P R E F A C E.

WE offer this little volume—the materials of which have been taken from the “NATION” newspaper—freely and confidently to the people of Ireland, as the sole object of its publication is their benefit. Such a compilation was only projected after there were frequent demands for it, which will acquit the authors of vanity, as its price will fully absolve the publisher from any desire of gain in the transaction. A book that neither contemplates praise nor profit is a genuine novelty, and will, we expect, receive the “CEAD MILE FAILTE” which a stranger never asks from our countrymen in vain.

We commend it especially to the Repeal Reading rooms and Teetotal Societies. Such of the songs as go to popular airs ought to be constantly practised by those bodies. They will find very profitable and pleasant singing for the millions among them. The other pieces may be read or recited at public dinners and soirees with scarcely less advantage. The English minister who planned the Union had a great respect for the influence of songs on a people; in which, we think, he exhibited more sagacity than in handcuffing two strong, angry men together to strengthen their connexion. However, as there is a difference of opinion o this point, it will be a pleasant test of his wisdom to knock one of his nuts against the other and see which of them will crack first.

It may be observed, that we have spelled some Irish words that occur in this volume somewhat differently from the usual method, that usual method being whatever way English writers thought fit to spell them for us. We have consulted the best Irish scholars, and adopted their orthography, which we expect will become general. We would be ashamed to misspell Latin, English, French, or any other foreign language, and, in the name of common sense, why not our own? It is quite as comical a blunder to write "FAUGH A BALLAGH" for "FAG A BEALAC," as "PARLEY-VOO" for "PARLEZ-VOUS," if we only thought so.

We believe there is nothing further to say, but to wish our friends a keen relish for the good things which we set before them.

TRINITY-STREET, DUBLIN,

May, 1843.

THE SPIRIT
"THE NATION."

OURSELVES ALONE.

I.

THE work that should to-day be wrought
Defer not till to-morrow ;
The help that should within be sought,
Scorn from without to borrow.
Old maxims these—yet stout and true—
They speak in trumpet tone,
To do at once what is to do,
And trust OURSELVES ALONE.

II.

Too long our Irish hearts we schooled,
In patient hope to bide ;
By dreams of English justice fooled,
And English tongues that lied.
That hour of weak delusion 's past,
The empty dream has flown :
Our hope and strength, we find at last,
Is in OURSELVES ALONE.

III.

Aye ! bitter hate, or cold neglect,
 Or lukewarm love, at best,
 Is all we've found, or can expect,
 We aliens of the west.
 No friend, beyond her own green shore,
 Can Erin truly own ;
 Yet stronger is her trust, therefore,
 In her brave sons ALONE.

IV.

Remember when our lot was worse—
 Sunk, trampled to the dust ;
 'Twas long our weakness and our curse,
 In stranger aid to trust.
 And if, at length, we proudly trod
 On bigot laws o'erthrown,
 Who won that struggle? Under God,
 Ourselves—OURSELVES ALONE.

V.

Oh, let its memory be enshrined
 In Ireland's heart for ever :
 It proves a banded people's mind
 Must win in just endeavour ;
 It shows how wicked to despair,
 How weak to idly groan—
 If ills at others' hands ye bear,
 The cure is in YOUR OWN.

VI.

The " foolish word impossible"
 At once, for aye disdain ;
 No power can bar a people's will
 A people's right to gain.
 Be bold, united, firmly set,
 Nor flinch in word or tone—
 We'll be a glorious nation yet,
 REDEEMED—ERECT—ALONE.

THE MEN OF TIPPERARY.

Let Britain boast her British hosts,
 About them all right little care we ;
 Not British seas, nor British coasts,
 Can match THE MAN OF TIPPERARY.

II.

Tall is his form, his heart is warm,
 His spirit light as any fairy ;
 His wrath is fearful as the storm
 That sweeps THE HILLS OF TIPPERARY.

III.

When woe or want oppress his friends,
 Though State and Fate proclaim despair, he Against them all "the Pass" defends,
 And rights THE WRONGS OF TIPPERARY.

IV.

Yet meet him in his cabin rude,
 Or dancing with his dark-haired Mary,
 You'd swear they knew no other mood
 Than mirth and LOVE IN TIPPERARY.

V.

Soft is his girl's sunny eye,
 Her mien is mild, her step is airy,
 Her heart is fond, her soul is high ;
 Oh! she's THE PRIDE OF TIPPERARY.

VI.

You're free to share his scanty meal ;
 His plighted word he'll never vary.
 In vain they tried with gold and steel
 To shake THE FAITH OF TIPPERARY.

VII.

Send him to fight for native land—
 His is no courage cold and wary ;
 The troops live not on earth would stand
 The headlong CHARGE OF TIPPERARY.

VIII

Let Britain brag her motley rag ;
 We'll lift THE GREEN more proud and airy ;—
 Be mine the lot to bear that flag,
 And head THE MEN OF TIPPERARY.

IX.

Though Britain boasts her British hosts,
 About them all right little care we ;
 Give us to guard our native coasts
 THE MATCHLESS MEN OF TIPPERARY.

SONNET.

(TRANSLATED FOR THE "NATION," FROM "ZAPPI," BY E. N. SHANNON, ESQ., THE TRANSLATOR OF DANTE, AUTHOR OF "TALES OLD AND NEW.")

In fair, delightful Cyprus, by the Main,
 A lofty, royal seat, Love's dwelling stands :
 Thither I went, and gave into his hands
 An humble scroll, his clemency to gain.
 Sire, said the writing, Thyrsis, who in pain
 Has served thee hitherto, this boon demands—
 His freedom—neither should his suit be vain,
 After six lustres' service in thy bands.
 He took the scroll, and seemed to pore thereon :
 But he was blind, and could not read the case.
 Seeming to feel his grievous want full sore—
 Wherefore, with stern and frowning air, anon,
 He said, and flung my writing in my face—
 Give it to DEATH—we two will talk it o'er.

THE MUNSTER WAR-SONG.

Τα οπλα ας λαβωμεν παιδες Ἑλληνων αγωμεν.
 ποταμιδων εχθρων το αιμα
 ας τρεζη υπο ποδων.

RIGA.

I.

Can the depths of the ocean afford you not graves,
 That you come thus to perish afar o'er the waves ;
 To redden and swell the wild torrents that flow,
 Through the valley of vengeance, the dark Aharlow ?

II.

The clangour of conflict o'erburthens the breeze,
 From the stormy Slieve Bloom to the stately Galtees ;
 Your caverns and torrents are purple with gore,
 Slievenamon, Glencoloc, and sublime Galtymore !

III.

The sun-burst that slumbered embalmed in our tears,
 Tipperary ! shall wave o'er thy tall mountaineers !
 And the dark hill shall bristle with sabre and spear,
 While one tyrant remains to forge manacles here.

* This song relates to the time when the Irish began to rally and unite against their invaders. The union was, alas ! brief, but its effects were great. The troops of Connaught and Ulster, under Cathal Cruv-dearg (Cathal O'Connor of the Red Hand), defeated and slew Armoric St. Lawrence, and stripped De Courcy of half his conquests. But the ballad relates to Munster ; and an extract from Moore's (the most accessible) book will show that there was solid ground for triumph :—" Among the chiefs who agreed at this crisis to postpone their mutual feuds, and act in concert against the enemy, were O'Brian of Thomond, and MacCarthy of Desmond, hereditary rulers of North and South Munster, and chiefs respectively of the two rival tribes, the Dalcassians and Eoganians. By a truce now formed between those princes, O'Brian was left free to direct his arms against the English ; and having attacked their forces at Thurles, in Fogarty's country, gave them a COMPLETE OVERTHROW, putting to the sword, add the Munster annals, a great number of knights."—History of Ireland, A. D. 1190.

IV.

The riderless war-steed careers o'er the plain
 With a shaft in his flank and a blood-dripping mane,
 His gallant breast labours, and glare his wild eyes ;
 He plunges in torture—falls—shivers—and dies.

V.

Let the trumpets ring triumph ! the tyrant is slain .
 He reels o'er his charger deep pierced through the brain ;
 And his myriads are flying like leaves on the gale,
 But, who shall escape from our hills with the tale ?

VI.

For the arrows of vengeance are show'ring like rain,
 And choke the strong rivers with islands of slain,
 Till thy waves, "lordly Shannon," all crimsonly flow,
 Like the billows of hell with the blood of the foe.

VII.

Aye ! the foemen are flying, but vainly they fly—
 Revenge, with the fleetness of lightning, can vie ;
 And the septa of the mountains spring up from each rock,
 And rush down the ravines like wolves on the flock.

VIII.

And who shall pass over the stormy Slieve Bloom,
 To tell the pale Saxon of tyranny's doom ;
 When, like tigers from ambush, our fierce mountaineers,
 Leap along from the crags with their death-dealing spears ?

IX.

They came with high boasting to bind us as slaves ;
 But the glen and the torrent have yawned for their graves—
 From the gloomy Ardfinnan to wild Templemore—
 From the Suir to the Shannon—is red with their gore.

By the soul of Heremon ! our warriors may smile,
 To remember the march of the foe through our isle ;

Their banners and harness were costly and gay,
And proudly they flashed in the summer sun's ray ;

XI.

The hilts of their falchions were crusted with gold,
And the gems on their helmets were bright to behold.
By Saint Bride of Kildare ! but they moved in fair show—
To gorge the young eagles of dark Aharlow !

THE MONOPOLISTS' LIE.

“ For our own part we are not ashamed to say that we hate the word cheapness, in its ordinary acceptation, because we have never seen commodities cheap, as the term is commonly applied, without the accompaniment of ruinous distress among one class or other of our countrymen ; whereas we have generally seen what are denominated dear seasons, always seasons of extraordinary prosperity to the majority of the people.”—Standard.

I.

How the mockery stinks in the nostrils of Heaven !
How the arrogant falsehood insults the wide earth !
To the fiends in deep hell, for a moment 'tis given,
'Mid their torment, to gibber in horrible mirth !
Oh ! yes, 'tis A BLESSING that bread is so dear !
Yes, yes, 'tis a comfort that rent is so high !
Give the rich man his chariot, the poor man his bier !
'Tis a favor, untaxed, to be suffered to die !

II.

Crawl on, ye vile slaves ! chaffer roots with the swine !
They are good enough, churls ! for your under-bred maws ;
Earth's treasures are skimmed, when your masters would dine,
While ye starve by their merciful, master-made laws !
Toil, sweat, and make huger their huge money-bags ;
Serfs, train up your daughters to batten their lust !
As they roll by in splendour, crouch, crouch in your rags !
As they loll at the banquet, pay thrice for your crust !

III.

Oh, God's earth is fair ! and a glimpse you may catch,
 As you peer o'er the wall of some neighbouring park,
 Of lawn, grove, and paddock—but lift not a latch,
 Or be torn by the dogs at your footsteps that bark !
 Sweet valley and glade, beauteous lake, stream, and river,
 Bestud ev'ry turn in our evergreen isle ;
 Ye have heard they are lovely, but glanced at them never,
 Save yoked like scorned beasts to unrecompensed toil !

IV.

Crawl on, ye vile slaves ! not a sod is your own,
 Of the soil where your fathers coursed free as the airs ;
 Not a bird dare ye shoot, where their footsteps have flown ;
 Not a fish dare you draw from the streams that were theirs !
 With your sweat your land-tyrants their 'scutcheons adorn,
 And would coin your heart's blood, as your hearts they have riven !
 You have asked for free breed—they refuse it with scorn ;
 If you starve at their will, you deserve it, by Heaven !

 THE LAMENT OF GRAINNE MAOL.*

I.

John Bull was a bodach, as rich as a Jew—
 As griping, as grinding, and conscienceless, too ;
 A wheedler, a shuffler, a rogue by wholesale,
 And a swindler moreover, says GRAINNE MAOL !

II.

John Bull was a banker, pursy and fat,
 With gold in both pockets, and plenty of that ;
 And he tempted his neighbours to sell their entail—
 'Tis by scheming he prospers, says GRAINNE MAOL !

* Vulgarly written, and rightly pronounced, Granu Wail.

III.

John Bull was a farmer, with cottiers galore—
 Stout “chawbacons” once, that like bullocks could roar ;
 Hard work and low wages, and Peel’s sliding scale,
 Have pulled down their courage, says GRAINNE MAOL!

IV.

John Bull was a bruiser, sturdy and stout—
 A boisterous bully—at bottom a clout!—
 For when briskly opposed he was apt to turn tail—
 BROTHER JONATHAN fibbed him, says GRAINNE MAOL!

V.

John Bull was a merchant—many his ships,
 His harbours, his dock-yards, and fine building slips ;
 And the ocean he claimed as his rightful entail—
 MONSIEUR PARLEY-VOUS bars that, says GRAINNE MAOL!

VI.

John Bull had dependencies, many and great—
 Rich, fertile, extensive—each one an estate ;
 But he pilfered and robbed them—wholesale and retail—
 THE CANADAS prove it, says GRAINNE MAOL!

VII.

Master John in the East has been “going it tight”
 (His wont when opponents are slow to show fight)—
 Like a BULL in a CHINA SHOP, whisking his tail—
 That splore isn’t ended, says GRAINNE MAOL!

VIII.

John Bull worshipped fire beneath Indian skies—
 Made war upon women, and children likewise—
 Razed bazaars, burned cities and forts in detail—
 Oh, the barbarous VANDAL! says GRAINNE MAOL!

IX.

John Bull was a Saint in the Western Clime,
 Stood fast for the truths of the Gospel sublime,

Vowed that no other faith in the end could avail;
Is't THE JUGGHERNAUT CHAMPION? says GRAINNE MAOL!

X.

John Bull had a sister fair to be seen,
With a roseate blush, and a mantle of green,
And a soft swelling bosom!—On hill or in dale
Oh, where could you fellow sweet GRAINNE MAOL!

XI.

And John loved his sister without e'er a flam,
As the fox loves a pullet, the vulture a lamb;
So he paid her a visit—but mark the sad tale,
MY TITLE DEED 's vanished! says GRAINNE MAOL!

XII.

Then he ruined her commerce, and ravaged her plains;
Razed her altars, sowed strife, kept her children in chains,
While pitch-caps, triangles, and gibbets, wholesale,
Recorded John's love to poor GRAINNE MAOL!

XIII.

But one of her children, more bould than the rest,
Took it into his noddle to make a request!
Our rights, Uncle John! Else—our flag on the gale!
“He soon got an instalment,” says GRAINNE MAOL!

XIV.

And, now he is at the Ould Growler, again,
With his logic, and law, and—three millions of men!
And nothing will please him, just now, but REPALE;
“Mo seact n-anam astig t'ú,”* says GRAINNE MAOL!

XV.

But, should John turn gruff, and decline the demand;
What means of success may be at our command?
Quite true, he is humbled, and now getting frail,
My “NATION” will tell you, says GRAINNE MAOL!

* “Seven times as dear as the soul within me!”

XVI.

("NATION" LOQUITUR.)

"If, stubborn and wilful, he still should refuse
 To hear our just claims, or submit to our views,
 And resolve, in his folly, to hold 'The Entail,' DAN 'll 'kick his Dumbarton,'* for GRAINNE MAOL!"

Fag a Bealar. †

A National Hymn, chaunted in full chorus at the Symposiacs of the Editors and Contributors of "THE NATION."

I.

"Hope no more for Fatherland,
 All her ranks are thinned or broken;"
 Long a base and coward band
 Recreant words like these have spoken.
 But WE preach a land awoken,
 A land of courage true and tried
 As your fears are false and hollow:
 Slaves and Dastards stand aside—
 Knaves and Traitors, FAG A BEALAC!

II.

Know, ye suffering brethren ours,
 Might is strong, but Right is stronger;

* Our printer's devil declares that this is a North British phrase for "The Seat of Honour!" How the Old Lady learned to talk Scotch it is not for us to explain.

† FAG A BEALAC, "Clear the road!" commonly but erroneously spelt Faugh a Ballagh, was the cry with which the clans of Connaught and Munster used in faction fights to come through a fair with high hearts and smashing shillelahs. The regiments raised in the South and West took their old shout with them to the Continent. The 88th, or Connaught Rangers, from their use of it, went generally by the name of "The Faugh a Ballagh Boys." Nothing, says Napier, in his History of the Peninsular War—nothing so startled the French soldiery as the wild yell with which the Irish Regiments sprung to the charge; and never was that haughty and intolerent shout raised in battle, but a charge, swift as thought and fatal as flame, came with it, like a rushing incarnation of FAG A BEALAC!

Saxon wiles or Saxon powers
 Can enslave our land no longer,
 Than your own dissensions wrong her :
 Be ye one in might and mind—
 Quit the mire where Cravens wallow—
 And your foes shall flee like wind
 From your fearless FAG A BEALAC!

III.

Thus the mighty Multitude
 Speak in accents hoarse with sorrow—
 “ We are fallen, but unsubdued ;
 “ Show us whence we Hope may borrow,
 “ And we’ll fight your fight to-morrow.
 “ Be but cautious, true, and brave,
 “ Where ye lead us we will follow ;
 “ Hill and valley, rock and wave,
 “ Shall echo back our FAG A BEALAC!”

IV.

Fling our Sun-burst to the wind,
 Studded o’er with names of glory ;
 Worth, and wit, and might, and mind,
 Poet young, and Patriot hoary,
 Long shall make it shine in story.
 Close your ranks—the moment’s come—
 NOW, ye men of Ireland follow ;
 Friends of Freedom, charge them home—
 Foes of freedom, FAG A BEALAC!

EPIGRAM.

“ Well, Pat, my boy,” said I, “ I’ve had some chat
 With the ground landlord of this wilderness.”
 “ The grinding one your Honor means,” grinned Pat ;
 “ It is the tenants that are ground, I guess.”

O'CONNELL.

A FRAGMENT.

Oh! thou bright sun, who banished by thy ray
 The night of sorrow from my land away—
 Before whose radiance, as some magic spell,
 Like frost-work melted, all our shackles fell—
 Whose honest beams made freedom's light be felt
 In those dark mists where bigotry had dwelt—
 High, high above us, still in grandeur glide,
 You rose in lowness, but you'll set in pride.
 In vain you sought some social orb to cheer
 The desert liveness of our hemisphere,
 Yet dauntless cried, "'Tis left alone for me
 To teach mankind—To wish it's to be free!"
 And now thou'rt mantled in unearthly light,
 Like Vesta's lamp, imperishably bright,
 For ever cloudless and for ever blest,
 Sear the oppressor, smile on the opprest.
 Unlike the orb that glorifies the day,
 Thy sun may perish, but its beams will stay :
 Thy name's an heirloom that will last for ever—
 Thyself may leave us, but thy spirit—Never!
 Thou said'st, "Be free!" and taught the bondsman how ;
 And, ah! dear freedom, who'll unlearn thee now ?

THE EXTERMINATOR'S SONG.

AIR—" 'Tis I am the Gipsy King."

I.

'Tis I am the poor man's scourge,
 And where is the scourge like me ?
 My land from all Papists I purge,
 Who think that their votes should be free—
 Who think that their votes should be free!
 From huts only fitted for brutes,
 My agent the last penny wrings ;

And my serfs live on water and roots,
 While I feast on the best of good things!
 For I am the poor man's scourge!
 For I am the poor man's scourge!

(Chorus of the Editors of THE NATION)

Yes, you are the poor man's scourge!
 But of such the whole island we'll purge!

II.

A despot, and strong one, am I,
 Since a Drummond no longer is here,
 To my "duties" to point ev'ry eye,
 Though of "rights" I wish only to hear—
 Though of "rights" I wish only to hear!
 If conspiracies I apprehend,
 To throw off my rack-renting rule,
 For a "Special Commission" I send,
 To my friends of the old Tory school!
 For I am the poor man's scourge!
 For I am the poor man's scourge!

(Chorus of the Editors of THE NATION)

Yes, you are the poor man's scourge,
 But of such the whole island we'll purge!

III.

I prove to the world I'm a man,
 In a way very pleasant to show;
 I debauch all the tenants I can,
 And of b——ds I have a long row—
 And of b——ds I have a long row!
 My cottiers must all cringe to me,
 Nor grudge me the prettiest lass;
 Or they know very well that they'll see
 Their hovels as flat as the grass!
 For I am the poor man's scourge!
 For I am the poor man's scourge!

(Chorus of the Editors of THE NATION)

Yes, you are the poor man's scourge!
 But of such the whole island we'll purge!

IV.

If a Connor my right should deny, sir,
 To "do what I like with my own!"
 For the rascal I've soon a reply, sir,
 Into gaol for "sedition" he's thrown—
 Into gaol for "sedition" he's thrown!
 The Tariff is bringing rents down—
 Yet more cash from the farmer I'll squeeze;
 And, for fear of being shot, come to town
 To drink, game, and intrigue, at my ease!
 For I am the poor man's scourge!
 For I am the poor man's scourge!

(Chorus of the Editors of THE NATION)

Yes, you are the poor man's scourge,
 But of such the whole island we'll purge.

SONG OF THE UNITED IRISHMEN.

AIR—"The Siege of Belleisle."

I.

'Tis the green—oh, the green is the colour of the true,
 And we'll back it 'gainst the orange, and we'll raise it o'er the blue!
 For the colour of our fatherland alone should here be seen—
 'Tis the colour of the martyred dead—our own immortal green;
 Then up for the green, boys, and up for the green!
 Oh, 'tis down to the dust, and a shame to be seen;
 But we've hands—oh, we've hands, boys, full strong enough,
 I ween,
 To rescue and to raise again our own immortal green!

II.

They may say they have power 'tis vain to oppose—
 'Tis better to obey and live, than surely die as foes;

But we scorn all their threats, boys, whatever they may mean ;
 For we trust in God above us, and we dearly love the green.
 So, we'll up for the green, and we'll up for the green !
 Oh, to die is far better than be curst as we have been ;
 And we've hearts—oh, we've hearts, boys, full true enough,
 I ween,
 To rescue and to raise again our own immortal green !

III.

They may swear as they often did, our wretchedness to cure ;
 But we'll never trust John Bull again, nor let his lies allure.
 No, we won't—no, we won't, Bull, for now nor ever more !
 For we've hopes on the ocean, and we've trust on the shore.
 Then up for the green, boys, and up for the green !
 Shout it back to the Sassenagh, “ We'll never sell the green !”
 For our TONE is coming back, and with men enough, I ween,
 To rescue, and avenge us and our own immortal green.

IV.

Oh, remember the days when their reign we did disturb,
 At Limerick and Thurles—Blackwater and Benburb ;
 And ask this proud Saxon if our blows he did enjoy,
 When we met him on the battle-field, of France—at Fontenoy.
 Then we'll up for the green, boys, and up for the green !
 Oh, 'tis still in the dust, and a shame to be seen ;
 But we've hearts and we've hands, boys, full strong enough,
 I ween,
 To rescue and to raise again our own unsullied green !

 THE VOW OF TIPPERARY.

From Carrick streets to Shannon shore—
 From Slievenamon to Ballindeary—
 From Longford-pass to Galtymore—
 Come, hear The Vow of Tipperary.

“ Too long we fought for Britain’s cause,
 And of our blood were never chary ;
 She paid us back with tyrant laws,
 And thinned The Homes of Tipperary.

“ But never more we’ll win such thanks :
 We swear by God, and Virgin Mary,
 Never to list in British ranks ;”
 And that’s The Vow of Tipperary.

FATHER MATHEW.

ODE TO A PAINTER, ABOUT TO COMMENCE A PICTURE TO ILLUSTRATE THE LABOURS OF FATHER MATHEW.

I.

Seize thy pencil, child of art !
 Fame and fortune brighten o’er thee ;
 Great thy hand, and great thy heart,
 If well thou do’st the work before thee !
 ’Tis not thine to round the shield,
 Or point the sabre, black or gory ;
 ’Tis not thine to spread the field,
 Where crime is crown’d—where guilt is glory.

II.

Child of art ! to thee be given
 To paint, in colours all unclouded,
 Breakings of a radiant heaven
 O’er an isle in darkness shrouded !
 But, to paint them true and well,
 Every ray we see them shedding
 In its very light must tell
 What a gloom before was spreading.

III.

Canst thou picture dried-up tears—
 Eyes that wept no longer weeping—
 Faithful woman's wrongs and fears,
 Lonely, nightly, vigils keeping—
 Listening ev'ry footfall nigh—
 Hoping him she loves returning?
 Canst thou, then, depict her joy,
 That we may know the change from mourning?

IV.

Paint in colours strong, but mild,
 Our Isle's Redeemer and Director—
 Canst thou paint the man a child,
 Yet shadow forth the mighty VICTOR?
 Let his path a rainbow span,
 Every hue and colour blending—
 Beaming "peace and love" to man,
 And alike o'er ALL extending!

V.

Canst thou paint a land made free—
 From its sleep of bondage, woken—
 Yet, withal, that we may see
 What 'twas before the chain was broken?
 Seize the pencil, child of art!
 Fame and fortune brighten o'er thee!
 Great thy hand, and great thy heart,
 If well thou do'st the work before thee!

 TO THE PRESIDENT

OF THE ANTI-REPEAL OPERATIVE SOCIETY, GREETING.

Sterne mourns an ass, as though 'twere true
 That "asses never die;"
 But sure 'tis false, and Trashem, you
 Will some day give 't the lie.

WHAT'S MY THOUGHT LIKE?

“ How is it like ? &c.

“ What would you do with it ?”

Nursery-Game.

I.

What's my thought like?—What's my thought like ?

—Like a column tumbled down—

Its noble shaft and capital with moss and weeds o'ergrown !
How is my thought so like unto a column thus laid low ;
Because your thought is Ireland now—laid prostrate, even so !
What with it would you do?—oh, say—what with it would you do ?

Upraise it from the earth again, aloft to mankind's view !
A sign unto all those that mourn, throughout earth's vast domain,
That Heaven rewards the patient, and will make them joy again.

II.

What's my thought like?—What's my thought like ?

—Like a gallant ship on shore !

Dismasted all and helpless now, amid the breakers' roar !
Her crew, so faithful once to her, each seeking plank and spar,
To 'scape from her and safety seek, upon the land afar.
How is my thought like such poor ship in peril and distress ?
Because your thought is Ireland now, whose peril is no less !
What with it would you do?—oh, say—what with it would you do ?

Like to some few but faithful hearts among such vessel's crew—
Stand by her to the last I would ! and die, if so decreed,
Ere man should dare to say to me, You failed her at her need !

III.

What's my thought like?—What's my thought like ?

—Like a land by Nature bless'd

Beyond most other lands on earth—and yet the most distressed !

A teeming soil—abounding streams—wide havens—genial air—

And yet a People ever plunged in suffering and care!
Eight millions of a noble race—high-minded, pure, and good—
Kept subject to a petty gang—a miserable brood!
Strong but in England's constant hate, and help to keep us down,

And blast the smiles of Nature fair, with man's unholy frown!
How is it like my thought, again?—How is it like my thought?
Because your thought is Ireland's self—and even thus her lot!
What with it would you do, again?—What with it would you do?

Work even to the death I would, to rive her chain in two!
To help her 'gainst unnatural sons, and foreign foemen's rage,
And all her hapless People's woes and bitter griefs assuage;
Bid them be happy now, at length, in this their rescued land—
That land no longer marked and cursed with slav'ry's withering brand!

No longer Slave to England!—but her Sister, if she will—
Prompt to give friendly aid at need, and to forget all ill!
But holding high her head, and with serenest brow
Claiming, amid Earth's nations all, her fitting station now!
THIS is my thought—it is your thought.

—If thus each Irish heart

Will only think, and purpose thus, henceforth, to act its part,
Full soon their honest boast shall be—that she was made by them
Great, Glorious, Free!—the Earth's first Flower!

—The Ocean's brightest Gem!

LINES

SUGGESTED BY A VISIT TO THE GRAVE OF BRIC, IN ST.
ANDREW'S CHURCHYARD.

Since first they placed thee in this cheerless cell,
Hither I've wandered each succeeding year,
Oppress'd with grief, to think no honours tell
That courage, worth, and genius slumber here—

Yes! sleep neglected in this silent shade,
 Where black obscurity in triumph reigns—
 While memory droops in lack of generous aid,
 And cold indiff'rence unmov'd remains.
 Here noxious weeds and sedgey grass contend,
 As in the breeze for mastery they toil,
 To hide this mound, where sleeps the faithful friend
 Who labour'd well to free his native soil.
 Alas! cold apathy, thy icy hand
 Is ever quick to spread oblivion's pall
 Above the champions of this injur'd land
 Whom fate permits in freedom's cause to fall.
 Could I but rear one single line to guide
 The stranger's foot to lightly press this clay—
 That freedom's sons o'er Erin's hope and pride
 Hither might come betimes to weep or pray :
 No flatt'ring lie I'd carve on polish'd stone ;
 But one brief sentence, rugged, bold and strong,
 That all might know his earnest, honest tone.
 The words would be—" My country, right or wrong."
 Then would fond youths and maidens here unite,
 And plant the willow and the fragrant thyme—
 Here would they come beneath the moon's pale light
 To chant their ditties plaintive and sublime—
 Here would the rose of variegated bloom,
 'Neath the green cypress and the spreading yew,
 Yield to the morning air its sweet perfume,
 And from its leaves drop tears of od'rous dew.

Sleep on, regardless of the critic's sneer
 And hollow friendship's smooth imposing cant,
 Though public gratitude withholds a tear,
 Nor avarice deigns a letter'd pile to grant ;
 Yet will the poet's soft and pensive lay
 Warble in dirges o'er thy nameless tomb,
 To tell the Patriot who comes this way
 A martyr'd brother moulders here in gloom.

THE NATION'S FIRST NUMBER.

I.

'Tis a great day, and glorious, O Public! for you—
 This October Fifteenth, Eighteen Forty and Two!
 For on this day of days, lo! THE NATION comes forth,
 To commence its career of Wit, Wisdom, and Worth—
 To give Genius its due—to do battle with Wrong—
 And achieve things undreamed of as yet, save in song.
 Then arise! fling aside your dark mantle of slumber,
 And welcome in chorus THE NATION'S FIRST NUMBER.

II.

Here we are, thanks to Heaven, in an epoch when Mind
 Is unfettering our captives and couching our blind;
 And the Press with its thunders keeps marring the mirth
 Of those tyrants and bigots that curse our fair earth.
 Be it ours to stand forth and contend in the van
 Of truth's legions for freedom, that birthright of man,
 Shaking off the dull cobwebs that else might encumber
 Our weapon—the pen—in THE NATION'S FIRST NUMBER.

III.

We announce a New Era—be this our first news—
 When the serf grinding Landlords shall shake in their shoes;
 While the ark of a bloodless yet mighty Reform
 Shall emerge from the flood of the Popular Storm!
 Well we know how the lickspittle panders to Power,
 Feel and fear the approach of that death-dealing hour;
 But we toss these aside—such vile vagabond lumber
 Are but just worth a groan from THE NATION'S FIRST NUMBER.

IV.

Though we take not for motto, Nul n'a de l'esprit,
 (As they once did in Paris) hors nos bons amis,
 We may boast that for first-rate endowments, our band
 Form a phalanx unmatched in—or out of—the land.

Poets, Patriots, Linguists, with reading like Parr's—
 Critics keener than sabres—Wits brighter than stars ;
 And Reasoners as cool as the coolest cu-cumber
 Form the host that shine out in THE NATION'S FIRST NUMBER.

V.

We shall sketch living manners—and men—in a style
 That will scarcely be sneezed at, we guess for a while ;
 Build up stories as fast as of yore Mother Bunch,
 And for Fun of all twists take the shine out of "PUNCH;"
 Thus our Wisdom and Quizdom will finely agree
 Very much, Public dear, we conceive as you see
 Do the lights and the shades that illumine and adumber
 Each beautiful page in THE NATION'S FIRST NUMBER.

VI.

A word more :—To OLD IRELAND our first love is given ;
 Still, our friendship hath arms for all lands under Heaven.
 WE ARE IRISH—we vaunt it—all o'er and all out ;
 But we wish not that England shall "sneak up the spout!"
 Then, O, Public! here, there, and elsewhere through the world,
 Wheresoe'er TRUTH'S and LIBERTY'S flags are unfurl'd,
 From the Suir to the Tweed, from the Boyne to the Humber, Raise one Shout of Applause for THE NATION'S FIRST NUMBER.

 EPIGRAM

ON HEARING THAT THE PRESENT EMPEROR OF CHINA IS OF A TARTAR FAMILY.

"Go forth," exclaimed Imperial Fum, "and see What those Barbarian vagabonds are arter!"
 Then, tapping on his box, and taking three Pinches of Lundy's Prime—"By Jing," quoth he,
 "If they nab me they'll find they have caught a Tartar!"

THE NATION'S VALENTINE

TO THE LADIES OF IRELAND.

“ I see their glorious black eyes shine ;
 But, gazing on each glowing maid,
 My own the burning tear-drop laves
 To think such breasts must suckle slaves.”

BYRON.

I.

Oh, Daughters of Erin ! while liberty hovers,
 Like the dove of the ark, o'er the flood of our tears,
 'Tis yours to brace on the chainmail of your lovers,
 And broider gay streamers to float from their spears

II.

Unsullied and soft as the snow's infant winglets
 Is the bosom of her who is muse of our song ;
 And her melting eyes shine through dark clouds of rich ringlets,
 With a soul that to Emmett's first love might belong.

III.

And though scarcely the seraphs that smiling watch o'er her,
 More fondly—more truly can love in the skies,
 Yet not hers is the wish to behold her adorer
 Forget his land's wrongs in the light of her eyes.

IV.

Yes ! thine is the fire that, now sacredly glowing,
 Impels my wrapt soul to bright liberty's shrine,
 The wave was congeal'd till thy breath set it flowing—
 God gave me the lyre, but to tune it was thine.

V.

Oh, woman ! our load-star, whose worship for ever,
 Gives strength to the sword—inspiration to song—
 The hour thou wilt aid thine own fetters to sever,
 Not earth's banded tyrants our thrall can prolong.

VI.

Withdraw, then, thy presence from pleasure's gay bowers,
 And smile but on him who braves danger and toil.
 Thus beauty and virtue, asserting their powers,
 Shall more than atone for the false Devorghoil.

VII.

Irresistible loveliness ! wouldst thou but cherish
 The patriot virtues, at once we are free ;
 But desert thou, or shrink, and as surely we perish—
 For man takes the tone of his spirit from thee.

VIII.

Then, oh ; if you'd teach us once more to recover
 The glory that erst shed its light on thy brow,
 Rend away from your lutes the soft strings of the lover,
 And sing us no songs but of FATHERLAND now.

IX.

A spirit is moving in light o'er the waters,
 And he shouts through the stormy applause of the waves,
 " *How long, beloved land, shall thy glorious daughters
 Be consorts or mothers of spiritless slaves ?*"

X.

Oh, rock-girdled Freedom ! adored by the Roman,
 In woman's dear form descend on our fanes,
 And the mountains shall dance at the fall of the foeman,
 To earth's heav'nliest music—the breaking of chains !

EPIGRAM

TOUCHING THE TARIFF AND INCOME TAX.

When I see Peel and Co.'s plans thus give birth
 To want and woe 'mong Englishers and Scotchers,
 " O, pardon me, thou bleeding peace of earth,
 That I am meek and gentle with such botchers !"

LAMENT FOR THE LAST OF THE BRAVE.

“ Ultimi Romanorum.”

Sainted the names and peaceful the slumbers
Of the heroes who struggled their country to free—
Who perished oppressed, but not vanquished, by numbers,
And streamed out their life-blood, dear Erin, for thee.

Twice—thrice be they blest, for no common devotion
Was theirs to the island that called them their own :
The pulse of their hearts, like the tide of the ocean,
Flowed true to the land of their fathers alone.

In the depths of the vale, on the peak of the mountain,
Raise high the proud trophy to tell of their fame—
Let the cairn of their glory be piled by the fountain,
And the stone of repose bear the spell of their name.

On the NATIONAL BANNER, in letters of glory,
Inscribe them to serve as the watchwords for men,
Who, roused from despair by their patriot story,
Shall dare all the deeds of these heroes again.

In the requiem chaunt for the souls of the dead,
When the prayers of the millions in silence are given,
Oh, ask of their God, for each spirit thus fled,
Peace and joy without end 'midst the blessed in heaven.

TO COLONEL, M.P.

If e'er you go to Hindostan,
You'll be esteemed a godlike man ;
Nay, do not thus with wonder stare—
Monkeys, you know, are worshipped there.

NEW NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.

I.

Buffon divides men into classes ;
 But this, his druggist-shop conception,
 Is humbug—all alike are asses ;
 I make myself even no exception.
 In fact, I'll prove myself an assertor of truth—the more's the pity ;
 And then make you, besides, an assentor to my dis-ass-trous ditty.

II.

There's Brougham and Vaux (Lord!) what an assailant he is of poor Lord Melbourne !
 While Melbourne is himself an associate of glum-faced England's well born ;
 Then in the House he's quite an assafoetida pill to Londonderry,
 Who is, by jing, a humdrum ass-everating twaddler, dull and dreary !

III.

O'Connell's a tremendous ass-aulter of tyranny and Tories ;
 And we, THE NATION, are his assistants, and share—hurrah!—his glories.
 Poor Lever's an acknowledged asspirant for fame and foolscap laurels ;
 While Lover makes himself an assiduous refreshner of state morals.

IV.

Trash Gregg's a genuine assish assinine ass—only hear him braying !
 Grim, Orange Ernest is an assassin at heart, and thirsts for slaying !
 F. W. Conway is an ass-tonishing dab for quizzing quisses !
 And Cregan R. H. A.'s an assured brush at catching gemmen's phizzes.

V.

In short, the world is one great assemblage of hoaxed and hoaxing ninnies,
 'Mong which even I myself am-ass
 More bran than grist—more jokes than guineas ;
 Still I don't mind—nor care to assuage my distresses like your sobbers ?
 Wrapped in my cloak, my grand cuir-ass,
 I laugh at all—Rads., Whigs, and robbers.*

 MY LAND.

I.

She is a rich and rare land ;
 Oh ! she's a fresh and fair land ;
 She is a dear and rare land—
 This native land of mine.

II.

No men than her's are braver—
 Her women's hearts ne'er waver ;
 I'd freely die to save her,
 And think my lot divine.

III.

She's not a dull or cold land ;
 No ! she's a warm and bold land ;
 Oh ! she's a a true and old land—
 This native land of mine.

IV.

Could beauty ever guard her,
 And virtue still reward her,
 No foe would cross her border—
 No friend within it pine !

* "Robbers"—that is to say Tories. See the Gaelic.

V.

Oh, she's a fresh and fair land ;
 Oh, she's a true and rare land !
 Yes, she's a rare and fair land—
 This native land of mine.

THE SONG OF ULSTER.

I.

Gray mountains of Mourne—green vallies of Down—
 Fair uplands of Farney and true Innishowen—
 From your homesteads have come in the day of our need,
 The stoutest of champions for country or creed—
 The Men of the North.

II.

When darkness and danger encompassed our Isle,
 And the Timid made cause with the Venal and Vile—
 While her hope was the least, and her hazard the most,
 Still, firm as Slievegullion, she found at their post
 The Men of the North.

III.

The first to resist the false Saxon were they,
 The latest to bend to his tyrannous sway,
 In his weakness a goad—in his triumph a curb—
 Bear witness Blackwater, Clontibret, Benburb,
 For the Men of the North.

IV.

Oh ! proud was the day, when the charge of the Gael,
 Like a thunder-storm scattered the sons of the Pale ;
 And the strength of the Saxon, like stubble went down
 Before the strong septs of the cross and the crown,*
 The Men of the North.

* The well-known arms of the confederated chiefs of Ulster.

V.

And what, though our God, to whom glory and praise !
 Hath not left to their children the spoil of those days ;
 Why, more bright be our honour—more goodly our gain,
 That he gave gallant hearts to achieve it again
 To the Men of the North.

VI.

For tell us, ye band of the trusted and true—
 Ye citizen-soldiers of stern Eighty-Two,
 Who lent you the power to resist and o'ercome
 The Foe from without and the Tyrant at home ?
 'Twas the Men of the North.

VII.

And when the dark day of oppression began,
 And Power upon reason and truth set her ban,
 All threats and seductions they stoutly withstood
 Till the cause of their country they sealed with their blood—
 These Men of the North

VIII.

But deep as those epochs of glory we prize,
 A prouder and dearer is yet to arise ;
 And we'll shrine it, Benburb and Dungannon, above,
 In the temple of national honour and love,
 The Men of the North.

IX.

'Tis that day, when the strength of the slumbering North,
 Again for the land of our love shall come forth ;
 And speaking stout words, which stout hearts will maintain,
 Proclaim our fair country a NATION again,
 The Men of the North.

X.

For the waters of Bann are unruffled and slow,
 And as coldly and calmly our pulses may flow ;
 But as soon shall you roll back its fathomless tide
 As turn from their slow-chosen purpose aside
 The men of the North.

XI.

Then, oh! when green Erin her trust and her might,
 Shall summon to battle for God and our right—
 For the home of our hearts, or the freedom of man,
 May one gallant phalanx still march in the van—
 The Men of the North.

A SONG FOR IRISHMEN.

Look down on Erin's verdant vales—so rich, so gay, so green—
 And tell me, can a bosom throb, not loving Ocean's queen?
 Look round on Erin's mossy moors, her meads and mountains
 high,
 And tell me, does a dastard live, who'd not for Erin die?

No, no; in Erin lives not now a traitor to her cause—
 The thundering voice A NATION speaks, each traitor overawes—
 A beaming light is burning bright, on mountain, rock, and sea,
 And by the mighty march of mind our land will soon be free.

Then strike the harp, old Erin's harp, with fearless force and bold—
 It breathes not for a tim'rous hand—nor for a heart that's cold;
 It loves the open gen'rous soul—the bold—the brave—the free;
 But for the craven, crouching slave it has no melody.

You're men—as such should know your rights, and knowing should defend;
 Who would be free, themselves must dare the tyrant's chain to rend;
 Oh, fruitless is the grief that springs above a nation's fears—
 One firm resolve of mighty men is worth a tide of tears.

Then brace your buckler round your breast—for Erin be resigned—
 The murky morn is gone that pall'd your energies of mind;
 And now o'er Erin's misty hills A NATION'S banner waves—
 Then, up—arise—be men and free, or be for ever slaves.

A TRAVELLER'S TESTIMONY.

I.

Green-vested land, with emeralds strewn,
 Wherever wends the pilgrim weary,
 With faltering steps and dusty shoon,
 From Rhine to Loire—from Baste to Erie.
 He feels still freshlier o'er his heart
 Rush the remembrance of thy beauty ;
 And owns, all peerless as thou art,
 To love thee, both his joy and duty.

II.

Romantic land ! in other climes
 Far brighter suns the skies illumine ;
 In the warm south, 'mid vesper chimes,
 More dazzlingly bright-eyed is woman.
 But sunlight there like lightning burns,
 While thine streams soft as crystal waters ;
 Too warm the southern maids, and turns
 The yearning breast to Erin's daughters.

III.

Oh, matchless land ! so well combine
 Thy elements of cloud and splendour,
 That earth no valleys boasts like thine,
 Enamelled with a green so tender !
 So well in Erin, too, are mixed
 The elements of wit and honour,
 That other nations' eyes are fixed
 In hopeless rivalry upon her !

 LINES WRITTEN ON A ROCK.

I.

How oft with bounding heart I've stood
 On yonder rugged rock and drear,
 While youth and pleasure flushed my blood,
 And cherished loved ones lingered near !

II.

How oft I've sat and dreamt of love
 And heaved the half unconscious sigh,
 While silent rolled the moon above,
 And passed the hours uncounted by !

III.

How oft the song hath charmed mine ear
 In woman's sweet melodious tone !
 Her softest notes were floating near !
 Ah ! me, and are those moments gone ?

IV.

Lone rock ! the wintry waves shall fret,
 And toss o'er thee their angry spray,
 And billows foam around thee yet—
 But we shall be far, far away !

V.

Where shall be, then, the song, the tale,
 The laugh of joy, the gladsome smile !
 The howling winds shall round thee wail,
 But we shall be afar the while !

VI.

As vanisheth the fleeting dream—
 As leaves, that part upon the tide—
 So 'tis our lot on life's swift stream,
 Perchance for ever, to divide ;

VII.

Or meet, perhaps, in years to come,
 As cold as if we ne'er had known ;
 Or follow to the silent tomb
 The corse of some now joyous one.

VIII.

Thus time still severs constant hearts !
 Thus former joys have passed and flown !
 How soon each transient bliss departs,
 And leaves us sorrowing and alone !

IX.

Ah ! yes ; there is on all below—
 How passing dear soe'er it be—
 All that we have, or love, or know—
 The stamp of sad mortality !

AWAKE, AND LIE DREAMING NO MORE.

By the Author of " The Deserted College."

Ye great of my country, how long will ye slumber ?
 Spell-bound far remote from her once happy shore,
 Unmoved by her wrongs and her woes without number :
 Oh ! wake thee, awake, and lie dreaming no more !
 Awaken to fame and poor Erin's condition ;
 To heal all her wounds be your noblest ambition :
 Oh ! break off the spell of the foreign magician.
 Awake, then, awake, and lie dreaming no more !

Not the want of green fields nor of countless resources
 The sons of sweet Erin have cause to deplore,
 Nor the want of brave hearts for the muster of forces :
 Awake, then, awake, and lie dreaming no more !
 A patriot flame and endearing emotion
 Are wanting to bless the sweet isle of the ocean ;
 Yet Erin is worthy of love and devotion.
 Awake, then, awake, and lie dreaming no more !

Let Fashion no more, in pursuit of vain pleasure,
 To far-distant lands in her train draw you o'er ;
 In your own native isle is the goodliest treasure :
 Awake, then, awake, and lie dreaming no more !
 When once love and pride of your country ye cherish,
 The seeds of disunion and discord shall perish,
 And Erin, dear Erin, in loveliness flourish.
 Awake, then, awake, and lie dreaming no more !

TYROL AND IRELAND.

“Ye gather three ears of corn, and they take two out of the three. Are ye contented?—are ye happy? But there is a Providence above, and there are angels; and, when we seek to right ourselves, they will assist us.”—Speech of Hofer to the Tyrolese: 1809.

I.

And Hofer roused Tyrol for this,
 Made Winschgan red with blood,
 Thal Botzen's peasants, ranged in arms,
 And Inspruck's fire withstood.
 For this! for this! that but a third
 The hind his own could call,
 When Passyer gathered in her sheaves;
 Why, ye are robbed of all!

II.

Up rose the hardy mountaineers,
 And crushed Bavaria's horse,
 I' th' name of Father and of Son,*
 For this without remorse.
 Great Heaven, for this! that Passyer's swains
 Of half their store were reft;
 Why, clods of senseless clay, to you
 Not ev'n an ear is left!

III.

'Midst plenty gushing round, ye starve—
 'Midst blessings, crawl accurst,
 And hoard for your land cormorants all,
 Deep gorging till they burst!
 Still—still they spurn you with contempt,
 Deride your pangs with scorn;
 Still bid you bite the dust for churls,
 And villains basely born!

* “The Bavarian vanguard, composed of 4,000 men, advanced into the defile; and when they had reached midway, the mountaineers hurled down upon their heads huge rocks, which they had rolled to the verge of the precipice, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.”—Histoire des Tyroliens.

IV.

Oh, idiots! feel ye not the lash—
 The fangs that clutch at gold?
 From rogues so insolent what hope
 Of mercy do ye hold?
 The pallid millions kneel for food;
 The lordling locks his store.
 Hath earth, alas! but one Tyrol,
 And not a Hofer more?

LAMENT FOR THE DEATH OF OWEN ROE O'NEILL.

Time—10th Nov., 1649. Scene—Ormond's Camp, County Waterford.

Speakers—A Veteran of Owen O'Neill's clan, and one of the horsemen, just arrived with an account of his death.

I

“Did they dare, did they dare, to slay Owen Roe O'Neill?”
 ‘Yes! they slew with poison him they feared to meet with steel.’
 “May God wither up their hearts! May their blood cease to flow!
 May they walk in living death, who poisoned Owen Roe!

II.

Though it break my heart to hear, say again the bitter words.”
 ‘From Derry, with false Cromwell, he marched to measure swords;
 But the weapon of the Saxon met him on his way,
 And he died at Clough Oughter, upon Saint Leonard's Day.’

III.

“Wail, wail for The Mighty One! Wail, wail ye for The Dead; Quench the hearth, and hold the breath—with ashes strew the head.
 How tenderly we loved him! How deeply we deplore!
 Oh! it makes me mad to think I shall never see him more.

IV.

Sagest in the council was he, kindest in the hall,
 Sure we never won a battle—'twas Owen won them all.
 Had he lived—had he lived—our dear country had been free;
 But he's dead, but he's dead, and 'tis slaves we'll ever be.

V.

O'Farrell and Clanrickarde, Preston and Red Hugh,
 Audley and MacMahon—ye are valiant, wise, and true;
 But—what, what were ye all to our darling who is gone?
 The Rudder of our Ship was he, our Castle's corner-stone!

VI.

Wail, wail him through the Island! Weep, weep for our pride!
 Would that on the battle-field our gallant chief had died!
 Weep the Victor of Benburb—weep him, young man and old;
 Weep for him, ye women—your Beautiful lies cold!

VII.

We thought you would not die—we were sure you would not go,
 And leave us in our utmost need to Cromwell's cruel blow—
 Sheep without a shepherd, when the snow shuts out the sky,
 Why did you leave us, Owen? Why, why did you die?

VIII.

Soft as woman's was your voice, O'Neill! bright was your eye,
 Oh! why did you leave us, Owen? why did you die?
 Your troubles are all over, you're at rest with God on high;
 But we're slaves, and we're orphans, Owen!—why did you die?"

 EPIGRAM

ON READING THE NEW NOVEL OF "BINANCA CAPELLO."

Strange things of Orpheus poets tell,
 How for a wife he went to hell;
 But B—— (wiser man, no doubt)
 Would go to hell to be without.

O'CONNELL.

I.

I saw him at the hour of pray'r, when morning's earliest dawn
 Was breaking o'er the mountain tops—o'er grassy dell and lawn ;
 When the parting shades of night had fled—when moon and stars were gone,
 Before a high and gorgeous shrine the chieftain kneel'd alone.
 His hands were clasp'd upon his breast, his eye was raised above—
 I heard those full and solemn tones in words of faith and love :
 He pray'd that those who wrong'd him might for ever be forgiv'n ;
 Oh ! who would say such prayers as these are not received in heav'n ?

II.

I saw him next amid the best and noblest of our isle—
 There was the same majestic form, the same heart-kindling smile !
 But grief was on that princely brow—for others still he mourn'd,
 He gazed upon poor fetter'd slaves, and his heart within him
 burn'd :
 And he vowed before the captive's God to break the captive's chain—
 To bind the broken heart, and set the bondsman free again ;
 And fit was he our chief to be in triumph or in need,
 Who never wrong'd his deadliest foe in thought, or word, or deed !

III.

I saw him when the light of eve had faded from the West—
 Beside the hearth that old man sat, by infant forms caress'd ;
 One hand was gently laid upon his grandchild's clust'ring hair,
 The other, raised to heav'n, invoked a blessing and a pray'r !
 And woman's lips were heard to breathe a high and glorious strain—
 Those songs of old that haunt us still, and ever will remain
 Within the heart like treasured gems, that bring from mem'ry's cell
 Thoughts of our youthful days, and friends that we have lov'd so well !

IV.

I saw that eagle glance again—the brow was mark'd with care,
Though rich and regal are the robes the Nation's chief doth wear ;*

And many an eye now quailed with shame, and many a cheek
now glow'd,

As he paid them back with words of love for ev'ry curse bestow'd.

I thought of his unceasing care, his never-ending zeal ;

I heard the watchword burst from all—the gath'ring cry—

Repeal :

And as his eyes were raised to heav'n—from whence his mission came—

He stood amid the thousands there a monarch save in name !

 THE COQUETTE.

TO —————

“The love we have lost is never renewed. On that dread vacuum of the breast, the temple and the garden rise no more—that feeling, be it hatred, be it scorn, be it indifference, which replaces love, endures to the last.”— BULWER.

I.

I lov'd thee—yes, I lov'd thee—oh ! how deeply and how well,
The heart that loves alone can feel—what words can ever tell
Too long I dream'd—I vainly dream'd—affection could reside,
Within that breast of ice and steel—of cold and cutting pride.

II.

But now my bosom thrills no more, as once for thee it thrill'd—
I see the dark and chilly cloud my fancy strove to gild—
The tints that Passion round thee threw—the rays of Love depart—

I know thee, as thou falsely wert—and as thou truly art.

* Written when O'Connell was Lord Mayor.

III.

Yes, where the sons of Folly bow, at Fashion's empty shrine, Go, bring thy flimsy heart to sale—it ne'er was formed for mine—

I loathe the idol of the past—I spurn it with disgust—
'Tis shivered into fragments—and trampled into dust!

IV.

Yet, no—I cannot hate thee, tho' thy love no more I prize—
We hate not, as we love not, where we only can despise—
Then crawl in safety, for to me the thought of thee is such,
As of a reptile we would kill, could we but bear to touch!

 MY GRAVE.

Shall they bury me in the deep,
Where wind-forgetting waters sleep?
Shall they dig a grave for me,
Under the green-wood tree?
Or on the wild heath,
Where the wilder breath
Of the storm doth blow?
Oh, no! oh, no!

Shall they bury me in the Palace Tombs,
Or under the shade of Cathedral domes?
Sweet 'twere to lie on Italy's shore;
Yet not there—nor in Greece, though I love it more.
In the wolf or the vulture my grave shall I find?
Shall my ashes career on the world-seeing wind?
Shall they fling my corpse in the battle mound,
Where coffinless thousands lie under the ground?—

Just as they fall they are buried so—
Oh, no ! oh, no !

No ! on an Irish green hill-side,
On an opening lawn—but not too wide ;
For I love the drip of the wetted trees—
On me blow no gales, but a gentle breeze,
To freshen the turf : put no tombstone there,
But green sods deck'd with daisies fair.
Nor sods too deep ; but so that the dew,
The matted grass-roots may trickle through—
Be my epitaph writ on my country's mind,
“ He serv'd his country and lov'd his kind.”
Oh ! 'twere merry unto the grave to go,
If one were sure to be buried so.

GATHERING CHAUNT

OF THE ULSTER SEPTS, IN THE REIGN OF ELIZABETH.

The sword of the Saxon is red on our hills,
And blood has empurpled the tide of our rills ;
O'Hanlon, unfurl your banner of green,
And high let the SUN-BURST of Erin be seen.

O'Donnell, come down from your dark Donegal,
And drive back the Saxon, and scatter the SCAUL ;
Maguire come forth with the men of your might,
And red let your falchion be seen through the fight.

MacMahon, let victory gleam from your crest,
O'Reilly, come forth, with your boldest and best ;
O'Hagan, M'Donnell, and Derry's bright star,
Advance to the hot crimson banquet of war.

M'Kenna of Treugh, and Maguinniss of Down,
 Up, forward, and share in the deathless renown ;
 O'Dogherty, prince of the wild Innishowen,
 Up, up to the slogan of gallant Tyrone.

The heartless invader his banner extends,
 And deep 'neath its shade is the woe of our friends,
 The crags of Slieve-guillen resound with their wail,
 And Newry is red with the blood of the Gael.

We've fish in our streamlets, and kine in our glens,
 We've shade in our wild woods, and strength in our fens ;
 We've men on our mountains, and hearts in our heath,
 To welcome the foe to the banquet of death.

Bid Essex remember " the Pass of the Plumes,"
 Where the corse of the foeman the valley illumines ;
 Bid Norris again the proud Sassenagh bring,
 To scatter his bones on " the lawn of the spring."

The Eagles of Erin are up for their prey,
 And wolves prowl about in the full face of day,
 " Dunaveeragh" will feast them with flesh of the foe,
 Where Clifford was slain and his churls laid low.

Blackwater, Benburb, and Drum-fluich can declare,
 The rout of De Burgh, and the fate of Kildare—
 The bells of Armagh spoke their joy on the peal,
 Which rung forth the conquest of gallant O'Neill.

The spear of the stranger was broken in twain,
 Where Vaughan, and Waller, and Turner were slain,
 And oh ! it was lovely the blood-hounds to see,
 Like Boccachs retreating from " Beal na ath buidhe."

Then, onward, ye sons of the great Clan-hughboy,
 Shout back your defiance to bloody Mountjoy ;
 We've hope in each arm, and fire in each eye,
 And resolve in each bosom to conquer or die.

THE DALCASSIAN'S WAR-SONG—1014.

I.

Dalcassia's warrior-bands, now,
 The chase forego, the chase forego;
 Far nobler game demands, now,
 The spear and bow, the spear and bow—
 From mountain, glen, and valley,
 In bright array, in bright array,
 Round Erin's standard rally!
 Let cowards stay! let coward's stay!
 The sun-burst that floats o'er us
 In banner'd pride, in banner'd pride,
 Has ever waved before us
 O'er victory's tide! o'er victory's tide!

II.

Who, who, like craven falters,
 Nor bravely draws, nor bravely draws,
 To guard his country's altars,
 And homes and laws! and homes and laws!
 Who fears, with cause so holy,
 The pirate Dane, the pirate Dane?
 Although the Saxon, lowly,
 Now brooks his chain! now brooks his chain!*

The sun-burst that floats o'er us
 In banner'd pride, in banner'd pride,
 Has ever waved before us
 O'er victory's tide! o'er victory's tide!

III.

Still victory's smile is beaming
 Where Murrough leads, where Murrough leads;
 And where his blade is gleaming
 The foeman bleeds! the foeman bleeds!
 Old Brien's dark eye's glancing
 Along th' array, along th' array;

* Irishmen should never forget that, at the time of the glorious victory of Clontarf, the English, our present masters, bowed beneath the Danish yoke.

