riflemen issued from the forest recesses out upon the open slopes, and closed upon the redoubts; but the French rushed out, and with a rough sally scattered them.

INVERNESS CATHEDRAL.

The invincible 52nd Regiment, however, were at that instant in full career, seeing which, the French turned and ran back in a mob to the redoubt. With them entered the gallant 52nd, the riflemen rallied, and in a few minutes the French, driven out, sought refuge in the second entrenchment. Colborne next carried this; but a heavy fire was carried on upon the crest of the Bayonette mountain, lasting five hours. At the expiration of this desperate struggle three ridges were carried—the Bayonette, Commissari, and Puerto de Vera. The great Rhune mountain was the next shelter for the French. Night fell with the Rhune still in Clause's possession. In consequence, the possession of the line was deemed by Wellington insecure, so on the following day, the 8th of October, he ordered a combined attack upon the left flank of the mountain, which was accessible, and upon the camp of Sarre. Fearing to be cut off, Clause concentrated on the ridge behind Sarre, but leaving his right on the lesser Rhune, and two regiments on the Hermitage rock. The latter were afraid of being isolated, and they abandoned the position. Operations closed on the following day with a total loss to the French in the actions comprised in the passage of the Bidassoa of 1,400. The allies' loss was greater, viz., 1,600, half of whom were Spaniards.

THERE is an old letter in manuscript, which is accounted one of the choicest treasures in the Queen's Library at Oxford, which sets forth an account, ex parte perhaps, but nevertheless what has been regarded as a generally fair statement regarding one of the bloodiest mortal combats which ever engaged a couple of English gentlemen in the history of this country. It was the duel between EDWARD SACKVILLE, afterwards Earl of Dorset, and LORD BRUCE, which took place betwixt Antwerp and Bergenopzoom in Zealand, and was the cause of some commotion at the time. Sir Richard Steele, in The Guardian of the period, gave a dissertation on duelling, and embodied the following documents, which led to the encounter above illustrated:—(1) "To SIR EDWARD SACKVILLE,—I, that am in France, hear how much you attribute to yourself in this trial, that I have given the world leave to ring your praises. If you call to memory, when I gave you my hand last, I told you I reserved the heart for a truer reconciliation. Now be that noble gentleman my lord once spoke you, and come and do him right that could recite the trials you owe your birth and country, were I not confident your honour gives you the same courage to do me right that it did to do me wrong. Be master of your own weapons and time; the place wheresoever I will wait on you. By doing this you will shorten revenge, and clear the idle opinion the world hath of both our works.—ED. BRUCE." (2) "To LORD BRUCE,—As it shall be always far from me to seek a quarrel, so will I always be ready to meet with any that desire to make a trial of my valour by so fair a course as you require. A witness whereof yourself shall be, who within a month shall receive a strict account of time, place, and weapon, where you shall find me ready disposed to give you honourable satisfaction by him that shall conduct you thither. In the meantime, be as secret of the appointment as it seems you are desirous of it.—ED. SACKVILLE." (3) "To LORD BRUCE—I am ready at Tergoso, a town in Zealand, to give you that satisfaction your sword can render you, accompanied by a worthy gentleman for my second, in degree a knight; and for your coming I will not limit you a peremptory day, but desire you to make a definite and speedy repair for your own honour and fear of prevention, until which time you shall find me there.—ED. SACKVILLE.—Tergoso, 10th August, 1613." (4) "To SIR E. SACKVILLE,—I have received your letter by your man, and acknowledge you have dealt nobly with me, and now I come with all possible speed to meet you.—ED. BRUCE."

The document at Oxford before alluded to is an elaborate one, and although from it the cause of the quarrel does not appear, yet it sufficiently warrants the observation by Steele, that "the gallant behaviour of the combatants may serve to raise in our minds a yet higher detestation of that false honour which robs our country of men so fitted to adorn it." The gist of Sir Edward Sackville's relation of the fight we summarise:—"The enclosed contains the first citation (the challenge numbered 1 given above) sent me from Paris by a Scotch gentleman, who delivered it to me in Derbyshire. After it follows my answer (No. 2), returned by the same bearer. The next is my accomplishment of my first promise (No. 3), which I sent by a servant of mine, by post from Rotterdam, as soon as I landed there, the receipt of which, 'joined with an acknowledgment of my two-pair carriage to the deceased lord,' is testified by the last (No. 4), which terminates the business till we meet at Tergoso, in Zealand, where he, accompanied with one Mr. Crawford, an English gentleman, for his second, a surgeon, and a man, arrived with all the speed he could. I addressed my second, Sir John Heidon, to let him understand that now all following should be done by consent, as concerning the terms whereon we should fight, as also the place. To our seconds we gave power of our appointment, who agreed we should go to Antwerp, from thence to Bergenopzoom, where in the midway but a village divides the State's territory from the Arch-bishop's. And there was the destined stage, to the end that having ended, he that could might presently exempt himself from the justice of the country by retiring into the dominion not offended.' It was further concluded, that in case any should fall or slip, that then the combat should cease, and he whose ill-fortune had so subjected him was to acknowledge his life to have been in the other's hands. Other preliminaries having been arranged, Lord Bruce, past expectation, told Sir John Heidon that he found himself so far behind-hand that a little of my blood would not serve his turn, and therefore he was resolved to have me alone, because he knew that so worthy a gentleman, and my friend, could not endure to stand by and see him do that which he must to satisfy himself and his honour. Sir John Heidon replied that such intentions were bloody and butcherly, far unfitting so noble a personage, who should desire to bleed for reputation, not for life, adding, he thought himself injured, having come so far, to be prohibited executing those honourable offices he came for. Lord Bruce answered by reiterating his former resolutions, whereupon Sir John, leaving him the sword he had selected, delivered me the other, with his determinations. We rode to the place of assignation, I being verily mad with anger that Lord Bruce should thirst after my life with a kind of assuredness, seeing I had come so far, and needlessly, to give him leave to regain his lost reputation. I bade him alight, which with all willingness he quickly granted. There, in a meadow ankle-deep in water, at the least bidding farewell to our doublets, in our shirts we began to charge each other, having previously commanded our surgeons to withdraw themselves a distance from us, conjuring them, besides, as they respected our favours or their own safety, not to stir, but suffer us to execute our pleasure. We being fully resolved (God forgive us) to despatch each other by what means we could, I made thrust at my enemy, but was short, and in drawing back my arm I received a great wound thereon, which I interpreted as a reward for my short shooting; but in revenge I pressed into him, though I then missed him also, and then received a wound in my right breast, which passed level through my body and almost to my back. And there we wrestled for the two greatest and dearest prizes we could ever expect trial for—honour and life; in which struggling my hand, having but an ordinary glove on it, lost one of her servants, though the meanest, which hung by a skin, and to sight yet remaineth as before, and I am put in hope one day to recover the use of it again. But at last breathless, yet keeping our holds, there passed on both sides propositions of quitting each other's swords. But when amity was dead confidence could not live, and who should quit first was the question, which on neither part either would perform, and re-striving again afresh, with a kick and a wrench together, I freed my long-captivated weapon, which incontinently leving at his throat, being still master of his, I demanded if he would ask his life or yield his sword, both which, though in that imminent danger, he bravely refused to do. Myself being wounded and feeling loss of blood, having three conduits running on me, began to make me faint, and he courageously persisting not to accord to either of my propositions, remembrance of his former bloody desire and feeling of my present estate, I struck at his heart, but with his avoiding missed my aim, yet passed through the body, and drawing through my sword, re-passed it through again, through another place. He cried, 'Oh, I'm slain!' seconding his speech with all the force he had to cast me. But being too weak, after I had defended his assault, I easily became master of him, laying him on his back. Being upon him I re-demanded if he would request his life, but it seems he prized it not at so dear a rate to be beholden for it, bravely replying he scorned it. This answer of his was so noble and worthy that I protest I could not find in my heart to offer him any more violence, only keeping him down, till at length his surgeon, afraid, cried he would immediately die if his wounds were not stopped. At this I asked him if he desired his surgeon to come, which he did, and so being drawn away, I never offered to take his sword, accounting it inhuman to rob a dead man, for so I accounted him to be. This then ended, I retired to my surgeon, in whose arms, after I had remained awhile for want of blood, I lost my sight, and, as I then thought, my life also. But strong water, and his diligence quickly recovered me when I escaped a great danger; for my lord's surgeon, when nobody dreamt of it, came full at me with his lord's sword, and had not mine with my sword interposed himself, I had been slain by those base hands, although my Lord Bruce, weltering in his blood and past all expectation of life, conformable to all his former carriage, which was undoubtedly noble, cried out, 'Rascal, hold thy hand!' Such is the narration, dated Louvain, September 8th, 1613, in which the writer concludes:—"So may I prosper, as I have dealt sincerely with you in this relation, which I pray you, with the enclosed letter, deliver to my Lord Chamberlain." Lord Sackville was but in his twenty-third year at the time of the above encounter, and we learn from Lord Clarendon that this was not the only quarrel of the kind into which he was drawn through the excessive heat and fire of his temper. He was in great favour at Court, and at the creation of Charles, Prince of Wales (afterwards Charles I.), on the 4th November, 1616, he was made one of the Knights of the Bath to grace that solemnity. He was also one of the commanders of the forces sent in 1620 to arrest Frederick, King of Bohemia, at which time was fought the battle of Prague; he succeeded Lord Herbert of Cherbourg as ambassador to the French king, and was afterwards called by King James I. to the Privy Council. He became a leading member of the House of Commons, and shone in the House of Peers. After the accession of Charles I. he was at the head of all national affairs conducive to the interest of the country. He was conspicuous in the Rebellion, leading on the Royalist troops when they re-took the royal standard at Edgehill.

