

A. 114.6.

National Library of Scotland

*B000044240*

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2012 with funding from
National Library of Scotland

<http://www.archive.org/details/genealogicalaced00edmo>

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT
OF THE
FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE
OF DUNTREATH.

EDINBURGH: T. AND A. CONSTABLE,
PRINTERS TO THE QUEEN, AND TO THE UNIVERSITY.

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT
OF THE
FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE
OF DUNTREATH

BY
SIR ARCHIBALD EDMONSTONE OF DUNTREATH
BARONET.

EDINBURGH.—PRIVATELY PRINTED.

MDCCLXXV.

Prefatory Note.

THE following GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE OF DUNTREATH was written by the late SIR ARCHIBALD EDMONSTONE of Duntreath, and completed, as a marking by himself bears, in April 1851. He does not appear to have made any addition to the manuscript, or alteration upon it, after that date, other than adding from time to time the names of his brother's family. These family events have been completed to date, but no other alteration made upon the manuscript. Sir Archibald took much interest in this account of his family; and it is now privately printed as a Memorial of one who will long be remembered by his friends with affectionate regard.

Contents.

	PAGE
PREFACE, . . . . .	I
PRELIMINARY NOTICE—RESIDENCES, . . . . .	2-11
Two Residences named Edmonstone, one in Mid-Lothian, another in Lanarkshire—Edenham in Roxburghshire—Cora on the Clyde—Culloden in Inverness—Duntreath—Broadisland in Ireland—Kilsyth.
CADET BRANCHES, . . . . .	12
ARMS, . . . . .	12
GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT, . . . . .	15
ORIGIN OF THE EDMONSTONE FAMILY, . . . . .	15
HENRICUS DE EDMUNDISTON, . . . . . 1248	18
SIR JOHN EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1359	19
SIR JOHN EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1404	22
Married Isabella, Countess of Douglas and Mar, daughter of Robert II.
SIR DAVID EDMONSTONE OF THAT ILK AND OF EDENHAM, . . . . . 1412	25
SIR JAMES EDMONSTONE, do. do. . . . . 1426	26
Married (1.) Isabella, Daughter of Sir John Forrester of Corstorphine ; (2.) Janet Napier of Merchiston.
SIR JOHN EDMONSTONE, . . . . .	27

	PAGE
SIR ARCHIBALD EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1421	28
SIR WILLIAM EDMONSTONE OF CULLODEN AND DUNTREATH, 1428-1460 Married Mary, Countess of Angus, daughter of Robert III.	29
SIR WILLIAM EDMONSTONE OF DUNTREATH, . . . . . 1460-1486 Married Matilda Stewart.	32
SIR ARCHIBALD EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1487-1502 Married Janet, Daughter of Sir James Shaw of Sauchie.	33
SIR WILLIAM EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1502-1513 Married (1.) Sibylla, Daughter of Sir William Baillie of Lamington ; (2.) Lady Elizabeth Leslie, Countess of Errol, Daughter of first Earl of Rothes ; (3.) Katherine Forrest ; (4.) Sibylla, Daughter of Sir John Carmichael of that Ilk.	35
SIR WILLIAM EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1513-1580 Married (1.) Lady Agnes Steuart, Daughter of second Earl of Lennox ; (2.) Margaret, Daughter of Sir James Campbell of Lawers.	36
SIR JAMES EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1580-1618 Married (1.) Helcn, Daughter of James Stirling of Keir ; (2.) Margaret, Daughter of Sir John Colquhoun of Luss.	40
WILLIAM EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1618-1629 Married Isobel, Daughter of John Haldane of Gleneagles.	46
ARCHIBALD EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1629-1637 Married Jean, Daughter of Archibald Hamilton of Halcraig.	47
ARCHIBALD EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1637-1689 Married Anna Helena, Daughter of Colonel Scott of Harwood.	49

CONTENTS.

ix

	PAGE
ARCHIBALD EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1689-1768 Married (1.) Honourable Ann Erskine, Daughter of third Lord Cardross ; (2.) Jane, Daughter of Honourable John Campbell of Mamore.	52
SIR ARCHIBALD EDMONSTONE, FIRST BARONET, . . . . . 1768-1807 Married (1.) Susanna Mary, Daughter of Roger Harene, Esq. ; (2.) Hester, Daughter of Sir John Heathcote of Nor- manton Park.	53
SIR CHARLES EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1807-1821 Married (1.) Emma, Daughter of Richard Wilbraham Bootle, Esq. of Rode Hall and Lathom House ; (2.) Honourable Louisa, Daughter of Lord Hotham.	56
SIR ARCHIBALD EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1821-1871 Married Emma, Daughter of Randle Wilbraham, Esq. of Rode Hall.	57
SIR WILLIAM EDMONSTONE, . . . . . 1871 Married Mary Elizabeth, Daughter of Colonel Parsons.	57

APPENDIX.

NOTES, . . . . .	61
GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF ELDER BRANCH OF FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE,	92

Genealogical Account.

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

---

THE principal sources whence this Memoir is derived are, first, an Account of the Duntreath Family, drawn up by the well-known Genealogist George Crawford, about the year 1713, and written in his hand. His manuscript is compiled with considerable research, but is defective in some important points, with rather too prominent a disposition to magnify the race whose history he was employed to trace out. He runs also so much into collateral connexions, that it makes it sometimes puzzling to recover the main thread. His work, however, is on the whole a very valuable family document, and without it I should have found extreme difficulty in arranging my memoir. There is likewise another short account, I know not by whom, entitled, 'The Genealogy of the Lairds of Ednem and Duntreth from the year 1063 to the year 1699.' This was printed at Glasgow in 1699, and reprinted at Edinburgh by Thomas Stevenson in 1834. It rather enlarges on the connexions of the family about the time it was compiled, but is otherwise extremely incorrect and of no value whatever. A third document is the pedigree of the Ednam family, for the loan of which I was indebted to Mr. Cranstoun (Lord Corehouse), who obtained the inheritance by will of that branch. It throws some useful light on the early history, but is not continued down very far. An examination into chartularies and manuscripts, and such documents as the Advocates' and Writer to the Signet's Libraries at Edinburgh afford, completes the materials with which the earlier portion of this narrative has been drawn up. I must not omit how much this compilation owes to John Riddell, Esq., Advocate, whose eminent talents have been long directed to the examination of ancient documents, and who is justly considered as the very first authority in all matters relating to Scottish family history. To this gentleman's kindness and attention, and subsequently to his professional revisal of the manuscript, I am indebted for most valuable information, to which abundant reference will be found, especially in the notes. And it is very gratifying to me to have Mr. Riddell's opinion, that though there is an 'hiatus' or two which would be very desirable to fill up, he scarcely knows any pedigree, spread over so large a space of time, which presents so little that is uncertain and defective.

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.

RESIDENCES.

There are two residences of the name of Edmonstone with estates attached to them; one in Midlothian, and in the parish of Newton, four miles to the east of Edinburgh; the other in the parish of Biggar, and county of Lanark. From the former of these places the family unquestionably sprang, though at what period, as will be shown hereafter, is uncertain. The first notice of the name with a date attached is found in a charter, to which Henricus de Edmoundiston is witness, of the year 1248 (Alexander III.), from which time there is every reason to believe it continued to be the principal residence of the elder line, styled of 'that ilk' and 'of Edenham,' for four centuries, till finally disposed of early in the seventeenth. In 1626, the whole estate of Edmonstone was sold to 'Master James Raith, Advocate,' in which year, July 2d, the infeftment is dated. The charter of disposition is seven years later.<sup>1</sup>

In 1664, Anne, daughter and heiress of James Raith, married John, second son of Sir John Wauchope of Niddry Marshall, by which marriage the estate of Edmonstone passed to the Wauchopes, in whose hands it has ever since remained. John Wauchope was, in 1682, appointed one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and took the title of Lord Edmonstone. His only daughter married Patrick, son of Sir Alexander Don, who took the name of Wauchope, from whom the present family is descended. The present house of Edmonstone is modern, nor am I aware of any remains of antiquity except the tower of the old church of Newton.<sup>1</sup> This church, it would seem, was repaired or rebuilt by the last proprietor of the family, Sir John Edmonstoun, or his father, as is attested by a curious entry in the parish record : ' Reported by Mr. Wm. Knox that the Laird of Edmonstoun promisit to be careful in the rebuilding of the Kirk of Newtone,' dated January 1592-3. It would seem also, from the charter of disposition to James Raith, that in this Church was the family burial-place. The church was pulled down about a century ago, and rebuilt in a more central situation ; the old tower only remains.

<sup>1</sup> Note 1, Appendix.

The contiguous parish of Woolmet was annexed to Newton at the Reformation, and the site of the old church of Woolmet is now occupied by the modern burial-place of the Wauchopes.<sup>2</sup>

Of the other Edmonstone, in the county of Lanark, there exists no document nor tradition connecting it with the family. The first mention of it thus spelt, as far as I know, is in that curious, but not very authentic, work, ' The Memorie of the Somervilles,'<sup>3</sup> where Sir John Herring is spoken of as Laird of Edmondstoune in Clydesdale, and of Gilmerton in Midlothian, A.D. 1371, and the cypher S. I. H. was, I am told, preserved till lately on the old tower, still in existence.<sup>4</sup> In the Ragman Rolls, however, of the date 1296, there is a Baldewyn de Edmeiston in Lanarkshire among those who swore fealty to Edward the First. This family must have soon disappeared and made way for the Herrings. And there is a charter to Gilbert Herring, son and heir of John Herring of Edmeiston, of the lands of Edmeiston, Greenlaw, etc., in the earldom of March and county of Berwick, dated December 17, 1444. This property of Edmonstone in Clydesdale has been for a century in the possession of a family of the name of Brown.

Edenham or Ednam,<sup>5</sup> in Roxburghshire, was a residence of the elder branch of the family (the chief residence when Edmonstone was sold) for

<sup>1</sup> Statistical Account of Scotland. Edinburgh. Page 562.

<sup>2</sup> Note 2, Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> Memorie of the Somervilles, vol. i. page 118.

<sup>4</sup> Note 3, Appendix.

<sup>5</sup> Note 4, Appendix.

nearly four hundred years. These lands were acquired by a grant from Robert the Second, 'cum advocacione Ecclesie et Hospitalis ejusdem Johanni de Edmonstoun et Isobelle Comitisse de Douglas filie nostre carissime,' A.D. 1390, and confirmed by a charter of confirmation of Robert the Third, April 25, 1392.

Edenham was one of the confiscated estates bestowed by Robert Bruce on Walter, fourth Lord High Steward of Scotland, after the battle of Bannockburn, on his marriage with Marjory Bruce, the King's daughter, who died next year in giving birth to King Robert the Second, the first of the Stuart line. It was seized by Edward the Third, for there is an ancient charter in the Tower<sup>1</sup> by which the manor of Edenham is committed to William de Montagu, in the eighth year of that monarch's reign. Indeed a few years earlier (1335) there is a Passport in Rymer's Federa to William de Edenham as one of the 'Nuntii' between 'nos et nostros subditos,' on one side, and 'Robert de Brugs et nobiles Scotiae,' on the other. In the twenty-first year of Edward the Third there is a charter for restoring the Hospital of Edenham with St. Mary's at Berwick to Robert Burton; and in the last year of the same king there is a charter granting half the manor of Edenham, in Roxburgh, to John de Iselham, and in the following year Richard the Second grants 26 marks annually to John de Iselham for this half of the manor of Edenham.

Keith,<sup>2</sup> in his account of religious houses, says: 'The Hospital of Ednam was dedicated to St. Lawrence, and seems to have been founded by the Edmonstones of Ednam, who were patrons of this place.' It had, however, been founded as far back as the reign of King William the Lion, and St. Leonard is spoken of as its tutelary saint in the Register of the Charters of the Great Seal. It may have been restored and re-dedicated by the Edmonstouns.

The estate was sold by James Edmondstone, the last male heir of the elder line of the family, about 1773, and, after passing through other hands, was purchased in 1827 by the last Viscount Dudley and Ward, who, being raised to the Earldom of Dudley, took Ednam as his second title. It is now in possession of his heir, Lord Ward.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ayloff's Calendar of Charters in the Tower, 1772.

<sup>2</sup> Keith, Catalogue of Scottish Bishops, etc.

<sup>3</sup> Note 5, Appendix.

The poet Thomson was a native of this place, of which his father was minister.

The last Laird of Edmondstoune purchased the estate of Cora on the Clyde from a portion of the proceeds of Ednam, and there his sisters lived till the death of the last in 1826, who was said to be above one hundred years old. She left the property to Mr. George Cranstoun, who, as Lord of Session, took the title of Lord Corehouse. He rebuilt the house, and greatly improved this most romantic spot.<sup>1</sup>

The Duntreath line of the family had, previous to the acquisition of that property, their designation from Culloden in Inverness. At what precise time Culloden came into their possession has not been ascertained; but it seems to have been obtained from the Setons, since there is a charter by John Dunbar, Earl of Moray, who married the Lady Marjory, eldest daughter of Robert the Second, of the lands of Culloden in Moray to Sir Alexander Seton.<sup>2</sup> There is, moreover, a resignation dated Edinburgh, 28th November 1421, by John de Annandin of the lands of Myles, 'reverendo et superiori Domino Settone;' witnesses, Archibaldo de Edmiston Milite, et Willielmo filio suo et herede, Willielmo de Annandin Consanguineo meo, et Hugoni de Lindsay, armigeris.

Though the precise time when Culloden was acquired cannot now be discovered, it must have been during the twenty-four years intervening between 1421, when we find it in possession of the Setons, and 1445, when William Edmonstone de Culloden is mentioned in a charter of that date, by which Duntreath is granted to his son. It was sold in 1506 by this son, Sir William, to Strachan of Scotstown. Culloden was the well-known scene of the fatal overthrow of the unfortunate Charles Edward in 1746, at which time it was possessed by the Lord President Forbes, and it has ever since, I believe, continued in the same family.

The Barony of Duntreath, in the parish of Strathblane and county of Stirling, was acquired in or somewhat previous to the year 1434 tempore James I. The first notice of it in connexion with the family is in an entry in the Chamberlain's Rolls in the Compota Ballivorum,<sup>3</sup> dated 1434, wherein it is stated that the Baillif of the Crown 'non onerat se de fermis' of Duntreath, because the King has infest William de Edmonstone with them. The earliest mention, however, of Duntreath is of perhaps the middle of the previous century, of a resignation of Donald Earl of Lennox of the lands of Duntreath to his brother Murdoch de Levenox, and there is a notarial instrument referring to this charter of resignation dated 1408. As regards the existing tenure, there is a charter in the family charter chest of Issobel Duchess of Albany Countess of Lennox, dated 1445, of these lands to William Edmonstone, son of William of Culloden and his wife Matilda Stewart, reserving the liferent to William the father.

<sup>1</sup> Note 6, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> Note 7, Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> Note 8, Appendix.

There is, moreover, a charter of confirmation of James II., dated Sterling, December 1452, to the same William 'in conjunctâ infeodatione,' with William of Culloden and Marion Stewart Countess of Angus, her father and mother, erecting the lands of Duntreath into a Barony, with the fullest Baronial powers.

Strath-blachan, the valley of the Blachan or Blane, is mentioned as a parish about 1200. It formed part of the vast district called the Levenox or Lennox, extending from the River Leven between the Clyde and Loch-lomond, which was erected into an earldom by David I., or his successor Malcolm IV. The Duchess of Albany was eldest daughter and heiress of Duncan VIII. and last Earl of Lennox of that line, whose violent death, together with that of Murdoc Duke of Albany, his son-in-law, and the two elder of the Duke's sons, Walter and Alexander Stewart, by order of James I. on his return from his long captivity in England, forms so striking an event in Scottish history. This event occurred in 1425. The Duchess of Albany succeeded to the title and estates of Lennox, though her possession was probably for a time suspended, as we find the original grant of Duntreath to Sir William Edmonstone to have proceeded from the King. James was murdered in 1437-8, and accordingly, in 1445, we find the Duchess in the exercise of her full rights, by the charter which, among many others, she then granted to William Edmonstone the younger, or probably on the occasion of his marriage with her grand-daughter Matilda Stewart, reserving, however, his father's liferent. In 1450, moreover, she granted the church of Strathblane, with those of Fintry and Bonhill, to her new Collegiate establishment at Dumbarton.<sup>1</sup> after the Duchess's death, which occurred the beginning of that year, and the succession to the Lennox estates was for several years a matter of great dispute.

The charter of confirmation<sup>2</sup> of 1452, mentioned above, was granted

<sup>1</sup> Note 9, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> Note 10, Appendix.

The third and only surviving son of the Duke and Duchess of Albany escaped to Ireland, and having formed a connexion with a lady of the name of Macdonald, had by her a large family, seven sons and one daughter. Three of these sons were afterwards legitimated, and the eldest, Andrew, became a person of great consequence. He was created Lord Avondale, and was Chancellor of Scotland. His legitimation, however, did not go the length of securing to him the succession of his family, which was disputed by the heirs of the Duchess's two younger sisters, Lady Elizabeth, wife of Sir John Stewart of Darnley, and the two grand-daughters of Lady Margaret, who had married Robert Monteith of Rusky. An arrangement was at length come to by which the liferent of the Lennox estates was made over to Lord Avondale, through whom the restoration of the property had been mainly effected, which had been vested in the Crown at the Duchess's death, with remainder, according to the Royal Charter of Entail by Robert the Third, 1392, to the above-mentioned heirs of the last Earl Duncan. Of this John Lord Dernely (or Darnley) received a considerable portion, and the earldom of Lennox was renewed in his line, and continued into the Royal Family of Stewart.

At the same time that Lord Avondale obtained the liferent of the earldom, he procured likewise, from the heirs, a guarantee of the lands of Duntreath to Sir William Edmonstone, who was married to his sister Matilda Stewart, and their heirs.<sup>1</sup>

This is proved by a deed of James III., June 21, 1472-3, stating the investment of Andrew Lord Avondale of the Earldom of Lennox, in liferent, by John Lord Darnley, and also that 'our cousin William Edmonstone of Duntreath be made secure by the said Lord Darnley, which he has by infestment and gift heritably of our progenitor' James II.

There is, moreover, in the family charter-chest a Renunciation and Grant, dated Edinburgh, August 2, of the same year, 1472, by John Earl of Lennox to William Edmonstone of Duntreath, of the Superiority of Duntreath, etc., and of all claim he had thereto, allowing him, the said

<sup>1</sup> Note II, Appendix.

William, to hold the said lands immediately of the King, and for that purpose confirming a charter by King James II. (1452) to the said William in respect of the great kindness, labour, and expense of the said William, in recovering the Earl's part of the Earldom of Lennox.

There is likewise an instrument, dated 27th October of the same year, of the lands of Duntreath, etc., in favour of William Edmonstone, upon a declaration made by another of the heirs and claimants to the Lennox Estates, Elizabeth, grand-daughter of the Lady Elizabeth Monteith, married to John Napier of Merchiston, that in pursuing her claim to a fourth part of the lands of the Lennox, she makes none on those of the said William Edmonstone.

Lastly, there is an instrument of the 5th of the same month, exempting the Barony of Duntreath from the jurisdiction of the Earl of Lennox's Courts. Nothing was thus omitted to secure to the proprietor of the Duntreath estate the full exercise of his Baronial powers.

In 1614 the lands and barony of Duntreath were wadsetted or mortgaged, together with the office of Coroner of the Shyre, by Sir James Edmonstone and his son William, to Sir William Livingston of Kilsyth, redeemable on the payment of 60,000<sup>1</sup> merks, which redemption happily took place sixteen years after (1630) by Archibald, son of the above William, and Duntreath has ever since been the principal seat of the family. A considerable portion, however, of the original estate was never recovered.

At what time the Castle was first built is unknown, but it was one of the fortalices belonging to the Lennoxes, to which considerable additions were subsequently made. The last of these additions appears to have been made by Sir James Edmonstone about the end of the sixteenth century, and a stone with the family arms engraved, with the cypher S. J. E. still remains. The Castle consists of a quadrangle, of which the south side never was completed. As the family latterly resided principally in Ireland, the house fell into decay, and it is said that the factor having received orders to cover a neighbouring farm-house with slates, unroofed the old mansion for that purpose about the middle of the last century.

Broadisland in the county of Antrim, in Ireland, was purchased the beginning of the seventeenth century, at the period of the plantation of the forfeited estates by James I. William Edmonstone of Duntreath settled there in 1609,<sup>1</sup> and he was the first to introduce and settle a Presbyterian minister, Edward Bryce, late minister of Drymen, who had been forced to leave Scotland for his opposition to the introduction of Prelacy in 1613. Broadisland continued to be in possession, and Red Hall to be the chief residence, of the family for several generations; till the estate, having been much reduced, was finally sold by Sir Archibald Edmonstone, the latter end of the eighteenth century, to a family of the name of Porter.<sup>2</sup> It now belongs to Mr. Kerr.

<sup>1</sup> Note 12, Appendix.

The estate of Kilsyth, comprising the East and West Baronies, and the lands of Balincloch or Bancloch, in the parish of Campsie, were purchased by Sir Archibald Edmonstone in 1783. Kelvesith (or Kyllynsith) so designated from the Kelvin water, formed part of the vast territory of the Lennox, originally bestowed by Malcolm III. to Arkyl, a great northern English baron, afterwards erected into the earldom of Levenox or Lennox, in favour of Alwyn, his grandson, by Malcolm IV. The parish was designated Moniabugh, from a little rivulet which ran through it. The earliest notice of Kilsyth is a charter of Malwyn, third Earl of Lennox, of the lands of Glasshill, Kilsyth, etc., to Eva his sister, and to her husband Malcolm, the son of Duncan Thane of Calendar, about the middle of the thirteenth century. These lands afterwards came into possession of the Fleemings, for there is a grant by Malcolm Fleeming, first Earl of Wigton, of the first creation of the lands of Kyllynsith to Robert De la Vall, an Englishman, whose daughter, Margaret, dying without heirs, they escheated to the Crown, and were granted by King David II. to Sir William Livingston and Christian his wife, daughter and heiress of Patrick Callendar of Callendar. This charter is dated 13th October 1361. Sir John Livingston, grandson to the above Sir William, who was killed at the battle of Homeldon, gave a grant of the lands of Wester Kilsyth to William, his son by his second marriage, A.D. 1402, confirmed by a charter of Murdoch Earl of Fife and Duke of Albany to the said William, on the resignation of his mother Agnes, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith, 1423. The East Barony of Kilsyth appears to have remained in the hands of the elder branch of the family till they were disposed by Alexander Earl of Linlithgow, and his son Lord Livingston, to Sir William Livingston of Kilsyth, upon the payment of 55,000 merks, A.D. 1620. Sir James having suffered much for his attachment to the Royal cause, having been moreover fined by Cromwell to the amount of £1500, and his houses destroyed, was immediately, on the restoration of Charles II., created Baron of Campsie and Viscount of Kilsyth. His eldest son, who succeeded him, died unmarried, but William, third Viscount, having engaged in the rebellion of 1715, was attainted, and his estate, valued at £864 per annum, forfeited to the Crown. He married first, Jean, daughter of William Lord Cochrane, and widow of the celebrated Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee, by whom he had one son, who both came to their end in the following remarkable manner. It would seem that, having been actively engaged in opposition to the Revolution Settlement of 1688, after the battle of Killiecrankie, he retired to Holland, where the catastrophe occurred which is thus related in a letter of John Hay of Carubber to the Earl of Errol, dated Edinburgh, 30th October 1695:—

<sup>1</sup> Note 13, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> Note 14, Appendix.

‘By the post yesterday I had a letter from young Blair out of Utrecht, with a particular but sad accident of the Viscountess of Dundee and her son. He writes that he had dined with her and Kilsyth her husband, and after dinner, just as he had left them, the Lady and Kilsyth, and a gentleman with them, went into the room where the young child and Mrs. Melville, the Lady’s woman, were. The house was covered with turf, the ordinary fuel for fire in that place, and it is thought by the weight of it the roof fell and crushed my Lady and her son and Mrs. Melville to death. Kilsyth himself was three-quarters of an hour beneath the rubbish, yet both he and the other gentleman are free of hurt. The Lady and her son are embalmed to be brought home. The gentlewoman was buried in that place on the 18th instant, old style, after dinner.’<sup>1</sup>

In 1795, just a hundred years after, the vault was accidentally opened, and the bodies were discovered in a perfect state of preservation, which occasioned attention for a time till the vault was again closed. William Livingston, who succeeded subsequently to the peerage on the death of his brother, married to his second wife, Barbara, daughter of M'Dougal of Makerston, by whom he had a daughter who died young. Lord Kilsyth died at Rome, under attainder, in 1733, and with him the family became extinct.

<sup>1</sup> Note 15, Appendix. The spelling of this letter is modernized.

The forfeited estate<sup>1</sup> was purchased first by the York Buildings Company, afterwards by Mr. Campbell of Shawfield, who sold it to Sir Archibald Edmonstone in 1783.

There are vestiges of two ancient residences, one on the Garrett Burn, northward of the town, the other nearly on the site of the modern house at Colzium. Besides these, the last residence of the Kilsyth family stands nearly entire, adjoining the church. This latter house was built after the Restoration, but whether on the site of a former one I have no exact means of ascertaining. The house of Kilsyth<sup>2</sup> was burnt in the time when the country was occupied by Cromwell's troops, and after the Restoration there was a claim preferred to Parliament by the inhabitants for the losses they sustained. I think it probable, as stated in the Origines Parochiales Scotiae, that this castle stood on the ground now occupied by the later Kilsyth house; but as the tower on the Garrett and that at Colzium were both destroyed, the former probably, the latter certainly, about or at the same time, there is no means, that I am aware of, of accurately deciding to which the memorial in question refers. Colzium was the residence attached to the last barony, which, as stated above, was comparatively a late acquisition to the estate. It was in existence at this period, for, in the contract between the Earl of Linlithgow and Sir William Livingston for the purchase, Colzium tower, fortalice, and dependencies are specially mentioned. This was in 1620. It is likewise made over as the dower house, on the marriage of Sir James Livingston with Euphemia Cunningham in 1647. As to the period of its erection there is no clue. There is an old stone taken from the ruins with the date 1575, but I should think this would refer to later additions, not to the original foundation of the old tower of Colzium.