And the steed's impatient prancing—
 Then let's away! away! away!
 The sun-burst that floats o'er us
 In banner'd pride, in banner'd pride,
 Has ever waved before us
 O'er victory's tide! o'er victory's tide!

THE CURSE OF THE RENEGADES.

Oh, shame light upon them, confusion and scorn!
 Be their names sounds accurs'd to our children unborn!
 No babe ever bless them—all sterile as base!
 No wife ever press them—but perish their race!

Ere first the proud stranger invaded our shore,
 A renegade rose up, and tempted him o'er;
 And the Norman marauder no treachery planned,
 Till a renegade lured him with treason in hand!

The Dane in our feuds found the source of his power;
 Not the people were false, but their chivalry's flower;
 And Callachan, rushing from Cormac's old rock,
 Through Lagenia's shrines carried Paynimry's shock.

Oh, vain was thy valour, Roydamna revered!
 When a Nial's bright sword the idolator cheered;
Such princes, MacMurrough-like, courting the chain,
 Deserved not, by heav'n! o'er such people to reign.

No page in our annals but teems with like guilt;
 Each sword-point is blunted 'gainst treachery's hilt!
 But for this we had shattered oppression's fell yoke—
 But for this through each host of invaders had broke!

And now new Iscariots betray with a-kiss,
 And barter, like Judas, a birthright of bliss!
 Motherland! they still wound thee with venomous tooth—
 They slander thy fame, and proclaim it for truth!

Be the gold of their treason like hell's living fire,
 No Pactolus at hand, when of torture they tire!

May the bread of their falsehood no nutriment lend !
 May each willow affright them to Judas's end !

Arise, blessed Patrick ! complete thy good work ;
 Unkennel these reptiles wherever they lurk ;
 These black, bloated vipers, and renegades vile—
 Oh, pitiless, slay, and unvenom our isle !

THE SAXON SHILLING.

I.

Hark ! a martial sound is heard—
 The march of soldiers, fifing, drumming ;
 Eyes are staring, hearts are stirr'd—
 For bold recruits the brave are coming.
 Ribands flaunting, feathers gay—
 The sounds and sights are surely thrilling,
 Dazzl'd village youths to-day
 Will crowd to take the Saxon Shilling.

II.

Ye, whose spirits will not bow
 In peace to parish tyrants longer—
 Ye, who wear the villain brow,
 And ye who pine in hopeless hunger—
 Fools, without the brave man's faith—
 All slaves and starvings who are willing To sell yourselves to shame and death—
 Accept the fatal Saxon Shilling.

III.

Ere you from your mountains go
 To feel the scourge of foreign fever,
 Swear to serve the faithless foe
 That lures you from your land for ever !
 Swear henceforth its tools to be—
 To slaughter trained by ceaseless drilling—
 Honour, home, and liberty,
 Abandon'd for a Saxon Shilling.

IV.

Go—to find, 'mid crime and toil,
 The doom to which such guilt is hurried ;
 Go—to leave on Indian soil
 Your bones to bleach, accurs'd, unburied !
 Go—to crush the just and brave,
 Whose wrongs with wrath the world are filling ;
 Go—to slay each brother slave,
 Or spurn the blood-stained Saxon Shilling !

V.

Irish hearts ! why should ye bleed,
 To swell the tide of British glory—
 Aiding despots in their need
 Who've changed our green so oft to gory ?
 None, save those who wish to see
 The noblest killed, the meanest killing,
 And true hearts severed from the free,
 Will take again the Saxon Shilling !

VI.

Irish youths ! reserve your strength
 Until an hour of glorious duty,
 When Freedom's smile shall cheer at length
 The land of bravery and beauty.
 Bribes and threats, oh, heed no more—
 Let nought but JUSTICE make you willing
 To leave your own dear Island shore,
 For those who send the Saxon Shilling.

 IRISH WAR-SONG.

A. D. 1843.

I.

Bright sun, before whose glorious ray,
 Our Pagan fathers bent the knee ;
 Whose pillar-altars yet can say,
 When time was young our sires were free—

Who saw'st our latter days' decree—
 Our matrons' tears—our patriots' gore ;
 We swear before high Heaven and thee,
 The Saxon holds us slaves no more !

II.

Our sun-burst on the Roman foe
 Flash'd vengeance once in foreign field—
 On Clontarf's plain lay scathed low
 What power the Sea-kings fierce could wield !
 Benburb might say whose cloven shield
 'Neath bloody hoofs was trampled o'er ;
 And, by these memories high, we yield
 Our limbs to Saxon chains no more !

III.

The clarseach wild, whose trembling string
 Had long the "song of sorrow" spoke,
 Shall bid the wild *Rosg-Catha sing
 The curse and crime of Saxon yoke.
 And, by each heart his bondage broke—
 Each exile's sigh on distant shore—
 Each martyr 'neath the headsman's stroke—
 The Saxon holds us slaves no more !

IV.

Send the loud war-cry o'er the main—
 Your sun-burst to the breezes spread !
 That slogan rends the heaven in twain—
 The earth reels back beneath your tread !
 Ye Saxon despots, hear, and dread—
 Thy march o'er patriot hearts is o'er—
 That shout hath told—that tramp hath said,
 Our country's sons are slaves no more !

* Literally the "Eye of Battle," the glorious "incentive to the fight," the war song of the bard, before whose "Sea of Passion" the warriors rushed to death or victory.

IRISH ARE NO LONGER SLAVES.

AIR—"Rule, Britannia."

I.

When Britain first, at hell's command,
 Prepar'd to cross the Irish main,
 Thus spoke a prophet in our land,
 'Mid traitors' scoff, and fools' disdain,
 "If Britannia, Britannia cross the waves,
 Irish ever shall be slaves.

II.

And suff'ring still with slav'ry found,
 Shall bruise your heart, and sere your brain—
 Lost Isle! with matchless beauty crown'd,
 But wanting strength to break your chain;
 If Britannia, Britannia cross the waves,
 Irish ever shall be slaves."

III.

In vain the warning patriot spoke,
 In treach'rous guise Britannia came,
 Divided, bent us to her yoke,
 Till Ireland rose, in Freedom's name,
 And Britannia, Britannia boldly braves,
 Irish are no longer slaves!

 THE MEMORY OF THE DEAD.

I.

Who fears to speak of Ninety-Eight?
 Who blushes at the name?
 When cowards mock the patriots' fate,
 Who hangs his head for shame?
 He's all a knave, or half a slave,
 Who slights his country thus;
 But a true man, like you, man,
 Will fill your glass with us.

II.

We drink the memory of the brave,
 The faithful and the few—
 Some lie far off beyond the wave,
 Some sleep in Ireland, too ;
 All—all are gone—but still lives on
 The fame of those who died ;
 All true men, like you, men,
 Remember them with pride.

III.

Some on the shores of distant lands
 Their weary hearts have laid,
 And by the stranger's heedless hands
 Their lonely graves were made,
 But, though their clay be far away
 Beyond the Atlantic foam—
 In true men, like you, men,
 Their spirit's still at home.

IV.

The dust of some is Irish earth ;
 Among their own they rest ;
 And the same land that gave them birth
 Has caught them to her breast ;
 And we will pray that from their clay
 Full many a race may start
 Of true men, like you, men,
 To act as brave a part.

V.

They rose in dark and evil days
 To right their native land ;
 They kindled here a living blaze
 That nothing shall withstand.
 Alas ! that Might can vanquish Right—
 They fell and pass'd away ;
 But true men, like you, men,
 Are plenty here to-day.

VI.

Then here's their memory—may it be
 For us a guiding light,
 To cheer our strife for liberty,
 And teach us to unite.
 Through good and ill, be Ireland's still,
 Though sad as theirs your fate ;
 And true men be you, men,
 Like those of Ninety-Eight.

WESTERN WAR SONG.

A.D. 1642.

I.

Lo ! Freedom again hath appear'd on our hills,
 Already the isle her divinity fills ;
 The harp wakes—the sword rattles—and kindles the brand,
 While the breeze of her wings passes over the land.

II.

From the rock guarded mountains—her cradle and throne—
 She moves in her splendour—she moves not alone :
 For myriads unsheathing the chain-breaking sword,
 Now hail the bright vision long vainly ador'd.

III.

The war's nightly blaze from the mountain shall rise,
 And thine Oriflamme, Ruin ! stream red to the skies,
 Till, numberless, thronging, with torches and swords,
 We chase back to ocean these foreigner hordes.

IV.

When the foul fetter clanks on the son of the hills,
 His frame with the rage of a chaf'd tiger thrills—
 With clenched hand, iron sinews, and fiercely knit brow—
 Could a harness of adamant baffle him now ?

V.

No! thirsting to madness, red vengeance will pass,
 Like the cloud's subtle fire, thro' a fortress of brass,
 Let cannon blaze round him, or white billows flow,
 He will reach, thro' them all, the heart's blood of his foe.

VI.

Do'st thou think Connemara's dark fishers can fear
 The battle, who nightly thro' hurricane steer—
 Who unmoor the frail skiff, from the Pin's barren sod,
 To struggle with ocean, the war-horse of God?

VII.

From the Giant's spar caves; from the stormy Kilkee;
 From where Moher frowns over the fathomless sea,
 Where the cliffs of Baltard mock the strength of the waves,
 And the tempest round Arran indignantly raves;

VIII.

Shall come forth to combat a fetterless race,
 Whom the rocks of the West bear to ocean's embrace—
 Whose spirits, like tempest, resistless and free,
 Proclaim them the terrible sons of the sea.

IX.

Not the phalanx of Sparta, for threshold and shrine,
 More nobly has battled, my country, than thine;
 Our cause is as holy—our bosoms as true—
 And Erin may have her Thermopylæ too.

 THE HOUSE THAT PADDY BUILT.

“Take this—What's this?”

This is the House that Paddy built!—
 This is the Parliament that sat in the House that Paddy built—
 These are the slaves, who basely bent,
 And sold to England the Parliament,
 That sat in the House that Paddy built!

This is the struggle for justice and right—
 The peaceful and good constitutional fight,
 To remove from our country the Union-blight!—
 The struggle of those who've spoke out at last,
 And said that the time of despair was past,
 And that, &c.

This is the Whig Lord, who bribery tried
 With the young men of Ireland, once her hope and her pride,
 Who, ere they had yielded, ought surely have died!
 They, who kept from the struggle for justice and right,
 The peaceful and good constitutional fight.
 To remove, &c.

These are the Tories, seated now in high place,
 The haters of Ireland, her creed, and her race!
 More bold than the Lord, who bribery tried
 With the young men of Ireland, once truly her pride!
 Who, ere they had yielded, ought surely have died!
 They who now hold off from the struggle of right,
 The peaceful and good constitutional fight,
 To remove, &c.

These—oh, these are the PEOPLE—still honest and true,
 Who will do once again what before they did do!
 Make Peel and his fellows the rights to concede
 Of a whole nation now—as before of a creed!
 Shake off the vile Tories, though firm now in place,
 (The haters of Ireland, her creed, and her race:)
 Nor bring back the Whig Lord, who bribery tried
 With the young men of Ireland, once truly her pride!
 Who, ere they had yielded, ought surely have died!
 They who now hold off from the struggle of right,
 The peaceful and good constitutional fight,
 To remove from our country the Union-blight!—
 The struggle of those who've spoke out at last,
 And said that the time of despair was past!
 And that Ireland's rights were well worth one cast!
 After all the years twice twenty and two—
 That she has been doomed to endure and rue

THE UNION OF NAME—That UNION OF WOE !
 Which England compelled her to undergo,
 When her hopes were lost, and her spirit was low,
 In the dire confusion and slaughter fell,
 That ensued from the terrible struggle to quell
 Her People, whom tortures forced to rebel !
 When those tortures, with bribes in money and place,
 And titles (the badges of shame and disgrace !)
 Played the game of that Lord, of name accurst—
 The leader and chief—and by much the worst
 Even of that vile crew, who basely bent,
 And sold to England her Parliament
 That sat in the House that Paddy built !

PUNCHIFICATION.

“ On this head we have no apprehension : Mr. O’Connell may be a diverting mob-actor, but he is not, after all, half so diverting as Punch.”—Morning Herald.

Let England’s old womanhood tremble no more,
 Let the Peelites securely dine, breakfast, and lunch ;
 Though O’Connell makes burning harangues by the score,
 Still he can’t, or he will not, cut capers like Punch !

Though the wrongs of the people in number exceed
 The potatoes that Irishmen saltlessly munch,
 Let the cock-a-hoop Tories ne’er stop to take heed,
 For—O’Connell’s not half such a grinner as Punch !

There were mighty strange things done by Merlin of yore,
 And queer tales are narrated of old Mother Bunch ;
 But a wonder like this was ne’er heard of before,
 That injustice shall rule, since—O’Connell’s not Punch !

And thou, Ireland, who stoodest so straight t’other day,
 Thou stoopest anew like a man with a hunch,
 Since the ass of the Herald came out with his bray,
 That—in short that O’Connell’s no puppet, like Punch !

Oh! there's only one chance that can save us from wreck,
 And help Dan to get rid of his foes in a bunch—
 That the puppet may break, by good fortune, his neck,
 As the showman some night makes a tumbler of Punch!

THE LEINSTER WAR-SONG.

I.

Bondsmen!—compatriots!—scoff of the stranger,
 Grasp the war-torch, and the chain-breaking sword;
 Or crouch, like lash'd hounds, at the foreigner's manger,
 And lick the red scourge of your Sassenagh lord!

II.

Lo! thy proud chivalry, Leinster, advances!—
 Wildly the "Rosg-Catha" swells from the glen—
 The dance of thy banners—the flash of thy lances—
 Awake Alleluiahs again and again.

III.

Rouse you!—for shame!—from the slumber of ages,
 Sons of the murdered, by forest and caves—
 Shout like the ocean, when fierce tempest rages,
 Rise with the strength of ten millions of waves!

IV.

Light your war-brands at the flame of Kildara—
 The "Sun-burst" has flapped her green wings on the gale!—
 Take down the harp from the ruins of Tara,
 And strike forth the march of array'd Innisfail!

V.

Sound a loud hymn; for the gathering Nation,
 Surging and murmuring, heaves like the sea—
 Sound! and full soon the glad harp-strings' vibration
 Shall chime to the chorus of millions made free!

VI.

By the crimson Clontarf, and the Liffey's dark waters—
 By shore, vale, and stream, with our hearts' blood that runs!—
 By Barrow and Boyne, conflagration and slaughter
 Shall toss their red plumes in the blaze of our guns!

VII.

Ere for life the pale dastard his liberty barter,
 Let him pause, for each sod is a patriot's tomb;
 And if green are our vales, 'twas the blood of our martyrs
 Enrich'd them for aye with that Emerald bloom.

VIII.

But go, living corse, and kneel down to the stranger
 In thy festering cearment of infamy roll'd—
 Go! traitor and cow'rd, in our deadliest danger,
 Sell country and soul to the Saxon for gold.

IX.

Oh! burning reproach!—To such damning prostration
 Has the fetter corroded God's image away,
 That while curses and groans overwhelm the nation,
 The sneering destroyer is hailed on his way?

X.

O'Toole and the Geraldine, Eustace, O'Farrell,
 Chiefs who led Leinster to conquest of yore;
 O'Byrne, MacMorrhagh, O'Melachlin, O'Carrol,
 Plunket, and Nugent, O'Faly, O'More.

XI.

Shall we crouch on the plains where your sharp sabres clashing,
 Lit the spring-tide of battle's magnificent flow;
 As in midnight's deep gloom, o'er the stormy wave flashing,
 The balefires of ruin exultingly glow?

XII.

Oh! never, by heaven! the nation hath spoken,
 "The foul foreign idol shall bleed on our plains,"

If bolts forged in hell by man's might can be broken,
If not we can perish—"The grave has no chains."

XIII.

And sweet for green Erin to fall crush'd and gory,
In some vale shamrock-spangled that honour illumes,
That valour has hallow'd to freedom and glory,
And sleep, like the brave, in the proud "Pass of Plumes."

ON VISITING THE BOTANIC GARDENS, CORK.

(VERY REV. T. MATHEW'S CEMETERY.)

By W. M. Downes, Author of "Poetic Sketches," &c.

In this sweet spot the lov'd are sleeping;
The sculptur'd angel, pure as snow,
Is, like the living mourner, weeping
For those who rest in death below!
On the white marble fond affection,
Above the buried and the cold,
Hath trac'd—ah, mournful retrospection!—
Their praise in characters of gold.

From sacred lore is here recorded
The mortal's hope—the mortal's doom—
It tells how virtue is rewarded,
It speaks of bliss beyond the tomb.
That glorious meed shall Heaven be giving,
A crown to deck the sainted head
Of him whose worth hath bless'd the living—
Who gave this shelter to the dead.

When here enshrin'd his dust reposes,
(Oh, distant be that gloomy day
Of grief to Erin's isle, when closes
The grave o'er Mathew's honour'd clay,)

That cross, the type of man's salvation,
 Shall mark the spot through many an age,
 The tomb of fondest veneration,
 Where lies the patriot, saint, and sage!

Well may they bless his parted spirit,
 The moral race of future times,
 Rejoicing they no more inherit
 Their country's bane, her woes and crimes.
 Yes; those unborn, with pious feeling,
 To whom his fame shall yet be known,
 In solemn circle will be kneeling,
 Young pilgrims round that hallow'd stone.

Each age his memory renewing,
 As sweet and bright as spring's return,
 Shall virtue's genius still be strewing
 Undying bloom upon that urn,
 Where lies the man whose fame ascended,
 Like incense sacred, pure, sublime!
 Whose name and deeds, though life be ended,
 Shall live beyond the bounds of time!

ERIN—OUR OWN LITTLE ISLE.

I.

Oh! Irishmen! never forget—
 'Tis a foreigner's farm—your own little isle;
 Oh! Irishmen! when will you get
 Some life in your hearts for your poor little isle?
 Yes! yes!—we've a dear little spot of it!
 Oh! yes!—a sweet little isle!
 Yes! yes!—if Irishmen thought of it,
 'Twould be a dear little, sweet little isle!

II.

Then, come on and rise, ev'ry man of you—
 Now is the time for a stir to be made ;
 Ho ! Pat ! who made such a lamb of you ?
 Life to your soul, boy, and strength to your blade !
 Yes ! yes !—a dear little spot of it !
 Oh ! yes !—a sweet little isle !
 Yes ! yes !—if Irishmen thought of it,
 Erin once more is our own little isle !

III.

Rise ! heartily ! shoulder to shoulder—
 We'll show 'em our strength with good humour galore ;
 Rise ! rise ! show each foreign beholder
 We've not lost our love to thee, Erin astore !
 For oh ! yes !—'tis a dear little spot of it !
 Yes ! yes !—a sweet little isle !
 Yes ! yes !—the Irish have thought of it ;
 Erin for ever—our own little isle !

IV.

Never forget what your forefathers fought for, O !
 When, with " O'Nial" or " O'Donnell aboo !"
Sassenaghs ev'rywhere sunk in the slaughter, O !
 Vengeance for insult, dear Erin, to you !
 For oh ! yes !—a dear little spot of it !
 Yes ! yes !—a sweet little isle ;
 Yes ! yes !—if Irishmen thought of it,
 Erin once more is our own little isle !

V.

Yes, we have strength to make Irishmen free again ;
 Only UNITE—and we'll conquer our foe :
 And never on earth shall a foreigner see again
 Erin a province—though lately so low.
 For oh ! yes !—we've a dear little spot of it !
 Yes ! yes !—a sweet little isle !
 Yes ! yes !—the Irish have thought of it ;
 Erin for ever—OUR OWN little isle !

THE VOICE OF THE NATION.

I.

How bright will the day be—how radiant and blest
The dawning of Freedom and Peace in the west,
When the chain that foul treason around us had cast
Will be shattered and flung to the spoiler at last.

II.

When that trumpet-toned voice will go forth, as before,
Till its echo resounds on earth's uttermost shore—
“*No laws under Heaven will the Irishman own
But the home-hallowed laws of his country alone.*”

III.

Then our national emblems aloft shall be seen,
The shamrock and harp on a banner of green ;
And when free to the breezes that banner shall fly,
The wide world to enslave it again, we defy !

IV.

The shameful distinction of class and of creed
Will be trampled to dust like a poisonous weed ;
And the sweet flower of concord shall rise in its room,
Breathing union and peace over bigotry's tomb.

V.

The peasant no more shall be driven from the soil,
Nor robbed like a slave of the fruit of his toil ;
But the right to his cot and his acres shall be,
As the lord's to his manor-hall, sacred and free !

VI.

The loom and the workshop, now silent so long,
Will echo again with glad industry's song ;
And comfort and smiling contentment be there,
Where our artisans languish in want and despair.

VII.

Let us pray for that day—let us manfully strive,
 Nor cease while one true Irish heart is alive
 And shame on the sceptic who dreams we can fail,
 Or the dastard whose heart for a moment could quail.

VIII.

We have God on our side, who hath blessed the green isle,
 And made it with beauty and verdure to smile—
 Who preserved us in bondage still faithful and true,
 And gave us the spirit no chains could subdue.

IX.

We have him still to lead us—our guide from the first,
 Who despaired not when prospects were darkest and worst—
 Whose fervour the cold hand of time cannot chill—
 Our true-hearted, high-minded Patriot still!

X.

In that God we will trust—by that leader we'll stand,
 United—unshrinking—bold heart, and brave hand;
 And the Saxon shall quail at the voice of our zeal,
 "O'Connell—the land of our love—and Repeal!"

 A PORTRAIT FROM THE PEERAGE.

Mentitur, qui te vitiosum, Zoïle dixit—
 Non vitiosus homo es, Zoïle, sed vitium.

MARTIAL.

In birth, a wanton mother's worthy child,
 The offspring of her nuptial faith defil'd;
 The graceless spawn of lewd intrigue confess'd,
 When keen remorse her dying hour oppress'd;
 A jackdaw-noble, glittering in the plumes
 Of the old race, whose honours he assumes.
 In youth, a profligate, devour'd by debt,
 With crowds of starving creditors beset

At home, for ever in a savage mood,
 His temper venom'd as his pois'nous blood.
 In politics a brazen renegade,
 With bigots leagu'd, his country to degrade ;
 First, in a foreign senate, to demand
 The Saxon's sword, to crush his native land ;
 Which ev'n their satrap with contempt denied,
 Spurning the baseness of the parricide.
 Again behold him impotent as vile,
 Libelling our chief—the guardian of our isle,
 A toothless viper mumbling at a file.

Next 'mid his tenants, see the Despot stand,
 The grinding Shylock of a shuddering land—
 Still on the watch, with law's deceitful mesh,
 To extort his bond, and get his pound of flesh—
 Even at the time that gave his Saviour birth,
 Quenching the fire upon the poor man's hearth !

Ye, who would know his person and his life,
 Look at his skin, and listen to his wife !—
 His hapless wife, by brutal tyranny,
 Driv'n to the pension-list and infamy—
 His tainted skin, so loathsome to the eye,
 That starv'd hyænas from its touch would fly—
 Disgusting object ! yet, does this impart
 A feeble emblem of his fouler heart !

TO THE PRESIDENT

OF THE ORANGE OPERATIVE SOCIETY, ON HIS PROJECTED PEDESTRIAN CRUSADE.

What ! talk of crusading through England “ on foot,”
 With your budget of slanders as black as my boot !

Do abandon

That humbug at least—for you know, Trashy Gregg,
 That Father Maguire hasn't left you a leg

To stand on !

A SONG OF SORROW.

Dead are my hopes, and my desponding soul
An arid soil, that bears nor fruits nor flowers ;
And, blindly tottering to an unknown goal,
Joyless and goodless pass my futile hours.

There is no sunshine in my spring of life—
There is no rest-place in my pilgrimage ;
All outward ill and endless inward strife,
My youth have fettered with the chains of age.

Haunted with gloomy thoughts for evermore,
Like sheeted ghosts, peopling my solitude,
I sigh for hopes that time may not restore,
And weep my endless exile from the good.

The dark and goalless voyage of my fate
Is lighted by the charnel lamp alone ;
And shore or shipwreck callous I await,
Nor that with smile would see, nor this with groan.

And one sole, simple, solitary joy,
Dear as the light that cheers the wand'rer's way,
Is left my languid senses to employ,
And fill my mind throughout the weary day.

And thou, sage Philosoph, wouldst thou discover
The talisman that sways me—soul and body ?
List—on my lips the solemn words now hover :
“ ‘ Tis oysters barbecued and whiskey toddy. ”

THE SAXON MASSACRE.

The sword of the Saxon with slaughter is red—
But the blood on his blade in no battle was shed ;
For—Heavens ! the babe, and the maid, and the mother,
Have shared the same fate with the sire and the brother !

It is not the blush by the morning sun spread
 That tints the horizon so luridly red—
 It is not the heath on the mountain side high,
 Whose blaze flings the glare on the far-flushing sky—
 'Tis the flame of the village illumines the air,
 Where the shriek of the maiden, in madden'd despair,
 Pleads to the hearts of the monsters in vain,
 Who are dyed with the blood of her kindred slain!

Spare! spare them, cursed Wilmot!* the heroes who lie
 On those gore-crimson'd couches, unfriended, to die!
 To the helpless—the fallen—some pity extend—
 They fought but their altars and homes to defend!
 Behold their deep wounds!—they are foes—but they're men!—
 You never will blench at their onset again!
 'Tis vain, the lone war-steed that gasps on the plain,
 When midnight broods over the dying and slain,
 As well might expect the gaunt wolves to forbear,
 As the hope of the merciless Saxon to spare!

O'SULLIVAN'S RETURN.

[The following ballad is founded on an ill-remembered story of an Irish chief returning after long absence on the Continent, and being wrecked and drowned close to his own castle.]

AIR—" Cruiskeen Lawn."—Slow time.

I.

O'Sullivan has come
 Within sight of his home
 He had left it long years ago;
 The tears are in his eyes,
 And he prays the wind to rise
 As he looks tow'rd's his castle from the prow, from the prow,
 As he looks tow'rd's his castle from the prow.

* One of the acts of Sir Charles Wilmot, one of Elizabeth's pacificators of Ireland, was to butcher in cold blood the sick and wounded whom he found in a deserted Irish camp.

II.

For the day had been calm,
 And slow the good ship swam,
 And the evening gun had been fir'd ;
 He knows the hearts beat wild
 Of mother, wife, and child,
 And of clans who to see him long desir'd, long desir'd,
 And of clans who to see him long desir'd.

III.

Of the tender ones the clasp—
 Of the gallant ones the grasp—
 He thinks until his tears fall warm :
 And full seems his wide hall,
 With friends from wall to wall,
 Where their welcome shakes the banners, like a storm, like a storm,
 Where their welcome shakes the banners, like a storm.

IV.

Then he sees another scene—
 Norman churls on the green—
 “ O'Sullivan aboo !” is the cry ;
 For filled is his ship's hold
 With arms and Spanish gold,
 And he sees the snake-twin'd spear wave on high, wave on high,
 And he sees the snake-twin'd spear wave on high.*

* The Standard bearings of O'Sullivan See O'Donovan's edition of the Banquet of Donna U-Gedh and the Battle of Mag Rath, for the Archaeological Society, App., p. 349—“ Bearings of O'Sullivan at the Battle of Caisglinn.”

“ I see, mightily advancing on the plain,
 The banner of the race of noble Finghin ;
 His sear with a venomous adder (entwined),
 His host all fiery champions.”

Finghin was one of their most famous progenitors.

V.

“ Finghin’s race shall be freed
 From the Norman’s cruel breed—
 My sires freed Bearra once before,
 When the Barnwells were strewn
 On the fields, like hay in June,
 And but one of them escaped from our shore, from our shore,
 And but one of them escaped from our shore.”*

VI.

And, warming in his dream,
 He floats on victory’s stream,
 Till Desmond—till all Erin is free—
 Then, how calmly he’d go down,
 Full of years, and of renown,
 To his grave near that castle by the sea, by the sea,
 To his grave near that castle by the sea!

VII.

But the wind heard his word,
 As though he were its lord,
 And the ship is dash’d up the Bay.
 Alas! for that proud barque,
 The night has fallen dark,
 ’Tis too late to Adragool to bear away, bear away,
 ’Tis too late to Adragool to bear away.

VIII.

Black and rough was the rock,
 And terrible the shock,
 As the good ship crashed asunder ;
 And bitter was the cry,
 And the sea ran mountains high,
 And the wind was as loud as the thunder, the thunder,
 And the wind was as loud as the thunder.

* The Barnwells were Normans who seized Bear in the reign of Henry II., but were all cut off by the O’Sullivans, save one—the ancestor of the Lords Kingsland, Trimblestone, &c.

IX.

There's woe in Bearra,
 There's woe in Glengarragh,
 And from Bantry unto Dunkerron.
 All Desmond hears their grief,
 And wails alone their chief—
 “Is it thus, is it thus that you return, you return —
 Is it thus, is it thus that you return?”

 THE EXTERMINATION.

“Dominus pupillum et viduam suscipiet.”—Ps. 145.

I.

When tyranny's pampered and purple-clad minions
 Drive forth the lone widow and orphan to die,
 Shall no angel of vengeance unfurl his red pinions,
 And, grasping sharp thunderbolts, rush from on high?

II.

“Pity! oh, pity!—A little while spare me:
 My baby is sick—I am feeble and poor;
 In the cold winter blast, from the hut if you tear me,
 My lord, we must die on the desolate moor!”

III.

'Tis vain—for the despot replies but with laughter,
 While rudely his serfs thrust her forth on the wold:
 Her cabin is blazing, from threshold to rafter,
 And she crawls o'er the mountain, sick, weeping, and cold.

IV.

Her thinly-clad child on the stormy hill shivers—
 The thunders are pealing dread anthems around—
 Loud roar in their anger the tempest-lash'd rivers—
 And the loosen'd rocks down with the wild torrent bound.

V.

Vainly she tries in her bosom to cherish
 Her sick infant boy, 'mid the horrors around,
 Till, faint and despairing, she sees her babe perish—
 Then lifeless she sinks on the snow-cover'd ground.

VI.

Tho' the children of Ammon, with trumpets and psalters,
 To devils pour'd torrents of innocent gore,
 Let them blush from deep hell at the far redder altars
 Where the death-dealing tyrants of Ireland adore!

VII.

But, for Erin's life-current, thro' long ages flowing,
 Dark demons that pierce her, you yet shall atone;
 Even now the volcano beneath you is glowing,
 And the Moloch of tyranny reels on his throne.

THE CLANCONNELL* WAR-SONG.—A.D. 1597.

AIR—“Roderich Vich Alpine dhu.”

I.

Proudly the note of the trumpet is sounding,
 Loudly the war-cries arise on the gale,
 Fleetly the steed by Lough Swilly is bounding
 To join the thick squadrons in Samer's green vale.
 On, every mountaineer!
 Strangers to flight and fear;
 Rush to the standard of dauntless Red Hugh!†

* The sept of O'Donnell.

† The famous Red Hugh O'Donnell who aided O'Neill in defeating the best generals and most brilliant armies of Elizabeth.

Bonnoght and Gallowglass
 Throng from each mountain-pass !
 On for old Erin !—O' Donnell-aboo !

II.

Princely O'Neill to our aid is advancing
 With many a chieftain and warrior-clan ;
 A thousand proud steeds in his vanguard are prancing,
 'Neath the borderers brave from the banks of the Bann :—
 Many a heart shall quail
 Under the coat of mail ;
 Deeply the merciless foeman shall rue
 When on his ear shall ring,
 Borne on the breeze's wing,
 Tirconnell's dread war-cry—O' Donnell-aboo !

III.

Wildly o'er Desmond the wild wolf is howling,
 Fearless the eagle sweeps over the plain,
 The fox in the streets of the city is prowling—
 All, all, who would scare them are banished or slain !
 Grasp, every stalwart hand,
 Hackbut and battle-brand—
 Pay them well back the deep debt so long due :
 Norris and Clifford well
 Can of Tirconnell tell—
 Onward to glory !—O' Donnell-aboo !

IV.

Sacred the cause that Clanconnell's defending—
 The altars we kneel at and homes of our sires ;
 Ruthless the ruin the foe is extending—
 Midnight is red with the plunderer's fires !
 On with O'Donnell, then,
 Fight the old fight again,
 Sons of Tirconnell all valiant and true !
 Make the false Saxon feel
 Erin's avenging steel !
 Strike for your country !—O' Donnell-aboo !

THE DEATH OF SARSFIELD.

[Sarsfield was killed at the Battle of Landen, in the Low Countries, on the 29th July, 1693. In that Battle William III. was beaten by Marshal Luxembourg, with heavy loss on both sides.]

Sarsfield has sailed from Limerick town—
 He held it long for country and crown ;
 And ere he yielded, the Saxon swore
 To spoil our homes and our shrines no more.

Sarsfield and all his chivalry
 Are fighting for France in the Low Country—
 At his fiery charge the Saxons reel ;
 They learnt at Limerick to dread the steel.

Sarsfield is dying on Landen's plain,
 His corslet hath met the ball in vain—
 As his life-blood gushes into his hand,
 He says, " Oh ! that this was for fatherland !"

Sarsfield is dead, yet no tears shed we—
 He died in the arms of victory,
 And his dying words shall edge the brand,
 When we chace the foe from our native land.

 THE TRAMPLED LAND.

I.

I saw a nation sunk in grief—
 I heard a nation's wail ;
 And their deep-toned misery was caught
 By every passing gale.
 Want guarded every peasant's door,
 Swept each mechanic's board ;
 Yet the earth had teemed—but only teemed
 To swell the rich man's hoard ;

I saw the nobles of that land
 In pride and pomp roll by ;
 And I read contempt for the poor man's lot,
 In every haughty eye.

II.

I heard the infant's cry for bread—
 The mother's piercing shriek ;
 And I marked the trace of famine in
 The father's sunken cheek.
 I saw him cast his eye to heaven
 With a stern and sad appeal ;
 And I knew he felt that anguish deep
 Which the hopeless only feel.
 Yet still the nobles of that land
 In pride and pomp rolled by ;
 Nor less contempt for the poor man's lot
 Marked every haughty eye !

III.

The people humbly sued for bread,
 But their rulers "gave a stone :"
 And they steeled their sordid hearts and mocked
 The peasant's dying groan !
 "Low rents, cheap bread," the people cried—
 "Untrammel labour's hands !"
 "Taxed corn, high rents, low wages," sneered
 The callous ruling bands !
 And the manlords of that land rolled by
 To church in pomp and pride !
 And the people's dying wail despised,
 And the people's power defied !

IV.

Then madness came upon the land,
 'Twas the madness of despair,
 Unarmed crowds went forth—to beg !
 With shouts that rent the air !*

* Skibbereen, Waterford, &c. The claims of the people upon these occasions was, to be freed of a tax which the landowners alone ought to bear.

And the rulers grinned a ghastly smile
 Of triumph and delight,
 As forth their minions came to crush
 The weak with armed might ;
 And the landlords of that land surveyed,
 With bland approving eye,
 The savage and the ruthless war
 Of stern monopoly !

V.

Now the council of that nation sits
 Again in grave divan :
 But care they aught for liberty,
 Or for the rights of man ?
 A coxcomb's proclamations claim
 Discussion fierce and strong ;
 But a starving nation's loud appeals
 Unheeded pass along !
 And still the cumberers of the earth
 Contrive to hold in chains
 The nerve and sinew of the land
 Throughout their wide domains.

VI.

And shall this state of thralldom last ?
 Can Heaven's approving eye,
 Through clouds of blood, look placidly
 On such vile tyranny ?
 No ! brethren, no ; 'twere blasphemy
 These doubtings to maintain.
 Up ! right your wrongs, let despots sink,
 Be freemen once again.
 Go ! tell THE LOCUSTS that the earth
 Shall yield the food you crave,
 Or * * * * * Shall * * * * *

BOYHOOD'S YEARS.

Ah! why should I recal them—the gay, the joyous years,
Ere hope was cross'd or pleasure dimm'd by sorrow and by tears?

Or why should memory love to trace youth's glad and sunlit way,

When those who made its charms sweet are gathered to decay?
The summer's sun shall come again to brighten hill and bower—

The teeming earth its fragrance bring beneath the balmy shower;

But all in vain will mem'ry strive, in vain we shed our tears—
They're gone away and can't return—the friends of boyhood's years!

Ah! why then wake my sorrow, and bid me now count o'er
The vanished friends so dearly prized—the days to come no more—

The happy days of infancy, when no guile our bosoms knew,
Nor reck'd we of the pleasures that with each hour flew?

'Tis all in vain to weep for them—the past a dream appears;
And where are they—the lov'd, the young, the friends of boyhood's years?

Go seek them in the cold church-yard—they long have stolen to rest;

But do not weep, for their young cheeks by woe were ne'er oppressed:

Life's sun for them in splendour set—no cloud came o'er the ray
That lit them from this gloomy world upon their joyous way.
No tears about their graves be shed—but sweetest flow'rs be flung—

The fittest off'ring thou canst make to hearts that perish young—

To hearts this world has not torn with racking hopes and fears;

For bless'd are they who pass away in boyhood's happy years!

TWO SONNETS.

I.

LITERARY LEISURE.

“ Around me I behold
 The mighty minds of old ;
 My never-failing friends are they,
 With whom I converse day by day.”

SOUTHEY.

Let my life pass in healthful, happy ease,
 The world and all its schemes shut out my door ;
 Rich in a competence and nothing more,
 Saving the student's wealth—“ Apollo's fees”—
 Long rows of goodly volumes, to appease
 My early love and quenchless thirst of lore.
 No Want to urge me on the path of Gain—
 No Hope to lure me in Ambition's track ;
 Struggles and strife, and all their savage train,
 Still from my tranquil dwelling driven back ;
 My only triumphs—if such toys I lack—
 Some subtle nut of science burst in twain,
 Or knot unravell'd. Thus be't mine to live,
 And feel life pass like a long summer eve.

II.

THE SPIRIT OF THE TIMES.

“ From pole to pole the deep electric tone
 Of Liberty is out. Wilt thou not share ?”

Anon.

Up, recreant, up ! Our land hath called her sons
 From solitudes and cities, courts and marts,
 To fight her fight, and lo ! what eager hearts
 Answer her call. But not with blades and guns,
 But arms more keen than Europe's or the Hun's—
 Reason and Truth, come they to play their parts.
 Shake off the dream-world's thralldom and awake
 To see thy land become regenerate,
 And aid, if aid thou may'st, a work so great.

The mist of prejudice, as from a lake,
Is rising from men's minds, and tyrants quake
Reading the signs aright that speak our coming fate.
Then up! for here the patriot heart may glow
With ecstasy that tame life cannot know.

THE IRISH CATHOLIC TO HIS PROTESTANT BROTHER.

“ Oh, Paddy, my boy,
What makes you so shy
To join with your Protestant brother,
Your brother ?
Sure, you'll never thrive,
Unless you contrive
To be on good terms with each other,
Each other.”

Old Song.

I.

What curse is on our land and us,
That bigot strife so long has lasted—
That every cheering prospect thus
Is by its fatal influence blasted!
That still, when round our banner green
The dawning hope of freedom rallies,
Religious discord comes between,
To mix her poison in the chalice!

II.

Religious discord! Oh! shall man,
The worm by doubt and darkness bounded,
His fellow-creature dare to ban,
For faith, in God, sincerely founded!
A holier gospel let us preach,
In spite of angry bigot's railing—
His own eternal hope to each;
But love and peace through all prevailing.

III.

And are not all our ties the same—
One sod beneath—one blue sky o'er us;

True Irish both, in heart and name—
 One lot, or dark, or bright before us?
 A thousand links about us wound
 To peace and mutual kindness urge us;
 The very seas that gird us round
 Speak UNION in their sleepless surges.

IV.

Remember glorious eighty-two,
 And wakening freedom's voice of thunder;
 That spirit first was roused by you,
 Which burst at length my bonds asunder.
 How bright, though brief, the halo then
 That o'er our common country lighted!
 Alas! the spoiler came again—
 He came, and found us disunited.

V.

Our annals stained with blood and tears
 Still preach this warning, this example,
 The wicked feuds of bygone years
 At once beneath our feet to trample.
 To have but one distinction known,
 One line from henceforth drawn among us,
 The line of false and true alone,
 Of those who love and those who wrong us.

VI.

Unite with me, then, brother mine,
 Oppressor and oppressed no longer,
 A bond of peace we'll round us twine
 Than all the Saxon's fetters stronger.
 Be Ireland's good our common creed,
 Her sacred cause alone enlist us;
 With gallant hearts and God to speed
 What power on earth will dare resist us?

BEING A SECOND SERIES OF

POLITICAL SONGS AND NATIONAL BALLADS

P R E F A C E.

WHEN we ventured, within a few months after the "NATION" was started, to reprint the Poetry of it, we did an unprecedented thing, and one said to be of doubtful prudence. The Newspaper to be sure had succeeded, but it seemed a trial ruinous to these verses and injurious to the paper to expose its weekly miscellanies to the test of permanent criticism. "They are light cavalry," said a friend; "they have charged famously for once, you'll find them jaded hacks when wheeled again into line." We trusted them and published.

Yet their success has surprised us. We hardly hoped that their popularity could extend beyond our own class and country. But the Tory has praised them more than the Liberal, the anti-Repealer as much as the Nationalist, while their success in foreign countries has at least equalled their success here. Mr. O'CONNELL thought the ballads "very good," Mr. SHAW "most able," Mr. BUTT "INSPIRED." The Irish press thought them excellent for Ireland, but the Morning Post said they were "superior to anything they had supposed to exist at present;" the Leeds Times thought them "great achievements," and the Tablet called them "the music of the battle-field." To ascend higher, the Dublin Review says, they are "vigorous and bold," "fitted to grasp the nation;" the Quarterly found in them "great beauty of language and imagery," and a Fraser declared that though they are "mischievous" it "dare not condemn them they are so full of beauty."

The First Part of the SPIRIT OF THE NATION has gone through two editions here; has been bought by men of all creeds and kinds, from the peasantry to the peerage, the soldier and policeman to the Quarter-master-General, from TOM MOORE to THRESHAM GREGG.

The American papers regularly reprint our verses week by week, and a large edition of the SPIRIT OF THE NATION has been issued in New York, and sold throughout the United States, and Canada.

Our little book of rhymes has been circulated enough, and praised enough, then, fully to justify the novel course we took in reprinting them, and the authors may be content with their fame.

This register of what occurred as to the first part is our justification for printing a second. Whether the praise we have got or shall get be deserved or not, sure we are that whoever gives the people of Ireland a lyric literature racy of the soil, reflecting its scenery and manners, blended with its history and panting with its hopes, will marshal them to independence in an array which prosecutions cannot encounter nor armies overthrow. National lyrics to be perfect should be linked with music, that the people's heart knows and beats to. This union we hope to see effected, but whether our verses are worthy of such an alliance time alone can tell. We shall say nothing more.

"THE NATION."

PART II.

THE VOICE OF LABOUR.

A CHANT OF THE MONSTER MEETINGS.

I.

YE who despoil the sons of toil, saw ye this sight to-day
When stalwart trade in long brigade, beyond a king's array,
Marched in the blessed light of heaven, beneath the open sky,
Strong in the might of sacred RIGHT, that none dare ask them
why?

These are the slaves, the needy knaves, ye spit upon with scorn—

The spawn of earth, of nameless birth, and basely bred as born,
Yet know, ye weak and silken Lords, were we the thing ye say,
Your broad domains, your coffered gains, your lives were ours to-day!

II.

Measure that rank, from flank to flank; 'tis fifty thousand strong;

And mark you here, in front and rear, brigades as deep and long;
And learn to know that blade of foe, or Arran's deadly breeze, Ne'er by assay of storm or fray, tried manlier hearts than these:

The sinewy Smith, little he recks of his own child—the sword ;
 The men of gear, think you they fear, their handiwork—a Lord ?
 And undismayed, yon sons of trade might see the battle's front,
 Who bravely bore, nor bowed before, the deadlier face of want.

III.

What lack we here of all the pomps that lure your kerns to death ?
 Not serried bands, nor sinewy hands, nor music's martial breath ;
 And if we broke the slavish yoke our suppliant race endure,
 No robbers we—but chivalry—the Army of the Poor.
 Out on ye now, ye Lordly crew, that do your betters wrong—
 We are not thieves, we are not knaves, but merciful as strong.
 Your henchmen vain, your vassal train, would fly our first defiance ;
 In us—in our strong, tranquil breasts—abides your sole reliance.

IV.

Aye, keep them all, castle and hall, coffers and costly jewels—
 Keep your vile gain, and in its train the passions that it fuels.
 We envy not your lordly lot—its bloom or its decayance :
 But ye have that we claim as ours—our right in long abeyance.
 Leisure to live, leisure to love, leisure to taste our freedom,
 Oh ! suffering poor, oh ! patient poor, how bitterly you need them !—
 “ Ever to moil, ever to toil,” that is your social charter,
 And city slave or rustic serf, the TOILER is its martyr.

V.

Where Frank or Norman shed their sweat the goodly crop is theirs—
 If Norway's toil makes rich the soil, she eats the fruit she rears—
 O'er Maine's green sward there rules no lord, saving the Lord on high ;
 Why are we swindled—sabred—starved ?—my masters, tell us
 why.

The German burgher and his men, brother with brothers live, While toil must wait without your gate what gracious crusts you give.

Long in your sight, for our own right, we've bent and still we bend—

Why did we bow? why do we now? my masters, this must end.

VI.

Perish the past—a generous land is this fair land of ours,
And enmity may no man see between its Towns and Towers.
Come join our bands—here take our hands—now shame on him that lingers,

Merchant or Peer, you have no fear from labour's blistered fingers.

Come, join at last, perish the past—its traitors, its seceders—Proud names and old, frank hearts and bold, come join and be our Leaders.

But know, my lords, that be your swords with us or with our Wronger, Heaven be our guide, we Toilers bide this lot of shame no longer!

SONG OF THE VOLUNTEERS OF 1782.

AIR—" Boyne Water. "

I.

Hurrah! 'tis done—our freedom's won—

Hurrah for the Volunteers!

No laws we own, but those alone

Of our Commons, King, and Peers.

II.

The chain is broke—the Saxon yoke

From off our neck is taken ;

Ireland awoke—Dungannon spoke—

With fear was England shaken.

III.

When Grattan rose, none dar'd oppose
 The claim he made for freedom ;
 They knew our swords, to back his words,
 Were ready did he need them.

IV.

Then let us raise, to Grattan's praise,
 A proud and joyous anthem ;
 And wealth, and grace, and length of days,
 May God, in mercy grant him !

V.

Bless Harry Flood, who nobly stood
 By us, through gloomy years,
 Bless Charlemont, the brave and good,
 The chief of the Volunteers.

VI.

The North began ; the North held on
 The strife for native land ;
 Till Ireland rose, and cow'd her foes—
 God bless the Northern land !

VII.

And bless the men of patriot pen—
 Swift Molyneux, and Lucas ;
 Bless sword and gun, which " Free Trade" won—
 Bless God ! who ne'er forsook us !

VIII.

And long may last, the friendship fast,
 Which binds us all together ;
 While we agree, our foes shall flee
 Like clouds in stormy weather.

IX.

Remember still, through good and ill,
 How vain were prayers and tears—
 How vain were words, till flashed the swords
 Of the Irish Volunteers.

X.

By arms we've got the rights we sought
 Through long and wretched years—
 Hurrah! 'tis done, our Freedom's won—
 Hurrah for the Volunteers!

 YOUNG IRELAND.

I.

When comes the day, all hearts to weigh,
 If staunch they be or vile,
 Shall we forget the sacred debt
 We owe our mother isle?
 My native heath is green beneath,
 My native waters blue;
 But crimson red o'er both shall spread,
 Ere I am false to you,

Dear land—

Ere I am false to you.

II.

When I behold your mountains bold—
 Your noble lakes and streams—
 A mingled tide of grief and pride
 Within my bosom teems.
 I think of all your long, dark thrall—
 Your martyrs brave and true;
 And dash apart the tears that start—
 We must not weep for you,

Dear land—

We must not weep for you.

III.

My grandsire died, his home beside;
 They seized and hanged him there;
 His only crime, in evil time,
 Your hallowed green to wear.

Across the main his brothers twain
 Were sent to pine and rue ;
 And still they turn'd, with hearts that burn'd,
 In hopeless love to you,
Dear land—
 In hopeless love to you.

IV.

My boyish ear still clung to hear
 Of Erin's pride of yore,
 Ere Norman foot had dar'd pollute
 Her independent shore.
 Of chiefs long dead who rose to head
 Some gallant patriot few,
 Till all my aim on earth became
 To strike one blow for you,
Dear land—
 To strike one blow for you.

V.

What path is best your rights to wrest,
 Let other heads divine ;
 By work or word, with voice or sword,
 To follow them be mine.
 The breast that zeal and hatred steel
 No terrors can subdue ;
 If death should come, that martyrdom
 Were sweet, endured for you,
Dear land—
 Were sweet, endured for you.

EPIGRAM.

On the Mail's announcement of the intended arrests, ending with " Long live Earl De Grey—God save the Queen."

" God save the Queen " —long live De Grey !
 Our foes know well what this may mean,
 When for such statemen's lives they pray,
 They well may add—" God save the Queen."

THE BATTLE OF BEAL-AN-ATH-BUIDH.

A.D. 1598.

I.

By O'Nial beleagur'd, the spirits might droop
 Of the Saxon—three hundred shut up in their coop,
 Till Bagenal drew forth his Toledo, and swore,
 On the sword of a soldier, to succour Portmore.

II.

His veteran troops, in the foreign wars tried—
 Their features how bronz'd, and how haughty their stride—
 Stept steadily on; it was thrilling to see
 That thunder-cloud brooding o'er BEAL-AN-ATH-BUIDH.

III.

The flash of their armour, inlaid with fine gold—
 Gleaming matchlocks and cannons that mutteringly roll'd—
 With the tramp and the clank of those stern cuirassiers,
 Dyed in blood of the Flemish and French cavaliers.

IV.

And are the mere Irish, with pike and with darts—
 With but glibb-cover'd heads, and but rib-guarded hearts—
 Half-naked, half-fed, with few muskets, no guns—
 The battle to dare against England's stout sons?

V.

Poor Bonnochts, and wild Gallowglasses, and Kerns—
 Let them war with rude brambles, sharp furze, and dry ferns;
Wirrastrue for their wives—for their babes ochanie,
 If they wait for the Saxon at BEAL-AN-ATH-BUIDH.

VI.

Yet O'Nial stands firm—few and brief his commands—
 “Ye have hearts in your bosoms, and pikes in your hands;
 Try how far ye can push them, my children, at once;
Faugh-a-Ballagh!—and down with horse, foot, and great guns.

VII.

They have gold and gay arms—they have biscuit and bread;
 Now, sons of my soul, we'll be found and be fed;”

And he clutch'd his claymore, and—"look yonder," laughed he,
 "What a grand commissariat for BEAL-AN-ATH-BUIDH."

VIII.

Near the chief, a grim tyke, an O'Shanaghan stood,
 His nostril dilated seemed snuffing for blood;
 Rough and ready to spring, like the wiry wolf-hound
 Of Ternè, who, tossing his pike with a bound,

IX.

Cried, "My hand to the Sassenach! ne'er may I hurl
 Another to earth if I call him a churl!
 He finds me in clothing, in booty, in bread—
 My Chief, won't O'Shanaghan give him a bed?"

X.

"Land of Owen, aboo!" and the Irish rush'd on—
 The foe fir'd but one volley—their gunners are gone,
 Before the bare bosoms the steel-coats have fled,
 Or, despite casque or corslet, lie dying and dead.

XI.

And brave Harry Bagenal, he fell while he fought,
 With many gay gallants—they slept as men ought:
 Their faces to heaven—there were others, alack!
 By pikes overtaken, and taken aback.

XII.

And my Irish got clothing, coin, colours, great store,
 Arms, forage, and provender—plunder galore!
 They munch'd the white manchets—they champ'd the brown chine,
Fillelue! for that day, how the natives did dine!

XIII.

O'Nial looked on, when O'Shanaghan rose,
 And cried, hearken Tyrone! I've a health to propose—
 "To our Sassenach hosts!" and all quaff'd in huge glee.
 With Cead mile failte go, BEAL-AN-ATH-BUIDH!

SONG FOR JULY 12TH, 1843.

Come—pledge again thy heart and hand—
 One grasp that ne'er shall sever;
 Our watchword be—"Our native land"—
 Our motto—"Love for ever."

And let the Orange lily be
Thy badge, my patriot brother—
 The everlasting Green for me;
 And—we for one another.

Behold how green the gallant stem,
 On which the flower is blowing;
 How in one heav'nly breeze and beam
 Both flower and stem are glowing.

The same good soil sustaining both,
 Makes both united flourish:
 But cannot give the Orange growth,
 And cease the Green to nourish.

Yea, more—the hand that plucks the flower
 Will vainly strive to cherish:
 The stem blooms on—but in that hour
 The flower begins to perish.

Regard them, then, of equal worth
 While lasts their genial weather;
 The time's at hand when into earth
 The two shall sink together.

Ev'n thus be, in our country's cause,
 Our party feelings blended;
 Till lasting peace, from equal laws,
 On both shall have descended.

Till then the Orange lily be
Thy badge, my patriot brother—
 The everlasting Green for me;
 And—we for one another.

AN ARMS BILL BALLAD.

I.

“ Oh ! fairest and rarest, why art thou alone ?
 Thy nearest and dearest one, where is he flown ?
 With fleetness, and sweetness, he flew, like the dove,
 To his nest in thy breast—from his toil to his love.”

II.

My Connor is exiled, but not for a fault—
 He dared to defend me from midnight assault !
 Our cabin was enter'd—what man would not draw
 The staff, or the steel, on the Ruffian-by-law ?

III.

Dark, dark were his plots, since the day I preferr'd
 The ring and the rite to his treacherous word ;
 He harass'd us down from our leasehold, to fill
 The pitiful state of his Tenant at will.

IV.

At last he distrain'd—but I brought him his Rent—
 He wooed me to crime—but I came as I went—
 And he swore a deep oath, ere the morrow's bright sun,
 In spite of my will, that his will should be done.

V.

And he came with his minions, that promise to keep,
 When all of mankind, save the beasts, were asleep,
 In search for some weapon devour'd by the rust :
 His words were of weapons—his thoughts were of lust.

VI.

My Connor was valiant as ever drew sword,
 For the country he loved, or the wife he adored ;
 But vain was the strife 'gainst the Ruffian's commands,
 And the minions' obedience, to fetter his hands.

VII.

They bore him to prison—the object was gain'd—
 The minions departed—the ruffian remain'd.
 Oh ! imagine, imagine * * * * *
 There's madness within me * * * * *

 HYMN OF FREEDOM.

I.

God of peace ! before thee,
 Peaceful, here we kneel,
 Humbly to implore thee
 For a nation's weal ;
 Calm her sons' dissensions,
 Bid their discord cease,
 End their mad contentions—
 Hear us, God of Peace !

II.

God of Love ! low bending
 To thy throne we turn—
 Let thy rays descending
 Through our island burn ;
 Let no strife divide us,
 But, from Heaven above,
 Look on us and guide us—
 Hear us, God of Love !

III.

God of Battles ! aid us ;
 Let no despot's might Trample or degrade us,
 Seeking this our right !
 Arm us for the danger ;
 Keep all craven fear
 To our breasts a stranger—
 God of Battles ! hear.

IV.

God of Right ! preserve us
 Just—as we are strong;
 Let no passion swerve us
 To one act of wrong—
 Let no thought, unholy,
 Come our cause to blight—
 Thus we pray thee, lowly—
 Hear us, God of Right !

V.

God of Vengeance ! smite us
 With thy shaft sublime,
 If one bond unite us
 Forged in fraud or crime!
 But if humbly kneeling,
 We implore thine ear,
 For our rights appealing—
 God of Nations ! hear.

 THE ANTI-IRISH IRISHMAN.

From polar seas to torrid climes,
 Where'er the trace of man is found,
 What common feeling marks our kind,
 And sanctifies each spot of ground ?
 What virtue in the human heart
 The proudest tribute can command ?
 The dearest, purest, holiest, best,
The lasting love of FATHERLAND !

Then who's the wretch that basely spurns
 The ties of country, kindred, friends—
 That barter every nobler aim
 For sordid views—for private ends ?

One slave alone on earth you'll find
 Through Nature's universal span,
 So lost to virtue—dead to shame,
 The anti-Irish Irishman

Our fields are fertile, rich our floods,
 Our mountains bold, majestic, grand ;
 Our air is balm, and every breeze
 Wings health around our native land.
 But who despises all her charms,
 And mocks her gifts where'er he can ?
 Why, he, the Norman's sneaking slave,
 The anti-Irish Irishman.

The Norman—spawn of fraud and guile !
 Ambitious sought our peaceful shore,
 And, leagued with native guilt, despoiled,
 And deluged Erin's fields with gore !
 Who gave the foe-man footing here ?
 What wretch unholy led her van ?
 The prototype of modern slaves,
 An anti-Irish Irishman !

For ages rapine ruled our plains,
 And slaughter raised "his red right hand,"
 And virgins shriek'd !—and roof-trees blaz'd !
 And desolation swept the land !
 And who would not those ills arrest,
 Or aid the patriotic plan
 To burst his country's galling chains ?
 The anti-Irish Irishman !

But now too great for fetters grown,
 Too proud to bend a slavish knee,
 Loved Erin mocks the tyrant's thrall,
 And firmly vows she shall be free !
 But mark yon treacherous stealthy knave
 That bends beneath his country's ban ;
 Nor let him dash a nation's hopes,
 The anti-Irish Irishman !

