SEARCH FOR FAMILY OF "AUNT

Property to the value of £2,417, so far at present ascertained, has been left by ninth Marquis de Ruvigny, 53, of Avenue-road, Kensington, London, W., compiler and editor of "The Titled Nobility of Europe" and author of "The Royal Pedigree of Britain" and other works.

He leaves everything to his son Charles Albert Wriothesly Douglas Townshend on his attaining 21 years, or, if he dies, then in trust for his widow and children if any.

Should these trusts fail, then the executors "are to inquire for and ascertain the grandchildren of my paternal aunt Augusta, who ran away and married a man known as James Russell Mor-

MOUTRAY OF SEAFIELD AND ROSCOBIE

*Arms:*¹ Azure, on a chevron argent, between three escallops of the second, a boar's head coupéd, sable, tongued gules, between two mullets of the last.

Crest: A mermaid proper.

Motto: "Nunquam non fidelis."

THE Scoto-Norman name of Moutray, originally written "Multrer" and "Multrare," is said to have been introduced into Scotland in the reign of Malcolm III., about A.D. 1060.² No genealogy of the family has previously been compiled, although pedigrees of the cadet branches of Aston Hall and Favour Royal have appeared in Burke's "Landed Gentry." As will be seen from the following account, the family may be said to have divided into three main lines—the Scottish (now extinct), the Anglo-American, and the Irish. The genealogy of the elder line here given has been compiled from the Charters of Roscobie and Seafield,³ the parish registers of Dunfermline and Beath, and supplemented as noted. That of the second, or Anglo-American branch, has been supplied by the Rev. Austin Moultrie; and the account of the Irish line is taken from Burke's "Landed Gentry," kindly corrected by Mr. Moutray of Favour Royal and Mrs. Gledstanes of Fardross. The first of the name of whom I find mention was ROBERT DEW MULTRIE, who is mentioned in an ecclesiastical memorandum relating to Canterbury,

³ For excerpts from these the writer desires to record his grateful thanks to Mr. John J. Dalgleish, the present proprietor of Roscobie, and to the late Mr. Lawrence James B. Mercer, of Edinburgh.

May 22, 1228.¹ After him we find ADAM DE MULTREVE, Burgess of Berwick, who swore fealty to Edward I. of England at Berwick June 30, 1292.² He afterwards appears as a witness to a charter in the Chartulary of St. Giles, Edinburgh, together with HENRY MULTRAR, Burgess of Edinburgh, who held the lands of Grothill (Greenhill), near Edinburgh, from Henry de Brade of that ilk during the reign of David II. In 1350 he made endowment of his lands to the Church of St. Giles, which on January 15, 1362, was confirmed by his son³ ROBERT MULTRER, Burgess of Edinburgh, who on the same day, three years later, had a charter under the Great Seal from King David II. of the lands of Restalrig.⁴ Capiend JOHAN MOTERE is mentioned in a document dated January 20, 1347,⁵ also as Johe Multrar in a list of names of the Chartulary of St. Andrews, July 6, 1395.⁶ The first known ancestor of the Seafield line was :

I. ROBERT MULTRARE, who received a Royal Charter from King James II., confirming him in the lands of Seafield and Markinch in 1443.⁷ He died in 1469, leaving issue a son John and possibly Mariota Multarer, who married John Strang, of Balcaskie.

II. JOHN MULTRAR, second Laird of Seafield, son and heir of Garden of Rothiemay's map shows a large quadrangular edifice, with gables and dormer windows crowning the apex of the hill, probably the ancient family residence (Grant's 'Old and New Edinburgh,' 1882). Moutrays on the Hill was the scene of some severe conflicts during the war of 1570. With the improvements to Edinburgh in 1775 this place disappeared. the preceding. He represented the Burgh of Ayr in the Parliament of 1463-1478,¹ and dying about the latter year, left issue by his wife Gelis a son Thomas.

III. THOMAS MULTRARE, third Laird of Seafield, son and heir of the preceding. He married in 1481, by Royal leave, Katherine, fifth daughter of David Boseville, by whom he had issue :

1. John, younger, of Seafield.

Thomas Moultray de Markinch was a witness to the redemption of the lands of Methill, April 30, 1484, and on the procuratory by Andrew Wighton, Sub-Prior of St. Andrews, for resigning the said lands, May 2 following. In or about 1491 a claim was preferred against John Melville, of Raith, by James Richardson, a Burgess of Edinburgh, for £70. This amount was owing to Richardson by Moutray, from whom Melville had been empowered by the King's letter to collect it. Melville declared that he apprised Moutray's goods to the value of £48, which sum he had delivered to Richardson's agents, who in turn asserted that he had paid the money to his principal.² The proceedings against Moutray upon this occasion may have led to the quarrel in which he was slain by John Melville or one of his servants. The particulars of the tragedy are not known, but this event, which took place in or near Moutray's own house of Seafield, situated on the north side of the Forth, between Kirkcaldy and Kinghorn, led to one of those family feuds so common in Scotland, where the relatives and kin of the parties took up the quarrel, and, as in this case, carried on a series of mutual annoyances and plots to assassinate the principals.