The Western Barony of Kilsyth belonged to the parish of Campsie till the year 1647. The old church, which stood in the churchyard at some distance from the town, was pulled down, and the present one built in 1815. The patronage is vested in the Crown.

The battle of Kilsyth, the scene of Montrose's great victory, was fought on the high ground to the east of Colzium. Many local names preserve the record of that memorable event.

<sup>1</sup> Note 16, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> Note 17, Appendix.

CADET BRANCHES.

I am not aware that any one bearing the name of Edmonstone claims descent from the elder or Ednam line,<sup>1</sup> nor can trace connexion with it. There is a family settled in Shetland, the first of which, Andrew Edmondston, a minister of the church, emigrated there in Queen Mary's time, but the present descendants know nothing of their origin.

Of the known cadets of the Duntreath stock, that of Spittal or Broick is the only one which yet remains in the male line. For several generations, till the death of the late Archibald Edmonstone, they were hereditary baillies on the Duntreath estate. A curious notice of directions, given by the justices to the heritors of several parishes, ordering the regular payment of 'Black Mail' to Captain M'Gregor, a predecessor of the celebrated Rob Roy Macgregor, dated Sterling, 3d February 1658-9, is addressed 'For Archibald Edmonstone, Bailzie of Duntreath, to be published at the kirk of Strathblain.'<sup>2</sup>

The illegitimate branch of Cambus-Wallace became, I believe, extinct some years ago, by the death of Mr. James Edmondstone of Newton-Doune.

COAT OF ARMS.

The arms of the family of Ednam, as given in Nisbet's Heraldry, were 'or, three crescents gules, supported by two camels proper;' and for crest, 'a camel's head and neck.' These bearings seem attested by a seal attached to a charter of the year 1612, whereby the lands of Edmonstone were made over to Mr. Thomas Hope, Advocate, as far as the shield and crest are concerned; at least the crest looks as if it were intended for a camel's head and neck; there are, however, no supporters. But the crests became subsequently changed for a globe surmounted by a cross.<sup>3</sup> In Nisbet, the arms of the Duntreath branch are stated to be 'three crescents gules, with the annulet in the ceur,' so illuminated in the house of Fala Hall, which, with the lands of Fala, belong to Ednam. No mention of the crest supporters or tressure, though an engraving of the arms complete is given as now worn. On a stone at Duntreath the arms are engraved with the double tressure and annulet, the shield resting on a camel, with the cypher S. J. E., doubtless Sir James Edmonstone, which would fix it to the latter part of the sixteenth century.

<sup>1</sup> Note 18, Appendix.<sup>2</sup> Note 19, Appendix.<sup>3</sup> Note 20, Appendix.

The authority, however, on which the arms as at present worn rests is of an earlier date. There is a seal of William Edmonstone appended to a resignation of his lands by William Graham of Garvock into the hands of James III., because, as it is stated in the deed, 'sigillum proprium non habui sigillum fratris mei Willielmi de Edmoundstone de Duntreath ptibus apponi.' They were uterine brothers, being both sons of the Countess of Angus. Of this deed there is a copy in the family charter chest, with a representation of the seal, in which the arms are laid down without the annulet, and with the supporters as now used. This copy<sup>1</sup> was made at Edinburgh in 1712, and is duly attested. It would seem that it was procured by Crawford the antiquary, who moreover states that, 'upon the Laird of Duntreath producing this deed before the Lord Lyon King at Arms, Sir Alexander Erskine of Cambo, Baronet, showing that his ancestors had been in use to carry and wear the double tressure about their paternal coat of arms as a tessera and mark of their Royal descent, and that they had been likewise in use, time out of memory, to wear two lions rampant as supporters, to matriculate the bearings of Edmonstone of Duntreath, conform to the old seal in his registers, and gave out an extract as usual in the like case, and yet it is strange Mr. Nisbet, in his late system of Heraldry, has not taken the least notice of it.

In 1828 Mr. Riddell made a copy of the original Garvock deed, as also of the seal, which differs however from the above in having the annulet. There is also this farther difference; in my copy there is a helmet surmounted by a coronet, out of which rises a crest, which is thus described, 'supra cassidem stat corona antiqua ex qua oritur caput cygni vel alterius similis volucris, cum collo et rostro.' But in Mr. Riddell's copy there are the helmet and coronet but no crest, of which he says there was no appearance, though the seal had not been preserved entire. There certainly is no trace of a crest in his sketch.

Moreover, in the chapter-house of the Cathedral of Dunkeld there is a tablet with a Latin inscription, and on each side sixteen coats of arms; one of these is the Edmonstone coat, without the annulet, with 'Duntreth' underneath. The chapter-house was erected by Bishop Lauder in 1469, but there is, I believe, no date attached to the tablet.

<sup>1</sup> Note 21, Appendix.

Crawford, in his Manuscript Genealogy, has paid particular attention to the double<sup>1</sup> tressure, flowered and counter-flowered, in the Duntreath coat. It was adopted by several of the principal Scottish families, and at one time as a mark of Royal descent. This was, however, by no means universally the case, since neither the Douglas or Hamiltons, for instance, wear it; and it was never assumed by the elder branch of the Edmonstone family, though descended from the Countess of Douglas, daughter of King Robert the Second, as the Duntreath line was from the Countess of Angus, daughter of King Robert the Third. Whether it was originally considered as a right, does not appear, but it came to be so, for in the reign of George the First the Earl of Sutherland claimed this honourable augmentation in consequence of his descent from Robert the First, and it was allowed him. It was adopted by William Edmonstone, son of the Countess of Angus, as is shown by his seal, as it was by his uterine brothers, Kennedy of Dunure and Graham of Fintry.

But by much the most remarkable part of these heraldic bearings is the coronet<sup>2</sup> out of which the crest rises. This, so common now, is not referable in Scotland, at least to an earlier period than that of James the First or Charles the First, at which time, too, the lower hereditary peerage, Viscounts and Barons, assumed coronets in imitation of those of England. The coronet in the Duntreath crest, now resembling the modern ducal, with three instead of five strawberry leaves in the draft, taken, as mentioned above, from the Garvock seal, more resembles an Earl's without the balls. What this addition to the armorial bearings of the family implied it is now useless to speculate upon; that it was, however, an unusual distinction, connected either with the Royal descent or some peculiarity in the grant of the Duntreath portion of the great Earldom of Lennox, can scarcely be doubted. From a stone at Duntreath with the arms of Sir James Edmonstone, I am inclined to think the crest was originally the head and neck of a camel, and not of a swan, the same as that of the elder line. The two would be much alike.

<sup>1</sup> Double tressure. The double tressure was supposed to have been introduced into the Royal arms to perpetuate the ancient League between Scotland and France.

<sup>2</sup> Note 22, Appendix.

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT.

The origin of the most ancient families is in most countries uncertain, and the rudeness of the people down to a comparatively late period, together with the dispersion of national documents by the policy of Edward I., and still more the destruction of Scottish records at the time of the Reformation, which were lodged in the chapter-houses or consistories of religious houses and cathedrals, make this remarkably the case in Scotland. But in proportion as authentic records are defective, vague tradition prevails, and to trace an imaginary descent from a remote and noble stem is a piece of vanity, by none more freely indulged than our northern genealogists. It is accordingly stated in Crawford, and in another manuscript account, that the Edmonstone family was supposed to be descended from a younger branch of the Counts Egmont of Flanders, in the person of an Edmundus who came to Scotland with Margaret, sister of Edgar the Atheling, on her marriage with King Malcolme Canmore. If this descent could be proved, it would certainly be a very honourable one. Bockenbergius,<sup>1</sup> the historian of the family of Egmont, states that it sprung from Radbodus, son of Aldgillus King of Frisia, A.D. 739, and that it was fixed at Halbernum, now Egmont, by Adelburt, son of the King of the Deii. Benvold was the name of the reigning Count at the time of Margaret's marriage, and unluckily there is no mention of any collateral branch migrating at this period to Scotland.

When Edgar took refuge in Scotland, with his mother and sisters, from the tyranny of William the Conqueror, several of the Saxon Barons, who had been endeavouring to resist the Norman invader, accompanied him, and obtained settlements from Malcolm. Geddes, the author of the life of St. Margaret, states, though I should think somewhat apocryphally, that Agatha, the mother of that Princess, and Edgar was attended by a following of Hungarian nobles, from whom several Scottish families sprang. The fact, however, that these descendants of the rightful line had been resident at the Court of Edward the Confessor for ten years since their recall by that Monarch from Hungary, would render it very unlikely that they were accompanied to Scotland by many, if by any nobles from Hungary.

<sup>1</sup> Note 23, Appendix.

That the Edmonstone family descended from a Saxon Baron is in the highest degree probable, but whence that Baron came is the question. Sir James Dalrymple, in his 'Collections,'<sup>1</sup> has the following notice. After mentioning in the charters of David the First to Holyrood Abbey, one to which Thoraldus de Treverent (Tranent) was witness, and also one of the said Thoraldus, confirming to the Abbey the claim he had to the Church of Tranent, Sir James adds, 'To the charter of the fore-mentioned, Thoraldus Admundus filius Forn and Admundus de Fageside are witnesses. If this be the Forn mentioned, a witness in the charter of King Alexander the First to Scone,<sup>2</sup> it gives an ancient pedigree to Admundus. Perhaps he gave the name of the lands of Edmonstone, near to Edinburgh, and surname, to the possessors of those lands. The Edmonstones are reputed an ancient family there. King David the Second gives a charter to John Edmonstoun of the Crownship of Edinburgh. I suppose the same person gets a charter from King Robert the Second of the barony of Edenham, bearing him to be married to Issobel, Countess of Douglas, the King's daughter. Since this time the family has been designed of Edenham, and the aforesaid charter is to be seen in the hands of the Laird of Ednam. The other, Admundus Fageside, was probably predecessor to the Fairsides of that ilk.' Sir James Dalrymple is a respectable authority; this is however but mere unsupported conjecture, and as such indeed he gives it.<sup>3</sup>

There is yet a farther idea thus stated by Craufurd: 'Others again, and perhaps with full as great probability, think that the family and the original ancestor of the Edmonstones are of the same stock, blood, and kindred with those of the surname of Seaton and Oliphant. To support this conjecture they think the one and the same common arms of the Edmonstones with those other two noble families, the three crescents, goes far to confirm this, the difference among them being only the tincture or colours.' As regards the Oliphants, there is nothing but this identity of armorial bearings to support the notion, but there are some striking coincidences with respect to the Setons which gives to my mind considerable weight to the conjecture of a common origin.

<sup>1</sup> Sir James Dalrymple's Collections concerning Scottish History, 1705, Appendix, p. 429.

<sup>2</sup> Chartulary of Scone, Bannatyne and Maitland Clubs.

<sup>3</sup> Note 24, Appendix.

Armorial bearings and surnames began to be adopted in the eleventh and twelfth centuries.<sup>1</sup> The latter became general in private families in the course of the thirteenth. Sir James Balfour says, 'most ancient surnames, and of best account, have been local, deduced from towns, castles, places, villages, hamlets, affording surnames to their lords and possessors.'<sup>2</sup> Among a list of names thence derived, he mentions Edmonstone, and in further enumerating a number of family appellations which have existed, he says, six hundred years, is Admistovne or Edmistovne.

The name is evidently formed by 'Edmund,' with the addition of 'town.' Regarding town, Sir Francis Palgrave thus writes: 'The first and primary element of the Anglo-Saxon state appears to be the community which in England, during the Saxon period, was called the Town or Township.' 'Tun is derived from "Tynan," to enclose, denoting in its primary sense the enclosure which surrounded the mere homestead or dwelling of the lord. It seems to have been gradually extended to the whole of the land which constituted the domain.'<sup>3</sup> In Scotland the term still retains nearly its original meaning, which is thus given by Chalmers: 'A baron obtained from the king a grant of lands which he settled with his followers, built a castle and a church, a mill and a brew-house, and thereby formed a hamlet, which, in the practice of the age, was called the "Ton of the Baron."<sup>4</sup>

Now it is a remarkable circumstance, over and above the identity of the coat of arms, that the lands of Edmonstone, whence the name certainly arose, lie in the midst of the great estates once possessed by the Setons; and the two families seem at an early period to have been connected, for there is a charter of John Dunbar, Earl of Moray, of the lands of Culloden, in 'Moravia,' to Sir Alexander Seton, which charter is without date; but John, second son of Patrick Dunbar, ninth Earl of Dunbar, by Lady Agnes, daughter and heiress of Thomas Randolph, Earl of Moray (evidently the person referred to in the charter), obtained the grant of the

<sup>1</sup> Hallam, Middle Ages, vol. i., page 205. Second Edition.

<sup>2</sup> Sir James Balfour on Surnames. Advocates' Library.

<sup>3</sup> Palgrave, History of the English Commonwealth, vol. i. page 65.

<sup>4</sup> Chalmers' Caledonia, vol. i. page 501.

Earldom of Moray from Robert the Second in 1371. But as these lands of Culloden were in possession of Sir William Edmonstone, the first of the Duntreath line, and himself nearly related to Robert the Second, it seems likely that they were derived from the Setons by a family transfer. Farther, in a charter of resignation, dated Edinburgh, 28th November 1421, by 'John de Annandia,' of the lands of Myles, 'Reverendo et Superiori domino suo Johanni domino Settone,' among other witnesses are Archibald Edmonstone, Knight, and William, his son and heir.

From these various causes I think it highly probable that an Edmund of the race of Seton received the lands of Edmonstone in Midlothian as his appanage, to which he gave his name, and that from him the family is descended. Nor is the stock an ignoble one. According to Douglas, the Setons are of Norman extraction. Secher, son of Dougal de Say, obtained lands in East Lothian from David the First, and hence the name Say-town. At a later period the family rose into great distinction. The chief branch was ennobled as Barons Seton in 1448, and as Earls of Winton in 1600. George, the fifth Earl and eleventh Baron, was attainted for his concern in the rebellion in 1715, and, having died without male issue in 1745, the Earls of Eglinton, who were Setons in the male line and Montgomeries only in the female, became heirs-male of the family. The title by a specialty was saved from forfeiture, and the Earldom of Winton was accordingly taken up by the present Earl of Eglinton in 1840. From another branch of the Seton family the ducal House of Gordon, now Marquisses of Huntley, descend; and cadets were raised to the peerage as Earls of Dumfermline, and also as Viscounts Kingston, now extinct.

Presuming, therefore, that the Setons may be the original stem, at what period did the House of Edmonstone appear as a distinct family? This it is impossible to fix precisely, but there is ground for referring it to about the commencement of the thirteenth century. The earliest mention of the name I have met with, is an assignation of lands by Johannes de Gallard to the abbey of Dumfermline, to which Henricus de Edmundiston is witness, dated at Musselburgh, 1248, tempore Alexander II. The same person is, moreover, referred to four years later, in charter of mortification, by William de Craigmillar, whereby he gives in alms, to the church and abbey of Dumfermline 'quandam toftum terre in Craigmillar, in Australi, parte qui ducit de villa de Noddriff (Niddry), ad ecclesiam de Libertoun quas Henricus de Edmondston de me tenet.' This is dated 1252.<sup>1</sup>

There is another document, however, yet, a few years earlier as it would seem, but without a date, referring to a generation one degree farther back. An indenture between 'Dominum W. Abbatem et conventum de Dunferlin ex unâ parte et H. filium E. ex alia, super multura de Edmundistun,' whereby it is settled that the said H. and his heirs, to preserve peace, 'et jam motâ lite sedandâ,' should pay every year twenty shillings 'in domo ipsius H. apud Edmundiston,' to the aforesaid abbot and convent. There is further permission for the erection of a mill, smithy, and brewhouse. To this deed the seals (signa) 'Domini Nessi de Rames et Magistri Petri de Rames,' together with the seals or signatures of 'memorati Henrici,' are appended.<sup>2</sup> As Henricus is herein designated as the son of E., this may not improbably be the Edmund with whom the family commenced. Filius, however, does not necessarily imply son, as it is not unusual to apply it to a more distant descent in the direct line.<sup>3</sup>

The next hundred years there is a blank in the family history, and so far may be said to its honour, that its name is not found in the 'Ragman Rolls'—the list, namely, which has been preserved of those, comprising a great proportion of the nobility and gentry of Scotland, who subscribed their submission and fealty to Edward I. at the end of the thirteenth century. From whatever cause this may have arisen, it is a circumstance that cannot be regretted.<sup>4</sup>

The next notice we have is a retour or inquest before the Bailie of Musselburgh in 1359, tempore David II., declaring that 'Henricus de Edmondiston,' formerly 'Dominus ejusdem,' had died, and that Johannes de Edmondiston was his legitimate son and heir, and then it is added, they held of the Abbey of Dumfermline, and that the said land, valuit tempore bonae pacis, xiii. lib. vi. sol. viii. d., and now values ten pounds thirteen shillings and fourpence. John, too, is stated to be of lawful age, but the lands had been in ward, the grant of which was to Sir John Preston, evidently of Craigmillar, which is close by.

This document connects the links of the broken chain, for we find the

<sup>1</sup> Note 25, Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> Chartulary of Dunfermline, Bannatyne Club, p. 140.

<sup>2</sup> Note 26, Appendix.

<sup>4</sup> Note 27, Appendix.

family still in the same spot, holding of the same superiors, and the Christian name of Henry still preserved, which however was never continued. From this time the line of descent is uninterrupted.

The historical notices of Sir John Edmonstone are very copious. Crauford, however, and the other Duntreath genealogies, refer them all to one person, but in the Ednam pedigree two are mentioned in succession, and it is quite evident that this is correct.

John de Edmonstone, as stated above, was served heir to his father in 1359. This gentleman seems to have been in favour, and to have been much employed during the unfortunate reign of David II. In 1352 he was appointed by charter coroner to the district of Lothian, to himself his heirs and assigns,<sup>1</sup> but by another charter, ten years later, this grant was restricted to his life. In 1363 he accompanied King David II. to England, as there is a passport for John de Edmundiston coming to England, in which he and John de Abernethy are designated as 'valeti'<sup>2</sup> to David Bruce, with six of his knights. The King's object in this visit was, having paid only two moieties of his ransom, and being unable to raise the remainder, to negotiate peace, the terms of which were to have been the reversion of the crown of Scotland to Lionel, Duke of Clarence, Edward III.'s son, in the event of himself dying without issue. It is singular that, on this occasion, four foreign kings met together in London, John of France, who died in April of that year, Waldemar of Denmark, Peter of Cyprus, besides Albert, Duke of Bavaria. David had proposed this succession to a Parliament assembled at Scone in the commencement of the year 1363, and on the unanimous rejection of it, accompanied by hostile appearances, had recourse to arms against his barons, but the rising was terminated by an amnesty granted to them on condition of their dissolving their association. On the restoration of tranquillity, the King proceeded as aforesaid to England to negotiate with Edward, and Sir John Edmonstone was either sent before, or accompanied him. The event of this farther negotiation for the ultimate cession of the crown of Scotland to the King of England is given in Dalrymple's Annals.

In 1366<sup>3</sup> this gentleman was again employed in a mission, with six knights as his companions, 'veniendo peregre . . . et exinde versus partes transmarinas usque Sanctum Johannem Ambiavensem et alia loca sancta transeund.' Amiens, I imagine ; and the following year there is a passport for the same number on their return. In 1367 he again receives a passport for himself and six knights, and in 1369 for fifty, probably negotiating the terms of the truce, which was settled for a farther space of fourteen years, and making arrangements for the payment of the £24,000 still due of King David's ransom, at the rate of £4000 per annum. The truce was concluded at the Castle of Edinburgh, 20th July 1369, and was signed by John de Edmondiston Miles, among others of the chief nobility.

<sup>1</sup> Note 28, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> Rymer's Federa.

<sup>3</sup> Rymer's Federa et Rot. Scot. in Tur. Lond.

David II. died in the beginning of 1371, nor does Sir John appear in less favour or confidence with his successor Robert II. There is a passport in the year 1372, 'domino Johanni de Edmondiston' coming to England, and returning with twelve men ; and in the following year to the same with dominus Duncano Wallays going, the 24 men in partes extremas for one year. This would appear to be a mission to Rome, for in the Exchequer rolls there is notice of payment, 'Domino Duncano Wallays et Domino Johanni de Edmondiston transeuntibus in negotiis Regis ad cuream Romanam pro expensis suis lib. 466, 13s. 4d.,' while there are other payments for expenses in England.

The same Commissioners, with the addition of Adam of Tynningham, Dean of Aberdeen, were again employed apparently on the same business. There is a charter of an embassy from Robert the Second<sup>1</sup> to Charles the Fifth of France, dated Jan. 31, 1374, i.e. 1375, soliciting the French king's interposition with the Pope and Cardinals to procure a favourable decree in a suit before the papal judicatory at the instance of Margaret Logie, Queen of Scots ; also demanding reparation for depredations on Scots traders by Norman pirates. The deed is in form of a notorial instrument, in which King Robert's letter and King Charles's answer, both in French, are verbatim inserted. King Robert's ambassadors were, Mr. Adam de Tynningham, Dean of Aberdeen, Sir Duncan de Wallays, and Sir John de Edmondstone, knights.

Nor were Sir John Edmonstone's services unrequited. There is a charter of a grant to him of King David of the lands and barony of Boyn, in vicecomitatu de Bamff, in the thirty-ninth year of that king's reign, 1369. And in the third year of King Robert the Second there is a charter of confirmation to the same of some lands in the county, and adjoining the burgh of Haddington.

<sup>1</sup> Robertson's Index.

We next find him engaged in a pilgrimage to the Holy Land.<sup>1</sup> In 1381 there is a passport for Alexander de Lindesay, also for Patrick de Hepburn, chevalier, with twelve men and twelve horses. Likewise for John de Abernethy with six men and six horses, also for John de Edmonstone, chevalier, with sixteen men and sixteen horses, and John de Tours, chevalier. The next year there are passports for their return.<sup>2</sup> Lastly, there is a permission from Richard the Second to John de Edmonstone to take 200 quarters of malt with his own vessels from a port on the coast of Lincolnshire to any port he pleases in Scotland.

Whom this gentleman married, or when he died, there is no account. That he was succeeded by a son of the same name there can be little doubt; and in this respect I think the Ednam pedigree more correct than Crauford's, which makes only one generation. Whether he may not have had a second son, Archibald, from whom the Duntreath family is descended, will be inquired into hereafter; moreover, if that very apocryphal work, 'The Memorie of the Somervilles,' can be trusted, he had a daughter, Margaret, married to Sir John Somerville of Carnwath. I give the passage at length:<sup>3</sup>—

'In October the same year, 1372, John, eldest son and appearing heir to Walter, Baron of Carnwath, being at Court with his father, there was none more taken notice of than this young gentleman. Being of a comely personage, affable and courteous, he gained the affection of all he conversed with; but that which contributed most to the young gentleman's advantage was his acquaintance with Sir John Edmondstowne, donator to the forfeiture of Sir Robert Baird, whose gift of forfeiture this gentleman, Sir John Edmondstowne, had obtained from King David Bruce in anno 1345, and by virtue thereof possessed at this time the Barony of Cambusnethan. It was with this old gentleman, Sir John Edmondstowne, that young Lintoune (Somerville) bare company both at the Court and in the country, because of the pleasantness of his humour, and in regard he was in much favour with the King as he had been with his predecessor King David. But that which engaged this young gentleman entirely was the great affection he bare to the beautiful daughter of Sir John Edmondstoune, who, being her father's only child, was appearing heiress of a fair estate, and that lying within the same shire where the greatest part of his father's estate lay, which held all ward of the King, whereas the Barony of Cambusnethan held blenche of the Crown for a pair of gilded spurs, which is the Reddendo of the charter of that Barony. This lady, what for her beauty and great estate had many suitors of as good quality and fortune as this gentleman, but he played his game so well by engaging the lady's affection, who was then in the twenty-fourth year of her age, which was much about that of his own, and being obsequious to the old Sir John Edmondstoune in all he was pleased command him, that he at length obtained his consent to let him have his daughter, and with her the Barronie of Cambusnethan. This business was brought to tryst (formal meiting) at Lanark the same month, and in November thereafter the marriage was solemnized, to the great satisfaction of the parties themselves and all their honourable relations.' Some pages further, the following notice:—'In August the same year, 1398, his virtuous Lady Margaret Edmondstoune dies, having lived with her husband twenty-eight years, during which time she had borne to her husband nine children, five whereof survived herself, two sons and three daughters. She was buried, at her own desire, in the Quyer of Cambusnethan church. She was a lady of many eminent virtues, and was the third female that made a great addition to the Barons of Linton, their estate in Scotland.'

<sup>1</sup> Rymer's Federa et Rotuli Scotiae.    <sup>2</sup> Ibid.    <sup>3</sup> Memorie of the Somervilles, vol. i. page 130.

Whether a fair daughter of Sir John Edmonstone did at this time marry into the house of Somerville there is no other authority for deciding, but that she took the estate of Cambusnethan with her is a complete mistake. This estate was acquired by the Somervilles by Janet Stewart's marriage with Thomas de Somerville. It had been forfeited, as is stated in 'the Memorie,' by the Bairds, for treason against Robert Bruce, and was granted by his son, King David, to Sir Alexander Stewart of Darnley, grandfather to the aforesaid Janet. There is a note by the Editor of the Memorie of the Somervilles to the above effect, and he confesses<sup>1</sup> that the 'more ancient part of the narrative is particularly deficient.'

<sup>1</sup> Note 29, Appendix.