IT was towards the latter end of the year 1809 that NAPOLEON's manner was observed to have changed to a very great degree towards the EMPRESS JOSEPHINE. On their return, after the campaign, to France—Napoleon from Schönbrunn, and Josephine from Strasburg—the empress was alarmed at the circumstance of the private communication between her room and the emperor's having been shut up. An alteration in the features of Josephine, and a silent reserve on the part of the emperor, also made it apparent that there was a change, and the explanation was arrived at on the 30th of November. Dinner had been served as usual; Josephine had a large hat tied under her chin, which hid her face in part, but she seemed to have been weeping, and still had some difficulty to restrain her tears. She was the picture of grief. Neither party spoke during dinner, nor touched anything but for form's sake. Having asked what time it was, Napoleon rose, and Josephine slowly followed him. Coffee was presented to him, and he made a sign to the attendants to retire. The chief of these (M. de Bausset) had hardly got out of the room when all of a sudden he heard violent cries uttered by the empress. Napoleon, appearing at the door, said eagerly, "Come in, Bausset, and close the door." The empress was stretched on the floor, venting the most piteous complaints, and saying, "No, I shall never survive it." At the desire of Napoleon, the attendants conveyed Josephine to her room. Napoleon retired to an ante-room, and in his extreme agitation and distress of mind told the cause of what had happened, thus:—"The interest of France, and of my dynasty, has done a violence to my heart. The divorce has become an imperative duty upon me. I am so much the more hurt at the scene which Josephine has just exhibited, because three days ago she ought to have learnt from Hortense the melancholy obligation which compels me to separate from her. I am grieved to the heart for her. I thought she had more firmness, and was not prepared for this excess of her sorrow." Josephine at this time was six-and-forty, and she descended from the height to which she had been raised with calmness and dignity, and retired into private life, where she continued to retain the rank and magnificence of an Empress-Dowager. The "consideration" of the most advantageous matrimonial alliance for Napoleon was made by the Council soon after the divorce of Josephine was declared, and the Arch-Duchess Maria Louisa of Austria was the selected one. The necessary consent having been obtained, the formalities for the marriage ceremony were arranged. It was celebrated in the presence of "all that was most distinguished in France or nearly in Europe," and on the 27th of April the Emperor and Empress set out on a tour through the Northern Departments, to give the good city of Paris time to breathe. Dances, garlands of flowers, and triumphal arches welcomed them all the way. On their return, in June, the rejoicings were renewed, and it is this period which leads us up to our illustration. The Austrian Ambassador, the Prince of Schwartzenburg, gave a ball in honour of the event at the Austrian Embassy. The ground floor of the ancient Hôtel de Montesson, which he occupied in the Rue Chaussée d'Antin, was not large enough to hold all the company invited. The Prince therefore had a superb ball-room constructed of wood in the garden, with a gallery of the same material leading to it, the ceilings of which were covered with varnished paper, and ornamented with paintings. The floors were connected by planks of cross-timbers to the level of the rooms of the house, and an immense chandelier was suspended from the ceiling of the ball-room. Candles were also used in the illumination of the walls of the gallery and ball-room. In the center of the room was a box reserved for the Imperial family. This faced the entrance from the gallery, and there was a private door close to it for the use of the Emperor and Empress. The fête commenced with dancing in the garden, which was splendidly illuminated; not so horribly, though, as it was destined to be during the festival. The dancing had continued about an hour, when a current of air blew one of the curtains at the entrance to the wooden gallery across the lighted candles, which had been fixed too near. In a moment the ceiling of the ball-room was in a blaze. The Emperor and Empress escaped with ease from the danger by the door which had been left behind their box. He made the carriages draw up, saw the Empress as far as the Place Louis XV, on her way to St. Cloud, and returned to assist in extinguishing the conflagration. The flames had made terrible progress; the chandeliers suspended from the centre of the ball-room fell with a tremendous crash; and in the hurry and fright, the crowd pressing towards the entrance stopped up the passage, and with this collected weight the floor gave way, and numberless victims were crushed to death, or enveloped in the flames which burst out on all sides. The noise and confusion in the garden was indescribable. Friends were frantically seeking friends, while the different members of a family were agonisingly calling to one another. In a very short time—a briefer period than it takes to recount the terrible story—the temple of gaiety and enchantment was no more. Nothing was left but blazing fragments and a melancholy stupor, when suddenly a young woman, handsome, elegantly dressed, and covered with diamonds, rushed forward from the smoking rafters, calling out for her children. The apparition vanished as soon as it was seen. It was the Princess of Schwartzenburg, who perished, while her young family were assembled in the garden, and out of reach of danger. Napoleon, by the directions he gave, saved several lives; but Prince Schwartzenburg never recovered from the effects of his loss.

LINDORE'S ABBEY.