Hurrah! "the sun burst!"—Once again
 Our oriflamme is on the gale,
 With shamrock wreaths encircling
 The blazon'd glorious words "REPEAL!"
 The coward slave that quits his post,
 Let Argus eyes the traitor scan,
 And infamy, eternal, brand
 The anti-Irish Irishman!

THE ARMS OF EIGHTY-TWO.

I.

They rose to guard their fatherland—
 In stern resolve they rose—
 In bearing firm—in purpose grand—
 To meet the world as foes.
 They rose as brave men ever do ;
 And, flashing bright,
 They bore to light
 The Arms of "Eighty-two!"

II.

Oh! 'twas a proud and solemn sight
 To mark that broad array,
 Come forth to claim a nation's right
 'Gainst all who dared gainsay ;
 And despots shrunk, appall'd to view
 The men who bore
 From shore to shore,
 The Arms of "Eighty-two!"

III.

They won her right—they passed away
 Within the tomb they rest—
 And coldly lies the mournful clay
 Above each manly breast ;
 But Ireland still may proudly view
 What that bright host
 Had cherished most—
 The Arms of "Eighty-two!"

IV.

Time-honoured comrades of the brave—
 Fond relics of their fame,
 Does Ireland hold one coward slave
 Would yield you up to shame?
 One dastard who would tamely view
 The alien's hand
 Insulting brand
 The Arms of "Eighty-two?"

STAND TOGETHER.

Stand together, brothers all!
 Stand together, stand together!
 To live or die, to rise or fall,
 Stand together, stand together!
 Old Erin proudly lifts her head—
 Of many tears the last is shed;
 Oh! for the living—by the dead!
 Stand together, true together!

Stand together, brothers all!
 Close together, close together!
 Be Ireland's might a brazen wall—
 Close up together, tight together!
 Peace!—no noise!—but hand in hand
 Let calm resolve pervade your band,
 And wait—till nature's God command—
 Then help each other, help each other!

Stand together, brothers all!
 Proud together—bold together!
 From Kerry's cliffs to Donegal,
 Bound in heart and soul together!

Unrol the sunburst! who'll defend
 Old Erin's banner is a friend—
 One foe is ours—oh! blend, boys, blend,
 Hands together—hearts together!

Stand together, brothers all!
 Wait together, watch together!
 See, America and Gaul
 Look on together, both together!
 Keen impatience in each eye—
 Yet on "ourselves" do we rely—
 "Ourselves alone" our rallying cry!
 And "stand together, strike together!"

THE SQUIRE'S COMPLAINT.

I.

Oh, dear, these are shocking bad times, Sir Robert has bothered us quite;
 Tipperary is teeming with crimes—don't we hear of an outrage each night?
 But the reason is known very well to each squire from Dublin to Scariff,
 They are caused by that arch imp of hell, Sir Bob, and his damnable tariff,

Faith, so are these shocking bad times.

II.

Time was when a stone of good wheat would fetch us a half-crown, or more;
 Oh, 'tis then that our labours were sweet—we had ating and drinking galore;
 But now we can't get thirteen pence for the self same identical corn,
 Though we strain every sinew, and hence we are left sick at heart and forlorn,

To rail at these shocking bad times.

III.

'The poor laws, to add to our griefs, are saddled upon us, poor asses,
With commissioners added, the thieves, to reverse ev'ry vote
the board passes ;
And yet, though the taxes we pay, the paupers in hordes still infest us,
They'll not go to the workhouse, they say, they'd just as soon enter a pesthouse,

No wonder we've shocking bad times.

IV.

Some say that provisions are cheap—so they are ; but when none we can buy,
Pigs, poultry, and oxen, and sheep, are as far from our reach as when high ;
Where all this will end I can't say, so I may as well wind up my rhymes ;
But this I'll observe, by the way, that I ne'er saw such shocking bad times,

I ne'er saw such shocking bad times.

 THE GATHERING OF LEINSTER.

A.D. 1643.

I.

Serf! with thy fetters o'erladen,
Why erouch you in dastardly woe?
Why weep o'er thy chains like a maiden,
Nor strike for thy manhood a blow?
Not thus would our fathers bemoan us—
When Tyranny raised the lash, then
They practised the "Lex Talionis"
Of Feidlim, and lash'd it again.

II.

For this did they humble the Roman?
 And was it, pale Helots, in vain
 That Malachy trampled the foeman,
 And Brien uprooted the Dane?
 Ye Kings of our Isle's olden story,
 Bright spirits of demi-god men!
 We swear by the graves of your glory
 To strike like your children again.

III.

Tho' beside us no more in the trial
 The swords of our forefathers wave,
 The multiplied soul of O'Nial
 Has flash'd through our patriot Brave.
 By each rock where our proud heroes slumber,
 Each grove where the grey Druid sung,
 No foreigners chain shall encumber
 The race from such ancestors sprung.

IV.

Ye swords of the kingly Temora,
 Exalt the bright green of your sod—
 The hue of the mantle of Flora—
 The Emerald banner of God!
 Leave, reaper, the fruits of thy labour—
 Spare, huntsman, the prostrated game,
 Till the ploughshare is wrought to a sabre
 To carve out this plague-spot of shame

V.

Rush down from the mountain, fortalice—
 From banquet, and bridal, and bier—
 From ruin of cloister, and palace,
 Arise! with the torch and the spear!
 By the ties and the hopes that we cherish—
 The loves and the shrines we adore,
 High Heaven may doom us to perish—
 But, never to slavery more!

THE WEST'S ASLEEP.

AIR—“ The brink of the White Rocks.”

I.

When all beside a vigil keep,
The West's asleep, the West's asleep—
Sing oh ! and well may Erin weep,
When Connaught lies in slumber deep.

II.

There lake and plain smile fair and free,
'Mid rocks—their guardian chivalry—
Sing oh ! let man learn liberty
From crashing wind and lashing sea.

III.

That chainless wave and lovely land
Freedom and Nationhood demand,
Sing oh ! the great God never plann'd,
For slumbering slaves, a home so grand.

IV.

And, long, a brave and haughty race
Honored and sentinell'd the place—
Sing oh ! not even their sons' disgrace
Can quite destroy their glory's trace.

V.

For often, in O'Connor's van,
To triumph dash'd each Connaught clan—
Sing oh ! how fleet the Normans ran Through Corlieu's Pass, and Ardrahan !

* So called in Bunting ; another name is “ De hueamur bein an samrad linn,” being the first line of the chorus to the song :—

“ Of all the fish that swim the sea,
Herring is king — oh ! herring is king,”

VI.

And later times saw deeds as brave ;
 And glory guards Clanricarde's grave—
 Sing oh ! they died their land to save,
 At Aughrim's slopes and Shannon's wave.

VII.

And if, when all a vigil keep,
 The West's asleep, the West's asleep—
 Sing oh ! poor Erin well may weep,
 That men so sprung are still asleep.

VIII.

But—hark !—some voice like thunder spake :
 “ The West's awake, the West's awake ”—
 Sing oh ! hurra ! let England quake,
 “ We'll watch till death for Erin's sake.”

THE WEXFORD MASSACRE.

1649.

I.

They knelt around the Cross divine,
 The matron and the maid—
 They bow'd before redemption's sign,
 And fervently they prayed—
 Three hundred fair and helpless ones,
 Whose crime was this alone—
 Their valiant husband, sires, and sons,
 Had battled for their own.

II.

Had battled bravely, but in vain—
 The Saxon won the fight,
 And Irish corses strewed the plain
 Where Valour slept with Right.

And now, that Man of demon guilt,
 To fated Wexford flew—
 The red blood reeking on his hilt,
 Of hearts to Erin true!

III.

He found them there—the young, the old—
 The maiden and the wife;
 Their guardian Brave in death were cold,
 Who dared for them the strife.
 They prayed for mercy—God on high!
 Before thy cross they prayed,
 And ruthless Cromwell bade them die
 To glut the Saxon blade!

IV.

Three hundred fell—the stifled prayer
 Was quenched in woman's blood;
 Nor youth nor age could move to spare
 From slaughter's crimson flood.
 But nations keep a stern account
 Of deeds that tyrants do;
 And guiltless blood to Heaven will mount,
 And Heaven avenge it, too!

 THE UNION.

I.

How did they pass the Union?
 By perjury and fraud;
 By slaves, who sold for place or gold
 Their country and their God;

By all the savage acts that yet
 Have followed England's track :
 The pitchcap and the bayonet,
 The gibbet and the rack.
 And thus was passed the Union
 By Pitt and Castlereagh ;
 Could Satan send for such an end
 More worthy tools than they ?

II.

How thrive we by the Union ?
 Look round our native land :
 In ruined trade and wealth decayed
 See slavery's surest brand ;
 Our glory as a nation gone—
 Our substance drained away—
 A wretched province trampled on,
 Is all we've left to-day.
 Then curse with me the Union,
 That juggle foul and base,
 The baneful root that bore such fruit
 Of ruin and disgrace.

III.

And shall it last, this Union,
 To grind and waste us so ?
 O'er hill and lea, from sea to sea,
 All Ireland thunders, No !
 Eight million necks are stiff to bow—
 We know our might as men—
 We conquered once before, and now
 We'll conquer once again ;
 And rend the cursed Union,
 And fling it to the wind—
 And Ireland's laws in Ireland's cause
 Alone our hearts shall bind !

THE SONGS OF THE NATION.

AIR—" Sheela ni Guira."

I.

Ye songs that resound in the homes of our island—
 That wake the wild echoes by valley and highland—
 That kindle the cold with their forefather's story—
 That point to the ardent the pathway of glory!—
 Ye send to the banish'd,
 O'er ocean's far wave,
 The hope that had vanish'd—
 The vow of the brave ;
 And teach each proud despot of loftiest station,
 To pale at your spell-word, sweet songs of THE NATION !

II.

Sweet songs! ye reveal, through the vista of ages,
 Our monarchs and heroes—our minstrels and sages—
 The pomp of Emania—the glories of Temor,
 When Erin was free from the Saxon defamer—
 The green banner flying—
 The rush of the Gael—
 The Sassenach dying—
 His matron's wild wail—
 These glories forgotten, with magic creation
 Burst bright at your spell-word, sweet songs of THE NATION !

III.

The minstrels who waken these wild notes of freedom,
 Have hands for green Erin—if Erin should need 'em ;
 And hearts for the wrong'd one, wherever he ranges,
 From Zembla to Timor—from Shannon to Ganges—
 And hate for his foeman,
 All hatred above—
 And love for dear woman,
 Seraphical love—
 But chiefest the fair ones whose eyes' animation
 Is the spell-word that prompts the sweet songs of THE NATION !

THE FORLORN HOPE.

A SONG OF THE IRISH BRIGADE.

AIR—" Cruiskeen."

I.

Let us lift the green flag high
 Underneath this foreign sky,
 Unrol the verdant volume to the wind.
 As we hasten to the fight
 Let us drink a last good night
 To the beauty which we leave, boy, behind, behind, behind ;
 To the beauty which we leave, boy, behind.

II.

Plant it high upon the breach,
 And within the flag-staff's reach ;
 We'll offer it the tribute of our gore.
 Yes ! on that altar high,
 'Spite of tyrants we can die,
 And our spirits to the saints above may soar, soar, soar ;
 And our spirits to the saints above may soar.

III.

Liberty is gone,
 Now 'tis glory leads us on,
 And spangles gloomy slavery's night ;
 If freedom's shattered bark
 Have not foundered i' the dark
 Her wreck must see this beacon bright, bright, bright ;
 Her wreck will see this beacon bright.

IV.

Yes ; glory's shining light
 Must irradiate the night,
 And renew the flaming splendour of the day !
 And freedom's sinking crew
 Shall recover hope anew,
 And hail the blazing splendour of this ray, ray, ray ;
 And hail the blazing splendour of this ray.

V.

The green flag on the air,
Sons of Erin and despair,

To the breach in serried column quick advance.

On the summit we may fall:

Hand in hand, my comrades all,

Let us drink a last adieu to merry France, France, France;

Let us drink a last adieu to merry France.

VI.

To Erin, comrades, too,
And her sunny skies of blue,

A goblet commingled with tears!

With the fleur-de-lis divine,

The green shamrock shall entwine;

But the Ancient* see the Sunburst rears, rears, rears;

The Ancient see the Sun-burst rears.

 THE VOICE OF TARA.

DATE UNKNOWN.†

I.

O! that my voice could waken the hearts that slumber cold!—
The chiefs that time hath taken, the warrior kings of old—

* Standard bearer.

† The original Irish of this song has been preserved in the extensive mountain tract that stretches far into the adjacent counties of Limerick, Cork, and Kerry, between the towns of Newcastle, Abbeyfeale, and Castleisland. I have vainly endeavoured to learn the author's name, but the original bears strong marks of its being the production of a Munster bard of the seventeenth century. I took it down, viva voce, from a Baccach, who moved a very respectable repertory of wool, butter, and antiquarian lore, among the simple dwellers of the glens. He sung it to that very warlike air, vulgarly named "The Poacher," in a kind of recitative, with his eyes closed, as if to shut out exterior objects from his inspired vision, and leaning on the top of his staff, as he swayed his body to and fro to the martial sounds. I have rendered the words as literally as possible, hopeless of preserving the abrupt and striking spirit of the Gælic.

Oh! for Fingal, the pride of all the gallant Fenian crew,
To wave his brand—the fight demand—and blow the Baraboo!

II.

O! for the Clana-Morni, the Clana-Deaghadh tall,
Dal-Reada's Knights of glory, who scal'd the Roman Wall!
O! for the darts that smote the hearts of Freedom's foreign foe,
When bloodier grew the fierce Crobh-Ruadh* o'er bleak Helvetia's snow!

III.

O! for the battle-axes that smote the pirate Dane!
O! for the firm Dalcassians that fought on Ossory's plain!
And O! for those who wrathful rose the Saxon to withstand,
Till traitor arts and recreant hearts betray'd the patriot band!

IV.

Alas! our chiefs of glory will list no minstrel's call—
But, o'er their deathless story, can tyrants fling a pall?
Ye'll ne'er disgrace your ancient race, ye sons of fathers brave, Arise and burst your bonds accurst—the tomb contains no slave!

V.

Arise ye, now or never—from heaven the martyr'd brave—
Command you to deliver the land they fought to save;
Then swear to die ere despots tie your limbs in bondage chain,
And let the shout ring boldly out o'er listening earth and main.

VI.

The fishers of Kilkerran, the men of Greenore bay—
The dwellers by Lough Dergert, and by the broad Lough Neagh—
Leave boat and oar, and leap ashore, to join the fiery ranks
That come in pride from Galty's side, and from Blackwater's banks.

* "The bloody hand," the ensign of the Knights of the Red Branch,

VII.

Where "stubborn Newre" is streaming—where Lee's green valley smiles—

Where kingly Shannon circles his hundred sainted isles,
They list the call—and woe befall the hapless, doomed array
Who'll rouse their wrath in war's red path to strike in freedom's fray.

VIII.

I see the brave rejoicing—I hear their shouts ascend—
See martyr'd men approving from thrones of brightness bend.
Ye ache my sight, ye visions bright of all our glory won ;
The "Battle's Eye"* hath found reply—my tuneful task is done.

 THE MUSTER OF THE NORTH.

A.D. 1641.

We deny and have always denied the alleged massacre of 1641. But that the people rose under their Chiefs, seized the English towns and expelled the English settlers, and in doing so committed many excesses is undeniable—as is equally the desperate provocation. The Ballad here printed is not meant as an apology for these excesses, which we condemn and lament, but as a true representation of the feelings of the insurgents in the first madness of success.

I.

Joy! joy! the day is come at last, the day of hope and pride,
And see! our crackling bonfires light old Bann's rejoicing tide,
And gladsome bell, and bugle-horn from Newry's captured Towers,
Hark! how they tell the Saxon swine, this land is ours, is OURS!

II.

Glory to God! my eyes have seen the ransomed fields of Down,
My ears have drunk the joyful news, "Stout Phelim hath his own,"
Oh! may they see and hear no more, oh! may they rot to clay,
When they shall fail to triumph in the conquest of to-day.

* The literal English of Rosg-Catha, or the "Incentive to Battle"—the war-song of the bard.

III.

Now, now we'll teach the shameless Scot to purge his thievish maw,
 Now, now the Court may fall to pray, for Justice is the Law,
 Now, shall the Undertaker square for once his loose accounts,
We'll strike brave boys, a fair result, from all his false amounts.

IV.

Come, trample down their robber rule, and smite its venal spawn,
 Their foreign laws, their foreign church, their ermine and their lawn ;
 And all the specious fry of fraud that robbed us of our own,
 And plant our ancient laws again, beneath our lineal throne.

V.

Our standard flies from fifty towers, it leads ten thousand men,
 Down have we pluck'd the pirate Red never to rise again ;
 The Green alone shall stream above our native field and flood—
 The spotless Green, save where its folds are gemmed with Saxon blood.

VI.

Pity !* no, no, you dare not Priest—not you our Father dare, Preach to us now that Godless creed—the murderer's blood to spare ;
 To spare his blood, while tombless still our slaughtered kin implore,
 “ Graves and revenge ” from Gobbin Cliffs and Carrick's bloody shore !

VII.

Pity ! well if you needs must whine, let pity have its way,
 Pity for all our comrades true, far from our side to-day ;

* Leland the Protestant Historian states that the Catholic Priests “ laboured zealously to moderate the excesses of war ; ” and frequently protected the English by concealing them in their places of worship, and even under their altars.”

The prison-bound who rot in chains, the faithful dead who poured.

Their blood 'neath Strafford's lawless axe or Parson's ruffian sword.

VIII.

They smote them with the swearer's oath, and with the murderer's knife,

We in the open field will fight, fairly for land and life,
But by the Dead and all their wrongs, and by our hopes today,

One of us twain shall fight their last, or be it we or they—

IX.

They banned our faith, they banned our lives, they trod us into earth,

And whilst we bore with passive hearts, our patience was their mirth ;

Even this great flame that wraps them now, not we but they have bred,

This war is their own work, and now, THEIR WORK BE ON THEIR HEAD.

X.

Nay, Father, tell us not of help from Leinster's Norman Peers.

If we shall shape our holy cause to match their selfish fears,

Helpless and hopeless be the cause that brooks a vain delay,

Our ship is launched, our flag's afloat, whether they come or stay.

XI.

If silken Howth, and savage Slane should kiss their tyrant's rod,

And pale Dunsany still prefer his Monarch to his God,

Think you we lack their fathers' sons the Marchmen of the Pale,

While Irish hearts and Irish hands have Spanish blades and mail ?

XII.

Down from the sacred hills whereon a SAINT* communed with God,
 Up from the vale where Bagnall's blood manured the reeking
 sod,
 Out from the stately wood of Treugh, M'Kenna's plundered home,
 Like Larne's waves, as fierce and fast, our brother clansmen come.

XIII.

Then, let them stay to bow and fawn, or fight with cunning words ;
 I fear me more their courtly arts than England's hireling
 swords,
 Nathless their creed they hate us still, as the despoiler hates,
 Would God they loved their prey no more, our kinsman's lost estates !

XIV.

Our rude array's a jagged rock to smash the spoiler's power,
 Or need we aid, His aid we have who doomed this gracious hour,
 Of yore He led our Hebrew sires to peace through strife and pain,
 And us he leads the self-same path, the self-same goal to gain.

XV.

Then, brethren, on !—O'NIAL'S shade would frown to see you pause—
 Our banished Hugh, our martyred Hugh, is watching o'er your cause—
 His generous error lost the land—he deem'd the Norman true,
 Oh forward ! friends, it must not lose the land again in you !

* St. Patrick, whose favourite retreat was Lecale, in the County Down.

THE SLAVES' BILL.

Aye, brand our arms, nor them alone ;
 But brand our brows, degraded race
 Oh, how a fear can England own
 Of men, who cannot feel disgrace ?
 Men ! Are we men ? We talk as such,
 Heav'n's, how we talk ! but vain alarms—
 Nought masculine endures so much,
 Then brand our brows, as well as arms !

This brand is not an ugly thing—
 May seem an ornament, indeed ;
 The shame to some would be the sting,
 But not to slaves who dare not bleed !
 Six hundred weary years have pass'd,
 And which, without some newer harms
 From Dear Old England ! This, the last,
 Is but an insult—brand our arms !

Yes, brand our language, faith, and name !
 Black down time's river let them roll ;
 Let Erin be a word of shame,
 And burn its mem'ry from my soul !
 Oh ! Erin, Erin !—never more
 That darling name let me repeat !
 If such the sons my mother bore,
 West Briton were as sound as sweet.

Aye, brand us all ! yet still we crave
 A pittance at our master's door ;
 Then leave the wealthy Irish slave
 His club, his bottle, and ——— ;
 And leave the wretched serf, his wife—
 You may, (she has not many charms,)
 Potatoes, and his paltry life ;
 But, leave us not—ev'n branded arms !

Mad as ye are, who reckless dare
 To mock the spirit God hath giv'n,

Pause, ere ye drive us in despair
 To its appeal—from man to heaven !
 From calmer eyes the furies glare,
 And colder bosoms vengeance warms,
 Till rage finds weapons, ev'ry where,
 For Nature's two unbranded arms !

SONG OF THE IRISH ARMY, A.D. 1689.

We come, with drum and fife,
 And the banner of the green,
 And our arms for the strife,
 They are glorious in their sheen ;
 No cause have we to tremble, I trow—
 Outnumb'ring the waves
 O'er which the tempest raves,
 Let the Dutchman's hireling slaves
 Tremble now.

Then onward while you may Like an ocean in its might—
 Let the Saxon war-trumps bray,
 For God defends the right,
 And on our efforts looks with a smile.
 For the land of saints arise,
 Spread the green flag to the skies,
 And the hated Tyrant flies
 From our isle.

By the margin of the shore
 Let our serried thousands stand,
 As our fathers stood of yore,
 'Gainst the light-haired Danish band.
 Let us meet them as they come from the deep—
 And the sea-bird soon will shriek,
 And the wild wave soon will break
 O'er the spot where tyrants take
 Their last sleep.

A VOICE FROM AMERICA.

I.

From the far West, o'er wide Atlantic's wave,
 With giant accent Freedom's tidings sweep.
 Columbia's roused. Let Peel and Graham rave.
 Let Stanley "on," and hoary Wellesley keep His counsel as he lists. We reck not, and we care not,
 How much he dare to do. We guess how much he dare not.

II.

We know ourselves unconquerably firm—
 We're temperate, cool, determined to be free—
 We feel that vassalage must reach its term—
 We've had our centuries of slavery.
 And now, oh, God! with thy strong arm around us,
 Shall power abuse, or despotism wound us?

III.

Is it for nought the humble friar came,
 Missioned of heav'n, to banish from our shore
 The curs'd ingredient in our cup of shame—
 The canker worm that ate into the core—
 The serpent vice that coiled around the soul,
 And gave but grief's worst remedy, "the bowl?"

IV.

Is it for nought that HE, our Leader rules
 Our peaceful millions with sagacious sway?—
 A sway more potent than the minion tools
 Of Tory rule could beg or buy. The day
 Of our deliverance dawns—we know it, and we feel it—
 The Union's fetters fall. Ho! Peel, we say, repeal it!

 THE PEASANT GIRLS.

The Peasant Girl of merry France,
 Beneath her trellis'd vine,
 Watches the signal for the dance—
 The broad, red sun's decline.

'Tis there—and forth she flies with glee
 To join the circling band,
 Whilst mirthful sounds of minstrelsy
 Are heard throughout the land.

And fair Italia's Peasant Girl,
 The Arno's banks beside,
 With myrtle flowers that shine like pearl,
 Will braid at eventide
 Her raven locks; and to the sky,
 With eyes of liquid light,
 Look up and bid her lyre out sigh—
 "Was ever land so bright?"

The Peasant Girl of England, see
 With lip of rosy dye,
 Beneath her sheltering cottage tree,
 Smile on each passer by.
 She looks on fields of yellow grain,
 Inhales the bean-flower's scent,
 And seems, amid the fertile plain,
 An Image of content.

The Peasant Girl of Scotland goes
 Across her Highland hill,
 With cheek that emulates the rose,
 And voice the skylark's thrill.
 Her tartan plaid she folds around,
 A many-coloured vest—
 Type of what varied joys have found
 A home in her kind breast.

The Peasant Girl of Ireland, she
 Has left her cabin home,
 Bearing white wreaths—what can it be
 Invites her thus to roam?
 Her eye has not the joyous ray
 Should to her years belong;
 And, as she wends her languid way,
 She carols no sweet song.

Oh! soon upon the step and glance
 Grief does the work of age;
 And it has been her hapless chance
 To open that dark page.
 The happy harvest home was o'er,
 The fierce tithe-gatherer came;
 And her young lover, in his gore,
 Fell by a murderous aim!

Then, well may youth's bright glance be gone
 For ever from that eye,
 And soon will sisters weep upon
 The grave that she kneels by;
 And well may prouder hearts than those,
 That there place garlands, say—
 "Have Ireland's peasant girls such woes?—
 When will they pass away?"

STEADY.

"Courage—your most necessary virtue—consists not in blind resistance, but in knowing when to forbear."—THE NATION, June 17.

Steady! Host of Freedom, steady!
 Ponder, gather, watch, mature;
 Tranquil be, though ever ready—
 Prompt to act—and to endure.

Aimless, rage you not, insanely,
 Like a maniac with his chain,
 Struggling madly, therefore vainly,
 And lapsing back to bonds again.

But, observe, the clouds o'er Keeper
 Long collect their awful ire—
 Long they swell more dark and deeper;
 When they burst, all heaven's on fire.

Freedom's barque to port is running,
 But beware the lurking shelves ;
 And would you conquer tyrants' cunning,
 Brethren, conquer first yourselves.

Though thy cheek insulted burn—
 Though they call thee coward-slave—
 Scoff nor blow shalt thou return :
 Trust me, this is more than brave.

Fortitude hath shackles riven,
 More than spear or flashing gun ;
 Freedom, like the thrones of heaven,
 Is by suff'ring virtue won.

Though thy brother still deride thee,
 Yield thou love for foolish hate :
 He'll, perhaps, ere long, beside thee,
 Proudly, boldly, share thy fate.

Discord ! may kind angels chase thee
 Far from hapless Erin's shores,
 And the deepest hell embrace thee,
 Where no fouler demon roars !

Steady ! steady ! ranks of Freedom,
 Pure and holy are our bands ;
 Heaven approves, and angels lead them,
 For truth and justice are our brands !

THE GATHERING OF THE NATION.

A. D. 1646.

I.

Those scalding tears—those scalding tears,
 Too long have fallen in vain—
 Up with the banners and the spears,
 And let the gather'd grief of years
 Show sterner stuff than rain.

The lightning, in that stormy hour
 When forth defiance rolls,
 May change the poles of Saxon pow'r,
 And melt the links our long, long show'r
 But rusted round our souls.

II.

To bear the wrongs we can redress!
 To make a thing of time
 The tyranny we can repress—
Eternal by our dastardness!
 Were crime—or worse than crime.
 And we, whose best—and worst was shame,
 From first to last, alike,
 May take, at length, a loftier aim,
 And struggle, since it is the same
 To suffer—or to strike.

III.

What hatred of perverted might
 The cruel hand inspires,
 That robs the linnet's eye of sight,
 To make it sing both day and night!
 Yet thus they robb'd our sires,
 By blotting out the ancient lore,
 Where every loss was shone.
 Up with the flag! we stand before
 The Saxons of the days of yore,
 In Saxons of our own.

IV.

Denial met our just demands!
 And hatred met our love!
 Till now, by Heaven, for grasp of hands,
 We'll give them clash of battle brands,
 And gauntlet 'stead of glove.
 And may the Saxon stamp his heel
 Upon the coward's front,
 Who sheathes his own unbroken steel,
 Until for mercy tyrants kneel,
 Who forced us to the brunt.

THE LION AND THE SERPENT.

AN ARMS' BILL FABLE.

In days of old the Serpent came
 To the Lion's rocky hall,
 And the forest king spread the sward with game,
 And they drank at the torrent's fall;
 And the Serpent saw that the woods were fair,
 And she long'd to make her dwelling there.

But she saw that her host had a knack of his own,
 At tearing a sinew or cracking a bone,
 And had grinders unpleasantly strong;
 So she said to herself, "I'll bamboozle the king
 With my plausible speech, and all that sort of thing,
 That, since Eve, to my people belong :

"These claws and those grinders must certainly be Inconvenient to you as they're dreadful to me—
 Draw 'em out, like a love, I'm so 'frighted!
 And, then, since I've long had an amorous eye on Yourself and your property, dear Mr. Lion,
 We can be (spare my blushes) united."

So subtle the pow'r of her poisonous kisses,
 So deadly to honour the falsehood she hisses,
 The lion for once is an ass.
 Before her, disarmed, the simpleton stands,
 The Union's proclaimed, but the hymen'al bands
 Are ponderous fetters of brass.

The Lion, self-conquer'd, is chained on the ground,
 And the breath of his tyrant sheds poison around
 The fame and the life of her slave.
 How long in his torture the stricken king lay
 Historians omit, but 'tis known that one day
 The Serpent began to look grave ;

For when passing, as usual, her thrall with a sneer,
 She derisively hiss'd some new taunt in his ear—
 He shook all his chains with a roar ;

And, observing more closely, she saw with much pain,
That his tusks and his claws were appearing again,
A fact she'd neglected before.

From that hour she grew dangerously civil, indeed,
And declared he should be, ere long, totally freed
From every dishonouring chain.

“The moment, my dearest, our friend, the Fox, draws
Those nasty sharp things from your Majesty's jaws,
You must bound free as air o'er the plain.”

But the captive sprung from his dungeon floor,
And he bow'd the woods with a scornful roar,
And his burning eyes flash'd flame ;
And as echo swell'd the shout afar,
The stormy joy of Freedom's war
O'er the blast of the desert came.

And the Lion laugh'd, and his mirth was loud
As the stunning burst of a thunder cloud,
And he shook his wrathful mane ;
And hollow sounds from his lash'd sides come,
Like the sullen roll of a 'larum drum,
He snapp'd, like a reed, the chain,
And the Serpent saw that her reign was o'er,
And hissing, she fled from the lion's roar.

ERIN ABOO.

Air—“Noch bonin shin doe.”

I.

Arise, men of Erin ! for liberty rally,
The rights of your own cherished island defend,
Let freedom's wild chaunt from each mountain and valley,
Sublime to the throne of the Godhead ascend ;
Let feuds be forgotten—the curse of our land—
Let parties no longer divide it in two ;
And while we together in brotherhood stand,
Our watchword be—Freedom and ERIN ABOO.

II.

Oh! why should we sever whom God has united,
 Whose children are cradled in one dewy isle—
 Why think that one spot in that isle must be blighted,
 If Heaven on another benignantly smile?
 Away with the thought—like our banner of green,
 Whose colour combines both the orange and blue,
 May all honest sons of old Ireland be seen,
 And their watchword be—Freedom and ERIN ABOO!

III.

Will Ulster stand back while one true heart remembers
 The spirit that dwelt in her children of yore?
 Who fanned the last spark of our liberty's embers,
 Till tyranny dazzled shrunk back from our shore.
 No, no; by the graves of your valorous dead!
 Who stood forth majestic in proud "Eighty-two,"
 If the spirit of men from your hearths be not fled,
 Join, Ulster! for—Freedom and ERIN ABOO!

IV.

She comes—in the struggle for freedom victorious,
 Before—she will bend not to slavery now,
 Nor sully, by conduct supine and inglorious,
 The light with which Fame has encircled her brow.
 The North and the South in one brotherhood stand,
 The East and the West are united and true,
 And far through the length and the breadth of the land
 The watchword is—Freedom and ERIN ABOO!

V.

Accursed be your cause, if there linger within it
 One dark stain of falsehood, one relic of guile;
 If Freedom we love not, and seek not to win it,
 For All without favour that dwell in our isle.
 Invoking that God we in common adore,
 To do unto us as to others we do;
 We swear that no Saxon shall fetter us more,
 Our watchword still—Freedom and ERIN ABOO!

SONG OF THE PENAL DAYS.

Air—" Chreevin evin."(Translated from the Irish.)

I.

Youthful men and elders hoary,
 List ye to the harper's song!
 My clarseach weeps my true-love's story
 In my true-love's native tongue;
 She's bound and bleeding 'neath th' oppressor—
 Few her friends and fierce her foe;
 And brave hearts cold who would redress her;
Ma chreevin evin, alga O!

II.

My love had riches once and beauty—
 Want and wo have pal'd her cheek!
 And stalwart hearts for honour's duty—
 Now they crouch like craven's sleek!
 O Heaven! that e'er this day of rigour
 Saw sons of heroes abject low,
 And blood and tears thy face disfigure—
Ma chreevin evin, alga O!

III.

I see young virgins on the mountain,
 Graceful as the bounding fawn,
 With cheeks like heath-flower by the fountain,
 Breasts like downy canavàn.*
 Shall bondsmen share these beauties ample?
 Shall their pure bosoms' current flow
 To nurse new slaves for them that trample
Ma chreevin evin, alga O!

* The cotton plant of the bogs.

IV.

Around my clarseach's speaking measures
 Men like their fathers tall arise—
 Their heart the same deep hatred treasures,
 I read it in their kindling eyes!
 The same proud brow to frown at danger—
 The same dark *coolin's graceful flow—
 The same dear tongue to curse the stranger—
Ma chreevin evin, alga O!

V.

I'd sing ye more but age is stealing
 O'er my pulse and tuneful fires;
 Far bolder woke my chord appealing
 For craven Shemus to your sires.
 Arouse to vengeance men of bravery,
 For broken oaths—for altars low—
 For bonds that bind in bitter slavery—
Ma chreevin evin, alga O!

A RALLY FOR IRELAND.

MAY, 1689.

I.

Shout it out, till it ring
 From Benmore to Cape Clear;
 For our Country, and King,
 And Religion so dear,
 Rally, rally—Irishmen! rally;
 Form round the flag, that wet with our tears,
 And torn, and bloody, lay hid for long years,
 And now once again in its pride re-appears.
 See from THE CASTLE our Green Banner waves!
 Bearing fit motto for up-rising slaves!

* The flowing locks of the ancient Irish.

For "Now or Never, Now and for Ever,"
 Bids you to battle for triumph, or graves.
 And the grave holds no slave,
 Death unfetters the brave.

Then rally, rally, Irishmen! rally.

Shout "Now or Never, Now and for Ever,"
 Fight to the last and ye cannot be slaves!

II.

M'Carthy, and Hamilton—

Are they not here?

Talbot, Berwick, and Sheldon—

Why should we fear?

And French men—all staunch men,
 Boisleau, and Pontée, Pusignan, and Rosen;
 And soon we shall have the stout Count Lauzun,
 And Baldearg O'Donnell—the promis'd and chosen.

From Shannon to Ban, from Liffey to Lee,

The country is rising for Liberty.

Though your arms are rude, if your courage be good,
 As the traitors fled, shall the strangers flee
 From another Iveagh, and another Claudy.

Arm, peasant and lord;

Grasp musket and sword;

Grasp pike, scythe, or skein; give the war-horse the rein;
 March, shoulder to shoulder, for Liberty!

III.

Old Schomberg and Churchill

Are coming here;

Bloody Kirk, and Dutch Will—

Yet never ye fear;

For our *Feis has met—they're a princely set:
 De Courcy, O'Neill, Plunkett, MacDonnell,
 Burke, Byrne, Nagle, St. Lawrence, O'Donnell—
 The choice of the land from Cork to Tyrconnell!

* The Irish name for a Council or Parliament.

They'll break the last link of the Saxon chain ;
 They'll give us back our lands again.

Then up ye and fight for your king and right—
 Laws are vain, unless swords maintain ;
 If freedom you'd gain, be victors or slain.

Then rally, rally, Irishmen rally !

Fight "Now or Never,
 Now and for Ever :"

Win freedom, and wear it, or die on the plain !

THE IRISH ARMS' BILL.

I.

My country, alas ! we may blush for thee now,
 The brand of the slave broadly stamp'd on thy brow !
 Unarm'd must thy sons and thy daughters await
 The Sassenagh's lust or the Sassenagh's hate.

II.

Through the length and the breadth of thy regions they roam ;
 Many huts and some halls may be there—but no home ;
 Rape and Murder cry out "let each door be unbarr'd !
 Deliver your arms, and then—stand on your guard !"

III.

For England hath waken'd at length from her trance—
 She might knuckle to Russia, and truckle to France—
 And, licking the dust from America's feet,
 Might vow she had ne'er tasted sugar so sweet.

IV.

She could leave her slain thousands, her captives, in pawn,
 And Akhbar to lord it o'er Affghanistan,
 And firing the village or rifling the ground
 Of the poor murder'd peasant—slink off like a hound.

V.

What then? She can massacre wretched Chinese—
 Can rob the Ameers of their lands, if she please—
 And when Hanover wrings from her duties not due,
 She can still vent her wrath, enslav'd Erin, on you!

VI.

Thus—but why, belov'd land, longer sport with thy shame?
 If my life could wipe out the foul blot from thy fame,
 How gladly for thee were this spirit outpoured
 On the scaffold, as free as by shot or by sword!

VII.

Yet, oh! in fair field, for one soldier-like blow,
 To fall in thy cause, or look far for thy foe—
 To sleep on thy bosom, down-trodden, with thee,
 Or to wave in thy breeze the green flag of the free!

VIII.

Heaven! to think of the thousands far better than I,
 Who for thee, sweetest mother, would joyfully die!
 Then to reckon the insult—the rapine—the wrong—
 How long, God of love!—God of battles!—how long?

 THE INVOCATION.

Sweet Lyrist, wreath a song for me,
 Such as my fathers loved of old—
 Thy theme our cause, the melody
 The sweetest on thy strings of gold.

Too long we've wept; though blood and tears
May rust, they break not slavery's chain,
And forty weary woe-worn years
We've wept (as we have bled) in vain.

Then strike as though thy fingers hold
Our heart-strings 'neath thy touch of fire;
Nor blush to wake those songs of old,
For Irish hearts on Erin's lyre.

In Egypt's storied land of yore,
Ere Pharoah reigned, ere Nile ran blood,
Majestic on her sandy shore,
Her Memnon's giant statue stood.

And countless wealth, by sages told,
Lay buried near that statue tall,
And theirs to seek for gems and gold
Where Memnon's head o'erthrown should fall.

But he who watched at noon-tide hour
The shadow pointing to his prize
May teach that even the gloom of power
Can show where Freedom's treasure lies.

And Memnon's lips sweet music sung
Whene'er the sun, with orient glow,
Awoke sweet morn, and gaily flung
Her blushes on that marble brow.

Now breaks for us bright Freedom's day,
Now broken falls our mouldering chain;
And, touched by Freedom's dawning ray,
The mystic Harp shall sound again.

Then, Lyrist, wreath a song for me,
Such as my fathers loved of old—
Thy theme our cause, the melody
The sweetest on thy strings of gold.

PADDIES EVERMORE.

I.

The hour is past to fawn or crouch
 As suppliants for our right ;
 Let word and deed unshrinking vouch
 The banded millions' might ;
 Let them who scorned the fountain rill,
 Now dread the torrent's roar,
 And hear our echoed chorus still,
 We're Paddies evermore.

II.

What, though they menace, suffering men
 Their threats and them despise ;
 Or promise justice once again,
 We know their words are lies ;
 We stand resolved those rights to claim
 They robbed us of before,
 Our own dear nation and our name,
 As Paddies, and no more.

III.

Look round—the Frenchman governs France,
 The Spaniard rules in Spain,
 The gallant Pole but waits his chance
 To break the Russian chain ;
 The strife for freedom here begun
 We never will give o'er,
 Nor own a land on earth but one—
 We're Paddies and no more.

IV.

That strong and single love to crush,
 The despot ever tried,

A fount it was whose living gush,
 His hated arts defied.
 'Tis fresh as when his foot accurst,
 Was planted on our shore,
 And vow and still as from the first,
 We're Paddies evermore.

V.

What reck we though six hundred years
 Have o'er our thraldom rolled,
 The soul that roused O'Nial's spears
 Still lives as true and bold ;
 The tide of foreign power to stem
 Our fathers bled of yore,
 And we stand here to-day like them,
 True Paddies evermore.

VI.

Where's our allegiance? With the land
 For which they nobly died.
 Our duty? By our cause to stand,
 Whatever chance betide.
 Our cherished hope? To heal the woes
 That rankle at her core.
 Our scorn and hatred? To her foes,
 Now, and for evermore.

VII.

The hour is past to fawn or crouch
 As suppliants for our right;
 Let word and deed unshrinking vouch
 The banded millions' might;
 Let them who scorned the fountain rill,
 Now dread the torrent's roar,
 And hear our echoed chorus still,
 We're Paddies evermore.

THE SHAN VAN VOOTH OF 1176.

AIR—" The Shan van Vooth."

I.

The sainted isle of old,
 Says the Shan van Vooth ;
 The sainted isle of old,
 Says the Shan van Vooth.
 The parent and the mould,
 Of the beautiful and bold,
 Has her blithesome heart waxed cold,
 Says the Shan van Vooth.

II.

The Saxon and the Dane,
 Says the Shan van Vooth ;
 The Saxon and the Dane,
 Says the Shan van Vooth,
 The Saxon and the Dane,
 Our immortal hills profane,
 Oh! accurs'd be the twain,
 Says the Shan van Vooth.

III.

What are the Chiefs to do ?
 Says the Shan van Vooth ;
 What are the Chiefs to do ?
 Says she Shan van Vooth.
 What should the Chieftains do,
 But to treat the hireling crew,
 To a touch of Brian Boru ?
 Says the Shan van Vooth.

IV.

They came across the wave,
 Says the Shan van Voeth ;
 They came across the wave,
 Says the Shan van Voeth.
 They came across the wave,
 But to plunder and enslave,
 And should find a robber's grave,
 Says the Shan van Voeth.

V.

Then be the trusty brand,
 Says the Shan van Voeth ;
 Then be the trusty brand,
 Says the Shan van Voeth.
 Then be the trusty brand,
 Firmly clutch'd in every hand,
 And we'll scourge them from the land,
 Says the Shan van Voeth.

VI.

There's courage yet and truth,
 Says the Shan van Voeth ;
 There's courage yet and truth,
 Says the Shan van Voeth.
 There's a God above us all,
 And whatever may befall,
 No invader shall enthrall,
 Says the Shan van Voeth.

Newell's new patent washing ball,

THE HARP OF THE NATION.

AIR—" Molly Astore."

I.

Our ancient harp, whose voiceful string
 The Saxon rent in twain,
 To him shall fierce defiance fling
 From minstrel hands again.
 No strains for vulgar lordings vile
 Shall to our harp belong—
 To sweep oppression from our isle
 Shall rush its sea of song!

II.

Our ancient harp shall blend its tone
 With Erin's ancient tongue,
 To sing how Saxon guile alone
 Strong fetters o'er us flung;
 Shall rouse to wrath our warrior-band
 To shout the battle cry,
 To sweep oppression from the land,
 And burst its bonds—or die!

III.

Our ancient harp impell'd the brave
 Where patriot bosoms bled—
 Where Danish despots found a grave—
 Where Rome's fierce eagle fled!—
 Where the Invader bit the dust
 On many a bloody plain,
 And, by that Heaven in which we trust,
 He'll bite the dust again!

NINETY-EIGHT !

I.

Let all remember Ninety-eight, that hour of Ireland's woes—
 When rapine red the land o'erspread, and flames of roof-trees rose—
 When pity shrieked, and ruffians wreak'd their deadly demon hate,
 And gibbets groan'd, and widows moaned, in fatal Ninety-eight !

II.

In memory save the martyr'd brave, who fell in conflict vain,
 By soldier's sword, or shameful cord, or in the convict's chain ;
 And those whose gore the red lash bore, when tyrants strode elate,
 And pitchcaps clung, and tortures wrung, strong hearts in Ninety-eight !

III.

When memory drear shall cease the tear for those that tyrant's crush'd,
 May life depart our ingrate heart—our craven tongue be hush'd—
 And may his worst of deeds accurst the despot perpetrate—
 If swell not high, our rallying cry—Remember Ninety-eight !

IV.

And when the yoke, at length, is broke, that binds our island
 green,
 And high acclaim shall swell her fame—broad ocean's emerald
 Queen !
 A column fair, of sculpture rare, shall proudly celebrate
 The faithful dead, whose blood was shed in fatal Ninety-eight !

"THE MEN OF TWENTY-FIVE."*

Air—"When my Old Cap was New."

I.

Rouse, Erin, rouse, and clap your wings,
 Look forth on coming joys ;
 Wake, Erin's muse, and sweep your strings,
 And cheer our "Irish Boys ;"
 Those "Boys" who'll chase each Saxon drone
 From Ireland's reeking hive ;
 Our nation's marrow, blood, and bone,
 Our "Men of Twenty-five."

II.

Our fathers were a noble race,
 But mournful was their doom ;
 They blenched before the cut-throat's face,
 They sleep in Slavery's tomb.
 "Unhonored sleep"—but we, their sons,
 Our rusty chains will rive ;
 We little dread their whips and guns,
 We're "Men of Twenty-five."

III.

The Saxons say we thirst for blood,†
 The villains base, they lie ;

* "A NEW RACE, a new spring of sentiments has grown up amongst the Irish people during the last ten years, and have spread themselves over the land, and evidently displaced the timid, cautious class, whose boyhood was impressed with the terrors of the early portion of the present century. The men of twenty-five have placed in the rere ranks the men of fifty, and they come forward with all the energies and all the courage of their grandfathers—the Volunteers of 1782—to declare that they will not be content with a secondary position for Ireland amongst the nations of the earth."
 * *—Extract from the Planet (a Saxon journal), quoted in THE NATION of July 29th, 1843.

† "THE YOUNG IRISH AGITATORS, they are full of the dark vices of Jacobinism. They worship revenge as a virtue. It excites the gloomy character of their souls. They look forward to the slaughter of those they hate as the geatest enjoyment they could experience."—London Morning Post, quoted in THE NATION of July 15th.

But if they're in a fighting mood,
 Why—let them come and try.
 But Britain's Lion couchant crawls,
 Exhausted, though alive,
 He wants, behind his "Wooden Walls,"
 The "Men of Twenty-five."

IV.

Then, brothers, wake—you are awake—
 Then up—from vale and hill—
 For Liberty, for Ireland's sake,
 Sustain the "green flag" still ;
 And ere your years are "twenty-six,"
 As sure as God's alive,
 Bright Victory's sun his beams will fix
 On th' "Men of Twenty-five."

V.

And when our gallant-hearted band
 Down life's calm noon-tide run,
 We'll smile upon that happy land
 Our youthful vigour won.
 And when our heads are old and grey,
 If, haply, we survive,
 "He was," our sons shall proudly say,
 "A MAN OF TWENTY-FIVE!"

 A RUDE REPEAL MELODY.

I.

What? stirring at last, "Old Land!"
 And dar'st thou gaze at the sun?
 And thy mighty sister looking on!
 Why thou hast never a brand,

And slavery hath deformed thee,
 And the central heart that warm'd thee
 Hath been suck'd dry by thy kindred,
 And thy thin white hairs are cinder'd,
 Remember, you're but a step-child, Land!
 And thy sister flaunts in thy finery grand.

II.

What? standing erect, "Old Land!"
 With thy wasted green robe round thee,
 Rent with the withes that bound thee.
 Art not asham'd, at thy sister's door,
 Looking so meagre, squalid, and poor—
 Think'st thou she'll stretch thee her hand?
 Ha! ha! she'll chain thee and whip thee,
 And of thy last garment strip thee.
 Down—down, or hide thee or flee
 To your lone heritage—slavery.

III.

What? thundering to be heard, "Old Land!"
 Ho! bravely and boldly done;
 Now! where are thy children gone?
 Aye, there; support her—she's weak—
 See! see! how her cold limbs shake;
 Let her lean on that rusted brand!
 "They have treated thee ill!" Old Dame,
 And thou blushest with rage and shame—
 Thou'rt astir!—a fearful token!
 That the o'er-strain'd bow has broken!

Your casuists and clerics hold it isn't fair at all

THE VISION.

A NATIONAL ODE.

I.

Where iron rocks tow'r o'er
 Th' Atlantic billows' roll,
 Prophetic muses bore
 The Poet's raptur'd soul ;
 And FREEDOM rose in light from the spray.
 Behold her swiftly glide,
 O'er the strong and reinless tide,
 And the surges swelling pride
 Round her play !

II.

Sublime the steeds rush on Till panting next they stand
 On the brow of Slieve-na-mon,
 In the Sparta of our land ;
 And the stormy hills are mov'd at the sound.
 From Cashel's royal rock
 To Benburb is felt the shock,
 And the startled eagles flock,
 Screaming round.

III.

As she moves along the plain,
 Like the march of ocean's wave,
 Our martyr'd heroes slain
 Rise in armour from the grave,
 And they clash their phantom shields on the gale.
 The fires of rage and shame
 Thro' their visors barred that came,
 Wrapt in wild unearthly flame
 Hill and vale.

IV.

From a throne of trampled crowns,
 On a mount of broken chains,
 The Aventine goddess frowns
 O'er the desolated plains,

Where of old a tyrant's horde ply'd the lash,
 She flung her blazon'd shield
 On the far-illumin'd field,
 And the lofty mountains reeled
 With the clash.

V.

Clouds distent with gore
 Above her darkly hang—
 Lightnings leap before,
 Around her thunders clang,
 And marshall'd tempests roar like the sea.
 Her splendour fills the air,
 And the nations, in its glare,
 By their broken altars swear
 To be free!

VI.

Then our iron fetters fall
 Like poison weeds around,
 And lie inky as a pall
 On the stain'd and loathing ground;
 And the carrion-birds of heaven o'er them sail.
 While the sound of joyful bells
 On the laughing zephyr swells
 From thy glorious em'ral' dells, Innisfail!

VII.

The sounding woods rejoice,
 And the waves around thee sing,
 And the tones of Freedom's voice
 Thro' thy ruin'd turrets ring;
 And thy buried monarchs smile from the spheres.
 And many a hallow'd name,
 That long slept in silent shame,
 Now in characters of flame
 Bright appears.

VIII.

Ul-Erin laughs above,
 O'er Shannon's wave below,
 And songs of joy and love
 Swell the melting airs that blow,
 Enamour'd ling'ring long near thy shore.
 Around dear Freedom's shrine
 Thy dewy shamrocks twine,
 And resound thy harps divine
 Evermore!

 A HEALTH.

Hurra! our feuds are drowned at last;
 Hurra! let tyrants tremble;
 The fronted foemen of the past
 In brotherhood assemble.
 Fill up—and with a lofty tongue
 As ever spoke from steeple,
 From shore to shore his health be rung—
 The leader of the people.

In mighty triumphs, singly won,
 The nation has a token
 That mightier deeds will yet be done—
 The last strong fetter broken;
 Since hearts of nerve and hands of strength,
 Once banded to resist him,
 Unfurl his flag, and share at length
 The glory to assist him.

Up with the wine from boss to brim,
 And be his voice the loudest,
 Who rears, at risk of life or limb,
 Our country's flag the proudest.
 "The leader of the people"—grand,
 Yet simple wisdom guide him!
 And glory to the men who stand,
 Like sheathed swords, beside him!

DEVIL MAY CARE.

Air—" That old head of Denis."

Musha, "Queen of the Sea," is it true what they say
All about the grand "speeching" you had t'other day
About Ireland, and Dan, and Repeal? I declare
I think you were bullied; but, devil may care,
They shan't bully Paddy—so devil may care.

I heard, when a boy, you were gentle and true—
That you lov'd poor old Ireland and Irishmen too—
That your heart was as just as your form was fair,
And I wished you were here; but the devil may care,
I've got my own darling—so devil may care.

And you've got young Albert, and long may you reign,
And lightsome and brightsome, and strong be the chain
That binds you together in love, now so rare
To be found at "Head Quarters;" but, devil may care,
That's a case for the lawyers—so devil may care.

But Paddy a "case" of his own has just now,
So off goes my "caubeen," and here's my best bow;
My belly is empty, my back is all bare,
I'm hungry and naked; but devil may care,
Good times are approaching—so devil may care.

"Acushla machree," we are wounded and sore,
So bad that we cannot endure it much more.
A cure we must have, though the Saxons may stare
And "curse like a trooper;" but devil may care,
"Shin fane"* is our watch-word—so devil may care.

* "Shin fane"—Ourselves—or "OURSELVES ALONE."

Through many a century of darkness and gloom
 We writhed in our sorrow and wept at our doom;
 We begged and implored, but they laughed at our prayer—
 The answer they gave us was—"devil may care,"
 You're "mere Irish" rebels—so devil may care.

But no longer, like cowards, we'll kneel to the foe—
 "Soft words they will butter no parsnips" we know;
 Our RIGHTS they must give "on the nail"—"a child's share"
 We claim, and must get. By St. Patrick, we swear,
 We won't be put off with a "devil may care."

ADIEU TO INNISFAIL.

"Feror exul in altum."—Vir.

Adieu!—the snowy sail
 Swells her bosom to the gale,
 And our barque from Innisfail
 Bounds away.
 While we gaze upon thy shore,
 That we never shall see more,
 And the blinding tears flow o'er,
 We pray:

Ma vourneen! be thou long
 In peace, the queen of song—
 In battle proud and strong
 As the sea!
 Be saints thine offspring still—
 True heroes guard each hill—
 And harps by ev'ry rill
 Sound free!

Tho' round her Indian bow'rs
 The hand of nature show'rs
 The brightest-blooming flow'rs
 Of our sphere ;
 Yet not the richest rose
 In an alien clime that blows,
 Like the brier at home that grows,
 Is dear.

Tho' glowing breasts may be
 In soft vales beyond the sea,
 Yet ever Grah ma chree
 Shall I wail ;
 For the heart of love I leave,
 In the dreary hours of eve,
 On thy stormy shore to grieve,
 Innisfail !

But mem'ry o'er the deep
 On her dewy wing shall sweep,
 When in midnight hours I weep
 O'er thy wrongs :
 And bring me, steep'd in tears,
 The dead flow'rs of other years,
 And waft unto my ears
 Home's songs.

When I slumber in the gloom
 Of a nameless foreign tomb,
 By a distant ocean's boom,
 Innisfail !
 Around thy em'rald shore
 May the clasping sea adore,
 And each wave in thunder roar,
 " All hail ! "

And when the final sigh
 Shall bear my soul on high,
 And on chainless wing I fly
 Thro' the blue,
 Earth's latest thought shall be,
 As I soar above the sea—
 "Green Erin, dear, to thee—Adieu!"

ENGLISH SCHOOLS AND IRISH PUPILS.

FROM MRS. O'RORKE, FORMERLY MISS BIDDY FUDGE, TO HER SISTER DEBBY, IN ENGLAND.

Ballysassenagh, March 29, 1843.

I write, my dear Deb., in the greatest distress—
 How great it must be you will easily guess,
 When I tell you I'm just about bidding adieu
 To poor Johnny and Jemmy. I'm sending the two
 To England to school. Oh! Debby, my heart
 Is ready to break, when I think I must part
 My dear darling boys; but its all for their good,
 And I'd go through a thousand times more, if I could,
 To rear them genteely—for ev'ry sensation
 Of mine is in favour of nice education.
 Above all, 'tis the accent I'm anxious about;
 Good accent's the main point beyond any doubt.
 You remember last year how your dear little Kitty
 Delighted us all here, her talk was so pretty.

When you asked her to sing about Margery Daw,
 And she said with her sweet little frown, "Au mammau,"
 "Don't ask me, I pray, sure you know that I caunt."
 Had she sung it, she couldn't have more pleased her aunt.
 Yes! England's the place for an accent—it's there
 One imbibes the pure sounds with the pure English air;
 Besides, 'tis the place where a young man will learn
 All his mere vulgar Irish attachments to spurn.
 While he talks with a tone, he will act with one, too,
 That will show he has little with Ireland to do.
 Will be thoroughly Englified—shamed out of all
 Those nonsensical notions the frize-coated call Patriotic—will always evince a sang froid
 That vastly contributes in my mind to awe
 People into respect; one moves on so distingue,
 In a path quite apart from the middle-class gangway.
 I like a young man with an air supercilious,
 Looking English, and aristocratic, and bilious—
 It shows folk at once he has rank on his side,
 When he looks down on all with a cool, conscious pride.

Now, Deb., I would ask you, what is there in all
 Their language, and science, and stuff that they call
 Education at home here that is not vulgarity
 Compared with nice manners?—just think what disparity!

And yet, though fine accent and notions abound
 In your Oxford and Cambridge, yet trust me, I found
 Poor Mr. O'Rorke hard enough to bring round.
 He's a good man, indeed—as a husband no better—
 Whatever his wife's bent on doing—he'll let her;
 Minds his lands and his cattle, his markets and fairs;
 Talks of rises and falls, and the prices of shares;
 In these vulgar affairs he displays some ability,
 But not an idea has he of gentility.

Only think how he said th' other day, he'd regret
 That his sons were aristocrats—soon was he met
 With an answer, I fancy, he'll hardly forget:
 "Are your sons like yourself," said I, "Mr. O'Rorke,
 To be noted for knowledge of mutton, and pork?"

Fie, for shame on your meanness—I'll not be a fool—
 I must have my sons sent to England to school—
 I'll have none of your brogue—they must speak with an accent,
 If all Ballysassenagh were set at a rack rent.
 See the Blacks and the Browns—sure my heart it annoys
 To see those young fellows look down on our boys ;
 And why ? I'm convinced it's for no better reason,
 Than that they were at college in England last season."