The next authentic notice of Sir John Edmonstone probably refers to the second of the name. Like his father, he seems to have been much employed, for in 1404 (temp. Robert III.) he was appointed one of the Commissioners, together with Matthew Glendinning, Bishop of Glasgow, Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith, and others, for negotiating a truce with England for a year, during which a congress was to be held in order to bring about a peace. For this they received full powers, dated 'Linlithgow, 24th August, 15 year of our reign.'<sup>1</sup> It seems probable that the secret negotiation<sup>2</sup> Tytler speaks of, for surrendering the Earl of Northumberland and the Lord Bardolph, who had taken refuge in Scotland after the battle of Shrewsbury, in return for Murdoch (Shakespeare's Mordake, Henry IV.), Albany's eldest son, and the Earl of Douglas, who had been taken first at Homeldon and afterwards at Shrewsbury, was committed to the above persons. On the death of Robert the Third, 1408, when the Regent Albany wanted to establish his power by permanent peace with England, he sent as Commissioners, John Montgomery of Ardrossan, John Douglas, the Earl's brother, and John Edmonstone, knight, who succeeded in negotiating the Earl of Douglas's release on the payment of a thousand merks ransom, and leaving a sufficient number of hostages, and the following year we find a passport for William Hay, hereditary Sheriff of Peebles (Vicecomes), John Edmonstone, and William Borthwick of Ledgewood, knights, invested with powers for settling a peace, or at least a truce, between England and Scotland, dated Westminster, 27th April 1409. The restoration of the Earl of Douglas seems now to have been finally arranged, but matters still remained in a very unsettled state between the two countries.<sup>3</sup> Previous to these transactions, we find Sir John Edmonstone's name as one of the cautioners to Haco v., King of Norway, for Henry Sinclair, who had been appointed by that King Earl of Orkney and Shetland, having been so nominated likewise by the King of Scotland, for maintaining order and keeping down piracy in the islands. This was in 1379.

This gentleman<sup>4</sup> had the honour of contracting a Royal alliance, for

<sup>1</sup> Rymer's Federa. Abercromby, Martial Achievements, vol. ii. page 222.

<sup>2</sup> Tytler, History of Scotland, vol. iii., p. 153.

<sup>3</sup> Rymer's Federa et Rotuli Scotie, in Tur.

Lond., and Tytler's History of Scotland, vol. iii. page 169.

<sup>4</sup> Abercromby, Martial Achievements, vol. ii. page 400.

he married the Lady Isabel, daughter of King Robert II., by his second wife Eufemia Ross, relict of Randolph, Earl of Moray. This lady had married, in 1371, James II. Earl of Douglas and Mar, who was killed at the battle of Otterburn in 1388, by whom she had no children, and secondly, Sir John Edmonstone.<sup>1</sup>

By this marriage Sir John had one son, David. The family pedigree makes out William, from whom the Duntreath family are descended, to have been a second son, but this will be shown to be erroneous.<sup>2</sup>

There seems reason to believe that Sir John married, secondly, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Henry Sinclair Earl of Orkney, for among the lists of the missing Royal Charters now lost, though preserved through the century before the last, there is one to John Edmond, knight, the King's brother, and Elizabeth Sinclair his spouse, daughter to the Earl of Orkney of the lands of Murtache, vicecom. Bamff, by resignation of the Earl of Orkney. Douglas, in his Peerage, says Edmond is a mistake for Drummond, but it is more likely to have been Edmondstone, the last syllable being accidentally omitted, and who was the King's brother-in-law, as well as Sir John Drummond. The circumstance of Sir John Edmonstone having stood cautioner for the Earl of Orkney, as mentioned above, who would thus be his father-in-law, makes this connexion more probable; besides which, this Sir John's predecessor had had a grant of the Barony of Boyne in this identical vicecomitatus of Bamff.

At what time Sir John Edmonstone died does not appear, but it must have been after 1410, probably 1412, or 1413, for there is an 'agreement by way of indenture,' dated Perth, April 7th, 1410, between Sir John Edmonstone of that ilk and Davy Edmonstone, his son and heir, with Patrick (Graham) Earl of Strathern, in the right of his wife, and with her consent, relating to a charter of confirmation they had procured from the Regent Duke of Albany, to Sir John Edmonstone and his son, of the lands and barony of Tillyallan in Clackmannanshire.<sup>3</sup>

There is, moreover, a charter granted by the same Regent to his son John Earl of Buchan in 1413, in which Sir David is styled 'nepos noster,'<sup>4</sup> as son to his (Robert, Duke of Albany's) sister, the Countess of Douglas.

<sup>1</sup> Note 30, Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> Note 32, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> Note 31, Appendix.

<sup>4</sup> Register of the Great Seal.

Crauford speaks of having seen several charters 'in our archives' with a similar designation.

Sir David Edmonstone married, according to the Ednam pedigree, Agnes, daughter of Robert Maitland of Thirlstane, but there is no evidence to prove this connexion. He died in the prime of life, for as he could not have been born before 1391, in 1426 there is an inquest serving James Edmonstone as heir to his father. The terms of the inquest are thus given in the Cartulary of Dumferline. 'Compertum est quod quondam David Edmonston de eodem pater Jacobi Edmonston nunc de eodem abiit ad fidem et pacem S. D. N. Regis in terris de Hallis et quod dictus Jacobus est legitimus et propinquior heres quondam David de Edmonston, patris sui.' This is dated September 1426. Likewise a charter for appointing John de Edmonston, Tutorem dativum of all the lands of James Edmonstone, son and heir of David Edmonston of Ednam, until he attain lawful age. Who this John Edmonstone was does not appear, but there is a notice of him as witness to a public instrument, in which William and Patrick, Abbots of Dumferline and Cambuskenneth, and Walter, Abbot of St. Colme, are concerned, dated 1420. The tutor dativus that is appointed specially by the Crown need not be a near relation. Probably, however, this John was a cousin of the Culloden or Duntreath branch. This, however, is mere supposition.

In 1430 James Edmonstone, though still a boy, was knighted by James the First. This was occasioned by the birth of twin sons to the King, who were immediately on their baptism knighted, and the same favour was conferred on the youthful heirs of the Earl of Douglas, Lord Crichton, Lord Borthwick, and other members of the nobility.<sup>1</sup>

Sir James married, first, Isabella, daughter of Sir John Forrester, ancestor of the Lords Forester of Corstorphine, by whom he had a son, John, who succeeded him; and secondly, Janet, daughter of Sir Alexander Napier of Merchiston, ancestor of the Lord Napier, by whom he had two daughters: Elizabeth, married to Sir Patrick Blackadder, second son of Blackadder of that ilk; and second, Margaret, married to Sir Walter, second son of Sir Walter Ogilvie of Auchleven, from which marriage descended the Ogilvies, Lords Bamff, extinct in the male line in 1803. The estates of Tillyallan and of Boyne went out of the family by these marriages, which led to the erroneous notion, both in Crauford's and the Ednam pedigrees, that they were co-heiresses in default of male descent from their father. This matter is entered into at considerable length in the notes. By a family arrangement the estates of Boyne and Tillyallan, which had been divided, were separated, so that Elizabeth, Lady Blackader, had the whole of Tillyallan, and Margaret, Lady Ogilvie, the whole of Boyne. I am ignorant if the latter property contiguous to the town of Banff yet remains in the Ogilvie family, but I believe it has passed into the hands of the Earl of Seafield. Tillyallan, or Tulliallan, was purchased by the late Viscount Keith, and is now the property of his daughter, Countess Flahault, Baroness Nairne and Keith, in her own right.

<sup>1</sup> Tytler's History of Scotland, vol. iii. p. 275, on the authority of Fordun. Note 33, Appendix.

Sir James was succeeded in the patrimonial estates of Edmonstone and Ednam by his son John, and here I must notice the wholly unauthorized attempt of the Duntreath family to ignore the continuation of the elder branch. Crauford, who, like most of the older genealogists, seemed more desirous of flattering the vanity of his employers than of investigating the truth, after stating that, on the termination of the elder branch in females, Sir David's two daughters (which has been shown to be incorrect), the Duntreath became the direct male line, says, 'but although another set of Edmonstones got the estate and lands of Edmonstone, and assumed the title and designation of Edmonstone of that ilk, yet I have not, upon all my search and enquiry into the publick offices, found any vouchers to instruct and document what relation in blood these later Edmonstones of that ilk had to the more ancient Barons of Edmonstone, and to whom the Edmonstones of Duntreath have a clear connexion; so that it appears to me these latter Edmonstones of Edmonstone may be but singular successors, and might have acquired the ancient estate though they might not be legal lineal heirs, but a remoter collateral branch of the family.' Then follows a passage in the manuscript which has been carefully erased, indeed appears imperfect. The worthy genealogist, however, becomes elsewhere more enlightened on the subject, for, in his manuscript Baronage, in the Advocates' Library, Crauford states 'that the later house of Edmonstone (the Ednam branch) is descended from John Edmonstone, brother of Sir James, who left the two heiresses abovementioned.' I suspect the erased passage in the pedigree was a surmise to that effect, of which his employer did not approve. In the Ednam pedigree the denial by Crauford and Nisbet of that branch to the headship of the family is spoken of as unfair and ungrounded. The fact I believe to be, that the elder line of the family may be lineally traced to its extinction, in the middle of the last century, in its male representation.

Having brought down the descent of the elder branch of the family thus far, I shall continue it in an Appendix, and proceed to the Duntreath line, the more immediate object of this Memoir. Of this, Sir William, second son of Sir John and the Countess of Douglas, is stated to be the first in both the Ednam and Duntreath pedigrees. This connexion, however, has been assumed without sufficient proof, and the actual filiation of Sir William has been since ascertained by the discovery (for which I am indebted to Mr. Riddell) of a resignation, dated Edinburgh, 28th November 1421, by John de Annandia, of the lands of Myles, 'reverendo et superiori domino suo Johanni domino Settoni;' witnesses, 'Archibaldo de Edmestone, milite, et Willielmo, filio suo et heredi; Willielmo de Annandia consanguineo meo, Johanni et Hugoni de Lindesay, armigeris.' Archibald Edmonstone, miles, moreover, and William, are witnesses to a charter (as mentioned before in note 33) by Archibald Douglas, confirming the writs of the lands of Tilliallan in favour of Sir John Edmonstone and David his son, but there is an earlier and curious notice of this Sir Archibald<sup>1</sup> in Fordun's History.

It is to the effect that, in 1398, the Queen instituted a great hastitudium (passage of arms) of twelve knights, of which the chief was David, Duke of Rothsay, on the north of Edinburgh, where is now the lake. That in the following year Robert Morley, an English knight, entered Scotland with an honourable company, having obtained permission from the King of Scotland, for the purpose of carrying off a golden cup from the King's table, unless prevented by a Scottish knight, but he was opposed by the Lord James Douglas of Strabnock, and did not accomplish his purpose; that on his return he was met at Berwick, and engaged in single combat on the same day with the two Scottish knights, Archibald Edmonstone and Hugo Wallace, 'ad ictus talliatos,' and that the Englishman got the worst of it.

<sup>1</sup> Fordun's History, Lib. xv. c. 4.

But who was this Sir Archibald? That he was nearly connected with the main stock there seems no reason to doubt, and from the dates it seems likely that he was a younger, probably second, son of the elder Sir John, and consequently brother of him who married the Countess of Douglas. Crauford does not allow for two, father and son, of the same name, and hence, perhaps, the mistake; but he farther states 'that on the marriage of Sir William with the Countess of Angus, being first cousins, and so within the degrees prohibited by the canons, a dispensation from the Court of Rome was necessary before they could be lawfully joined in marriage, and which was accordingly procured by the Pope's Legate in Scotland for that effect.' He brings forward, however, no authority for this dispensation, and as there is clear proof that Sir William was son of Sir Archibald, and not of Sir John, the double royal descent falls to the ground. And if it be true, as I much doubt, that a dispensation was obtained, the consanguinity between Sir William and the Countess of Angus must have been from some other connexion, and more distant than Crauford asserts. Be he who he may, Sir Archibald is the first who can be actually proved of the Duntreath line, and was succeeded by his son—

Sir William. In 1428,<sup>1</sup> there is a safe conduct for three months, with eight persons in his company, for William Edmonstone, 'causâ peregrinationis,' going and returning.<sup>2</sup> And in 1431 there is another for Alexander Lord Gordon and William Edmonstone, with twenty-four persons, on a pilgrimage to Canterbury, 'ibidem morando nocte dieque phendinando,' and returning. Twenty years after, we find him again engaged in the same object, as there is a passport to Andrew Abbot of Melrose, Andrew Lord Gray, Magist. John Methven, William Edmonstone, and Alex. Napier, Knights, going to Canterbury on a pilgrimage, with a retinue of a hundred persons. The passport is very explicit, allowing them to carry gold, silver, coined or not, papers, etc., to last for a year. It would appear, however, that the latter had some ulterior political purpose. According to Abercromby,<sup>3</sup> in 1452, the Abbot of Melrose, with the company mentioned above, 'went as ambassadors, probably to desire some French Ambassadors who, coming to England, were apprehended and put into prison, might be set at liberty, but that was declined, as appears by a letter from King Henry to King James, dated January 25, 1452. Probably, too, they were to act as spies on the Earl of Douglas, who was at this time in England. Shortly after this, the Earl, on his return, was assassinated. This mission is not mentioned either by Pinkerton or Tytler; but the former historian mentions another, the following year, in which the Abbot of Melrose was employed for negotiating an extension of the truce with England, which had nearly expired.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Rotuli Scotiæ in Tur. Lond.

<sup>2</sup> Rymer's Fœdera.

<sup>3</sup> Abercromby, Martial Achievements, vol. ii.

It has been stated in the preliminary notice, that in a charter of 1445 Sir William Edmonstone is styled of Culloden. He had the honour to contract a royal marriage like his kinsman Sir John, in the person of the Lady Mary, second daughter to King Robert the Third, by Annabella, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Stobhall, ancestor of the Earls of Perth.

This lady had been three times previously married. First, in 1397, to George, son of William First Earl of Douglas, by Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus, his third wife. This George inherited the earldom of Angus from his mother, who died in 1402; the same year, however, he was taken prisoner at the battle of Homildon, and died not long afterwards of an epidemic in England. Two sons, William and George, second and fourth Earls of Angus, and Mary, married first to Lord Forbes, and secondly to Sir David Hay of Yester, were born from this marriage.

The Lady Mary married secondly, the year following, 1405, Sir James Kennedy, son and heir of Sir Gilbert Kennedy of Dunure, ancestor of the present Marquis of Ailsa. Sir James lost his life in a quarrel with his disinherited elder brother Gilbert, before their father's death, having had three sons, John, Gilbert, and James. The Countess of Angus married, thirdly, Sir William Graham of Kincardine, but the Montrose family are descended from a previous marriage. Five sons were the issue of this marriage, from one of whom the Grahams of Garvock and Balgowan descended, and from another the Grahams of Claverhouse, the well-known Viscount of Dundee. Sir William Graham died in 1424, and the Countess, who never allowed much time to widowhood, married the following year to her fourth husband, Sir William Edmonstone of Culloden. She must have married very early, as her first husband, the Earl of Angus, was, according to Hume of Godscroft's History of the Douglas, only seventeen at the time. At all events, her fourth marriage was contracted twenty-eight years after her first, and though scarcely, as Crauford in pedigree gallantly calls her, 'still a young woman,' she nevertheless had by Sir William Edmonstone a son and daughter. The date of her death is unknown, but she was buried within the church of Strathblane.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Pinkerton, History of Scotland, vol. i. p. 221.

The extensive connexions and numerous descendants of this Princess make her a somewhat important person with genealogists. To these I have referred in a note; I cannot, however, but remark, that to be of the same stock and kin with the illustrious James Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews, son of the Countess of Angus by her second marriage, one of the best and most distinguished men Scotland ever produced, is an honour of which any family may be justly proud.

The acquisition of the lands of Duntreath follows, as has been stated in the preliminary chapter, the alliance. They had come into the hands of James I. by forfeiture of the Lennox family in 1425, and though there is no exact notice of the grant, we find in the Chamberlain's Rolls, dated 1434, that the Crown Baillif took no charge of the farms of Duntreath, because the King had infest William Edmonstone with them; who had at that time been married nine years to the King's sister. After the death of James I., the Duchess of Albany gained possession of her paternal inheritance; and accordingly, in 1445, she granted these lands to William Edmonstone, the younger son of Sir William, on the occasion probably of his marriage with her granddaughter Matilda Stewart.

The grant of James I., however, to the father seems to have been maintained; for both in this grant, and in a charter of confirmation of James II., seven years later, in 1452, by which Duntreath is erected into a barony, with full baronial powers, the conjoint infestment of father and son is specially notified.

On the rolls of the Baillies, both for 1445 and 1446, there are notices of payments of money and meal from the revenues and domains of the Crown in Bute and Arran to William Edmonstone of Culloden, Knight, by the King's order.

By this Princess, Sir William had a son, William, who succeeded him in 1460, and a daughter, Mary, who married Humphrey Cunningham of Glengarnock, a younger branch of the Glencairn family.

Sir William succeeded to his father in 1460. He took an active part in public matters during the reign of James III. In the Acts of the Scottish Parliaments, Sir William Edmonstone is stated as present in 1464 with sundry others, apparently for the purpose of taking charge of the kingdom, which was much harassed with factions during the King's minority. In May 1469 he was appointed Justice-General,<sup>1</sup> which, according to Spottiswoode's Practicks, he only held till the November of the next year, though Crauford states that he retained the office till the year 1474. In 1471 the following is the list of the Lords of Articles, the standing Committee which used to prepare measures in the Scottish Parliaments:— Bishops of Glasgow and Aberdeen, the Abbot of Holyrood and John Kennedy, 'pro cleris;' the Earls of Huntly and Argyle, the Lords Hamilton and Lyle, and Wm. Edmonstone of Duntreath, 'pro Baronibus.' In 1478 he acted again as one of the Commissioners 'pro Baronibus.' This gentleman purchased the lands of Cambus Wallace, near Doun, in the county of Perth, as is attested by a charter of confirmation by King James III., dated Edinburgh, January 30th, 1484. These lands were subsequently apportioned to a cadet of the family.

It was this Sir William who adopted the tressure and supporters to the coat of arms, as testified by his seal appended to William Graham of Garvock's resignation. He married Matilda, illegitimate daughter of Lord James Stewart, sole surviving son of Murdoch Duke of Albany. Lord James had seven sons and one daughter, by a lady of the Macdonald family. Of these, the eldest, created Lord Avondale, Chancellor of Scotland, and two others, were legitimated; but it does not appear that the same grace was obtained for the other sons and for the daughter. This marriage is attested by a precept of sasine among the family archives of the lands of Dungoyak, and other portions of Duntreath, dated May 17, 1456. By Matilda Stewart Sir William left (according to

<sup>1</sup> In the inventory of Strathmore title-deeds at Glammis Castle, is 'a notarial instrument by Janet Fenton, showing that in her widowhood

she appeared before Sir Wm. Edmonstone of Duntreath, Justice-General, in his Justice Circuit (Air) at Perth, in the year 1470.

Crauford's genealogy) six sons and one daughter. First, Sir Archibald, who succeeded him. Second, James, who married, first, Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Alexander Cunningham of Polmaise, but had no issue. Secondly, Helen, daughter to John Murray of Touchadam, which two estates became merged into the latter family by marriage in the next century. In 1488 James Edmonstoune was appointed in the Parliament held by the Lords who had put James IV. on the throne, among other Barons nominated for a similar purpose, to take charge of the peace of the county of Stirling, at the same time that his elder brother, Sir Archibald, was appointed for the districts of Monteith and Strathgartney, 'anent the stanching of thift reif and enormities.'<sup>1</sup> The same gentleman obtained a charter of infestment, under the Great Seal, of Buchyhaderick,<sup>2</sup> to himself and his wife Helen Murray. Third, also named James, in holy orders, Prior of the Collegiate church of Kirkheugh at St. Andrews. Fourth, John, married a daughter of Sir John Stewart of Ardgowan and Blackhall. Fifth, George, of whom nothing is stated. Sixth, William, deputy-master of the household to King James IV.

Sir William had likewise a daughter married (according to Crauford) to Lawrence, first Lord Oliphant. He died in 1486, and was succeeded by his eldest son.<sup>3</sup>

Sir Archibald, who was served heir to his father by a commission, dated April 20, 1487; and on the 1st of June following, is an instrument of saisine in the lands of Duntreath, as also of coroner to the western portion of Stirlingshire by a precept of James III. to 'Archibald, son and heir of William umquhile William of Duntreath.' This gentleman seems, during his father's life, to have held some situation about the Court, for in the account book of John Bishop of Glasgow, Treasurer to that monarch, published first by Borthwick, and subsequently by Pinkerton, we find, under the year 1477, the following disbursements:—Item, given to Archibald of Edmonstowne, 12th of September, to buy a pair of spurs to the King, 4s. Item, from Thome of Yare, and deliuerit to Archibald of Edmonstone, 17 Decembris, 2 elnes and ane half for vallous for a porte mantell to the King, price eboue, 45s., sum £5, 12s. 6d.<sup>4</sup> In 1495 there is a

<sup>1</sup> Black Acts, folio 80. c. viii.

<sup>3</sup> Note 35, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> Index to Charters in Record Office.

<sup>4</sup> Nimmo's Stirlingshire, p. 482.

charter to Archibald Edmonstone de Duntreath,<sup>1</sup> of the lands of Ardbuth, Lorne, and Dery, but I know nothing more of these possessions.<sup>2</sup>

Sir Archibald married Janet, daughter of Sir James Shaw of Sauchie, in Stirlingshire, as is attested by a charter of the lands of Cambuswallace to Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, and Janet Schaw, 'sponsae suae,'<sup>3</sup> dated 1490; though this marriage must have occurred several years before, as the dates of the children's marriages prove. This Sir James Shaw had been Comptroller of Scotland to James III., and probably to his son-in-law's acting under him, the passages above quoted refer. It may be hoped, however, that the Laird of Duntreath had no part in the treacherous conduct of his father-in-law towards his unfortunate sovereign. James had appointed Sir James Shaw Governor of Stirling Castle, with a special charge over his son. This charge, according to Lindsay of Pittscottie, Sir James was bribed to surrender to the rebel Lords, and he refused the King admittance into the castle just before the disastrous battle of Sauchie, at the close of which James was assassinated. The connexion, however, was a prosperous one, for George Shaw, Abbot of Paisley and Treasurer to James IV., 'was an opulent prelate,' says Nisbet, 'and took care to provide good matches for his nieces, the daughters of his sister Janet Edmonstone, and, moreover, he procured for his nephew, Robert Shaw, to succeed him in the Abbacy of Paisley on his own resignation, and subsequently to the Bishopric of Moray.'

By this lady Sir Archibald had two sons and seven daughters. First, Sir William, who succeeded to him. Second, James, designated 'frater germanus Williemi Edmonstone de Duntreath militis,' as a witness to a charter of alienation of the lands of Culloden to Alexander Strahan of Scotstown, A.D. 1506.<sup>4</sup> From him sprung the cadet branch of Ballinton and others in the stewartry of Monteith, now extinct. The original branch of Broich probably came from the same stem. He married Agnes, daughter of James Ridheugh of Tillychadell, and was Comptroller of Scotland under James IV.<sup>5</sup>

Five of the daughters formed honourable alliances. First, Janet<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Index to Charters in Record Office.

<sup>2</sup> Note 36, Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> Index to Charters.

<sup>4</sup> Registers of Privy Seal. Also Charters under the Great Seal.

<sup>5</sup> Note 37, Appendix.

<sup>6</sup> Note 38, Appendix.

married William, first Earl of Montrose. Second, Christian<sup>1</sup> married John, Lord Ross of Halkhead. Third, Elizabeth<sup>2</sup> married John, Master of Montgomery, eldest son of Hugh, first Earl of Eglinton. Fourth, Margaret<sup>3</sup> married George Buchanan of that ilk; and fifth, Barbara<sup>4</sup> married Sir James Muschet of Burnbank, in Perthshire, a family at that time of distinction, but long since extinct. Sixth, Catherine. Seven, Helen, not noticed farther in the pedigree.

Sir Archibald had likewise a natural son named James, styled of Ballown, as there is a charter "Jacobi filii naturalis Archibald Edmonstone de Duntreath," dated 1553.

Sir William Edmonstone came into possession on his father's death in 1502. He was shortly after appointed steward of Monteith, and captain of the Castle of Doune in Perthshire, for, in the following year, 1503, with George,<sup>5</sup> Abbot of Holyrood, Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and others, he is witness to the saisine of Margaret of England, in the county (or district) of Monteith, in consequence of her marriage contract, in which this is included with many other appanages as her dower, dated Edinburgh, 6th May, 1503, 15th of James IV.<sup>6</sup> Also to the same for her saisine, 'dominii de Strivelinshire,' William Edmonstone de Duntreath, captain of Doune, is witness among others. There is, moreover, an original infestment, 20th January 1507, upon a royal precept of Archibald Napier of Monteith, in lands in Monteith, to which officially the seal of arms of William Edmonstone of Duntreath, as steward of Monteith, is appended. The arms are emblazoned with supporters and crest as now borne. Crauford, moreover, mentions a decret, obtained at the instance of Sir James Haldane of Glenegles before William Edmonstone, as steward of Monteith. He married first, Sibylla, daughter of Sir William Baillie of Lamington, an old and distinguished family now extinct. This marriage is attested by a charter in 1497 to William, son and heir of Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, and Sibylla Baillie, his wife, of the lands of Gartbarron; also by another charter to the same parties, of Argety and Rednock, dated 1506. Sir William's second wife was Elizabeth Leslie, daughter to George, first Earl of Rothes, who had been previously married to William, third Earl

<sup>1</sup> Note 39, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> Note 41, Appendix.

<sup>5</sup> Rymer's Federa.

<sup>3</sup> Note 40, Appendix.

<sup>4</sup> Note 42, Appendix.