THE ruins of Lindore's Abbey are situate at the north-east extremity of Newburgh, near the river Tay, on a gentle rise, in the middle of a rich and extensive flat of clay land. The abbey was founded by David, the Earl of Huntingdon, in the year 1173, in memory of his taking Ptolemais in the Holy Land. It was bestowed upon the monks of St. Benedict, of the order of Tironensis, was dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Andrew the Apostle, and from grants bestowed upon it from time to time it came to be one of the most richly endowed monasteries in the kingdom. The founder of it died at Geconlay, and was buried at Soltray in the year 1219. King Robert the Bruce claimed the Crown by his mother, daughter of this earl, in 1218. St. Bernard was the founder of the order at Tiron in France, and, in addition to the rules instituted by St. Benedict, added new regulations of his own, requiring the practice of various industries within the monastery.

IT is often remarkable how "great events from little causes spring," and if that is the case with empires it is also the case in the smaller social circles of every-day life. But our illustration represents a contretemps of a more than usually extraordinary character, which occurred at a royal ball at St. James's Palace nearly a century ago, and which was the direct outcome of some indiscretion at a regal dinner party. Perhaps it may be as well to premise the record of the occurrence by recalling an incident when the firmness and decision of Pitt the younger's character was somewhat remarkably displayed. It was in 1788 when the mental malady of the king incapacitated him from performing the functions of royalty, and the kingdom was thereupon struck with great consternation. The first question brought up by this event was, in whom the office of regent was vested. The Prince of Wales being connected with the party in opposition, it was contended by them that the regency of course devolved upon him; whilst on the other hand Mr. Pitt supported the doctrine that it lay in the two remaining branches of the Legislature to fill up the office as they should judge proper, admitting at the same time that no other person but the Prince could be thought of for the post. By adopting this principle he had the good fortune to obtain the concurrence as well of those who were attached to the popular part of the constitution as of the King's friends, whose object was to secure his return to power on the cessation of his malady, and he was enabled to pass a Bill restricting the power of the regent. The mention of Pitt's name in the manner hereafter set forth was the cause of a duel and the occurrence at St. James's Palace, which, somewhat elaborated, forms one of Burke's aristocratic "anecdotes." In the year 1784, when the Duke of York was in his twenty-sixth year, Colonel Lennox was a guest at a dinner party given by the Prince of Wales. During the excitement of the evening the health of Mr. Pitt was given by Colonel Lennox. This led to an angry quarrel, which, however, was subsequently settled, for the time at least. But the next day a report was current that the Duke of York had spoken harshly and unfavourably at his club of the conduct of Colonel Lennox, and had asserted that terms had been applied to him to which no gentleman ought to submit. Colonel Lennox heard of these assertions and insinuations, and lost no time in demanding of the Duke of York, while on parade, what were the words to which he, Colonel Lennox, had submitted, and by whom they had been spoken. The Duke of York replied by the peremptory command that the lieutenant-colonel should return to his post. Parade over, the duke sent for Colonel Lennox to the orderly-room, and, in the presence of all the other officers, said that he desired to receive no protection from his position as a prince or his station as a commanding officer. His Royal Highness added: "When not on duty I wear a brown coat, and have none of the paraphernalia of rank. Neither the blood which is my boast, nor the position which I hold in the army, shall exempt me from any obligation which I may possibly owe as a private gentleman." After this declaration, Colonel Lennox sent a circular to the members of the club at which the Duke of York had said he heard the observations applied to Colonel Lennox. The circular was sent to each individual member, desiring him "to let him know if he could recollect any expression to have been used in his (Colonel Lennox's) presence, which could bear the construction put upon it by his Royal Highness; and in such case, to whom the expression was used." Colonel Lennox did not receive any affirmative answer, nor would the Duke of York offer any further explanation, whereupon Colonel Lennox thought it imperative that he should call upon his Royal Highness for the satisfaction due from one gentleman to another. The duke consented to the meeting, waiving all personal distinctions, and with Lord Rawdon as his second, met Colonel Lennox, with Lord Winchelsea as his "friend." The following is the account by the two seconds of the meeting:—"In consequence of a dispute already known to the public, his Royal Highness the Duke of York, attended by Lord Rawdon, and the Lieut.-Colonel Lennox, accompanied by the Earl of Winchelsea, met at Wimbledon Common. The ground was measured at twelve paces, and both parties were to fire at a signal agreed upon. The signal being given, Lieut.-Colonel Lennox fired, and the ball grazed his Royal Highness's curl; the Duke of York did not fire. Lieut.-Colonel Lennox observed that his Royal Highness had not fired. Lord Rawdon said it was not the duke's intention to fire; his Royal Highness had come out upon Lieut.-Colonel Lennox's desire to give him satisfaction, and had no animosity against him. Lieut.-Colonel Lennox pressed that the Duke of York should fire, which was declined, upon a repetition of the reason. Lord Winchelsea then went up to the Duke of York and expressed his hope that his Royal Highness could have no objection to say he considered Lieut.-Colonel Lennox as a man of honour and courage. His Royal Highness replied that he should say nothing—he had come out to give Lieut.-Colonel Lennox satisfaction, and did not mean to fire at him; if Lieut.-Colonel Lennox was not satisfied he might fire again. Lieut.-Colonel Lennox said he could not possibly fire again at the duke, as his Royal Highness did not mean to fire at him. On this both parties left the ground. The seconds think it proper to add that both parties behaved with the most perfect coolness and intrepidity." This affair of honour was kept a great secret until it was over, and after the lapse of three days, Colonel Lennox's brother officers met on his requisition to deliberate on the following question, which he had submitted:—"Whether he had behaved in the late dispute as became a gentleman and an officer?" On the 30th of May the officers arrived at the following decision:—"It is the opinion of the officers of the Coldstream regiment that subsequent to the 15th of May, the day of the meeting at the orderly-room, Lieut.-Colonel Lennox has behaved with courage, but from the peculiar difficulty of the situation, not with judgment." Sir John Bernard Burke says this was the first instance of a prince of the blood in England being challenged by a subject. The case, however, occurred in France only a few years before, when the Prince de Condé fought an officer of his own regiment. The occurrence was overlooked by the king; but the Prince of Wales could not restrain his feelings, and the illustration above exhibits one peculiar form in which he demonstrated his resentment. The following is a copy of the newspaper paragraph of the day, describing the occurrence:—"Colonel Lennox, to the surprise of every one, had appeared at the ball given at St. James's on the King's birthday (1789). The colonel stood up in the country dance with Lady Catherine Barnard. The prince, who danced with his sister, the Princess Royal, was so far down the set that the colonel and Lady Catherine were the next couple. The prince paused, looked at the colonel, took his partner's hand, and led her to the bottom of the dance. The Duke of Clarence followed his example, but the Duke of York made no distinction between the colonel and the other gentlemen of the party. When the colonel and his partner had danced down the set, the prince again took his sister's hand and led her to a seat. Observing this, the queen approached, and said to the prince, 'You are heated, sir, and tired. I had better leave the apartment and put an end to the dance.' 'I am heated,' replied the prince, 'and tired, not with dancing, but with a portion of the company,' and emphatically added, 'I certainly never will countenance an insult offered to my family, however it may be regarded by others.' The prince's natural gallantry next day offered the necessary apology to Lady Catherine Barnard in the expression of regret that he should have caused her a moment's embarrassment." Colonel Lennox succeeded to the Dukedom of Richmond in 1806, and died on the 28th of August, 1819.

INVERNESS.