IV. JOHN MOUTRAY, fourth Laird of Seafield and Markinch aforesaid, son and heir of the preceding, whom he succeeded between 1490 and 1500. He immediately took steps to avenge his father's murder, but the Abbot of Dunfermline (James Beton, afterwards Archbishop of Glasgow and St. Andrews), who relates the circumstances, determined to act as peacemaker, because the death of Moutray had been brought about, not by direct malice, but by instigation and persuasion of wicked men. His efforts so far succeeded with the young Laird of Raith that for the sake of concord he resigned into the hands of the Abbot, who was also his feudal superior, the sum of 12 merks, to be uplifted yearly from his lands of Raith and others, and expended in Masses for the soul of the said Moutray. This money the Abbot, by a formal charter, bestowed upon John Moutray, the son and heir of the deceased, with full permission to expend it upon a chaplain, who should celebrate a yearly Mass in a fitting place, February 6, 1506-7.¹ Thus, according to the Abbot, the feud was composed for the time, only, however, to be renewed some years later. In March, 1511-12, Moutray was one of the arbiters for the adjustment of the Marches between the properties of Wemyss and Lord Sinclair's land of Dysart.² This John, who appears on an inquisition of December 7, 1506, died "in campo,"³ 1513, being probably killed at the Battle of Flodden with King James IV., having married Marion Pitcairn, who, as his widow, paid three years' rents to the King's Receiver in 1516. He had issue :

1. John, younger, of Seafield.
2. Richard. And, possibly,
3. Sir David, Vicar of Carnbee, who was one of the co-defendants with Wemyss and his tenants against Sir John Dingwall, Provost of Trinity College Church, Edinburgh, and Vicar of the parish church of Wemyss, respecting the teinds belonging to the Provost as Vicar, February, 1528-29.⁴ He is also mentioned in an instrument on the redemption of the lands of Polguld by David Wemyss of that Ilk, May 16, 1521.⁵

V. [SIR] JOHN MOUTRAY [Knt.], fifth Laird of Seafield and Markinch aforesaid, son and heir of the above. Was at the Battle of Flodden with his father and father-in-law, Sir Alexander Stuart, of Garlies, and is said to have been knighted upon this occasion; this, however, appears to be incorrect. He⁶ revived the feud with the Melvilles. After the peace in 1506-7 the two families, according to Sir John Wemyss's own statement, remained upon neighbourly and friendly terms for several years, and they joined together in the Bond at Scone, February 13, 1521, an agreement entered into by the Fifeshire Lairds for their mutual defence⁷; but during the seven succeeding years, while Sir John Melville was engaged in public affairs, he was subjected by his neighbours to a series of active annoyances and assaults upon the persons of himself and his friends in consequence of this feud. Shortly after the Bond, and before the death of Archbishop Forman in May, 1521, John Moutray had attempted to interfere with Sir John Melville's possession of certain lands near Kinghorn, called the Abthane of Kinghorn, near Abden. These lands apparently belonged to the Abbey of Dunfermline, of which the Archbishop was Commendator, and were leased to an aunt of Sir John Melville's, who assigned them to her nephew. Six years before the lease expired Moutray granted a mortgage on his lands of Seafield, and offered the proceeds—600 merks—to the Archbishop to take the lease from Melville, the result being that the latter, to retain possession, was forced to pay £300 Scots for renewal of his lease, instead of £40 Scots as before.¹

This proceeding naturally aroused Sir John Melville's displeasure, but no open rupture then took place, though Moutray pursued a similar course with the family of Kirkcaldy of the Grange, who were related to Melville. In the end of November, 1526, however, Moutray's goods were escheated to the Crown for the crime of manslaughter, and when the messenger-at-arms appeared, with the officers of the Earl of Morton, feudal superior of the lands of Seafield, Moutray and his men deforced the messenger and recovered the goods distrained.² Either on this or a precisely similar occasion, when the officers of the Earl of Morton exacted payment of a debt of £60 Scots adjudged to James Kirkcaldy of Grange, and apprised Moutray's goods, the latter resented the presence on his land of Sir John Melville, James Kirkcaldy, and other neighbouring lairds, who, by the judge's order, accompanied the officers. On December 11, 1526, James, Earl of Morton, obliged himself to defend and keep scatheless Sir John Melville in his dealings with the escheated goods of Moutray, and states that he had directed Melville to pass with his (the Earl's) officer to take up the goods. This obligation was afterwards enforced by a decree of the Lords of Council, dated February 27, 1528-29.