<sup>6</sup> Note 43, Appendix.

of Errol. This marriage took place probably about 1507 or 1508, but the lady did not very long survive, as there is an action before the Court of Session in 1511, by William Edmonstone of Duntreath, as executor to 'Umquhile Dame Elizabeth Leslie, Countess of Errol,'<sup>1</sup> his spouse. Sir William married thirdly, as appears by a charter, in 1510, to William Edmonstone of Duntreath, knight, and Katherine Forrest, his wife, of the lands of Glenboig and Cambuswallace, but who this lady was I know not, as neither she nor the Countess of Errol are mentioned in Crauford's genealogy. Sir William married fourthly, Sibylla, daughter of Sir John Carmichael of that ilk, as is attested by a charter under the Great Seal, of the same lands of Glenboig and Cambuswallace, to Sir William Edmonstone and Sibylla Carmichael, his wife, on his own resignation. It is dated August 15, 1513, and on the 9th of September he, together with his brothers-in-law, the Earl of Montrose and Lord Ross, fell at the fatal battle of Flodden.

Sir William left five sons and four daughters :—First, Sir William, who succeeded. Second, Archibald, styled brother-german of William of Duntreath in a charter of the lands of Rednock, dated 1553. He had a grant too of Spittal Town in Perthshire. He married Agnes, daughter of Nicol Connall of Bonhard, and had a son William, mentioned in a charter of Easterrowis, 1550. Third, Robert, proprietor of the lands of Cambusbeg in Monteith. Fourth, James, styled brother-german of William of Duntreath in a charter of the lands of Westerrowis, dated 1540. He had also a grant of Buckquhassell, etc., and in 1541 there is a charter to James Edmonstone and Janet Lawson, his wife, of dimidiatis terrarum Regis de Drumcross. The same James, styled of Duntreath, is probably referred to in a respitt to him and nine others from the rout and army of Tantallon, dated January 1530.

Sir William had also a natural son named James, as is certified by a charter of legitimation, also by a grant 'Jacobo filio naturali quondam Willielmi de Duntreath mil.' In the index to the Testamentary Register of the Commissary Court of Edinburgh there is the will of James Edmiston of Newton of Doune, dated November 19, 1589. From him the cadet branch of Newton descended, not long since, I believe, extinct.

Of the daughters of Sir William, the eldest, Marion, married Sir John Campbell of Glenorchy, by whom she had two daughters :—Marion, wife of Alexander Hume of Argaty; and Christian, married, according to Douglas, to Edward Reidheugh of Little Dragar,<sup>1</sup> in Perthshire. Second, Mary married Robert Hamilton of Inchmachar. Third, Margaret married Stewart of Craigamell. Fourth, Elizabeth married John Logan of Balvie, in Dumbartonshire.

<sup>1</sup> Note 44, Appendix.

The first notice of Sir William Edmonstone, as heir to his father, is in an instrument of saisine of the barony of Duntreath 'to William, heir to his father William of Duntreath,' who is stated to have died 'ad fidem Regis in campo bellico nuper in Northumbria,' dated May 2, 1516. This William is declared, moreover, to be of lawful age, in terms of a dispensation and act made by King James the Fourth at the beginning of the war. In the same year he and his brother Archibald were appointed to succeed their father, as joint keepers of Doune Castle, and stewards of Monteith and Strathgartney. In 1528, however, this charge was taken from the brothers and given to Sir James Stewart of Beath (ancestor to the present line of the Earls of Moray), brother to the Lords Ochiltree and Methven, husband to the Queen Dowager. This grant was renewed to Sir James Stewart during the minority of Queen Mary, which brought the long-suppressed feud to a point. 'The resentment of the Edmonstones of the House of Duntreath,' says Crauford, 'that seemed before to be concealed, broke out now into an open flame. Some injuries being likewise done, or alleged to be done, by Sir James Stewart to Duntreath and his friends by the Stewarts' deutes, all these resentments working together, the Laird of Duntreath himself, Archibald, and James (of Newton), his brothers, their friends and retainers, happened to encounter Sir James Stewart in (or near A. E.)<sup>2</sup> the High Street of the town of Dunblane, upon which a sharp and brisk scuffle ensued, in which much blood was shed, and many slain on both sides. The Stewarts' party were worsted, and he himself slain on the spot. This accident fell out on Whitsunday 1543, for which this gentleman, the Laird of Duntreath, found means three years thereafter to procure a remission from the Duke of Chatelherault, Earl of Arran, the Governor, under the Great Seal, of the date of September 1547, 'for art and part,' as the record bears, 'of the slaughter of umquhile Sir James Stewart of Beath, committed by him, his two brothers, and their friends, in the town of

<sup>1</sup> Note 45, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> At a place called Murdoch's Ford, between Doune and Dunblane.

Dunblane<sup>1</sup> on Whitsunday, three years before,' in the Registers of the Privy Seal in the publick Records in Edinburgh, ad annum 1547.<sup>2</sup> The charge of the Castle of Doune was in 1560 granted to the Earl of Montrose, as witnessed by the document among the Duntreath papers. It is dated Orleans, December 25th, 1560; but as the signature Marie is, I believe, not in the Queen's hand, it is probably a copy.

Of the other notices of Sir William, he is mentioned as absent from an assize held on the murder of Sterling of Glorat in 1535. His connexion with the Earl of Lennox's family led him, on the occasion of the marriage of Lord Darnley (his wife's grandnephew) with Queen Mary in 1565, to be appointed one of the Lords of the Privy Council, at which time he was probably knighted, as his predecessors had been. In the Book of the Universal Kirk, William Edmonstone of Duntreath signed as one of the Commissioners to the General Assembly in 1567.

Sir William married first, the Lady Agnes Stewart, youngest daughter to Matthew, second Earl of Lennox of the Stewart line, who was killed at the battle of Flodden, by Elizabeth, daughter of James, Lord Hamilton, and the Lady Mary, daughter of King James the Second. This marriage is attested by a charter of the date 1522, and there was by it a son, Archibald, who predeceased his father. This is certified by charters of the lands of Balquharran, in Dumbartonshire, to Archibald,<sup>3</sup> son and apparent heir to William of Duntreath. But there is reason to think he was of an unsound state of mind, for in 1566 there is a deed of resignation by Archibald, son and heir of William of Duntreath, of the same lands of Balquharran in favour of William, his father, in liferent, and James, his brother, in fee, and in another it is stated, with consent of his father, his Governor and Administrator 'in respectu inhabilitatis.' Moreover, there is an entail of the barony of Duntreath executed by Sir William two years later, in 1568, in favour, first of James Edmonstone, his second son, and his heirs; next to Archibald of Spittalton, James of Ballinton, and James of Newton, and their heirs-

<sup>1</sup> Register of the Privy Seal.

<sup>2</sup> Note 46, Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> In his 'Dissertation on King Henry's Murder,' Dr. Robertson says, 'Nothing is more certain from history that that the king was at Glasgow, 24th January 1567; and yet the Record of Signatures from 1565 to 1582 contains the copy of a signature to Archibald Edmonstone, said to have been subscribed by our Sovereigns, i.e. the King and Queen, at Edinburgh, January 24, 1567.'

male successively ; failing whom, to the heirs-female of the said James, second son of Sir William, on his, Sir William's, resignation, reserving to himself the liferent, with a suitable maintenance to Archibald, eldest son of the said William.<sup>1</sup> There is likewise, in 1559, a charter of legitimation to William, 'bastardi filii naturalis Archibald Edmonstone.'

I may mention here a curious memorandum written in an old hand, 'Archibald Edmiston of Duntreth, knight, married Annabella, daughter to King James the Fourth, who married Margaret, daughter to Henry the Seventh, King of England.' To this my grandfather has added, 'This I found along with the manuscript of the family (Crauford's), but I do not see it there vouched as authentic.' Now there is no notice in the manuscript at all of the abovementioned Archibald, to whom alone this reference could apply, nor is there an account of any daughter of James the Fourth of the name Annabella, legitimate or otherwise. The most, then, that can be said is that it is within the range of possibility, that this Archibald may have been knighted and have married a daughter of the King, but standing as it does without proof of any kind, this memorandum must be considered as not carrying with it any degree of weight.

Sir William married, secondly, Margaret, daughter to Sir James Campbell of Lawers, direct ancestor of the Earls of Loudon. This marriage is verified by a charter of the lands of Cambuswallace as dower, dated 1545. By this lady he had—

Sir James, who succeeded him, and six daughters, all respectably allied. First, Marjory married, first, Sir John Maxwell of Pollok, and secondly, Mungo or Kentigern Graham of Orchill, third son of James, second Earl of Montrose.<sup>2</sup> Second, Sibilla married John Stewart of Barscube, in the county of Renfrew, a branch of the Stewarts of Lennox. Third, Annabella married John Stirling of Glorat, in Stirlingshire, ancestor of the present family. Fourth, Marion married David Sempill of Nobleston, in Dumbar-tonshire. Fifth, Elizabeth married John Sterling of Ballagan, brother to Sterling of Gloret ; and sixth, Janet married Luke or Lawrence Sterling of Baird, brother to the Laird of Keir.

<sup>1</sup> William Edmonston of Duntreath was among those who signed a declaration against Popery, and in favour of the young King James the Sixth, at the General Assembly, July 1567.

—Calderwood's History, vol. ii. p. 383.

<sup>2</sup> Note 47, Appendix.

Sir William died at an advanced age. His will is stated in the Testamentary Register of the Commissary Court to be dated March 1st, 1580. He was succeeded by his sole surviving son, Sir James.

This gentleman obtained from Colin, Earl of Argyle, Justice-General of Scotland, the grant of a deputation<sup>1</sup> for holding justiciary courts at the fortalice of Duntreath, upon the criminals therein named ; this is dated 1578, and in 1584 he obtained a grant of the 'escheat of Mungo Edmonstone, fallen through his treasonable assistance at the late surprisal of the Castle of Sterling.' Mungo Edmonstone was the brother of James of Newton, and the treason referred to was the seizure of the Castle of Sterling by the Earls of Angus and Marr on the 18th of April, which was however recovered by the King on the 27th of the same month ; and the execution of Archibald Douglas, whom the two Earls left in charge of the Castle with several of the garrison. The Earl of Gowrie too, who, ever since the part he had taken in the late 'Raid of Ruthven,' was looked upon suspiciously, was apprehended on this occasion at Dundee, and his petition being rejected, he was brought to trial, 'Mr. James Graham sitting as Justice, and assisted by Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar, Alexander, Master of Livingston, Alexander Bruce of Airth, and James Edmonstone of Duntreath.' The indictment was found relevant, and the Earl was thence sent to his peers for trial, found guilty, and executed.

In the same year occurred another transaction, in which Sir James was himself implicated. The facts, as related by Archbishop Spottiswoode and Calderwood, are as follows<sup>2</sup>:—A strong party had been formed by some of the chief nobility, against the influence of the young Duke of Lennox, and still more against that worthless favourite James Stewart, whom the King had lately created Earl of Arran. On the Earl of Gowrie's apprehension, the Earls of Angus and Marr, with others, fled to England, and in order 'to breed a terror,' says Spottiswoode, 'in the people,' and cause them abstain from communicating in any sort with the exiled Lords, a proclamation was made 'that whosoever should discover any person offending in that kind should, besides his own pardon, receive a special reward.' Hereupon did one Robert Hamilton of Eglismachen, delate Malcolm Douglas of Mains, and John Cunningham of Drumwhassill, for having conspired to intercept the King in hunting, and detain him in some stronghold till the Lords might come and receive him. A mere forgery, yet gladly hearkened unto by those that desired to be rid of them, for they were both gentlemen of good respect, and mistrusted of the Court; Mains especially, because of his valour and manhood. To make out the accusation, it was devised that Sir James Edmonstone of Duntreath, who had lived in great familiarity with them, should be charged with the same crime, and, upon his confession, to be pardoned, which, by the policy of the accuser, to his own perpetual discredit, he was menaced to yield unto.' Sir James's deposition is given at length by Calderwood. He declares that he is led to make confession of a threefold conspiracy of the exiled Lords against the King, of which he has been informed by Black John Hume of the Law, who came twice to him, each time with a letter of credit of the Earl of Marr, the knowledge of which now preyed on his conscience. The first plot was, that a force of a thousand or twelve hundred men was to have been raised, with which the King was to have been surrounded at Holyrood House and retained prisoner. The second was, that owing to the difficulty of procuring so large a number, thirty or forty able men were to have been hired 'to await upon His Majesty in the fields, when his horse was souped (wearied), and to carry him off, either to the house of Douglas, or to Cumleye, or to an island in Lochlomond. The third plot was, that since so many men could not be collected as even thirty or forty, without being suspected, every one of the principal conspirators, the Abbot of Aberbrothick, the Earls of Angus and Marr, and the Master of Glammis, should each select two or three of their own men, who should secretly repair to wherever the King was residing, and disguised themselves, and with their horses tails, manes, and ears cut off, should pass over and kill the King, by shot or other weapon.' A ridiculous tale, as Hume<sup>1</sup> of Godscroft justly calls it, but nevertheless, full in accordance with the spirit of the times.

<sup>1</sup> Note 48, Appendix.

Scotland, Ind. p. 336, and Calderwood, History

<sup>2</sup> Spottiswoode, History of the Church of the Kirk of Scotland, vol. iv. p. 345, etc.

'Matters thus dressed,' continues Spottiswoode, 'Colonel William Stewart was sent to apprehend Mains and Drumwhassill, who, finding them in their own houses, did, without resistance, bring them prisoners to Edinburgh. The 9th of February they were presented before the Justice, <sup>1</sup> Hume of Godscroft, History of the Douglasses, folio, p. 391.

Mr. John Graham sitting as deputy, and Mr. Edward Brease as assessor. Beginning made with Duntreath, he was indicted for conspiracy with Mains and Drumwhassill (the accuser Hamilton) and others, for taking and detaining the King in the manner aforesaid, which was said to be plotted by the Earl of Angus, and imparted to him and the rest on pannel, by John Home, commonly called Black John, he, without making any defence confessed all, betaking him to the King's mercy. Drumwhassill, accused of the same conspiracy, and of consulting with Duntreath thereupon, in the churches of Strathblane and Killearn, was further charged with the treasonable attempt of Ruthven whereof he had been partaker. What he answered I find not in the process, but, when Main's indictment was read, he denied all, and so cleared himself by the unlikelihood and their impossibility to compass a business of that importance, to all that were present as in their hearts they did pronounce him innocent. Notwithstanding, they all three were convicted, and declared guilty of treason. Doom was only pronounced upon Drumwhassill and Mains, and they the same day hanged in the public street of Edinburgh. The gentlemen's case was much pitied, Main's case especially. Hamilton, who made the delation, lived after this in continual fear, and abhorred of all men; he kept still in the company of Arran until the alteration of the Court at Sterling, at which time James Jolinston of Westraw, pretending a vow he had made to avenge Main's death, did kill him as he was flying through the park, on the south side of the town.'

The object of the Court, however, was by no means gained by the death of these inferior personages. Sir Lewis Bellenden, Justice-Clerk, was sent on a special embassy to England in February 1585, with the intention 'of procuring hatred against the banished<sup>1</sup> Lords and Ministers.' He carried with him a copy of the book entituled 'The King's declaration of the late Acts of Parliament,' which was reprinted in London with some alterations and additions. On Thursday, the 11th of March, Hume, a servant of the Earl of Marr, and Kerr, a servant of the Master of Glamis, went to London 'to purge themselves of the crimes laid to their charge by the Justice-Clerk.' A month afterwards the Lords themselves were confronted with the Justice-Clerk before the Chancellor, the Treasurer, and

<sup>1</sup> Calderwood's History, vol. iv. p. 352, etc.

Lord Hunsdon. 'They cleared themselves worthily,' says Calderwood, 'the Master of Glammis taking the speech in hand. The Justice-Clerk craved the Queen that they might be warded (imprisoned). They desired Her Majesty's declaration touching their innocency. It is deferred. They lie at Westminster.' Calderwood then gives the answer to the Justice-Clerk's accusation at length. Each of the charges is of course denied, and they refused to answer to the question whether they sent any letters to the Laird of Duntreath, 'least by purging of ourselves we appear to accuse others.' They did not acknowledge any acquaintance with Hamilton the accuser, and the respondent thus goes on:—'As to the Laird of Duntreath, surely I know him not well, but this we know him to profess himself plainly the Duke of Lennox's man, who brought a commission from the Duke of Lennox to the King's Majesty, that time the Duke was removed from His Highness; with great vehemency delivered the same, held his lands of him, received good deed of him, was in good favour and credit with him, was made knight when he was made Duke, as we understand; is in blood joined to the Earl of Montrose, whose uncle has married his sister, and is detained in the hands of our enemies; whereof, if either by violence this be drawn out of him, for fear of his life, either by persuasion he be induced to speak thus, or if he have spoken it at all, or if any other passion hath overtaken him, we trust so much to his own honesty, that if he were here present he would never say that we devized any such purpose. And if he were induced thereunto, what the testimony of one man could prove your Honours know.' They again press that the Laird of Duntreath may be confronted with them, engaging their lives and honours, 'that if he were brought forward they would appear innocent to all men.' The Lords hold the same language in an application to the King likewise, given by Calderwood, and add, as concerning the Laird of Duntreath, deponer, 'although his testimony against us be many ways suspicious, yet we trust so much in his honesty and in our own innocency, that if he were not in the hands of our special enemies, whether either threatening, prayer, or some other infirmity transporting him, maketh him as appeareth to forget himself, or if he were confronted with us, he would be ashamed to confess so manifest an untruth.' The Justice-Clerk returned to Edinburgh on the 10th of May, and the Queen sent the accused parties a message by Sir Philip Sidney, assuring them

'of her good affection,' and he 'willed them to advise upon their petitions which they would have presented to Her Majesty, who was to be at Westminster the week following, and one of their number is appointed to confer with Secretary Walsingham. The return of the Lords to Scotland, and the downfall of Arran, are well-known matters of history.

As a sequel to this miserable affair, Calderwood relates that 'Wotten, the English Ambassador, informed his Mistress that there was nothing but double-dealing and deceit in our Court, and therefore desired to be recalled home. That Duntreath, being now set at liberty, had written to the King and him, that he was not only suborned, but threatened by Arran to depone that which he had deponed against the Lords.'<sup>1</sup>

Crauford,<sup>2</sup> in the true spirit of his craft, tries to soften off this transaction, but it must be confessed that Sir James's conduct was base and despicable in the extreme. A few years afterwards, moreover, it is thus given by Pitcairn:<sup>3</sup>—'Robert Hamilton of Inchmachan, William Kirkaldy of Grange, Sir James Edmonstone of Duntreath, . . . Edmonstone younger of Duntreath, and James Lockhart of Lees, accused of certain treasonable crimes committed by them 17th and 18th December last against His Majesty and Counsellors, for being present at certain speeches uttered by Mr. Walter Balcanquall (the well-known religious agitator) in the pulpit in the New Kirk, as means used by him to stir up sedition. It is defended that first Balcanquall, the author of the alledged conspiracy, is not called—also that such convocation is no crime, being allowed by Act of Secret Counsell made in 1590, where all Lords, etc., are summoned wherever they deem expedient to give account of their faith, and subscription, and band, made by the King for maintaining true religion.' Answered that Balcanquall had no lawful power to assemble a meeting—Referred to a Jury. The Jury challenged by the accused. No further decision stated.

Having again escaped, we find Sir James still in performance of public duties. In 1600 he was Chancellor of an Assize on James Taret for forgery; and the next year there is a notice in the criminal trials<sup>4</sup> of William Cunningham of Tourlands, being condemned to be beheaded for holding his house of Cunninghamhead against the Lairds of Duntreath <sup>1</sup> Calderwood, vol. iv. p. 380.

<sup>2</sup> Note 49, Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> Pitcairn, Criminal Trials, Feb. 11, 1596-7.

<sup>4</sup> Note 50, Appendix.

and Urchill (Graham of Orchill), His Majesty's Commissioners, who were assieging the same place for thirteen days, and discharging hackbuts. In 1610 he was a member of the General Assembly as one of the barons; and in 1614 Sir James sat on the jury at the trial<sup>1</sup> of John Ogilvie, a Jesuit, who was hanged. The last additions probably, at Duntreath House,<sup>2</sup> were made by him, as is shown by his coat of arms still existing. It seems likely, however, that the south side of the quadrangle was left imperfect, from the resolution Sir James took towards the latter part of his life with his eldest son, to transplant the family to the north of Ireland.

Various circumstances had occurred to lower the family of Duntreath from the position it had hitherto held. The reduction of the property by the constant allotments made to younger branches had doubtless led to considerable embarrassment, and being no longer supported by Court favour or upheld by powerful alliances as heretofore, such were probably among the motives which led to a step so injurious to the family. Almost immediately upon his accession to the Crown of England, James commenced his well-organized system of peopling the north-west of Ireland, the great proportion of which had been forfeited by the rebellion, in which the Earls of Tyrone and Tyrconnell, and the great northern chief O'Dogharty, had taken so great part, and which was now perfectly laid waste, by colonists from England and Scotland.

Among the earliest settlers had been John Dalway, who came to Ireland holding a commission in Lord Essex's army in 1573. By marrying a daughter of a relation of O'Neil, he obtained from the Crown a grant of a considerable district of land in the county of Antrim, which his father-in-law forfeited. Of this, Broadisland formed a portion, which portion in 1609 he leased for ever to William, eldest son of Sir James Edmonstone, on the usual conditions of finding five able horsemen, properly equipped, to attend for forty days yearly the general hostings of the Lord Deputy; and within five years to build a barwn, namely a fortified 'mansion of lime and stone, covered with slate, which shall cost in building £300.' Probably on account of his advanced age, this purchase was made entirely in his son's on the west side of the quadrangle, when pulled down and rebuilt in 1863.

<sup>1</sup> Note 51, Appendix.

<sup>2</sup> The cypher S. J. E. K., Sir James Edmonstone, knight, was found on a stone in the tower

name, nor does it appear that Sir James himself ever went to Ireland ; indeed, it is likely the arrangement was left mainly to his heir-apparent William, but in 1614, in order to meet this purchase, and perhaps on account of other debts besides, Sir James mortgaged the whole of the Duntreath estate to his son-in-law, Sir William Graham of Braco, redeemable on the payment of 80,000 merks. In the course of the same year, however, the mortgage was made over to Sir William Livingston of Kilsyth, but not quite on the same terms, as some portions, for which 20,000 merks were paid, were alienated for ever. Happily the greater part of this mortgage was paid off, and the Duntreath estate recovered sixteen years after, in 1630, by Archibald, grandson of Sir James.

Sir James Edmonstone of Duntreath married first, Helen, daughter of Sir James Stirling of Keir, by Jean, daughter of William Chisholm, Bishop of Dumblane. The celebrated John Napier of Merchiston, inventor of the Logarithms, married another daughter of Keir's. By this lady he had—

First, William, his eldest son and heir. Second, Mary married, first, John Cunningham of Cunninghamhead, in Ayrshire, by whom she had several children ; and secondly, the Honourable Sir William Graham of Braco, second son of John, third Earl of Montrose, and had issue. Third, Marjory married Claude Hamilton of Cocknay, in the county of Dumbarton, and had issue. Fourth, Helen married John Lennox of Bransogle, in Lennox, and had issue.

Sir James married secondly, in 1585, Margaret, daughter to Sir John Colquhoun of Luss, by Agnes, daughter of Robert Lord Boyd, by whom he had one son, Robert, who died unmarried, and four daughters. Elizabeth, married to James Edmonstone of Broich. Margaret, Agnes, and Jean, unmarried.

Sir James died at an advanced age, in or about 1618, and was succeeded by his eldest son William. This gentleman, during his father's lifetime, had been appointed one of the Justices or Commissioners,<sup>1</sup> with many others of the nobility and gentry, for effectually repressing Jesuits and seminary Priests, by an Act of the General Assembly, dated March 6th, 1589. He subsequently settled in Ireland, and built the house of Redhall.

<sup>1</sup> Note 52, Appendix.

It is stated that the first Scottish Presbyterian Minister introduced into Ireland was invited by him, and located in his parish of Broadisland, in 1611. He married Isobel, daughter of John Haldane of Gleneagles, in the county of Perth, by Isobel, daughter of Sir James Hume of Wedderburn, in Berwickshire. By her he had five sons and two daughters. First, Archibald, who succeeded him. Second, James married his cousin-german Jean, daughter of John Cunningham of Cunninghamhead, and had issue. Third, John married likewise his cousin-german Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of James Edmonstone of Broich, by whom he got the lands of Ballybantry, in Ireland, and had several children. Fourth, Robert, and fifth, Andrew, both unmarried. Of the two daughters, first, Helen married first, John Dolway (called Dolloway in the pedigree, but incorrectly) of Belliehill in the county of Antrim, and had issue; and secondly, Colonel James Wallace of Auchans and Dundonald. This gentleman had headed the insurrection of the Presbyterians which was defeated at Rulliongreen, near the Pentland hills, in 1666, by the King's forces, under the well-known Dalzell. For this treason he was forfeited, but escaping to Ireland, he married Mrs. Dalway. Second, Jean married Sir Robert Adair of Kilhill, in the county of Wigton, by whom she had several children.

William Edmonstone of Duntreath died in or about the year 1629, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Archibald. The first act we hear of this gentleman was to redeem the old family residence of Duntreath, and a considerable portion of the estate, which he happily effected in 1630, by selling doubtless a part of the property acquired by his grandfather and father in Ireland; and for the next century Duntreath continued to be, conjointly with Redhall, the abode of the head of the family. The laird of Duntreath being a zealous Presbyterian, was elected 'Commissioner for the Barons,' and member for the county of Stirling to the Parliament held by Charles I., on the occasion of his coronation in June 1633. 'This Parliament,' says Laing, a strongly prejudiced writer, 'sat as usual only two days. The first was appropriated to the election of the Lords of articles; the last was reserved for confirming the articles prepared by that committee, whose deliberations occupied the intermediate period.' This was usual, but Laing continues to relate, not only that the Parliament was packed by the King's orders, but moreover repeats a story, current it seems at the time, that the Lord Register reported falsely the decision,<sup>1</sup> and the King prevented any scrutiny to be made. This the King, in his 'Large Declaration,' declares to be a 'calumny so foul and black as they themselves did know it to be false.' This was in reference to an act of certification of the acts concerning religion; one of those unfortunate measures which unquestionably laid the foundation of the unhappy Charles's ruin. It is said the Laird of Duntreath took an active part, though the King took down the names and votes, declaring 'I shall know to-day who will do me service.'