INVERNESS is the capital of the northern Highlands. Its situation on the river Ness, hard by the confluence of that stream with the sea at the foot of the hills, and on the margin of a fertile plain, has long rendered it a place of importance, strategically and commercially. In ancient days it was, perhaps, even more than Glasgow, the Ragusa of Caledonia, where merchant and mountaineer, shepherd and mariner, met together, bought, sold, bartered, and quarrelled. But though it is a very ancient place, there are few relics of antiquity in Inverness. An old castle, blown up by Charles Edward, has been rebuilt, and the terrace in front of the renewed edifice commands the view over the town, which possesses some architecturally interesting buildings. Among these is the Town Hall, opened by the Duke of Edinburgh. It is a handsome building in the florid Decorated style prevalent in Scotland in the latter part of the fifteenth century. Inverness also is the seat of the episcopal see of Moray and Ross, and the cathedral of our illustration occupies a site on the low ground on the left bank of the Ness. It is cruciform in plan, with two western towers; but is not larger than many parish churches in England, and though pleasing in design, offers little special attraction. Beyond Inverness itself several other places near are attractive, notably the hill fort of Craig Phadwick, crowning a steep and isolated eminence, which rises more than 400 feet above the plain; the fatal Muir of Culloden, where was lost the last hope of the House of Stuart; Loch Dochfour, situated in the traces of an encampment said to be Roman; Loch Ness, along the shores and among the glens of which are several mansions. The most interesting is Urquhart Castle, which rises on a headland jutting into the water. It is a building of considerable antiquity, some parts going back to the fourteenth, and others to the twelfth century. Early in the former it was besieged by troops of Edward I.

THE earlier half of the seventeenth century was remarkable for episodes innumerable, not only of historical, but of domestic interest, and the story of the siege of Lathom House, near Ormskirk, the seat of the Earl of Derby, is by no means one of the least exciting and romantic. It is of more than usual interest, because it was the tact and heroism of the COUNTESS OF DERBY, the ever-memorable Charlotte de la Tremouille, that victoriously garrisoned the mansion in the absence of her lord at the Isle of Man. The hurried departure of Lord Derby for that island left him little time to get men and arms together to protect Lathom House from the Roundheads, but what he left incomplete was made up for by the sagacity and stratagem of the countess after his departure. The situation of the house has been thus described:—"Before the house to the south and south-west is a rising ground, so near it as to overlook the top of it, from which it falls so quick that nothing planted against it on those sides can track it further than the front wall; and on the north and last sides there is another rising ground even to the edge of the moat, and then falls away so quick that you can scarce, at the distance of a carbine shot, see the house over that height, so that all batteries placed there are so far below it as to be of little service against it; only let us observe by the way that the uncommon situation of it may be compared to the palm of a man's hand, flat in the middle and covered with a rising round about it, and so near to it that the enemy in two years' siege were never able to raise a battery against it, so as to make a breach in the wall practicable to enter the house by way of storm." The countess, at the period of which we write, lost no time in disciplining the men. At length the Parliamentarians arrived within a couple of miles, on March 28, 1644. Sir Thomas Fairfax desired a conference with the countess, which was granted; and he, with a number of his officers, informed her of his orders to reduce Lathom House to their obedience. It was intimated that she might be allowed to move in honour and with safety, and take with her the children, servants, &c., to the earl's house at Knowsley. The countess answered, that till she had obtained the consent of her husband and her sovereign, she could not give up that house without manifest disloyalty and breach of trust to both. She therefore desired a month's time, within which, if she obtained their consent, she would yield up the house. A clever ruse by Mr. Rutter, afterwards Bishop Rutter, accomplished the delay sought for. A fortnight elapsed, and Sir Thomas Fairfax demanded a surrender. The countess's reply was that as she had not lost her regard for the Church of England, nor her allegiance to her Prince, nor her faith to her lord, she could not therefore as yet give up the house; that they must never hope to gain it till she had lost all these or her life in defence of them. The general had his eyes opened by this reply to the deception which had been played upon him; but he was just now called away, and his command devolved upon Colonel Egerton, assisted by Colonel Rigby and Major Morgan. The former gave orders for drawing a line of circumvallation round the house, and the countess resolved to interrupt the besiegers with a vigorous sally, which was so successful, that with the loss of only two men on their part, they killed about sixty of the besiegers and took about as many more prisoners. The Roundheads retired to a safer distance, completing the line in about five weeks. They erected a strong battery, upon which they placed a mortar, and from which they fired shells and stones, to the consternation of the besieged. One of the shells exploded in the room where the countess and her children were dining, but they were unhurt. This was by no means the only escape enjoyed by the countess. The Roundheads, however, poured in such a pitiless storm of shot and shell, that despair almost took possession of the little garrison. A council of war was held, and a bold course determined upon—viz. to make a vigorous sally, and endeavour to destroy the batteries. Next morning, after prayers, the countess led her gallant troop out of the gates, marching with them up to the very trenches. The encounter was a remarkable one. It lasted half an hour, when the Roundheads took to their heels, and the victors disabled the cannon, or rolled them into the moat. The mortar itself was taken to enrich the battlements of the mansion, and for use against its old friends. The Royalists returned to the citadel; the Roundheads rallied, and numerous desperate encounters followed. When four months had elapsed, it was painfully evident to the inmates that unless help arrived they must inevitably surrender. Their courage, however, was undaunted, and the countess somewhat astonished Colonel Rigby by her laconic reply to his demand of surrender. She replied by the trumpeter who had brought the message, "Tell that insolent rebel Rigby, that if he presumes to send any other summons, I will hang up the messenger at the gates." Help, however, was soon at hand. The earl, hearing of the distress of the countess, obtained Prince Rupert and his troops, who scattered the Roundheads, leaving the countess victorious.

Reference to Illustration.

THE incident of the illustration was a remarkable one in the life of VOLTAIRE, to which he was indebted for his imprisonment in the Bastille, and his subsequent exile. He was born in 1694, was a weakly child, and in his infancy was abandoned to the care of his nurse. The Abbé Chateaufeu was his godfather and the child's first instructor. He was nurtured in the gaiety and dissipation of the time, and though his education did not comprehend the most noteworthy events in French history, he displayed a marked literary ability, which gave, in later life, his remarkable dramatic poems, &c., to the world. "I did not know," he says in one of his letters, "that Francis I. was taken prisoner at Paris, nor where Paris was; the very land of my birth was unknown to me; I knew neither the constitution nor the interests of my country—not a word of mathematics, not a word of sound philosophy. I learned Latin and nonsense." His father was a reputable notary, and had designs of bringing up his son in the same profession, but on this point they quarrelled, and though young Voltaire did actually get matriculated, and acquired the right to plead, which he did, but not as a notary, his pleadings were destined to fill wider courts than those of Paris. His father died in 1722, relentlessly set against his son, who was fitting about in that gay world which presently became the infamous world of the Regency, where extraordinary sprightliness and facility in verse had gained him welcome and patronage. Before his father's death he had suffered a period of imprisonment in the Bastille. It appears that in the autumn of 1715 Louis XIV. died, and the Regent