Moutray's first step in retaliation was to resort, not to force, but to the comminatory power of the Church, and a sentence of excommunication was pronounced by the principal official of St. Andrews against Sir John Melville, James Kirkcaldy, and several other lairds of the neighbourhood. They appealed from the sentence, pleading, first, that they had not been either cited or convicted; secondly, that as to the charge of aiding the officer of the Earl of Morton, it was in the power of any competent judge to demand assistance in the execution of his decrees; thirdly, if it was alleged that the officials had issued the appellants letters inhibiting the apprising of the grain, they denied receiving such, and it was only reported them that they were to be excommunicated, and the final sentence was pronounced wholly unknown to them.

The result of this appeal is not recorded; but very shortly after it was made Moutray determined to take the law into his own hands, and on Ash Wednesday (March 6) of the year 1527, he, with his son and other friends, began the first of a series of hostile attacks upon Sir John Melville and his friends, which were repeated at intervals during the next few years. Unfortunately we have only Sir John Melville's statement of the facts, but, so far as that goes, it is graphic enough. There are two versions of the narrative, both intended for the perusal of the Lords of Session, before whom the case ultimately came—the first being apparently a personal relation by Melville, while the second is a more elaborate statement prepared by counsel. From these we learn that Melville and Kirkcaldy of Grange, accompanied by their household servants on their way to Edinburgh, passed through the town of Kinghorn on this particular Ash Wednesday. This being the first day of Lent, they determined to hear Mass, and proceeded towards the parish church for that purpose. But, ere they reached it, Moutray and his followers, who were within the sacred building, being advertised of Sir John's approach, rose hastily and rushed out of the church gates with drawn swords, and besetting the street, made a violent attack on Melville and his friends, who wore no defensive armour, James Kirkcaldy being wounded in the fray.

In the same year, probably about July, Sir John Melville and his retainers, returning from the service of the King, who had made a raid upon the borderers, again passed through Kinghorn on his way homeward. On this occasion his companions were David Wemyss of that Ilk and James Lundy of Balgonie, and the three lairds, leaving their attendants, went quietly to the church "to do thair devotioun and heir mess as qud Cristine men shuld do." While thus engaged, the young Laird of Seafield, who had observed their movements and the absence of their retainers, sent to his father's tower, about a mile to the east of Kinghorn, and mustered eight of his followers, clad in iron headpieces and other armour of defence. When Melville and his companions left the church, therefore, they found themselves confronted by these men drawn up in battle array, of whom four singled out Sir John and attacked him in the churchyard. How the fight ended is not distinctly stated, but the combatants, apparently, were separated, one of the Seafield men being wounded or killed.¹

But the most thoroughly organized and determined attack made by the Moutrays was in May, 1529, in the town of Kirkcaldy. Sir John Melville tells us that the Archbishop of St. Andrews (his former friend, Sir James Beton), had come to that town, and that he himself was quietly riding from his house of Raith to an interview with that prelate, when the fray took place. Sir John describes himself as wholly innocent of evil intention on his own part, and entirely unconscious of the plots against him; he was attended only by his own servants and wore no defensive armour, being dressed in a short white coat,² with doublet and hose, with a red bonnet on his head. The other party, however, who knew of the laird's intended meeting with the Archbishop, were astir betimes, and laid their plans with great determination. On this occasion Moutray was accompanied by, or called to his aid, the family of another laird of the neighbourhood—Vallance of Pitteadie. With the Vallances and his and their retainers all fully armed with "jak,"³ steel bonnets, swords and bucklers, he rode from Seafield to Kirkcaldy. Moutray himself was apparently in peaceful guise, wearing a furred gown, but his armour was carried by a boy. They proceeded to the house of one Alexander Balcanquhal in Kirkcaldy, whence they sent a spy towards Abbots-hall to watch for and report the coming of the Laird of Raith. On receiving intimation of Melville's approach and his unarmed condition, the Laird of Seafield donned his armour—jack, steel bonnet and plaited gloves—and summoned the Laird of Pitteadie and his followers, who were drinking in the town. He reproved their delay and bade them haste, as the Laird of Raith was coming, and they would never have a better opportunity. Vallance, however, who had a regard for Melville, was loath to fight without any quarrel, and tried to dissuade Seafield, objecting that there was no such reason to make slaughter, and that Melville had friends in the district. This speech roused Moutray's ire, and he exclaimed, "Fye on ye, John Vallance, I trowit (believed) never bethe at the hand." This taunt stung poor Vallance, who was probably excited by his morning draughts. Becoming "crabbit and angry," he declared that he would go further than the Laird of Seafield himself dare go. Saying this, he seized two axes and halberts from Balcanquhal's house and was ready for the fray. At this point the Archbishop interposed as a peacemaker, and begged the parties to remain quietly with him and not to make provocation, saying that the Laird of Raith was coming to speak with himself, adding, "Ye have beene aft togidder with me of befor without skaith." These words were scarcely uttered when Melville and his party appeared at the west part of the town, and Moutray, replying hotly to the Archbishop, "Were I ten and he twenty, he durst nocht hold the gait (street)," caught sight of his opponent. He rushed out of the town with his servants, drawing their weapons as they approached Melville and his company.