Mr. Edmonstone married Jean, daughter of Archibald Hamilton of Halcraig, in Lanarkshire, by whom he had two sons, William<sup>2</sup> and Archibald, and two daughters. First, Helen married to Thomas Niven of Monkridden, in the county of Ayr; and second, Jean unmarried. Of the sons, William, the eldest, was born deaf and dumb. This legally precluded him from the succession, and there is consequently an 'Inquisitio de tutelâ,' dated September 15th, 1647. Craufurd, in the MS. genealogy, gives the following account of this gentleman, I suppose from tradition still preserved when he wrote:—'He was an exceedingly sightly handsome gentleman as could be seen. (This is fully borne out by a portrait of him in the family collection.) He had a great vivacity and quickness of imagination, and a wonderful and amazing apprehension of things; and so great and so strong a memory, that it was remarked that he seldom or ever forgot any person he had once ever seen. He did not seem to be in any degree touched with any dull or melancholy reflections on his own misfortune, for he was as much as is possible to conceive, not only a cheerful, but a facetious man, as I have been told by some gentlemen of credit and reputation who were his intimate acquaintance, for with those, as he had frequent and intimate habits, both he and they got into as familiar a way of conversing by signs and motions as if he had enjoyed the ordinary faculties of speech and hearing. He had an handsome allowance in annuity of the estate, that supported him to live in a way suitable and becoming the rank and quality of the honourable family he was the representative of, and he kept and used the title all his life long, for he lived to a good age, and died some time after the revolution several years.'

<sup>1</sup> Laing, History of Scotland, vol. iii. p. 102.

<sup>2</sup> Note 53, Appendix.

The apartment he occupied in the House of Duntreath still goes by the name of the Dumb Laird's Tower.<sup>1</sup> It would seem, moreover, that he had the credit of being gifted with second sight, for in Law's 'Memorials'<sup>2</sup> it is stated, after an enumeration of signs, 'Sic lyke,' in February 1677, 'did the Dumb Laird of Duntreath at Paisley make signs of some great troubles and fightings to be in this land in a few months.' In the same curious work is the following notice of him:—'The Laird of Duntreath, born deaf and dumb, a man devotedly set, on a tyme two of his neighbours falling out at two miles' distance from him, when he was at present at Duntreath, the one striking the other with a whenger in the arm, he at the same instant of time made a sign of it. So at Paisley, he being there in the year 1676, in December, in the time of the frost, there was one of his acquaintance went forth to a water at a good distance from him upon the ice, and had fallen in, and he at the same time gave warning of it by a sign.'<sup>3</sup>

Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath seems to have died in the year 1637 during the minority of his sons, for there is an 'Inquestio de tutelâ' dated October of that year, by which James Edmonstone of Broadisland in Ireland, next brother of Archibald, is instituted guardian (or tutor, as it is called) of William and Archibald, the two legitimate sons of the aforesaid Archibald. And in 1644, probably on account of the death of James, their next uncle John Edmonstone of Broich is appointed to the same office. Moreover, in 1649 John, tutor of Duntreath, was nominated one of the Commissioners or Committee for War appointment by Parliament for Stirlingshire, he having been sent as member for that county to the Parliament of that year.

The infirmity of William Edmonstone precluding him according to the old law from the succession, Archibald, second son of his father, was returned heir.

This gentleman, like his predecessors, was a zealous supporter of the Presbyterian cause. But he lived at a time when this cause was no longer in the ascendant, and thence came into trouble. Fanaticism and violence on the one side, and oppressive tyranny on the other, brought Scotland into great misery during the reigns of the two last Stuarts. The case, as relates to Mr. Edmonstone, is thus stated in a MS. drawn up by his eldest son, among the family papers:—

<sup>1</sup> This tower was pulled down, and restored in 1863.

<sup>2</sup> Law's Memorials, p. 118.

<sup>3</sup> Note 54, Appendix.

‘That in the year 1677, the late Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath being at Duntreath on his private affairs, the Minister called Mr. Forrester, formerly in the parish of Killearn, came to Duntreath without Duntreath’s knowledge, and had a private lecture in the Gallery there, probably by the invitation of some private Christians, which, when Duntreath heard of, he thought it no great crime to be a hearer. On this egregious fault, only esteemed so by the prevailing party of the time, he was informed against by one Craig of Ledrogrean to my Lord Ross who then commanded a troop of dragoons. On this the said troop was sent to apprehend Duntreath, not suspecting any such treatment, and apprehending him, took him straight to Glasgow, where he lay a night in the court of guard, afterwards three nights in the Tolbooth, and gave in his bond of £1000 stg. to General Dalziel to appear at Edinburgh a month after that; which he did, and continued six months in the Tolbooth, in which time he was called three times before the Council, but was not allowed any advocate or lawyer to appear or plead for him. Only Sir George Lockhart came into the Tolbooth and advised Duntreath what to say before the Council, who put some questions to him relating to the King’s lawful title to the Crown, and the Archbishop of St. Andrews’ murder. His answers were pretty general, and he desired to be excused on that subject, seeing he did not<sup>1</sup> think himself obliged to declare in his private capacity. Then they asked him about the lecture in Duntreath House for which he was apprehended—how he came to be present at it. His answer was that the meeting was without his knowledge or invitation. In short they could lay so little to his charge that they could not be so cruel as to take his life, but fined him five hundred pounds sterling, the one half to the informer, the other half to the Crown.’

It appears from the indictment that Mr. Edmonstone came under the

<sup>1</sup> The following note is appended to the trial of John Ogilvie, the Jesuit, A.D. 1615, in Arnot’s State Trials, p. 334:—

‘It is somewhat remarkable that the son or grandson of Edmonstone of Duntreath, one of the jurymen who convicted the prisoner (Ogilvie) was fined by the Privy Council in 9000 merks, for refusing to answer upon oath whether he had harboured one Forrester, a field-preacher, who was under sentence of banishment, etc., June 30, 1681, Fountainhall’s Decisions, p. 145. Now, refusing to answer upon oath was the only crime which was proved against the prisoner “Ogilvie,” for which he suffered death.’

newly revived law against 'intereommuning with rebels,' and also under that against Conventicles. The fanatical and often treasonable conduct of the extreme section of the Presbyterians would have justified a less unscrupulous and tyrannical government than that of Lauderdale in resorting to strong and unusual measures at this wretched period. Mr. Edmonstone was released on 'a petition by the Lady Duntreath' to the Duke of York and the Lords of the Council. The fine, however, was exacted and paid, and in the Acts of Parliament dated Jan. 27, 1690, is 'An Act and decret in favour of Robert Adair of Kinhilt against the Aires (heirs) of Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, in consequence Sir Robert having borrowed £500 to pay his stepfather's fine.' It is stated that the Laird of Duntreath being of weak and infirm body, at the earnest solicitation of his wife (Sir Robert Adair's mother), he borrowed £500 on Irish security at 10 per cent. from Mr. William Hamilton, Duntreath's uncle, and Sir Robert now elaimed repayment from the tutors of the present Laird during his minority, which was allowed.

As regarding the circumstances attending Mr. Edmonstone's death, we have the following statement partly taken from the same document. 'There is further to be added of the same gentleman, that he was not long at rest from the troubles above mentioned. The Rebellion broke out in Ireland in the year 1688. Duntreath appeared very early to show his zeal for the Protestant interests, and liberties of the people. He first raised an independant company of his tenants and neighbours, and as far as was in his power defended the country from the insults of the Irish, particularly those that were in the garrison of Carriekfergus. He was afterwards commanded by General Gustavus Hamilton to march his company towards Coleraine.' Here he was brought into action with the Rebels. Sir Arthur Rawdon, in his retreat before the Irish army, had broken down the bridge across the Bannwater at Port Glenone in the march previous. On the advance of Lord Galway's division, Colonel Edmonstone with part of Adair's regiment was sent to secure the pass and prevent the repairing of the bridge; but on the 7th April Colonel Nugent having succeeded with a strong force in crossing the Bann near Port Glenone suddenly attacked Colonel Edmonstone, who, being supported by his Lieutenant, Colonel Shaw, and Sir Arthur Rawdon, defended himself with great gallantry in the trenches, but was forced to retreat towards Coleraine, which was speedily abandoned. 'In defending this trench,' continues the narrative, 'to the knees in water in a rainy season, he contracted a violent cold, which was afterwards the occasion of his death. He was commanded to march his regiment to Derry, that was besieged by the Irish, but they being so scarce of provisions could not admit his men, on which he marched four miles below Derry to a Fort called Culmore, where he died. He desired his corpse might be taken to the ancient burial-place of his family in Strathblane Church in Scotland, which was accordingly done.'<sup>1</sup>

Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath married Anna Helena, daughter of Colonel Walter Scott<sup>2</sup> of Harwood, and widow of Sir William Adair of Kinhilt, by whom he had four sons: first, Archibald; second, Walter; third, William; all of whom died young,—fourth, Archibald, who succeeded him,—and five daughters: first, Elizabeth, married James Montgomery<sup>3</sup> of Rosemount, by whom she had two sons, William and Hugh, and three daughters,—Anna Helena; Elizabeth; and Martha; Second, Jean; third, Margaret; fourth, Isobel; all died young; fifth, Anna Helena, married her own near connexion, Alexander Dalway of Belliehill in the County of Antrim, sometime member for the borough of Carrickfergus, by whom she had two sons, Robert and Archibald.

Archibald Edmonstone succeeded to his father, at whose death in 1689 he was a minor, probably about seven years old, for there is a settlement of accounts with his mother, who acted as guardian, dated 1703, and in 1704 we find his name among the list of Commissioners of Supply for the County of Stirling. He sat in the Irish Parliament<sup>4</sup> for the borough of Carrickfergus through the whole of the reign of George I. from 1715 to 1727. He also made considerable additions to the family property, both in Ireland and Dumbartonshire.

This gentleman married first the Honourable Anne Erskine, third daughter of Henry, third Lord Cardross, by Catherine, daughter of Sir James Stewart of Kirkhill, whose eldest son David succeeded to the

<sup>1</sup> Note 55, Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> Note 57, App.

<sup>2</sup> Note 56, App.

<sup>4</sup> Among the petitioners against the Test Clauses to the Irish Parliament was the name of

'Archibald Edmonstone,' 1705. He was a zealous member of the Belfast Presbytery; Reid, Hist. Presbyterian Church in Ireland, vol. iii, p. 109 and 118.

Earldom of Buchan, from whom the present family is descended. By this marriage Mr. Edmonstone had one daughter, Catherine, married to Arthur Kennedy of Cultra in the County of Down, Esq., by whom she had one daughter, married Richard Church, Esq., and died without issue.

Mr. Edmonstone married secondly, in 1716, Anne, second daughter of the Honourable John Campbell of Mamore, second son to Archibald, ninth Earl of Argyle, by whom he had three sons and two daughters.<sup>1</sup>

First, Archibald, first Baronet, who succeeded him.

Second, Campbell, sometime Lt Governor of Dumbarton Castle, married Marianne, daughter of William Anderson, Esq. of Glasgow, by whom he had four sons and eight daughters. The sons were Archibald, William, James, and Charles, all of whom died unmarried. The daughters were:—(1.) Anne, married, in 1775, D. Halliday of Belfast, and died without issue; (2.) Jessie; (3.) Susan; (4.) Dalmeny; (5.) Robina; (6.) Marianne; all died unmarried; (7.) Elizabeth Hamilton, married in 1783 Andrew Millar, Esq. of Dalnair in the County of Stirling, by whom she had three sons and two daughters:—Andrew and Campbell, who both died unmarried; and Alexander, married Catherine, youngest daughter of Sir James Colquhoun of Luss, Baronet, and died without issue. The daughters were Marianne; and Robina, married Hugh Williams, Esq., (8.) Jean Campbell, died unmarried.

Third, Charles, the third son, a major in the army, married a daughter of Bradshaw, Esq., and died without issue.

Of the two daughters of Mr. Edmonstone: First, Anna Helena Scott, married Philip Fletcher, Esq., by whom she had one son Philip, died unmarried; second, Mary, married the Reverend Hodgkinson, by whom she had one son Francis, late Professor of Civil Law at Dublin University, married Maria, daughter of Dr. Thomas Johnson, M.D., by whom he had two sons: first, Edmonstone; second, Frances, married to and has issue five daughters: first, Frances, married to James Lendrick, Esq.; second, Harriet, married to Abel Labertouche, Esq.; third, Julia, married to Reverend Charles Basden; fourth, Mary; fifth, Louisa, married Russell, Esq.

Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath died in 1768, and was succeeded by his eldest son Archibald, born at Silverbanks, since called (I believe) Auchentorlie, in the County of Dumbarton, October 10th, 1717. He was created a Baronet of the United Kingdom, May 3d, 1774. Through a very long life Sir Archibald was a great benefactor to his family as an improver of the property, but his principal acquisition was the purchase of the Kilsyth estate consequent to the sale of Red Hall and the remains of the Broadisland property in Ireland.

<sup>1</sup> Note 58, Appendix.

Sir Archibald sat for the county of Dumbarton in the Parliaments which were elected in 1761, 1768, and 1774. In 1780, he was chosen for the Ayr and Irvine boroughs; again in 1784 and 1790 he was chosen once more for Dumbartonshire, which he represented till he retired from Parliament in 1769.

In politics he was a Tory, and supported Lord North's administration during the American war.

He married first, in October 1753, Susanna Mary, daughter of Roger Harene,<sup>1</sup> Esq., a French gentleman, by Susanna daughter of Daniel Hays, Esq. of Wimbeldon, by whom he had five sons and three daughters: first, Archibald, born in 1754. Having obtained a military education on the continent, he entered into the army, and as a Lieutenant in the First Regiment of Footguards served as Aide-de-camp to General Riedesel who commanded the German division of the army under General Burgoyne in the unfortunate campaign in America, which ended by the surrender at Saratoga in 1777. Captain Edmonstone's health suffered from the hardships he underwent, and on his return to England he fell into a rapid consumption, and died at Clifton in 1780, in the 26th year of his age. Second, William Archibald. He went to India, where he entered into the Civil Department, and died at Calcutta in 1803. Third, Charles, second Baronet. Fourth, George, born in 1764, in holy orders, late Vicar of Pollerne, in the county of Wilts. Fifth, Neil Benjamin, born in 1765. At an early age Mr. Edmonstone went to India, where he greatly distinguished himself by his superior talents and high moral qualities, and eventually rose to the highest situations in the Civil Service, short only of the supreme. He was successively Persian Translator, Secretary to the Government, and member and vice-President of the Supreme Council, and on his return to England was elected a member of the Direction, which he held till his death in London, May 4th, 1841. He married in 1803 Charlotte Anne, daughter of Philip Friell, Esq., and had issue five sons and six daughters:—first, William Archibald, born 1804, died in India, 1827; second, Neil Benjamin, born 1809, married Madeline Elinor, only daughter of William Henry Trant of Drumonethy in the county of Limerick, Esq., by whom he has two sons, Neil Benjamin, born June 1843, and William Henry; third, Charles Welland, born 1811, in holy orders, married Susan Mary D'Oyley, eldest daughter of the Reverend Philip Douglas, and has issue, Susan Carnegie, born 1844, and other daughters; fourth, George Frederick, born 1813, married Ann Farly, second daughter of Turner, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, and has issue; fifth, James Harene, born 1820, died 1834; sixth, Charlotte Anne, married James Carnegie, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, who died 1831, and thereafter Reverend J. Hodgson, Vicar of St. Peter's, Isle of Thanet; seventh, Henrietta Dashwood; eighth, Susanna, married Reverend Thomas Lumsden of Cushnie, in the county of Aberdeen; ninth, Louisa Macleod, married Reverend Thomas Clement Browne, and by him, who died, has issue; tenth, Anne Craigie; eleventh, Alicia Augusta.

<sup>1</sup> Note 59, Appendix.

Of the three daughters of Sir Archibald, Susanna Margaret married James Trevithick of Addington Park in Surrey (now the residence of the Archbishops of Canterbury), by whom she had two sons and four daughters:—first, Barton, born 1779, married Eliza, daughter of the Reverend John Strachey, D.D., niece of Sir Henry Strachey, of Sutton Court, Somerset, Baronet, by whom he has one daughter Eliza, married to her cousin Leonard Strachey, Esq., by whom she has issue; second, James, born 1797, died 1849; third, Susanna; fourth, Anne; fifth, Louisa; sixth, Charlotte, all died unmarried.

Sir Archibald's second daughter Anne Mary, married Major-General Henry Read of Crowood, in the county of Wilts, by whom she had two daughters:—first, Mary Anne, married to J. Richmond Seymour, Esq. of Inholmes, in the county of Wilts, by whom she had three sons and three daughters: (1.) Henry Richmond; (2.) Charles Frederick; (3.) George; (4.) Alithea Emma; (5.) Jane Mary Susanna; (6.) Charlotte Isabella; second, Louisa; Sir Archibald's third daughter Sarah, died young.

Sir Archibald Edmonstone married secondly, Hester, daughter to Sir

John Heathcote of Normanton Park, Rutland, Baronet. By her, who died in 1797, he had no issue, and having attained the great age of 89, he died in his house in Argyll Street, London, in July 1807. He was succeeded by his eldest surviving son Sir Charles, who was born at Greenwich, October 9, 1764. He was educated at Eton, and subsequently at Christ Church, Oxford,<sup>1</sup> at both which places he was distinguished for his classical attainments. Having been called to the Bar, he was appointed by Sir Richard Pepper Arden, Master of the Rolls, to be one of the six clerks in Chancery, which office he held till his father's death. In 1806 Mr. Edmonstone was elected member for the county of Dumbarton, but he lost his seat at the general election which took place in the April following. In 1812 he was again returned to Parliament for Stirlingshire, which seat he retained till his death. Sir Charles was, like his father, a Tory in politics, and he had the satisfaction of supporting Lord Liverpool's administration through the glorious events which terminated the war in 1815. He never however spoke in the House.

Sir Charles Edmonstone married first, Emma,<sup>2</sup> fifth daughter of Richard Wilbraham Bootle, Esq. of Rode Hall, Cheshire, and Lathom House, Lancashire, and by her, who died in November 1797, had a son and daughter: first, Archibald, who succeeded him; and second, Mary Emma, born November 7, 1797. He married secondly, in December 1804, Louisa, youngest daughter of Beaumont, second Lord Hotham,<sup>3</sup> by whom (who remarried in 1832 Charles Woodcock, Esq. of Park Crescent, London, where she died, August 20th, 1840) he left four sons and two daughters:—first, William, born January 29, 1810, a commander in the Royal Navy,<sup>4</sup> married in 1841, Mary, eldest daughter of Lieutenant Colonel Parsons, C.M.G., by whom he has had two sons, Archibald William, born and died in 1865, and Archibald, born 30th May 1867, and nine daughters; (1.) Mary Emma Frances, born 1842, died 1847; (2.) Louisa Anne;<sup>5</sup> (3.) Charlotte Henrietta;<sup>6</sup> (4.) Jessie; (5.) Frances Euphemia;<sup>7</sup> (6.) Sophia; (7.)

<sup>1</sup> Christ Church, Oxford, B.A., February 20, 1784.

<sup>2</sup> Note 60, Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> Note 61, Appendix.

<sup>4</sup> Rear-Admiral, 1869; C.B., Member of Parliament for Stirlingshire, 1874.

<sup>5</sup> Married, 12th October 1872, to Lieutenant Henry Pipon, R.H.A., second son of the late Colonel J. K. Pipon, of Noirmont Manor, Jersey.

<sup>6</sup> Married, 9th June 1866, to the Rev. John Francis Kitson, Vicar of Antony, Cornwall.

<sup>7</sup> Married, 3d June 1873, to A. R. Duncan, Esq., Advocate.

Susanne Emily; (8.) Mary Clementina;<sup>1</sup> (9.) Alice Frederica; second, Charles Henry, born October 30, 1811, a major in the army, died of consumption at Edinburgh, November 12, 1847; third, George, born January 25, 1816; in the Bengal Civil Service, married Amelia Helen, daughter of Hogg, Esq., and widow of Henry Millet of the Bengal Civil Service; fourth, Frederick Neil,<sup>2</sup> born September 7, 1818; Captain in the 4th Regiment of Bengal Light Cavalry; Brevet Lieutenant Colonel; fifth, Louisa Henrietta, born July 12, 1807, died in March 1840; she married John Kingston of Clairmont, Demerara, Esq., by whom she had one son, John Hotham, born February 10, 1834, and three surviving daughters, Louisa Mary, born October 22, 1830, Alice Frances, born December 1, 1831, and Charlotte Anne, born January 11, 1833. Sixth, Amelia Frances, born May 9, 1814.

Sir Charles Edmonstone was seized with paralysis early in the spring of 1820, and died at Brighton, April 1, 1821, in the 58th year of his age.

He was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Archibald Edmonstone, third Baronet, born at 32 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, March 12, 1795. He received his education at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford.<sup>3</sup> On the death of his father he was a candidate to succeed him as member for the county of Stirling, but without success. He married, October 10, 1830, his cousin-german, Emma, third daughter of Randle Wilbraham,<sup>4</sup> of Rode Hall, Cheshire, Esq., and by her he had three daughters who all died in their infancy:—first, Mary Emma, born July 17, 1833, died 18th August following; second, another daughter of the same names, born September 17, 1834, and died ten days after, and third, Emma, born May 13, 1841, and died June 11 following.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Married, 1st October 1874, to A. Graham Murray, Esq., Advocate, only child of T. Graham Murray, Esq., Edinburgh. Both had a common ancestor in Lady Mary, daughter of Robert III., married successively to Sir William Graham and Sir William Edmonstone. Supra, page 30.

<sup>2</sup> Died August 15, 1865. Married, March 17, 1863, Henrietta Jane Helen Smith Neill, daughter of Lieut.-Col. Wm. Smith Neill, of Barnwell, and Swindridge Muir, Ayrshire.

<sup>3</sup> Christ Church, Oxford, B. A., Nov. 29, 1816.

<sup>4</sup> Note 62, Appendix.

<sup>5</sup> Sir Archibald died, 13th March 1871.

APPENDIX.

NOTES.

---

NOTE 1, PAGE 2.

IN 1612 the lands of Edmonstone and Cauldcoats were mortgaged by Andrew Edmonstone of that Ilk, Mary Gordon, his spouse, and John Edmonstone, his eldest son, to Master Thomas Hope, Advocate, to be holden of His Highness's dearest spouse Anna, Queen of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, as Lady of Dunferline, and the lands and mill of Niddry Marshall, to be holden of His Majesty as superior thereof.

The Abbey of Dunferline, by a grant of David the First, obtained the churches of Newton and Woolmet, and with them the superiority of the lands of Edmonstone, in which parishes these lands were situated.

'The temporality of Dunferline church was annexed to the Crown in 1587. The Abbey, being exempted, was made a temporal lordship by James the Sixth, and was bestowed by him (together with the Palace of Falkland) as a morning's gift on his consort, Anne of Denmark, on the day after his marriage at Upsal (or Upslo, on the coast of Norway) in 1589. This gift was ratified by Parliament in 1593, and confirmed by infestment in 1602. A small palace called the Queen's House was built at Dunferline by Queen Anne in 1600.' This mortgage was redeemed three years after, as shown by a charter of Thomas Hope to John Edmondstone, dated April 5, 1616.

There is a special retour,<sup>1</sup> dated 'Montem Placiti de Inveresk' (where, according to old usage, judicial procedure formerly obtained in the open air), 20th January 1512, before William, Lord Borthwick, and James Douglas, Master of Morton, Bailies<sup>2</sup> of the Regality

<sup>1</sup> Retour, 1512, James the Fourth.

<sup>2</sup> It appears that noblemen were often Bailies to the higher ecclesiastical sees, as the Stewarts, Earls of Lennox, to the Archbishop of Glasgow, etc.

This Archbishop of St. Andrews was Alexander Stewart, natural son of James the Fourth, who fell at Flodden next year with his father.

of Dunferline, together with Robert, Lord Erskine, on the part of the Right Rev. Father in Christ, Alexander, Archbishop of St. Andrews, 'Commendatarium monesteriarum de Dunferling et Coldingham,' etc., relating to James Edmonstone of Ednam, as heir to his brother David, for the lands of Edmonstone.

In the infestment which followed of James Edmonstoun there is this peculiarity, that Edmonstoun is spoken of as a barony, though holding of a religious house, and not of the King; 'of which the instances,' Mr. Riddell states, 'are not many, and rarer still in the case of a convent or abbacy than of a high ecclesiastical see. Dunferline, however, had the right of regality, or was, in other words, a palatinate, or what amounted to that in England.'

The transfer of the property from the Edmonstones to the Raiths seems to have caused some feud, for there is a remission under the Great Seal to James Raith of Edmonstone, for the accidental mutilation of Patrick Edmonstone of Woolmet, the loss of his left arm—a serious affair—dated July 1, 1664.

NOTE 2, PAGE 3.

It would seem that Woolmet became the appanage of a younger branch of Edmonstoun of that Ilk, but I am not aware of any notice of its final alienation. It is now the property of the Earl of Wemyss.

NOTE 3, PAGE 3.

It is a curious coincidence that Gilmerton, mentioned as the property of Sir John Herring of Edmonstone, in Clydesdale, is very near Edmonstone in Midlothian. Gilmerton Grange was the scene of a dreadful act of savage vengeance, as related in the 'Memorie of the Somervilles.'<sup>1</sup> Sir John Herring having discovered an intrigue carried on in that house between his daughter and a monk of Newbattle, set fire to it, and destroyed six or seven other persons together with the culprits. It is stated in a note that the tradition is preserved in the neighbourhood, and that Gilmerton Grange is still called the 'Burnt-dole.'