D'Orléans reigned in his stead. There soon appeared some pungent lines, entitled Les j'ai vu, in which the writer recounted a number of evil things which he had seen in the State—a thousand prisons crowded with brave citizens and faithful subjects, the people groaning under rigorous bondage, the magistrates harassing every town with ruinous and unrighteous edicts. The last line ran that all these ills the writer had seen, though he was but twenty years of age. At this time Voltaire was twenty-two, but being known as a versifier of a pungent turn, the production was "put down to him," and though actually he had no hand in the offence, he was laid up in the Bastille. He employed his time in confinement by the preparation of what he designed to be the great epic of France, and in finishing his tragedy, Edipe, which was represented in the course of the following year. For half a dozen succeeding years he was occupied with the composition of new plays and the completion of the Henriade, and at the same time he led a life of turmoil and confusion in the gay society with which he was surrounded, and in which we have the incident of our illustration. It is thus recorded by Mr. John Morley:—"Industrious as he was, and eager as he was for rural delights and laborious solitude, Voltaire was still pre-eminently social. His letters disclose in him, who really possessed all arts, the art of one who knew how to be graciously respectful to the social superiors who took him for a companion, without forgetting what was due to his own respect for himself. 'We are all princes or poets,' he exclaimed jubilantly on the occasion of one of those nights and suppers of the gods. Such gay-hearted freedom was not always well taken, and in time Voltaire's eyes were opened to the terms on which he really stood. 'Who is the young man who talks so loud?' called out some Chevalier Rohan at one of these sprightly gatherings at the house of the Duke of Sully. 'My lord,' the young man replied promptly, 'he is one who does not carry about a great name, but wins respect for the name he has.' A few days afterwards the high-spirited patrician magnanimously took an opportunity of having a caning inflicted by the hands of his lackeys on the poet who had thrown away his lesson upon him. Voltaire, who had at all events that substitute for true physical courage which springs up in an intensely irritable and susceptible temperament, forthwith applied himself to practice with the small sword. He did his best to sting his enemy to flight, but the Chevalier either feared the swordsman, or else despised an antagonist of the middle class; and by the influence of the Rohan family, the poet once more found himself in the Bastille, then the house of correction, at the disposal and for the use of the nobles, the court, and the clergy. Here for six months Voltaire, then only representing a very humble and unknown quantity in men's minds, chafed and fretted." His freedom from the prison walls, however, was only subject to a sentence of banishment, and he exiled himself in England, making only one of the company of distinguished men who made the invigorating pilgrimage during the two generations which elapsed between the death of Louis XIV. and the outbreak of the Revolution. He arrived in England in 1726, and found himself in a land where intercourse was familiar between ministers and the brilliant literary group of "Queen Anne men," and where they were rewarded with lucrative posts in the administration of the country. Voltaire was amazed at all this. He had the entrance to the best society; he knew Bolingbroke, Pope, Congreve, Newton, Locke, Prier, Gay, Addison, and others, and his soul was fired with energetic hatred towards the black clouds of prejudice, of mean self-love, of sinister preference of class or order, of indolence, obstinacy, wanton fancy, and all the other unhappy leanings of human nature, and vexed and fatal conjunctures of circumstance which interpose between humanity and the beneficent sunbeams of its own intelligence, the central light of the universe. "Hence again," says Morley, "by a sufficiently visible chain of thought, his marked dis-esteem for far-sounding names of brutal conquerors, and his cold regard for those outward and material circumstances in the state of nations, which strike the sense, but do not touch the inward reason. 'Not long ago,' he writes, once 'a distinguished company were discussing the trite and frivolous question, who was the greatest man—Cæsar, Alexander, Tamerlane, or Cromwell. Somebody suggested that it was undoubtedly Isaac Newton. This person was right; for if true greatness consists in having received from Heaven a powerful understanding, and in using it to enlighten oneself and all others, then such an one as Newton, who is hardly to be met with once in ten centuries, is in truth a great man. It is to him who masters our minds by the force of truth, not to those who enslave men by violence—it is to him who understands the universe, not to those who disfigure it, that we owe our reverence." Here a story of Voltaire may be mentioned in this connection. It was a peculiarity of Congreve to affect a dislike to the fame brought him as a littérateur, which he considered somewhat in the light of a disparagement of his claims as a person of quality. He intimated to Voltaire that it was only as this last that he desired his friends should regard him; whereupon Voltaire remarked that had he been nothing more than the elegant gentleman he considered himself, M. de Voltaire would have scarcely thought it worth while to solicit the honour of his acquaintance. The English influences during Voltaire's exile revealed to him the importance of the mixture of ranks and classes in common pursuits, and he records with admiration instances of the younger sons of peers of the realm following trade—"Whoever arrives in Paris from the depths of a remote province with money to spend and a name in ac or ille, can talk about a 'man like me, a man of quality,' and hold a merchant in sovereign contempt. The merchant, again, so constantly hears his business spoken of with disdain, that he is fool enough to blush for it; yet I am not sure which is the more useful to a State: a thickly be-powdered lord, who knows exactly what time the king rises, and what time he goes to bed, and gives himself mighty airs of greatness while he plays the part of a slave in a minister's ante-room; or the merchant who enriches his country, gives orders from his country house at Surat or Cairo, and contributes to the happiness of the globe." When Voltaire landed in England, in the middle of May, 1726, he was in his thirty-third year—that earlier climacteric, says the writer already quoted, when the men with vision first feel conscious of a past, and reflectively mark its shadow. It is then that they either press forward eagerly with new impulses in the way of their high calling, knowing the limitations of circumstance and hour, or else, fainting, draw back their hand from the plough, and ignobly leave to another, or to none, the accomplishment of the work. Voltaire did not draw back. He returned to France in 1728, his two years' residence in England having been fruitful of much new knowledge and ideas. He had studied the speculations of Bolingbroke, Collins, Tindal, Wollaston, and others; he had dived deeply into the philosophies of Newton and Locke; he had acquired such an astonishing mastery over the language that he read Hudibras, Shakespeare, Milton, and Dryden. He had plunged into the field of theology, and mastered the famous deistical controversy, of which the seed had been sown in the first half of the seventeenth century by Lord Herbert of Cherbury, the correspondent of Descartes, and the earliest of the English metaphysical thinkers. Subsequently in Paris he indulged in speculation, with such marked success that it was estimated that his income was £7,000 per annum. His literary labours ran up to about ninety volumes, but he did not acquire much pecuniary return for them. He wrote everything, and was, in fact, a universal genius, and he was terribly envenomed in the fierce polemics on his adversaries. From 1750 to 1758 Voltaire led a somewhat unsettled life. In the latter year he established himself along with his niece at Ferney, in Switzerland, and he died in his 84th year on a re-visit to Paris, where he was received with an enthusiasm that knew no bounds. A notice of Voltaire without a dissertation on his religious beliefs and sentiments, may by some be compared to the play of Hamlet minus the Prince of Denmark; but it will serve the purpose here to conclude by an expression of regret for the ignorance which has created the prevalent belief that Voltaire was an atheist.

THE ROYAL JUBILEE.

It was given to Egbert of Wessex to unite the heptarchy of England into one kingdom. This was in 827. Dating from this period, and including Egbert, England has seen fifty-eight monarchs on the throne.

Only four out of this long list have had reigns extending into what is understood as the jubilee year, the four being Henry III., Edward III., George III., and Victoria.

On the 20th of June, 1886, Queen Victoria entered upon the fiftieth year of her reign, but the full term of the jubilee will not, of course, be completed until the 20th of June, 1887. Henry III. reigned in all fifty-six years, 1216-1272; Edward III. died soon after completing the jubilee term; while George III. outlived his jubilee ten years, and had therefore the longest reign of which our history affords an example.

The third George was seventy-one years old when the advent of his jubilee was celebrated, so that he may be said to have reached his majority when he came to the throne. The other two began their reigns in their boyhood—Henry III. in his tenth year, and Edward III. in his sixteenth. Her present Majesty was eighteen at the time of her accession.