Sir John Melville, as he saw the excited Laird of Seafield coming on, called to him to take half the street, but the other would not listen. He still advanced, crying out, "Fy, sett upon the tratoures," and so encouraged his followers. The Laird of Pitteadie and his servants were already in front, thus making his boast good, and in the mêlée he was slain. A servant of Seafield was also wounded to death, and Sir John Melville himself was dangerously hurt in various parts of his body before the affair ended. It is not stated in Sir John's narrative which party was victorious, though he seems to imply it was his own; but he appears to have much regretted the fate of the Laird of Pitteadie, who had been in his house only a few days before and was friendly with him. Pitteadie's relations, however, made no charge against Melville for his death, which was brought about in the heat of combat and in pure self-defence.

Sir John Melville's knowledge of what was said and done in Kirkcaldy before his own arrival on the scene was obtained from the full confession of one of his adversary's retainers who was fatally wounded, but survived two days after the fight. This man, named Andrew Traill, several times before his death related to his friends the foregoing facts. He also, in a conscience-stricken mood, sent two priests, one of them a notary, to ask Sir John's forgiveness on his own behalf, thanking God for the latter's escape. He stated that the Laird of Seafield had laid in wait for Melville no fewer than seven times in that year, with murderous intent; that he himself with three others had, on this occasion, undertaken to attack

Melville alone, and to slay him if possible, adding that each of them had struck at their victim, although they had met the fate intended for him.¹

It may here be stated that within a month after the "slaughter," as it was called, Melville and two others received a remission from the King for act and part in the deaths of John Vallance of Pitteadie, Andrew Traill, and another man, Alexander Wemyss, probably also a servant of Seafield's.²

These attacks by the Laird of Seafield were not confined to the Laird of Raith alone, but were directed against others his friends, and even his servants. Thus on one occasion, probably about the beginning of 1533, whilst Melville was absent from home on the King's service, the Laird of Seafield and some of his men on horseback, encountering a kinsman of Sir John—James Melville, a chaplain—on foot, at the east end of Kirkcaldy, gave chase to him with a purpose to kill him. The chaplain took refuge in a house, the doors of which Moutray's men broke in, but fortunately their intended victim escaped by a back way. On another occasion, about July, 1533, some of the Vallances who were partizans of Moutray, at a public fair in Dunfermline, attacked John Kirkcaldy, brother to the Laird of Grange, but he defended himself successfully. Again, in September of the same year, while the Laird of Raith's servants were attending evening song in Kinghorn Church, they were assaulted in the churchyard by the Vallances and others, relatives of those who had been killed in the fray at Kirkcaldy. The parties were separated by the bystanders, but not before the assailants had accidentally wounded Marion Kirkcaldy, sister to Grange.³ The pleadings presented to the Lords of Session on behalf of Sir John Melville and James Kirkcaldy, which narrate the foregoing indictment against the Laird of Seafield and his accomplices, wind up with the conclusion, drawn from the facts, that he is a common oppressor. They state specially that for seven years he had oppressed the Vicar of Kinghorn by violently preventing him from tilling his lands of Vicarsgrange; that he built dykes on these lands to prevent tillage, broke the Vicar's ploughs, maltreated his servants, and put his own sheep to graze on the Vicar's grass, besides withholding his teinds of salt and similar commodities. This oppression and the other misdeeds enumerated are declared to be notorious throughout the district. Indeed, the quarrel between the two factions, whichever was most to blame, had become so serious in its consequences that it engaged the attention of King James V. himself. He came in person to Cupar in Fife, where the parties appeared before him, and both signed in his presence an obligation binding themselves and their adherents to submit to the decision of the Lords of Session, and to appear before the Judges when required to do so.