NOTE 4, PAGE 3.

In Chalmers' 'Caledonia,' vol. i. page 501, there is a mention of the settlement of Ednam, by Thorlongus an English colonist. In the 169th number of the 'Quarterly Review' (Scottish Abbeys and Cathedrals), this is mentioned more at length, and as the reference is to Raine's 'North Durham,' a work to which I have not access, I give it in the words of the Review:—'There is a parchment in the treasury at Durham which enables us to describe in his own words how the Northumbrian colonist settles himself on the left bank of the Tweed in the beginning of the 12th century. "To the sons of Holy Mother Church"—thus the Charter runs—"Thor the Long, greeting in the Lord: Know that Aedgar my Lord, King of the Scots, gave to me Ednaham a waste; that with his help and my own means I peopled it, and have built a church in honour of St. Cuthbert, and this church, with a ploughgate of land, I have given to God and St. Cuthbert and his Monks, to be possessed by them for evermore. This gift I have made for the soul of my Lord the King Aedgar, and for the souls of his father and mother, and for the weal of his brothers and sisters, and for the redemption of my dearest brother Lefwin, and for the weal of myself, both my body and my soul ; And if any one by force or fraud presume to away take this my gift from the Saint aforesaid, and the Monks his servants, may God Almighty away take from him the life of the Heavenly Kingdom, and may he suffer everlasting pains with the Devil and his angels, Amen." This awful denunciation did not secure to St. Cuthbert the spiritual monopoly, at least of the parish, for there were grants given to the monks of Coldingham and Kelso, besides the hospital dedicated to St. Lawrence or St. Leonard, as stated above.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Memorie of the Somervilles, vol. i. p. 118.

Robert the Second, when High Steward, had granted the lands of Edcnham to Sir Robert Erskine, but Sir Robert subsequently resigned them in exchange for a grant in Aberdeen.

Edcnham became early the mother church to the two neighbouring chapels of Newton (Don) and Nenthorn. There is a presentation to the chaplaincy of Edcnham by John Edmonstoun, as tutor or guardian to James, son and heir of David Edmonstoun, which is confirmed by James I.—1426.

NOTE 5, PAGE 4.

To Mr. Elliot, the agent of the Ednam property in 1827, I am indebted for the intelligence that in 1643 the valuation of the parish of Ednam was £7880 Scots, of which Andrew Edmonstoun possessed £7520. This was subsequently reduced to about half. At the time of Lord Dudley's purchase, the rental was estimated at £3000, and the estate was the same size as when sold by Mr. Edmonstoun.

NOTE 6, PAGE 5.

One of these sisters married that singular character Theodore Baron Newhoff, who was elected King of Corsica<sup>2</sup> when that island revolted against the Genoese in 1736. His reign did not extend above eight months, and on his eventually coming to London he there met the lady. He was subsequently imprisoned for debt, and died just after his release in 1756. Mr. Aytoun, Professor of Rhetoric in Edinburgh (1849), the lineal descendant of the family of Ednam, informs me that his father attended 'the Queen's' funeral as chief-mourner. There are, I believe, no traces of the family now in Ednam, unless it be the burial-vault.

NOTE 7, PAGE 5.

The charter is Domino Alexandro Settoni militi terrarum de Culloden in Moravia—witnesses, Dominus Anghus de Moravia—Alexander de Mowbray, Randulphus de

<sup>1</sup> Chalmers' Caledonia, vol. ii. p. 190.

<sup>2</sup> Boswell's Corsica, p. 101, etc.

Soullis, et Thomas de Erskyne.' The charter is without date in an inventory by Anderson of original deeds that once were in the charter-chest of the Earls of Winton. One copy is in the Register Office. The resignation is from the same source. I am indebted to Mr. Riddell for the extract.

NOTE 8, PAGE 5.

The first notice of the grant of Duntreath is found, as is stated in the text, in an entry in the Compota of the Ballivorum ad extra, under the head of the Earldom of Lennox, to the effect that the Baillif of the Crown, 'non onerat se de fermis terrarum de Erlelevin (Arlehavan), Drumfyn,<sup>1</sup> et Duntreyne (Duntreyve, or Duntreath) qui valent in anno sex libros, tresdecim solidos et quatuor denaria quia Rex infeodavit Willielmum de Edmonstone de eisdem.'

Also there is this other charge in 1434. 'Et allocatur (computanti) pro quibusdam terris (not mentioned) existentibus in manibus Willielmi de Edmonstone causa junctae infeodationis sponse sue de anno compota—1434.'

For these two important notices I am indebted to Mr. Riddell, who gives the references to Chamberlain's Rolls, tom. 3, page 278-9 and 288. Mr. Riddell adds, 'This older Royal Grant of Duntreath, I believe, was not formerly known. It may have been the more expedient and necessary owing to the doubtful right of the Duchess of Albany Countess of Lennox to the property in the Earldom of Lennox, owing to the forfeiture of her husband and sons.' To the 'Duchess's Charter' is attached the seal, Lennox impaling Albany, composed in the upper portion of the left half of Stewart of Albany a fess chequé with a label in chief; and in the lower a lion rampant of the Earldom of Fife held by the Duke of Albany, her husband; together with the legend in the circumference. The hearts on each side, and the Tree, are merely incidental. The seal, as also the deed, are in very fine preservation. Balloch Castle, at the junction of Loch Lomond and the river Leven, was the principal residence of the Earls of Lennox, but Inchmurrayne (Inchmurrin), whence this and other deeds of the Duchess are dated, was a fortified residence in the island of that name in Loch Lomond, close adjoining to which the Duchess retired, after the death of her family, for security. There is a charter of lands at Drymen by the Duchess to one Donald Patrick, on condition of furnishing stabling for her horses, as also fire and lodging to such poor persons as might require the same.

Mr. Riddell also found in the charter-chest of Lord Napier a notarial instrument, 9th February 1408, setting forth that then 'personaliter constitutus venerabilis vir Donaldus de Lefnax Dominus de Catter' (near Buchanan) produced a charter there narrated as follows:—'Ego Donaldus comes de Lefnax Salutem; noveritis me dedisse, confirmasse Murdacho de Lefnax fratri meo, totam terram meam que vocatur Dumgoyak cum redyng una cum monte que vocatur Duntreth, ac omnes terras meas de Blargin et de Dumfyn cum suis pertinentibus infra comitatum de Lefnax' to him heritably reddendo for lands and montem a pair of white spurs yearly, apud manerium de Belach, and ward and relief sectis curie duplicatum ferme. No date—Testibus Waltero filio Alani de Forselane, Finlayo de Campsy, Malcolmo filio Duncani Gilmore, filio Malisii,' etc. etc.

<sup>1</sup> Quære. The two marked hills called Dunfyn and Dungoin?

The notice of Mons of Duntreth, besides Dungoyak, shows that it applies to what is still called 'the Court Hill' opposite to Dungoyak, the top of which has been levelled either for the erection of a stronghold, according to tradition, or what seems clear from the statement, for a 'mons placiti' or Moot Hill for holding justiciary courts. The name yet preserved seems to prove this satisfactorily.

Though the old charter by Donald Earl of Lennox is not given, yet Mr. Riddell thinks it must have been at least as old as the middle of the fourteenth century, and consequently this must be the oldest mention of Duntreath. Earl Donald did not survive the reign of David the Second (who died in 1370). He was great-grandfather of Isabella, Duchess of Albany, Countess of Lennox in 1445, and Murdoch of Lennox, father of Isabella, the resigner of Duntreath at that time, is a younger brother of the Earl. The feudal privileges attached to Duntreath at so early a period give an additional interest to the locality.

The Lennoxes were descended from Arkel, a Northumbrian refugee to whom the valley of the Leven was granted by Malcolm Canmore.

NOTE 9, PAGE 6.

The Duchess' misfortunes naturally led, in the spirit of the times, to munificence towards the Church. There is a mortification of the lands of Ballagan, in Strathblane, to the convent of Blackfriars, Glasgow, 'pro salute animae nostrae,' and also those of her father, husband, and two sons who had suffered under James the First, dated at Inchemurran, 1445, twenty-one years after their execution.

NOTE 10, PAGE 6.

The charter of confirmation of James the Second, dated Stirling, December 10, 1452, is Willielmo de Edmonstone de Culloden and Mary Countess of Angus (our aunt) in conjunctâ infeodatione et Willielmo de Edmunston eorum filio et herede in feodo et hereditate et hereditariis suis, etc., of the lands of Duntreath Arleywin Dunguyock, with the mill thereof. The Quilt lying to the south side of the Burn of Blane, and the half of the lands of Balleun Easter, the Cluney's Glen, and Gartkalon (?), and mill thereof, all lying within the earldom and shire aforesaid, and all by the same charter erected into a free barony, to be called the Barony of Duntreath. On the resignation of the above William of Culloden and Marion Stewart, Countess of Angus, the King's aunt, father and mother of the said William Edmonstone the younger, tenure in fee and heretage for ever. Cum furca et fossa (gibbet and jail), yok, yak (privilege of trying actions), thol et them (relating to franchises of market), infangandthef, and outfangandthef (power of executing summary justice when the thief is detected with the spoil), and so on a long amplification, reddendo, a pound of pepper yearly at Duntreath at the feast of the nativity of John the Baptist, if asked only. Reserving to the same William of Culloden, and the said Marion Countess of Angus, and longest liver of them their liferent. William (Turnbull), Bishop of Glasgow, William Lord Crichton our Chancellor, and dearly beloved cousin, Andrew Lord Gray, Master of our Household, Mr. James Lindsay, Provost of the Collegiate Church of Lynclaudene (Lincluden), Alexander Nairn, of Sandford, our Comptroller, and Mr. George Shoreswood, Chancellor of Dunkeld, and Clerk.

The exercise of the great feudal powers as granted above was finally put an end to by the act abolishing heritable jurisdictions, 1748, though much had fallen into disuse. A fragment of the old stocks yet remain at Duntreath as a memorial of 'the good old times.'

NOTE II, PAGE 7.

Mr. Riddell kindly procured me a copy of this deed from the charter chest of the Duke of Montrose. It is slightly abbreviated.

In Dei nomine. Amen. Per hoc presens publicum instrumentum cunctis pateat evidenter, et sit notum quod anno Incarnationis Domini (1477 24 June) indictione decimâ Pontificatus (of Pope Sextus 4th) anno sexto. In mei notariî publici et testium subscriptorum presentîâ personaliter constitutus nobilis et potens Dominus Johannes Comes de Levynext ac Dominus Dernelie mihi notario publico infra scripto quandem literam in papiro scriptam sub sigillo privato Supremi Domini nostri Regis . . . emanatam et sigillatam ejusque subscriptione manuali ut mihi apparuit munitam tradidit perlegendam, comparandam transumendam et in publicam formam instrumentalem redigendam. Cujus quidem litere tenor sequitur et est talis. We grant and permittis to our cousing Johne Lord Dernelie, that for samikill as he has resignit in our hands his lands of the Lordshipe of Dernelie Inchechene lyande, in the sheriffdome of Renfrew, Torboltoune, Dregairn, and Galstoun, lyand in the sheriffdome of Ayr, and the lands of Bathcat, lyand in the sherriffdome of Edinburgh, to remain in our hands quhile (until) his entre to his part of the lands of the Earldome of Levynax, and thereafter quhile he haif infest and gyffyne to our weilbelovit cousing and Chancellor Andro Lord Avendale the said lands of the Earldom of Levynax in lyferent, als frely and in sicklyke forme as our foresaid Chancellor had the samyn lands of us before.<sup>1</sup> And als quhill our cousing Wilyeam Edmonstoun of Duntreath be made sikker (sure) be the said Johne Lord Dernelie for his part, and in so far as he may of the lands of Duntreth, Dungleoyabir, the Quhilt, Ballewane, Blairgaro, Enbaly,<sup>2</sup> the Glyn, and Carcane lyande in the same Erldome, quhilk he has be infestment and gyft heretably of our progenitour (James the Second) of before, that our said Chancellour and cousing Willyam of Edmonstoun beand contentaid sikker, as said is, in the best forme that can be divisit we sall (give ?) you incontinent therafter again to the said Lord Dernelie all his said lands of Dernelie, Inchenane, Torboltoun, Dregarn, Galstoun, and Bathkat, and infest him heretably therin als frely as he held thame of before, without cost or expence or any impediment. Wrytten under our privat sele, and subscriyvit with our hand at Stirling, the 21st day of June, and of our regne the thirtene yer (1472-3). Subscript litere. James. Super quibus omnibus et singulis prefatus Dominus Comes de Levynax et Dominus Dernlie petiit a me notario publico infra scripto, unum seu plura publicum seu publica, instrumentum seu instrumenta, Acta erant haec in civitate Glasguensis sub anno, mense, die indictione et pontificatu. Et ego Alanus Gray, Presbyter Glasguensis, etc. (being the usual notarial attestation).

<sup>1</sup> There is in the Great Seal Record a charter by James III. of the comitatus de Levynax to the said Chancellor for his life, dated May 4, 1471.

<sup>2</sup> These localities are no longer known by these names.

NOTE 12, PAGE 8.

The merk or mark was 13 shillings and fourpence. This, however, calculated in Scottish money, was only thirteen pence and one-third of a penny sterling.

NOTE 13, PAGE 9.

The following curious passage is from a periodical :—‘The parish of Braidisland, in the county of Antrim, which contains 5000 acres, Irish plantation measure, was the first Presbyterian parish of the plantation in the reign of James the First which had a Presbyterian minister. Since that time, namely, for more than two centuries, there have been but four ministers. The first was the Rev. Edward Bryce, appointed in 1611, and died in 1636. The second, Mr. Cunningham, appointed 1645, died 1697. The third, Mr. Cobham, appointed 1700, died 1759, and the fourth and present, is Mr Bankhead, appointed 1763, who is now ninety-four years of age, in perfect health and spirits. There is but one inhabitant of the parish that is not a Presbyterian.’—Dublin Penny Journal.

NOTE 14, PAGE 9.

The property, which was, as has been stated in the text, one of the forfeited estates of the O’Neils, was let on a perpetual fee-farm lease by John Dalway of Bellahill, who had obtained a grant of it from the Crown. It contained at the time of the purchase 2870 acres, and the yearly rent was fixed at £160, 9s. 4d. sterling. The mansion-house of Redhall was built in accordance with the terms by which all these estates were granted. On all lands exceeding 2000 acres a house or castle, surrounded by a baun or walled enclosure, was required to be erected within a limited time, and forty-eight able-bodied colonists were to be settled. Vide Reid’s Hist. Presbyterian Churches in Ireland, vol. i., page 81. Also Dr. Hodgkinson MSS. Memoir.

NOTE 15, PAGE 10.

For this interesting letter I am indebted to Mr. Riddell, who copied it from the Errol Charters at Slains Castle. The whole history of this marriage of William Livingston with Lady Dundee is a curious one. Though the way by which Lord Dundee came by his death-wound is now ascertained, for a time there were several contradictory reports afloat. In the notes to Chambers’s interesting history of the Rebellion in Scotland is the following :—‘ A Lowland cavalier story which has never been hitherto noticed in print ascribes the fate of the hero to a passion which William, third Viscount of Kilsyth, not then come to the Peerage, entertained for his lady.’ It seems by this story that he was suspected of having himself fired the fatal shot, and it goes on to state that Dundee’s mother was so convinced of this, that on the new year’s morning which succeeded, she sent Livingston a white night-cap, a pair of white gloves, and a rope, as indicative of her opinion. It is said, moreover, that she imprecated a curse upon the marriage of the guilty pair, ‘ praying to God that should He see fit to permit the unworthy couple to go out of the world without some visible token of His indignation, He would be pleased to make her some especial revelation to prevent her from utterly disbelieving His providence and justice.’ On the day of their marriage, moreover, Livingston presented his bride with a ring, which she lost immediately, and which was considered a bad omen. A century after, the ring was found in a field near Colzium, with the inscription ‘ Yours till deathe,’ which was given to my grandfather. My father likewise became possessed of another larger ring, with a similar inscription, ‘ Yours only and ever,’ which Lady Dundee probably had given to her husband. The tragic termination gives a peculiar interest to this curious history.

NOTE 16, PAGE 11.

The forfeited estate of Kilsyth was, with others, disposed of by the Barons of the Scottish Exchequer to ‘ the Company of Undertakers for raising the Thames water in York Buildings, London,’ in the year 1731. The Company became bankrupt, and the property passed into the hands of Mr. Campbell of Shawfield, who appears only to have held it a very short time, and then sold it to Sir Archibald Edmonstone in 1783. The sum paid for East and West Baronies of Kilsyth, including the lands of Bancloich, in the parish of Campsie, was about £41,000.

NOTE 17, PAGE 11.

Among the Kilsyth Records are some of historical interest relating to the time of the Interregnum. Of those more immediately connected with the locality, is a supplication by the parishioners of Moniaburgh, and of the Laird of Kilsyth’s tenants, to General Monk, to be relieved from quartering of troops and other services, dated 1658. There are likewise petitions of Sir James Livingston of Kilsyth to the King’s Commissioner for losses incurred by quarterings, and plunderings, and burning of his house, also of his tenants, the substance of which latter petition is the same as that preferred to the Scots Parliament while Charles the Second was exercising the regal functions in Scotland. In the Acts of the year 1651 there is a ‘ Supplication to the King’s most excellent Majesty’ on the part of the tenants of Kilsyth and Bantoun, purporting ‘ that the enemy on his march from Edinburgh to Glasgow, two several times in October and February last, came to the aforesaid lands, and there quartered with his whole army for the space of . . . Likeas the enemy having placed a garrison in the house of Kilsyth, the said garrison was for the space of nine weeks entertained by the tenants of the said lands, who beside were plundered and spoiled at pleasure by that garrison, and sicklike the said tenants have since November paid great Sesses to the garrisons of Sterling, Airth, Craigbarnet, Duntreath, etc., and in like manner the aforesaid tenants having for security put their whole victual (which were left unexhausted for helping to sow the ground), the same, with their clothes and other goods belonging to them, were totally burnt and destroyed with the house.' They therefore implore their condition to be taken into account. The Estates of Parliament remitted the petition for consideration by Committee of Estates. It appears, however, from the above-mentioned petitions of Sir James and of his tenants, which, though without date, are indorsed 1661, that the inquiry ordered by the Parliament of 1651 had been prevented by the invasion from England which immediately followed. Whether any pecuniary indemnification followed this later application does not appear, but Sir James was immediately raised to the Peerage, which, however, he did not enjoy above a few weeks.

NOTE 18, PAGE 12.

The Edmonstones of Woolmet were a cadet branch of the elder line, but I presume it to be extinct.

NOTE 19, PAGE 12.

I have copied this notice from the 'Beauties of Scotland,' vol. iii. page 434. If the date be 1688 or 1698, and not 1658, it would refer to the notorious freebooter himself.

Regarding the family in Shetland, my information is derived from a letter I received from Dr. Lawrence Edmonstone, dated Baltasound, February 15, 1834.

I believe that a direct branch of the Cambus-Wallace line lives, or lived a few years ago, in the parish of Biggar. A younger brother of the last Edmonstone of Newton bought a property in that parish, and called it Cambus-Wallace.

NOTE 20, PAGE 12.

I am indebted for this and other interesting information relating to the elder line of Ednam to William Edmondstone Aytoun, Esq., Professor of Rhetoric, Edinburgh University, who is the eldest representative of that line. Nisbet gives as the authority for the Ednam coat 'Workman's illuminated Book of Arms,' who was Herald in the reign of James the Sixth. Besides this, Mr. Riddell kindly furnished me with a copy of 'the matriculation of the arms of Edmonstone of that ilk and Edmonstone of Duntreath,' in Porteous and Stacey's Index: 'Edmundston or—3 Cressents gules. Edmundston Duntreath the same, wyt an annulet in fesse gules, alias a mallet, alias a star.' In a more modern hand, 'Edmondston of that ilk, argent on a bend, gules, three annulets, or in chief—a unicornis head sable.'

NOTE 21, PAGE 13.

It is curious that the annulet, which is distinctly given in Mr. Riddell's copy of the Garvock seals, should be omitted in the attested copy mentioned here. Moreover, this attested copy has been subsequently partially retouched with a pen. The coronet, which seems at the first drawing to have resembled that as now emblazoned, a modern ducal one, is changed into that resembling Mr. Riddell's transcript, something more like an Earl's without the balls,—and the crest has been gone over with a pen. There is an obvious desire in Crawford, as will be stated more at length hereafter, to ignore the existence of the Ednam as the elder branch of the line, and I cannot but think that may be a reason for the omission of the annulet in the attested copy, which Mr. Riddell found in the original. But the annulet does not appear at that early period to have been considered as a mark of cadetcy. The circumstance of it being the distinction, as now, of the fifth son, Mr. Riddell states to be modern, and more modern in Scotland even than in England. He thinks it might possibly be 'a maternal difference distinguishing the Duntreath from the main stem (of which there are several contemporary instances in other families); in other words, part of the arms of the Lady, wife of the Edmonstone of that Ilk and mother of the Culloden or Duntreath founder,' whoever that was. 'Or, on the other hand, it might have been a difference derived from a feat in chivalry by such as the chivalrous Archibald Edmonstone (as mentioned by Fordun) at the end of the fourteenth century, he having borne away the ring at some encounter.' At the same time, this badge seems somewhat arbitrarily omitted, for Mr. Riddell has furnished me with a sketch of a seal of Sir William, grandson of him to whom the Garvock seal belonged, in which the arms are given in full, without the annulets, and with the coronet and crest. It was appended to the Infertment upon a Royal Precept of Archibald Napier of Monteith in lands in Monteith, to which the official seal of William Edmonstone of Duntreath, as Stewart of Monteith, is affixed. It is dated January 20, 1507. Again, in the arms of Duntreath at Dunkeld, as mentioned above, the annulet is omitted; and, on the other hand, in the list of arms made by Sir James Balfour, Lord Lyon, in 1680, in MSS. in the Advocates' Library, the coat of Edmonstone of Duntreath is given with the annulet.

NOTE 22, PAGE 14.

Mr. Riddell writes—'The coronet at the time is remarkable, being differently in the fifteenth century from now, only borne above the helmet by Peers, and not in any instance I am aware of extended to commoners.' He adds in another letter—'The coronet strikes me as a peculiar and unprecedented bearing then in the case of William Edmonstone of Duntreath. Could it have referred to some claim grounded upon promise or contract to the Earldom of Lennox which is countenanced by a tradition or kind of writing in the family?' The tradition to which Mr. Riddell alludes is an assertion in a MS. pedigree, not Crawford's, to the effect that the Duchess of Albany made a grant to Sir William and his wife, the Countess of Angus, of the Earldom of Lennox in fee. But this succession was defeated by the attainder of Murdoch, Duke of Albany, and Duncan, Earl of Lennox, father of the Duchess. There is evidently, however, a great confusion of facts and dates, and I cannot discover the slightest authority upon which such tradition rested. Crawford took no notice of it, and assuredly he was not a person to neglect anything likely to aggrandise his employers.

I should add that, as regards the motto, I have no ancient evidence whatever ; indeed they were not common till the end of the sixteenth century.

NOTE 23, PAGE 15.

Bockenbergius. Egmondarum potentissimae Hollandiae gentis—Hist. Lug., 1548. And also, Catalogus et brevis Historia Antistitum Egmondarum.

NOTE 24, PAGE 16.

In the Ednam MS., and also in Crawford's, it is stated that Edmundus is witness to a charter by David the First to Walter de Riddell of the lands of Riddell. From a copy, however, of that charter, afforded me by Mr. Riddell, I find this is altogether incorrect.

NOTE 25, PAGE 19.

The above is taken from the Earl of Haddington's collections. Nisbet, mistaking Crawford's MS., makes the date 1212 instead of 1252. There is another charter of the same William, son of Henry de Craigmillar, to Dumferlin of 'illud toftum quod Henricus de Edmundiston tenuit de Henrico de Craigmillar patre meo,' dated 1254.

NOTE 26, PAGE 19.

There are, moreover, in the possession of Mr. Aytoun, two deeds ; one a confirmation without date by Willielmus de Lysuris : ' Thomae filio Willielmi de Maleville et Christiane sponsae suae et heredibus de illis exeuntibus,' of a grant made by Gregorius Lysuris of six acres of Temple lands, with some others in the vicinity. Testibus—Nesso de Ramysay, Henrico de Edmundiston, Radulpho de Claro.' The other deed is by the same William de Lysuris, a confirmation to certain individuals of subjects in the fief of Gourton, and witnessed by the same witnesses, Nessus de Ramysey and Henry de Edmundiston, with the addition of Dominus Ricardus Mariscallus, and others. Mr. Riddell informs me that there were two eminent members of the Ramsay family of the name of Nessus, one who lived in the earlier and the other in the later part of the thirteenth century. The signatures must belong to the former, for the William Abbot of Dumferline, mentioned above in the text, died in 1237.

NOTE 27, PAGE 19.

There is a Baldewyn de Edmeiston in the county of Lanark who subscribed the Roll in 1296. This was however a family quite distinct from the Edmonston of Midlothian, of whom nothing but this notice is known. As stated at the commencement of this memoir there is no traceable connexion between Edmonstone in Lanarkshire and the present family of the name.

The origin of the term Ragman Roll is doubtful. In Collier's Annals of the Stage is the following passage :—' Mr. Douce says Ragman Roll is used by old writers to express any legal instrument. The etymology has been much disputed. Wynkyn de Worde printed a poem, a fragment of which only remains, called Ragmannes Roll, consisting of a list of good and bad women in alternate stanzas. It is a name given to the Devil.' In the Encyclopaedia Britannica there is a different explication of the term.

NOTE 28, PAGE 20.

There is rather a curious coincidence as regards the two charters of the coronership. The former, to Sir John, his heirs and assigns, is dated Aberdeen, 4th November, twenty-third year of King David the Second, which would be 1352, seven years before he was served heir to his father; the other, restricting the grant to his own life, is dated Aberdeen, November 5th, thirty-third year of our reign, which would be 1362.