The jubilee year of Henry III. gave rise to no public rejoicings, and Henry, owing to his oppressive exactions, was not then in favour enough to make any celebration other than a mockery had any attempt been made to do honour to the event. Edward III., however, saw a very hearty celebration of two jubilees—one on attaining the fiftieth year of his life as well as that which marked the fiftieth year of his reign. It is recorded of him (in Barnes's History) that in 1376, being the fiftieth year of his reign, he "kept a second jubilee in commemoration thereof, and gave pardons, immunities, and graces, and showed many notable acts of bounty and goodness to his people, as in the first jubilee."

The year was a memorable one in many other respects. It was that in which the Black Prince died. It witnessed the discomfiture of John of Gaunt. A few months before the king had lavished his wealth upon Alice Perers; she was now banished from the Court.

Edward had summoned numerous Parliaments during his reign, and it happened that the Parliament of the year of his jubilee began the work of reform, so that when Richard II. succeeded to the throne he faced a resolute body of commoners, who had courageously put forward, for the first time, a Speaker, and who claimed the right of appointment to all State offices.

George III. was not well enough to take any personal part in the festivities that marked the fiftieth year of his reign, and soon after the malady pronounced itself which necessitated a Regency. His Consort, however, took an active part in all jubilee arrangements made by the royal household.

The celebration was general on the 25th of October, 1809, all over the country, Scotland vying with England in the heartiness with which it commemorated an event of so much interest in our annals; and Ireland was not in any sense behind in demonstrative loyalty.

The gaol-dooms of the country were thrown open that all small debtors might go free, the creditors either foregoing their claims or receiving their own from subscription lists instituted for the purpose. The king headed one of these lists with four thousand pounds. The merchants of London gave two thousand, and the Corporation a thousand.

A proclamation was issued pardoning unconditionally all deserters from the fleet, leaving it optional with them to return to duty or seek other pursuits. All deserters from the land forces, who surrendered within two months from the 25th of October, were also pardoned. Extra allowances of rations and leisure were given both to soldiers and sailors. There were some fifty thousand prisoners of war in England at the time, and they were given the privilege of returning to their own countries if so minded. Very many of them elected to remain, and became part of the body politic, leaving descendants, who to-day "be all good Englishmen."

It is related of a benevolent citizen of Portsmouth, that on the day of the celebration he gave threepence each to nearly seven thousand French prisoners confined in vessels in the harbour, and that he gave sixpence each to about two hundred Danish prisoners in the same port, accompanying the gift in the latter case with a printed card, setting forth that the donation was intended not merely in honour of the jubilee, but in recognition of the humanity shown by Marshal Mortier to the British sick and wounded after the battle of Talavera.

Generally throughout these islands much was done by public and private effort to mark the year of jubilee by relieving distress; and here and there a permanent memorial was raised, such as the embattled tower on the summit of Moel Fannau. This tower, by the way, has been a ruin since 1882, in which year it gave way during a gale.

The jubilee year itself was a notable one. It was that of the battle of Corunna and the death of Sir John Moore. It witnessed the ill-fated Walcheren expedition, and the duel between Canning and Castlereagh. It was the year in which Pall Mall was first lighted up with gas; and the sporting as well as the scientific world have reasons for recalling it, for wasn't it that in which Captain Barclay began and finished his wonderful walk of a thousand miles in a thousand consecutive hours? It was the year also of the starting of the Quarterly Review.

GARDIFF.

THE rapid and extensive strides in modern development have served to annihilate almost all the ancient relics of the antiquity of Cardiff. Among those that do remain is the castle keep, shown in the November page. Cardiff Castle itself has been largely restored and remodelled. It stands near to the river at the north-west angle of the town, and guarding the bridge where was formerly the only access to the town from the west. Some suburbs have of late years sprung up on the right bank of the Taff; but all, or nearly all, the older parts are upon the left bank. The old town, of which the walls and gates remained so late as the last century, extends south of the castle near the river-bank; but the extraordinary transformation of the place of late years has been remarkable, and it has been largely due to the Bute family. The castle is still a family residence, owing to which there is less of genuine antiquity remaining than a distant view of the building might seem at first to indicate. A castle has occupied the site from a very early date. There was a stronghold here of the British princes long before the Norman Conquest, and perhaps the mound which rises on the northern side of the castle courtyard once supported the principal tower of their residence. Soon after that event the Normans occupied the site and built a castle. This, however, has been affected by later changes, and the keep, which still remains on the above-named mound, is of Perpendicular architecture. Formerly the castle court was divided in two by a wall which ran from the gatehouse tower to the keep, and in one of these parts stood the Shire Hall. Both this and the wall have been swept away, so that the whole of the spacious court can now be seen at a glance. These frequent alterations make it difficult to trace the history of the various parts. Little or nothing, however, now remains above ground of the Norman castle. This was chiefly famous as the prison of the ill-fated Robert Courthoise, Duke of Normandy, eldest son of William the Conqueror, for here, when his wars and wanderings were abruptly ended, the "man who forgot and forgave too much" spent the last twenty-eight years of his long life. His death occurred in 1134.

THE GREAT SEAL OF ENGLAND.

THE mere holding of the Great Seal of England entitles the fortunate custodian to some £12,000 a year, to immense patronage in Church and State, to be Speaker in the House of Lords, a Privy Councillor, and the head of all judicial authority in the kingdom, to be designated Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, and keeper of the royal conscience, and to rank (next to the Royal Family) the second subject in the realm. It is very difficult, if not impossible, to say when England first had a Great Seal. Seals were not much used by our Anglo-Saxon ancestors, but came largely into fashion during the Norman reign. The gilt roses, or marks of Edward the Confessor and other Saxon kings, can scarcely be called seals, and partook more of the character of signatures of an illiterate age; but a grand and perfect seal of William the Conqueror exists, having the monarch crowned and throned on the one side, and mounted on horseback on the other—attitudes which have been invariably observed to the present day. One remarkable circumstance connected with the Great Seal is its progressive growth in size as time advanced. Originally, 800 years since, not larger than the top of an ordinary modern teacup, it has been gradually enlarged from age to age, till it offers now the size and appearance of a muffin, and requires to be enclosed in a tin box for protection. Indeed, so cumbersome and unwieldy had the Great Seal become, that some three or four years since an Act of Parliament passed—containing very extraordinary provisions—directing that all the minor, and many even of the more important documents passing under it, should for the future be authenticated by a paper wafer, of moderate size, which should be gummed on the instrument, and be deemed and taken to be the Great Seal itself.

The Great Seal has only three times been lost—twice temporarily and once permanently. James II., on leaving the kingdom on his abdication, threw the seal into the Thames, whence, however, it was next morning fished up and brought to Whitehall. Lord Eldon buried it in his garden in Queen Square during one night when his house caught fire, as he thought in the confusion it might be stolen. "And," writes the Chancellor in his diary, "when the fire was extinguished I quite forgot in the morning where I had buried it, and while the carriage waited to take me to Court, my lady and I and all the household were digging with pieces of stick till we luckily found it." Lord Thurlow, who always kept it during the night in his bedroom, had it actually carried off by burglars, from whom it was never recovered. A Privy Council was called the next day, a new seal was made, and during the remainder of his continuance in office, Lord Thurlow invariably deposited it at night under his pillow.