² See Remission, dated June 12, 1529, Pitcairn's "Criminal Trials," i., p. 244.

³ As a side-issue to the dispute between Moutray and Melville, Sir John appears also to have had difficulties with the Earl of Merton, superior of Seafield. As noted, the Earl was under obligation to Sir John in regard to Moutray's goods, and in 1531 a decree of Council was issued, supported by a precept from the King, requiring the Earl to keep Melville scatheless from Moutray, as to certain goods taken from the latter by Melville: 10 bolls of threshed wheat, at 36s. the boll; 19 bolls of beer, at 33s. the boll; and 40 bolls of oats, at 26s., taken from the half land of Tyrie.

From the phraseology of this document, it would appear as if Moutray had complained against Melville. The latter is referred to as the aggressor, and it is chiefly in regard to the compensation to be paid by him for the deaths of Vallance and others that the submission is made; touching all quarrels between them and harm done to Moutray, he is content to leave the whole matter in the King's hands.¹

About a fortnight afterwards the King, who was still at Cupar, issued directions to those of the Council and Session who had been chosen to decide in the case, desiring them to bring the matter to a good ending, and to see where the occasion of the displeasure has begun between the two parties. As the umpires found cause, they were to weigh the same to the great hurt of neither disputant; but where the fault was greatest, to decide accordingly. Specially, however, were they to make "ane gud end" of the affair, that the parties might "stand in concord estyrwart," which probably was done, as no further trouble appears to have arisen between the two families.² John Moutray married —, fifth daughter of Sir

The adherents for whom Melville became security were James Kirkcaldy of Grange, William Barclay of Touch, John Melville of Wester Touch, James Melville (son and heir of the late David Melville, burgess of Edinburgh), Robert Clerk in Dysart, Robert Melville, goldsmith, Edinburgh, Patrick Kirkcaldy, and Sir James Melville—all landed men. The Laird of Seafield was responsible for David, George and Henry Vallance, brothers of the deceased John Vallance, of Pitt-eadie; James Traill, brother to the slain Andrew Traill; David Wemyss, son of the deceased Alexander Wemyss; and William Wood, probably a relative of the William Wood for whose death compensation was demanded, and who was fatally hurt or killed at Kinghorn."

He died about the year 1540.³

VI. JOHN MOUTRAY, sixth Laird of Seafield and Markinch aforesaid, son and heir of the preceding ; succeeded about 1540, and signed a Charter in the Chartulary of Dunfermline, May 22, 1543. In February, 1559, being of the Catholic faction, Moutray had to furnish the insurgent lords with corn and cattle. They afterwards besieged him in his castle of Seafield and took him prisoner, but released him on parole not to assist the Queen's French troops, a decision which John Knox strongly condemned. Although an ally of the French, he appears not to have escaped the general plundering that took place when they occupied Kinghorn.⁴ He was dead before February 10, 1579, leaving issue :

2. Robert.

VII. GEORGE MOUTRAY, seventh Laird of Seafield and Markinch aforesaid, son and heir of the preceding, was on February 10, 1579, served heir to John Moutray, his grandfather, in the lands of Kinghorn. ³ The sum of 12 merks yearly, which was granted for compensation for slaughter of Thomas Moutray, was regularly paid to 1558, when payment was interrupted. Moutray in 1563 sued Melville for payment for the preceding five years, but, by an agreement between the parties at Lundie, Moutray agreed to accept 240 merks, and discharge Melville from all claims in the future. See copy Summons against Melville, November 18, 1563, and Discharge by Moutray, February 28, 1564-65, in Melville Charter Chest (Melville Book, i., p. 175).

⁴ The French soldiers brought over by the Queen Regent after their victory at Edinburgh went over to Fife, and lay at Kinghorn, from which place they wasted the neighbouring country, "als weall papists as protestantes," says Knox ; "yea, even these that war confidderal with thame, suche as Seafield . . . ennemyes to God and traytouris to thair country" (Wemyss Book, i., p. 132). See also "Old and New Edinburgh."

James Sandilands, of St. Morans.¹ This laird was a staunch adherent of Queen Mary, and took part in the last effort made on her behalf at the Battle of Langside, May 18, 1568, for the slaughter at which he was one of those singled out and brought to trial by the Regent Murray, November 26, 1576.² He is also mentioned as being subjected to much injustice by the Regent Morton.³ He married Elizabeth Stewart, by whom he had issue :

1. Henry, younger of Seafield, his heir.
2. Robert, heir to his brother.
3. John, dead November 21, 1627.
4. Alexander, tutor of Roscobie, appointed guardian to his brother Robert's children, November 8, 1630 ;⁴ witness to his nephew's marriage contract, September 14, 1646. He married Isabel Drummond, and had issue :
 - (1) George, baptized at Dunfermline, May 25, 1641.
 - (2) Janet, baptized at Beath, January 7, 1644.
5. Elizabeth,⁵ married George Lindsay, of Cavill,⁶ near Dunfermline, before February 15, 1603, when she had life-rent sasine of half of Cavill by charter dated February 15 and 18, 1603, at Seafield.