Thus I argued and fought—above all did I use
 Such a tone that I quite beat him out of his views ;
 So now I'm all tears, and confusion, and racket,
 Preparing the boys for the very next packet.

This being the case, Deb., I'm sure you'll excuse
 All mistakes in my hurry to tell you the news ;
 But whatever my feelings, my fuss, or my fidget,
 I am always the self-same, affectionate,

BRIDGET.

ENGLISH AND IRISH EYES.

Air—" Jock of Hazeldeen."

The world's wealth should not buy, lady,
 My heart for thee to wear,
 For in your Saxon eye, lady,
 There's something all may share ;
 And though the glances strike, lady,
 From out your orbs of fire,
 There's nothing there to like, lady,
 Though much there's to admire.

They look too much around, lady—
 All restless is their mien—
 Though there one truth I've found, lady,
 You would not love but feign ;

And with a quiet fireside, lady,
 They could not be content :
 The space is far too wide, lady,
 O'er which their glance is sent.

And cloak them how you will, lady,
 At times they must be seen—
 They cannot aye be still, lady,
 Beneath their silken screen ;
 But let them still rove on, lady,
 To make some weak hearts pine,
 The power they had is gone, lady,
 To rule this heart of mine.

Give me the eyes at home, lady,
 Whose glances show no guile ;
 Though free as ocean's foam, lady,
 On all they will not smile ;
 But for the darling one, lady,
 Their look will know no change,
 And e'en when life's sands run, lady,
 Their spirit will not range.

Then turn thine eyes away, lady—
 On others let them roam ;
 My young heart cannot stray, lady,
 From our sweet eyes at home.
 In cups brimful of wine, lady,
 That sparkle high with foam,
 I drink farewell to thine, lady,
 But love to those at home.

EPIGRAM.

ON MR. BUTT'S INTENDED MOTION IN THE CORPORATION.

What discord dire has Isaac spread !
 His temper somewhat tart I call ;
 With truth prophetic Murray said,
 " But's a disjunctive particle."

THE PATRIOT'S WIFE.

There is a tradition amongst the Swiss of the Canton of Uri, that the wife of the tyrant Gessler, disgusted at the atrocities perpetrated by her husband, fled him, and as she was of Swiss extraction, made a vow never to return to him. The tyrant, however, succeeded in capturing her; and the following verses record the dialogue, which is often repeated by the Swiss hearth, when the peasant recounts to his children the glories and achievements of William Tell.

“How changed art thou since last we met!

Thy brow is wan—thy smile is cold;
Stern grief her seal has on thee set—
Thou art not what thou wert of old!

“No joy now flashes from that eye,

Which once around shed charms of light;
That voice once sweet can now but sigh:
Oh, Heavens! whence came this sudden blight?

“Say wilt thou tell?—great God! how strange

That beauty thus could pass away,
And mirth to deepest sorrow change
More quickly than the tomb's decay!

“Yes; tell me if the memory lives

Of early loves and sun-bright years—
If thought but one faint flickering gives—Whence all these woes and burning tears?”

“Nay, do not ask—to tell were vain—

My grief not Heaven itself can 'suage;
Nor seraph's breath could cool my pain,
Nor quench my bosom's burning rage.

“ My country, prey to tyrant bands—
 Her glories gone—her brave ones dead—
 Her daughter slain by traitor’s hands—
 And ask’st thou why my joy is sped ?

“ ‘Fore Heaven, I prize this faded form,
 E’en in its ghastly features, more
 Than when thou won it young and warm,
 And it alone to worship swore.

“ For now I make thee, tyrant, tremble
 O’er all the ruin thou hast made ;
 In vain thou seekest to dissemble—
 Oh ! curse thy bloody heart and blade.

“ And cursed may her ashes be
 Who basely sold my maiden hand
 To him who crushed our liberty,
 And drowned in blood my fatherland.”

WINTER—AN ELEGY.

“ Most musical, most melancholy.”

The lovely rose, the garden’s graceful queen ;
 The shining berries of the mountain ash,
 And all the glories of the sylvan scene,
 Have gone, I guess, teetotally to smash !

The shuddering hills, enwrapt in lurid fire,
 With flaming tongues the lambent lightning licks ;
 Whilst all the songsters of the rural choir
 To New South Wales have cut their precious sticks.

From sable clouds that veil the dreary skies,
 The rushing demons of the tempest shout;
 And Ruin grim to reeking Havoc cries—
 “Does your mamma, my tulip, know you’re out?”

From pole to pole the rumbling thunder runs,
 Tearing, with horrid voice, the tortur’d sky;
 And, hark! red Havoc’s awful answer comes,
 Rending the rock, “Old spitfire, axe my eye.”

Aloft, among the rent and flutt’ring shrouds,
 While his barque battles with strong ocean’s might,
 The sailor, gazing on the sable clouds,
 Prays to the raging Boreas—“Blow me tight!”

Now the ship, madden’d with th’ unequal strife,
 Stagg’ringly, plunges heavily about;
 The crew, resigning ev’ry hope of life,
 Cry, “One wave more, and we’ll be up the spout!”

Alas! behold the angry winter blast
 Strikes the tall monarch of the forest flat;
 Thus youth’s aspiring hopes to earth are cast,
 And poets’ dreams are—all around my hat!

EPIGRAM.

When Brougham, in his early days,
 By manly deeds, won manly praise,
 He scorned a pedigree to trace
 From any lordly robber-race;
 But now in senile strain he talks,
 As heir of Burgham and of Vaux,
 Degraded, fallen, and discontent.
 He well may think on his descent!

LOVE SONG.

AIR—“ How sweet the answer Echo makes.”

I.

I love thine eyes of truth and light,
 I love thy smile of joy ;
 But not to me their beams were bright,
 If, as I did, so others might
 Their light enjoy.

II.

Canst thou be true to one alone,
 True beyond all reproach—
 Bound like the pilgrim to one goal,
 Thrilled like the magnet by one pole—
 Canst thou be such ?

III.

The head that pillows on my breast,
 And calls that home its own,
 Must grant to every thought confess'd
 As calm and true a place of rest
 To reign alone.

IV.

Ask I too much? Nay, think not so ;
 Folly might guess,
 He with seant love content to go
 Meaneth, in turn, to bestow
 Even yet less.

V.

But the true heart can claim in sooth
 But what it gave—
 Candour for candour, truth for truth,
 An ebbless tide to age from youth
 Even to the grave.

THE RATH OF MULLAGHMAST.

I.

O'er the Rath of Mullaghmast,
 On the solemn midnight blast,
 What bleeding spectres pass'd,
 With their gash'd breasts bare?
 Hast thou heard the fitful wail
 That o'erloads the sullen gale,
 When the waning moon shines pale
 O'er the curs'd ground there?

II.

Hark! hollow moans arise
 Thro' the black tempestuous skies,
 And curses, strife, and cries,
 From the lone Rath swell;
 For bloody SYDNEY, there,
 Nightly fills the lurid air
 With th' unholy pomp and glare
 Of the foul, deep hell.

III.

He scorches up the gale,
 With his knights, in fiery mail;
 And the banners of the Pale
 O'er the red ranks rest.
 But a wan and gory band
 All apart and silent stand,
 And they point th' accusing hand
 At that hell-hound's crest!

IV.

Red streamlets, trickling slow,
 O'er their clotted cooluns flow,
 And still and awful woe
 On their pale brows weeps—

Rich bowls bestrew the ground,
 And broken harps around,
 Whose once enchanting sound
 In the bard's blood sleeps.

V.

False Sydney! knighthood's stain,
 The trusting brave in vain—
 Thy guests—ride o'er the plain
 To thy dark cow'rd snare.
 Flow'r of Offaly and Leix,
 They have come thy board to grace—
 Fools! to meet a faithless race
 Save with true swords bare.

VI.

While cup and song abound,
 The triple lines surround
 The clos'd and guarded mound,
 In the night's dark noon.
 Alas! too brave O'More,
 Ere the revelry was o'er
 They have spill'd thy young heart's gore,
 Snatch'd from love too soon!

VII.

At the feast, unarm'd all,
 Priest, bard, and chieftain fall
 In the treacherous Saxon's hall,
 O'er the bright wine bowl;
 And now nightly round the board,
 With unsheath'd and reeking sword,
 Strides the cruel, felon lord
 Of the blood-stain'd soul.

VIII.

Since that hour the clouds that pass'd
 O'er the Rath of Mullaghmast,
 One tear have never cast
 On the gore-dyed sod;

For the shower of crimson rain,
 That o'erflow'd that fatal plain,
 Cries aloud, and not in vain,
 To the most high God.

IX.

Tho' the Saxon snake unfold
 At thy feet his scales of gold,
 And vow thee love untold,
 Trust him not, Green Land ;
 Touch not with gloveless clasp
 A coil'd and deadly asp,
 But with strong and guarded grasp
 In your steel-clad hand.

 YOUNG ENGLAND TO YOUNG IRELAND.

[The subjoined powerful address was written by an English Puseyite, and may be fairly taken to represent the sentiments of many of that great party. They cannot but sympathise with a people not only oppressed for conscience sake, but for opinions differing little from their own; and it is natural that the sympathy of the young and earnest should exhibit the bold and emphatic spirit which breathes through this poem:—]

Brothers, arise! the hour has come
 To strike the blow for truth and God;
 Why sit ye folded up and dumb—
 Why bending kiss the tyrant's rod?
 Is there no hope upon the earth—
 No charter in the starry sky?
 Has freedom no ennobling worth?
 And man no immortality?

Ah, brothers! think ye what ye are!
 What glorious work ye have to do,
 And how they wait ye near and far
 To do the same the wide world through.

'The wide world sunk in dreams and death,
 With guilt and wrong upon its breast,
 Like night-mares choking up its breath,
 And murdering all its holy rest ?

Bethink ye, how with heart and brain
 This God-like work were ablest done ;
 For man must ne'er go back again
 And lose the triumphs he has won.
 Ye who have spurned the tyrant's power,
 And fought your own great spirits free,
 Forget not in this trying hour
 The claims of struggling slavery !

The wise and good ! oh, where are they
 To guide us onward to the Right,
 Untruth and specious lies to slay,
 And red oppression in its might ?
 Come forth, my brothers, on with us—
 Direct the battle we would give ;
 By thousands we would die—if thus
 The millions yet unborn may live.

For what is death to him who dies
 With God's own blessing on his head ?
 A charter—not a sacrifice—
 A life immortal to the dead.
 And life itself is only great
 When man devotes himself to be
 By virtue, thought, and deed, the mate
 Of God's own children and the free.

And are we free ? O, blot and shame !
 That men who for a thousand years
 Have battled on through fire and flame,
 And nourished with their blood and tears—
 Religion—Freedom—Civil Right—
 Should tamely suffer traitor hands
 To dash them into gloom and night,
 And bind the very God with bands.

And will ye bear, my brother men,
 To see your altars trampled down ;
 Shall Christ's great heart bleed out again
 Beneath the scoffer's spear and frown ?
 Shall priests proclaim that God is not,
 And from the Devil's gospel teach
 Those worldly doctrines, unforgot,
 Which burning tyrants loved to preach ?

Shall traitors to the human right
 To God and truth have boundless sway,
 And ye not rush into the fight
 And wrench the SACRED CROSS away,
 And tear the scrolls of freedom, bought
 With blood of martyrs and the brave,
 From men who with derisive sport
 Defy you on the martyr's grave ?

Ah, no !—uprushing—million-strong,
 The trodden people come at last,
 Their fiery souls pent up so long
 Burst out in flames all thick and fast ;
 And thunder-words and lightning-deeds
 Strike terror to the Wrong, who flee,
 Till lo ! at last the wronger bleeds,
 And dying, leaves the nation free.

THE IRISH MAIDEN TO HER LOVER.

I.

O, tell me not love's light, and joyous tale ;
 Sing not to me love's soft delicious lay ;
 But let thy tale be sad—thy strains the wai
 Of men enslaved—let not thy song be gay

Tune not thy harp to joy. No merry sound
 Should wake its captive chords to melody,
 Each gladsome note is to my soul a wound,
 For Erin wears the chains of slavery.

II.

And if thy fingers wake, perhaps, a strain
 Of joy, in passing heedless o'er the chords,
 Let not thy voice re-echo it again—
 Let not its brightness pass into thy words.
 No; rather sing of death and of the grave,
 Then will thy lay claim more of sympathy;
 These are the themes that best befit the slave,
 For death at least will make the bondsman free.

III.

Then sing not now the melting lay of love,
 Its notes should not be uttered by a slave;
 But if thou wouldst thy heart's devotion prove,
 Recover first the freedom Heaven gave;
 Then when that first, best gift thou shalt regain,
 A willing ear I'll lend thy minstrelsy;
 But sing not to me love's light, joyous strain
 Till thou canst say—"My native land is free."

O'NIAL'S VOW.

"Jusque la nous leur ferous guerre à mort."—Donald O'Nial, King of Ulster, to Pope John.

How many a year,
 In fleet career,
 Have circled o'er its blackened strand,
 Since first that vow,
 Forgotten now,
 Was plighted to our native land?

And still the crimes
 Of those dark times
 Are perpetrated hour by hour,
 And Saxon fraud,
 By GOD unaw'd,
 Goes hand in hand with Saxon power !

What lesson stern
 Thou'st left to learn,
 Oft baffled, but unyielding King,
 " In peace or strife,
 In death or life,
 The Saxon bears a poison'd sting.
 Then weal or woe,
 Strike home the blow,
 And win at least the hero's fate,
 And far on high
 Your destiny
 Shall rank with stars of loftiest state."

O'Nial swears
 The crown he wears,
 While throbs one pulse, or heaves one breath,
 To meet thy band
 With glove and brand,
 Invading brigand to the death.
 Nor length of years,
 Nor blood nor tears,
 Defeat, disaster, nor distress,
 Shall mar the word
 Pledg'd on the sword
 He clutches for the merciless.

PREFACE TO THE FOURTH EDITION.

THREE Editions of this little volume having been exhausted in less than a month, the publisher has called upon me to prepare a fourth ; and with this object I have gone over it carefully, and expunged as many as I could detect of the original sins incident to early editions—errors of the press, of haste and of carelessness. Something of this kind was done for the third edition ; but there was not leisure to do it carefully. It will now, I trust, be found tolerably free from errors of the class chargeable on an editor.

I have also made some changes in the collection—useful and agreeable as I believe, but too slight to require specification.

The success of these ballads seems to me to give happy promise of a vigorous and national literature in Ireland. Ballads have been among the first home-grown productions of all countries ; and their popularity here, now, is no slight evidence that the national mind is still fresh and earnest, and has the impulses and propensities that belong to a young nation.

Poetry of action and passion are popular where action, and passion, and faith, and noble sentiments are still common. Poetry of reflection succeed them in a lower state of public feeling.

It was a great achievement of Wordsworth to wed philosophy to the ballad ; and to put a high moral purpose and large intellectual development into his ballad stories ; but the ages that required only the simple passion and truth were ages of greater faith, worth, and heroism. Let us rejoice if we have not yet passed out of them.

In justice to our periodical literature, I ought to have stated in the Introduction, that the ballads by Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Murray were taken from the University Magazine ; those by Mr. Mangan from the Irish Penny Journal ; the "Fate of the Forties," by Mr. H. G. Curran, "My Connor," and the "Woods of Kylinoe," from the Citizen ; Mr. Carleton's "Sir Turlough" from the Dublin Literary Gazette, and the ballads of Mr. Davis, Mr. Walsh, Mr. Keegan, Mr. Mac Carthy, and Mr. Lane, as well as some of the anonymous ones, from the Nation.

INTRODUCTION.

BALLAD POETRY OF IRELAND.

THE object of this collection is to vindicate the character of our native ballads, long and strangely misunderstood. But its title may suggest expectations which it cannot, and was by no means intended, to gratify. Let us, therefore, state, on the threshold, that it consists neither of the old Bardic Songs of the country, nor of the Street Ballads, common in the mouths of the people. It has borrowed from both these sources; but the main body of the collection is gathered from another class, chastened and elevated by modern art, but equally indigenious, and equally marked with a distinct native character.

The motive of this preference is obvious.

Such of the OLD BARDIC SONGS as have come down to us are locked up from the mass of readers, in the Irish language, or in translations.

which are commonly as complete a disguise of their spirit and beauty. With a few exceptions, all the translations we are acquainted with, in addition to having abundance of minor faults, are eminently un-Irish. They seem to have been made by persons to whom one of the languages was not familiar. Many of them were confessedly versified from prose translations, and are mere English poems, without a tinge of the colour or character of the country. Others, translated by sound Irish scholars, are bald and literal; the writers sometimes wanting a facility of versification, sometimes a mastery over the English language. The Irish scholars of the last century were too exclusively national to study the foreign tongue with the care essential to master its metrical resources; and the flexible and weighty language which they had not learned to wield hung heavily on them,

“Like Saul’s plate armour on the shepherd boy,
Encumbering, and not arming them.”

If it were just to estimate our bardic poetry by the specimens we have received in this manner, it could not be rated highly. But it would manifestly be most unjust. Noble and touching, and often subtle and profound thoughts, which no translation could entirely spoil, shine through the poverty of the style, and vindicate the character of the originals. Like the costly arms and ornaments found in our bogs, they are substantial witnesses of a distinct civilization; and their credit is no more diminished by the rubbish in which they chance to be found than the authenticity of the ancient torques and skians by their embedment in the mud. When the entire collection of our Irish Percy—James Hardiman—shall have been given to a public (and soon may such a one come) that can relish them in their native dress, they will be entitled to undisputed precedence in our national minstrelsy. Meantime, it is not in weak and distorted translations, but in something more instinct with life and vigour we must look for the genuine spirit of Irish ballad poetry

The COMMON BALLADS of the people were still less suitable. They had been already collected by Mr. Crofton Croker, and, united with the slang songs of a Scotch magazine, stray verses from provincial newspapers, and some bald translations from Latin poems of the middle ages, contributed to form a collection curiously entitled the "Popular Songs of Ireland." Their popularity and Irishism were exactly on a par.

On the publication of that volume the English Reviews and Magazines took occasion to lament the poverty of this country in ballad poetry ; and to contrast the noble minstrelsy of England and Scotland with the dull rubbish and professed caricature of which it was mainly composed. Their regret was very good-natured and very contemptuous. Since that period we have repeatedly observed similar injurious contrasts in English Journals, and even the respectable name of Dr. Cooke Taylor has been lent to the vulgar error of treating street ballads, written by the ballad-singers of Cork or the hedge schoolmasters of Kerry, as the national minstrelsy of Ireland. Worthless as these productions commonly are, they are seldom much worse nonsense, and never half as bad morality, as the corresponding songs of murder, obscenity and fraud, popular in the seaport and manufacturing towns of England.

Their errors are the errors of ignorance. The tone is generally healthy and earnest, however the language may be bombastic or absurd. But healthy or noxious, they are as distinct from our genuine National Ballads as the noble collections of Percy and Scott from the filthy and repulsive street songs of Birmingham or Glasgow. Among the peasantry ballads certainly exist, written by men in the humblest station (but men without the slang or the vices of great cities), which are full of national feeling and character. Of these we have gladly availed ourselves. But the mass of the street songs make no pretence to being true to Ireland; but only to being true to the purlieus of Cork and Dublin.

Another class remained: our ANGLO-IRISH BALLADS; the production of educated men, with English tongues but Irish hearts. From this class the greater part of our materials has been drawn; and we trust it will appear that in them, in the few Street Ballads not written to sell, but from the fulness of the heart, and in our adequate Translations from the Irish, we possess a popular poetry, less ancient and precious, but not less instinct with the spirit of the country, than the venerable minstrelsy of England and Scotland.

Our Anglo-Irish ballads (like our best Anglo-Irish families,) grew to be national gradually, but instinctively and without effort. Before the time of Swift, they were chiefly written by followers of the Court. They were of course satires on the country, or caricatures on the manners and language of the natives. French tyranny was said to be tempered by epigrams—English tyranny was then (as it has often been since) barbed with libels. Several of these early ballads have been preserved, but are little known, with the exception of Lord Wharton's "Lillibulero ;" * a du squib to which the English Revolution of '88 is sometimes attributed. It is difficult to believe

* As some of our readers may not have seen this once celebrated song, we subjoin the opening verses.

“ Ho, broder Teague, dost hear de decree, ;
 Lillibulero, bullena a-la,
 Dat we shall have a new Deputee,
 Lillibulero, bullena a-la,
 Lero, lero, Lillibulero, &c.
 Ho, by Shaint Tyburne, it is de Talbote,
 Lillibulero, &c.
 And he will cut de Englishman's troate.
 Lillibulero, &c.
 Dough by my sowl de English do prat
 Lillibulero, &c.
 De law's on dare side, and Christ knows what ;
 Lillibulero, &c.
 But if de dispense do come from de Pope,
 Lillibulero, &c.
 We'll hang Magna Charta, and them in a rope. ;
 Lillibulero, &c.”

If these rhymes effected a Revolution, there has been no such fortunate gabbling since the preservation of the Capitol. The only tolerable verses are the last two which were added several years after the Revolution.

“ Dare was an ould prophecy found in a bog,
 Lillibulero, &c.
 ‘ Ireland shall be ruled by an ass and a dog, ’
 Lillibulero, &c.
 And now dis prophecy is come to pass,

in a cause apparently so inadequate, and impossible to believe in its adequacy.

Swift snatched these weapons out of the hands of the English faction, and turned them against their own breasts. He rescued our popular poetry from fribbles on one hand, and from ignorant strollers on the other, and gave it a vigour and concentration which it has never wholly lost. During his lifetime it became a power in the country; the obscure precursor of a Free Press. After his death it fell into weaker and ruder hands, but never into disuse. In the succeeding Jacobite struggles both parties had bitter song writers, and some of their angry lyrics, are, popular as political songs to this day. A very trifling change in the dramatis personæ was at any time sufficient to refit them for use. A curious list might be made of the popular favourites who have successively monopolised them, from James II. to O'Connell; and from William III. to the late Dr. Boyton the founder of the Brunswick Clubs.

The era of the Volunteers was rich in songs, one or two of which are still occasionally heard; but ballads, in the restricted sense there were few or none.*

* By a ballad, I understand a short lyrical narrative poem; by a song, a lyrical poem of sentiment or passion. To constitute a ballad the narrative need not be continuous or regular, though it commonly is so. If it be suggested by repeated allusions, as in Soggarth Aroon

In '98 there was abundance of both. The pens of Drennan, G. N. Reynolds, John Shears, Orr of Ballycastle, were industrious and prolific; and they had a large corps of obscurer associates. Of these songs nearly all are preserved, but only a few have lived or deserved to live in the memory of the people.* For the most part they were frigid in style, French in sentiment, and inflated or prosaic in language. When they were addressed to the body of the people it was in a diction too pedantic to be familiar, or too cold to be impressive. In truth there was no soul in them. Drennan was a true poet, but from impulse or design he wrote solely for the middle classes. His exquisite ballads, although transparent as crystal, could never become popular among an uneducated peasantry. They wanted the idiomatic language and the familiar allusions absolutely essential to poetry for the people.

The Union had its stipendiary song writers, hired by Cooke and Castlereagh, and their labours or Gille Machree, that I fancy is enough to bring the poem under the class of ballad poetry.

* It is a curious fact that in Belfast, reputedly so anti-national, these songs are continually republished, and have run through endless editions. Printed on coarse paper and sold at a few pence, their circulation in Ulster alone counts by tens of thousands. The collection is still called as it was on its first publication in '97 "Paddy's Resource."

are preserved in printed books, but in no man's memory. But such a struggle naturally kindled true poetry; and the hearty and vigorous verses of Lysaght are commonly sung to this day. His song of "Our Island" is a fine specimen of political verse, rough, strong, and impulsive, without much attention to method, but clear and simple as water.* It is a strange circumstance that the best songs suggested by the Catholic Emancipation struggle were (with an illustrious exception) left unpublished till the victory was won. John Banim writes to Gerald Griffin in 1827 that he is engaged on a series of Catholic songs, that he too may have a share in the great struggle. They were not published till 1831. Callanan in 1829 excuses the exasperated tone of one of his poems

* Here is a specimen of it. We would give extracts from other songs alluded to in the text, but that they will be published entire in the collection of "The Songs of Ireland," which Mr. Barry is preparing for publication in the present series.

" May God, in whose hand
Is the lot of each land,
Who rules over ocean and dry land,
Inspire our good King
Ill advisers to fling,
Ere destruction they bring on our Island !
Don't we feel 'tis our dear little Island,
A fertile and fair little Island !
May Orange and Green
No longer be seen
Distained with the blood of our Island !"

by stating that it was written before Emancipation, and under a bitter sense of injustice. It would be an impertinence to presume that the reader requires to be reminded the illustrious exception consists in the melodies of Thomas Moore.

Side by side with the political ballads* grew up another class, cultivated with greater art, and commanding large resources. Addison and Tickell during their residence in Ireland introduced the pastoral and romantic ballad into Anglo-Irish poetry. Some of the Old English ballads were then making their way into favour; and imitating them was a favourite amusement among the exiled poets. Tickell's "Leinster famed for pretty maids" was extremely popular in its day but is chiefly valuable now as one of the first of a class to which Goldsmith, Parnell, Dermody, Mrs. Tighe, Miss Brooke, and Thomas Moore have since contributed various but very disproportionate amounts.

* We have spoken here of Anglo-Irish ballads alone. The popular poetry in the native language, which England found it necessary to control by penalties and bribes;—now forbidding the existence of Bards within her territory, now hiring them to sing the praises of the English monarch outside the Pale—and which continued as thorns in her side through the ages of persecution down even to the last Insurrection, are a distinct class. The risk of popular celebrity during their lives, which often compelled them to hide their light, and the vulgar indifference to our native literature which since prevailed, have conspired to throw into obscurity the names and works of the brave men who kept alive the fire of patriotism in this country. But, it would appear, from the success that attended the illustrious labours of Mr. Hardiman, and the more recent efforts of Mr. Daly, that it is not even yet a hopeless task, to attempt recovering and preserving in a regular digested series writings so intimately connected with the heroic struggles and the venerable religion of the country.

Many of the ballads in Percy are more familiarly known here than in England; but they were unquestionably imported and found favour with a poetic people. Others professedly older than Tickell or Addison are of doubtful authenticity.*

But it was during the last fifty years that the most valuable and characteristic contributions have been made to our native ballads. Till then the genius of the country had scarcely learned to use the English language for its highest necessities. The majority of the people spoke their native tongue exclusively. The upper classes, connected with them by ties of kindred, patriotism, or religion, cultivated it with the same care bestowed upon English. The legends and songs of the country were scarcely known in any but their native dress; and many of the middle classes who used English in intercourse or business, prayed, sang, and recited the traditions of the land in their dear native tongue. We know many families where this custom prevails among the elder branches to this hour. Unfortunately the youth are letting slip one of the proudest and tenderest ties that bound our people to their country.

* Long before their era, Waterford, Limerick, and some other of our corporate towns, had their early annals, or particular periods of them, recorded in rude ballad verse, full of interest to the antiquary and philologist, but of no literary merit; they were not ballads but versified annals. Specimens of them may be seen in the local histories.

Out of the general use of English grew a class of ballads which for the first time clothed the passions and feelings of the native race in that tongue. The ballads of Tickell and Goldsmith, and even those of Dermody and Mrs. Tighe were only Irish in incident and feeling, not in complexion or phraseology. There is an Anglo-Irish language as easily discriminated from London English as the dialect of Saxon spoken in the Lowlands of Scotland. This is not the gibberish of bulls and broken English—the “Teddy my jewels” and “Paddy my joys” which abound in the caricatures of Irish songs. It is a dialect fired with the restless imagination, and coloured with the strong passions of our nation.

Irish songs ought to be and the best of them are as markedly Irish even in language as those of Burns or Motherwell are Scotch. Of this class

Griffin, Banim, Callanan, Ferguson, Lover, Davis, Mangan, Walsh, and several other writers have given us exquisite specimens. They have taught the native muse to become English in language without growing un-Irish in character. This is a lesson we must never permit her to forget.

Hence three distinct classes of ballads were open for selection, and we have borrowed largely from each. But from this last class the largest and we believe the richest quota has been drawn. Not alone in poetic merit and in picturesque illustrations of the habits and traditions of the people, but in nationality of spirit and language they claim the first place. They are Irish, not in the accident of their birth-place, like some of the great men whom we claim as countrymen on doubtful grounds, but essentially, in character and spirit.

It is certain that the Ballad is fully as susceptible as the Novel of this distinct and intrinsic nationality. No stranger ever did or can write the popular poetry of any people. How seldom can he even imitate successfully their peculiar idioms—the mere mechanical portion of such a task. The snatches of old sayings that imply so much more than they express; the traditional forms into which the liquid thought runs as unconsciously as the body drops into its accustomed gait; the familiar beliefs and disbeliefs that have become a second nature as much a part of himself as the first; the very tone and accent of passion by which his ear and heart were first mastered; these and a hundred other involuntary influences help to colour and modulate the poet's verse and to give it the charm of native raciness. These are just what a stranger never can by any miracle of genius imitate; and except in rare instances of cultivated and catholic taste cannot even relish.

But, if this be true of poetry in general, it is more strictly applicable to ballad poetry.

It least of all can dispense with the only ornaments to which it makes any pretence. Like Carleton's peasant it ought to be Irish "from the coat out and from the coat in." The early Anglo-Irish ballads written after Tickel and Goldsmith, and recent ones of the same school, are so deficient in this respect as to be almost blank of complexional affinity to the country. They are not Irish but cosmopolitan; and arrive at such a result as might be accomplished by re-writing the novels of Scott or Banim on the theory of Godwin, who would not condescend to copy the vulgar dialect of the streets or the fields! But our present selections do not err in this particular ; they are in general remarkably “racy of the soil.”

Many of them and generally the best are just as essentially Irish as if they were written in Gaelic.* They could have grown among no other people, perhaps under no other sky or scenery. To an Englishman, to any Irishman educated out of the country, or to a dreamer asleep to impressions of scenery and character, they would be achievements as impossible as the Swedish Skalds or the Arabian Nights. They are as Irish as Ossian or Carolan, and unconsciously reproduce the spirit of those poets, better than any translator can hope to do. They revive and perpetuate the vehement native songs that gladdened the halls of our princes in their triumphs, and wailed over their ruined hopes or murdered bodies. In everything but language, and almost in language, they are identical. That strange tenacity

* More than half a century ago, Ritson, a careful and conscientious critic, conceived that while there was a marked difference between English and Scotch songs, there was properly none between English and Irish, the latter being either purely English or mere gibberish.—His misconception prevails to this day, even in Ireland. If Banim's poetry had ever become popular, it would have made such a belief impossible ; but even Mr. Lover's songs, though less absolutely native flowers of the soil, ought to have dissipated it long ago.

of the Celtic race which makes a description of their habits and propensities when Cæsar was still a Proconsul in Gaul, true in essentials of the Irish people to this day, has enabled them to infuse the ancient and hereditary spirit of the country into all that is genuine of our modern poetry. And even the language grew almost Irish. The soul of the country stammering its passionate grief and hatred in a strange tongue, loved still to utter them in its old familiar idioms and cadences. Uttering them perhaps with more piercing earnestness, because of the impediment; and winning out of the very difficulty a grace and a triumph.

Some of the nameless, indefinite charms, that win every reader of genuine Anglo-Irish song are traceable to this source. In any pseudo Irish ballad where phrases from the Irish language are introduced to give it a tinge of the country, they lie upon the surface refusing to coalesce with it. They are clearly alien and antagonistic and have no business there. But in the Caoinés recited by women to whom English was less familiar than their native tongue with which they eked it out on every emergency, or in the expression of vehement feeling of any sort, the two languages seem to have dissolved in the heat of passion, and fused into each other like kindred metals. In some of Callanan's ballads this cordial union is felicitously illustrated; and recently in the verses of Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Davis, and Mr. Walsh.

The ordinary effect of native poetry is to cherish love of home and homely associations, which, elevated and spiritualized, becomes love of country. Here it may have another, more restricted but not less important influence. If the belief be well founded, that a national school of poetry is about to spring up among us, such models will be of countless value to our young writers, in forming their taste and attracting their studies in a profitable direction.

The rudest snatch of native song may give a higher impulse to the mind of the young poet, than the most faultless specimen of English verse. To reach the heart of his nation he must borrow the tones that naturally and habitually speak its feelings.

“Thy voice I'll steal to woo thyself,
That voice that none can match.”

Burns recognised this truth, or by one of the happy intuitions that belong to genius, fell naturally into the practice of it. It was among the old Scotch song-writers, men inferior to himself in everything but a knowledge of the strong, graphic language of the people, that first and last he looked for models. And with such unpromising materials and no others, see what strange wonders he has wrought. He wooed poetry from the saloon and the library to become household among the poorest peasantry in Europe; elevated the uncouth dialect of his native hills to be familiar to fifty millions of men among the most powerful and civilized of modern nations. And in this nationality lay his strength not alone among his own people but among all people. His English songs are comparatively neglected; his Scotch songs with their provincial and unpronounceable phraseology are in the mouths of more men than spoke his native tongue when he began to mould it into rustic verse.

The ballads of Griffin, Callanan, and such songs of Banim as are not offensive for prosiness or vulgarity, are the most precious models we possess. Even their errors and excesses lean in the right direction.

Some of Griffin's simple ballads are gushes of feeling that smite the heart like the cry of a woman. Such is his "Gille Machree,"* a strain of the noblest sentiment in the simplest language; and both as essentially Irish as the distinctive names or features of our race.

* See page 49.

Callanan is generally less native in phraseology, but some of his translations from the Gaelic have caught the spirit and idiomatic character of the language in a wonderful manner. They are "more Irish than the Irish itself."

In the few verses which Banim has left us, the most extravagant contrasts are common. Some of them are exquisitely moulded in structure and language. Some of them sink down to the rank of street ballads; but in all it is obvious that he kept the right principle in view, and laboured to make them as faithful an echo of the national heart as his prose fictions. In the main he succeeded. His "Soggarth Aroon"* is perhaps the most Irish ballad in existence. Simple and rugged as it is, it would stir the soul of Ireland more than any song that ever fell from human lips. And this spell is apart from the subject. Its spirit is perhaps too subtle to be analysed; but the truth of the sentiment, the felicity of the language, and the passionate earnestness of the feeling are elements that lie near the surface. "Scots wha hae" is not a truer and scarcely a nobler embodiment of a national sentiment.

* See page 68.

Our great living poet,

“The sweetest lyrist of our saddest wrongs,”

did not choose to add this native grace to his other attractions. He sang our wrongs in the language of the wronger. The genius, the incidents, the inspiration are native, but the dialect, the idioms are pure Saxon. The story is the story of Isaac, but the voice is unequivocally the voice of Esau. Possibly it was better for the fame and even for the utility of Moore that this was so. His songs might never have sunk as they did, into the heart of England, if in addition to the sin of patriotism they had been tainted with the vulgarity of mere Irish peculiarities. But the poet has not the gift of tongues, and the language that thrilled the saloons of fashion, would fall tamely on the circle gathered round the farmer's hearth. Moore like Cæsar's illustrious rival, extended his conquests over the nations of the civilized world, while there were still tracts in his native country that had never fallen under the sway of his imperial mind.

Among the recent native poets, whose ballads enrich our collection, the first place indisputably belongs to Clarence Mangan. His name will sound strange to many ears, but there is none among the literary class in this country to whom it is not dear and estimable. None, we earnestly believe, who can be considered among his rivals who will not cheerfully proclaim his title to the first place. The systematic seclusion of his literary life has robbed him of fame; but it has given him the love of his own order untainted by a single jealousy. Mangan's powers are marked and peculiar. In perception of nature or truth, in force of imagination, in the development of the passions, in pathos, and in humour, many of his cotemporaries equal, some exceed him. But he has not, and perhaps never had, any rival in mastery of the metrical and rhythmical resources of the English tongue. His power over it is something wholly wonderful. His metres (some of them invented, some transplanted from the German) are often as singular and impressive as the wonderful metres of Campbell; but within these formal limits his imagination moves as freely as if they were the ordinary moulds in which thought is cast. And vehement or subdued it is still the same. His war-songs have the swing and the force of a battering ram. His passionate love verses the soft spontaneous flow of a summer wind. Unfortunately, few of his productions fall within our limits. While he has made German and Oriental poetry* familiar to a large class of readers, he has comparatively seldom chosen to illustrate our native literature. But such translations from the Irish as he has made are so singularly racy and characteristic that we have included them all in the present collection.

Mr. Ferguson's† ballads differ from Mangan's as Scott's poetry differs from Coleridge's. They are not reflective and metaphysical, but romantic or historical. They are not suggestive or didactic, but fired with a living and local interest. They appeal to the imagination and passions, not to the intellect. Their inspiration is external; they are coloured with scenery and costume, and ventilated with the free air of the country. In this respect they are of a class with the old English and Scotch ballads; and with Scott's, Burns', and Southey's, rather than with Schiller's, Wordsworth's, Moore's, or Tennyson's. It seems pro-

* See the papers entitled Anthologia Germanica and Literæ Orientales in the Dublin University Magazine.

† There is perhaps no single writer, who, at his age (fortunately he is still a young man) had done more to serve and honour Ireland than Mr. Ferguson. In addition to his poetry, his Historical Tales which are always graphic and picturesque, and have some scenes of wonderful power; and his essays on the Attractions and Capability of Ireland, published some years ago in the University Magazine, have exercised a wide and powerful influence in nationalizing the sentiments and pursuits of the literary and professional classes in this country.

bable that Mr. Ferguson holds ballad poetry to have been vitiated by the excess of reflection over incident. Certainly as it has grown less epic and more didactic, the ballad character has been slowly disappearing, till in *Locksley Hall we have a noble and impulsive poem; but one scarcely more a ballad than Darwin's Garden or the Essay on Man.

Of some writers of long-established reputation, such as Mr. Carleton, Dr. Anster, and Mr. Lover, it is needless to speak. Others we forbear to notice individually, from obvious motives; for happily we are not gathering this garland chiefly from graves.

It may be observed that we have inserted no ballads from the "Spirit of the Nation," or from "Hardiman's Minstrelsy." We omitted them because they are already familiar to the public, or easily attainable. We have, however, availed ourselves of a few uncollected ballads by the contributors to the former volume, which will be found to belong to the class we chiefly sought. They are Irish in "thought, word, and expression."

Two or three of the rustic ballads will afford fine studies for our young writers. It is from the works of the people themselves, they will catch the truest inspiration in writing for the people. And these rude ballads, with nearly all the faults of their class, have also a natural, unpremeditated beauty essentially their own.

* Tennyson's Poems, vol. 2.

They are not works of art, but, what is higher and rarer, works of nature. Spontaneous poetry, struck out like sparks in the heat and clash of strange events.

Verses of this class are very rare, and seem to have been produced in single specimens; thrown off in a phrensy of passion of some sort—anger, or love, or jealousy. The number of single songs of wonderful beauty in the Scotch Minstrelsy is remarkable; and something of the same kind, but to a smaller extent, is observable in English ballad poetry. The reason is obvious—they are not the fruits of art, which rears new blossoms at its will; but of strong casual feeling, kindled by circumstances, and possibly never revived.

Here then, and in some scattered songs, we have nearly all that is essentially native in Anglo-Irish poetry. With these, and by intercourse with the people, the student of poetry must imbue his mind with the language and sentiments of the people. If he have a heart for his task, love and zeal will make it easy.*

* Love of his task is an indispensable condition to the success of the artist or poet. Nature is beautiful, ex-

Beyond mere students (but including them), these ballads may possibly accomplish another good. Their strength and simplicity may exercise a useful influence on the national taste. The songs of the people run habitually into rant and extravagance; and this fault is not confined to the ignorant—it amounts to a national vice.

The reason is obvious. To a highly sensitive and poetic people, passion or harmony, abstractly from the ideas with which it chances to be associated, is in itself a keen enjoyment. They relish it as a form of power and beauty; and when this taste runs into excess, the wildest nonsense, uttered with vehemence by a speaker, or moulded into harmony by a versifier, obtains popular applause. Hence the radical fault of our poetry and oratory is an excess of “purple words.” The ear and the fancy are cultivated, to the neglect of the intellectual perceptions; and the reactly in proportion to our affection for her, as the face of his mistress grows upon a lover with deeper and truer beauty, as love grows strong in his heart. That is to say, in another form, as his insight becomes clearer to the latent good; for the beauty in nature, or in his mistress, is not created by the imagination, but discovered by the perceptions becoming keener and stronger. Discovered as true and suitable, and appertaining to nature, whether or not it exists where we fancy we have detected it. Thus love becomes an instinctive guide to the intellect, and is the main condition necessary to success in intellectual action.

sult is the production and the popularity of rodomontade. The cure for this vice is simplicity or the hardest abstraction; simplicity that will restore or establish a healthy taste; abstraction that will discipline the mind into the habit of stripping and examining the ideas presented to it.

Perhaps half the remedy may be found in ballads like these full of native and simple strength.

English poetry was rescued from the vices of artificiality and feebleness by the publication of the vigorous old English ballads. They infused into it a new soul, full of native fire, and scorched up the flimsy, pretentious conceits which preceded them. The collection of their native ballads was a memorable era in the literary history not only of England but of Scotland. It was the beginning of an age of great achievements. To Bishop Percy's labours England owes in no remote degree some of the most precious writings of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Southey, Tennyson and Macaulay. In Scotland the collection of Border Minstrelsy, with its legendary and antiquarian illustrations contains the germs of all Scott's after-writings in verse and prose; and of the happiest efforts of Hogg, Leyden, Motherwell, and Allan Cunningham. To these ballads and to Burns is perhaps equally owing, that the literature of Scotland is the most national in the world.

In Germany modern ballads accomplished the same end to a profounder extent. When Burger, Goethe, and Schiller taught the native muse to renounce foreign models and become German in spirit and form, an intellectual revolution commenced which has influenced Europe no less widely than the political revolution of France. Many who never heard the name of Goethe, multitudes to whom German is a locked-up treasure, have shared this influence.

Let us hope that our native ballads also will herald the happy coming of a native literature. They are not agents unworthy of such an end. With the Old British Ballads we make no comparison that does not imply their superiority in many respects. It is undoubtedly to their inspiration we owe nearly our entire collection, with the exception of translations. The thought of making ballads was borrowed, as the thought of making coined money was borrowed; but the gold is native, and the impress of our own nation is distinctly stamped upon each specimen. The world-famous German ballads were suggested by the same models, and if like them our ballads frequently exceed the originals in force and variety as they naturally do in artistic effects, it is all that was possible to accomplish. You cannot manufacture antiques. To us it seems certain that success at home is all they require to take their place permanently among the ballad poetry of Europe.

But they must have this passport to other nations.

No generation of men has grown up with their sad, sweet music sounding in its ears, kindling lofty sentiments in the fresh heart of youth, and keeping manliness and natural piety warm in the breast of manhood. But if this be their mission among the rising generation their success abroad may be as wide as the triumphs of our national music. They may be received, as it is received throughout the world, as the genuine voice of the country; and relieve us from the reproach (which we suffer wherever the English language prevails) of having produced no other native songs than the caricature and nonsense that represent Irish ballad poetry at present.

The Hedge Schoolmasters were the ballad writers of the last generation, and the vices of the class, their pedantry, pretension and grossness are faithfully mirrored in their verses. They are redeemed by one virtue only, a passionate love of country. But it is an ignorant and misleading love; promising impossible events, and looking outwards to Spain, France, Italy, or Utopia, never inward to the nation itself for hope or succour. The new generation trained by a different class of men, can no more go back to this literary garbage than to Manson and Voster and the chaotic school-books of the last century. The thing is no longer possible. It will be well if it be succeeded in their esteem by poetry that will avoid its vices without falling into new vices of its own.

What poets they shall read and love, is no immaterial question; very much the contrary. Poetry has been named the "sister of religion," a presumptuous title; but it is impossible to deny that it often lies like a quickening compost at the root of faith and morals. Operating on our feelings, the centre of weakness and sensibility, it has us at its will; and must inevitably be a great curse or a great blessing. Sometimes it is a curse; the dramatists and versifiers of the Restoration were panders to the lowest vices; and our own generation has not been without a taint of the same poison. But the best poetry of every age purifies and elevates, and is the parent of noble impulses and great achievements. Its influence is of unmixed good; a law within the law; and the narrowest Utilitarian might admit it into his scheme of popular improvement as a distinct and powerful element of good.

A great national Teacher would assuredly devise to make the highest poetry familiar to the minds and habits of his people. He would devise to make it an enjoyment in youth that it might become a second conscience in manhood and old age.

“ Blessing be with them—and eternal praise,
Who gave us nobler loves, and nobler cares—
The Poets, who on earth have made us heirs
Of truth and pure delight—by heavenly lays !”

Where it is a common enjoyment, civilization has not much to do. How large an influence the household popularity of Burns in Scotland, and the habitual music of their bold, free songs on the Swiss hills, has had on the national character of both people, it is impossible to say. But only impossible because it is immeasurable. Even among the most cultivated men, and in the most artificial state of society, Poetry is an honoured ally of the Law and the Pulpit. Its special task in such a case, is to keep alive the heroic virtues, and to exorcise the selfish vices of prosperity from the heart. What Wordsworth has done for spirituality in England, the labours of no preacher of his generation can match. The great poet is a preacher, with an empire for his congregation.

A few words still remain on the mode in which the materials of the present volume were collected, and have been arranged. The task of collecting them was an easy one. Any tolerably furnished Irish library contains all the books (excepting a collection of ballads and some recent periodicals) in which they were found. Another volume of equal size might still be gathered from the same source. We have only sifted, not exhausted the collection.

In preparing the volume for the press, all ballads on Irish subjects written by Englishmen, and all ballads on English or Foreign subjects written by Irishmen, have been omitted. The subjects and the authors are exclusively national.*

Another class entirely excluded are the slang songs imitating supposed Irish peculiarities; peculiarities which Irishmen exhibit upon the stage, but no where else on the surface of the earth. In

* The "Forging of the Anchor," and the "Forester's Complaint," may be considered exceptions to this rule. the subjects being such as more habitually belong to England, a maritime and sylvan country. But they do not exclusively belong to England, and there is not the smallest allusion to her in either of them; on the contrary, the author being an Irishman, had, as we unhesitatingly believe, his own country alone in view.

a farce, a lawyer is always a knave, a doctor always a quack, and an Irishman always a professional rake, who talks a conventional jargon interlarded with "my joy" and "my jewel;" speaks of a pistol as a "mighty pretty tool;" kisses every woman, and cudgels or challenges every man he meets. The slang songs are the versified language of this stage Irishman, and bear as much resemblance to the dialect of the peasantry who till our fields, or the squires who possess them, as the stage lawyer does to Mr. Pigot and Mr. Henn, or the stage doctor to Dr. Stokes and Dr. Corrigan. Though these songs have obtained a disgraceful popularity in Ireland, there are none of them in this collection.

In arranging the ballads we have rather contrasted than classified them.

They are placed neither in order of time nor in distinct classes; but rather with a view to suggest variety and comparison; and to afford the greatest amount of enjoyment. If our bardic and our middle-age minstrelsy had become familiar to the country, in the originals, or in adequate translations, the time for classification would have arrived. But we must collect before we discriminate, and we are still in the first stage. "When all our stores are gathered and arranged—when we can read the native songs on the Danish raids, on the English Invasion, on the Pale, on the Reformation, on the Penal Laws, on the Jacobite struggles, and compare with them the Scandinavian skalds, the poetry and literature, (native or imported,) which flourished inside the Pale, the songs that were sung in the Cromwellian bawns, in the mansions of the Orange squirearchy and in the farm-houses of the Orange yeomanry, we will have insights into the heart of History which a tower-full of state papers would not afford.

Then the classification of our native poetry will become a work of science. Now our materials are so scanty and so incongruous that any digestion of them, with a view to furnishing materials for the philosophy of History, would only issue in a result resembling some of the projected American cities, with their squares of one angle, and their streets of one house.

Wherever they seemed tolerably necessary we have appended notes; plain and short; as often as possible adopting the author's own words. They are nearly always simply illustrative of the text or of the poet's character or position; critical notes from an Editor (who stands in the same relation to his book as a counsel to his client) being generally an impertinence.

Tunes are usually given with the old English ballads, the custom being to chant them in a kind of monotonous recitative. But most of the ballads in this collection, and the best modern ballads generally, were certainly written to be recited, not sung. The length and structure of the poems, the emphasis and the pauses, are regulated with a view to the elocutionist; not to the minstrel or musician. Wordsworth has expressly said that he desires to have such of his poems as are not essentially lyrical delivered without any accompaniment—in fact, recited. And it may be doubted whether the effect of a narrative poem, however short, and of however simple a metre, is not always most perfectly elicited by an impassioned recitation. A sentiment seems best fitted to be sung, a passion to be declaimed, a narrative to be recited.

For the enjoyment of poetry Elocution should become a more general study. No modern ballad can receive its full development without it; and it is so agreeable and graceful an accomplishment that the neglect of it is not easily understood. Since it has replaced music, as the partner of the ballad, it ought to be found in the Drawing-room and in the family circle, where it has intrinsic merit to take rank with our most intellectual enjoyments. Schoolboys and schoolmasters may have sometimes made it contemptable; but the hurdy-gurdy does not destroy our enjoyment of music, or ranting our respect for the drama.

However, when a ballad was manifestly intended to be sung, we have carefully inserted the air the writer had in view.

In many of the ballads the names of places and persons are used not in their original and correct forms, but in the common English corruptions of them. As Tyrone, for Tir-Eoghan, Hugh, for Aodh. This is a practice so universal that it would be noticeable nowhere but in productions professedly and essentially native. Here it is clearly a serious defect. We originally intended to expunge these gothicisms, and have the original Irish names inserted on the best accessible authority. But we found the change would in many instances injure the metre by deficient or redundant syllables; and sometimes utterly efface the rhyme. These were irresistible objections.

We need not apologise for making this not a party or sectarian, but strictly a national collection. Whatever could illustrate the character, passions, or opinions of any class of Irishmen, that we gladly adopted. Our business is to know each other. To learn how much is mutually to be loved, that we may love it; how much is mutually to be forgiven, that we may forgive it. Everything contributing to this end ought to be regarded as precious. Some of the Ulster ballads, of a restricted and provincial spirit, having less in common with Ireland than with Scotland; two or three Orange ballads, altogether ferocious or foreign in their tendencies, (preaching murder, or deifying an Alien,) will be no less valuable to the patriot or the poet on this account. They echo faithfully the sentiments of a strong, vehement, and indomitable body of Irishmen, who may come to battle for their country better than ever they battled for their prejudices or their bigotries. At all events, to know what they love and believe is a precious knowledge.

Every household in Scotland, from the peasant-farmer's upwards, as Lockhart proudly assures us, has its copy of Burns, lying side by side with the family bible. The young men, nurtured upon this strong food, go forth to contend with the world; and in every kingdom of the earth they are to be found, filling posts of trust and honour, trustfully and honourably. In Germany every boy—student, apprentice, or peasant—learns the ballads of Schiller and Goethe with his first catechism; and from boyhood to old age they furnish a feast that never palls, and a stimulant that grows stronger with use. In the Northern countries the national skalds, recounting the early triumphs of the Sea-kings (in which their encounters with the Irish Princes form a large and to us unspeakably interesting portion) are still sung or circulated habitually as a section of their permanent literature. In Aragon and Castile the chronicles of the Cid, and the ballads of their long and heroic struggles against the Moor, still feed that noble pride of race, which lifts the Spanish people above the meaner vices, and make them in spirit and conduct a nation of gentlemen.

It would be hasty and presumptuous to assume that our native ballads will ever exercise a corresponding influence. But surely it is greatly to be desired that they should. A people without native poetry, are naked to a multitude of evil influences. Not only do they want the true nursing mother of patriotism and virtue, but their first impressions of literature—the impressions that pursue us through life like our shadows—are liable to be caught from a foreign, a prejudiced, or a poisonous source. A source perilous to their public or their personal virtue.

If they should become popular at all, it will probably be in no limited degree. The intense relish of the Celtic race for poetry of action and passion;* and their loving pride in whatever is exclusively their own, give the measure of their possible success. And if such rich seed sink into the national mind, it will certainly be to produce a harvest greatly richer and more plentiful. It is models and method alone we require. Among a race so full of sensibility and impulsiveness, so familiar with endurance, unselfishness and courage; who live amid scenes of natural beauty and heroic recollections, and with whom imagination and invention are gifts so common, poetry is already at home; and a great Peasant-Poet may sooner or later be expected to arise who will give voice and form to sentiments and aspirations which are the common property of the entire people.

* “The Battle of Aughrim,” an historical play, written in the English interest, but with enough of dramatic skill to make the Irish Leaders talk and act naturally is, in lieu of better, a universal favourite with the people. Speeches from it are learned and recited by boys of all classes; but not of all parties; those for which it was written and performed (till its performance was prohibited,) seem to have lost sight of it, or to regard it as a seditious production; the direct reverse being the fact. The author, a student of Trinity College, and a zealous Orangeman, wrote it to glorify English rule in Ireland.

THE
Ballad Poetry of Ireland.

GILLE MACHREE.

BY GERALD GRIFFIN.

Author of "The Collegians," &c.

[Gerald Griffin stands in the first rank of Irish novelists. If the natural bent of his genius had not been crossed by weak counsel and baffled hopes, he might have become our greatest native poet. Poetry was his first inspiration, and he loved it to the last; but it was a passion only, it never became an Art to him. While he was still a boy drifting in his boat on the Shannon, and planning a career of great achievements, he had already designed a series of tragedies, to which it is now certain, his powers were fully adequate. But a life of feverish anxieties, of slavish drudgery for London booksellers and London newspapers, of killing uncertainty and disappointments, aggravated by his own anxious and sensitive nature, left him no leisure, for the development of his great designs. After toiling for ten years he retreated from the world, took refuge in the society of Christian Brothers, and devoted himself to works of morality and education, till a fever fell upon him in 1840, of which he died in the prime of his powers. Since his death one of the tragedies designed in his boyhood, and completed among the tumult of his distracting engagements, was produced on the London stage, and pronounced to be "the greatest drama of our times." His poems have been since collected in a volume, and attained to instant popularity. These are but fragments of his projected works. But they afford sure indications that if it had been his fate to live at home, in peace, honour, and enjoyment, his attainment to the first place among our dramatic poets, was easy and certain.]

*Gille machree, **
Sit down by me,
We now are joined and ne'er shall sever;
This hearth's our own
Our hearts are one
And peace is ours for ever!

* ḡile mo éiríde, brightener of my heart.

When I was poor,
 Your father's door
 Was closed against your constant lover ;
 With care and pain,
 I tried in vain
 My fortunes to recover.
 I said, ' To other lands I'll roam,
 ' Where Fate may smile on me, love ;
 I said, ' Farewell, my own old home !'
 And I said, ' Farewell to thee, love !'
 Sing Gille machree, &c.

I might have said,
 My mountain maid,
 Come live with me, your own true lover ;
 I know a spot,
 A silent cot,
 Your friends can ne'er discover,
 Where gently flows the waveless tide
 By one small garden only ;
 Where the heron waves his wings so wide,
 And the linnet sings so lonely !
 Sing Gille machree, &c.

I might have said,
 My mountain maid,
 A father's right was never given
 True hearts to curse
 With tyrant force
 That have been blest in heaven.
 But then, I said, ' In after years,
 When thoughts of home shall find her !
 My love may mourn with secret tears
 Her friends, thus left behind her.'
 Sing Gille machree, &c.

Oh, no, I said,
 My own dear maid,
 For me, though all forlorn, for ever,
 That heart of thine
 Shall ne'er repine
 O'er slighted duty—never.
 From home and thee though wandering far
 A dreary fate be mine, love;
 I'd rather live in endless war,
 Than buy my peace with thine, love.
 Sing Gille machree, &c.

Far, far away,
 By night and day,
 I toiled to win a golden treasure;
 And golden gains
 Repaid my pains
 In fair and shining measure.
 I sought again my native land,
 Thy father welcomed me, love;
 I poured my gold into his hand,
 And my guerdon found in thee, love;
 Sing Gille machree
 Sit down by me,
 We now are joined, and ne'er shall sever;
 This hearth's our own,
 Our hearts are one,
 And peace is ours for ever.

LAMENT OF THE IRISH EMIGRANT.

BY THE HON. MRS. PRICE BLACKWOOD.

I'm sittin' on the stile, Mary,
 Where we sat side by side
 On a bright May mornin' long ago,
 When first you were my bride :
 The corn was springin' fresh and green,
 And the lark sang loud and high—
 And the red was on your lip, Mary,
 And the love-light in your eye.

The place is little changed, Mary,
 The day is bright as then,
 The lark's loud song is in my ear,
 And the corn is green again ;
 But I miss the soft clasp of your hand,
 And your breath, warm on my cheek,
 And I still keep list'nin' for the words
 You never more will speak.

'Tis but a step down yonder lane,
 And the little church stands near,
 The church where we were wed, Mary,
 I see the spire from here.
 But the grave-yard lies between, Mary,
 And my step might break your rest—
 For I've laid you, darling ! down to sleep
 With your baby on your breast.

I'm very lonely now, Mary,
 For the poor make no new friends,
 But, oh ! they love the better still,
 The few our Father sends !
 And you were all I had, Mary,
 My blessin' and my pride :
 There's nothin' left to care for now,
 Since my poor Mary died.

Your's was the good, brave heart, Mary,
 That still kept hoping on,
 When the trust in God had left my soul.
 And my arm's young strength was gone ;
 There was comfort ever on your lip,
 And the kind look on your brow—
 I bless you, Mary, for that same,
 Though you cannot hear me now.