Down to 1818 the Great Seal itself was made of copper; since then silver has been the metal employed. It is in two halves, something like two very thick bright tin saucenap-lids fitting closely together, their inner surfaces deeply sculptured with the royal devices intended to be formed on the wax when squeezed between them. Instruments having a limited duration are sealed with yellow wax. Others, supposed to exist in perpetuity, such as patents of peerage, &c., are exemplified under green wax; and in the case of some letters patent, likely to be exposed to a great deal of knocking about or journeying from place to place, such as were the assize commissions, the wax seal was stamped after being ingeniously enclosed in cream-coloured leather.

ENGLAND IN 1550.

AN examination of the different entries contained in the Machyn diary sheds a strong light upon matters connected with the reign of Mary which ordinary historians omit. Take, for instance, the criminal statistics with which Machyn furnishes us. We look in vain for those particular offences of fraud and cunning which the subtleties of the nineteenth century have made us familiar with, but in their stead we read of hostility to the mechanism of religion, of low cheating, of cruelty to men and animals, and, of course, of those sins against the flesh which ever follow in the wake of ill-disciplined human nature.

From the well-furnished army of Machyn let us select a few of his arrows to take aim at the manners and corruptions of his age. Here we find a young fellow tied to a post "hard by the Standard in Cheap," with a collar of iron round his neck, and soundly whipped by two men "for pretending visions."

The Church offers its next victim. We read how one "Cheken, a parson of St. Nicholas, Coldharbour, did ride in a cart round about London, for he sold his wife to a butcher," a piece of traffic which is still, on some parts of the Continent, believed to flourish in England.

This was how a butcher who had exposed diseased meat for sale was punished. He was forced to ride about London, "his face towards the horse's tail, with half a lamb before and another behind, and veal and calf borne before him upon a pole, raw." There are several entries recording this punishment.

Men who sold stinking fish were put in the pillory with the stinking fish round their neck. One very nineteenth-century summer trick we see was in vogue in those more innocent days. The first day of July there were a man and a woman in the pillory in Cheapside; the man sold pots of strawberries, "the which the pot was not half full but filled with fern." Thus even in minor matters history repeats itself.

THE ORIGIN OF BICYCLES.

THE first pedomotive machine was that designed—though never, so far as we know, constructed—by the Marquis of Worcester, an exceedingly able scientist of Charles II.'s time. Of the details and of the plan of this invention all traces have been lost. In the Universal Magazine for August, 1769, we find a long description of a chaise to go without horses. Considerable attention must have been devoted to the matter at that time, for the editor of the magazine, in introducing the subject, says: "The conversation of the public being greatly taken up with a machine to move without horses, we are persuaded the preceding plate with the following introduction will be not a little agreeable to our readers." The machine described was the invention of John Vevers, "Master of the Boarding School at Rygate in Surry," who, so far as can be ascertained, was the maker of the very first velocipede the world ever saw. In the illustration we see a gentleman lolling back in what resembles a small "Victoria." Behind him, and with an exceedingly meagre pair of legs projecting from a box, is a footman, who is supposed to be propelling the machine, which is steered by the three-cornered-hatted occupant of the vehicle. The rage for the new kind of carriage did not evidently die out at once, for in 1774 we notice in the Universal Magazine that, "On Monday evening, about seven o'clock, a machine for going without horses, invented by Mr. Boone, of Cheap-side, on a new construction, went through the Strand. It consists of a wooden chair, placed upon iron supports, and which is pushed forward with great velocity by the quick working of the man's feet upon some iron springs placed immediately behind it. It is so contrived as to be turned at pleasure and with ease, and goes at amazing speed." The December issue has an account of another velocipede "capable of travelling with ease six miles an hour, and, by a particular exertion of the footman, might travel nine or ten miles an hour on a good road, and would even go up a considerable hill. But this carriage is in general only calculated for the exercise of gentlemen in parks or gardens, for which it answers extremely well."

GOVERNMENT INSURANCE AND ANNUITIES.

The lives of the persons of either sex between the ages of 14 and 65 may be insured for not less than £5 nor more than £100; or if the amount does not exceed £5, not under the age of 8 years. The Postmaster-General is also empowered to grant Immediate or Deferred Annuities for any amount not less than £1 or more than £100 to any person not under the age of 5 years.

The following examples show various ways in which Insurances may be effected:—The life of a Male or Female between 21 and 22 years of age may be insured for £10, by an annual payment throughout life of 4s. 4d. (1d. a week); or by an annual payment to the age of 60 of 4s. 8d.; or by a single payment of £4 4s.; or a person between 21 and 22 years of age having, say, £9 deposited in the Post Office Savings Bank, the interest on which is 4s. 6d. a year, can direct that 4s. 4d. of this amount of interest be applied to the payment of premiums on a Life Policy for £10; he can thus maintain his Life Insurance without decreasing his capital of £9.
A sum of money may be insured on the attainment of the age of 60 years, or sooner in the event of death, by the payment of a single or annual premium, and a sum of money may be insured at the expiration of 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, or 40 years, or sooner in the event of death, by the payment of a single premium according to the age of the insured person.

ECLIPSES IN 1887.

There will be two Eclipses of the Sun in 1887, viz. :—
Feb. 22—23.—An Annular Eclipse of the Sun, invisible at Greenwich.
Aug. 19.—A Total Eclipse of the Sun, partly visible at Greenwich.

REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS, &c.

In England an infant should be registered within six weeks after its Birth. No fee is payable; but after 42 days, a fee of 7s. 6d. is chargeable.

Notice must be given of Deaths to the District Registrar. Let this be done early, as a certificate must be obtained to give to the minister who performs the funeral service.

In Scotland a Birth must be registered within 21 days. A Marriage must be registered within three days. A Death must be registered within eight days.

INTEREST TABLE.

Without giving an elaborate series of tabulated figures to ascertain the interest due on any given sum, at 2½, 3, 5, or any other rate per cent., any person may calculate for himself the amount of interest by a very simple process.

The amount of interest upon one pound for every month at 5 per cent. is one penny. Having ascertained what any given sum amounts to at 5 per cent., other rates may be calculated by adding to, or dividing it, thus: 6 months, 5 per cent. for £50 would be £2 0 0

2½ per cent., which is one-half

3 per cent. is six-tenths .. 1 0 0

3½ per cent. is seven-tenths 1 4 0

4 per cent. is four-fifths .. 1 12 0

If the interest should be more than 5 per cent., then the extra rate of interest must be added.

Thus for 6½ per cent. add one-fourth; for 7½ per cent. add one-half.

POST-OFFICE INFORMATION.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

To and from all parts of the United Kingdom, for prepaid letters: Not exceeding 1 oz. 1d. Excdg. 1 oz. but not excdg. 2oz. 1½d.
 " 2 oz. " 4 oz. 2d.
 " 4 oz. " 6 oz. 2½d.
 " 6 oz. " 8 oz. 3d.
 " 8 oz. " 10 oz. 3½d.
 " 10 oz. " 12 oz. 4d.

and so on at the rate of ¼d. for every additional two ounces. A letter posted unpaid will be charged on delivery with double postage, and a letter posted insufficiently prepaid will be charged with double the deficiency.—An Inland Letter must not exceed 1 foot 6 inches in length, 9 inches in width, or 6 inches in depth, unless it be sent to or from a Government Office.

REGISTRATION.