George Moutray died before November 20, 1609.⁷

VIII. HENRY MOUTRAY, eighth Laird of Seafield aforesaid, eldest son and heir of the preceding, to whom he was served heir November 20, 1609. He is made the subject of two letters, dated from Ruthven, August 5 and 8, 1582, respectively, under the hand of King James VI., who styles him "our loved Henry Moutray," to the Laird of Lochleven (Sir William Douglas, afterwards Earl of Morton). The latter appears not inclined to heed the King's wishes, but to oust Moutray from some property at Fetherletter and Lethindy.⁸ He died unmarried 1618, and was succeeded by :

⁶ A George Lindsay of Cavill, married at Dunfermline February 26, 1628, Jean Moutray, and had issue.

⁷ George Moutray, younger, of Seafield, had license from King James VI. to sell his lands of Newton of Markinch to David Wemyss of Wemyss, November 14, 1571 (Registrum Magni Sigilli, iv., No. 2354).

IX. ROBERT MOUTRAY, ninth Laird of Seafield and first of Roscobie, also in Fifeshire, next brother and heir of the preceding. By retour of September 14, 1619, he was returned heir as son of George Moutray, "of John Moutray his avi, in $\frac{1}{3}$ th part of Balconkie." In 1627, under date May 23 to June 1, he had a charter from John Lord Erskine "of the lands of Roscobie and Weddergang and pendicles of Redcraigs and Bowhills, also Blairinbathies, Souther and Norther, also the lands of Keltie, with all coal rights, with the lands of Parbroath and Kingask in Warrandice"; and a second charter from the same to the same, in which he is described as "Olim of Markinch," the same date of the said lands "to be held of the King as Lord of the Lordship of Dunfermline," and on June 27 an Instrument of Sasine follows to "Hon. viro Roberto Moutray de Law." This grant was confirmed to him by a Charter of Confirmation under the Great Seal, July 4, 1627. He married Anna,¹ daughter of Sir James Erskine, of Favour Royal, co. Tyrone, K.B., M.P. (grandson of John, Earl of Mar, and younger brother to the first Earl of Kellie), and by her, who, as his relict, presented a Brief for her Quince, May 29, 1630, he had issue:

1. James, younger of Roscobie, his heir.
2. John, ancestor of Moutray of Favour Royal, p. 27.
3. Child, baptized at Dunfermline, July 9, 1629.

He was dead before May 29, 1630. He is said to have sold Seafield to Dr. Law, Archbishop of Glasgow.

X. JAMES MOUTRAY, second Laird of Roscobie aforesaid, elder son and heir of the preceding, succeeded before May 29, 1630, and, being then a minor, his uncle Alexander was appointed guardian to himself and his brother November 8, 1630. On June 20, 1632, George Law, of Brunton, obtained a decret of apprising against him for the sum of 2,000 merks, etc., which his father, "umquill Robert Moutray," had borrowed from the said George Law, and after a long process Moutray is "furth of the realm, is charged at the Pier of Leith," etc., and Mr. George Law is infest "in all and haill the lands of Roscobie, Blairinbathies, and Woodend," etc., "to be held of our Sovereign Lord the King in all respects as the said James Moutray held or might have held them before his apprising, July 5, 1636." He married, first, Janet Colville, by whom he had issue an only daughter:

1. Agnes, baptized at Beath, February 14, 1646.

He married, secondly, by contract of marriage signed at Brunton, September 14, 1646, Marie, second daughter of James Law, of Brunton, granddaughter of the Archbishop of Glasgow and niece of the above-named Mr. George Law, when all the lands above confiscated were settled upon himself and his wife; and on June 26, 1648, he had a fresh Charter under the Great Seal of the lands of Roscobie, Blairinbathies, and Woodend on the resignation of Mr. George Law and James Law in his favour. By the above-named Marie Law he had further issue:

2. Robert, younger of Roscobie, his heir.
3. James, successor to his brother.
4. James, ancestor of the Anglo-American branch, p. 20.
5. Margaret, baptized at Beath, July 31, 1647.
6. Isabel, baptized at Beath, October 31, 1648; married John Pittscottie, and had issue at least one daughter, Christian, baptized at Beath (entered in Dunfermline Register), February 7, 1668.