I thank you for the patient smile
 When your heart was fit to break,
 When the hunger pain was gnawin' there,
 And you hid it, for my sake !
 I bless you for the pleasant word,
 When your heart was sad and sore—
 Oh ! I'm thankful you are gone, Mary,
 Where grief can't reach you more !

I'm biddin' you a long farewell,
 My Mary—kind and true !
 But I'll not forget you, darling !
 In the land I'm goin' to ;
 They say there's bread and work for all,
 And the sun shines always there—
 But I'll not forget old Ireland,
 Were it fifty times as fair !

And often in those grand old woods
 I'll sit, and shut my eyes,
 And my heart will travel back again
 To the place where Mary lies ;
 And I'll think I see the little stile
 Where we sat side by side :
 And the springin' corn, and the bright May morn,
 When first you were my bride.

THE PRETTY GIRL OF LOCH DAN.

BY SAMUEL FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.

Author of "Hibernian Nights' Entertainments," &c.

THE shades of eve had crossed the glen
That frowns o'er infant Avonmore,
When, nigh Loch Dan, two weary men,
We stopped before a cottage door.

"God save all here," my comrade cries,
And rattles on the raised latch-pin ;
"God save you kindly," quick replies
A clear sweet voice, and asks us in.

We enter ; from the wheel she starts,
A rosy girl with soft black eyes ;
Her fluttering court'sy takes our hearts,
Her blushing grace and pleased surprise.

Poor Mary, she was quite alone,
For, all the way to Glenmalure,
Her mother had that morning gone
And left the house in charge with her.

But neither household cares, nor yet
The shame that startled virgins feel,
Could make the generous girl forget
Her wonted hospitable zeal.

She brought us in a beechen bowl,
Sweet milk that smacked of mountain thyme,
Oat cake, and such a yellow roll
Of butter—it gilds all my rhyme !

And, while we ate the grateful food,
 (With weary limbs on bench reclined,)
 Considerate and discreet, she stood
 Apart, and listened to the wind.

Kind wishes both our souls engaged,
 From breast to breast spontaneous ran
 The mutual thought—we stood and pledged
 THE MODEST ROSE ABOVE LOCH DAN.

“The milk we drink is not more pure,
 Sweet Mary—bless those budding charms!
 Than your own generous heart, I’m sure,
 Nor whiter than the breast it warms!”

She turned and gazed, unused to hear
 Such language in that homely glen;
 But, Mary, you have nought to fear,
 Though smiled on by two stranger men.

Not for a crown would I alarm
 Your virgin pride by word or sign;
 Nor need a painful blush disarm
 My friend of thoughts as pure as mine.

Her simple heart could not but feel
 The words we spoke were free from guile;
 She stooped, she blushed—she fixed her wheel,—
 ’Tis all in vain—she can’t but smile!

Just like sweet April’s dawn appears
 Her modest face—I see it yet—
 And though I lived a hundred years
 Methinks I never could forget

The pleasure, that, despite her heart,
 Fills all her downcast eyes with light,
 The lips reluctantly apart,
 The white teeth struggling into sight,

The dimples eddying o'er her cheek,—
 The rosy cheek that won't be still!—
 Oh! who could blame what flatterers speak,
 Did smiles like this reward their skill?

For such another smile, I vow,
 Though loudly beats the midnight rain,
 I'd take the mountain-side e'en now,
 And walk to Luggelaw again!

THE WOMAN OF THREE COWS.

TRANSLATED FROM THE IRISH,

BY JAMES CLARENCE MANGAN,

Author of "German Anthology," &c.

[This ballad, which is of a homely cast, was intended as a rebuke to the saucy pride of a woman in humble life, who assumed airs of consequence from being the possessor of three cows. Its author's name is unknown, but its age can be determined, from the language, as belonging to the early part of the seventeenth century. That it was formerly very popular in Munster, may be concluded from the fact, that the phrase, Easy, oh, woman of the three cows! * has become a saying in that province, on any occasion upon which it is desirable to lower the pretensions of a boastful or consequential person.]

O, WOMAN of Three Cows, agragh! don't let your tongue thus rattle!
 O, don't be saucy, don't be stiff, because you may have cattle.

* 30 meid a bhean ya ttri mbó.

I have seen—and, here's my hand to you, I only say what's true—

A many a one with twice your stock not half so proud as you.

Good luck to you, don't scorn the poor, and don't be their despiser,

For worldly wealth soon melts away, and cheats the very miser,

And Death soon strips the proudest wreath from haughty human brows ;

Then don't be stiff, and don't be proud, good Woman of Three Cows !

See where Momnia's heroes lie, proud Owen More's descendants,

'Tis they that won the glorious name, and had the grand attendants !

If they were forced to bow to Fate, as every mortal bows,
Can you be proud, can you be stiff, my Woman of Three Cows !

The brave sons of the Lord of Clare, they left the land to mourning ;

Mourne !* for they were banished, with no hope of their returning—

Who knows in what abodes of want those youths were driven to house ?

Yet you can give yourself these airs, O, Woman of Three Cows !

O, think of Donnell of the Ships, the Chief whom nothing daunted—

See how he fell in distant Spain, unchronicled, unchanted !

* μηδ ἔρηνη, my grief.

He sleeps, the great O'Sullivan, where thunder cannot rouse—

Then ask yourself, should you be proud, good Woman of Three Cows!

O'Ruark, Maguire, those souls of fire, whose names are shrined in story—

Think how their high achievements once made Erin's greatest glory—

Yet now their bones lie mouldering under weeds and cypress boughs,

And so, for all your pride, will yours, O, Woman of Three Cows!

Th' O'Carrolls also, famed when Fame was only for the boldest,

Rest in forgotten sepulchres with Erin's best and oldest;
Yet who so great as they of yore in battle or carouse?

Just think of that, and hide your head, good Woman of Three Cows!

Your neighbour's poor, and you it seems are big with vain ideas,

Because, *inagh! you've got three cows, one more, I see,
than she has;

That tongue of yours wags more at times than Charity allows,

But, if you're strong, be merciful, great Woman of Three Cows!

THE SUMMING UP.

Now, there you go! You still, of course, keep up your scornful bearing,

And I'm too poor to hinder you; but, by the cloak I'm wearing,

* Forsooth.

If I had but four cows myself, even though you were my spouse,
I'd thwack you well to cure your pride, my Woman of Three Cows!

THE FAIRY CHILD.*

BY DR. ANSTER.

Translator of "Faust," &c.

THE summer sun was sinking
With a mild light, calm and mellow,
It shone on my little boy's bonny cheeks,
And his loose locks of yellow;

The robin was singing sweetly,
And his song was sad and tender;
And my little boy's eyes, while he heard the song,
Smiled with a sweet soft splendour.

My little boy lay on my bosom
While his soul the song was quaffing,
The joy of his soul had tinged his cheek,
And his heart and his eye were laughing.

I sate alone in my cottage,
The midnight needle plying;
I feared for my child, for the rush's light
In the socket now was dying!

There came a hand to my lonely latch,
Like the wind at midnight moaning;

* The woman, in whose character these lines are written, supposes her child stolen by a fairy. I need not mention how prevalent the superstition was among the peasantry, which attributed instances of sudden death to the agency of these spirits.

I knelt to pray, but rose again,
 For I heard my little boy groaning :

I crossed my brow and I crossed my breast,
 But that night my child departed—
 They left a weakling in his stead,
 And I am broken-hearted !

Oh ! it cannot be my own sweet boy,
 For his eyes are dim and hollow,
 My little boy is gone—is gone,
 And his mother soon will follow !

The dirge for the dead will be sung for me,
 And the mass be chanted meetly,
 And I shall sleep with my little boy,
 In the moonlight churchyard sweetly.

SIR TURLOUGH, OR THE CHURCH-YARD BRIDE.

BY WILLIAM CARLETON.

Author of "Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry," &c.

[In the church-yard of Erigle Truagh, in the barony of Truagh, county Monaghan, there is said to be a spirit which appears to persons whose families are there interred. Its appearance, which is generally made in the following manner, is uniformly fatal, being an omen of death to those who are so unhappy as to meet with it. When a funeral takes place, it watches the person who remains last in the grave-yard, over whom it possesses a fascinating influence. If the loiterer be a young man, it takes the shape of a beautiful female, inspires him with a charmed passion, and exacts a promise to meet in the church-yard on a month from that day; this promise is sealed by a kiss, which communicates a deadly taint to the individual who receives it. It then disappears, and no sooner does the young man, quit the church-yard, than he remembers the history of the spectre—which is well known in the parish—sinks into despair, dies, and is buried in the place of appointment on the day when the promise was to have been fulfilled. If, on the contrary, it appears to a female, it assumes the form of a young man of exceeding elegance and beauty.

Some years ago I was shown the grave of a young person about eighteen years of age, who was said to have fallen a victim to it: and it is not more than ten months since a man in the same parish declared that he gave the promise and the fatal kiss, and consequently looked upon himself as lost. He took a fever, died, and was buried on the day appointed for the meeting, which was exactly a month from that of the interview. There are several cases of the same kind mentioned, but the two now alluded to are the only ones that came within my personal knowledge. It appears, however, that the spectre does not confine its operations to the church-yard, as there have been instances mentioned of its appearance at weddings and dances, where it never failed to secure its victims by dancing them into pleuretic fevers. I am unable to say whether this is a strictly local superstition, or whether it is considered peculiar to other church-yards in Ireland, or elsewhere. In its female shape it somewhat resembles the Elle maids of Scandinavia; but I am acquainted with no account of fairies or apparitions in which the sex is said to be changed, except in that of the devil himself. The country people say it is Death.]

THE bride she bound her golden hair—

Killeevy, O Killeevy !

And her step was light as the breezy air
When it bends the morning flowers so fair,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

And oh, but her eyes they danc'd so bright,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !

As she longed for the dawn of to-morrow's light,
Her bridal vows of love to plight,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

The bridegroom is come with youthful brow,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !

To receive from his Eva her virgin vow ;
“ Why tarries the bride of my bosom now ? ”
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

A cry ! a cry !—'twas her maidens spoke,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !

“ Your bride is asleep—she has not awoke ;
And the sleep she sleeps will never be broke, ”
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

Sir Turlough sank down with a heavy moan,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 And his cheek became like the marble stone—
 “ Oh, the pulse of my heart is for ever gone !”
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

The keen * is loud, it comes again,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 And rises sad from the funeral train,
 As in sorrow it winds along the plain,
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

And oh, but the plumes of white were fair,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 When they flutter'd all mournful in the air,

* The Irish cry, or wailing for the dead; properly written Caione, and pronounced as if written keen. Speaking of this practice, which still prevails in many parts of Ireland, the Rev. A. Ross, rector of Dungiven, in his statistical survey of that parish, observes that “ however it may offend the judgment or shock our present refinement, its affecting cadences will continue to find admirers wherever what is truly sad and plaintive can be relished or understood.” It is also thus noticed in the “ Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry”:—

“ I have often, indeed always, felt that there is something exceedingly touching in the Irish cry; in fact, that it breathes the very spirit of wild and natural sorrow. The Irish peasantry, whenever a death takes place, are exceedingly happy in seizing upon any contingent circumstances that may occur, and making them subservient to the excitement of grief for the departed, or the exaltation and praise of his character and virtues. My entrance was a proof of this; for I had scarcely advanced to the middle of the floor, when my intimacy with the deceased, our boyish sports, and even our quarrels, were adverted to with a natural eloquence and pathos, that, in spite of my firmness, occasioned me to feel the prevailing sorrow. They spoke, or chanted mournfully, in Irish: but the substance of what they said was as follows:—‘ Oh, mavourneen! you’re lying low this mornin’ of sorrow! lying low are you, and does not know who it is (alluding to me) that is standin’ over you, weepin’ for the days you spent together in your youth! It’s yourself, acushla agus asthore machree, (the pulse and beloved of my heart) that would stretch out the right hand warmly to welcome him to the place of his birth, where you had both been so often happy about the green hills and valleys with each other!’ They then passed on to an enumeration of his virtues as a father, a husband, son, and brother—specified his worth as he stood related to society in general, and his kindness as a neighbour and a friend.”

As rose the hymn of the requiem prayer, *
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

There is a voice that but one can hear,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
And it softly pours, from behind the bie-
Its note of death on Sir Turlough's ear,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

The keen is loud, but that voice is low,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
And it sings its song of sorrow slow,
And names young Turlough's name with woe,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

Now the grave is closed, and the mass is said,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
And the bride she sleeps in her lonely bed,
The fairest corpse among the dead, †
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

The wreaths of virgin-white are laid,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
By virgin hands, o'er the spotless maid ;
And the flowers are strewn, but they soon will fade
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

" Oh ! go not yet—not yet away,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
Let us feel that life is near our clay,"
The long-departed seem to say,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

* It is usual in the North of Ireland to celebrate mass for the dead in some green field between the house in which the deceased lived and the grave-yard. For this the shelter of a grove is usually selected, and the appearance of the ceremony is highly picturesque and solemn.

† Another expression peculiarly Irish, "What a purty corpse!"—"How well she becomes death!" "You wouldn't meet a purtier corpse of a summer's day!" "She bears the change well!" are all phrases quite common in cases of death among the peasantry.

But the tramp and the voices of life are gone,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
And beneath each cold forgotten stone,
The mouldering dead sleep all alone,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

But who is he who lingereth yet ?
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
The fresh green sod with his tears is wet,
And his heart in the bridal grave is set,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

Oh, who but Sir Turlough, the young and brave,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
Should bend him o'er that bridal grave,
And to his death-bound Eva rave,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

“ Weep not—weep not,” said a lady fair,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
“ Should youth and valour thus despair,
And pour their vows to the empty air ?”
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

There's charmed music upon her tongue,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
Such beauty—bright and warm and young—
Was never seen the maids among,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

A laughing light, a tender grace,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
Sparkled in beauty around her face,
That grief from mortal heart might chase,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

“The maid for whom thy salt tears fall,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
Thy grief or love can ne'er recal ;
She rests beneath that grassy pall,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

“My heart it strangely cleaves to thee,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
And now that thy plighted love is free,
Give its unbroken pledge to me,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.”

The charm is strong upon Turlough's eye,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
His faithless tears are already dry,
And his yielding heart has ceased to sigh,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

“To thee,” the charmed chief replied,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
“I pledge that love o'er my buried bride ;
Oh ! come, and in Turlough's hall abide,”
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

Again the funeral voice came o'er
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
The passing breeze, as it wailed before,
And streams of mournful music bore,
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

“If I to thy youthful heart am dear,
Killeevy, O Killeevy !
One month from hence thou wilt meet me here.
Where lay thy bridal, Eva's bier,”
By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

He pressed her lips as the words were spoken,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 And his banshee's * wail—now far and broken—
 Murmur'd "Death," as he gave the token,
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy ;

"Adieu ! adieu !" said this lady bright,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 And she slowly passed like a thing of light,
 Or a morning cloud, from Sir Turlough's sight,
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

Now Sir Turlough has death in every vein,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 And there's fear and grief o'er his wide domain,
 And gold for those who will calm his brain,
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

"Come, haste thee, leech, right swiftly ride,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 Sir Turlough the brave, Green Truagha's pride,
 Has pledged his love to the church-yard bride,"
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

The leech groaned loud, "come tell me this,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 By all thy hopes of weal and bliss,
 Has Sir Turlough given the fatal kiss ?"
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

* bean n  e, woman of the hill.

Treating of the superstitions of the Irish, Miss Balfour says, "What rank the banshee holds in the scale of spiritual beings, it is not easy to determine; but her favourite occupation seems to be that of foretelling the death of the different branches of the families over which she presided, by the most plaintive cries. Every family had formerly its banshee, but the belief in her existence is now fast fading away, and in a few more years she will only be remembered in the storied records of her marvellous doings in days long since gone by."

“The banshee’s cry is loud and long,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 At eve she weeps her funeral song,
 And it floats on the twilight breeze along,”
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

“Then the fatal kiss is given ;—the last
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 Of Turlough’s race and name is past,
 His doom is seal’d, his die is cast,”
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

“Leech, say not that thy skill is vain ;
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 Oh, calm the power of his frenzied brain,
 And half his lands thou shalt retain,”
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

The leech has failed, and the hoary priest
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 With pious shrift his soul releas’d,
 And the smoke is high of his funeral feast,
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

The shanachies now are assembled all,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 And the songs of praise, in Sir Turlough’s hall,
 To the sorrowing harp’s dark music fall,
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

And there is trophy, banner, and plume,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy !
 And the pomp of death, with its darkest gloom,
 O’ershadows the Irish chieftain’s tomb,
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

The month is clos'd, and Green Truagha's pride,
 Killeevy, O Killeevy!
 Is married to death—and, side by side,
 He slumbers now with his church-yard bride,
 By the bonnie green woods of Killeevy.

SOGGARTH AROON.

BY JOHN BANIM.

Author of "Tales of the O'Hara Family," &c.

AIR—"Aileen aroon."

[In 1831 John Banim, then in the flower of his reputation, after the success of the O'Hara Tales, the Boyne Water, and his tragedy of Damon and Pythias, published a small volume of national ballads and songs which seem to have attracted literally no attention at the time, and very little since. Only one of the ballads, Soggarth Aroon, ever emerged from obscurity. Yet the volume contained songs which for fidelity of sentiment and expression to the Irish character, in some of its vehement moods, have no equals. But, it contained also pieces so utterly worthless, that it is difficult to account for their publication by a man of sane judgment. To them, no doubt, was owing the utter failure of the volume. Banim's verses are often loose and careless in metre, and rude in construction, but they abound in natural feeling and natural strength. They are not only of the people but essentially for the people. Hence they are by far the best peasant songs we possess, and would move a Wake or a Fair as vehemently as a drawing-room.]

AM I the slave they say,
 Soggarth aroon? *
 Since you did show the way,
 Soggarth aroon,
 Their slave no more to be,
 While they would work with me
 Ould Ireland's slavery,
 Soggarth aroon?
 Why not her poorest man,
 Soggarth aroon,

* S4341T 41úh, Priest dear.

Try and do all he can,
Soggarth aroon,
Her commands to fulfil
Of his own heart and will,
Side by side with you still,
Soggarth aroon ?

Loyal and brave to you,
Soggarth aroon,
Yet be no slave to you,
Soggarth aroon,—
Nor, out of fear to you,
Stand up so near to you—
Och ! out of fear to you !
Soggarth aroon !

Who, in the winter's night,
Soggarth aroon,
When the cold blast did bite,
Soggarth aroon,
Came to my cabin-door,
And, on my earthen-flure,
Knelt by me, sick and poor,
Soggarth aroon ?

Who, on the marriage-day,
Soggarth aroon,
Made the poor cabin gay,
Soggarth aroon—
And did both laugh and sing,
Making our hearts to ring,
At the poor christening,
Soggarth aroon ?

Who, as friend only met,
Soggarth aroon,

Never did flout me yet,
 Soggarth aroon ?
 And when my hearth was dim.
 Gave, while his eye did brim,
 What I should give to him,
 Soggarth aroon ?
 Och ! you, and only you,
 Soggarth aroon !
 And for this I was true to you,
 Soggarth aroon ;
In love they'll never shake,
 When for ould Ireland's sake,
 We a true part did take,
 Soggarth aroon !

THE LORD OF DUNKERRON.

BY T. CROFTON CROKER.

Author of "Fairy Legends of Ireland."

THE Lord of Dunkerron*—O'Sullivan More,
 Why seeks he at midnight the sea-beaten shore ?
 His bark lies in haven, his hounds are asleep ;
 No foes are abroad on the land or the deep.

Yet nightly the Lord of Dunkerron is known
 On the wild shore to watch and to wander alone ;
 For a beautiful spirit of ocean, 'tis said,
 The Lord of Dunkerron would win to his bed.

When, by moonlight, the waters were hush'd to repose,
 That beautiful spirit of ocean arose ;

* The remains of Dunkerron Castle are distant about a mile from the village of Kenmare, in the county of Kerry. It is recorded to have been built in 1596, by Owen O'Sullivan More (More is merely an epithet signifying the Great).

Her hair, full of lustre, just floated and fell
O'er her bosom, that heav'd with a billowy swell.

Long, long had he lov'd her—long vainly essay'd
To lure from her dwelling the coy ocean maid ;
And long had he wander'd and watch'd by the tide,
To claim the fair spirit O'Sullivan's bride !

The maiden she gazed on the creature of earth,
Whose voice in her breast to a feeling gave birth ;
Then smiled ; and, abashed as a maiden might be,
Looking down, gently sank to her home in the sea.

Though gentle that smile, as the moonlight above,
O'Sullivan felt 'twas the dawning of love ;
And hope came on hope, spreading over his mind,
Like the eddy of circles her wake left behind.

The Lord of Dunkerron he plunged in the waves,
And sought through the fierce rush of waters, their caves ;
The gloom of whose depth studded over with spars,
Had the glitter of midnight when lit up by stars.

Who can tell or can fancy the treasures that sleep
Entombed in the wonderful womb of the deep ?
The pearls and the gems, as if valueless, thrown
To lie 'mid the sea-wrack concealed and unknown.

Down, down went the maid—still the chieftain pursued ;
Who flies must be followed ere she can be wooed.
Untempted by treasures, unawed by alarms,
The maiden at length he has clasped in his arms !

They rose from the deep by a smooth-spreading strand,
Whence beauty and verdure stretch'd over the land.
'Twas an isle of enchantment ! and lightly the breeze,
With a musical murmur, just crept through the trees.

The haze-woven shroud of that newly born isle,
Softly faded away, from a magical pile,
A palace of crystal, whose bright-beaming sheen
Had the tints of the rainbow—red, yellow, and green.

And grottoes, fantastic in hue and in form,
Were there, as flung up—the wild sport of the storm ;
Yet all was so cloudless, so lovely, and calm,
It seemed but a region of sunshine and balm.

“ Here, here shall we dwell in a dream of delight,
Where the glories of earth and of ocean unite !
Yet, loved son of earth ! I must from thee away ;
There are laws which e'en spirits are bound to obey !

“ On _____ must I visit the chief of my race,
His side _____ to gain ere I meet thy embrace.
In a _____ at I dive to the chambers beneath :
One cause can detain me—one only—'tis death !”

They parted in sorrow, with vows true and fond ;
The language of promise had nothing beyond.
His soul all on fire, with anxiety burns :
The moment is gone—but no maiden returns.

What sounds from the deep meet his terrified ear—
What accents of rage and of grief does he hear ?
What sees he ? what change has come over the flood—
What tinges its green with a jetty of blood ?

Can he doubt what the gush of warm blood would explain ?

That she sought the consent of her monarch in vain !
For see all around him, in white foam and froth,
The waves of the ocean boil up in their wrath !

The palace of crystal has melted in air,
 And the dies of the rainbow no longer are there ;
 The grottoes with vapour and clouds are o'ercast,
 The sunshine is darkness—the vision has past !

Loud, loud was the call of his serfs for their chief ;
 They sought him with accents of wailing and grief :
 He heard, and he struggled—a wave to the shore,
 Exhausted and faint bears O'Sullivan More !

THE IRISH EMIGRANT IN NORTH AMERICA.

AIR—“ The Woods of Kylinoe.”

My heart is heavy in my breast—my eyes are full of tears,
 My memory is wandering back to long departed years—
 To those bright days long, long ago,
 When nought I dreamed of sordid care, of worldly woe—
 But roved, a gay, light-hearted boy, the woods of Kylinoe.

There, in the spring time of my life, and spring time of the year,
 I've watched the snow-drop start from earth, the first young buds appear ;
 The sparkling stream o'er pebbles flow,
 The modest violet, and the golden primrose blow,
 Within thy deep and mossy dells, beloved Kylinoe !

'Twas there I wooed my Mary Dhuv, and won her for my bride,
 Who bore me three fair daughters, and four sons, my age's pride ;

Though cruel fortune was our foe,
And steeped us to the lips in bitter want and woe,
Yet cling our hearts to those sad days, we passed near Kylinee !

At length by misery bowed to earth, we left our native
strand—

And crossed the wide Atlantic to this free and happy
land ;

Though toils we had to undergo,
Yet soon content—and happy peace 'twas ours to know,
And plenty, such as never blessed our hearth near Kylinee !

And heaven a blessing has bestowed, more precious far than wealth,

Has spared us to each other, full of years, yet strong in health :

Across the threshold when we go,
We see our children's children round us grow,
Like sapling oaks within thy woods, far distant Kylinee.

Yet sadness clouds our hearts to think that when we are no more,

Our bones must find a resting place, far, far from Erin's shore,

For us—no funeral sad and slow—
Within the ancient abbey's burial ground shall go—
No, we must slumber far from home, far, far from Kylinee !

Yet, oh ! if spirits e'er can leave the appointed place of rest,
Once more will I revisit thee, dear Isle that I love best,
O'er thy green vales will hover slow,
And many a tearful parting blessing will bestow
On all—but most of all on thee, my native Kylinee !

MARGRÉAD NI CHEALLEADH.

BY EDWARD WALSH.

Translator of "Daly's Jacobite Relics of Ireland."

[This ballad is founded on the story of Daniel O'Keeffe, an Outlaw, famous in the traditions of the County of Cork, where his name is still associated with several localities. It is related that O'Keeffe's beautiful mistress, Margaret Kelly, (Mairgréad ni Chealleadh,) tempted by a large reward undertook to deliver him into the hands of the English soldiers; but O'Keeffe having discovered in her possession a document revealing her perfidy, in a frenzy of indignation stabbed her to the heart with his skian. He lived in the time of William III. and is represented to have been a gentleman and a poet.]

AT the dance in the village
 Thy white foot was fleetest;
 Thy voice mid the concert
 Of maidens was sweetest;
 The swell of thy white breast
 Made rich lovers follow;
 And thy raven hair bound them,
 Young Mairgréad ni Chealleadh.

Thy neck was, lost maid!
 Than the *ceanabhan whiter;
 And the glow of thy cheek
 Than the monadan† brighter:
 But Death's chain hath bound thee,
 Thine eye's glazed and hollow
 That shone like a Sun-burst,
 Young Mairgréad ni Chealleadh.

No more shall mine ear drink
 Thy melody swelling;
 Nor thy beamy eye brighten
 The outlaw's dark dwelling;

* A plant found in bogs, the top of which bears a substance resembling cotton, and as white as snow.

† The monadan is a red berry that is found on wild marshy mountains. It grows on an humble creeping plant.

Or thy soft heaving bosom
 My destiny hallow,
 When thine arms twine around me,
 Young Mairgréad ni Chealleadh.

The moss couch I brought thee
 To-day from the mountain,
 Has drank the last drop
 Of thy young heart's red fountain,
 For this good *skian beside me
 Struck deep and rung hollow
 In thy bosom of treason,
 Young Mairgréad ni Chealleadh.

With strings of rich pearls
 Thy white neck was laden,
 And thy fingers with spoils
 Of the Sassanach maiden :
 Such rich silks enrob'd not
 The proud dames of Mallow—
 Such pure gold they wore not
 As Mairgréad ni Chealleadh.

Alas! that my loved one
 Her outlaw would injure—
 Alas! that he e'er proved
 Her treason's avenger!
 That this right hand should make thee
 A bed cold and hollow,
 When in Death's sleep it laid thee,
 Young Mairgréad ni Chealleadh!

And while to this lone cave
 My deep grief I'm venting,
 The Saxon's keen bandog
 My footsteps is scenting :

* SCIAN, a knife, pronounced as if written skeen.

But true men await me
 Afar in Duhallow.
 Farewell, cave of slaughter,
 And Mairgréad ni Chealleadh.

THE FORESTER'S COMPLAINT.

BY SAMUEL FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.
 THROUGH our wild wood-walks here,
 Sunbright and shady,
 Free as the forest deer
 Roams a lone lady :
 Far from her castle keep,
 Down i' the valley,
 Roams she, by dingle deep,
 Green holme and alley,
 With her sweet presence bright
 Gladd'ning my dwelling—
 Oh, fair her face of light,
 Past the tongue's telling !
 Woe was me
 E'er to see
 Beauty so shining ;
 Ever since, hourly,
 Have I been pining !

In our blithe sports' debates
 Down by the river,
 I, of my merry mates,
 Foremost was ever ;
 Skilfullest with my flute,
 Leading the maidens
 Hearn'ing by moonlight mute,
 To its sweet cadence :

Sprightliest i' the dance
 Tripping together—
 Such a one was I once
 E'er she came hither !
 Woe was me
 E'er to see
 Beauty so shining ;
 Ever since, hourly,
 Have I been pining !

Loud now my comrades laugh
 As I pass by them ;
 Broadsword and quarter-staff
 No more I ply them :
 Coy now the maidens frown
 Wanting their dances ;
 How can their faces brown
 Win one, who fancies
 Even an angel's face
 Dark to be seen would
 Be, by the Lily-grace
 Gladd'ning the greenwood !
 Woe was me
 E'er to see
 Beauty so shining,
 Ever since, hourly,
 Have I been pining !

Wolf, by my broken bow
 Idle is lying,
 While through the woods I go,
 All the day, sighing,
 Tracing her footsteps small
 Through the moss'd cover,
 Hiding then, breathless all,
 At the sight of her,

Lest my rude gazing should
 From her haunt scare her—
 Oh, what a solitude
 Wanting her, here were!
 Woe was me
 E'er to see
 Beauty so shining;
 Ever since, hourly,
 Have I been pining!

THE FAIRY BOY.*

BY SAMUEL LOVER.

Author of "Legends and Stories of Ireland," &c.

A MOTHER came when stars were paling,
 Wailing round a lonely spring;
 Thus she cried while tears were falling,
 Calling on the Fairy King:

“Why with spells my child caressing,
 Courting him with fairy joy;
 Why destroy a mother's blessing,
 Wherefore steal my baby boy?

“O'er the mountain, through the wild wood,
 Where his childhood loved to play;
 Where the flowers are freshly springing,
 There I wander, day by day.

“There I wander, growing fonder
 Of the child that made my joy;
 On the echoes wildly calling,
 To restore my fairy boy.

* When a beautiful child pines and dies, the Irish peasant believes the healthy infant has been stolen by the fairies, and a sickly elf left in its place. See Dr. Anster's ballad, page 59.

“But in vain my plaintive calling,
Tears are falling all in vain ;
He now sports with fairy pleasure,
He’s the treasure of their train !

“Fare thee well, my child, for ever,
In this world I’ve lost my joy,
But in the next we ne’er shall sever,
There I’ll find my angel boy !”

WAKE OF WILLIAM ORR.

BY DR. DRENNAN.

[The case of William Orr involves one of the most ruthless acts of tyranny that preceded the insurrection of 1798. Orr who was a young Presbyterian farmer of Antrim, and a man of great personal popularity, was tried and convicted in October '97 of administering the United Irish oath to a private soldier, named Whitly. But, on the same day, four of his jury made affidavits stating that whiskey had been introduced into the jury room, and the verdict agreed to under the joint influence of drunkenness and intimidation. Next day Whitly, the crown witness, confessed that his evidence was false or distorted in essential particulars. Under these strange circumstances Orr was re-rieved by government ; and the re-rief twice renewed. But, ultimately, when the nation confidently awaited the commutation of his sentence, he was ordered for execution. A storm of indignation followed this arbitrary and merciless decision. The most moderate men were outraged by its injustice; the most timid were stung to resistance by its naked tyranny. Orr died with unshaken courage, exhorting his countrymen “to be true and faithful to each other as he had been true to them.” His fortitude increased popular enthusiasm to a passion. He was universally regarded as a martyr to Liberty; and “Remember Orr!” became the most popular and stimulating watch-word of the national party. His death was celebrated in innumerable elegies, of which these noble and affecting verses are the best.]

HERE our murdered brother lies ;
Wake him not with women’s cries :
Mourn the way that manhood ought ;
Sit in silent trance of thought.

Write his merits on your mind ;
 Morals pure and manners kind ;
 In his head as on a hill,
 Virtue plac'd her citadel.

Why cut off in palmy youth ?
 Truth he spoke, and acted truth.
 Countrymen UNITE, he cry'd,
 And died—for what his Saviour died.

God of Peace, and God of Love,
 Let it not thy vengeance move,
 Let it not thy lightnings draw ;
 A Nation guillotин'd by law.

Hapless Nation ! rent, and torn,
 Thou wert early taught to mourn,
 Warfare of six hundred years !
 Epochs marked with blood and tears !

Hunted thro' thy native grounds,
 Or flung reward to human hounds ;
 Each one pull'd and tore his share,
 Heedless of thy deep despair.

Hapless Nation—hapless Land,
 Heap of uncementing sand !
 Crumbled by a foreign weight ;
 And by worse, domestic hate.

God of mercy ! God of peace !
 Make the mad confusion cease ;
 O'er the mental chaos move,
 Through it SPEAK the light of love.

Monstrous and unhappy sight !
 Brothers' blood will not unite ;
 Holy oil and holy water,
 Mix, and fill the world with slaughter.

Who is she with aspect wild ?
 The widow'd mother with her child,
 Child new stirring in the womb !
 Husband waiting for the tomb !

Angel of this sacred place
 Calm her soul and whisper peace,
 Cord, or axe, or Guillotin'
 Make the sentence—not the sin.

Here we watch our brother's sleep ;
 Watch with us, but do not weep ;
 Watch with us thro' dead of night,
 But expect the morning light.

Conquer fortune—persevere !—
 Lo ! it breaks, the morning clear !
 The cheerful cock awakes the skies,
 The day is come—arise !—arise !

[Dr. Drennan, the author of this ballad, was one of the ablest writers among the United Irishmen. His Letters of Orellana contributed powerfully to enlist Ulster in "the Union." His songs and ballads, which were chiefly directed to the same object, are vigorous and graceful beyond any political poetry of the period. His song commencing "When Erin first rose from the dark swelling flood," which fixed upon Ireland the title of "the Emerald Isle," Moore esteems among the most perfect of modern songs. A little volume of his poems was published in 1815, but is now very scarce. In 1794 he was brought to trial for his political principles; but then or throughout a long and honoured life he never abandoned them.]

OLIVER'S ADVICE.

AN ORANGE BALLAD,

BY COLONEL BLACKER.

THE night is gathering gloomily, the day is closing fast—
 The tempest flaps his raven wings in loud and angry blast ;
 The thunder clouds are driving athwart the lurid sky—
 But, “put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your powder dry.”*

There was a day when loyalty was hail'd with honour due,
 Our banner the protection wav'd to all the good and true—
 And gallant hearts beneath its folds were link'd in honour's tie,
 We put our trust in God, my boys, and kept our powder
 dry.

When Treason bar'd her bloody arm, and madden'd round the land,
 For king, and laws, and order fair, we drew the ready
 brand ;
 Our gathering spell was William's name—our word was,
 “do or die,”
 And still we put our trust in God, and kept our powder
 dry.

But now, alas! a wondrous change has come the nation
 o'er,
 And worth and gallant services remember'd are no more,

* There is a well-authenticated anecdote of Cromwell. On a certain occasion, when his troops were about crossing a river to attack the enemy, he concluded an address, couched in the usual fanatic terms in use among them, with these words—“put your trust in God; but mind to keep your powder dry.”

And, crush'd beneath oppression's weight, in chains of grief we lie—
But put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your
powder dry.

Forth starts the spawn of Treason, the 'scap'd of ninety-
eight,
'To bask in courtly favour, and seize the helm of state—
E'en they whose hands are reeking yet with murder's crimson dye—
But put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your
powder dry.

They come, whose deeds incarnadin'd the Slaney's silver wave—
They come, who to the foreign foe the hail of welcome gave ;
He comes, the open rebel fierce—he comes the Jesuit sly ;
But put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your
powder dry.

They come, whose counsels wrapp'd the land in foul rebellious flame,
Their hearts unchastened by remorse, their cheeks un-ting'd by shame.
Be still, be still, indignant heart—be tearless, too, each eye,
And put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your powder dry.

The Pow'r that led his chosen, by pillar'd cloud and flame,
Through parted sea and desert waste, that Pow'r is still the same.

He fails not—He, the loyal hearts that firm on him rely—
So put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your powder dry.

The Pow'r that nerv'd the stalwart arms of Gideon's chosen few,

The Pow'r that led great William, Boyne's reddening torrent through.—

In his protecting aid confide, and every foe defy—

Then put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your
powder dry.

Already see the star of hope emits its orient blaze,
The cheering beacon of relief it glimmers thro' the haze.
It tells of better days to come, it tells of succour nigh,
Then put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your
powder dry.

See, see along the hills of Down its rising glories spread,
But brightest beams its radiance from Donard's lofty head.*

Clanbrassil's vales are kindling wide, and "Roden" is the cry—

Then put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your powder dry.

Then cheer ye hearts of loyalty, nor sink in dark despair
Our banner shall again unfold its glories to the air.
The storm that raves the wildest, the soonest passes by ;
Then put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your
powder dry.

For "happy homes," for "altars free," we grasp the ready sword,

For freedom, truth, and for our God's unmutilated word.

* Lord Roden resides at the base of Sleive Donard.

These, these the war-cry of our march, our hope the Lord on high ;
 Then put your trust in God my boys, and keep your powder dry.

1834.

THE RECONCILIATION.

BY JOHN BANIM.

[The facts of this ballad occurred in a little mountain-chapel, in the county of Clare, at the time efforts were made to put an end to faction-fighting among the peasantry.]

THE old man he knelt at the altar,
 His enemy's hand to take,
 And at first his weak voice did falter,
 And his feeble limbs did shake ;
 For his only brave boy, his glory,
 Had been stretch'd at the old man's feet,
 A corpse, all so haggard and gory,
 By the hand which he now must greet.

And soon the old man stopt speaking,
 And rage which had not gone by,
 From under his brows came breaking
 Up into his enemy's eye—
 And now his limbs were not shaking,
 But his clench'd hands his bosom cross'd,
 And he look'd a fierce wish to be taking
 Revenge for the boy he lost !

But the old man he looked around him,
 And thought of the place he was in,
 And thought of the promise which bound him,
 And thought that revenge was sin—

And then, crying tears, like a woman,
 “Your hand!” he said—“aye, that hand!
 And I do forgive you, foeman,
 For the sake of our bleeding land!”

THE POOR MAN'S LABOUR.

BY THE RIGHT HON. JOHN PHILPOT CURRAN.

[Curran so great a master of poetry in prose, was an indifferent versifier. Like Edmund Burke he would speak a poem but scarcely write one. His failure, however, was not like Burke's, absolute and unqualified; but only a failure relatively to his unrivalled success as an orator. His song of “the Deserter” has always been popular, and suggested one of Byron's most touching minor poems. His other verses are perhaps little known; but they may be studied, as marked and characteristic developments of his mind. They took the same direction as his gravest labours and are equally fired with his master passion, the love of Ireland.]

My mother sighed, the stream of pain
 Flowed fast and chilly o'er her brow;
 My father prayed, nor prayed in vain;
 Sweet Mercy, cast a glance below.
 “My husband dear,” the sufferer cried,
 “My pains are o'er, behold your son.”
 “Thank heaven, sweet partner,” he replied,
 “The poor boy's labour's then begun.”

Alas! the hapless life she gave,
 By fate was doomed to cost her own;
 For, soon she found an early grave,
 Nor stayed her partner long alone.
 They left their orphan here below,
 A stranger wild beneath the sun;
 This lesson sad to learn from woe,
 The poor man's labour's never done.

No parent's hand, with pious care,
 My childhood's devious steps to guide;
 Or bid my venturous youth beware
 The griefs that smote on ev'ry side.
 'Twas still a round of changing woe
 Woe never ending, still begun,
 That taught my bleeding heart to know
 The poor man's labour's never done.

Soon dies the faltering voice of fame;
 The vow of love's too warm to last;
 And friendship! what a faithless dream;
 And wealth! how soon thy glare is past.
 But sure one hope remains to save,
 The longest course must soon be run;
 And, in the shelter of the grave,
 The poor man's labour must be done.

THE EMIGRANT MOTHER.

Your eyes have the twin stars' light, ma croidhe
Mo cuisle Inghean ban ; *
 And your swan-like neck is dear to me,
Mo caillin og alain :
 And dear is your fairy foot so light,
 And your dazzling milk-white hand,
 And your hair! it's a thread of the golden light
 That was spun in the rainbow's band.

Oh! green be the fields of my native shore,
 Where you bloom like a young rose-tree;
Mo varia astore—we meet no more!
 But the pulse of my heart's with thee.

* My pulse, my white daughter.

No more may your voice with its silver sound,
 Come like music in a dream !
 Or your heart's sweet laugh ring merrily round,
 Like the gush of the summer's stream.

Oh! mo varia, the stately halls are high
 Where Erin's splendours shine !
 Yet their harps shall swell to the wailing cry
 That my heart sends forth to thine.
 For an exile's heart is a fountain deep,
 Far hid from the gladsome sun—
 Where the bosom's yearning ne'er may sleep ;
Mo thruaidh ! mo chreach ! och on !

KATHALEEN NY-HOULAHAN.

A JACOBITE RELIC—TRANSLATED FROM THE IRISH,

BY JAMES CLARENCE MANGAN.

LONG they pine in weary woe, the nobles of our land, Long they wander to and fro, proscribed, alas ! and banned ;
 Feastless, houseless, altarless, they bear the exile's brand ;
 But their hope is in the coming-to of Kathaleen
 Ny-Houlahan !

Think her not a ghastly hag, too hideous to be seen,
 Call her not unseemly names, our matchless Kathaleen ;
 Young she is, and fair she is, and would be crowned a
 queen,
 Were the king's son at home here with Kathaleen
 Ny-Houlahan !

* My pity ! my plunder ! och one.

Sweet and mild would look her face, O none so sweet and mild,

Could she crush the foes by whom her beauty is reviled;
Woollen plaids would grace herself and robes of silk her child,

If the king's son were living here with Kathaleen
Ny-Houlahan!

Sore disgrace it is to see the Arbitress of thrones,
Vassal to a Saxoneen of cold and sapless bones!

Bitter anguish wrings our souls—with heavy sighs and groans

We wait the Young Deliverer of Kathaleen Ny-Houlahan!

Let us pray to Him who holds Life's issues in His hands—
Him who formed the mighty globe, with all its thousand lands;

Girdling them with seas and mountains, rivers deep, and strands,

To cast a look of pity upon Kathaleen Ny-Hou-lahan!

He, who over sands and waves led Israë! along—

He, who fed, with heavenly bread, that chosen tribe and throng—

He, who stood by Moses, when his foes were fierce and strong—

May He show forth His might in saving Kathaleen Ny-Houlahan!*

RORY O'MOORE.

AN ULSTER BALLAD.

BY DR. DRENNAN.

[Roger, or Rory O'Moore, is one of the most honoured and stainless names in Irish History. Writers, who concur in nothing else, agree in representing him as a man of the loftiest motives and the most passionate patriotism. In 1640, when Ireland was weakened by defeat and confiscation, and guarded with a jealous care constantly increasing in strictness and severity, O'Moore, then a private gentleman with no resources beyond his intellect and his courage, conceived the vast design of rescuing her from England; and accomplished it. In three years England did not retain a city in the island but Dublin and Drogheda. For eight years her power was barely nominal; the land was possessed and the supreme authority exercised by the Confederation created by O'Moore. History contains no stricter instance of the influence of an individual mind. Before the insurrection broke out, the people had learned to know and expect their Deliverer, and it became a popular proverb and the burden of national songs, that the hope of Ireland was in "God, the Virgin, and Rory O'Moore." It is remarkable, that O'Moore, in whose courage and resources this great insurrection had its birth, was a descendant of the chieftains of Leix, massacred by English troops at Mullaghmast, a century before. But if he took a great revenge, it was a magnanimous one; none of the excesses which stained the first rising in Ulster are charged upon him. On the contrary, when he joined the Northern Army, the excesses ceased and strict discipline was established, as far as it was possible, among men unaccustomed to control, and wild with wrongs and sufferings.]

ON the green hills of Ulster the white cross waves high,
 And the beacon of war throws its flames to the sky;
 Now the taunt and the threat let the coward endure,
 Our hope is in God and in Rory O'Moore!

Do you ask why the beacon and banner of war
 On the mountains of Ulster are seen from afar?
 'Tis the signal our rights to regain and secure,
 Through God and our Lady and Rory O'Moore.

For the merciless Scots, with their creed and their swords,
 With war in their bosoms, and peace in their words,
 Have sworn the bright light of our faith to obscure,
 But our hope is in God and in Rory O'Moore.

Oh! lives there the traitor who'd shrink from the strife—
 Who, to add to the length of a forfeited life,
 His country, his kindred, his faith would abjure?—
 No! we'll strike for our God and for Rory O'Moore!

UNA PHELIMY.

AN ULSTER BALLAD, A. D. 1641.

BY SAMUEL FERGUSON, M. R. I. A.

[This ballad was intended to illustrate the same period in Irish History as the last, but the author looks at it from a different, and more unfavourable point of view. Together, they furnish another evidence of how infallibly truth sooner or later comes to be recognized.—Two Northern Protestants, writing of a civil war, where the strife lay between their ancestors and the plundered Catholics (fighting for their lands and their lives,) one of them vehemently sympathises with the Insurgents, the other speaks bitterly to be sure, but not uncharitably of the contest.]

“AWAKEN, Una Phelimy,
 “How canst thou slumber so?
 “How canst thou dream so quietly
 “Through such a night of woe?
 “Through such a night of woe,” he said,
 “How canst thou dreaming lie,
 “When the kindred of thy love lie dead,
 “And he must fall or fly?”

She rose and to the casement came;
 “Oh, William dear, speak low;
 “For I should bear my brothers' blame
 “Did Hugh or Angus know.”
 “Did Hugh or Angus know, Una?
 “Ah, little dreamest thou
 “On what a bloody errand bent
 “Are Hugh and Angus now.”

- “ Oh, what has chanced my brothers dear ?
“ My William, tell me true !
“ Our God forbode that what I fear
“ Be that they're gone to do !”
“ They're gone on bloody work, Una,
“ The worst we feared is done ;
“ They've taken to the knife at last,
“ The massacre's begun !
- “ They came upon us while we slept “ Fast by the sedgy Bann ;
“ In darkness to our beds they crept,
“ And left me not a man !
“ Bann rolls my comrades even now
“ Through all his pools and fords ;
“ And their hearts' best blood is warm, Una,
“ Upon thy brothers' swords !
- “ And mine had borne them company,
“ Or the good blade I wore,
“ Which ne'er left foe in victory
“ Or friend in need before ;
“ In their's as in their fellows' hearts
“ Also had dimmed its shine,
“ But for these tangling curls, Una,
“ And witching eyes of thine !
- “ I've borne the brand of flight for these,
“ For these, the scornful cries
“ Of loud insulting enemies ;
“ But busk thee, love, and rise :
“ For Ireland's now no place for us ;
“ 'Tis time to take our flight,
“ When neighbour steals on neighbour thus,
“ And stabbers strike by night.

" And black and bloody the revenge
 " For this dark midnight's sake,
 " The kindred of my murdered friends
 " On thine and thee will take,
 " Unless thou rise and fly betimes,
 " Unless thou fly with me,
 " Sweet Una, from this land of crimes
 " To peace beyond the sea.

" For trustful pillows wait us there,
 " And loyal friends beside,
 " Where the broad lands of my father are,
 " Upon the banks of Clyde;
 " In five days hence a ship will be
 " Bound for that happy home :
 " Till then we'll make our sanctuary
 " In sea-cave's sparry dome :
 " Then busk thee, Una Phelimy,
 " And o'er the waters come !"

* * * *

The midnight moon is wading deep ;
 The land sends off the gale ;
 The boat beneath the sheltering steep
 Hangs on a seaward sail ;
 And, leaning o'er the weather-rail,
 The lovers hand in hand,
 Take their last look of Innisfail ;
 " Farewell, doomed Ireland !"

" And art thou doomed to discord still ?
 And shall thy sons ne'er cease
 To search and struggle for thine ill,
 Ne'er share thy good in peace ?

Already do thy mountains feel
 Avenging Heaven's ire?
 Hark,—hark—this is no thunder peal,
 That was no lighting fire!"

It was no fire from heaven he saw,
 For, far from hill and dell,
 O'er GOBBIN'S brow the mountain flaw
 Bears musquet-shot and yell,
 And shouts of brutal glee, that tell
 A foul and fearful tale;
 While over blast and breaker swell
 Thin shrieks and woman's wail.

Now fill they far the upper sky,
 Now down mid air they go,
 The frantic scream, the piteous cry,
 The groan of rage and woe;
 And wilder in their agony
 And shriller still they grow—
 Now cease they, choking suddenly;
 The waves boom on below.

"A bloody and a black revenge!
 Oh, Una, blest are we
 Who this sore-troubled land can change
 For peace beyond the sea;
 But for the manly hearts and true
 That Antrim still retain,
 Or be their banner green or blue,
 For all that there remain,
 God grant them quiet freedom too,
 And blithe homes soon again!"

ORANGE AND GREEN.

BY GERALD GRIFFIN.

THE night was falling dreary
In merry Bandon town,
When in his cottage weary,
An Orangeman lay down.
The summer sun in splendour
Had set upon the vale,
And shouts of "No surrender!"
Arose upon the gale.

Beside the waters, laving
The feet of aged trees,
The Orange banners waving,
Flew boldly in the breeze—
In mighty chorus meeting,
A hundred voices join,
And fife and drum were beating
The Battle of the Boyne.

Ha! tow'rd his cottage hieing,
What form is speeding now,
From yonder thicket flying,
With blood upon his brow?
"Hide—hide me, worthy stranger!
Though green my colour be,
And in the day of danger
May heaven remember thee!

"In yonder vale contending
Alone against that crew,
My life and limbs defending,
An Orangeman I slew.

Hark! hear that fearful warning,
 There's death in every tone—
 Oh, save my life till morning,
 And heav'n prolong your own!"

The Orange heart was melted
 In pity to the green;
 He heard the tale and felt it,
 His very soul within.
 "Dread not that angry warning,
 Though death be in its tone—
 I'll save your life till morning,
 Or I will lose my own."

Now, round his lowly dwelling
 The angry torrent press'd,
 A hundred voices swelling,
 The Orangeman address'd—
 "Arise, arise, and follow
 The chase along the plain!
 In yonder stony hollow
 Your only son is slain!"

With rising shouts they gather
 Upon the track amain,
 And leave the childless father
 Aghast with sudden pain.
 He seeks the righted stranger,
 In covert where he lay—
 "Arise!" he said, "all danger
 Is gone and past away!"

"I had a son—one only,
 One loved as my life,
 Thy hand has left me lonely,
 In that accursed strife.

I pledged my word to save thee
Until the storm should cease,
I keep the pledge I gave thee—
Arise, and go in peace !”

The stranger soon departed,
From that unhappy vale ;
The father, broken-hearted,
Lay brooding o'er that tale.
Full twenty summers after
To silver turned his beard ;
And yet the sound of laughter
From him was never heard.

The night was falling dreary,
In merry Wexford town,
When in his cabin weary,
A peasant laid him down.
And many a voice was singing
Along the summer vale,
And Wexford town was ringing
With shouts of “ Granua Uile.”

Beside the waters, laving
The feet of aged trees,
The green flag, gaily waving,
Was spread against the breeze—
In mighty chorus meeting,
Loud voices filled the town,
And fife and drum were beating,
“ Down, Orangemen, lie down.”

Hark ! 'mid the stirring clangour
That woke the echoes there,
Loud voices, high in anger,
Rise on the evening air.

Like billows of the ocean,
 He sees them hurry on—
 And, 'mid the wild commotion,
 An Orangeman alone.

“ My hair,” he said, “ is hoary,
 And feeble is my hand,
 And I could tell a story
 Would shame your cruel band.
 Full twenty years and over
 Have changed my heart and brow,
 And I am grown a lover
 Of peace and concord now.

“ It was not thus I greeted
 Your brother of the Green ;
 When fainting and defeated
 I freely took him in.
 I pledged my word to save him,
 From vengeance rushing on,
 I kept the pledge I gave him,
 Though he had kill'd my son.”

That aged peasant heard him,
 And knew him as he stood,
 Remembrance kindly stirr'd him,
 And tender gratitude.
 With gushing tears of pleasure,
 He pierced the listening train,
 “ I'm here to pay the measure
 Of kindness back again !”

Upon his bosom falling,
 That old man's tears came down ;
 Deep memory recalling
 That cot and fatal town.

“The hand that would offend thee,
 My being first shall end;
 I'm living to defend thee,
 My saviour and my friend!”

He said, and slowly turning,
 Address'd the wondering crowd,
 With fervent spirit burning,
 He told the tale aloud.
 Now pressed the warm beholders,
 Their aged foe to greet;
 They raised him on their shoulders
 And chaired him through the street.

As he had saved that stranger,
 From peril scowling dim,
 So in his day of danger
 Did Heav'n remember him.
 By joyous crowds attended,
 The worthy pair were seen,
 And their flags that day were blended
 Of Orange and of Green.

THE BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE.

BY REV. CHARLES WOLFE.

[Rev. Charles Wolfe was a native of Dublin, became a minister of the Established Church, and died in the prime of his manhood. Some of his letters, since published, are remarkable for earnestness and depth; but his verses, with the exception of a song gushing with tenderness (“My own friend, my own friend,”) are very much inferior to this ballad. Several weak attempts have been made to rob him of the “Burial of Moore,” but they were manifest impostures. The original copy in his own MS. lies in the Royal Irish Academy.]

Not a drum was heard, not a funeral-note,
 As his corse to the rampart we hurried;

Not a soldier discharged his farewell-shot
O'er the grave where our hero we buried.

We buried him darkly at dead of night,
The sods with our bayonets turning,
By the struggling moonbeam's misty light,
And the lantern dimly burning.

No useless coffin enclosed his breast,
Not in sheet or in shroud we wound him ;
But he lay like a warrior taking his rest,
With his martial cloak around him.

Few and short were the prayers we said,
And we spoke not a word of sorrow ;
But we steadfastly gazed on the face that was dead,
And we bitterly thought of the morrow.

We thought as we hollow'd his narrow bed,
And smooth'd down his lonely pillow,
That the foe and the stranger would tread o'er his head,
And we far away on the billow !

Lightly they'll talk of the spirit that's gone,
And o'er his cold ashes upbraid him,—
But little he'll reck, if they let him sleep on
In the grave where a Briton has laid him.

But half of our heavy task was done,
When the clock struck the hour for retiring ;
And we heard the distant and random gun
That the foe was sullenly firing.

Slowly and sadly we laid him down,
From the field of his fame fresh and gory ;
We carved not a line, and we raised not a stone—
But we left him alone with his glory !

A LAMENT

FOR THE TIRONIAN AND TIRCONNELLIAN PRINCES BURIED AT ROME.

TRANSLATED FROM THE IRISH,

BY JAMES CLARENCE MANGAN.

[This is an Elegy on the death of the princes of Tyrone and Tyrconnell, who having fled with others from Ireland in the year 1607, and afterwards dying at Rome, were interred on St. Peter's Hill, in one grave. The poem is the production of O'Donnell's bard, Owen Roe Mac an Bhaird, or Ward, who accompanied the family in their exile, and is addressed to Nuala, O'Donnell's sister, who was also one of the fugitives. As the circumstances connected with the flight of the Northern Earls, which led to the subsequent confiscation of the six Ulster Counties by James I., may not be immediately in the recollection of many of our readers, it may be proper briefly to state, that it was caused by the discovery of a letter directed to Sir William Ussher, Clerk of the Council, dropped in the Council-chamber on the 7th of May, and which accused the Northern chieftains generally of a conspiracy to overthrow the government. The charge is now totally disbelieved. As an illustration of the poem, and as an interesting piece of hitherto unpublished literature in itself, we extract the account of the flight as recorded in the Annals of the Four Masters, and translated by Mr. O'Donovan:—

“Maguire (Cuconnaught) and Donogh, son of Mahon, who was son of the Bishop O'Brien, sailed in a ship to Ireland, and put in at the harbour of Swilly. They then took with them from Ireland the Earl O'Neill (Hugh, son of Fedoragh) and the Earl O'Donnell (Rory, son of Hugh, who was son of Magnus) and many others of the nobles of the province of Ulster. These are the persons who went with O'Neill, namely, his Countess, Catherina, daughter of Magennis, and her three sons; Hugh, the Baron, John and Brian; Art Oge, son of Cormac, who was son of the Baron; Ferdoragh, son of Con, who was son of O'Neill; Hugh Oge, son of Brian, who was son of Art O'Neill; and many others of his most intimate friends. These were they who went with the Earl O'Donnell, namely, Caffer, his brother, with his sister Nuala; Hugh, the Earl's child, wanting three weeks of being one year old; Rose, daughter of O'Doherty and wife of Caffer, with her son Hugh, aged two years and three months; his (Rory's) brother son Donnell Oge, son of Donnell, Naghtan son of Calvach, who was son of Donogh Cairbreach O'Donnell, and many others of his intimate friends. They embarked on the Festival of the Holy Cross in Autumn. This was a distinguished company; and it is certain that the sea has not borne and the wind has not wafted in modern times a number of persons in one ship more eminent, illustrious, or noble, in point of genealogy, heroic deeds, valour, feats of arms, and brave achievements, than they. Would that God had but permitted them to remain in their patrimonial inheritances until the children should arrive at the age of manhood! Woe to the heart that meditated, woe to the mind that conceived, woe to the council that recommended the project of this expedition, without knowing whether they should, to the end of their lives, be able to return to their native principalities or patrimonies."

The Earl of Tyrone, was the illustrious Hugh O'Neill, the Irish leader in the wars against Elizabeth. His life, by Mr. Mitchell, forms a volume in the present series.]

O, WOMAN of the Piercing Wail,
 Who mournest o'er yon mound of clay
 With sigh and groan,
 Would God thou wert among the Gael!
 Thou wouldest not then from day to day
 Weep thus alone.
 'Twere long before, around a grave
 In green Tirconnell, one could find
 This loneliness;
 Near where Beann-Boirche's banners wave
 Such grief as thine could ne'er have pined Companionless.