By the prepayment of a fee of twopence, any letter, newspaper, or book-packet may be registered to any place in the United Kingdom or British Colonies. The Post-Office will not undertake the safe transmission of valuable enclosures in unregistered letters; and unregistered letters found to contain coin will, on delivery, be charged with a registration fee of 8d. If a registered article be lost the Post-Office is liable to the extent of £2.

REGISTERED LETTER ENVELOPES

Are sold at all Post-Offices, and by rural messengers, according to size, from 2½d. to 3d. each.

POSTAGE ON INLAND REGISTERED NEWSPAPERS.

Prepaid Rates.—For each Registered Newspaper, whether posted singly or in a packet—One Half-penny; but a packet containing two or more Registered Newspapers is not chargeable with a higher rate of postage than would be chargeable on a Book-Packet of the same weight, viz., One Half-penny for every 2 oz., or fraction of 2 oz.

Unpaid Rates.—A Newspaper posted unpaid, or a packet of Newspapers posted either unpaid or insufficiently paid, will be treated as an unpaid, or insufficiently paid, Book-Packet of the same weight.

The postage must be prepaid either by an adhesive stamp, or by the use of a stamped wrapper. Every Newspaper or packet of Newspapers must be posted either without a cover or in a cover open at both ends. If this rule be infringed, the Newspaper or packet will be treated as a letter.

No Newspaper, whether posted singly or in a packet, may contain any enclosure except the supplement or supplements belonging to it. If it contain any other, it will be charged as a letter.

No packet of Newspapers may exceed 14 lbs. in weight, or two feet in length by one foot in width or depth.

INLAND PARCEL POST.

For an Inland Postal Parcel, the rate of postage, to be prepaid in ordinary postage stamps, will be—Not exceeding in weight 1 lb., 3d.; and for every additional lb. up to the maximum of 11 lbs., 1½d. Maximum length 3 feet 6 inches; maximum length and girth combined, 6 feet.

A Parcel Post Service has been established between the United Kingdom and the countries of the Continent of Europe and the British Colonies and Foreign Possessions generally. For rates and other conditions, see the Post Office Guide, published quarterly.

INSURANCE AND COMPENSATION.

The Postmaster-General will, subject to rules, give compensation for loss and damage of inland parcels as follows:—

(I.) Where no fee except postage is paid, the Postmaster-General will give compensation to an amount not exceeding £1. (II.) Where, in addition to the postage, an insurance fee of 1d. is paid, the Postmaster-General will give compensation to an amount not exceeding £5. (III.) Where, in addition to the postage, an insurance fee of 2d. is paid, the Postmaster-General will give compensation to an amount not exceeding £10. In no case will a larger amount of compensation than £10 be paid.

INLAND BOOK POST.

The Book Post rate is One Half-penny for every 2 oz. or fraction of 2 oz. A Book-Packet may contain not only books, paper, or other substance in ordinary use for writing or printing, whether plain or written or printed upon (to the exclusion of any written letter or communication of the nature of a letter), photographs, when not on glass, and anything usually appertaining to such articles in the way of binding and mounting, or necessary for their safe transmission by post, but also Circulars when these are wholly or in great part printed, engraved, or lithographed.

Any Book-Packet which may be found to contain a letter or communication of the nature of a letter, not being a circular-letter, or any enclosure sealed or in any way closed against inspection, or any other enclosure not allowed by the regulations, will be treated as a letter, and charged with double the deficiency of the Letter Postage.

Every Book-Packet must be posted either without a cover or in a cover open at both ends, and in such a manner as to admit of the contents being easily withdrawn for examination; or otherwise it will be treated as a letter.

A Packet posted wholly unpaid will be charged with double the Book Postage; and if posted partially prepaid, with double the deficiency.—No Book-Packet may exceed 14 lbs. in weight, or one foot six inches in length, nine inches in width, and six in depth.

POST-OFFICE ORDERS.

Money Orders are granted in the United Kingdom, as follows:—
 For sums not exceeding - £1, 2d.
 " " exc. £1 & not exc. £2, 3d.
 " " £2 " " £4, 4d.
 " " £4 " " £7, 5d.
 " " £7 " " £10, 6d.

POSTAL ORDERS.

Postal Orders are now issued at any Money Order Office in the United Kingdom, and at Malta, Gibraltar, and Constantinople. Terms: 1s. 6d. 3d. 3s. 6d. 1d. 10s. — 1d. 1s. 6d. 3d. 4s. 1d. 10s. 6d. 1d. 2s. — 1d. 4s. 6d. 1d. 15s. — 1½d. 2s. 6d. 1d. 5s. — 1d. 20s. — 1½d. 3s. — 1d. 7s. 6d. 1d.

Postal Orders are not payable outside of the United Kingdom, except at Malta, Gibraltar, and Constantinople.

MONEY ORDERS PAYABLE ABROAD.

Foreign Orders are issued at the following rates:—

If payable in Belgium, Denmark, Danish West Indies, Dutch East India Possessions, Egypt, France, German Empire, Austria-Hungary, Holland, Italy, Japan, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, and United States, or the British Possessions and Colonies:—On sums not exceeding

£2 0s. 6d. | £7 1s. 6d.
 £5 1s. 0d. | £10 2s. 0d.

POST-OFFICE SAVINGS BANK.

Deposits of one shilling upwards will be received from any depositor at the Post-Office Savings Banks, provided the deposits made in any year ending the 31st December do not exceed 30l., and provided the total amount does not exceed 150l. exclusive of interest. When principal and interest amount together to £200, all interest will cease.

"TAKE CARE OF THE PENCE."

At every Post-Office in the United Kingdom forms can be obtained, free of charge, on which twelve penny postage stamps can be fixed, and when the form has been thus filled up with twelve penny stamps it will be received at any Post-Office Savings Bank as a Savings Bank deposit for one shilling.

STOCKS CAN BE BOUGHT

At any Post-Office Savings Bank. Any depositor who wishes can invest £10, or any larger sum up to £100, in Government Stock at the current price of the day. On each £10 of Stock interest at the rate of 3s. every six months is paid to the investor, free of all charge. The same facilities are afforded for selling out stock. The commission for purchase or sale of Stocks is for any amount not exceeding £25, 9d.; and 6d. for each £25 after.

POSTAL TELEGRAMS.

Charge throughout the United Kingdom, 6d. for twelve words; names and addresses of sender and receiver included. Usually, however, there is no necessity to telegraph sender's address. Each additional word, ¼d. Numbers in addresses counted as one word.

“The several opposition libraries, the issue of which Messrs. Cassell’s spirited enterprise has provoked, are not in the running with CASSELL’S NATIONAL LIBRARY.”—Detroit Free & res.

Number 157 (price 1d.) of Cassell’s Saturday Journal

Forms the FIRST NUMBER of an entirely NEW VOLUME.

Attractive as Cassell’s Saturday Journal undoubtedly has been in the past, it is intended that the future numbers shall be doubly so. In order to inaugurate the New Volume worthily in all respects, the Publishers have made arrangements for printing it on a PAPER specially manufactured for the purpose, and in NEW and LARGER TYPE.

But it is in the intrinsic attractions of the Journal itself that the readers will discover its merits.

The amount and quality of the literature given, the high-class and yet thoroughly popular nature of its contents, the intensely interesting Serial Stories, the brilliantly written Short Stories, and the variety of its matter—furnishing attractive reading for old and young—these, and a hundred other characteristics of permanent and never-failing interest, will be found conspicuously present in No. 157, being the FIRST NUMBER of the NEW VOLUME.

 Also published in Monthly Parts, 6d.