Mr. Moutray was living January 5, 1681, but was dead May 21, 1686.

XI. ROBERT MOUTRAY, third Laird of Roscobie aforesaid, elder son and heir of the preceding, married by contract, dated January 5 and 10, 1681, Marie, daughter of Sir William Scott, of Clerkington, by Dame Barbara Dalmahoy, his second wife, when his father resigned to him his lands of Roscobie and Markinch Law. He died s.p.

XII. JAMES MOUTRAY, fourth Laird of Roscobie aforesaid, next brother and heir of the preceding, was served heir to his father May 21, 1686, and had a Precept from Chancery for infefting him as heir to his brother Robert, August 3 following, with Instrument of Sasine, September 17. He married, about 1686, Margaret (who had 12,000 merks as tocher, and had life-rent Sasine April 12, 1687), only daughter of James Kynninmond of that Ilk, by Margaret, his spouse, elder daughter of Sir Henry Wardlaw, third Bart., of Pitreavie, by whom he had issue:

1. James, younger of Roscobie, his heir.
2. Patrick, baptized at Beath, November 17, 1688.
3. Anna, baptized at Beath, July 4, 1690.
4. Elizabeth, married John Moodie, Esq., of Lassodie and Cocklaw, Fifeshire. Her great-great-grandson, John Douglas Moodie, Esq., is now probably heir-general of Moutray, of Seafield and Roscobie. His only sister, Margaret Melville Moodie (born February 21, 1845; died April 30, 1868), married June 25, 1868, as second wife, Charles Henry T. B., eighth Marquis of Ruvigny and Raineval, Colonel in the British Army, and had issue an only son, the present Marquis of Ruvigny and Raineval.

5. Sophia.

On August 29, 1710, he executed a disposition in favour of his son of his lands, "renewing his own and Margaret Kynninmond, his spouse, their life rent and Bond of Provision for 5,000 merks to Elizabeth and Sophia, his daughters," and died January, 1726.

XIII. JAMES MOUTRAY, fifth Laird of Roscobie aforesaid, elder son and heir of the preceding, was baptized at Beath, November 13, 1687, and had a disposition of his lands from his father, August 29, 1710. Mr. Moutray married by contract, dated March 21, 1713, Emilia, third daughter of Sir John Malcolm, of Innerteel, by whom, who was living a widow July 19, 1734, and was probably the Mrs. Moutray, of Roscobie, who died in her house in the Canongate, Edinburgh, March 24, 1762, he had issue :

1. James, younger of Roscobie, his heir.
2. John, successor to his brother.

XIV. JAMES MOUTRAY, sixth Laird of Roscobie aforesaid, a Captain in the Army, son and heir of the preceding, to whom he was served heir February 6, 1736, and by a special retour, dated October 31, 1740, he was entered heir to his grandfather in Roscobie, and North and South Bairnbathies, all in the parish of Dunfermline. He disposed Roscobie to his brother, Captain John Moutray, R.N., April 15, 1766, and died at Dunfermline, May 18, 1773, s.p.

XV. JOHN MOUTRAY, seventh Laird of Roscobie aforesaid, Captain, R.N., immediate younger brother of the preceding, born 1723, entered the Royal Navy, and was, May 12, 1744, promoted by Sir Chaloner Ogle in the West Indies to be Lieutenant of the Oxford. After serving in several different ships, mostly on the home station, without any opportunity of distinction, he was promoted, February 16, 1757, to the command of the Thetis, hospital ship, attached to the fleet which in the latter part of the year sailed for the Basque Roads under Sir Edward Hawke. She was afterwards attached to the fleet in the Mediterranean, and on December 28, 1758, he was advanced to post rank by Rear-Admiral Brodrick, although he remained in command of the Thetis during the war. This irregular promotion was confirmed by the Admiralty, January 24, 1763. In 1769 he commanded the Emerald for a short time, and in 1774 the Thames in the Mediterranean. In the Warwick in 1778 he convoyed the East Indian trade to St. Helena. He was then appointed for a few months to the Britannia, and in March, 1779, to the Ramillies. In July, 1780, with the Thetis and Southampton frigates in company, he sailed in convoy of the large fleet of merchant ships and transports for the East and West Indies and for North America. In view of the exceptional importance and value of this fleet, two other line-of-battle ships and a frigate were ordered to accompany it a hundred leagues westward from the Scilly Islands. On the way it fell in with the Channel Fleet, under Admiral Geary, who also kept it company with his whole force till 112 leagues to the westward. From that point the Ramillies with the Thetis and Southampton were considered sufficient protection. The miscalculation was extraordinary, for the combined Franco-Spanish fleet was enforcing the blockade of Gibraltar, and might be met with anywhere off Cape St. Vincent. At sunset on August 5 some distant sail in the south were reported. Moutray thought it a matter of no importance, and ran on with a fresh northerly breeze. At midnight lights were seen ahead, and not till then did it occur to him that it would be prudent to alter his course. He made the night signal to steer to the westward, but the merchant ships, never quick at attending to signals, on this occasion paid no attention at all. By daylight they were right in among the enemy's fleet, and were almost all captured. A few only with the men-of-war managed to escape. The loss was extremely heavy. To the underwriters it was estimated at upwards of a million and a half sterling, exclusive of the stores and reinforcements for the West Indian fleet. Diplomatically, too, the results were serious; the Court of Spain, which was already listening to secret negotiations at Madrid, conceived new hopes, and would hear of no terms which did not include the surrender of Gibraltar. Moutray meanwhile pursued his way to Jamaica, where by order of the Admiralty he was tried by court-martial on February 13, 1781. He was pronounced to be "reprehensible in his conduct for the loss of the convoy," and sentenced to be dismissed from the command of the Ramillies. In deference to the widespread personal interest in the case, the publication of the minutes was specially sanctioned by the Court, and it was ordered that they should be sent to England by the first conveyance and published accordingly.