The following are the terms of the first Charter:—'David Dei gratia Rex Scotorum omnibus probis hominibus suis ad quos presentes literae pervenerint, salutem. Sciatis quod concessimus dilecto et fideli nostro Johanni de Edmondstoun et heredibus suis, et suis assignatis officium Coronariae Laudoniae cum pertinentibus suis tenendis et habendis eidem Johanni heredibus suis et assignatis cum omnibus et singulis feodis, rectis, consuetudinibus, libertatibus, commoditatibus aissamentis, et justis pertenentibus quibuscumque addictum officium spectantibus, seu quoquomodo juste spectare valentibus in futurum: Quibus omnibus et singulis quorum interest, vel interesse poterit distincte precipimus et mandamus quatenus eidem Johanni haeredibus suis et suis assignatis in omnibus et singulis quae ad dictum officium pertinent, respondeant, pervenient, et intendant sub poena quae competet in hac parte. In cujus rei testimonium praesentibus sigillum nostrum precepimus apponi apud Aberdonium quarto die Novcmbris, anno regni nostri vigesimo tertio.

As regards the office of Coroner, Baron Hume, in his Commentaries on the law of Scotland, says, 'This officer, Coroner, now unknown in our practice, is specified as a subsisting and necessary officer in the ordinance of Edward the First. One principal part of his duty seems to have been by arrestment of the person, effects, or otherwise, to secure the compearance of offenders for trial.' Several instances are then adduced. Hume, Comment. vol. ii. page 24, note.

NOTE 29, PAGE 23.

The author of the Memorie of the Somervilles is very pertinacious in his error about the acquisition of Cambusnethan. 'The same year,' he continues, 'wherein the nation was in consternation (about the Earl of Douglas, 1451) there is an instrument taken by him (William Lord Somerville), in the hands of John Geddes, publick Notar of Glasgow, wherein is contained and insert three ancient charters granted by King David the Second in favour of Sir John Edmondstone, this nobleman's (William Lord Somerville's) own grandfather, to the lands and barony of Cambusnethan, which for a long time belonged to the name of Baird who was heritor of that barony before the forfeiture. The charters bear date the seventeenth year of that King's reign, A.D. 1351.' Mr. Riddell states that there is a charter by David the Second to Sir Alexander Stuart of Darnley, dated December 26, 1354, of the lands and barony of Cambusnethan, formerly held by Sir Robert Baird, Knight, and there are more documents to prove the same disposition; there must therefore be some thorough mistake of the author of the Memorie, though he appears so circumstantial.

NOTE 30, PAGE 25.

This Princess is likewise called Margaret, for she was thus styled in a dispensation for her marriage with the Earl of Douglas in 1371. It was printed from the original at Rome by Andrew Stewart in his History of the Stewarts (Supplement, page 439). The Earl's father being then alive, the dispensation runs, 'dilecti filii nobilis viri Jacobi nati dilecti filii nobilis viri Willielmi comitis de Douglas et dilecti in Christo filii nobilis mulieris Margarite carissimi in Christo filii Roberti Regis Scotie illustris nati.' They were stated to be in the fourth degree of consanguinity, which rendered the dispensation necessary, which was granted on the supplication of Charles King of France and David King of Scotland. In the chartulary of Kelso she is called Isabella, for there is a precept by Robert the Second to the Sheriff of Selkirk in favour 'Isabelle sponse quondam Jacobi comitis de Douglas' to give her 'rationabilem tertiam' of all the lands of which the Earl, her husband, had died seised, within his jurisdiction. For these I am indebted to Mr. Riddell.

Of the marriage of the Countess of Douglas with Sir John Edmonstone there is ample testimony. There is a charter of Robert the Second (1390) Johanni de Edmonstone et Isabellae Comitissae de Douglas sponsae suae filiae nostrae carissimae of the lands of Ednam, in the county of Roxburgh, which grant was confirmed by his successor, Robert the Third, in a charter Johanni de Edmonston militi et Isabellae Comitissae de Douglas sorori nostrae carissimae of the lands of Ednam to the survivor and to their legitimate heirs, dated at Edinburgh, April 25, 1392.

These testimonies are given by Crawford from the Ednam charter chest, at least must be, for they do not exist, Mr. Riddell says, upon record. But there is a further notice, for which I am indebted to Mr. Riddell, of a charge or payment by the Treasurer or Chamberlain<sup>1</sup> of Scotland in 1390, 'Domino Johanni de Edmonstone percipiente ratione Comitissae de Douglas sponsae suae tertiam partem dictarum ducentarum mercarum ratione tertie sibi contingenti' out of the customs of Haddington. The Earl having had therefore an heritable pension, this was only a payment in part. There are likewise notices of four subsequent payments between 1392 and 1398.

NOTE 31, PAGE 25.

The pedigree states that Sir John Edmonstone had also a daughter by the Countess of Douglas married to Sir Andrew Kerr of Kershaugh, in Teviotdale, cupbearer to Robert the Third, from which marriage the Lothian family are descended. To this Mr. Riddell states, 'Mary, daughter of Sir John Edmonstone, could not have married Sir Andrew Kerr of Kershaugh, cupbearer to Robert the Third, as, whatever genealogists may pretend, there was no such person, and no proper proof can be discovered of his existence.'

<sup>1</sup> Chamberlain's Rolls, tom. iii. p. 139.

Among the noblemen and knights who joined the Earl of Douglas before the battle of Otterbourne, Froissard<sup>1</sup> mentions Messere Johan Amonstan. Every one knows the havoc that lively narrator makes of English and Scottish names. In the modernized edition of Lord Berner's<sup>2</sup> translation it is given, and no doubt correctly, Sir John Edmonstone. There is, however, the addition of David his son, which of course could not be, as Sir David, Sir John's successor, was son of this Earl of Douglas's widow. In the Paris edition of Froissard, 1505, I understand there is no mention of the son. In Johne's translation, however, it stands,<sup>3</sup> 'Sir John Amonstan, David filium, Robert Colennie.' In a subsequent enumeration, however, given by Johne's but omitted in Lord Berner's, it stands Sir John Emonston, Sir William Vadan, David Ferrier, Robert Colomine (Campbell according to Lord Berner). I am inclined therefore to think that the David in both places applies to a David Fleming, Amonstan and Emonston being both obviously misnomers, in all probability for Edmonstone.

NOTE 32, PAGE 25.

The documents relative to Tillyallan are numerous. I am indebted for them, chiefly to Mr. Riddell, and give them according to their dates.

Precept by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, appointing Robert Logan, Laird of Restalrig, William Preston of Benryne, Knights, his baillies, to give seizin to Sir John of Edmonstone of the lands of Tillyallan and fortalice thereof, dated Edinburgh, August 2, 1401.

Charter by the same Earl of Douglas and Lord of Galloway to the same, his heirs and assignees, of the fortalice, with the pertinents lying within the said Earl's lands of Tillyallan, within the sheriffdom of Perth, to be held blench, dated Edinburgh, Feast of the Blessed Trinity, 1402—Witnesses, Domino Johanni de Swynton, Domino Willielmo Senescallo, Domino Willielmo de Borthwyck, militibus, etc.

Charter by the same Earl to Sir John Edmonstone of the same lands, to be holden ward of the Earl, so long as he shall continue to perform the services due out of the same to the Earl of Strathern, chief Lord thereof, dated Edinburgh, July 10, 1403. William Abernethy, William Hay, William Borthwick, Knights—witnesses.

Commission by the same Earl appointing Sir John Edmonstone bailie of the said lands, dated August 2, 1407.

Letter by William Preston, bailie to the same Earl, testifying that he had given seizin in the same lands to his dearest cousin Sir John Edmonstone before Sir John Stewart of Invermeath, dated April 5, 1410.

Confirmation by Eufemia, Countess Palatine of Strathern, confirming to her cousin, David of Edmonstone, the former grants to his father, Sir John, of the said lands, dated at Perth, March 18, 1414.

Precept by the Countess to the same David, as heir of his father in the aforesaid lands, dated Heflyn (probably Methven, a seat of the Earl of Strathern), March 30, 1414.

<sup>1</sup> Froissard, Paris, 1505, vol. iii. p. 58.

<sup>2</sup> Berner's Modernized Translation, vol. iii. p. 633.      <sup>3</sup> Johne's Translation, vol. ix. p. 239 and 264.

Charter by Archibald of Douglas, son and heir of the said Archibald, Earl of Douglas, confirming the writs of the said lands of Tillyallan, granted by the said Earl and Patrick Count Palatine and the said Eufemia Countess Palatine, his wife, and cousin of the said Archibald of Douglas, in favour of the said Sir John and David of Edmonstone, dated at Edinburgh, 1418. George Preston of Gorton (the ancient inheritance of the Prestons of Craigmillar), William Preston of Benyin, Archibald de Edmonstone, Knights, William de Edmonstone, Gilbert de Wauchope (of Niddry Marshall), witnesses.

NOTE 33, PAGE 26.

Sir James Edmonstone is witness to a charter granted to William, Lord Crichton, in 1440, and in 1458 he had an investment of a portion of his estate of Ednam under the Great Seal upon his own resignation.

As mentioned in the text, only the marriage of Sir James Edmonstone with Janet Napier is mentioned in the pedigrees, and John Edmonstone is stated to be the second son of Sir David, succeeding to his brother in default of male issue. For clearing up this mistake I am indebted to Mr. Riddell. The documents are numerous in reference to the marriages and succession of Sir James. I will give them in order:—

There is an instrument under the hand of Richard Robertson, notary, testifying that the bands for the marriage between the said Sir James Edmonstone and Janet Napier were proclaimed in the church of St. Giles, Edinburgh, in January 1456; But that he had been previously married, and that the marriage had been dissolved, is attested by an instrument under the hands of William Blair and Robert Lynton, notaries, testifying that Isabell Forstare, daughter of the deceased Sir John Forstare (Forrester) of Corstorphine, Knight, had renounced the appeal which she had entered against a sentence pronounced by Richard, Abbot of Culross, and Malcolm Drummond, canon of Dumblane, Commissaries for Robert, Bishop of Dumblane, in a process of divorce against her by the said Sir James of Edmonstone, dated at Edinburgh, February 5, 1456—Witnesses, William Edmonstone of Duntreath, Knight, etc.

Such divorces in the Roman Church arose usually from marriages having been contracted within the forbidden degrees of relationship, which were very extensive. But when this had been done in good faith, or in ignorance, by either party, the legitimacy of the offspring was not affected. That seems to have been the case in the present instance, for John Edmonstone, who continued the descent with the bulk of the paternal inheritance, was probably the son of Isabel Forrester, for no third marriage has been traced, and he clearly was only stepson to Janet Napier.

The instrument testifying to the proclamation of the bands between Sir James and Janet Napier, as mentioned above, is dated eight years after the marriage, September 19, 1464. This must have been a precautionary measure, as Mr. Riddell suggests, arising from some question as to the divorce. The instrument is witnessed by members of the Napier family.

There is an instrument of resignation on the occasion of this second marriage by Sir James Edmonstone of the Thanedom of Boyne, in the shire of Banff, and of the lands of Tillyallan, into the hands of James the Second, for a new infeftment to the said Sir James and Janet Napier, dated Falkland, January 28, 1456. Also a Royal charter grounded on this resignation, dated three days later, to both which George, Bishop of Brechin, the Chaneellor of Scotland, and John, Earl of Athole, are among the witnesses.

The direct descent of John Edmonstone is moreover proved by a decret before the Lords of Council, namely, Andro, Lord Avondale, Chancellor of Scotland, Colin, Earl of Argyle, Andrew, Lord Gray, Alexander, Lord Glammiss, William, Lord Forbes, and many others of the nobility, at the instance of William Douglas of Culney Warden, of Janet Napier, and others, against John Edmonstone of that Ilk, son and heir of the deceased Sir James, concerning the terce of the lands of Edmonstone pertaining to Sir James at his death, dated St. Andrews, March 16, 1464. This disputing of Janet Napier's legal right would seem still to convey doubts as to the legality of the previous divorce of (probably) John's mother, Isabel Forrester.

Twenty years later there is an instrument of resignation by Janet, Lady Edmonstone, of her fee of the lands of Tillyallan, and of the Thanedom of Boyne, in favour of Elizabeth and Margaret, her daughters and heiresses thereof. This is dated St. Andrews, June 3, 1484.

A year earlier, namely, January 3, 1483, is an instrument of seisin of Elizabeth Edmonstone of half of the lands of Tillyallan, as one of the heiresses of her father Sir James. And on 13th February 1485 is a precept by Margaret Edmonstone, the other daughter of Sir James and wife of Walter Ogilvie of the Thanedom of Boyne, and for giving seisin to her sister Elizabeth, wife of Patrick Blackadder, of half of the lands of Tillyallan and patronage of the church in exchange for the half of the Thanedom of Boyne and a rent of six merks due out of the town of Banff. This refers to the exchange as mentioned in the text.

Mr. Riddell has afforded me also the following notice from the inventory whence the information given above is derived, namely, a dispensation by Robert, Archbishop of Glasgow, in consequence of a rescript from Julian, Bishop of Ostia, allowing Patrick Blackadder and Elizabeth Edmonstone to be married again, and legitimizing their former children, 'their former marriage being void in regard the said Patrick had carnally known a woman related to the said Elizabeth in the fourth and fourth and another fourth degrees of affinity,' dated at Glasgow, June 5, 1494. Witnesses, Charles and John Blackadder. I do not pretend to understand what these degrees of affinity mean, but there is one curious circumstance here, that the Robert, Archbishop of Glasgow,<sup>1</sup> through whom this dispensation was obtained, was son of the same Patrick Blackadder and Elizabeth Edmonstone, and consequently his own legitimacy was concerned. He was appointed to the see of Glasgow in 1484, which was raised to an Archiepiscopate during his incumbency.

In conclusion, we may remark that Janet Napier, the mother of these coheiresses, must have married Sir James Edmonstone very young, and, moreover, must have lived to a good old age, for in 1491 she was the wife of Alexander Hepburn of Whitsome, and in 1512 she was still alive and married to a third husband, Adam Hume, as is proved by a litigation concerning the 'terce of Janet Napier, James Edmonstone of Ednam's grandsire's wife, and Adam Hume, her husband.' This is from the Record of the Supreme Civil Court, Book xii. p. 167. Grandschir or grandsire, Mr. Riddell states, means great grandfather, though sometimes grandfather; goodsire or gudschir being the term more ordinarily used for grandfather.

<sup>1</sup> Keith's Catalogue of Scottish Bishops.

NOTE 34, PAGE 31.

This Princess appears to have been richly endowed. On her marriage with the Earl of Angus, King Robert the Third granted the lands of Abernethy and Bonhill, with the profits of the justiciary court of the Sheriffdom of Forfar to his daughter and the longest liver. And she got the Barony of Dalrymple in Ayrshire as her dower from her husband Sir James Kennedy.

Of the Countess's two sons by the Earl of Angus, William succeeded his father, and dying a young man, was succeeded by his son James as third Earl. He dying without children, the Earldom came to George, the Lady Mary's second son, by whom the line was continued. Of this Princess's three sons by Sir James Kennedy, some mystery hangs over the fate of John, the eldest, who was several years kept imprisoned in the Castle of Stirling, and died without issue. Gilbert, the second son, was created a peer, and from him the present family of Cassilis and Ailsa is lineally descended. By far the most remarkable was James, the third son. Being brought up for holy orders, he was first raised to the see of Dunkeld, and afterwards became Bishop of St. Andrews, the primacy having not as yet been raised to an Archiepiscopate. During the minority of James the Third he was intrusted with the charge of the young Prince, and at his death, which occurred in 1466, 'and which may truly be considered a national calamity,' he possessed the chief management of the State, 'and was the only one able,' says Tytler, 'from firmness, ability, and integrity, to direct the councils of government.' Buchanan, who was little prejudiced in favour of churchmen, says, 'His death was so deeply deplored by all good men that the country seemed to weep for him as for a publick parent.' He founded the College of St. Salvador at St. Andrews.

Patrick Graham, second son of the Countess of Angus by Sir William Graham, succeeded his half-brother, James Kennedy, in the see of St. Andrews, which, on his personal application to Rome, was raised to an Archbishoprick. He was a worthy and learned, but unfortunate man, for having excited by his elevation the envy of the clergy, they procured from James the Third the Archbishop's imprisonment in Lochleven Castle, where he died in 1478.

The time of the Countess of Angus's death is not known, but in the pavement of the modern church of Strathblane, which occupies the site of the old one, is a stone, stating that beneath it were buried the Countess of Angus and also her descendant, Archibald Edmonstone, Esq. of Duntreath and Redhall, who died in 1689. Being desirous of ascertaining if there were any vault beneath the church, I commissioned my friend William Smith, Esq. of Carbeth Guthrie, the Rev. James Pearson, the minister of the Parish, and James Maclaren, Esq., my factor, to open the grave, regretting much my inability to be present myself. The following is the report these gentlemen afforded me :—

‘In consequence of instructions from Sir Archibald Edmonstone, Bart., a grave-stone in the centre passage of the church, bearing the following inscription, was this day removed. “Here lyes in the same grave with Mary, Countess of Angus, sister to King James the First of Scotland, from whom he is lineally descended, Archibald Edmonstone, Esq. of Duntreath, in this kingdom, and of Redhall in Ireland, who died in the year 1689, aged about fifty-one years.”

‘The earth having been removed to the depth of about two feet, a quantity of human bones were found, including a skull pretty entire. From the size they appeared to be those of a male. On digging deeper, the remains of another skeleton were discovered, the bones of which, being of a smaller size, were considered to be those of a female. The skull smaller than that of the other skeleton, and in a better state of preservation. A portion of the jaw bone, with the teeth nearly entire, was also found. There was no appearance of any vault or stone coffin. It was ascertained from an aged inhabitant that the stone had remained in the same position as it did in the old church, so there can be no reason for doubting that the remains found were those of the Princess Mary of Scotland and her descendant Mr. Edmonstone. The remains were carefully redeposited and the stone replaced. The whole operations were conducted in our presence.

(Signed) ‘WILLIAM SMITH, of Carbeth Guthrie.
JAMES PEARSON, Minister, Strathblane.
JAMES MACLAREN, Factor, Duntreath.

‘STRATHBLANE MANSE, 26th October 1844.’

A tooth, which fell from the jaw of the Lady Mary, is in my possession as an interesting family relic.

NOTE 35, PAGE 33.

These names and connexions are on the authority of Crawford’s MSS. Genealogy, but without any voucher except for the marriage of James Edmonstone with Helen Murray. Douglas, under the title of Oliphant, does not mention this marriage. In one point Crawford is evidently mistaken. He speaks in this place of a second daughter, Mary, married to Humphrey Cunningham of Glengarnock. But this clearly belongs to the previous generation, for the receipt of the dower of this marriage is dated 1464, whereas Sir William married Matilda Stewart only in 1456. The Mary married to Glengarnock must be the same whom Crawford states to have married Sir Adam Cunningham of Caprington.

NOTE 36, PAGE 34.

In the Treasurer’s accounts for Scotland for the years 1488 to 1492 is the following :— ‘Item, to Archibald Edmonstone for the biggin and reparation of the Hunt Hall, like as his bil beyris, £18, 11s. 3d.' The Hunt Hall is mentioned in another item, but I do not know where it was.

NOTE 37, PAGE 34.

Nimmo says 'there is a retour of Edmonstone of Ballinton in 1619. It was called the Star of Monteith. The property of Lord Napier in 1624, and now of the Blair Drummond family,'—Nimmo, History of Stirlingshire, p. 483. There is the name of James uncle of the Laird of Duntreath, among those absent from an assize in 1534.

NOTE 38, PAGE 34.

The marriage of Janet Edmonstone is proved by a receipt in the charter chest by William Lord Graham to Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, 'his gudfather,' first for forty merks, dated April 30, and next for £73, dated 16th May 1500. The Earl married, previously, Annabella, daughter of Lord Drummond, by whom he had the second Earl. By Janet Edmonstone he had three daughters, who married Sir John Somerville of Cambusnethan, Walter Master of Drummond, and John Murray of Abercairney. There is a charter granted to William Earl of Montrose and Janet Edmonstone, his wife, of the lands of Aberuthven, dated March 17, 1504-5.

NOTE 39, PAGE 35.

There are receipts, first, dated 16th November 1496, by John Ross of Halkcad Knight, to Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, for fifty merks, for the marriage of John Lord (Ross of) Melville, and another by John Lord Ross of Halkcad (Halkhead), to William Edmonstone of Duntreath, his 'goodbrother,' for £110, dated July 30, 1507. There are also charters to John Ross of Melville, and Christian Edmonstone his wife, of the lands of Fortrevane, in the county of Edinburgh, dated 27th September 1490. By this marriage Lord Ross had Ninian, who succeeded him, married to Lady Janet Stewart, daughter to John Earl of Lennox. This family ended in the male line by the death of the fourteenth Lord Ross in 1754. The Earl of Glasgow is the heir of the last Lord, and possesses the estate of Halkhead.

After the death of her husband, who was killed at the battle of Flodden, Lady Ross formed an alliance which was declared illegal. It appears from the original record that in 1515 there was a cause before the official of Midlothian between the noble Lady Christian Edmonstone dominam de Halket actricem, and the honourable person John Knollys, 'her putative husband,' when the official decerned that the marriage contracted between them 'de facto et non de jure ignoranter' was null, because Grisella Ratray, first wife of the said George, and the above-mentioned Lady Christian 'attingebant invicem in quarto et quarto gradibus consanguinitatis,' and thus the Lady Christian, and the aforesaid George, stood related to each other within the same degrees of affinity. They were accordingly divorced. For this notice I am indebted to Mr. Riddell.

NOTE 40, PAGE 35.

There are discharges of 'tocher,' or dower, by Hugh Lord Montgomery, in behalf of his son, one dated 13th November 1500, for £40 and 40 merks ; and the other, dated 26th March 1505, for 95 merks, 'in part of the said Lord's son's tocher.' It would seem that the families were much set on this connexion, for there is a contract in the Eglinton charter chest, according to Douglas, dated 1st June 1498, between Hugh Lord Montgomery and Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, stipulating that John Montgomery, son and heir of the said Lord, shall, God willing, marry Elizabeth Edmonstone, daughter of Archibald, and have with her a portion of 1300 merks, failing Alexander, the second, and failing the second, the third son of Lord Montgomery to marry Elizabeth, Catherine, Margaret, and Helen, daughters of the said Archibald. The marriage was carried into effect with John, who came to an untimely end, as he was killed during his father's lifetime in the well known 'Raid' in the High Street of Edinburgh between the contending factions of the Earls of Angus and Arran, called 'cleanse the causeway,' April 30, 1520, as a partisan of the latter. He left by Elizabeth Edmonstone a son, Hugh, second Earl of Eglinton, from whom the present family is descended, and a daughter, married to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, ancestor of the Dukes of Queensberry.

NOTE 41, PAGE 35.

This marriage is certified by a discharge by Walter Buchanan of that Ilk to Sir William Edmonstone, and Robert Shaw, Abbot of Paisley (the Lady's uncle), for 110 merks in part of tocher, contracted with Margaret Edmonstone, sister of the said Sir William, and George, son and heir-apparent to the said Walter. They had a son married to a daughter of William Lord Livingston, and a daughter to Stirling of Glorat. The family has been long extinct, and the property now belongs to and forms the residence of the Duke of Montrose.

NOTE 42, PAGE 35.

Crawfurd says in his MSS., 'The alliance of the family of Duntreath with the house of Burnbank is vouched from authorities in Duntreath's hands, charters under the Great Seal, and a full collation of the muschets (corrupted from Monfitchet, from de monte fixo) in my own custody, manuscript.' There are, however, no documents to this effect in the Duntreath charter chest, to the best of my belief.

NOTE 43, PAGE 35.

The Dominium of Monteith and Strathgartney, with the residence of Doune Castle, seems to have been part of the regular jointure of the queens of Scotland. It was settled upon Queen Margaret on her marriage with James the Fourth in 1503, and was probably about the same time given to Sir William to hold as deputy, he being one of the witnesses to the Queen's saisine. Three years after the battle of Flodden, his son William, in 1516, is declared to be of lawful age, and, with his brother Archibald, had their father's charge continued. This appears to have been done by the Regent Albany during the Queen's residence in England, having been kept from her dower being one of her great complaints against the Government. In 1525 the Earl of Lennox, Sir William and Archibald's brother-in-law, joined the party of the Queen against the Earl of Angus, and in endeavouring to emancipate the young King James the Fifth the Earl was murdered, after his party had been defeated at Linlithgow by the Earls of Angus and Arran. In the autumn of 1527 the Queen married Harry Stewart, who was created Lord Methven, and in the July previous she appeared in the Council to appeal against Sir William Edmonstone's keeping possession of Doune Castle, which she naturally now wished to make over to the care of Methven. Sir William was ordered to surrender it in forty-eight hours under penalty of prosecution. Sir William had, however, obtained the King's signature to an order for retaining the possession, but this order the Council annulled, though they suspended the execution of the delivery for twelve days. (Acta Dom. Concilii, Register House, July 11, 1527.) As James the Fifth alienated the crown lands of Methven at the Queen's request to her husband, Methven got the Queen to make over the stewardry of Monteith and constabulary of Doune to his younger brother, Sir James Stewart of Beath. According, however, to Miss Strickland, the Queen was tricked by her husband—he having procured the absolute grant of Monteith and Doune to his brother from the King, for whom he had fought, and was left for dead at Linlithgow. Queen Margaret never meant to lose the income of her dower lands, and this caused their first quarrel. The charter for this grant is dated 1531. James the Fifth died in December 1542, and the raid took place at Dunblane on the Whitsunday of the following year, in which Sir James Stewart lost his life. In 1547 the penalty on account of this transaction was remitted by the Regent Duke of Chatelherault, and the stewardry appears to have been restored to Sir William Edmonstone, for among the family papers is a discharge with the sign-manual of the Queen Dowager Mary of Lorraine to Sir William Edmonstone of Duntreath, Chamberlain Depute of Monteith, for the rents, etc., of the years 1542, 1543, 1544, 1545, discharging also William Earl of Montrose, and all others concerned. It is dated Edinburgh, April 25, 1549. From this it would appear that the cession of Doune to Sir James Stewart was not held good, and that when Mary of Lorraine came into possession of her dower lands, on the death of James the Fifth, she restored the stewardship to Sir William Edmonstone, which led to the raid above mentioned, and that during the time Sir William was probably in seclusion on account of Stewart's death the administration of the rents was made over to Sir William's near relation, the Earl of Montrose. On her mother's death, when the dower lands would revert to the crown, Queen Mary committed the stewardry of Doune to the Earl of Montrose in 1560, but three years later the son of Sir James Stewart recovered possession, and the lands of Doune were erected into a Barony in his favour in 1580.