Beside the wave, in Donegall,
 In Antrim's glens, or fair Dromore,
 Or Killilee,
 Or where the sunny waters fall,
 At Assaroe, near Erna's shore,
 This could not be.
 On Derry's plains—in rich Drumclieff—
 Throughout Armagh the Great, renowned
 In olden years,
 No day could pass but woman's grief
 Would rain upon the burial-ground
 Fresh floods of tears!

O, no!—from Shannon, Boyne, and Suir,
 From high Dunluce's castle-walls,
 From Lissadill,
 Would flock alike both rich and poor,
 One wail would rise from Cruachan's halls
 To Tara's hill;

And some would come from Barrow-side,
 And many a maid would leave her home
 On Leitrim's plains,
 And by melodious Banna's tide,
 And by the Mourne and Erne, to come
 And swell thy strains!

O, horses' hoofs would trample down
 The Mount whereon the martyr-saint*
 Was crucified.
 From glen and hill, from plain and town,
 One loud lament, one thrilling plaint,
 Would echo wide.
 There would not soon be found, I ween,
 One foot of ground among those bands
 For museful thought,
 So many shriekers of the keen †
 Would cry aloud, and clap their hands,
 All woe-distraught!

Two princes of the line of Conn
 Sleep in their cells of clay beside O'Donnell Roe:
 Three royal youths, alas! are gone,
 Who lived for Erin's weal, but died
 For Erin's woe!
 Ah! could the men of Ireland read
 The names these noteless burial-stones
 Display to view,
 Their wounded hearts afresh would bleed,
 Their tears gush forth again, their groans
 Resound anew!

* St. Peter. This passage is not exactly a blunder, though at first it may seem one: the poet supposes the grave itself transferred to Ireland, and he naturally includes in the transference the whole of the immediate locality around the grave.—TR.

† Caoiné, the funeral-wail.

The youths whose relics moulder here
 Were sprung from Hugh, high Prince and Lord
 Of Aileach's lands ;
 Thy noble brothers, justly dear,
 Thy nephew, long to be deplored
 By Ulster's bands.
 Theirs were not souls wherein dull Time
 Could domicile Decay or house Decrepitude !
 They passed from Earth ere Manhood's prime,
 Ere years had power to dim their brows
 Or chill their blood.

And who can marvel o'er thy grief,
 Or who can blame thy flowing tears,
 That knows their source ?
 O'Donnell, Dunnasava's chief,
 Cut off amid his vernal years,
 Lies here a corse
 Beside his brother Cathbar, whom Tirconnell of the Helmets mourns
 In deep despair—
 For valour, truth, and comely bloom,
 For all that greatens and adorns,
 A peerless pair.

O, had these twain, and he, the third,
 The Lord of Mourne, O'Nial's son,
 Their mate in death—
 A prince in look, in deed, and word—
 Had these three heroes yielded on
 The field their breath,
 O, had they fallen on Criffan's plain,
 There would not be a town or clan
 From shore to sea,

But would with shrieks bewail the Slain,
 Or chant aloud the exulting rann *
 Of jubilee!

When high the shout of battle rose,
 On fields where Freedom's torch still burned
 Through Erin's gloom,
 If one, if barely one of those
 Were slain, all Ulster would have mourned
 The hero's doom!
 If at Athboy, where hosts of brave
 Ulidian horsemen sank beneath
 The shock of spears,
 Young Hugh O'Neill had found a grave,
 Long must the North have wept his death
 With heart-wrung tears!

If on the day of Ballach-myre
 The Lord of Mourne had met, thus young,
 A warrior's fate,
 In vain would such as thou desire
 To mourn, alone, the champion sprung
 From Niall the Great!
 No marvel this—for all the Dead,
 Heaped on the field, pile over pile,
 At Mullach-brack,
 Were scarce an eric † for his head,
 If death had stayed his footsteps while
 On victory's track!

If on the Day of Hostages
 The fruit had from the parent bough
 Been rudely torn -
 In sight of Munster's bands—Mac-Nee's—

* Song.

† A compensation or fine.

Such blow the blood of Conn, I trow,
 Could ill have borne.
 If on the day of Ballach-boy
 Some arm had laid, by foul surprise,
 The chieftain low,
 Even our victorious shout of joy
 Would soon give place to rueful cries
 And groans of woe !

If on the day the Saxon host
 Were forced to fly—a day so great
 For Ashanee *—
 The Chief had been untimely lost,
 Our conquering troops should moderate
 Their mirthful glee.
 There would not lack on Lifford's day,
 From Galway, from the glens of Boyle,
 From Limerick's towers,
 A marshalled file, a long array,
 Of mourners to bedew the soil
 With tears in showers !

If on the day a sterner fate
 Compelled his flight from Athenree,
 His blood had flowed,
 What numbers all disconsolate
 Would come unasked, and share with thee
 Affliction's load !
 If Derry's crimson field had seen
 His life-blood offered up, though 'twere
 On Victory's shrine,
 A thousand cries would swell the keen,
 A thousand voices of despair
 Would echo thine !

* Ballyshannon.

O, had the fierce Dalcassian swarm
That bloody night on Fergus' banks
But slain our Chief,
When rose his camp in wild alarm—
How would the triumph of his ranks
Be dashed with grief!
How would the troops of Murbach mourn
If on the Curlew Mountains' day,
Which England rued,
Some Saxon hand had left them lorn,
By shedding there, amid the fray,
Their prince's blood!

Red would have been our warriors' eyes
Had Roderick found on Sligo's field
A gory grave,
No Northern Chief would soon arise
So sage to guide, so strong to shield,
So swift to save.
Long would Leith-Cuinn have wept if Hugh
Had met the death he oft had dealt
Among the foe ;
But, had our Roderick fallen too,
All Erin must, alas! have felt
The deadly blow!

What do I say? Ah, woe is me!
Already we bewail in vain
Their fatal fall!
And Erin, once the Great and Free,
Now vainly mourns her breakless chain,
And iron thrall!
Then, daughter of O'Donnell! dry
Thine overflowing eyes, and turn
Thy heart aside'

For Adam's race is born to die,
And sternly the sepulchral urn
Mocks human pride !

Look not, nor sigh, for earthly throne,
Nor place thy trust in arm of clay—
But on thy knees
Uplift thy soul to GOD alone,
For all things go their destined way
As He decrees.

Embrace the faithful Crucifix,
And seek the path of pain and prayer
Thy Saviour trod ;
Nor let thy spirit intermix
With earthly hope and worldly care
Its groans to GOD !

And Thou, O mighty Lord ! whose ways
Are far above our feeble minds
To understand,
Sustain us in these doleful days,
And render light the chain that binds
Our fallen land !

Look down upon our dreary state,
And through the ages that may still Roll sadly on,

Watch Thou o'er hapless Erin's fate,
And shield at least from darker ill
The blood of Conn !

THE COURT OF CAHIRASS.

[“About a mile from Croom, (says the “History of Limerick,” by Fitzgerald and MacGregor) situated on the Maig, is Cahirass House, with its finely wooded park and plantations, belonging to Mr. (now Sir David) Roche, a descendant of the house of Fermoy;” and a note adds, “There was once a chapel of ease here belonging to the Carbery family, whose property it was. The chaplain falling desperately in love with the daughter of Lord Carbery, and being disappointed, hanged himself in the chapel, which soon afterwards went to decay. This unfortunate lover had composed a song beginning with ‘At the Court of Cahirass there lives a fair maiden,’ which is still recollected by the country people.”]

In the Court of Cahirass there dwells a fair lady,
Of beauty the paragon, and she is called Katey;
Her lofty descent, and her stately deportment,
Prove this lovely damsel was for a king’s court meant.

There’s many a great lord from Dublin has sought her;
But that is not strange for a nobleman’s daughter:
Yet if she was poor as the poorest of creatures,
There’s no one her rival in figure or features.

On a fine summer’s morning, if you saw but this maiden,
By the murmuring Maig, or the green fields she stray’d in;
Or through groves full of song, near that bright flowing river,
You’d think how imperfect the praise that I give her.

In order arranged are her bright flowing tresses,
The thread of the spider their fineness expresses;
And softer her cheek, that is mantled with blushes,
Than the drift of the snow, or the pulp of the rushes.

But her bosom of beauty, that the heart which lies under,
Should have nothing of womanlike pride, is my wonder;
That the charms which all eyes daily dwell on delighted,
Should seem in her own of no worth, and be slighted.

I felt on my spirit a load that was weighty,
 In the stillness of midnight, and called upon Katey ;
 And a dull voice replied, on the ear of the sleeper,
 "Death ! death !" in a tone that was deep, and grew deeper.

'Twas an omen to me—'twas an omen of sadness,
 That told me of folly, of love, and of madness ;
 That my fate was as dark as the sky that was o'er me,
 And bade me despair, for no hope was before me.

O, Katey, dear Katey, disdain not your lover ;
 From your frowns and your coldness he cannot recover :
 For if you but bid him his passion to smother,
 How fatal the day when we first met each other.

[I have ventured to omit a verse which I have always considered an interpolation. It contained a ludicrous instance of bathos, certain to interrupt the tender and pathetic sentiment of the ballad. To wit:—

"To the sick and the needy profuse is her bounty,
 And her goodness extends through the whole of the county !"]

MAIRE BHAN ASTOR.

BY THOMAS DAVIS, M.R.I.A.

IN a valley, far away,
 With my Maire bhan astór,
 Short would be the summer-day,
 Ever loving more and more ;

* Which means, "fair Mary my treasure." If we are to write gibberish to enable some of our readers to pronounce this, we must do so thus, Maur-ya vaun asthore. Really it is time for the inhabitants of Ireland to learn Irish.

Winter-days would all grow long,
 With the light her heart would pour,
 With her kisses and her song,
 And her loving mait go léor*
 Fond is Maire bhan astór,
 Fair is Maire bhan astór,
 Sweet as ripple on the shore,
 Sings my Maire bhan astór.

Oh! her sire is very proud,
 And her mother cold as stone ;
 But her brother bravely vow'd
 She should be my bride alone ;
 For he knew I lov'd her well,
 And he knew she lov'd me too,
 So he sought their pride to quell,
 But 'twas all in vain to sue.
 True is Maire bhan astór,
 Tried is Maire bhan astór,
 Had I wings I'd never soar
 From my Maire bhan astór.

There are lands where manly toil
 Surely reaps the crop it sows,
 Glorious woods and teeming soil,
 Where the broad Missouri flows ;
 Through the trees the smoke shall rise,
 From our hearth with mait go léor,
 There shall shine the happy eyes
 Of my Maire bhan astór.
 Mild is Maire bhan astór,
 Mine is Maire bhan astór,
 Saints will watch about the door
 Of my Maire bhan astór.

* Much plenty, or, in abundance.

THE RETURN OF O'RUARK,

PRINCE OF BREFFNI.

BY THOMAS MOORE.

AIR—" Cailin Deas Cruite na-m-bo."

[This ballad is founded upon an event of most melancholy importance to Ireland; if, as we are told by our Irish historians, it gave England the first opportunity of profiting by our divisions and subduing us. The following are the circumstances as related by O'Halloran:—"The King of Leinster had long conceived a violent affection for Dearbhorgil, daughter to the King of Meath, and though she had been for some time married to O'Ruark, Prince of Breffni, yet it could not restrain his passion. They carried on a private correspondence, and she informed him that O'Ruark intended soon to go on a pilgrimage, (an act of piety frequent in those days,) and conjured him to embrace that opportunity of conveying her from a husband she detested to a lover she adored. Mac Murchad too punctually obeyed the summons, and had the lady conveyed to his capital of Ferns." The monarch Roderic espoused the cause of O'Ruark, while Mac Murchad fled to England, and obtained the assistance of Henry II. "Such," adds Giraldus Cambrensis, (as I find in an old translation,) "is the variable and fickle nature of woman, by whom all mischief in the world (for the most part) do happen and come, as may appear by Marcus Antonius, and by the destruction of Troy."]

THE valley lay smiling before me,
 Where lately I left her behind;
 Yet I trembled, and something hung o'er me,
 That sadden'd the joy of my mind.
 I looked for the lamp which she told me
 Should shine when her Pilgrim return'd,
 But, though darkness began to infold me,
 No lamp from the battlements burn'd!

I flew to her chamber—'twas lonely
 As if the lov'd tenant lay dead!
 Ah! would it were death, and death only!
 But no—the young false one had fled.
 And there hung the lute, that could soften
 My very worst pains into bliss,
 While the hand, that had wak'd it so often,
 Now throbb'd to a proud rival's kiss.

There was a time, falsest of women !
 When BREFFNI's good sword would have sought
 That man, through a million of foemen,
 Who dar'd but to doubt thee in thought !
 While now—Oh degenerate daughter
 Of Erin, how fall'n is thy fame !
 And, thro' ages of bondage and slaughter,
 Our country shall bleed for thy shame.

Already the curse is upon her,
 And strangers her vallies profane ;
 They come to divide—to dishonour,
 And tyrants they long will remain !
 But, onward !—the green banner rearing,
 Go, flesh every sword to the hilt ;
 On our side is VIRTUE and ERIN !
 On theirs is the SAXON and GUILT.

THE SISTER OF CHARITY.*

BY GERALD GRIFFIN.

SHE once was a lady of honour and wealth,
 Bright glow'd on her features the roses of health ;
 Her vesture was blended of silk and of gold,
 And her motion shook perfume from every fold :
 Joy revell'd around her—love shone at her side,
 And gay was her smile, as the glance of a bride ;
 And light was her step, in the-mirth-sounding hall,
 When she heard of the daughters of Vincent de Paul.

* Griffin's sister entered this pious order, which circumstance probably suggested the poem.

She felt, in her spirit, the summons of grace,
 That call'd her to live for the suffering race ;
 And heedless of pleasure, of comfort, of home,
 Rose quickly like Mary, and answered, " I com
 She put from her person the trappings of pride,
 And pass'd from her home, with the joy of a bride,
 Nor wept at the threshold, as onwards she moved,—
 For her heart was on fire in the cause it approved.

Lost ever to fashion—to vanity lost,
 That beauty that once was the song and the toast—
 No more in the ball-room that figure we meet,
 But gliding at dusk to the wretch's retreat.
 Forgot in the halls is that high-sounding name,
 For the Sister of Charity blushes at fame ;
 Forgot are the claims of her riches and birth,
 For she barter's for heaven the glory of earth.

Those feet, that to music could gracefully move,
 Now bear her alone on the mission of love ;
 Those hands that once dangled the perfume and gem
 Are tending the helpless, or lifted for them ;
 That voice that once echo'd the song of the vain,
 Now whispers relief to the bosom of pain ;
 And the hair that was shining with diamond and pearl,
 Is wet with the tears of the penitent girl.

Her down-bed a pallet—her trinkets a bead,
 Her lustre—one taper that serves her to read ;
 Her sculpture—the crucifix nail'd by her bed,
 Her paintings one print of the thorn-crowned head ;
 Her cushion—the pavement, that wearies her knees,
 Her music the psalm, or the sigh of disease ;
 The delicate lady lives mortified there,
 And the feast is forsaken for fasting and prayer.

Yet not to the service of heart and of mind,
Are the cares of that heaven-minded virgin confined,
Like him whom she loves, to the mansions of grief
She hastes with the tidings of joy and relief.
She strengthens the weary—she comforts the weak,
And soft is her voice in the ear of the sick ;
Where want and affliction on mortals attend,
The Sister of Charity there is a friend.

Unshrinking where pestilence scatters his breath,
Like an angel she moves, 'mid the vapour of death ;
Where rings the loud musket, and flashes the sword,
Unfearing she walks, for she follows the Lord.
How sweetly she bends o'er each plague-tainted face
With looks that are lighted with holiest grace ;
How kindly she dresses each suffering limb,
For she sees in the wounded the image of Him.

Behold her, ye worldly ! behold her, ye vain !
Who shrink from the pathway of virtue and pain ;
Who yield up to pleasure your nights and your days,
Forgetful of service, forgetful of praise.
Ye lazy philosophers—self-seeking men,—
Ye fireside philanthropists, great at the pen,
How stands in the balance your eloquence weighed
With the life and the deeds of that high-born maid ?

THE CONVICT OF CLONMELL.

TRANSLATED FROM THE IRISH,

BY JEREMIAH JOSEPH CALLANAN,

Author of the "Recluse of Inchidony," &c.

Is dubac e mo cas.

[Who the hero of this song is, I know not; but convicts, from obvious reasons, have been peculiar objects of sympathy in Ireland.

Hurling, which is mentioned in one of the verses, is a thoroughly national diversion, and is played with intense zeal, by parish against parish, barony against barony, county against county, or even province against province. It is played, not only by the peasant, but by the students of the university, where it is an established pastime. Twiss, the most sweeping calumniator of Ireland, calls it, if I mistake not, the cricket of barbarians: but though fully prepared to pay a just tribute to the elegance of the English game, I own that I think the Irish sport fully as civilized, and much better calculated for the display of vigour and activity. Strutt, in his Sports and Pastimes, (p. 78.) eulogizes the activity of some Irishmen, who played the game about 25 years before the publication of his work, (1801,) at the back of the British Museum, and deduces it from the Roman harpastum. It was played in Cornwall formerly, he adds, but neither the Romans nor Cornishmen used a bat, or, as we call it in Ireland, a hurly. The description Strutt quotes from old Carew is quite graphic.]

How hard is my fortune,
 And vain my repining !
 The strong rope of fate
 For this young neck is twining.
 My strength is departed ;
 My cheek sunk and sallow ;
 While I languish in chains,
 In the gaol of Clonmala.*

No boy in the village
 Was ever yet milder,
 I'd play with a child,
 And my sport would be wilder.

* cluaghneala, Recess, or field of honey.—Irish of Clonmell.

I'd dance without tiring
 From morning till even,
 And the goal-ball I'd strike
 To the lightning of heaven.

At my bed-foot decaying,
 My hurlbat is lying,
 Through the boys of the village,
 My goal-ball is flying;
 My horse 'mong the neighbours
 Neglected may fallow,—
 While I pine in my chains,
 In the gaol of Clonmala.

Next Sunday the patron
 At home will be keeping,
 And the young active hurlers
 The field will be sweeping.
 With the dance of fair maidens
 The evening they'll hallow,
 While this heart, once so gay,
 Shall be cold in Clonmala.

[Callanan was educated for the Irish priesthood, but the feebleness of his constitution, and probably an instinctive longing after a literary life, induced him to quit college without taking orders. For some years after, he resided in Cork, his native city, and produced his minor poems in rapid succession. But his health was never re-established; his exciting labours and an eager disposition robbed him of the repose essential to recovery. In 1829 he removed to Lisbon for change of air, died, and was buried in that city. His ballads, translations from the Irish, and other small poems, collected from Blackwood, Bolster's (Cork) Magazine, and similar sources, and the Recluse of Inchidony, a long poem in the Spencerean metre, were published the same year; but are since out of print. His exquisite verses on Gougane Barra have alone attained to a wide popularity; in the South, however, all his writings are familiarly known. Some of his translations from the Irish preserve the idiomatic peculiarities of the language to a wonderful degree, and are among the most racy and characteristic we possess.]

MARY LE MORE.

BY GEORGE NUGENT REYNOLDS.

[Mr. Reynolds was a Leitrim gentleman of moderate property, earnest patriotism, and respectable ability. Between the Era of Independence and the Union he wrote several rough, strong, popular songs in the national interest; one or two of which still hold their ground in the collections. Latterly a claim has been made on his behalf to the authorship of the "Exile of Erin," so strongly sustained by sworn evidence, that nothing but the character of Campbell could resist it.—It is, however, weakened by the fact that none of his acknowledged writings are in the same style or of the same ability.]

As I stray'd o'er the common on Cork's rugged border, While the dew-drops of morn the sweet primrose
array'd,

I saw a poor maiden whose mental disorder,
Her quick-glancing eye and wild aspect betrayed.
On the sward she reclin'd, by the green fern surrounded,
At her side speckled daisies and wild flow'rs abounded;
To its utmost recesses her heart had been wounded;
Her sighs were unceasing—'twas Mary le More.

Her charms by the keen blasts of sorrow were faded,
Yet the soft tinge of beauty still played on her cheek;
Her tresses a wreath of pale primroses braided,
And strings of fresh daisies hung loose on her neck.
While with pity I gaz'd, she exclaimed, "O my Mother!
See the blood on that lash, 'tis the blood of my brother;
They have torn his poor flesh, and they now strip another—

'Tis Connor, the friend of poor Mary le More.

"Though his locks were as white as the foam of the ocean,
Those wretches shall find that my father is brave;
My father!" she cried, with the wildest emotion,
"Ah! no, my poor father now sleeps in the grave!
They have tolled his death-bell, they've laid the turf
o'er him;

His white locks were bloody ! no aid could restore him ;
 He is gone ! he is gone ! and the good will deplore him,
 When the blue waves of Erin hide Mary le More."

A lark, from the gold blossom'd furze that grew near her,
 Now rose, and with energy caroll'd his lay ;
 "Hush, hush !" she continued, "the trumpet sounds clearer ;

The horsemen approach ! Erin's daughters, away !
 Ah ! soldiers, 'twas foul, while the cabin was burning,
 And o'er a pale father a wretch had been mourning—
 Go, hide with the sea-mew, ye maids, and take warning,
 Those ruffians have ruin'd poor Mary le More.

"Away, bring the ointment, O God ! see those gashes !
 Alas ! my poor brother, come dry the big tear ;
 Anon we'll have vengeance for these dreadful lashes ;
 Already the screech-owl and raven appear.
 By day the green grave, that lies under the willow,
 With wild flow'rs I'll strew, and by night make my pillow,
 Till the ooze and dark sea-weed, beneath the curl'd billow,
 Shall furnish a death-bed for Mary le More."

Thus rav'd the poor maniac, in tones more heart-rending

Than sanity's voice ever pour'd on my ear,
 When, lo ! on the waste, and their march tow'rd's her bending,

A troop of fierce cavalry chanc'd to appear ;
 "O ye fiends !" she exclaim'd, and with wild horror started,

Then through the tall fern, loudly screaming, she darted ;
 With an overcharg'd bosom I slowly departed.

And sigh'd for the wrongs of poor Mary le More.

THE LAMENT OF O'GNIVE.

FROM A LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE ORIGINAL IRISH IN O'CONNOR'S
"DISSERTATIONS ON IRISH HISTORY."

BY JEREMIAH JOSEPH CALLANAN.

[FEARFLATHA O'GNIAMH was family Olamh or Bard, to the O'Neill of Clanaboy about the year 1556. The Poem of which the following lines, are the translation, commences with, "Ma through mar atuid Goadhil."]

How dimm'd is the glory that circled the Gael,
And fall'n the high people of green Innisfail,
The sword of the Saxon is red with their gore,
And the mighty of nations is mighty no more.

Like a bark on the ocean long shattered and tost,
On the land of your fathers at length you are lost,
The hand of the spoiler is stretched on your plains,
And you're doom'd from your cradles to bondage and chains.

O where is the beauty that beam'd on thy brow?
Strong hand in the battle, how weak art thou now!
That heart is now broken that never would quail,
And thy high songs are turned into weeping and wail.

Bright shades of our sires! from your home in the skies
O blast not your sons with the scorn of your eyes!
Proud spirit of Gollamh* how red is thy cheek,
For thy freemen are slaves, and thy mighty are weak!

O'Neill † of the Hostages; Con ‡ whose high name
On a hundred red battles has floated to fame,

* Gollamh—A name of Milesius.

† Nial—of the Nine Hostages, the Heroic Monarch of Ireland, in the fourth century—and ancestor of the O'Neill family.

‡ Con Cead Catha—Con of the Hundred Fights, Monarch of the Island in the second century; although the fighter of a hundred battles, he was not the victor of a hundred fields—his valorous rival, Owen, King of Munster, compelled him to a division of the Kingdom.

Let the long grass still sigh undisturbed o'er thy sleep,
Arise not to shame us, awake not to weep!

In thy broad wing of darkness infold us, O night,
Withhold, O bright sun, the reproach of thy light,
For freedom or valour no more canst thou see,
In the home of the Brave, in the isle of the Free.

Affliction's dark waters your spirits have bow'd,
And oppresion hath wrapped all your land in its shroud,
Since first from the Brehons* pure justice you stray'd,
And bent to those laws the proud Saxon has made.

We know not our country, so strange is her face,
Her sons once her glory are now her disgrace,
Gone, gone is the beauty of fair Innisfail, †
For the stranger now rules in the land of the Gael.

Where, where are the woods that oft rung to your cheer,
Where you waked the wild chase of the wolf and the deer?

Can those dark heights, with ramparts all frowning and riven,

Be the hills where your forests wav'd brightly in heaven?

O bondsmen of Egypt, no Moses appears,
To light your dark steps thro' this desert of tears,
Degraded and lost ones, no Hector is nigh,
To lead you to freedom, or teach you to die!

THE IRISH REAPER'S HARVEST HYMN.

BY JOHN KEEGAN.

ALL hail! Holy Mary, our hope and our joy!
Smile down, blessed Queen! on the poor Irish boy,

* Brehons—The hereditary Judges of the Irish Septs.

† Innisfail—The Island of Destiny, one of the names of Ireland.

Who wanders away from his dear belov'd home ;
Oh, Mary ! be with me wherever I roam.

Be with me, Oh ! Mary,

Forsake me not, Mary,

But guide me, and guard me, wherever I roam.

From the home of my fathers in anguish I go,
To toil for the dark-livered cold-hearted foe,
Who mocks me, and hates me, and calls me a slave,
An alien, a savage, all names but a knave ,

But, blessed be Mary,

My sweet, Holy Mary,

The *bodagh he never dare call me a knave.

From my mother's mud sheeling, an outcast I fly,
With a cloud on my heart and a tear in my eye ;
Oh ! I burn as I think that if Some One would say,
"Revenge on your tyrants"—but Mary, I pray

From my soul's depth, Oh ! Mary,

And hear me, sweet Mary,

For Union and Peace to old Ireland I pray.

The land that I fly from is fertile and fair,
And more than I ask for or wish for is there,
But I must not taste the good things that I see,
"There's nothing but rags and green rushes for me."†

Oh ! mild Virgin Mary,

Oh ! sweet Mother Mary,

Who keeps my rough hand from red murder but thee ?

But sure in the end our dear freedom we'll gain,
And wipe from the Green Flag each Sasanach stain,

* Bodagh, a clown, a churl.

† Taken literally from a conversation with a young peasant on his way to reap the harvest in England.

And oh ! Holy Mary, your blessing we crave,
 Give hearts to the timid, and hands to the brave ;
 And then, Mother Mary,
 Our own blessed Mary,
 Light liberty's flame in the hut of the slave.

LAMENT OF THE IRISH MAIDEN.

A BRIGADE BALLAD.

BY DENNY LANE.

AIR—" The Foggy Dew."

ON Carrighoun the heath is brown,
 The clouds are dark o'er Ardnalia,
 And many a stream comes rushing down
 To swell the angry Ownabwee ;
 The morning blast is sweeping fast
 Thro' many a leafless tree,
 And I 'm alone, for he is gone,
 My hawk has flown, ochone machree.

The heath was green on Carrighoun,
 Bright shone the sun on Ardnalia,
 The dark green trees bent trembling down
 To kiss the slumb'ring Ownabwee ;
 That happy day, 'twas but last May,
 'Tis like a dream to me,
 When Doinnall swore, ay, o'er and o'er,
 We'd part no more, oh stor machree.

Soft April show'rs and bright May flow'rs
 Will bring the summer back again,
 But will they bring me back the hours
 I spent with my brave Doinnall then.
 'Tis but a chance, for he's gone to France
 To wear the fleur de lis ;
 But I'll follow you, *ma Doinnall dhu,
 For still I'm true to you, machree.

* mo doinnall dub, My black Daniel.

THE COUNTY OF MAYO.

TRANSLATED FROM THE IRISH,

BY GEORGE FOX.

AIR.—“The County of Mayo.”

[This specimen of our ancient Irish Literature, is one of the most popular songs of the peasantry of the counties of Mayo and Galway, and is evidently a production of the seventeenth century. The original Irish which is the composition of one Thomas Lavelle, has been published without a translation, by Mr. Hardiman, in his Irish Minstrelsy; but a very able translation of it by Mr. G. Fox, was published in a review of that work in the University Magazine for June 1834. From that translation the present version has been slightly altered so as to adapt it to the original melody, which is of very great beauty and pathos, and one which it is desirable to preserve with English words of appropriate simplicity of character:—]

ON the deck of Patrick Lynch's boat I sat in woful plight,
 Through my signing all the weary day, and weeping all the night,
 Were it not that full of sorrow from my people forth I go,
 By the blessed sun, 'tis royally I'd sing thy praise,
 Mayo.

When I dweit at home in plenty, and my gold did much abound,
 In the company of fair young maids the Spanish ale went round—
 'Tis a bitter change from those gay days that now I'm forced to go,
 And must leave my bones in Santa Cruz, far from my own Mayo.

They are altered girls in Irrul now; 'tis proud they're grown and high,
 With their hair-bags and their top-knots, for I pass their buckles by—

But it's little now I heed their airs, for God will have it
 so,
 That I must depart for foreign lands, and leave my sweet
 Mayo.

'Tis my grief that Patrick Loughlin is not Earl in Irrul still,
 And that Brian Duff no longer rules as Lord upon the hill:
 And that Colonel Hugh Mac Grady should be lying dead
 and low,
 And I sailing, sailing swiftly from the county of Mayo

THE PATRIOT MOTHER.

A BALLAD OF '98.

“COME, tell us the name of the rebelly crew,
 Who lifted the pike on the Curragh with you;
 Come, tell us their treason, and then you'll be free,
 Or by heavens you shall swing from the high gallows tree.”

“*Alanna! alanna!the shadow of shame
 Has never yet fallen upon one of your name,
 And oh! may the food from my bosom you drew,
 In your veins turn to poison, if you turn untrue.

“The foul words—oh! let them not blacken your tongue,
 That would prove to your friends and your country a wrong,
 Or the curse of a mother, so bitter and dread,
 With the wrath of the Lord—may they fall on your head!

* 4 leɲɲö, O child! But better mo leɲɲab, my child!

“ I have no one but you in the whole world wide,
 Yet false to your pledge you'd ne'er stand at my side;
 If a traitor you liv'd, you'd be farther away
 From my heart than, if true, you were wrapp'd in the clay.

“ Oh! deeper and darker the mourning would be,
 For your falsehood so base, than your death proud and free,

Dearer, far dearer than ever to me,
 My darling you'll be on the brave gallows tree.

“ 'Tis holy, agra, from the bravest and best—
 Go! go! from my heart, and be join'd with the rest,
Alanna, machree! O, alanna, machree!
 Sure a 'stag'* and a traitor you never will be.”

There's no look of a traitor upon the young brow
 That's raised to the tempters so haughtily now;
 No traitor e'er held up the firm head so high—
 No traitor e'er show'd such a proud flashing eye.

On the high gallows tree! on the brave gallows tree!
 Where smil'd leaves and blossoms, his sad doom met he;
 But it never bore blossom so pure or so fair,
 As the heart of the martyr that hangs from it there.

BOUCHELLEEN-BAWN.

BY JOHN BANIM.

AIR—“ Lough Sheeling.”

[This ballad refers to the abortive scheme of proselytism, commonly known as the “New Reformation.”]

AND where are you going, ma bouchelleen-bawn, †
 From father and mother so early at dawn?

* “Stag,” an informer.

† My little fair boy.

Och! rather run idle from evening till dawn,
Than darken their threshold, ma bouchelleen-bawn!

For there they would tell you, ma bouchelleen-bawn,
That the mother whose milk to your heart you have drawn,

And the father who prays for you, evening and dawn,
Can never be heard for you, bouchelleen-bawn.

That the faith we have bled for, from father to son,
Since first by a lie our fair valleys were won,
And which oft in the desert, our knees to the sod,
We kept from them all, for our sons and our God—

That this was idolatry, heartless and cold,
And now grown more heartless because it is old;
And for something that's newer they'd ask you to pawn
The creed of your fathers, ma bouchelleen-bawn!

And now will you go to them, bouchelleen-bawn,
From father and mother, so early at dawn?
Och! the cloud from your mind let it never be drawn,
But cross not their threshold, ma bouchelleen-bawn!

MO CRAOIBHIN CNO.*

BY EDWARD WALSH.

My heart is far from Liffey's tide
And Dublin town;
It strays beyond the Southern side
Of Cnoc-Maol-Donn, †

* Mo craoibhin cno literally means my cluster of nuts; but it figuratively signifies my nut-brown maid.

† Cnoc-maol-Donn—The Brown bare hill. A lofty mountain between the county of Tipperary and that of Waterford, commanding a glorious prospect of unrivalled scenery.

Where Capa-chuinn* hath woodlands green,
 Where Amhan-Mhor's † waters flow,
 Where dwells unsung, unsought, unseen,
Mo craoibhin cno,
 Low clustering in her leafy screen,
Mo craoibhin cno !

The high-bred dames of Dublin town
 Are rich and fair,
 With wavy plume, and silken gown,
 And stately air ;
 Can plumes compare thy dark brown hair ?
 Can silks thy neck of snow ?
 Or measur'd pace, thine artless grace,
Mo craoibhin cno,
 When harebells scarcely show thy trace,
Mo craoibhin cno ?

I've heard the songs by Liffey's wave
 That maidens sung—
 They sung their land the Saxon's slave,
 In Saxon tongue—
 O ! bring me here that Gaelic dear
 Which cursed the Saxon foe,
 When thou didst charm my raptur'd ear,
Mo craoibhin cno !
 And none but God's good angels near,
Mo craoibhin cno !

* Cappoquin. A romantically situated town on the Blackwater, in the county of Waterford. The Irish name denotes the head of the tribe of Conn.

† Amhan-mhor—The Great River. The Blackwater, which flows into the sea at Youghal. The Irish name is uttered in two sounds Oan-Vore.

I've wandered by the rolling Lee !
 And Lene's green bowers—
 I've seen the Shannon's wide-spread sea,
 And Limerick's towers—
 And Liffey's tide, where halls of pride
 Frown o'er the flood below ;
 My wild heart strays to Amhan-mhor's side,
Mo craoibhin cno !
 With love and thee for aye to bide,
Mo craoibhin cno !

SHULE AROON.

A BRIGADE BALLAD.

[The date of this ballad is not positively known, but it appears to be early in the eighteenth century, when the flower of the Catholic youth of Ireland were drawn away to recruit the ranks of the Brigade. The inexpressible tenderness of the air, and the deep feeling and simplicity of the words, have made the ballad a popular favourite, notwithstanding its meagreness and poverty.]

I WOULD I were on yonder hill,
 'Tis there I'd sit and cry my fill,
 And every tear would turn a mill,
Is go de tu mo m'urnin slàn.
Shule, shule, shule aroon,
Shule go succir, agus shule go cuin,
Shule go den durrus agus eligh glum,
Is go de tu mo m'urnin slàn.

I'll sell my rock, I'll sell my reel,
 I'll sell my only spinning wheel,
 To buy for my love a sword of steel,
Is go de tu mo m'urnin slàn.

Chorus.

I'll dye my petticoats, I'll dye them red,
 And round the world I'll beg my bread,
 Until my parents shall wish me dead,
Is go de tu mo murnin slàn.

Chorus.

I wish, I wish, I wish in vain,
 I wish I had my heart again,
 And vainly think I'd not complain,
Is go de tu mo murnin slàn.

Chorus.

But now my love has gone to France,
 To try his fortune to advance,
 If he e'er come back 'tis but a chance,
Is go de tu mo murnin slàn.

Chorus.

O SAY, MY BROWN DRIMIN.

A JACOBITE RELIC.

BY J. J. CALLANAN.

A Drimin doan dilis no sioda na mbo.*

[Drimin is the favourite name of a cow, by which Ireland is here allegorically denoted. The five ends of Erin are the five kingdoms—Munster, Leinster, Ulster, Connaught, and Meath, into which the island was divided, under the Milesian dynasty.]

O SAY, my brown Drimin, thou silk of the kine,
 Where, where are thy strong ones, last hope of thy line?
 Too deep and too long is the slumber they take,
 At the loud call of freedom why don't they awake?

My strong ones have fallen—from the bright eye of day,
 All darkly they sleep in their dwelling of clay;
 The cold turf is o'er them—they hear not my cries,
 And since Lewis no aid gives, I cannot arise.

* Silk of the cows—an idiomatic expression for the most beautiful of cattle, which I have preserved in translating.—TR.

O ! where art thou, Lewis? our eyes are on thee—
 Are thy lofty ships walking in strength o'er the sea?
 In freedom's last strife, if you linger or quail,
 No morn e'er shall break on the night of the Gael.

But should the King's son, now bereft of his right,
 Come proud in his strength for his Country to fight;
 Like leaves on the trees, will new people arise,
 And deep from their mountains shout back to my cries.

When the Prince, now an exile, shall come for his own,
 The Isles of his father, his rights, and his throne,
 My people in battle the Saxons will meet,
 And kick them before, like old shoes from their feet.

O'er mountains and valleys they'll press on their rout,
 The five ends of Erin shall ring to their shout;
 My sons all united, shall bless the glad day
 When the flint-hearted Saxon they've chased far away.

THE GRAVE OF MAC CAURA.

BY MRS. DOWNING.

Author of "Scrap from the Mountains."

[At Callan, a pass on an unfrequented road leading from Glanerought (the vale of the Roughly) to Bantry, the country people point out a flat stone by the pathway, which they name as the burial place of Daniel Mac Carthy, who fell there in an engagement with the Fitzgeralds in 1261. The stone still preserves the traces of characters which are, however, illegible. From the scanty records of the period, it would appear, that this battle was no inconsiderable one. The Geraldines were defeated, and their leader, Thomas Fitzgerald, and his son, eighteen barons, fifteen knights, and many others of his adherents, slain. But the honour and advantage of victory were dearly purchased by the exulting natives, owing to the death of their brave and noble chieftain.]

AND this is thy grave, MacCaura,
 Here by the pathway lone,
 Where the thorn blossoms are bending
 Over thy mouldered stone.

Alas! for the sons of glory ;
Oh! thou of the darkened brow,
And the eagle plume, and the belted clans,
Is it here thou art sleeping now ?

Oh! wild is the spot, MacCaura,
In which they have laid thee low—
The field where thy people triumphed
Over a slaughtered foe ;
And loud was the banshee's wailing,
And deep was the clansmen's sorrow,
When with bloody hands and burning tears
They buried thee here, MacCaura.

And now thy dwelling is lonely—
King of the rushing horde ;
And now thy battles are over—
Chief of the shining sword.
And the rolling thunder echoes
O'er torrent and mountain free,
But alas! and alas! MacCaura,
It will not awaken thee.

Farewell to thy grave, MacCaura,
Where the slanting sunbeams shine,
And the briar and waving fern
Over thy slumbers twine ;
Thou, whose gathering summons
Could waken the sleeping glen ;
MacCaura ! alas for thee and thine,
'Twill never be heard again.

PEGGY BAWN.

[The existence of this ballad is traceable for a century—it is probably much older. It bears strong evidence of having been written in Ulster, where it holds its ground with undiminished popularity to this day.]

As I gae'd o'er the Highland hills,
 To a farmer's house I came :
 The night being dark, and something wet,
 I ventur'd into the same,
 Where I was kindly treated,
 And a pretty lass I spied,
 Who ask'd me if I had a wife ?
 But marriage I denied.

I courted her the lae lang night,
 Till near the dawn of day,
 When frankly she to me did say,
 " Alang wi' thee I'll gae ;
 For Ireland is a fine country,
 And the Scots to you are kin ;
 So I will gang along with you,
 My fortune to begin."

Day being come and breakfast o'er,
 To the parlour I was ta'en ;
 The gudeman kindly asked me,
 If I'd marry his daughter Jane ?
 " Five hundred merks I'll give her,
 Besides a piece of lan' ;"
 But no sooner had he spoke the word,
 Than I thought of Peggy Bawn.

" Your offer, sir, is very good,
 And I thank you too," said I,

“But I cannot be your son-in-law,
 And I’ll tell you the reason why?
 My business calleth me in haste,
 I am the king’s servant bound
 And I must gang awa’ this day,
 Straight to Edinburgh town.”

Oh, Peggy Bawn, thou art my own,
 Thy heart lies in my breast;
 And though we at a distance are,
 Yet I love thee still the best:
 Although we at a distance are,
 And the seas between us roar,
 Yet I’ll be constant, Peggy Bawn,
 To thee for evermore.

A LAMENTATION.

BY J. CLARENCE MANGAN.

[This lamentation is not an Irish ballad but an imitation of Irish ballad poetry. It is translated from the German of Goethe; a strange and suggestive fact, that the greatest intellect of this age, should have been devoted to the study and illustration of our native poetry, while it was neglected at home.]

O! RAISE the woful Pillalu,
 And let your tears in streams be shed;
Och, orro, orro, ollalu!
 The Master’s eldest hope is dead!

Ere broke the morning dim and pale,
 The owlet flapp’d his heavy wing;
 We heard the winds at evening wail,
 And now our dirge of death we sing,
Och, orro, orro, ollalu!

Why wouldst thou go? How couldst thou die?
 Why hast thou left thy parents dear?
 Thy friends, thy kindred far and nigh,
 Whose cries, mouvone! thou dost not hear?
Och, orro, orro, ollalu!

Thy mother, tog!—how could she part
 From thee, her darling, fair and sweet,
 The heart that throbb'd within her heart,
 The pulse, the blood that made it beat?
Och, orro, orro, ollalu!

Oh! lost to her and all thy race,
 Thou sleepest in the House of Death;
 She sees no more thy cherub face,
 She drinks no more thy violet breath;
Och, orro, orro, ollalu!

By strand and road, by field and fen,
 The sorrowing clans come thronging all;
 From camp and dun, from hill and glen,
 They crowd around the castle wall.
Och, orro, orro, ollalu!

From East and West, from South and North,
 To join the funeral train they hie;
 And now the mourners issue forth,
 And far they spread the keening cry.
Och, orro, orro, ollalu!

Then raise the woful Pillalu,
 And let your tears in streams be shed,
Och, orro, orro, ollalu!
 The Chieftain's pride, his heir, is dead.

CORMAC AND MARY.

A FAIRY LEGEND.

BY T. CROFTON CROKER.

“SHE is not dead—she has no grave—
She lives beneath Lough Corrib’s water ;*
And in the murmur of each wave
Methinks I catch the songs I taught her.”

Thus many an evening on the shore
Sat Cormac raving wild and lowly ;
Still idly muttering o’er and o’er,
“She lives, detain’d by spells unholy.

“Death claims her not, too fair for earth,
Her spirit lives—alien of heaven ;
Nor will it know a second birth
When sinful mortals are forgiven !

“Cold is this rock—the wind comes chill,
And mists the gloomy waters cover ;
But oh ! her soul is colder still—
To lose her God—to leave her lover !”

The lake was in profound repose,
Yet one white wave came gently curling,
And as it reach’d the shore, arose
Dim figures—banners gay unfurling.

Onward they move, an airy crowd :
Through each thin form a moonlight ray shone ;
While spear and helm, in pageant proud,
Appear in liquid undulation.

* In the county of Gaiway.

Bright barbed steeds curvetting tread
Their trackless way with antic capers ;
And curtain clouds hang overhead,
Festoon'd by rainbow-colour'd vapours.

And when a breath of air would stir
That drapery of Heaven's own wreathing,
Light wings of prismsy gossamer
Just moved and sparkled to the breathing.

Nor wanting was the choral song,
Swelling in silvery chimes of sweetness ;
To sound of which this subtile throng
Advanced in playful grace and fleetness.

With music's strain, all came and went
Upon poor Cormac's doubting vision ;
Now rising in wild merriment,
Now softly fading in derision.

“ Christ, save her soul,” he boldly cried ;
And when that blessed name was spoken
Fierce yells and fiendish shrieks replied,
And vanished all,—the spell was broken

And now on Corrib's lonely shore,
Freed by his word from power of faëry,
To life, to love, restored once more,
Young Cormac welcomes back his Mary

THE BLACKBIRD.

A JACOBITE RELIC.

[This ballad is inserted in the Jacobite Relics of Scotland, but it is unquestionably Irish. It is sung to an old Irish air of the same name (an londubh, the Blackbird,) and has been in common use all over Munster for a century. But if there were no other evidence, the words are distinctly marked with the faults of early Anglo-Irish poetry—broken metaphors, Irish vowel rhymes, and a hazy indistinctness of conception and expression. It is chiefly valuable for its undoubted antiquity.]

ONCE on a morning of sweet recreation,

I heard a fair lady a-making her moan,
 With sighing and sobbing, and sad lamentation,
 Aye singing, “ My Blackbird for ever is flown !
 He’s all my heart’s treasure, my joy, and my pleasure,
 So justly, my love, my heart follows thee ;
 And I am resolved, in foul or fair weather,
 To seek out my Blackbird, wherever he be.

“ I will go, a stranger to peril and danger,
 My heart is so loyal in every degree ;
 For he’s constant and kind, and courageous in mind :
 Good luck to my Blackbird, wherever he be !
 In Scotland he’s loved and dearly approved,
 In England a stranger he seemeth to be ;
 But his name I’ll advance in Ireland or France.
 Good luck to my Blackbird, wherever he be.

“ The birds of the forest are all met together,
 The turtle is chosen to dwell with the dove,
 And I am resolved, in foul or fair weather,
 Once in the spring-time to seek out my love.
 But since fickle Fortune, which still proves uncertain,
 Hath caused this parting between him and me,
 His right I’ll proclaim, and who dares me blame ?
 Good luck to my Blackbird, wherever he be !

LAMENT OF THE EMIGRANT CONNAUGHT- WOMAN FOR HER DEAD SON.

BY JOHN KEEGAN.

TIME—A chilly evening in September, 1844. SCENE—A rude churchyard in a sequestered hamlet in England. The sexton is digging a grave. A coffin lies convenient, and over it hangs an old woman arrayed in the tattered habiliments of her caste. She had accompanied her only son to the "English harvest," and on their return home he was seized with fever and died in an hospital. She sings the caoine or dirge over the body.

OH! then, God, has it come to my turn for to see
The day that you took my own Ulick from me?
Did I live to look down in that dark narrow hole,
Where they laid him, the pride and the joy of my soul.

Ulla ochone!

Where they laid down the hope and the light of my soul.

They're taking you, darling! no more shall I see
The flash of your blue eyes, a suilish machree; *
Your bed they have made in the cold clammy clay,
And the worms on your brave manly bosom shall prey,

Och, ochone!

The Sasanach worms on your bosom shall prey!

In the land of our fathers where you and I dwelt,
To be sure, cold and hunger we oftentimes felt—
But we had a home, and a spot where to lay
Our heads at the close of each sorrowful day,

Och, mavrone!

Indeed, we saw many a sorrowful day.

Yet, I never murmured nor flew in God's face—
Tho' my belly was hungry my heart was at peace,

* Light of my heart.

When I saw my own bouchal so comely and tall,
 The fairest, and bravest, and best of them all—
Och, asthore!
 It's you was the beauty and flower of them all.

And often you said, "Mother darling don't cry,
 Tho' my corner's a cold one, 'tis your's till you die;"
 But the tyrant—curse on him!—looked into our bawn,
 And drove us like prehauns upon the "shaughrawn,"
Och, ochone!
 May the dark-liver'd "boddagh" die on the "shaugh- rawn."

'Twas God's will that done it, and I won't complain,
 For you died as you liv'd, like a lamb without stain;
 But my blood boils to think you should ask for a grave
 From the dark-looking churl who made you a slave,
*Chorp-an-dhoul!
 An "alien," an outcast, a wandering slave.

Had you died in your own kindly land in the West,
 The mass would be sung and your winding-sheet blest;
 And the wild Connaught girls would throng to your bier,
 With bright tears and all the fair flowers of the year,
Och, ochone!
 With the gems of the heart and the bloom of the year.

But, ah! amongst strangers your white limbs are laid,
 You are stretched—bird alone!—in the Sasanach's shade;
 But the Sasanach, for you, his bell did not toll,
 And no one as much as said, "Peace to your soul,"
Ullah, ochone!
 And none but myself said "God's rest to your soul."

* corp don diabhal, His body to the Devil.

Oh, God! if you'd say to me, Granna* ma sthore,
 Your Ulick is gone where there's rest evermore,
 And if you'd come with him, or wish to be nigh
 Your own moc-na-bointha, † go lie down and die,

Och, mavrone!

With a heart and a half I would lie down and die.

I won't curse the Saxon, I won't curse the clay
 Where my bouchaleen sleeps, from his own far away ;
 But I'd lie down in peace, were it God's holy will
 We were both stretched together on Knockcarrig hill,

Ullah, ochone!

Where it hangs o'er the Shannon, old Knockcarrig hill.

Farewell now, mavourneen, you're gone from my sight,
 But I give you to God and the angels of light,
 And I'm sure the Blessed Virgin is making for thee
 A soft bed in Heaven, a vourneen machree!

A chorra machree!

My blessing go with you, a vourneen machree!

THE WILD GEESE. ‡

A BRIGADE BALLAD.

BY DR. DRENNAN.

How solemn sad by Shannon's flood
 The blush of morning sun appears!
 To men who gave for us their blood,
 Ah! what can woman give but tears?
 How still the field of battle lies!
 No shouts upon the breeze has blown!

* Granna—Grace, or Gertrude, a favourite female name amongst the Connaught peasantry.

† "Moc-na-bointha,"—The widow's only son.

‡ The wild geese was the popular name for the recruits of the Irish Brigade.

We heard our dying country's cries,
 We sit deserted and alone.
 Ogh hone, ogh hone, ogh hone, ogh hone,
 Ogh hone, &c.
 Ah! what can woman give but tears?

Why thus collected on the strand
 Whom yet the God of mercy saves?
 Will ye forsake your native land?
 Will you desert your brothers' graves?
 Their graves give forth a fearful groan—
 Oh! guard your orphans and your wives;
 Like us, make Erin's cause your own,
 Like us, for her yield up your lives.
 Ogh hone, ogh hone, ogh hone, ogh hone,
 Ogh hone, &c.
 Like us, for her yield up your lives.

THE DRINAN DHUN.

A STREET BALLAD.

My love he is fairer than a soft summer's day,
 And his breath is far sweeter than new-mown hay,
 And his hair shines like gold when revived by the sun,
 And the name that they give him's the Drinan Dhun.*

My boy he is gone to cross over the main,
 May God send him safe to his true love again,
 For I wander all day, until night-time comes on,
 And I sleep on the leaves of the Drinan Dhun.

If I had a small cot on the ocean to row,
 I would follow my darling wherever he'd go,
 I'd rather have my true love for to sport and to play,
 Than all the gold treasures on the land and the say.

* Drinan dhun, literally the sloe tree, metaphorically a small dark complexioned man.

My love he is handsome and fair to be seen,
 With his red rosy cheeks he is fit for a queen,
 With his two sparkling eyes as bright as the sun,
 And he is fair as the blossom of the Drinan Dhun.

Impatient I will wait for my love to return,
 And for his long absence I will never cease to mourn,
 I will join with the small birds when the summer comes on,
 For to welcome the blossom of the Drinan Dhun.

THE BATTLE OF THE BOYNE.

[This version of the Boyne Water is in universal use among the Orangemen of Ireland, and is the only one ever sung by them. But that it is not the original song, written a century and a half ago, is perfectly certain. Fragments of the old Boyne Water are still remembered in the North; and Samuel Mac Skimin, the historian of Carrickfergus, had hopes at one time of being able to form a complete copy, from the snatches yet recited among the Orange yeomen of Down and Antrim. We give in an Appendix such fragments as he was able to collect.—The date of the present song is unknown, and it supplanted the original so completely in common use, that inquiries on the subject were not instituted when there was any considerable chance of their being successful. But its plainness, vigour, and minute details, argue it to be of an early date.]

JULY the first, in Oldbridge town,
 There was a grievous battle,
 Where many a man lay on the ground,
 By cannons that did rattle.
 King James he pitched his tents, between
 The lines for to retire;
 But King William threw his bomb-balls in,
 And set them all on fire

Thereat enraged they vowed revenge
Upon King William's forces,
And oft did vehemently cry
That they would stop their courses,
A bullet from the Irish came,
And grazed King William's arm,
They thought his majesty was slain,
Yet it did him little harm.

Duke Schomberg then, in friendly care,
His King would often caution
To shun the spot where bullets hot
Retained their rapid motion ;
But William said, He don't deserve
The name of Faith's Defender,
Who would not venture life and limb
To make a foe surrender.

When we the Boyne began to cross,
The enemy they descended ;
But few of our brave men were lost,
So stoutly we defended ;
The horse was the first that marched o'er,
The foot soon followed after ;
But brave Duke Schomberg was no more,
By venturing over the water.

When valiant Schomberg he was slain,
King William he accosted
His warlike men for to march on,
And he would be the foremost ;
" Brave boys," he said, " be not dismayed,
For the loss of one commander,
For God will be our King this day,
And I'll be general under."

Then stoutly we the Boyne did cross,
To give the enemies battle ;
Our cannon to our foes' great cost,
Like thund'ring claps did rattle.
In majestic mein our Prince rode o'er ;
His men soon followed after,
With blows and shouts put our foes to the rout
The day we crossed the water.

The Protestants of Drogheda
Have reason to be thankful,
That they were not to bondage brought,
They being but a handful.
First to the Tholsel they were brought,
And tried at the Millmount after ;
But brave King William set them free,
By venturing over the water.

The cunning French near to Duleek
Had taken up their quarters,
And fenced themselves on every side,
Still waiting for new orders ;
But in the dead time of the night,
They set the fields on fire,
And long before the morning light,
To Dublin they did retire.

Then said King William to his men,
After the French departed,
I'm glad (said he) that none of ye
Seem to be faint hearted ;
So sheathe your swords and rest a while,
In time we'll follow after ;
Those words he uttered with a smile
The day he crossed the water.

Come let us all with heart and voice
 Applaud our lives' defender,
 Who at the Boyne his valour showed
 And made his foe surrender.
 To God above the praise we'll give Both now and ever after ;
 And bless the glorious memory
 Of King William that crossed the water.

THE FAIRY THORN.

AN ULSTER BALLAD.

BY SAMUEL FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.

“GET up, our Anna dear, from the weary spinning wheel ;
 For your father 's on the hill, and your mother is asleep :
 Come up above the crags, and we'll dance a highland reel
 Around the fairy thorn on the steep.”

At Anna Grace's door 'twas thus the maidens cried,
 Three merry maidens fair in kirtles of the green ;
 And Anna laid the rock and the weary wheel aside,
 The fairest of the four, I ween.

They're glancing through the glimmer of the quiet eve,
 Away in milky wavings of neck and ankle bare ;
 The heavy-sliding stream in its sleepy song they leave,
 And the crags in the ghostly air :

And linking hand and hand, and singing as they go,
 The maids along the hill-side have ta'en their fearless
 way,

Till they come to where the rowan trees in lonely beauty grow
'Beside the Fairy Hawthorn grey.

The Hawthorn stands between the ashes tall and slim,
Like matron with her twin grand-daughters at her knee;
The rowan berries cluster o'er her low head grey and dim
In ruddy kisses sweet to see.

The merry maidens four have ranged them in a row,
Between each lovely couple a stately rowan stem,
And away in mazes wavy, like skimming birds they go,
Oh, never carolled bird like them!

But solemn is the silence of the silvery haze
That drinks away their voices in echoless repose,
And dreamily the evening has stilled the haunted braes,
And dreamier the gloaming grows.

And sinking one by one, like lark-notes from the sky
When the falcon's shadow saileth across the open shaw,
Are hushed the maiden's voices, as cowering down they lie
In the flutter of their sudden awe.

For, from the air above, and the grassy ground beneath,
And from the mountain-ashes and the old Whitethorn between,
A power of faint enchantment doth through their beings
breathe,
And they sink down together on the green.

They sink together silent, and stealing side to side,
 They fling their lovely arms o'er their drooping necks
 so fair,
 Then vainly strive again their naked arms to hide,
 For their shrinking necks again are bare.

Thus clasped and prostrate all, with their heads together bowed,
 Soft o'er their bosom's beating—the only human sound—
 They hear the silky footsteps of the silent fairy crowd,
 Like a river in the air, gliding round.

Nor scream can any raise, nor prayer can any say,
 But wild, wild, the terror of the speechless three—
 For they feel fair Anna Grace drawn silently away,
 By whom they dare not look to see.

They feel their tresses twine with her parting locks of gold,
 And the curls elastic falling, as her head withdraws ;
 They feel her sliding arms from their tranced arms unfold,
 But they dare not look to see the cause :

For heavy on their senses the faint enchantment lies
 Through all that night of anguish and perilous amaze ;
 And neither fear nor wonder can ope their quivering eyes
 Or their limbs from the cold ground raise.

Till out of Night the Earth has rolled her dewy side,
 With every haunted mountain and streamy vale below ;
 When, as the mist dissolves in the yellow morning tide,
 The maidens' trance dissolveth so.

Then fly the ghastly three as swiftly as they may,
 And tell their tale of sorrow to anxious friends in vain—
 They pined away and died within the year and day,
 And ne'er was Anna Grace seen again.

THE AVENGER.

A JACOBITE RELIC.

BY JEREMIAH JOSEPH CALLANAN.

*Da Ofeascin sen la sin bo seasta bfeic m'intin.

OH! Heavens, if that long-wished-for morning I spied,
 As high as three kings I'd leap up in my pride;
 With transport I'd laugh, and my shout should arise,
 As the fire from each mountain blazed bright to the skies.