Moutray had certainly not taken proper precautions, and the finding of the Court was perfectly just, but much of the blame probably rested with the Admiralty, who had neglected the warning of a similar disaster which was sustained in the same locality ninety years before under Rooke. It has been incorrectly stated that Moutray had no further employment under Lord Sandwich's Administration. He was appointed to the Edgar on March 2, 1782, nearly three weeks before the fall of the Ministry. In May he was moved into the Vengeance, one of the fleet under Lord Howe at the relief of Gibraltar and the rencounter off Cape Spartel in October. It was Moutray's solitary experience of a battle. In February, 1783 (just before the peace), he was appointed in place of Sir John Leforey, Resident Commissioner of the Navy at Antigua, a civil appointment held on half-pay, and giving the holder no executive rank or authority. Notwithstanding this, on December 29, 1784, Sir Richard Hughes directed Moutray to hoist a broad pennant in the absence of the flag, and to exercise the functions of senior officer. Nelson coming to Antigua shortly afterwards refused to acknowledge Moutray's authority, which Moutray, on his part, did not insist on. The matter was referred to the Admiralty, who replied that the appointment was abolished, and it was therefore unnecessary to lay down any rule. He was accordingly recalled, and died at Bath a few months later, November 22, 1785, and was buried in the abbey church there,¹ where there is a handsome monument to his memory. He appears to have been married twice: first, to Elizabeth Pemble, second daughter of the Rev. John Werge, M.A., Vicar of Kirkmenton, Northumberland, and, secondly, to Mary [Moutray], by whom he had issue:

1. James, younger of Roscobie, his heir.
2. Catherine, heiress to her brother.

His second wife, who appears to have been many years younger than himself, was with him in Antigua, where she won the affectionate friendship of Nelson and Collingwood, both young Captains on the station. This friendship continued through Nelson's life, and after Trafalgar Collingwood sent her an account of Nelson's death.

XVI. JAMES MOUTRAY, eighth Laird of Roscobie, only son and heir of the preceding, a Lieutenant in the Navy, died of fever at the siege of Calvi in 1794.

XVII. CATHERINE MOUTRAY, ninth of Roscobie, only sister and heiress of the preceding. On October 17, 1801, she, with consent of "Mrs. Mary Moutray, widow of Captain John Moutray," disposed the lands of Roscobie to William Adam, of Woodtoun. She married, at Westbourne, Sussex, February 29, 1806, the Rev. Thomas de Lacy, M.A., Archdeacon of Meath.

II. MOUTRAY, OTHERWISE MOULTRIE, OF ASTON HALL, CO. SALOP.

XII. JOHN MOUTRAY, otherwise Moultrie, third son of James Moutray of Roscobie, married Catherine Craill,¹ at Culcross, and had issue:

1. John, his heir.
2. Anna [baptized at Beath, March 31, 1699], married J. Cruickshank.

XIII. JOHN MOULTRIE, M.D., son and heir of the preceding, born January 18, 1702; emigrated to America in 1729; married first, April 22, 1728, Lucretia Cooper, by whom he had issue:

1. John, his heir.
2. William, for whose descendants see p. 25.
3. James, for whose descendants see p. 26.