The Avenger shall lead us right on to the foe;
 Our horns should sound out, and our trumpets should blow;
 Ten thousand huzzas should ascend to high heaven,
 When our Prince was restored, and our fetters were riven.

Oh! Chieftain of Ulster, when will you come forth
 And send your strong cry to the winds of the North?
 The wrongs of a king call aloud for your steel—
 Red stars of the battle—O'Donnell, O'Neill!

Bright house of O'Connor, high offspring of kings,
 Up, up, like the eagle, when heavenward he springs!
 Oh! break you once more from the Saxon's strong rule,
 Lost race of MacMurchad, O'Byrne, and O'Toole.

* Da bfeascin ri an la rin ba rárta beiré m'innitinn, If I could but see that day how well pleased would my mind be.

Momonia of Druids—green dwelling of song!—
Where, where are thy minstrels? why sleep they thus long?

Does no bard live to wake, as they oft did before,
MacCarthy—O'Brien—O'Sullivan More?

O come from your hills, like the waves to the shore,
When the storm-girded headlands are mad with the roar!

Ten thousand huzzas shall ascend to high heaven,
When our Prince is restored, and our fetters are riven.

[The names introduced in this ballad, are amongst those of the principal families in Ireland, some of whom, however, were decided enemies of the Stuarts. The reader cannot fail to observe the strange expectation which the writer entertains of the nature of the Stuart's designs:—They call on him not to come to reinstate himself on the throne of his fathers, but to aid the natives in doing vengeance on "the flint-hearted Saxon." Nothing, however, could be more natural. The Irish Jacobites, (at least the Irish Catholics,) were in the habit of claiming the Stuarts as of the Milesian line, fondly deducing them from Fergus, and the Celts of Ireland. Who the avenger is, whose arrival is prayed for in the song is not accurately known, but circumstances would warrant the date to be 1708, when a general impression prevailed that the field would be taken in favour of the Stuarts, under a commander of more weight and authority than had come forward before, his name having been kept a profound secret.—TR.]

THE LAMENTATION OF HUGH REYNOLDS.

A STREET BALLAD.

[I copied this ballad from a broad-sheet in the collection of Mr. Davis; but could learn nothing of its date, or the circumstances connected with it. It is clearly recent, however, and founded on the story of an abduction, which terminated differently from the majority of these adventures. The popular sympathy in such cases is generally in favour of the gallant; the impression being that an abduction is never attempted without at least a tacit consent on the part of the girl. Whenever she appears as a willing witness for the prosecution it is said she has been tampered with by her friends; and public indignation, with wilful injustice, falls upon the wrong object. The "Lamentation" was probably written for or by the Ballad singers; but it is the best of its bad class.

The student would do well to compare it with the other Street Ballads in the collection; and with the simple old traditional ballads, such as "Shule Aroon" and "Peggy Bawn," that he may discover, if possible, where the charm lies that recommends strains so rude and naked to the most cultivated minds. These ballads have done what the songs of our greatest lyrical poets have not done—delighted both the educated and the ignorant. Whoever hopes for an equally large and contrasted audience must catch their simplicity, directness, and force; or whatever else constitutes their peculiar attraction.]

My name it is Hugh Reynolds, I come of honest parents,

Near Cavan I was born, as plainly you may see;
By loving of a maid, one Catherine Mac Cabe,

My life has been betrayed; she's a dear maid to me.*

The country were bewailing my doleful situation,

But still I'd expectation this maid would set me free;
But, oh! she was ungrateful, her parents proved deceitful,

And though I loved her faithful, she's a dear maid to me.

* "She's a dear maid to me." Perhaps the English reader will require to be told that this is not to be taken in its literal meaning; it is a proverbial expression, implying that he would pay dearly for his acquaintance with her.

Young men and tender maidens, throughout this Irish nation,

Who hear my lamentation, I hope you'll pray for me ;
The truth I will unfold, that my precious blood she sold,
In the grave I must lie cold ; she's a dear maid to me.

For now my glass is run, and the hour it is come,
And I must die for love, and the height of loyalty ;
I thought it was no harm to embrace her in my arms,
Or take her from her parents ; but she's a dear maid to me.

Adieu my loving father, and you my tender mother,
Farewell my dearest brother, who has suffered sore
for me ;
With irons I'm surrounded, in grief I lie confounded,
By perjury unbounded ; she's a dear maid to me.

Now, I can say no more ; to the Law-board I must go,
There to take the last farewell of my friends and counterie ;
May the Angels, shining bright, receive my soul this night,
And convey me into Heaven to the blessed Trinity.

MOLLY CAREW.

BY SAMUEL LOVER.

OCH hone! and what will I do ?

Sure my love is all crost

Like a bud in the frost ;

And there's no use at all in my going to bed,

For 'tis dhrames and not sleep that comes into my head,

And 'tis all about you,
 My sweet Molly Carew—
 And indeed 'tis a sin and a shame!
 You're complater than Nature
 In every feature,
 The snow can't compare
 With your forehead so fair,
 And I rather would see just one blink of your eye,
 Than the prettiest star that shines out of the sky,
 And by this and by that,
 For the matter o' that,
 You're more distant by far than that same!
 Och hone! weirasthru!
 I'm alone in this world without you.

Och hone! but why should I spake
 Of your forehead and eyes,
 When your nose it defies
 Paddy Blake, the schoolmaster, to put it in rhyme, Tho' there's one BURKE, he says, that would call it
 snublime;
 And then for your cheek,
 Troth 'twould take him a week,
 It's beauties to tell, as he'd rather;
 Then your lips! oh, machree!
 In their beautiful glow,
 They a pattern might be
 For the cherries to grow.
 'Twas an apple that tempted our mother, we know,
 For apples were scarce, I suppose, long ago,
 But at this time o' day,
 'Pon my conscience I'll say,
 Such cherries might tempt a man's father!
 Och hone! weirasthru!
 I'm alone in this world without you.

Och hone! by the man in the moon,
 You taze me all ways
 That a woman can plaze,
 For you dance twice as high with that thief, Pat Magee,
 As when you take share of a jig, dear, with me.
 Tho' the piper I bate,
 For fear the owld cheat
 Wouldn't play you your favourite tune.
 And when you're at mass,
 My devotion you crass,
 For 'tis thinking of you,
 I am, Molly Carew.

While you wear, on purpose, a bonnet so deep,
 That I can't at your sweet purty face get a peep,
 Oh, lave off that bonnet,
 Or else I'll lave on it
 The loss of my wandering sowl!
 Och hone! weirasthru!
 Och hone! like an owl,
 Day is night, dear to me, without you!

Och hone! don't provoke me to do it;
 For there's girls by the score
 That loves me—and more,
 And you'd look very quare if some morning you'd meet
 My wedding all marching in pride down the street;
 Troth, you'd open your eyes,
 And you'd die with surprise
 To think 'twasn't you was come to it!
 And faith, Katty Naile,
 And her cow, I go bail,
 Would jump if I'd say
 "Katty Naile, name the day,"
 And tho' you're fair and fresh as a morning in May,
 While she's short and dark like a cold winter's day;

Yet if you don't repent
 Before Easter, when Lent
 Is over, I'll marry for spite,
 Och hone! weirasthru!
 And when I die for you,
 My ghost will haunt you every night.

THE CROPPY BOY.

A BALLAD OF '98.

BY CARROLL MALONE.

“ Good men and true! in this house who dwell,
 To a stranger bouchal, I pray you tell
 Is the priest at home? or may he be seen?
 I would speak a word with Father Green.”

“ The Priest's at home, boy, and may be seen;
 'Tis easy speaking with Father Green;
 But you must wait, till I go and see
 If the holy father alone may be.”

The youth has entered an empty hall—
 What a lonely sound has his light foot-fall!
 And the gloomy chamber's chill and bare,
 With a vested Priest in a lonely chair.

The youth has knelt to tell his sins:
 “ Nomine Dei,” the youth begins;
 At “ mea culpa” he beats his breast,
 And in broken murmurs he speaks the rest.

“At the siege of Ross did my father fall,
And at Gorey my loving brothers all.
I alone am left of my name and race,
I will go to Wexford and take their place.

“I cursed three times since last Easter day—
At mass-time once I went to play ;
I passed the churchyard one day in haste,
And forgot to pray for my mother’s rest.

“I bear no hate against living thing ;
But I love my country above my King.
Now, Father ! bless me, and let me go
To die, if God has ordained it so.”

The Priest said nought, but a rustling noise
Made the youth look above in wild surprise ;
The robes were off, and in scarlet there
Sat a yeoman captain with fiery glare.

With fiery glare and with fury hoarse,
Instead of blessing, he breathed a curse :—
“ ’Twas a good thought boy, to come here and shrive,
For one short hour is your time to live.

“Upon yon river three tenders float,
The Priest’s in one, if he isn’t shot—
We hold his house for our Lord the King,
And, amen say I, may all traitors swing !”

At Geneva Barrack that young man died,
And at Passage they have his body laid.
Good people who live in peace and joy,
Breathe a prayer and a tear for the Croppy Boy.

THE DRUNKARD.

A TALE OF LOW LIFE.

BY THOMAS FURLONG.

[Thirty years ago Thomas Furlong was a grocer's boy in one of the back streets of Dublin. By the force of great natural powers, he made his way from sordid obscurity to a wide reputation and a recognised position in literature. He was not, perhaps, a man of genius, but he possessed talents of great vigour and versatility; and an heroic perseverance. And his success was attained at a time when he had to create a reading public in the country. His most ambitious poems are The Misanthrope, and the Doom of Derenzi; his most popular ones the Plagues of Ireland, (a satire, in which, though an eager emancipator he ran amuck at Orange Lodges, Catholic agitators, and Bible Societies,) his translations from the Irish in Hardiman's Minstrelsy, and his Tales of Low Life, of which we subjoin one of wonderful truth, simplicity, and power. In public life his course was earnest and independent; in political literature he was an able, but somewhat unscrupulous, writer. But no man is entitled to a more charitable judgment. His youth was undisciplined and unguided, and he died in his thirty-third year. He lies in the little churchyard of Drumcondra, near Grose the antiquary and Gandon the architect; under a monument erected by his friend James Hardiman; all names dear to Ireland.]

ALONG Drumcondra road I strolled,

The smoky town was just in sight—

I met a woman, stooped and old,

And she was in a ragged plight.

‘Oh! master dear, for sake of heaven,

In pity look on me;

You'll never miss a penny given

Away in charity!

That I'm in want the world may see—

That I am old I'm sure appears;

At Christmas next my age will be

Just eight-and-sixty years.’

‘And how did all those years go o'er?

What have you through that time been at?’

‘Oh! it would take an hour and more

For me to tell all that.

When I was small, ay, very small,

To service I was sent;

And, by my mother, I was told
 Not to be sulky, stiff, or bold ;
 But, to whatever place I went,
 Still to be ready at a call,
 And act obligingly to all.

‘ Years past, I grew, I worked my way.
 My sweet young mistress on me doated ;
 She in the kitchen stood one day,
 And there she to the cook did say
 That I must be promoted.

‘ She thought it wrong to have me thrust
 In a dark kitchen under ground,
 Exposed to damp, and dirt, and dust,
 When other business could be found.
 Heaven be her bed ! Soon after this
 My kitchen clothes aside were laid :
 Out through the Park, around the town,
 And in the squares, all up and down,
 I walked, with master and with miss,
 A dressy children’s maid.
 Oh, then what easy times I had !
 My look was gay, my heart was glad.

‘ Of gowns I had full half a score,
 I thought the stock would never fail ;
 Nice borders still to each I wore,
 With flounces, a yard deep or more,
 All gathering round the tail ;
 And then I had my big straw bonnet,
 That flapped and fluttered in the wind,
 And there were heaps of ribands on it,
 Tied up in knots of every kind :
 I was a tidy girl to see,
 My mistress took a pride in me.

‘ One evening I got leave to go,
 Under the care of our old cook,
 To see the showmen and the show,
 And all the tents, at that strange fair
 That’s known and talked of every where—

The merry fair of Donnybrook :
 That fair was then, as it is now,
 The place for boozing and a row,

‘ The cook and I dressed very fine,
 And we were to be home at nine.

We went—and heard the merryman,
 And Mr. Punch, and Mr. Clown,
 And I laughed loud at all they said,
 I thought with laughing I’d drop down.

The cook at last to growl began,
 She talked of going home to bed :
 But she was very, very dry,
 And, in good earnest, so was I ;
 She pointed to a great big tent,
 And off we both together went.
 We settled near a table’s end,
 Where she by chance had found a friend ;
 A sprightly pleasant nice young man—
 God rest his soul ! ’twas John M’Cann.

‘ Oh ! Heavens be with you, John M’Cann !
 It’s then you were a neat young man—
 I never, never can forget
 That pleasant evening when we met :
 The cook had known him in her range
 Of friends ; they talked of some they’d seen,
 And I, not willing to seem strange,
 Dropped in at times a word between ;
 And John he listened still to me,

And listened with so sweet a smile—
 And his eyes looked so roguishly,
 That I kept blushing all the while ;
 Indeed I felt my cheeks quite hot,
 But yet I didn't quit the spot.

' Now how it was I cannot say,
 But he a liking took to me,
 For, as we moved to go away,
 He turned and talked quite seriously ,
 Up did he get from off his seat,
 And, as he stood upon his feet,
 By the two hands he held me fast,
 And swore, before a month went past,
 We man and wife should be ;
 The cook she laughed—I nothing said,
 But tittered, and held down my head.

' And faith ! before a month went by,
 His words they turned out true.
 For man and wife were John and I,
 And gay as any other two :
 A little gathering I had made,
 A little more my mistress gave,
 And John a cooper was by trade,
 And every week a pound could save ;
 And at that time, as markets went,
 A pound was not so quickly spent.

' A week before our wedding-day,
 Poor John a little room had got ;
 Our friends who saw it used to say
 That none could wish a cozier spot :
 'Twas two pair front in Aungier-street,
 Near where the coachmen have their stand—

Why should I boast?—but, on my life,
 There was no struggling tradesman's wife,
 In town or country through the land,
 Could show a place so neat ;
 For lots of furniture we had,
 Nice pictures too for every wall,
 And I was proud, and John was glad,
 To hear our taste admired by all :—
 And then it was not very dear,
 The rent was but five pounds a year.

' Oh ! we were both so happy there !
 And we grew happier every day ;
 Upon my mind there was no care—
 The table for our meals was spread,
 When these were done some book I read,
 Or sat and sewed, as humour led,
 While John at work was far away ;
 And then some friend that chance might bring
 Sat with me, and we both talked on,
 Sometimes of many a foolish thing ;
 We prattled till the day was gone,
 For I was giddy, young, and wild,
 And simple as the simplest child.

' A woman lived next room—her name
 Was Mistress Kitty Donohoe—
 When first into the house I came
 I often met her on the stairs,
 But didn't like her showy airs ;
 But she was sprightly company,
 And forced her idle chat on me
 For all that I could say or do :
 On a child's errand she'd come in,
 To get a needle or a pin,
 Or ask what was the day about ;

And then she'd fret and blame the weather,—
 And sometimes slyly she'd pull out
 A little flask of rum or gin,
 And force me just to take a taste—
 Indeed I always drank in haste,
 For still my mind was full of care
 Lest John should come and get us there
 Tippling away together—
 But fond of Mistress Donohoe,
 And fonder of the drop I grew.

' Of visiters she had a train—
 Their names 'twould take an hour to tell ;
 There was Miss Mary-Anne Magrane,
 And Mrs. Young and Mrs. Lawson,
 And Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Dawson ;
 And Mrs. White, from Stocking-lane—
 As good a soul as e'er broke bread ;
 At least, so Mrs. Lawson said ;
 I never knew the lady well,
 But with her came Miss Jenny Bell,
 And one whose name has left my head.

' Miss Degan hurried from the Coombe,
 And from the Rock ran Miss Devine—
 Sometimes they over-thronged her room,
 And then she showed them into mine :
 Off went the bottle to the shop,
 For all these ' ladies' loved the drop

' With this gay set quite great I grew,
 And John's poor pound so tight was drawn,
 That half the week it wouldn't do,
 And then I took his things to pawn.
 Trick followed trick—ill brought on ill—
 I saw not where my guilt began ;

Misfortune to misfortune led—

I had some little beauty still ;
 And, in a weak and wicked hour,
 When money over me had power,
 I vilely wronged my husband's bed—
 Oh ! I was false to John M'Cann.

' And this went on twelve years and more ;

A fit of illness came at last,
 And then my conscience it was sore—
 It keenly paid me for the past.
 Oh ! when that sickness just began,
 Indeed I thought I should have died
 Poor John brought in a holy man,
 Father Fitzhenry was his name,
 And this old priest he often came
 And prayed at my bed-side ;
 'Twould do you good his face to see—
 He looked all peace and piety.

' To this good priest I told my shame—

I told him of my sinful life ;
 He called me by my proper name—
 A wicked and a worthless wife.
 Oh ! the sad lesson that he gave !
 Why, till I'm rotting in the grave,
 I won't—I can't forget what then
 He spoke of—but through life again
 My thoughts, my wishes, never ran
 On any but on John M'Cann.

' I promised before God in heaven

To leave my drinking too :—
 I made the promise ; but, when given,
 I found it would not do.

Oh! sir, I was but up and well,
 When to the drop once more I fell!
 My husband saw that all was gone,
 And let me for a time go on:
 Two growing boys were all we had,
 And they in dirty rags were clad.
 I pawned their clothes—I pawned my own—

I left poor John quite bare at last;
 My figure as a show was shown—
 (So poor, so naked, I had grown)
 'Twas shown as through the streets I passed;
 And many laughed this end to see
 Of all my former finery.

' John bore as much as man could bear,
 But got at last quite tired of me;
 And, in mere madness and despair,
 He bent his course across the sea:
 He took my William in his care,
 As good a son as son could be;
 For he was brought up to the trade,
 And a smart hand he soon was made.

' Good workmen may go any where—
 They settled at New York, 'tis said;
 But they were not a twelvemonth there
 When I got word that both were dead;
 I think at first some tears I shed—
 A tear or two I might let fall,
 But the next naggin banished all.

' Poor naked Joe, my other child,
 Among the blackguards took his round,
 Till one fine morning, in the street,
 By great good luck he chanced to meet

A Swaddling dame, all smooth and mild,
And in that dame a friend he found ;
She took him home, and he was taught
To do as tidy servants ought ;
For clothing he was at no cost—
Or food—Oh ! sir, I'd bless that dame—
But that my boy's poor soul is lost ;
For Joe, I tell it to his shame,
At once took to the holy plan—
A prime sly Swaddler he became ;
And he could whine and wheedle so,
The servants called him " Holy Joe ;"
And, as he grew to be a man,
If any mentioned but my name,
I'm told he'd redden at the same ;
And still he shunned me when I'd call :
'Twas hard—but I deserved it all.

' Well ! to the worst at last I went—
I've begged for twenty years and more
Sometimes my heart has felt content,
And sometimes been both sad and sore ;
Master ! I'd be quite happy now,
If I to yonder shop could go :—
I've but this penny left, I vow—
And that won't get the glass, you know.
Do, master dear !'—I paused in vain,
I could not let her ask again.

DIRGE OF O'SULLIVAN BEAR.

BY J. J. CALLANAN.

[In * * * * * one of the Sullivans of Beerhaven, who went by the name of Morty Oge, fell under the vengeance of the law. He had long been a very popular character in the wild district which he inhabited, and was particularly obnoxious to the local authorities, who had good reason to suspect him of enlisting men for the Irish brigade in the French service, in which it was said he held a captain's commission. Information of his raising these "wild geese," (the name by which such recruits were known,) was given by a Mr. Puxly, on whom, in consequence, O'Sullivan vowed revenge, which he executed by shooting him on Sunday while on his way to church. This called for the interposition of the higher powers, and accordingly a party of military was sent round from Cork to attack O'Sullivan's house. He was daring and well armed; and the house was fortified so that he made an obstinate defence. At last, a confidential servant of his, named Scully, was bribed to wet the powder in the guns and pistols prepared for his defence, which rendered him powerless. He attempted to escape, but while springing over a high wall in the rear of his house, he received a mortal wound in the back. They tied his body to a boat, and dragged it in that manner through the sea from Beerhaven to Cork, where his head was cut off, and fixed on the county jail, where it remained for several years. Such is the story current among the people about Beerhaven. In the version given of it in the rude chronicle of the local occurrences of Cork, there is no mention made of Scully's perfidy; and perhaps that circumstance might have been added by those to whom O'Sullivan was deemed a hero, in order to save his credit as much as possible. The dirge was composed by his nurse, who has made no sparing use of the peculiar energy of cursing, which the Irish language is by all allowed to possess.

In the following song, Morty, in Irish, Muiertach, or Muirchear-tach, is a name very common among the old families of Ireland. It signifies expert at sea. Oge, or Ogie, is young. Where a whole district is peopled, in a great measure, by a sept of one name, such distinguishing titles are necessary, and in some cases even supersede the original appellation. I-vera, or Aoi-vera, is the original name of Beerhaven, Aoi, or I, signifying an island.]

THE sun on Ivera

No longer shines brightly;

The voice of her music

No longer is sprightly;

No more to her maidens

The light dance is dear,

Since the death of our darling,

O'Sullivan Bear.

Scully ! thou false one,
 You basely betray'd him,
 In his strong hour of need,
 When thy right hand should aid him !
 He fed thee—he clad thee—
 You had all could delight thee :
 You left him—you sold him—
 May heaven requite thee !

Scully ! may all kinds
 Of evil attend thee !
 On thy dark road of life
 May no kind one befriend thee !
 May fevers long burn thee,
 And agues long freeze thee !
 May the strong hand of God
 In his red anger seize thee !

Had he died calmly,
 I would not deplore him ;
 Or if the wild strife
 Of the sea-war closed o'er him :
 But with ropes round his white limbs
 Through ocean to trail him,
 Like a fish after slaughter,
 'Tis therefore I wail him.

Long may the curse
 Of his people pursue them ;
 Scully, that sold him,
 And soldier that slew him !
 One glimpse of heaven's light
 May they see never !
 May the hearth-stone of hell
 Be their best bed for ever !

In the hole, which the vile hands
Of soldiers had made thee ;
Unhonour'd, unshrouded,
And headless they laid thee.
No sigh to regret thee,
No eye to rain o'er thee,
No dirge to lament thee,
No friend to deplore thee !

Dear head of my darling,
How gory and pale
These aged eyes see thee,
High spiked on their gaol !
That cheek in the summer sun
Ne'er shall grow warm ;
Nor that eye e'er catch light,
But the flash of the storm.

A curse, blessed ocean,
Is on thy green water,
From the haven of Cork,
To Ivera of slaughter :
Since thy billows were dyed
With the red wounds of fear,
Of Muiertach Oge,
Our O'Sullivan Bear !

THE FATE OF THE FORTIES.

BY HENRY GRATTAN CURRAN.

AN humble peasant's fate I sing ; let wealth and power disdain

To praise a poor man's faithfulness, or of his wrongs complain—

But withered be my heart and tongue, when I refuse a strain

To men the victims of the faith that broke a nation's chain.

Hurrah for the valiant Forties*—the men of the olden time.

We all remember, where the stream so gently turns aside
To spare yon hawthorn, grateful for its crown of summer pride,

How snug the sheltered cabin stood, and rain and storm defied,

Shielding a man whose humble trust adored the hand that tried.

A poor, but pious man he was—that man of the olden time.

With ruddy cheeks around his hearth six laughing children stood,

And kindly turned that old man's eye on his own flesh and blood.

His daily labour won for them a home, and clothes, and food—

And, as they broke their daily bread, he taught them
Heaven was good,

And bade them eat in thankfulness—good man of the olden time !

* The Forties, i. e. the Forty-shilling Freeholders.

But when election time was come, who then too rich or grand
 To crown that humble peasant's floor, to seize his rugged hand,
 To ask his vote and interest, and swear like him to stand,
 And peril life and liberty for faith and fatherland?
 For he was "a real stanch Forty"—the pride of the olden time.

But times were changed ; the fight was fought ; the struggle overpast,
 And lost the power the Forties used so bravely to the last ;
 Like broken swords these dauntless men aside were falsely cast ;
 That hearth was quenched, that cabin's wall in ruin
 strewed the blast :
 And where is he,—the Forty—the heart of the olden time ?—

Now sickness grows on want, the hedge a shelter rude affords,
 Poor broken man ! his madness raves in Freedom's thrilling words—
 " ' Who would be free'—Awake !—Arise !—' We'll cast away their cords :'
 " We're poor, but not in spirit,—we have hearts as big as lords ;
 " For are we not the Forties ?"—ah ! he thinks 'tis the olden time.

They wept not when the mortal cloud came down upon that eye ;
 They wept not when cold death had hushed his children's hungry cry ;

But looked upon the damp bare earth, and to the naked sky,

And muttered—"To the poor it is a blessed thing to die;"

For they, too, had been Forties—the pride of the olden time.

MY CONNOR.

OH! weary's on money,—and weary's on wealth,
And sure we don't want them while we have our health.

'Twas they tempted Connor over the sea,
And I lost my lover, my Lurle mo c'roide.*

Smiling—beguiling—cheering—endearing—

Oh! dearly I lov'd him, and he loved me.

By each other delighted—and fondly united—

My heart's in the grave with my Lurle mo c'roide.

My Connor was handsome, good-humoured, and tall;
At hurling and dancing the best of them all.

But when he came courting beneath our old tree,
His voice was like music—my Lurle mo c'roide.

Smiling, &c.

So true was his heart and so artless his mind,
He could not think ill of the worst of mankind.

He went bail for his cousin who ran beyond sea,
And all his debts fell on my Lurle mo c'roide.

Smiling, &c.

Yet still I told Connor that I'd be his bride,—
In sorrow or death not to stir from his side.

He said he could ne'er bring misfortune on me;

But sure I'd be rich with my Lurle mo c'roide.

Smiling, &c.

* Commonly written Cushla machree, i. e. "Vein of my heart."

The morning he left us I ne'er will forget ;
 Not an eye in our village but with crying was wet,
 Don't cry any more mo mhujhujh, said he,
 For I will return to my Luirle mo c'roide.
 Smiling, &c.

Sad as I felt then, hope mixed with my care.
 Alas! I have nothing left now but despair.
 His ship—it went down in the midst of the sea,
 And its wild waves roll over my Luirle mo c'roide.

Smiling—beguiling—cheering—endearing—
 Oh! dearly I lov'd him and he loved me.
 By each other delighted—and fondly united—
 My heart's in the grave with my Luirle mo c'roide.

CASHEL OF MUNSTER.

TRANSLATED FROM THE IRISH,

BY SAMUEL FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.

I'd wed you without herds, without money, or rich array,
 And I'd wed you on a dewy morning at day-dawn grey ;
 My bitter woe it is, love, that we are not far away
 In Cashel town, though the bare deal board were our marriage bed this day !

Oh, fair maid, remember the green hill side,
 Remember how I hunted about the valleys wide ;
 Time now has worn me ; my locks are turned to grey,
 The year is scarce and I am poor, but send me not, love,
 away !

Oh, deem not my blood is of base strain, my girl,
 Oh, think not my birth was as the birth of the churl;
 Marry me, and prove me, and say soon you will,
 That noble blood is written on my right side still!

My purse holds no red gold, no coin of the silver white,
 No herds are mine to drive through the long twilight,
 But the pretty girl that would take me, all bare though
 I be and lone,

Oh, I'd take her with me kindly to the county Tyrone.

Oh, my girl, I can see 'tis in trouble you are,
 And, oh, my, girl, I see 'tis your people's reproach you bear:

I am a girl in trouble for his sake with whom I fly,
 And, oh, may no other maiden know such reproach
 as I!

THE LADY OF ALBANY'S LAMENT FOR KING CHARLES.

A JACOBITE RELIC, TRANSLATED FROM THE IRISH,

BY EDWARD WALSH.

I'LL not reveal my true love's name;
 Betimes 'twill swell the voice of fame—
 But, O! may heaven, my grief to quell,
 Restore the hero safe and well!

 My hero brave, ma ghile, m'fhear,*
 My kindred love, ma ghile, m'fhear;
 What wringing woes my bosom knows,
 Since cross'd the seas ma ghile, m'fhear!

His glancing eyes I may compare
 To diamond dew on rose-buds rare—

* mazole m'fear, my brightness (of my heart) is my husband. The English reader will pronounce the Irish here as if written ma yilli mar.

And love and valour brighten o'er
The features of my bosom's store !
My hero brave, &c.

No cuckoo's note by fell or flood,
No hunter's cry through hazel wood,
Nor mist-wrapt valley yields me joy,
Since cross'd the seas my royal boy.
My hero brave, &c.

Oppress'd with grief, I hourly cry,
With bursting heart and tearful eye—
Since we did thee, fair youth, resign
For distant shores, what woes are mine !
My hero brave, &c.

The sun his golden glory shrouds
In mantle sad of sable clouds ;
The threat'ning sky of grief portends,
Since through far realms our lion wends !
My hero brave, &c.

That haughty, noble, youthful knight,
Of feature bland—of spirit light—
Strong-handed, swift, in war's wild throng,
To chase to death the brave and strong !
My hero brave, &c.

His wreathed hair, in graceful flow
Of ringlet rare, falls full below
His manly waist, in yellow fold,
Like silken threads of curling gold !
My hero brave, &c.

Like Aongus Oge he bears command,
Or Louis of the trenchant brand,
Or Daire's son, the great Conroy,— Brave Irish chiefs, my royal boy !
My hero brave, &c.

Or Conall, who strong ramparts won,
 Or Fergus, regal Rogia's son,
 Or Conor, Ullad's glorious king,
 Whom harp-strings praise and poets sing—
 My hero brave, &c.

Wake, wake, the wild-harp's wildest sound,
 Send sparkling flagons flowing round—
 Fill high the wine-cup's tide of joy,—
 This health to thee, my royal boy!

My hero brave, ma ghile, m'fhear,
 My kindred love, ma ghile, m'fhear;
 What wringing woes my bosom knows,
 Since cross'd the seas ma ghile, m'fhear!

THE CLAN OF MAC CAURA.*

BY D. F. M'CARTHY.

OH! bright are the names of the chieftains and sages,
 That shine like the stars through the darkness of ages,
 Whose deeds are inscribed on the pages of story,
 There for ever to live in the sunshine of glory—
 Heroes of history, phantoms of fable,
 Charlemagne's champions, and Arthur's Round Table—
 Oh! but they all a new lustre could borrow
 From the glory that hangs round the name of MacCaura!

Thy waves, Manzanares, wash many a shrine,
 And proud are the castles that frown o'er the Rhine,

* Mac Carthy—Mac Cartha (the correct way of spelling the name in Roman characters) is pronounced in Irish Mac Caura, the th or dotted t having, in that language, the soft sound of h

And stately the mansions whose pinnacles glance
Through the elms of Old England and vineyards of France;

Many have fallen, and many will fall—
Good men and brave men have dwelt in them all—
But as good and as brave men, in gladness and sorrow,
Have dwelt in the halls of the princely MacCaura!

Montmorency, Medina, unheard was thy rank
By the dark-eyed Iberian and light-hearted Frank,
And your ancestors wandered, obscure and unknown,
By the smooth Guadalquiver and sunny Garonne—
Ere Venice had wedded the sea, or enrolled
The name of a Doge in her proud “Book of Gold;”
When her glory was all to come on like the morrow,
There were chieftains and kings of the clan of MacCaura!

Proud should thy heart beat, descendant of Heber, †
Lofty thy head as the shrines of the Guebre,
Like them are the halls of thy forefathers shattered,
Like their's is the wealth of thy palaces scattered.
Their fire is extinguished—your flag long unfurled—
But how proud were ye both in the dawn of the world!
And should both fade away, oh! what heart would not sorrow

O'er the towers of the Guebre—the name of MacCaura!

What a moment of glory to cherish and dream on,
When far o'er the sea came the ships of Heremon,
With Heber, and Ir, and the Spanish patricians,
To free Inis-Fail from the spells of magicians.

* Montmorency and Medina are respectively at the head of the French and Spanish nobility.—The first Doge elected in Venice in 709. Voltaire considered the families whose names were inscribed in The Book of Gold at the founding of the city as entitled to the first place in European nobility.—Burke's Commoners:

† The Mac Carthys trace their origin to Heber Fionn, the eldest son of Milesius, King of Spain, through Oilíoll Ólium, King of Munster, in the third century.—Shrines of the Guebre—The Round Towers.

Oh! reason had these for their quaking and pallor,
 For what magic can equal the strong sword of valour?
 Better than spells are the axe and the arrow,
 When wielded or flung by the hand of MacCaura!*

From that hour a MacCaura had reigned in his pride
 O'er Desmond's green valleys and rivers so wide,
 From thy waters, Lismore, to the torrents and rills
 That are leaping for ever down Brandon's brown hills—
 The billows of Bantry, the meadows of Bear,
 The wilds of Evaugh, and the groves of Glancare—
 From the Shannon's soft shores to the banks of the Barrow—

All owned the proud sway of the princely MacCaura!

In the house of Miodchuart,† by princes surrounded,
 How noble his step when the trumpet was sounded,
 And his clansmen bore proudly his broad shield before him,

And hung it on high in that bright palace o'er him;
 On the left of the monarch the chieftain was seated,
 And happy was he whom his proud glances greeted,
 'Mid monarchs and chiefs at the great Feis of Tara—
 Oh! none was to rival the princely MacCaura!

To the halls of the Red Branch, when conquest was o'er,
 The champions their rich spoils of victory bore,‡

* Heremon and Ir were also the sons of Milesius.—The people who were in possession of the country when the Milesians invaded it, were the Tuatha de Dauans, so called, says Keating, "from their skill in necromancy, of whom some were so famous as to be called gods."

† The house of Miodchuart was an apartment in the palace of Tara, where the provincial kings met for the dispatch of public business, at the Feis (pronounced as one syllable), or parliament of Tara, which assembled then once in every three years—the ceremony alluded to is described in detail by Keating. See Petrie's "Tara."

‡ The house of the Red Branch was situated in the stately palace of Eamhain (or Emania), in Ulster; here the spoils taken from the foreign foe were hung up, and the chieftains who won them were called Knights of the Red Branch.

And the sword of the Briton, the shield of the Dane,
 Flashed bright as the sun on the walls of Eamhain—
 There Dathy and Niall bore trophies of war,
 From the peaks of the Alps and the waves of the Loire;*
 But no knight ever bore from the hills of Ivaragh
 The breast-plate or axe of a conquered MacCaura!

In chasing the red deer what step was the fleetest,
 In singing the love song what voice was the sweetest—
 What breast was the foremost in courting the danger—
 What door was the widest to shelter the stranger—†
 In friendship the truest, in battle the bravest—
 In revel the gayest, in council the gravest—
 A hunter to-day and a victor to-morrow?
 Oh! who but a chief of the princely MacCaura!

But, oh! proud MacCaura, what anguish to touch on
 The one fatal stain of thy princely escutcheon—
 In thy story's bright garden the one spot of bleakness—
 Through ages of valour the one hour of weakness!
Thou, the heir of a thousand chiefs, sceptred and royal—
Thou, to kneel to the Norman and swear to be loyal!
 Oh! a long night of horror, and outrage, and sorrow,
 Have we wept for thy treason, base Diarmid MacCaura!

Oh! why, ere you thus to the foreigner pandered,
 Did you not bravely call round your Emerald standard,
 The chiefs of your house of Lough Lene and Clan Awley.
 O'Donogh, MacPatrick, O'Driscoll, MacAwley,

* Dathy was killed at the foot of the Alps by lightning, and Niall (his uncle and predecessor), by an arrow fired from the opposite side of the river by one of his own generals as he sat in his tent on the banks of the Loire in France.

† A branch of the Mac Carthy's was called "Rabagh," MAC CARTEAIG RABACH, Mac Carthy the swarthy.

O'Sullivan More, from the towers of Dunkerron,
 And O'Mahon, the chieftain of green Ardinterran?
 As the sling sends the stone, or the bent bow the arrow,
 Every chief would have come at the call of MacCaura?

Soon, soon, didst thou pay for that error in woe—*
 Thy life to the Butler—thy crown to the foe—
 Thy castles dismantled, and strewn on the sod—
 And the homes of the weak, and the abbeyes of God!
 No more in thy halls is the wayfarer fed—
 Nor the rich mead sent round, nor the soft heather spread—
 Nor the clarsech's sweet notes, now in mirth, now in sorrow—
 All, all have gone by, but the name of MacCaura!

MacCaura, the pride of thy house is gone by,
 But its name cannot fade, and its fame cannot die—
 Though the Arigideen, with its silver waves, shine†
 Around no green forests or castles of thine—
 Though the shrines that you founded no incense doth hallow,
 Nor hymns float in peace down the echoing Allo—‡
 One treasure thou keepest—one hope for the morrow—
 True hearts yet beat of the clan of MacCaura!

* Diarmid Mac Carthy, King of Desmond, and Daniel O'Brien, King of Thomond, were the first of the Irish princes to swear fealty to Henry the Second.

† ‡ The Arigideen means the little silver stream, and Allo the echoing river—by these rivers and many others in the South of Ireland, castles were erected and monasteries founded by the Mac Carthys.

WILLY GILLILAND.

AN ULSTER BALLAD.

BY SAMUEL FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.

UP in the mountain solitudes, and in a rebel ring,
He has worshipped God upon the hill, in spite of church and king ;
And sealed his treason with his blood on Bothwell bridge
he hath ;
So he must fly his father's land, or he must die the death ;
For comely Claverhouse has come along with grim Dalzell,
And his smoking rooftree testifies they've done their errand well.

In vain to fly his enemies he fled his native land ;
Hot persecution waited him upon the Carrick strand ;
His name was on the Carrick cross, a price was on his head.
A fortune to the man that brings him in, alive or dead !
And so on moor and mountain, from the Lagan to the Bann,
From house to house, and hill to hill, he lurked an outlawed man.

At last, when in false company he might no longer bide,
He staid his houseless wanderings upon the Collon side ;
There in a cave all under ground he laired his heathy den,
Ah, many a gentleman was fain to earth like hill fox then !
With hound and fishing-rod he lived on hill and stream,
by day,
At night, betwixt his fleet greyhound and his bonny mare he lay.

It was a summer evening, and, mellowing and still,
Glenwhirry to the setting sun lay bare from hill to hill;
For all that valley pastoral held neither house nor tree,
But spread abroad and open all, a full fair sight to see,
From Slemish foot to Collon top lay one unbroken green;
Save where in many a silver coil the river glanced between.

And on the river's grassy bank, even from the morning grey,
He at the angler's pleasant sport had spent the summer
day:
Ah! many a time and oft I've spent the summer day from dawn,
And wondered, when the sunset came, where time and care had gone,
Along the reaches curling fresh, the wimpling pools and streams,
Where he that day his cares forgot in these delightful dreams.

His blithe work done, upon a bank the outlaw rested
now,
And laid the basket from his back, the bonnet from his brow,
And there, his hand upon the Book, his knee upon the sod,
He filled the lonely valley with the gladsome word of God;
And for a persecuted kirk, and for her martyrs dear,
And against a godless church and king he spoke up loud and clear.

And now, upon his homeward way he crossed the Collon
high,
And over bush and bank and brae he sent abroad his eye;

But all was darkening peacefully in grey and purple haze,
The thrush was silent in the banks, the lark upon the braes—

When suddenly shot up a blaze—from the cave's mouth it came ;

And troopers' steeds and troopers' caps are glancing in the same !

He couched among the heather, and he saw them, as he lay,

With three long yells at parting, ride lightly east away ;
Then down with heavy heart he came, to sorry cheer came he,

For ashes black were crackling where the green whins used to be,

And stretched among the prickly coomb his heart's blood smoking round,

From slender nose to breast-bone cleft, lay dead his good greyhound !

“ They've slain my dog, the Philistines ! they've ta'en my bonny mare ! ”—

He plunged into the smoky hole ; no bonny beast was there—

He groped beneath his burning bed, (it burned him to the bone,)

Where his good weapon used to be, but broadsword there was none ;

He reeled out of the stifling den, and sat down on a stone,
And in the shadows of the night 'twas thus he made his moan—

“ I am a houseless outcast ; I have neither bed nor board,
Nor living thing to look upon, nor comfort save the Lord :

Yet was the good Elijah once in worse extremity ;
 Who succoured him in his distress, He now will succour
 me,
 He now will succour me, I know ; and, by His holy name,
 I'll make the doers of this deed right dearly rue the same !

“ My bonny mare ! I've ridden you when Claver'se rode behind,
 And from the thumbscrew and the boot you bore me like the wind ;
 And, while I have the life you saved, on your sleek flank,
 I swear,
 Episcopalian rowel shall never ruffle hair !
 Though sword to wield they've left me none—yet Wallace
 wight, I wis,
 Good battle did on Irvine side wi' waur weapon than this.”—

His fishing-rod with both his hands he griped it as he spoke,
 And, where the butt and top were spliced, in pieces twain he broke ;
 The limber top he cast away, with all its gear abroad,
 But, grasping the tough hickory butt, with spike of iron shod,
 He ground the sharp spear to a point ; then pulled his bonnet down,
 And, meditating black revenge, set forth for Carrick town.

The sun shines bright on Carrick wall and Carrick Castle grey,
 And up thine aisle, Saint Nicholas, has ta'en his morning way ;

And to the North-Gate sentinel displayeth far and near
Sea, hill, and tower, and all thereon, in dewy freshness clear,
Save where, behind a ruined wall, himself alone to view,
Is peering from the ivy green a bonnet of the blue.

The sun shines red on Carrick wall and Carrick Castle old,
And all the western buttresses have changed their grey for gold ;
And from thy shrine, Saint Nicholas ! the pilgrim of the sky
Hath gone in rich farewell, as fits such royal votary ;
But, as his last red glance he takes down past black
Slieve-a-true,
He leaveth where he found it first, the bonnet of the blue.

Again he makes the turrets grey stand out before the hill,
Constant as their foundation rock, there is the bonnet
still !
And now the gates are opened, and forth in gallant show
Prick jeering grooms and burghers blythe, and troopers in a row ;
But one has little care for jest, so hard bested is he
To ride the outlaw's bonny mare, for this at last is she !

Down comes her master with a roar, her rider with a groan,
The iron and the hickory are through and through him gone !

He lies a corpse ; and where he sat, the outlaw sits
 again,
 And once more to his bonny mare he gives the spur and rein ;
 Then some with sword, and some with gun, they ride and run amain ;
 But sword and gun, and whip and spur, that day they plied in vain !
 Ah ! little thought Willy Gilliland, when he on Skerry side
 Drew bridle first, and wiped his brow after that weary ride,
 That where he lay like hunted brute, a caverned outlaw lone,
 Broad lands and yeomen tenantry should yet be there his own ;
 Yet so it was ; and still from him descendants not a few Draw birth and lands, and, let me trust, draw love of Freedom too.

THE DESMOND.*

BY THOMAS MOORE.

By the Feal's wave benighted,
 No star in the skies,
 To thy door by Love lighted,
 I first saw those eyes.

* Thomas, the heir of the Desmond family, had accidentally been so engaged in the chase, that he was benighted near Tralee, and obliged to take shelter at the Abbey of Feal, in the house of one of his dependents, called Mac Cormac. Catherine, a beautiful daughter of his host, instantly inspired the Earl with a violent passion, which he could not subdue. He married her, and by this inferior alliance alienated his followers, whose brutal pride regarded this indulgence of his love as an unpardonable degradation of his family."—Leland, vol. ii.

Some voice whisper'd o'er me,
As the threshold I crost,
There was ruin before me,
If I lov'd, I was lost.

Love came, and brought sorrow
Too soon in his train ;
Yet so sweet, that to-morrow
'Twere welcome again.
Though misery's full measure
My portion should be,
I would drain it with pleasure,
If pour'd out by thee.

You, who call it dishonour
To bow to this flame,
If you've eyes, look but on her,
And blush while you blame.
Hath the pearl less whiteness
Because of its birth ?
Hath the violet less brightness
For growing near earth ?

No—Man for his glory
To ancestry flies ;
But woman's bright story
Is told in her eyes.
While the Monarch but traces
Through mortals his line,
Beauty, born of the Graces,
Ranks next to Divine !

O'BRIEN OF ARRA.

BY THOMAS DAVIS, M.R.I.A.

AIR—" The Piper of Blessington."

[Arra is a small mountain tract, south of Lough Deargairt, and north of the Camailte (vulgo the Keeper) hills. It was the seat of a branch of the Thomond princes, called the O'Briens of Arra, who hold an important place in the Munster Annals.]

TALL are the towers of O'Kennedy—
 Broad are the lands of MacCarha—
 Desmond feeds five hundred men a-day ;
 Yet, here's to O'Brien of Arra !
 Up from the Castle of Drumineer,
 Down from the top of Camailte,
 Clansman and kinsman are coming here
 To give him the CEAD MILE FAILTE.

See you the mountains look huge at eve—
 So is our chieftain in battle—
 Welcome he has for the fugitive,
 Usquebaugh, fighting, and cattle !
 Up from the Castle of Drumineer,
 Down from the top of Camailte,
 Gossip and ally are coming here
 To give him the CEAD MILE FAILTE.

Horses the valleys are tramping on,
 Sleek from the Sasanach manger—
 Creaghts the hills are encamping on,
 Empty the bawns of the stranger !
 Up from the Castle of Drumineer,
 Down from the top of Camailte,
 Kern and bonaght are coming here
 To give him the CEAD MILE FAILTE.

He has black silver from Killaloe—

Ryan and Carroll are neighbours

Nenagh submits with a pillileu—

Butler is meat for our sabres !

Up from the Castle of Drumineer,

Down from the top of Camailte,

Ryan and Carroll are coming here

To give him the CEAD MILE FAILTE.

'Tis scarce a week since through Ossory

Chased he the Baron of Durrow—

Forced him five rivers to cross, or he

Had died by the sword of Red Murrough !

Up from the Castle of Drumineer,

Down from the top of Camailte,

All the O'Briens are coming here

To give him the CEAD MILE FAILTE.

Tall are the towers of O'Kennedy—

Broad are the lands of MacCarha—

Desmond feeds five hundred men a-day ;

Yet, here's to O'Brien of Arra !

Up from the Castle of Drumineer,

Down from the top of Camailte,

Clansman and kinsman are coming here

To give him the CEAD MILE FAILTE.

THE IRISH MOTHER IN THE PENAL DAYS.

BY JOHN BANIM.

Now welcome, welcome, baby-boy, unto a mother's fears,
 The pleasure of her sufferings, the rainbow of her tears,
 The object of your father's hope, in all he hopes to do,
 A future man of his own land, to live him o'er anew !

How fondly on thy little brow a mother's eye would trace,
 And in thy little limbs, and in each feature of thy face,
 His beauty, worth, and manliness, and every thing that's his,
 Except, my boy, the answering mark of where the fetter is!

Oh! many a weary hundred years his sires that fetter wore,
 And he has worn it since the day that him his mother
 bore;
 And now, my son, it waits on you, the moment you are born,
 The old hereditary badge of suffering and scorn!

Alas, my boy so beautiful!—alas, my love so brave!
 And must your gallant Irish limbs still drag it to the grave!
 And you, my son, yet have a son, fore-doom'd a slave to be,
 Whose mother still must weep o'er him the tears I weep o'er thee!

THE MINSTREL'S WALK.

BY REV. JAMES WILLS, A.M.

Author of "Lives of Illustrious Irishmen."

(To the old Irish air of "Bidh mid a gol sa poga namban.")

GREEN hills of the west, where I carolled along,
 In the May-day of life, with my harp and my song.
 Though the winter of time o'er my spirit hath rolled,
 And the steps of the minstrel are weary and old;

Though no more by those famous old haunts shall I stray—

Once the themes of my song, and the guides of my way,
That each had its story, and true-hearted friend—

Before I forget ye, life's journey shall end.

Oh! 'twas joy in the prime of life's morning to go
On the path where Clan Connell once followed Hugh Roe,

O'er the hill of Ceiscorran, renowned Ballymote,
By the Boyle, or by Newport, all passes of note,
Where the foe their vain armaments haughtily kept;
But the foot of th' avenger went by while they slept—
The hills told no tale—but the night-cloud was red,
And the friends of the Sasanach quaked at their tread.

By the plains of Rath Croghan, fields famous of yore,
Though stronghold and seat of the kingly no more;
By Tusk and Tomona, hill, valley, and plain,
To grey Ballintubber, O'Connor's domain;
Then ages rolled backward in lengthened array,
In song and old story, the long summer day;
And cloud-like, the glories of Connaught rolled by,
Till they sank in the horrors of grim Athenry!

Through the heaths of Kiltullagh, kind, simple, though rude,

To Aeluin's bright waters, where Willsborough stood;
Ballinlough then spoke welcome from many a door,
Where smiles lit kind faces that now smile no more:
Then away to the Moyne, o'er the Moors of Mayo,
Still onward, still welcomed by high and by low—Blake, Burke, and O'Malley, Lynch, Kirwan, and Browne;

By forest, lake, mountain, through village and town.

And kind were the voices that greeted my way—

'Twas cead mile failte at closing of day,

When young hearts beat lightly, and labour was done,
 For joy tracked my steps as light follows the sun.
 Then tales pleased the hamlet, and news cheered the hall,
 And the tune of old times was still welcome to all ;
 The praise of thy glory, dear Land of the West—
 But thy praises are still, and thy kind bosoms rest.

My blessing rest with you, dear friends, though no more
 Shall the poor and the weary rejoice at your door ;
 Though like stars to your homes I have seen you depart,
 Still ye live, O ye live, in each vein of my heart !
 Still the light of your looks on my darkness is thrown ;
 Still your voices breathe round me when weary and lone ;
 Like shades ye come back with each feeling old strain—
 But the world shall ne'er look on your equals again.

GOUGAUNE BARRA.

BY J. J. CALLANAN.

[The Lake of Gougaune Barra, i. e. the hollow, or recess of Saint Finn Barr, in the rugged territory of Ibh-Laoghaire, (the O'Learys' country,) in the west end of the county of Cork, is the parent of the river Lee. Its waters embrace a small but verdant island, of about half an acre in extent, which approaches its eastern shore. The lake, as its name implies, is situate in a deep hollow, surrounded on every side, (save the east, where its superabundant waters are discharged,) by vast and almost perpendicular mountains, whose dark inverted shadows are gloomily reflected in its still waters beneath. The names of those mountains are Dereen, (the little oak wood,) where not a tree now remains; Muolagh, which signifies a country—a region—a map, perhaps so called from the wide prospect which it affords; Nad an' uillar, the Eagle's Nest, and Faoille na Gougane, i. e. the cliffs of Gougaune, with its steep and frowning precipices, the home of an hundred echoes.]

THERE is a green island in lone Gougaune Barra,
 Where Allua of songs rushes forth as an arrow ;
 In deep-vallied Desmond—a thousand wild fountains
 Come down to that lake, from their home in the mountains.

There grows the wild ash, and a time-stricken willow
Looks chidingly down on the mirth of the billow ;
As, like some gay child, that sad monitor scorning,
It lightly laughs back to the laugh of the morning.

And its zone of dark hills—oh ! to see them all bright'ning,
When the tempest flings out its red banner of lightning,
And the waters rush down, 'mid the thunder's deep rattle,
Like clans from their hills at the voice of the battle ;
And brightly the fire-crested billows are gleaming,
And wildly from Mullagh the eagles are screaming.
Oh ! where is the dwelling in valley, or highland,
So meet for a bard as this lone little island ?

How oft when the summer sun rested on Clara,
And lit the dark heath on the hills of Ivera,
Have I sought thee, sweet spot, from my home by the ocean,
And trod all thy wilds with a minstrel's devotion,
And thought of thy bards, when assembling together,
In the cleft of thy rocks, or the depth of thy heather ;
They fled from the Saxon's dark bondage and slaughter,
And waked their last song by the rush of thy water.

High sons of the lyre, oh ! how proud was the feeling,
To think while alone through that solitude stealing,
Though loftier Minstrels green Erin can number,
I only awoke your wild harp from its slumber,
And mingled once more with the voice of those fountains
The songs even echo forgot on her mountains ;
And glean'd each grey legend, that darkly was sleeping
Where the mist and the rain o'er their beauty were creeping.

Least bard of the hills ! were it mine to inherit
The fire of thy harp, and the wing of thy spirit,

With the wrongs which like thee to our country has bound me,
 Did your mantle of song fling its radiance around me,
 Still, still in those wilds might young liberty rally,
 And send her strong shout over mountain and valley,
 The star of the west might yet rise in its glory,
 And the land that was darkest, be brightest in story.

I too shall be gone;—but my name shall be spoken
 When Erin awakes, and her fetters are broken;
 Some Minstrel will come, in the summer eve's gleaming,
 When Freedom's young light on his spirit is beaming,
 And bend o'er my grave with a tear of emotion,
 Where calm Avon-Buec seeks the kisses of ocean,
 Or plant a wild wreath, from the banks of that river,
 O'er the heart, and the harp, that are sleeping for ever,

THE BATTLE OF CALLAN.*

A. D. 1261.

BY EDWARD WALSH.

FITZ-THOMAS went forth to the slaughter all burning,
 And the dame by Tra-leigh waits the robber's returning,
 With the deep-lowing creach, † with the rich plunder laden—

The altar's best gold, the rare pearls of the maiden!

* During the administration of William Den, Lord Justice of Ireland, the MacCarties entered Desmond, and by means of an ambuscade, surprised and slew John Fitz-Thomas, ancestor to the Fitz-Geralds, and his son, Maurice, at Glanorought, in this county (Kerry), which defeat so reduced the Fitz-Geralds that none of that name durst put a plough into ground for twelve years, until dissensions arising among the Irish chiefs, the Fitz-Geralds recovered their former authority.—Smith's History of the County of Kerry, p. 235.

† Creach—spoils of cattle.

Winding down by the Ruachta his lances were gleaming;
 Floating, wild as a meteor, his banners were streaming;
 He rode with the spoils of all Desmond around him,
 But the wrath of the Gael, in its red vengeance, found him!

More swift than the eagle from Skellig's high eyrie,
 Than whirlwinds of Corrin in hostings of Faëry—
 Dark as storm o'er Dun-Mor to the ocean-tir'd toiler, Burst MacCartie's fierce wrath on the path of the spoiler!

O'Sullivan Mor, of the mountain and valley,
 O'Connor, the chief of the tall-masted galley,
 O'Driscoll, the scourge of the Sasanach sailor,
 Left Cogan's proud daughter a desolate wailer.*

For him that hath none from the gaunt wolf to save
 him,
 To stanch the wide wound that the fierce clansman gave him,
 To weep the lost chief, with his battle-shield riven,
 Cloven down by the war-axe, unhoucell'd, unshriven!

With the blood of the Rievers, that rode to the foray,
 From Maing to Moyalla, the kirtles are gory—
 The saffron-dy'd shirts, by the Cashin and Carrow,
 Claim thy care at the fountain, fair maiden, to-morrow!

Chant the deeds of the warriors in chivalry vying—
 The doom of the Rievers, all prostrate or flying—
 The false Saxon's fear—as rejoicing thou lavest
 The blood-gouts that burst from the breasts of his bravest!

THE SORROWFUL LAMENTATION OF CAL-
LAGHAN, GREALLY, AND MULLEN,

KILLED AT THE FAIR OF TURLOUGHMORE.

A STREET BALLAD.

[This is a genuine ballad of the people, written and sung among them. The reader will see at once how little resemblance it bears to the pseudo Irish songs of the stage; or even to the street ballads manufactured by the ballad singers. It is very touching, and not without a certain unpremeditated grace. The vagueness which leaves entirely untold the story it undertook to recount, is a common characteristic of the Anglo-Irish songs of the people. The circumstance on which it is founded took place two years ago, at the fair of Darrynacloughery, held at Turloughmore. A faction fight having occurred at the fair, the arrest of some of the parties led to an attack on the police—after the attack had abated or ceased, the police fired on the people, wounded several, and killed the three men whose names stand at the head of the ballad. They were indicted for murder and pleaded the order of Mr. Drew, the stipendiary magistrate, which was admitted as a justification. Drew died before the day appointed for his trial.]

COME tell me dearest mother what makes my father stay,
Or what can be the reason that he's so long away ?

“ Oh ! hold your tongue, my darling son, your tears do grieve me sore,

I fear he has been murdered in the fair of Turlough-
more.”

Come all you tender Christians, I hope you will draw
near,

It's of this dreadful murder I mean to let you hear,
Concerning those poor people whose loss we do deplore—
(The Lord have mercy on their souls) that died at Turloughmore.

It is on the First of August, the truth I will declare,
Those people they assembled that day all at the fair ;
But little was their notion what evil was in store,
All by the bloody Peelers at the fair of Turloughmore.

Were you to see that dreadful sight it would grieve your heart I know,
To see the comely women and the men all lying low ;
God help their tender parents, they will never see them
more,
For cruel was their murder at the fair of Turloughmore.

It's for that base blood-thirsty crew, remark the words
I say,
The Lord he will reward them against the judgment-
day,
The blood they have taken innocent for it they'll suffer sore,
And the treatment that they gave to us that day at Turloughmore.

The morning of their trial as they stood up in the dock,
The words they spoke were feeling, the people round them flock,
“I tell you Judge and Jury, the truth I will declare,
It was Drew that ordered us to fire that evening at the fair.”

Now to conclude and finish this sad and doleful fray,
I hope their souls are happy against the judgment-day,
It was little time they got we know, when they fell like new-mowed hay,
May the Lord have mercy on their souls against the judgment-day.

THE BRIDAL OF MALAHIDE.*

AN IRISH LEGEND.

BY GERALD GRIFFIN.

THE joy-bells are ringing
In gay Malahide,
The fresh wind is singing
Along the sea-side ;
The maids are assembling
With garlands of flowers,
And the harpstrings are trembling
In all the glad bowers.

Swell, swell the gay measure !
Roll trumpet and drum !
'Mid greetings of pleasure
In splendour they come !
The chancel is ready,
The portal stands wide
For the lord and the lady,
The bridegroom and bride.

What years, ere the latter,
Of earthly delight
The future shall scatter
O'er them in its flight !
What blissful caresses
Shall Fortune bestow,
Ere those dark-flowing tresses
Fall white as the snow !

* See note B in the Appendix.

Before the high altar
Young Maud stands array'd?
With accents that falter
Her promise is made—
From father and mother
For ever to part,
For him and no other
To treasure her heart.

The words are repeated,
The bridal is done,
The rite is completed—
The two, they are one ;
The vow, it is spoken
All pure from the heart,
That must not be broken
Till life shall depart.

Hark ! 'mid the gay clangour
That compass'd their car,
Loud accents in anger
Come mingling afar !
The foe's on the border,
His weapons resound
Where the lines in disorder
Unguarded are found.

As wakes the good shepherd,
The watchful and bold,
When the ounce or the leopard
Is seen in the fold,
So rises already
The chief in his mail,
While the new-married lady
Looks fainting and pale.

" Son, husband, and brother,
 Arise to the strife,
 For the sister and mother,
 For children and wife !
 O'er hill and o'er hollow,
 O'er mountain and plain,
 Up, true men, and follow !
 Let dastards remain ! "

Farrah ! to the battle !
 They form into line—
 The shields, how they rattle !
 The spears, how they shine !
 Soon, soon shall the foeman
 His treachery rue—
 On, burgher and yeoman,
 To die or to do !

The eve is declining
 In lone Malahide,
 The maidens are twining
 Gay wreaths for the bride ;
 She marks them unheeding—
 Her heart is afar,
 Where the clansmen are bleeding
 For her in the war.

Hark ! loud from the mountain
 'Tis Victory's cry !
 O'er woodland and fountain
 It rings to the sky !
 The foe has retreated !
 He flies to the shore ;
 The spoiler's defeated—
 The combat is o'er !

With foreheads unruffled
The conquerors come—
But why have they muffled
The lance and the drum?
What form do they carry
Aloft on his shield?
And where does he tarry,
The lord of the field?

Ye saw him at morning
How gallant and gay!
In bridal adorning,
The star of the day:
Now weep for the lover—
His triumph is sped,
His hope it is over!
The chieftain is dead!

But O for the maiden
Who mourns for that chief,
With heart overladen
And rending with grief!
She sinks on the meadow
In one morning-tide,
A wife and a widow,
A maid and a bride!

Ye maidens attending,
Forbear to condole!
Your comfort is rending
The depths of her soul.
True—true, 'twas a story
For ages of pride;
He died in his glory—
But, oh, he has died!

The war cloak she raises
 All mournfully now,
 And steadfastly gazes
 Upon the cold brow.
 That glance may for ever
 Unalter'd remain,
 But the bridegroom will never Return it again.

The dead-bells are tolling
 In sad Malahide,
 The death-wail is rolling
 Along the sea-side ;
 The crowds, heavy hearted,
 Withdraw from the green,
 For the sun has departed
 That brighten'd the scene !

Ev'n yet in that valley,
 Though years have roll'd by,
 When through the wild sally
 The sea-breezes sigh,
 The peasant, with sorrow,
 Beholds in the shade
 The tomb where the morrow
 Saw Hussy convey'd.

How scant was the warning,
 How briefly reveal'd,
 Before on that morning
 Death's chalice was fill'd !
 The hero who drunk it
 There moulders in gloom,
 And the form of Maud Plunket
 Weeps over his tomb.

The stranger who wanders
 Along the lone vale
 Still sighs while he ponders
 On that heavy tale :
 " Thus passes each pleasure
 That earth can supply—
 Thus joy has its measure—
 We live but to die ! "

THE FAIR HILLS OF IRELAND.

TRANSLATED FROM THE IRISH

BY SAMUEL FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.

A PLENTIOUS place is Ireland for hospitable cheer,
 Uileacan dubh O !
 Where the wholesome fruit is bursting from the yellow barley ear ;
 Uileacan dubh O !
 There is honey in the trees where her misty vales expand,
 And her forest paths, in summer, are by falling waters
 fanned,
 There is dew at high noontide there, and springs i' the yellow sand,
 On the fair hills of holy Ireland.

Curled he is and ringletted, and plaited to the knee,
 Uileacan dubh O !
 Each captain who comes sailing across the Irish sea ;
 Uileacan dubh O !
 And I will make my journey, in life and health but stand,

Unto that pleasant country, that fresh and fragrant
strand,
And leave your boasted braveries, your wealth and high command,
For the fair hills of holy Ireland.

Large and profitable are the stacks upon the ground ;
Uileacan dubh O !

The butter and the cream do wondrously abound,
Uileacan dubh O !

The cresses on the water and the sorrels are at hand,
And the cuckoo's calling daily his note of music bland,
And the bold thrush sings so bravely his song i' the forests grand,

On the fair hills of holy Ireland.

THE FLOWER OF FINAE.

A BRIGADE BALLAD.

BY THOMAS DAVIS, M.R.I.A.

BRIGHT red is the sun on the waves of Lough Sheelin,
A cool gentle breeze from the mountain is stealing,
While fair round its islets the small ripples play,
But fairer than all is the Flower of Finae.

Her hair is like night, and her eyes like grey morning,
She trips on the heather as if its touch scorning,
Yet her heart and her lips are as mild as May day,
Sweet Eily MacMahon, the Flower of Finae.

But who down the hill side than red deer runs fleeter ?
And who on the lake side is hastening to greet her ?
Who but Fergus O'Farrell, the fiery and gay,
The darling and pride of the Flower of Finae.

One kiss and one clasp, and one wild look of gladness ;
 Ah ! why do they change on a sudden to sadness—
 He has told his hard fortune, nor more he can stay,
 He must leave his poor Eily to pine at Finae.

For Fergus O'Farrell was true to his sire-land,
 And the dark hand of tyranny drove him from Ireland ;
 He joins the Brigade, in the wars far away,
 But he vows he'll come back to the Flower of Finae.

He fought at Cremona—she hears of his story ;
 He fought at Cassano—she's proud of his glory,
 Yet sadly she sings " Shule Aroon " all the day,
 " Oh, come, come, my darling, come home to Finae."

Eight long years have pass'd, till she's nigh broken-hearted,
 Her " reel," and her " rock," and her " flax" she has parted ;
 She sails with the " Wild Geese" to Flanders away,
 And leaves her sad parents alone in Finae.

Lord Clare on the field of Ramillies is charging—
 Before him, the Sasanach squadrons enlarging—
 Behind him the Cravats their sections display—
 Beside him rides Fergus and shouts for Finae.

On the slopes of La Judoigne the Frenchmen are flying,
 Lord Clare and his squadrons the foe still defying,
 Outnumbered, and wounded, retreat in array ;
 And bleeding rides Fergus and thinks of Finae.

* * * * *

In the cloisters of Ypres a banner is swaying,
 And by it a pale weeping maiden is praying ;
 That flag's the sole trophy of Ramillies' fray ;
 This nun is poor Eily, the flower of Finae.

WHEN THIS OLD CAP WAS NEW.

BY SAMUEL FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.

SINCE this old cap was new,
 Now fifty-two long years;
 (It was new at the review
 Of the Dublin volunteers;)
 There have been brought to pass
 With us a change or two,
 They're altered times, alas!
 Since this old cap was new.

Our parliament did sit
 Then in our native land,
 What good came of the loss of it
 I cannot understand;
 Although full plain I see,
 That changes not a few
 Have fallen on the country
 Since this old cap was new.

They are very worthy fellows
 (And much I'd be distressed
 To think them else,) who tell us
 That all is for the best;
 Though full as ill inclined,
 Now the bargain's closed, to rue,
 Yet I can't but call the times to mind
 When this old cap was new.

What rights we wanted then
 Were asked for above board,
 By a hundred thousand gentlemen,
 And rendered at the word

'Twas thus in fair day-light,
With all the world to view,
We claimed, and gained our right
When this old cap was new!

But patriots now-a-days,
And state reformers, when
A starving people's cry they raise,
Turn out like trenchermen.
Ah! we'd have done the work,
If it had been to do,
With other tool than spoon or fork
When this old cap was new.

The nobles of the country
Were then our neighbours near,
And 'mong us squires and gentry
Made always jolly cheer!
Ah! every night, at some one's
Or other's, was a crew
Of merry lords and commons,
When this old cap was new.

They're altered times entirely,
As plainly now appears;
Our landlord's face we barely see
Past once in seven years.
And now the man meets scorn
As his coat is green or blue;
We had no need our coats to turn,
When this old cap was new.

Good counsel to propose
I have but little skill;
Yet ere a vain lament I close,
In humble trust, I will

Beseech for all His aid,
 Who knows what all should do ;
 And pray, as I have often prayed,
 When this old cap was new.

A MUNSTER KEEN.*

BY EDWARD WALSH.

ON Monday morning, the flowers were gaily springing,
 The skylark's hymn in middle air was singing,
 When, grief of griefs ! my wedded husband left me,
 And since that hour of hope and health bereft me.

Ulla gulla, gulla g'one ! &c., &c. †

Above the board, where thou art low reclining,
 Have parish priests and horsemen high been dining,
 And wine and usquebaugh, while they were able,
 They quaffed with thee—the soul of all the table.

Ulla gulla, gulla g'one ! &c., &c.

Why didst thou die ? Could wedded wife adore thee
 With purer love than that my bosom bore thee ?
 Thy children's cheeks were peaches ripe and mellow,
 And threads of gold, their tresses long and yellow.

Ulla gulla, gulla g'one ! &c., &c.

In vain for me are pregnant heifers lowing ;
 In vain for me are yellow harvests growing ;

* Properly Caione.

† The keener alone sings the extempore death-song ; the burden of the ullagone, or chorus, is taken up by all the females present.

Or thy nine gifts of love in beauty blooming—
Tears blind my eyes, and grief my heart's consuming!
Ulla gulla, gulla g'one! &c., &c.

Pity her plaints whose wailing voice is broken,
Whose finger holds our early wedding token,
The torrents of whose tears have drain'd their fountain,
Whose piled-up grief on grief is past recounting.
Ulla gulla, gulla g'one! &c., &c.

I still might hope, did I not thus behold thee,⁹
That high Knockferin's airy peak might hold thee,
Or Crohan's fairy halls, or Corrin's towers,
Or Lene's bright caves, or Cleana's magic bowers.*
Ulla gulla, gulla g'one! &c., &c.

But, O! my black despair! when thou wert dying
O'er thee no tear was wept, no heart was sighing—
No breath of prayer did waft thy soul to glory;
But lonely thou didst lie, and maim'd and gory!
Ulla gulla, gulla g'one! &c., &c.

O! may your dove-like soul, on whitest pinions,
Pursue her upward flight to God's dominions,
Where saints' and martyrs' hands shall gifts provide thee—
And, O! my grief, that I am not beside thee!
Ulla gulla, gulla g'one! &c., &c.

EMMELINE TALBOT.

A BALLAD OF THE PALE.

BY THOMAS DAVIS, M.R.I.A.

[The Scene is on the borders of Dublin and Wicklow.]

'Twas a September day—
In Glenismole,
Emmeline Talbot lay
On a green knoll.
She was a lovely thing,
Fleet as a falcon's wing,
Only fifteen that spring—
Soft was her soul.

Danger and dreamless sleep
Much did she scorn,
And from her father's keep
Stole out that morn,
Towards Glenismole she hies,
Sweetly the valley lies,
Winning the enterprise,
No one to warn.

Till by the noon, at length,
High in the vale,
Emmeline found her strength
Suddenly fail.
Panting, yet pleasantly,
By Dodder-side lay she—Thrushes sang merrily,
"Hail, sister, hail!"

Hazel and copse of oak
 Made a sweet lawn,
 Out from the thicket broke
 Rabbit and fawn.
 Green were the eskers round,
 Sweet was the river's sound,
 Eastwards flat Cruagh frowned,
 South lay Sliève Bân.

Looking round Barnakeel,
 Like a tall Moor
 Full of impassioned zeal,
 Peep'd brown Kippure,
 Dublin in feudal pride,
 And many a hold beside,
 Over Fingal preside—
 Sentinels sure !

Is that a roebuck's eye
 Glares from the green ?—
 Is that a thrush's cry
 Rings in the screen ?
 Mountaineers round her sprung,
 Savage their speech and tongue,
 Fierce was their chief and young—
 Poor Emmeline !

“ Hurrah, 'tis Talbot's child,
 Shouted the kern,
 “ Off to the mountains wild,
 Farrah O'Byrne !”
 Like a bird in a net,
 Strove the sweet maiden yet,
 Praying and shrieking, “ Let—Let me return.”

After a moment's doubt,
 Forward he sprung,
 With his sword flashing out—
 Wrath on his tongue.
 "Touch not a hair of her's—
 Dies he, who finger stirs,"
 Back fell his foragers—
 To him she clung.

Soothing the maiden's fears,
 Kneeling was he,
 When burst old Talbot's spears
 Out on the lea.
 March-men, all stanch and stout,
 Shouting their Belgard shout—
 "Down with the Irish rout, Prets d'accomplir."*

Taken thus unawares,
 Some fled amain—
 Fighting like forest bears,
 Others were slain.
 To the chief clung the maid—
 How could he use his blade?—
 That night, upon him weighed
 Fetter and chain.

Oh! but that night was long,
 Lying forlorn,
 Since, 'mid the wassail song,
 These words were borne—
 "Nathless your tears and cries,
 Sure as the sun shall rise,
 Connor O'Byrne dies,
 Talbot has sworn."

* The motto and cry of the Talbots.

Brightly on Tallaght hill
 Flashes the sun ;
 Strained at his window-sill,
 How his eyes run
 From lonely Saggart Slade
 Down to Tibraden glade,
 Landmarks of border raid,
 Many a one.

Too well the captive knows
 Belgard's main wall
 Will, to his naked blows,
 Shiver and fall,
 Ere in his mountain hold
 He shall again behold
 Those whose proud hearts are cold,
 Weeping his thrall.

“ Oh ! for a mountain side.
 Bucklers and brands,
 Freely I could have died
 Heading my bands,
 But on a felon tree”—
 Bearing a fetter key,
 By him all silently
 Emmeline stands.

* * * *

Late rose the Castellan,
 He had drunk deep,
 Warder and serving-man
 Still were asleep,
 Wide is the castle-gate,
 Open the captive's grate,
 Fetters disconsolate
 Flung in a heap.

* * * *

'Tis an October day,
 Close by Loch Dan
 Many a creaght lay,
 Many a man.
 'Mongst them, in gallant mien,
 Connor O'Byrne's seen
 Wedded to Emmeline,
 Girt by his clan!

IRISH MOLLY.

A STREET BALLAD.

OH! who is that poor foreigner that lately came to town,
 And like a ghost that cannot rest still wanders up and down?
 A poor unhappy Scottish youth;—if more you wish to know,
 His heart is breaking all for love of Irish Molly O!

She's modest, mild, and beautiful, the fairest I have known—
 The primrose of Ireland—all blooming here alone—
 The primrose of Ireland, for wheresoe'er I go,
 The only one entices me is Irish Molly O!

When Molly's father heard of it, a solemn oath he swore,
 That if she'd wed a foreigner he'd never see her more.
 He sent for young Mac Donald and he plainly told him
 so—

“ I'll never give to such as you my Irish Molly O!”
 She's modest, &c.

Mac Donald heard the heavy news—and grievously did say—

“Farewell, my lovely Molly—since I’m banished far away,

A poor forlorn pilgrim I must wander to and fro,
And all for the sake of my Irish Molly O!

She’s modest, &c.

“There is a rose in Ireland—I thought it would be mine;

But now that she is lost to me, I must for ever pine,
Till death shall come to comfort me, for to the grave I’ll go;

And all for the sake of my Irish Molly O!

She’s modest, &c.

“And now that I am dying—this one request I crave,
To place a marble tomb-stone above my humble grave;
And on the stone these simple words I’d have engraven
so—

Mac Donald lost his life for love of Irish Molly O!”

She’s modest, &c.

“THE BRIGADE” AT FONTENOY,

11TH MAY, 1745.

By our camp fires rose a murmur,
At the dawning of the day,
And the tread of many footsteps
Spoke the advent of the fray;

And as we took our places,
Few and stern were our words,
While some were tightening horse-girths,
And some were girding swords.

The trumpet blast has sounded
Our footmen to array—
The willing steed has bounded,
Impatient for the fray—
The green flag is unfolded,
While rose the cry of joy—
“Heaven speed dear Ireland’s banner
To-day at Fontenoy.”

We looked upon that banner,
And the memory arose
Of our homes and perished kindred,
Where the Lee or Shannon flows ;
We looked upon that banner,
And we swore to God on high
To smite to-day the Saxon’s might—
To conquer or to die.

Loud swells the charging trumpet—
’Tis a voice from our own land—
God of battles—God of vengeance,
Guide to-day the patriot’s brand ;
There are stains to wash away—
There are memories to destroy,
In the best blood of the Briton
To-day at Fontenoy.

Plunge deep the fiery rowels
In a thousand reeking flanks—
Down, chivalry of Ireland,
Down on the British ranks—

Now shall their serried columns
 Beneath our sabres reel—
 Through their ranks, then, with the war-horse—
 Through their bosoms with the steel.

With one shout for good King Louis,
 And the fair land of the vine,
 Like the wrathful Alpine tempest,
 We swept upon their line—
 Then rang along the battle-field
 Triumphant our hurrah,
 And we smote them down, still cheering
 “Erin, slanthagal go bragh.” *

As prized as is the blessing
 From an aged father’s lip—
 As welcome as the haven
 To the tempest-driven ship—
 As dear as to the lover
 The smile of gentle maid—
 Is this day of long-sought vengeance
 To the swords of the Brigade.

See their shattered forces flying,
 A broken, routed line—
 See, England, what brave laurels
 For your brow to-day we twine.
 Oh, thrice blessed the hour that witnessed
 The Briton turn to flee
 From the chivalry of Erin,
 And France’s “fleur de lis.”

As we lay beside our camp fires,
 When the sun had passed away,

* ερηνη (σο) ρλάηητε zeal so bηατ, Erin (your) bright health for ever.

And thought upon our brethren
 That had perished in the fray—
 We prayed to God to grant us,
 And then we'd die with joy,
 One day upon our own dear land
 Like this of Fontenoy.

THE FORGING OF THE ANCHOR.

BY SAMUEL FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.

COME, see the Dolphin's anchor forged—'tis at a white heat now :
 The bellows ceased, the flames decreased—tho' on the forge's brow
 The little flames still fitfully play thro' the sable mound,
 And fitfully you still may see the grim smiths ranking
 round,
 All clad in leathern panoply, their broad hands only bare—
 Some rest upon their sledges here, some work the windlass there.

The windlass strains the tackle chains, the black mound heaves below,
 And red and deep a hundred veins burst out at every throe :
 It rises, roars, rends all outright—O, Vulcan, what a glow !
 'Tis blinding white, 'tis blasting bright—the high sun shines not so !
 The high sun sees not, on the earth, such fiery fearful
 show ;
 The roof-ribs swarth, the candent hearth, the ruddy lurid row

Of smiths that stand, an ardent band, like men before the foe .

As, quivering thro' his fleece of flame, the sailing monster, slow

Sinks on the anvil—all about the faces fiery grow.

“ Hurrah !” they shout, “ leap out—leap out ;” bang, bang the sledges go :

Hurrah ! the jetted lightnings are hissing high and low—
A hailing fount of fire is struck at every squashing blow,
The leathern mail rebounds the hail, the rattling cinders strow

The ground around : at every bound the sweltering fountains flow,

And thick and loud the swinking crowd at every stroke pant “ ho !”

Leap out, leap out, my masters ; leap out and lay on load !

Let 's forge a goodly anchor—a bower thick and broad ;

For a heart of oak is hanging on every blow, I bode,

And I see the good ship riding, all in a perilous road—

The low reef roaring on her lee—the roll of ocean pour'd
From stem to stern, sea after sea ; the mainmast by the board ;

The bulwarks down, the rudder gone, the boats stove at the chains !

But courage still, brave mariners—the bower yet remains,

And not an inch to flinch he deigns, save when ye pitch sky high ;

Then moves his head, as tho' he said, “ Fear nothing—here am I .”

Swing in your strokes in order, let foot and hand keep time ;

Your blows make music sweeter far than any steeple's chime.

But, while you sling your sledges, sing—and let the burthen be,
The anchor is the anvil king, and royal craftsmen we!
Strike in, strike in—the sparks begin to dull their rustling red;
Our hammers ring with sharper din, our work will soon be sped.
Our anchor soon must change his bed of fiery rich array,
For a hammock at the roaring bows, or an oozy couch of clay;
Our anchor soon must change the lay of merry craftsmen here,
For the yeo-heave-o', and the heave-away, and the sighing seaman's cheer;
When, weighing slow, at eve they go—far, far from love and home;
And sobbing sweethearts, in a row, wail o'er the ocean foam.

In livid and obdurate gloom he darkens down at last;
A shapely one he is, and strong, as e'er from cat was cast.
O trusted and trustworthy guard, if thou hadst life like
me,
What pleasures would thy toils reward beneath the deep green sea!
O deep Sea-diver, who might then behold such sights as thou?
The hoary-monster's palaces! methinks what joy 't were now
To go plumb plunging down amid the assembly of the whales,
And feel the churn'd sea round me boil beneath their scourging tails!
Then deep in tangle-woods to fight the fierce sea unicorn,

And send him foiled and bellowing back, for all his ivory horn ;

To leave the subtle sworder-fish of bony blade forlorn ;
And for the ghastly-grinning shark to laugh his jaws to scorn ;

To leap down on the kraken's back, where 'mid Norwegian isles

He lies, a lubber anchorage for sudden shallow'd miles ;
'Till snorting, like an under-sea volcano, off he rolls ;
Meanwhile to swing, a-buffetting the far astonished shoals

Of his back-browsing ocean-calves ; or, haply in a cove,
Shell-strown, and consecrate of old to some Undiné's
love,

To find the long-hair'd mermaidens ; or, hard by icy
lands,

To wrestle with the Sea-serpent, upon cerulean sands.

O broad-armed Fisher of the deep, whose sports can equal thine ?

The Dolphin weighs a thousand tons, that tugs thy cable line ;

And night by night, 'tis thy delight, thy glory day by day,

Through sable sea and breaker white, the giant game to play—

But shamer of our little sports ! forgive the name I gave—

A fisher's joy is to destroy—thine office is to save.

O lodger in the sea-kings' halls, couldst thou but understand

Whose be the white bones by thy side, or who that dripping band,

Slow swaying in the heaving wave, that round about thee bend,

With sounds like breakers in a dream blessing their ancient friend—

Oh, couldst thou know what heroes glide with larger steps round thee,

Thine iron side would swell with pride; thou'dst leap within the sea'

Give honour to their memories who left the pleasant
strand,

To shed their blood so freely for the love of Father-land—
Who left their chance of quiet age and grassy churchyard grave,

So freely, for a restless bed amid the tossing wave—

Oh, though our anchor may not be all I have fondly sung,

Honour him for their memory, whose bones he goes among!

THE GERALDINE'S DAUGHTER.

SPEAK low!—speak low— the beaḡ ṛ[ḷ]ḷe* is crying;
Hark! hark to the echo!—she's dying! “she's dying.”
What shadow flits dark'ning the face of the water?
'Tis the swan of the lake—'Tis the Geraldine's Daughter.

Hush, hush! have you heard what the beaḡ ṛ[ḷ]ḷe said?
Oh! list to the echo! she's dead! “she's dead!”
No shadow now dims the face of the water;
Gone, gone is the wraith of the Geraldine's Daughter.

The step of yon train is heavy and slow,
There's wringing of hands, there's breathing of woe;
What melody rolls over mountain and water?
'Tis the funeral chant for the Geraldine's Daughter.

* Commonly written the Banshee.

The requiem sounds like the plaintive moan
 Which the wind makes over the sepulchre's stone ;
 " Oh, why did she die ? our heart's blood had bought her !

Oh, why did she die ? the Geraldine's Daughter."

The thistle-beard floats—the wild roses wave
 With the blast that sweeps over the newly-made grave ;
 The stars dimly twinkle, and hoarse falls the water,
 While night birds are wailing the Geraldine's Daughter.

THE LOST WIFE.

BY JOHN FISHER MURRAY.

LONE, by my solitary hearth,
 Whence peace hath fled,
 And home-like joys, and innocent mirth
 Are banished ;
 Silent and sad, I linger to recall
 The memory of all
 In thee, dear partner of my cares, I lost, Cares, shared with thee, more sweet than joys the world can boast.

My home—why did I say my home !
 Now have I none,
 Unless thou from the grave again could'st come,
 Beloved one !
 My home was in thy trusting heart,
 Where'er thou wert ;
 My happy home in thy confiding breast,
 Where my worn spirit refuge found and rest.

I know not if thou wast most fair
 And best of womankind ;
 Or whether earth yet beareth fruits more rare
 Of heart and mind ;
 To ME, I know, thou wert the fairest,
 Kindest, dearest,
 That heaven to man in mercy ever gave,
 And more than man from heaven deserved to have.

Never from thee, sweet wife,
 Came word or look awry,
 Nor peacock pride, nor sullen fit, nor strife
 For mastery :
 Calm and controlled thy spirit was, and sure
 So to endure :
 My friend, protectress, guide, whose gentle will Compelled my good, withholding from me ill.

No art of selfishness
 Thy generous nature knew ;
 Thy life all love, the power to bless thy bliss ;
 Constant and true,
 Content, if to thy lot the world should bring Enduring suffering ;
 Unhappy, if permitted but to share
 Part of my griefs, wouldst both our burdens bear.

My joy, my solace, and my pride
 I found thee still :
 Whatever change our fortunes might betide
 Of good or ill,
 Worthier I was life's blessing to receive
 While thou did'st live ;
 All that I had of good in other's sight,
 Reflected shone thy virtue's borrowed light.

The lute unstrung—the meals in silence ate
 We wont to share ;
 The widowed bed—the chamber desolate,
 Thou art not there,
 The tear at parting, and the greeting kiss,
 Who would not miss ?
 Endearments fond, and solaced hours, and all
 Th' important trivial things men comfort call.

Oh ! mayest thou, if permitted, from above
 The starry sphere,
 Encompass me with ever-during love,
 As thou didst here :
 Still be my guardian spirit, lest I be Unworthy thee ;
 Still, as on earth, thy grace celestial give,
 SO GUIDE MY LIFE AS THOU WOULDST HAVE ME LIVE.

THE HOLY WELLS.

BY J. D. FRASER.

THE holy wells—the living wells—the cool, the fresh, the pure—
 A thousand ages rolled away, and still those founts endure,
 As full and sparkling as they flowed ere slave or tyrant trod
 The Emerald garden, set apart for Irishmen by God
 And while their stainless chastity and lasting life have birth
 Amid the oozy cells and caves of gross material earth,
 The scripture of creation holds no fairer type than they—
 That an immortal spirit can be linked with human clay!

How sweet, of old, the bubbling gush—no less to antlered race,
Than to the hunter and the hound that smote them in the chase!
In forest depths the water-fount beguiled the Druid's love,
From that adored high fount of fire which sparkled far above;
Inspired apostles took it for a centre to the ring,
When sprinkling round baptismal life—salvation—from the spring;
And in the sylvan solitude, or lonely mountain cave,
Beside it passed the hermit's life, as stainless as its wave.

The cottage hearth, the convent's wall, the battlemented tower,
Grew up around the crystal springs, as well as flag and flower;
The brooklime and the water-cress were evidence of health,
Abiding in those basins, free to Poverty and Wealth:
The city sent pale sufferers there the faded brow to dip,
And woo the water to depose some bloom upon the lip;
The wounded warrior dragged him towards the forgotten tide,
And deemed the draught a heavenlier gift than triumph to his side.

The stag, the hunter, and the hound, the Druid and the saint,
And anchorite are gone, and even the lineaments grown faint,
Of those old ruins into which, for monuments, had sunk
The glorious homes that held, like shrines, the monarch and the monk.

So far into the heights of God the mind of man nas ranged,
 It learned a lore to change the earth—it's very self it changed
 To some more bright intelligence; yet still the springs endure,
 The same fresh fountains, but become more precious to the poor!

For knowledge has abused its powers, an empire to erect
 For tyrants, on the rights the poor had given them to protect;
 Till now the simple elements of nature are their all,
 That from the cabin is not filched, and lavished in the hall—
 And while night, noon, or morning meal no other plenty brings,
 No beverage than the water-draught from old, spontaneous springs;
 They, sure, may deem them holy wells, that yield from day to day,
 One blessing that no tyrant hand can taint or take away.

THE MONKS OF KILCREA.

[Kilcrea Abbey, county Cork, was dedicated to St. Bridget, and founded A. D. 1494, by Cormac, Lord of Muskerry; its monks belonged to the Franciscan Order, commonly called "Grey Friars." In the present day, its ruins are extensive, and though considerably mutilated by Cromwell, who stabled a troop of horse in its refectory, are still both picturesque and interesting.—IRISH ANNALS.]

FYTTE I.

THREE monks sat by a bogwood fire!
 Bare were their crowns, and their garments grey,
 Close sat they to that bogwood fire.
 Watching the wicket till break of day;
 Such was ever the rule at Kilcrea.

For whoever past, be he Baron or Squire,
 Was free to call at that abbey, and stay,
 Nor guerdon, or hire for his lodging pay,
 Tho' he tarried a week with its holy choir !

Three monks sat by a bogwood fire,
 Dark look'd the night from the window pane,
 They who sat by that bogwood fire
 Were Eustace, Alleyn, and Thade by name,
 And long they gazed at the cheerful flame ;
 Till each from his neighbour began to inquire
 The tale of his life, before he came
 To Saint Brigid's shrine, and the cowl had ta'en,
 So they piled on more wood, and drew their seats nigher !

Three monks sat by a bogwood fire,
 Loud wailed the wind thro' cloister and nave,
 And with mournful air, by that bogwood fire,
 The first who spake it was Eustace grave,
 And told " He had been a gallant brave,
 In his youth, till a comrade he slew in ire,
 And then forswore bastnet and glaive,
 And leaving his home, had crost the wave,
 And taken the cross and cowl at Saint Finbar's Spire."

Three monks sat by a bogwood fire.
 Swift thro' the glen rushed the river Lee,
 And Alleyn next by that bogwood fire
 Told his tale ; a woful man was he ;
 Alas ! he had loved unlawfullie
 The wife of his brother, Sir Hugh Maguire,
 And he fled to the cloister to free
 His soul from sin ; and 'twas sad to see
 How much sorrow had wasted the youthful friar.

Three monks sat by a bogwood fire,
 And red its light on the rafters shone,
 The last who spake by that bogwood fire
 Was Thade, of the three, the only one
 Whom care or grief had not lit upon ;
 But rosy and round, thro' city and shire,
 His mate for innocent glee was none,
 And soon he told, " How a peasant's son
 He was reared for the church by their former Prior !"

Three monks sat by a bogwood fire,
 The moon looked o'er all with clouded ray,
 And there they sat by that bogwood fire
 Watching the wicket till break of day,
 And many that night did call and stay,
 Whose names, if, gentles, ye do not tire,
 In his next strain shall the Bard essay,
 For here ends the first fyttē of the monks of Kilcrea !

FYTTE II.

The bell of the abbey had number'd ten,
 O'er tower and roof rolled its sullen chime ;
 Yet, still by the fire sat those holy men
 Keeping their vigil, until morning's prime ;
 And much did they marvel, that ere that time
 No traveller called, as 'twas common then
 For Pilgrims to flock to Saint Brigid's shrine ;
 So they placed on the board the pitchers of wine,
 Game from the mountain, and meat from the pen,
 And red trout that was caught close bye in Dripsey Glen !*

* Dripsey Glen, a romantic spot on the River Lee, lies half way between Cork and Macroom.

On the table was flaggon and pasty good,
 On the hearth clean-swept blazed a bogwood fire,
 Around were settles of the dark oak wood,
 And all that a weary guest could require.
 There was water in pans, to wash off the mire,
 Garment to don, and hose, and doe-skin shoon,
 In never a hostel throughout the shire
 Could you purchase for gold, or borrow for hire
 Such comforts, as freely for all, as boon,
 The monks of Kilcrea strewed around that cheerful room.

There came a loud knock to the abbey gate,
 And a voice in the storm was heard outside,
 And Eustace arose from where sad he sate,
 Went to the wicket, and opened it wide,
 And crost the threshold, with a heavy stride,
 A Saxon stranger; he was sore destraint,
 And told "how he lost both his way and guide,
 That his horse was drown'd in fording the Bride,"*
 Then took off his cloak, a dripping weight,
 And look'd like a man who for life had struggled late!

Again came a knock to the abbey gate,
 While sad the wind moan'd thro' bower and tree,
 And Alleyn arose, and opened the gate,
 And entered the room, a Rapparee!

* A small but rapid river that runs close to the walls of Kilcrea.— On entering the abbey the traveller is at once struck with the number of monuments and graves contained within its precincts. Among those the tomb of "Arthur O'Leary the outlaw," is conspicuous. The history of this unfortunate gentleman, whose ancestors owned the country for miles around Kilcrea, must be fresh in the minds of all those who have perused Mrs. Hall's touching narrative, or the more graphic account given by Mr. Windele in his "Guide to Killarney."

And haggard, and pale, and begrimed was he ;*
As he leant on a spear in drooping state !

His scanty garments scarcely reach'd his knee,
Yet, tho' feeble and worn was his mien and gait,
Still he glared on the Saxon with a look of hate.

Again came a knock to the abbey gate,
And a voice outside made a rueful din,
And Thade uprose and opened the gate ;
And lo ! he ushered a Gleeman in,
Threadbare his cloak, he was wet to the skin ;
Yet the leer of his eye, told a roguish mate,
And he winked around with a cunning grin,
As deep in the flaggon he stuck his chin,
And scarce would the loon for a blessing wait,
When his kind host heaped the food on his plate !

And there long they sat by that bogwood fire,
The monks of Kilcrea and those travellers three,
And each as they sat by that bogwood fire
Told by turns their name and their history ;
The Saxon ! the Gleeman ! the Rapparee !
And gentles, once more, if ye do not tire,
I'll sing to you each in their due degree,
As of old a sennachie taught the lay to me !

*I may be held guilty of a gross anachronism, in introducing "A Rapparee" here, but we had the thing, if not the word at this period ; and, moreover, the laws of poetical license, as laid down in the celebrated case of Dido versus Virgil, must at once be both my precedent, and apology.

THE SACK OF BALTIMORE.

BY THOMAS DAVIS, M.R.I.A.

[Baltimore is a small seaport in the barony of Carbery, in South Munster. It grew up round a Castle of O'Driscoll's, and was, after his ruin, colonized by the English. On the 20th of June, 1631, the crew of two Algerine galleys landed in the dead of the night, sacked the town, and bore off into slavery all who were not too old, or too young, or too fierce for their purpose. The pirates were steered up the intricate channel by one Hackett, a Dungarvan fisherman, whom they had taken at sea for the purpose. Two years after he was convicted, and executed for the crime. Baltimore never recovered this. To the artist, the antiquary, and the naturalist, its neighbourhood is most interesting.—See "The Ancient and Present State of the County and City of Cork," by Charles Smith, M.D., vol. 1, p. 270. Second Edition. Dublin, 1774.]

THE summer sun is falling soft on Carb'ry's hundred isles—

The summer's sun is gleaming still through Gabriel's rough defiles—

Old Inisherkin's crumbled fane looks like a moulting bird ;

And in a calm and sleepy swell the ocean tide is heard ;
The hookers lie upon the beach ; the children cease their play ;

The gossips leave the little inn ; the households kneel to pray—

And full of love, and peace, and rest—its daily labour o'er—

Upon that cosy creek there lay the town of Baltimore.

A deeper rest, a starry trance, has come with midnight
there ;

No sound, except that throbbing wave, in earth, or sea,
or air.

The massive capes, and ruined towers, seem conscious of the calm ;
 The fibrous sod and stunted trees are breathing heavy balm.
 So still the night, these two long barques, round Dunashad that glide
 Must trust their oars—methinks not few—against the ebbing tide—
 Oh ! some sweet mission of true love must urge them to the shore—
 They bring some lover to his bride, who sighs in Baltimore !

All, all asleep within each roof along that rocky street,
 And these must be the lover's friends, with gently gliding feet—
 A stifled gasp ! a dreamy noise ! “ the roof is in a flame ! ”
 From out their beds, and to their doors, rush maid, and sire, and dame—
 And meet, upon the threshold stone, the gleaming sabres fall,
 And o'er each black and bearded face the white or crimson shawl—
 The yell of “ Allah ” breaks above the prayer, and shriek, and roar—
 Oh, blessed God ! the Algerine is lord of Baltimore !

Then flung the youth his naked hand against the shearing sword ;
 Then sprung the mother on the brand with which her son was gor'd ;
 Then sunk the grandsire on the floor, his grand-babes clutching wild ;
 Then fled the maiden moaning faint, and nestled with the child ;

But see yon pirate strangled lies, and crushed with splashing heel,
 While o'er him in an Irish hand there sweeps his Syrian steel—
 Though virtue sink, and courage fail, and misers yield their store,
 There's one hearth well avengéd in the sack of Baltimore!

Mid-summer morn, in woodland nigh, the birds begin to sing—
 They see not now the milking maids, deserted is the spring!
 Mid-summer day—this gallant rides from distant Bandon's town—
 These hookers crossed from stormy Skull, that skiff from Affadown;
 They only found the smoking walls, with neighbours'
 blood besprent,
 And on the strewed and trampled beach awhile they wildly went—
 Then dash'd to sea, and passed Cape Cleir, and saw five leagues before
 The pirate galleys vanishing that ravaged Baltimore.

Oh! some must tug the galley's oar, and some must tend the steed—
 This boy will bear a Scheik's chibouk, and that a Bey's jerreed.
 Oh! some are for the arsenals, by beauteous Dardanelles;
 And some are in the caravan to Mecca's sandy dells.
 The maid that Bandon gallant sought is chosen for the Dey—
 She's safe—she's dead—she stabb'd him in the midst of his Serai;

And, when to die a death of fire, that noble maid they bore,
 She only smiled—O'Driscoll's child—she thought of Baltimore.

'Tis two long years since sunk the town beneath that bloody band,
 And all around its trampled hearths a larger concourse
 stand,
 Where, high upon a gallows tree, a yelling wretch is seen—
 'Tis Hackett of Dungarvan—he, who steered the Algerine!
 He fell amid a sullen shout, with scarce a passing prayer,
 For he had slain the kith and kin of many a hundred
 there—
 Some muttered of MacMorrogh, who had brought the Norman o'er—
 Some curs'd him with Iscariot, that day in Baltimore.

O'DONOVAN'S DAUGHTER.

BY EDWARD WALSH.

AIR—“The Juice of the Barley.”

ONE midsummer's eve, when the Bel-fires were lighted,
 And the bag-piper's tone call'd the maidens delighted,
 I join'd a gay group by the Araglin's water,
 And danced till the dawn with O'Donovan's Daughter.

Have you seen the ripe monadan glisten in Kerry?
 Have you mark'd on the Galteys the black whortle-berry,
 Or ceanabhan wave by the wells of Blackwater?—
 They're the cheek, eye, and neck of O'Donovan's Daughter!

Have you seen a gay kidling on Claragh's round mountain?

The swan's arching glory on Sheeling's blue fountain, Heard a weird woman chant what the fairy choir taught
her?

They've the step, grace, and tone of O'Donovan's Daughter!

Have you mark'd in its flight the black wing of the raven?
The rose-buds that breathe in the summer breeze waven?
The pearls that lie hid under Lene's magic water?
They're the teeth, lip, and hair of O'Donovan's Daughter!

Ere the Bel-fire was dimm'd, or the dancers departed,
I taught her a song of some maid broken-hearted:
And that group, and that dance, and that love-song I taught her
Haunt my slumbers at night with O'Donovan's Daughter.

God grant 'tis no fay from Cnoc-Firinn that woos me,
God grant 'tis not Cliodhna the queen that pursues me,
That my soul lost and lone has no witchery wrought her,
While I dream of dark groves and O'Donovan's Daughter!

If, spell-bound, I pine with an airy disorder,
Saint Gobnate has sway over Musgry's wide border;
She'll scare from my couch, when with prayer I've besought her,
That bright airy sprite like O'Donovan's Daughter.

SOUTH MUNSTER CLANS MARCHING TO BATTLE, A. D. 1690.

HARK the distant hum !
The clans of stormy Desmond come
From their rugged glens and savage hills,
How their warriors' laughter the bosom thrills :
Their hearts are dauntless, and careless, and light—
Their plumes are brave—their spears are bright.
Each Crahadore's* lip has the careless play,
And the joyous smile of a festal day ;
But that lip will clench, and that eye will glow
When he meets, when he meets his Saxon foe.

As the banded squadrons pass,
'Tis glorious to see their banners wave,
And the sunbeams sparkling on spear and glaive,
On horseman's helm, and steel cuirass.
'Tis glorious to see, by stream and glen,
Old Desmond's mountaineers again
Draw from its scabbard the rusting brand,
In the thrilling cause of fatherland ;
Grimly crave, with a warrior joy,
Vengeance for Smerwick and bloody Dunboy.

From Muskerry mountains and Carbery hills,
MacCarthies have rushed like their highland rills ;
MacSwinies, O'Learies, O'Riordans came,
When the signal flew on wings of flame ;
O'Driscolls are there, from their crag-bound shore ;
And O'Mahonies, men of the woods and moor.
Many a Duballow battle-axe bright—

For Clan-Awly, Clan-Keeffe, and Clan-Callaghan, all
Have answered the princely MacDonagh's call,
When that chieftain summoned his bands of might ;

* creacádoín creacáine, a spoiler, preyer

And many a clan with the Norman name :
 Like leaves of their forests Fitzgeralds came,
 Barrys, and Barretts, Sapeul, Condhune,
 From broad Imokilly, and Kilnatalloon—
 From Orrery's valleys, and Avonmore's banks,
 In hundreds have mustered their stately ranks.

On, on, our march must know no pause,
 Till the wolf dog's game is in his jaws ;
 On—with clear heart and footing sure,
 For our path lies by mountain and shaking moor.
 The river is broad, but who'd wait for a ford,
 And the cause of Righ Seamus in need of his sword.
 Up, up, with the wild hurra,
 We fight for the right, and Righ Seamus go bragh.*

Though they file along, in their loose array,
 Like a driving cloud on a summer's day,
 So brilliant, so gallant, and gay,
 Many a light-limbed mountaineer
 Dashed from his dark eye the soul-sprung tear,
 As he parted from maid, or from matron dear.
 Many a reckless Crahadore
 Bent o'er the maid he might clasp no more.
 On leafy Imokilly's shore,
 Yon gallowglass has left his bride
 By steep Slieve Logher's heathy side.
 Rent was his manly heart with sorrow
 As she smoothed his long black hair ;
 As she pressed his bronzed cheek and forehead fair,
 And blessed him for the bloody morrow ;
 But the griefs of the parting moment pass
 From the breast of kern and gallowglass.
 When the clairseach rings and the baraboo,
 When he hears the chieftain's war halloo,

* King James for ever !

When he sees the war-horse champ the rein,
 And toss aloft his flowing mane,
 Blithely he marches by town and tower,
 Gone are the thoughts of the parting hour.
 Blithely he raises the shrill hurra,
Righ Seamus, Righ Seamus, go bragh.

THE BOATMAN OF KINSALE.

BY THOMAS DAVIS, M.R.I.A.

AIR—" The Cota Caol."

His kiss is sweet, his word is kind,
 His love is rich to me ;
 I could not in a palace find
 A truer heart than he.
 The eagle shelters not his nest
 From hurricane and hail,
 More bravely than he guards my breast—
 The Boatman of Kinsale.

The wind that round the Fastnet sweeps
 Is not a whit more pure—
 The goat that down Cnoc Sheehy leaps
 Has not a foot more sure.
 No firmer hand nor freer eye
 E'er faced an Autumn gale—
 De Courcy's heart is not so high—
 The Boatman of Kinsale.

The brawling squires may heed him not,
 The dainty stranger sneer—
 But who will dare to hurt our cot,
 When Myles O'Hea is here.

The scarlet soldiers pass along—
 They'd like, but fear to rail—
 His blood is hot, his blow is strong—
 The Boatman of Kinsale.

His hooker's in the Scilly van,
 When seines are in the foam;
 But money never made the man,
 Nor wealth a happy home.
 So, blest with love and liberty,
 While he can trim a sail,
 He'll trust in God, and cling to me—
 The Boatman of Kinsale.

O'BYRNE'S BARD TO THE CLANS OF WICK- LOW.

TRANSLATED FROM THE IRISH,

BY S. FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.

God be with the Irish host
 Never be their battle lost!
 For, in battle, never yet
 Have they basely earned defeat.

Host of armour, red and bright,
 May ye fight a valiant fight!
 For the green spot of the earth,
 For the land that gave you birth.

Who in Erin's cause would stand,
 Brother of the avenging band,
 He must wed immortal quarrel,
 Pain and sweat and bloody peril.

On the mountain bare and steep,
Snatching short but pleasant sleep,
Then, ere sunrise, from his eyrie,
Swooping on the Saxon quarry.

What although you've failed to keep
Liffey's plain or Tara's steep,
Cashel's pleasant streams to save,
Or the meads of Cruachan Maev.

Want of conduct lost the town,
Broke the white-walled castle down,
Moira lost, and old Taltin,
And let the conquering stranger in.

'Twas the want of right command,
Not the lack of heart or hand,
Left your hills and plains to-day
'Neath the strong Clan Saxon's sway.

Ah, had heaven never sent
Discord for our punishment,
Triumphs few o'er Erin's host
Had Clan London now to boast !

Woe is me, 'tis God's decree
Strangers have the victory :
Irishmen may now be found
Outlaws upon Irish ground.

Like a wild beast in his den,
Lies the chief by hill and glen,
While the strangers, proud and savage,
Creevan's richest valleys ravage.

* CMONHTAHH, a king of ancient Erin. †

Woe is me, the foul offence,
 Treachery and violence,
 Done against my people's rights—
 Well may mine be restless nights !

When old Leinster's sons of fame,
 Heads of many a warlike name,
 Redden their victorious hilts
 On the Gaul, my soul exults.

When the grim Gaul, who have come
 Hither o'er the ocean foam,
 From the fight victorious go,
 Then my heart sinks deadly low.

Bless the blades our warriors draw
 God be with Clan Ranelagh !
 But my soul is weak for fear,
 Thinking of their danger here.

Have them in thy holy keeping,
 God be with them lying sleeping,
 God be with them standing fighting,
 Erin's foes in battle smiting !

THE BELLS OF SHANDON.

BY REV. FRANCIS MAHONY.

Author of the "Prout Papers"

WITH deep affection and recollection
 I often think of the Shandon*bells,
 Whose sounds so wild would, in days of childhood,
 Fling round my cradle their magic spells.

* rean Dúin, old fort

On this I ponder, where'er I wander,
 And thus grow fonder sweet Cork of thee ;
 With thy bells of Shandon,
 That sound so grand on
 The pleasant waters of the river Lee.

I have heard bells chiming full many a clime in,
 Tolling sublime in cathedral shrine ;
 While at a glib rate brass tongues would vibrate,
 But all their music spoke nought to thine :
 For memory dwelling on each proud swelling
 Of thy belfry knelling its bold notes free,
 Made the bells of Shandon,
 Sound far more grand on
 The pleasant waters of the river Lee.

I have heard bells tolling " old Adrian's mole" in,
 Their thunder rolling from the Vatican,
 With cymbals glorious, swinging uproarious
 In the gorgeous turrets of Notre Dame ;
 But thy sounds were sweeter, than the dome of Peter
 Flings o'er the Tiber, pealing solemnly.
 O! the bells of Shandon,
 Sound far more grand on
 The pleasant waters of the river Lee.

There's a bell in Moscow, while on tower and Kiosko
 In St. Sophia the Turkman gets,
 And loud in air, calls men to prayer,
 From the tapering summit of tall minarets.
 Such empty phantom, I freely grant them,
 But there's an anthem more dear to me,
 It's the bells of Shandon,
 That sound so grand on
 The pleasant waters of the river Lee.

WILLY REILLY.

[Willy Reilly was the first ballad I ever heard recited, and it made a painfully vivid impression on my mind. I have never forgotten the smallest incident of it. The story on which it is founded, happened some sixty years ago; and as the lover was a young Catholic farmer and the lady's family of high Orange principles, it got a party character, which, no doubt, contributed to its great popularity. There is no family under the rank of gentry, in the inland counties of Ulster, where it is not familiarly known. Nurses and seamstresses, the honorary guardians of national songs and legends, have taken it into special favour, and preserved its popularity.]

Mr. Carleton (to whose loving memory of all our Northern traditions, I owe the present copy,) tells me, that he was accustomed, when a boy, to hear it sung by his mother, when it took such powerful hold of his imagination that to this hour it moves him as it did at first. He has long intended to make it the foundation of a national novel, exhibiting the customs and prejudices of the unhappy period in which it is laid. Some deduction must be made for early impressions, but it is impossible to deny it great tenderness and remarkable dramatic power. Observe, for a striking instance of the latter, the abrupt opening and close of the first verse, and a similar instance in the thirteenth verse.]

“OH! rise up Willy Reilly and come along with me,
I mean for to go with you and leave this counterie,*
To leave my father's dwelling-house, his houses and free land;”
And away goes Willy Reilly and his dear *Coolen
Bawn*.†

They go by hills and mountains, and by yon lonesome
plain,
Through shady groves and valleys all dangers to refrain;
But her father followed after with a well-arm'd band,
And taken was poor Reilly and his dear Coolen Bawn.

It's home then she was taken, and in her closet bound,
Poor Reilly all in Sligo jail lay on the stony ground,
'Till at the bar of justice before the Judge he'd stand,
For nothing but the stealing of his dear Coolen Bawn.

* Country is commonly pronounced in Ulster Counterry.

† Fair young girl.

“ Now in the cold, cold iron, my hands and feet are bound,
I’m handcuffed like a murderer, and tied unto the ground,
But all the toil and slavery I’m willing for to stand,
Still hoping to be succoured by my dear Coolen Bawn.”

The jailor’s son to Reilly goes, and thus to him did say,
“ Oh ! get up Willy Reilly you must appear this day,
For great squire Foillard’s anger you never can withstand,
I’m afeer’d* you’ll suffer sorely for your dear *Coolen
Bawn.*”

Now Willy’s drest from top to toe all in a suit of green,
His hair hangs o’er his shoulders most glorious to be seen ;
He’s tall and straight, and comely as any could be found,
He’s fit for Foillard’s daughter, was she heiress to a crown.

“ This is the news young Reilly, last night that I did hear,
The lady’s oath will hang you or else will set you clear ;”
“ If that be so,” says Reilly, “ her pleasure I will stand,
Still hoping to be succoured by my dear Coolen Bawn.”

The Judge he said, “ this lady being in her tender youth,
If Reilly has deluded her, she will declare the truth ;”
Then, like a moving beauty bright, before him she did
stand,
“ You’re welcome there my heart’s delight and dear Coolen Bawn.”

* Afraid.

“ Oh, gentlemen,” squire Foillard said, “ with pity look on me,
This villain came amongst us to disgrace our family,
And by his base contrivances this villany was planned,
If I don't get satisfaction I'll quit this Irish land.”

The lady with a tear began, and thus replied she,
“ The fault is none of Reilly's, the blame lies all on me,
I forced him for to leave his place and come along with
me,
I loved him out of measure which wrought our destiny.”

Out bespoke the noble Fox* at the table he stood by,
“ Oh ! gentlemen consider on this extremity,
To hang a man for love is a murder you may see,
So spare the life of Reilly, let him leave this counterie.”

“ Good, my lord, he stole from her her diamonds and her rings,
Gold watch and silver buckles, and many precious things,
Which cost me in bright guineas more than five hundred pounds,
I'll have the life of Reilly should I lose ten thousand pounds.”

“ Good, my lord, I gave them him as tokens of true
love,
And when we are a-parting I will them all remove,
If you have got them, Reilly, pray send them home to me.”
“ I will my loving lady with many thanks to thee.”

* The prisoner's counsel.

“ There is a ring among them I allow yourself to wear,
With thirty locket diamonds well set in silver fair,
And as a true-love token wear it on your right hand,
That you'll think on my poor broken heart when you're in foreign lands.”

Then out spoke noble Fox, “ you may let the prisoner
go,
The lady's oath has cleared him, as the Jury all may know,
She has released her own true love, she has renewed his name,
May her honour bright gain high estate, and her offspring rise to fame.”

APPENDIX.

NOTE A, p. 144.

WE publish here some fragments of the original Boyne Water. They appear to us infinitely more racy and spirited than anything in the song which has strangely superseded them. We owe them to a northern gentleman, who has made the antiquities of Ulster his particular study.

THE BOYNE WATER.

JULY the first of a morning clear, one thousand six hundred and ninety,
King William did his men prepare, of thousands he had thirty;
To fight King James and all his foes, encamped near the Boyne Water,
He little feared, though two to one, their multitudes to scatter.

King William called his officers; saying, "gentlemen, mind your station,
And let your valour here be shown, before this Irish nation;
My brazen walls let no man break, and your subtle foes you'll scatter,
Be sure you show them good English play, as you go over the water."

* * * * *

Both foot and horse they marched on, intending them to batter, But the brave Duke Schomberg he was shot, as he crossed over the water.

When that King William he observed the brave Duke Schomberg falling,

He rein'd his horse, with a heavy heart, on the Enniskilleners calling:

"What will you do for me, brave boys, see yonder men retreating,
Our enemies encouraged are—and English drums are beating;"
He says, "my boys, feel no dismay at the losing of one commander
For God shall be our King this day, and I'll be general under."

* * * * *

Within four yards of our fore-front, before a shot was fired,
 A sudden snuff they got that day, which little they desired;
 For horse and man fell to the ground, and some hung in their saddles,
 Others turn'd up their forked ends, which we call coup de ladle.

Prince Eugene's regiment was the next, on our right hand advanced,
 Into a field of standing wheat, where Irish horses pranced—
 But the brandy ran so in their heads, their senses all did scatter,
 They little thought to leave their bones that day at the Boyne Water.

Both men and horse lay on the ground and many there lay bleeding,
 I saw no sickles there that day—but sure, there was sharp shearing.

Now, praise God, all true Protestants, and heaven's and earth's Creator,
 For the deliverance that he sent our enemies to scatter.
 The church's foes will pine away, like churlish-hearted Nabal,
 For our deliverer came this day like the great Zorobabel.

So praise God, all true Protestants, and I will say no further,
 But had the Papists gain'd the day, there would have been open murder.

Although King James and many more was ne'er that way inclined,
 It was not in their power to stop what the rabble they designed.

THE BRIDAL OF MALAHIDE.

The story of this ballad is historically true, and receives additional interest from the fact, that the armour in which the hero of the ballad was slain, is still shown in Malahide Castle, and the monument of the heroine in the neighbouring chapel. Speaking of the latter, Mr. D'Alton, says:—"Of the monuments the most worthy of notice is an altar tomb surmounted with the effigy, in bold relief, of a female habited in the costume of the 14th century, and representing the Honourable Maud Plunket, wife of Sir Richard Talbot. She had been previously married to Mr. Hussey, son to the Baron of Galtrim, who was slain on the day of her nuptials, leaving her the singular celebrity of having been 'A maid, wife and widow on the same day.'" In a description of the castle, Mr. Petrie refers to the adventure "Among the most memorable circumstances of general interest connected with the history of this castle and its possessors, should be mentioned what Mr. Brewer properly calls 'a lamentable instance of the ferocity with which quarrels of party rivalry were conducted in ages during which the internal polity of Ireland was injuriously neglected by the supreme head of government:—On Whit-sun-eve, in the year 1329, as is recorded by Ware, John de Birmingham, Earl of Louth, Richard Talbot, styled Lord of Malahide, and many of their kindred, together with sixty of their English followers, were slain in a pitched battle at Balbriggan [Ballybragan] in this neighbourhood, by the Anglo-Norman faction of the De Verdons, De Gernons, and Savages: the cause of animosity being the election of the earl to the palatinate dignity of Louth, the county of the latter party.'" Malahide Castle is one of the most interesting in Ireland, from its great antiquity and perfect preservation. It is within an hour's drive of Dublin, and with a rare and noble liberality is constantly opened to the public. We copy a portion of Mr. Petrie's description of it:—"An ancient baronial castle, in good preservation and still inhabited by the lineal descendant of its original founder, is a rare object to find in Ireland; and the causes which have led to this circumstance are too obvious to require an explanation. In Malahide Castle we have, however, a highly interesting example of this kind; for though in its present state it owes much of its imposing effect to modern restorations and improvements, it still retains a considerable portion of very ancient date, and most probably even some parts of the original castle erected in the reign of King Henry II. Considered in this way, Malahide Castle is without a rival in interest, not only in our metropolitan county, but also perhaps within the boundary of the old English Pale. The noble family of Talbot have been seated in their present locality for a period of nearly seven hundred years. There can be no question, therefore, of the noble origin of the Talbots de Malahide, nor can their title be considered as a mushroom one, though only conferred upon the mother of the present lord." The castle contains a fine collection of pictures, including some historical portraits of the highest interest. Portraits of Talbot, Duke of Tyrconnell, (James's Lord Lieutenant before and during the Revolution,)* of Sir Neale O'Neill, and the finest head of Charles I., by Vandyke, in existence, are among the number.