NOTE 44, PAGE 36.

As regards the Lady Elizabeth Leslie, I am indebted to Mr. Riddell for a copy of the original indenture at the Abbey of Lindores, dated October 14, 1485, betwixt George, Earl of Rothes, and William, Earl of Errol, to the intent that the latter Earl shall marry Elizabeth, daughter to the Earl of Rothes, as soon as a dispensation from Rome can be obtained, and that if the Earl of Errol desires to marry before the dispensation arrives, he shall give security that what costs or expenses are made previously shall be justly paid. A thousand merks is fixed as the Lady's portion. The above is the substance of an excerpt taken from the original in the Errol charter chest at Slanes Castle, by Mr. Riddell.

NOTE 45, PAGE 37.

There is, however, a bond at Stirling, 28th October 1558, between Colin Campbell (brother and successor to Sir John of Glenorchy) for himself on the part of Christian, daughter of the umquhile Sir John, on the one part, and John Colquhoun of Luss and his brother James on the other, by which it was agreed that the said James should marry Christian Campbell, and the ten pound land of Gursaike be settled on them by the said John Colquhoun ; also that a dispensation be procured for the marriage.<sup>1</sup>

NOTE 46, PAGE 38.

The late Mr. Buchanan of Cambusmore, who was related to the Newton family, informed me that he had once seen a pardon to James Edmonstone for this slaughter, but it was unfortunately lost. The feud, however, between the families long continued ; for thirty years after, there is a bond of manrent by William Edmonstone to the son of Sir James Stewart, by which it appears to be finally settled. The bond is remarkable. It is the permission of the Earl of Morton, then Regent, to William Edmonstone to come under an obligation of manrent, that is, to support in all quarrels, as service to a superior, to Sir James Stewart, notwithstanding any Act of Parliament to the contrary. A copy of it was given me many years ago by Mr. Buchanan, but the original I have since seen, which was formerly in the possession of the Earl of Moray, but has since passed into other hands. It is as follows :—

‘Rex. By witness, consent, and authority of our right traist cousin James Erle of Mortoun, Lord Dalkeith, Regent, to us, our realm, and to whom it is understand that for the reconciliation of the deidly feud and enmity contracted through the slauchter of umquhile James Stewart of Baith Barony, father to our weilbelovit James Stewart of Doune, Knycht, committed by William Edmistoun of Duntraith, his friends, servants, and complices, and in assythment and satisfaction in ane part to the said James Stewart, son and air of the said umquhile James, and his friends, there is ane band of manrent to be made and given by the said William Edmistoun and James Edmistoun, his son and apparent air, to the said James Stewart and his airs, conforme to the contract and appointment to make betwix the saids parties anent the said slauchter, theirfor and for divers other resolves, causes and considerations moving us and our said Regent, we grant and give license to the same James Stewart to receive the said band of manrent for assythment and satisfaction in ane part for the slauchter of his said umquhile father, conform to the said contract and appointment, and will and grants that the said James nor his airs shall not incur any pains, pairle, danger or skaith in their persons, lands, or guidis either throw receiving or giving thereof, notwithstanding our Act of Parliament otherwise maid, or to be maid in the contrair, or any pains containit thereintill, anent the whilks we dispense with the said James Stewart and his airs and with the persons, givers of the said Band of manrent, and their airs for ever, by these presents, whilks we ordain the Lords of our Counsale and Sessioun to insert and register in the buiks of Counsale ad perpetuam rei memoriam.—Given under our signet and subscribit by our said Regent at Dalkeith the 27th day of March, and of our reign the nyinth year 1576.

<sup>1</sup> Record of Bonds and Obligations, vol. iii.

JAMES REGENT.

The impression of the Seal is lost.

NOTE 47, PAGE 39.

There is a charter by Kentigern Graham of Ratrenys in Strathern, in implement of part of marriage contract between me and an honourable man William Edmonstone of Duntreath libere tenementarium ejusdem James Edmonstone, his son and apparent heir by Margaret Campbell, his wife, and Marjory Edmonstone, 'my future wife,' for sums of money contained in the contract, dated 26th March 1571, by which he settles upon Marjory in liferent and their heirs male 12 merk land of old extent of Ratrenys. To this John Master of Graham (who succeeded his grandfather as third Earl of Montrose in the same year) is a witness, with others of the Edmonstones.

NOTE 48, PAGE 40.

The lands of Easter-garden had been made over to James Edmonstone by his father Sir William in 1561, and also the ten pound land of old extent of Balloch on the Leven, the ancient seat of the older Earls of Lennox, which Sir William had probably obtained from the present possessor of that title and estate on the occasion of his (Sir William's) marriage with the Lady Agnes Stewart. This was in 1566. In order, however, to carry into effect the arrangement of James the Sixth by which Robert, sixth Earl of Lennox, was to surrender that earldom and its domains in exchange for the lordship of Dunbar and earldom of March, the Lennox district being erected into a dukedom in favour of the King's kinsman Esme, Lord of Aubigny, there is a charter of renunciation dated August 1579, of the reversion of the lands of Balloch by the said Earl to James Edmonstone of Duntreath, and in 1583 there is a charter by King James the Sixth in favour of Sir James, 'renouncing the nonentry of Balloch in consideration of the services of his forebearers to the King's ancestors of the house of Lennox.' Previous to this a reversion had been made by William Edmonstone of Duntreath 'to the same umquhile Matthew, Earl of Lennox, of the lands of Balloch, with Millpair of Contenant, the sum of 1000 merks<sup>1</sup> of the date at Glasgow Jan. 20, 1566.

John Graham of Knockdoleane and John Stuart, fiar of Barscube, became sureties for Sir John Edmonstone of that ilk, James Edmonstone of Duntreath, Knight, and James alias Jacob Edmonstone of Newton, as principals, for themselves; and James, Commendator of Inchaffray, and Harry Lindsay of Kinfawns for Sir James Chisholme of Dundome, Knight, for himself, that they should observe the contents of certain letters of Slains, dated November 25, 1507, granted by the chief kinsmen of the father's and mother's side of umquhile Mungo Edmonstone, brother of James alias Jacob Edmonstone of Newton, who was slain within the burgh of Stirling in November 1585, under pain of perjury, infamy, and of perpetual credit, honour and estimation for ever, under pain of 5000 merks.

NOTE 49, PAGE 44.

This matter is thus given in Pitcairn's Criminal Trials :—

Raid of Ruthven, Feb. 9, 1584-5, 18 James the Sixth. Malcolm Douglas of Mains, John Cunningham of Drumquhassill, James Edmonstone of Duntreath accused, that with Robert Hamilton of Inchmachan, John Cunningham of Drumquhassill, Malcolm Douglas of Mains, John Muschett, and Walter Douglas, in October, November, December, and January past, upon the plot laid by the sometime Earls of Angus and Marr and their complices for treasonable deeds presently fugitives in England, communicated to you by John Home alias Black John, their messenger, and the said John Muschet, how His Majesty's most noble person at the hunting might have been taken captive and conveyed to some strength in the isles and borders of this realm, or else to some strength in the isles of Lochlomond, while the said declared traitors, fugitives, had with their complices received his most noble person in their hands and concealing the same. Cunningham, having been partaker in the treasonable attempt in August 1582 to take the King captive at Ruthven House, and pardoned, is indited for having entered into a new conspiracy for seizing on the King, the same as James Edmonstone, and having consulted with James Edmonstone several times at the Kirk of Strathblane and of Killearn upon the execution of the enterprize.

Malcolm Douglas for conspiracy with others how the King might be seized and conveyed to some strength.

Edmonstone and Hamilton having confessed, sentence was pronounced before Lord Hay of Yester, Head of the Assize, that Douglas of Mains did not approve (by Duntreath's confession) the seizing of the King, but guilty of concealing. Cunningham and Douglas sentenced to be hanged, drawn and quartered at the Market-Cross, Edinburgh.

<sup>1</sup> Acts of Parliament for 1581, vol. iii.

NOTE 50, PAGE 44.

If Cunningham of Tourlands was, as seems likely, of the family of Cunninghamhead, this gentleman must have been nearly connected with Sir James Edmonstone, for Sir James's daughter married John Cunningham of Cunninghamhead, and James, his grandson, married the daughter of Cunninghamhead. These were indeed miserable times, destructive alike of personal honour and family ties.

NOTE 51, PAGE 45.

Ogilvie had been previously impannelled and tried before the Provost and Bailies of Glasgow. He was accused of saying, and seducing others to attend, Mass at Glasgow, and on his trial he confessed his allegiance to the Pope. The process was characteristic of the age, for, says Calderwood,<sup>1</sup> 'he was not suffered to take sleep some nights and days together. His brains being light, some secrets were extracted from him.' He was of course found guilty and hanged.

NOTE 52, PAGE 46.

In the Session of the General Assembly of October 1581, a commission was appointed to take into consideration a question put by the King. In case the Kirk damned the office of Bishop, whereunto is annexed also a temporal jurisdiction wherein the Kirk is served by voting in Parliament, assisting in His Highness Council, contribution in taxation, and sicklike, what overture they would show, whereby the King could not be prejudiced by taking away that state. For the advising of this head, which the Assembly thought very weighty, and of great consequence, a commission was named in which was William Edmonstone. I apprehend, however, this was not the eldest son of Sir James, but the minister of Cargill, for the Kirk at the same Session appointed 'certain brethren to travail in erection of Presbyteries,' and Mr. William Edmonstone was named among others for Perth and Strathern.<sup>2</sup> Who this minister was I have no clue to ascertain.

The following references are from History of Presbyterian Church in Ireland, by James Seaton Reid :—

1641. Edmonstone of Broadisland among the officers under Lord Claneboye opposed to the Irish Rebels. Mr. Edmonstone of Broadisland dispatched by Lord Chichester and others to purchase muskets, swords, and pikes at Edinburgh, with a commission to 'James Edmondstone of Broadyland, Esquire,' delivered by him at Edinburgh, dated 21st January 1642.

The Scotch and English armies under General Monro and Lord Montgomery of Ards, having suffered a reverse from the Irish in 1646, 'Mr. John Edmonstone of Ballybrochin in Broadisland, a member of a family long distinguished for their benevolence and public spirit, and their warm support of the Presbyterian Church,' says Dr. Reid, was sent as ruling elder to attend the General Assembly in Edinburgh, to procure assistance in the existing state of the Irish Presbyterians. In a note Dr. Reid says, 'The Edmonstone family resided long at Broadisland, where they set an example of piety, condescension, charity, and usefulness, and caused their removal (when the estate was sold in 1780), to be felt as a public loss. In 1653 Cromwell formed a plan for translating the leading Scottish Presbyterians of Ulster into Munster, and the name of Captain Edmonstone is found among the number. This scheme was however soon given up.

<sup>1</sup> Calderwood's History, vol. vii. p. 193.

<sup>2</sup> Book of the Universal Kirk.

Page 103 and 186. In the Irish war in 1689 'Col. Edmonstone of Broadisland embodied three hundred foot, with part of which he garrisoned his house, Red Hall, near Carrick Fergus.' At the siege of Derry 'Col. Edmonstone, with part of Adair's regiment, was directed to secure the pass at Port Glenone, and prevent the enemy repairing the Bridge.' 'Early in the morning of Sunday 7th April a strong body of Hamilton's forces under Col. Nugent, son of the Earl of Westmeath, having secured some boats, succeeded in crossing the Bann, about a mile from Port Glenone, without alarming the Protestant sentinels. The trenches were defended with great bravery by Edmonstone and his Lt. Col. Shaw, supported by Sir Arthur Rawdon, who happened to be there, and by five companies under Lt. Col. Whitney.' The post, however, was untenable, and the defenders of Port Glenone retreated. 'Col. Edmonstone also contracted those distempers in the trenches of Port Glenone of which he afterwards died at Culmore, April 14th, having behaved himself there and on all other occasions with great gallantry and resolution.' Mackenzie, True and Impartial Account, p. 21. Culmore surrendered 23d April.

NOTE 53, PAGE 48.

Hans or John Hamilton, first Protestant vicar of Dunlop in Ayrshire, was a natural son of Archibald Hamilton of Raploch. By his wife, Margaret Denholme, he had five sons. The eldest, James, was originally a schoolmaster, and, it is said, Archbishop Ussher was one of his pupils. Subsequently, being a man of talent, he was appointed a commissioner for the plantation of Longford. He thus acquired property, and, having taken an active part in the suppression of Tyrone's rebellion, he was, in 1622, created Viscount Chaneboye, and was much employed during the reigns of James the First and Charles the First. His eldest son was made Earl of Clanbrassil, but this line of the family with the peerage ended in the third generation.<sup>1</sup> Archibald Hamilton, second son of Hans, married Rachel, daughter of Walter Carmichael of Hynford, sister to James, first Lord Carmichael. By her he had four sons and a daughter, Jean, married first to Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, and secondly to Sir William Mure of Rowallan.

NOTE 54, PAGE 49.

The work from which the above quotations are made is a quarto volume printed in 1818, entitled 'Law's Memorialls from 1638-1684, principally of prodigies and wonders among other events.' He was a Presbyterian Minister, and was curiously credulous and superstitious. Of the Dumb Laird of Duntreath, a local tradition has been preserved that on one Sunday when the family were going to the Kirk, and it was intimated to him that he could not accompany, he went into the stable and began eating hay as if to show that if not fit to attend public worship, he ought to live among the cattle. A seal ring and a few other memorials of this remarkable person are preserved.

<sup>1</sup> Spottiswoode's Miscellany, vol. i. p. 126, note.

NOTE 55, PAGE 52.

In a work called Derriana, relating chiefly to the famous siege of Londonderry, and which was compiled from a contemporary narrative by the Rev J. Mackenzie, the same facts are given, and it is added, Col. Edmonstone's valour was spoken highly of, but his resistance was useless for want of support. In the notes to the same work is the following: 'The Armagh manuscript (of the siege of Londonderry) thus mentions the Earl of Mount Alexander, and Edmonstone Laird of Duntreath, the latter of whom died at Culmore Fort, 14 April 1689, in consequence of diseases contracted in the trenches of Port Glenone, where he had behaved himself with great gallantry and resolution.'

It has been stated in note 34 that the remains of this gentleman were discovered lying above those of the Countess of Angus in the Church of Strathblane in 1844.

NOTE 56, PAGE 52.

The late Sir Walter Scott told me that the Scotts of Harwood were a cadet of the Harden family, now represented by Lord Polwarth, of which stock himself was. Col. Scott was killed at the battle of Dunbar 1650, where he commanded a regiment of cavalry against Cromwell. The banner the regiment bore at that battle is in my possession. Lady Adair, who, however, dropt her first husband's title, had the management of affairs for her son during his minority, and would seem to have possessed superior abilities, and, judging by her portrait in the family collection, there was something very distinguished in her air and appearance. Her mother was Dutch, but I have lost the name. By the indenture dated April 17, 1666, Anna Helena (Scott) Adair is to receive £100 per an. sterling as jointure from the Adair estates (only however part of what is legally due). Mr. Edmonstone assigns to her a yearly rent charge of £166, 13s. 4d. sterling, for her life, 'to be paid yearly at the two Feasts of Philip and Jacob, and all Saints; also, in case of survivorship, to have any house belonging to Mr. E. except the mansion-house of Duntreath, to pay rent for lands attached not exceeding thirty acres. The estates charged with £1300 for three daughters, the eldest 600, the second 400, the third 300, if two, to be divided between them, if one, to have the whole. (No mention of younger sons.)

NOTE 57, PAGE 53.

The Montgomeries of Rosemount were descended from the Eglinton family. Sir Hugh, the sixth Laird of Braidstone, was raised to the Irish Peerage as Viscount Montgomery, and the James Montgomery who married Elizabeth Edmonstone was son of Sir James, second son of the first Viscount. The third Viscount was created Earl of Mount Alexander in 1661. The sons of the above marriage became next in the line of succession, but predeceased the last Earl, by whose death the titles became extinct in 1758.

NOTE 58, PAGE 53.

Archibald, ninth Earl of Argyle, who was executed for high treason at Edinburgh in 1685, by his wife, Lady Mary Stewart, daughter to the Earl of Moray, had four sons and three daughters, of whom the eldest, Archibald, was created first Duke of Argyle, and was succeeded in his dukedom by his two sons, John the celebrated Duke of Argyle and Greenwich, who left only daughters, and Archibald Earl of Isla, who left no children. John, second son of the Earl, married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of John eighth Lord Elphinstone, by whom he had four sons—first, John, who on the death of his cousin succeeded to the dukedom, married the Honourable Mary Bellenden, daughter of John Lord Bellenden, from whom the present family is descended ; second, Charles, third Neil, fourth William,—and six daughters, first, Mary, married James, second Earl of Rosebery, from whom the present family is descended ; second, Anna, married Archibald Edmonstone, Esq. of Duntreath ; third, Isabella, married William Montgomery, Esq. of Rosemount ; fourth, Jean, married Captain John Campbell of Carrick, killed at the battle of Fontenoy ; fifth, Primrose, married Simon Lord Lovat, who was executed for high treason, and sixth, Elizabeth, died unmarried.

NOTE 59, PAGE 54.

The Harenes were an ancient family settled in Normandy before the Conquest. In the Gallery des Croisades at Versailles is a picture of 'Le combat du Harene' under the walls of Antioch. The story told by Monsieur de Condamines is, that the ancestor of the Harenes le Comte de Condamines at the first crusade conquered the valley of the Hauranne, and took the Princess of Antioch, to whom it belonged, captive, and then married the Princess and took the name of 'Hauranne de Condamines.' It is problematical enough.

The De Presle family is now represented by the Comte de Taucourt, who has succeeded to the property of the De Presles in Normandy, being descended from another branch of the Harenes. The Condamines were a third branch. They were considered belonging to the 'Haute Noblesse' before the Revolution. A branch of the family came to England and took the English name of Heryng or Herring, and obtained property in Dorsetshire, of whom there is an account in Wiffen's Memoirs of the House of Russell. There is no document to trace the connection of this branch with Roger Harene, but himself came to England about the year 1720, I apprehend, from a family tradition, one of the victims of Law's Mississippi scheme. The Marquis du Presle, before the French Revolution, was by name Harene, probably an elder branch of the same family. Benjamin, Roger's son, purchased Footscray Place in Kent, which was again sold by his son Benjamin to Lord Bexley.

NOTE 60, PAGE 56.

The family of Wilbreyham or Wilbraham was settled in Cheshire in the middle of the 13th century, where Sir Richard obtained extensive property by marriage with the heiresses of the Vernon and Venables families, and himself was served Sheriff for the county in 1259. The elder branch terminated by the marriage of Grace, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Wilbraham of Woodhay, with Lionel Tollemache, Earl of Dysart, and the property is now in possession of John Tollemache, Esq., his descendant. Roger Wilbraham, Esq. of Nantwich, in whom the male line of the family was continued, had two sons, Roger, father of George Wilbraham of Nantwich, and Delamere House, and Randle of Rode Hall, father of Richard, who married Mary, elder daughter and heiress of Robert Bootle, Esq. of Lathom House, a property previously in possession of the Earls of Derby. The Bootles settled for some generations in the county of Lancaster. From this marriage there were two sons and six daughters.

I. Edward, created Baron Skelmersdale of Skelmersdale in 1828, married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. Edward Taylor of Bifrons, in Kent, by whom he had—

1. Richard, who died in 1844, married Jessy, daughter of Sir Richard Brooke of Norton, Baronet, by whom he had one son and three daughters.

2. Edward, married Emily, daughter of James Ramsbottom, Esq., by whom he has had a son and three daughters.

3. Mary Charlotte.

4. Emma Caroline, married Edward Lord Stanley, eldest son of Edward, thirteenth Earl of Derby (late Secretary of State for the Colonies), by whom she has two sons and a daughter.

II. Randle, of whom hereafter (Note 62).

III. Anne Dorothea, married Richard Pepper, First Lord Alvanley, Master of the Rolls, and afterwards Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, by whom she had—

1. William, second Lord Alvanley, died November 1849.

2. Richard Pepper, third Lord Alvanley, married Lady Arabella Vane, daughter of William, first Duke of Cleveland.

3. Frances Henrietta, married Sir John Warrender of Lochend, Bart., by whom she has a daughter; and

4. Catherine Elizabeth.

IV. Mary, married William Egerton of Tatton Park, Cheshire, Esq., by whom she had two sons and a daughter:—

1. Wilbraham, married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Christopher Sykes of Sledmere, in Yorkshire, by whom he had five sons and a daughter—first, William Tatton, married Lady Charlotte Loftus, daughter to John, second Marquis of Ely, by whom he had two sons and four daughters; second, Wilbraham, died 1848; third, Thomas, died 1847, married Charlotte, daughter of Sir William Milner of Nunappleton in Yorkshire, Baronet, by whom he had four sons and three daughters ; fourth, Edward Christopher, married Lady Mary Pierrepont, daughter of Charles, second Earl Manvers, by whom he has issue ; fifth, Charles, married Margaret, daughter of the Hon. Sir Edward Cust ; sixth, Charlotte.

2. Thomas, second son of William Egerton, took the family name of Tatton, and married Emma, daughter of the Hon. John Grey, son of Harry, fourth Earl of Stamford, by whom he had a son and six daughters.

3. Mary Elizabeth, daughter of William Egerton, married, first, Sir Mark Masterman Sykes of Sledmere, Baronet, and secondly, Stratford Dugdale of Merevale, Warwickshire, Esq.

V. Frances Alicia, married Antony Hardolph Eyre, Esq. of Grove Notts, by whom she had one son, Gervase, killed at the battle of Barossa in 1811, and three daughters : first, Mary Letitia, married Charles, second Earl Manvers, by whom she had Charles, Viscount Newark, married Emily, daughter of Edward, Lord Hatherton, died 1849 ; Sydney Herbert, Viscount Newark, and two daughters, Mary, married Edward C. Egerton, Esq., and Annora ; second, Frances Julia, married Granville, son of the Hon. Edward Vernon Harcourt, Archbishop of York, by whom she had five sons, and a daughter married to Humphrey St. John Mildmay ; third, Henrietta married, first, John Eyre, Esq., and second, Henry Gally, Knight, Esq. of Langold, Notts.

VI. Sybylla, married William Ffarrington, Esq. of Shaw Hall, Lancashire, by whom she had two daughters : Sybylla, wife of S. Scarisbrick, Esq., of Scarisbrick, Lancashire, and Frances.

VII. Emma, married Charles Edmonstone, Esq., afterwards Sir Charles Edmonstone, Baronet.

VIII. Elizabeth, married Rev. William Barnet, Rector of Richmond, Yorkshire, and afterwards of Brixton, Deverill, Wilts.

NOTE 61, PAGE 56.

The Hothams are lineally descended from Sir John de Trehouse, who obtained from the Conqueror the Manor of Hotham in Yorkshire, whence the family took the name. Sir Beaumont, seventh Baronet, had five sons : first, Sir Charles, second, Sir John, Bishop of Clogher in Ireland ; third, William, first Lord Hotham ; fourth, Beaumont, second Lord Hotham ; fifth, George.

Beaumont, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, succeeded to the Irish Peerage and Baronety on the death of his brother William. He married Susanna, daughter of Sir Thomas Hankey, Knight, and widow of James Norman, Esq., by whom he had—

1. Beaumont, died before his father married Philadelphia, daughter of Sir John Dyke, Bart., of Lullingstone Castle, Kent, by whom he had Beaumont, third Lord Hotham. George Frederick married Lady Susan O'Brien, daughter of William, second Marquis of Thomond, by whom he has issue ; and Frances Philadelphia died unmarried.

2. Frederick, in Holy Orders, married Anne, daughter of Thomas Hodge of Hempstead Place, Kcnt, by whom he has Sir Charles, K.C.B., and four other sons and five daughters.

3. Vice-Admiral Sir Henry, G.C.B., married Lady Frances Rous, daughter of John, first Earl of Stradbroke, by whom he had three sons.

4. Frances, married Vice-Admiral Sir John Sutton, G.C.B., by whom she had a son and two daughters.

5. Amelia, married John Woodcock, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, by whom she had a son and two daughters.

8. Louisa, married, first, Sir Charles Edmonstone, Baronet, and secondly, Charles Woodcock, Esq.

NOTE 62, PAGE 57.

Randle Wilbraham, Esq., second son of Wilbraham Bootle, Esq., succeeded to the paternal property of Rode Hall, the maternal Lathom House having been assigned to his elder brother. He married, first, Letitia, sole daughter and heiress of the Rev. Edward Rudd, of Durham, by Letitia, daughter of John Arden of Harden, Esq., in Cheshire, and Pepper Hall, Yorkshire, sister to Richard Pepper, first Lord Alvanley. By this marriage he had, first, Randle, married Sibella, daughter of William Egerton of Gresford Lodge, Esq.; second, Edward, died unmarried; third, Mary Letitia, married Joseph Harrison Fryer, Esq.; fourth, Frances Maria, died unmarried; fifth, Emma, married Sir Archibald Edmonstone, Baronet, as above.

Mr. Wilbraham married, secondly, Sibylla, daughter of John Egerton of Egerton and Oulton in Cheshire, whose brother Sir John succeeded to the Baronetcy on the death of Thomas, first Earl of Wilton. By this marriage Mr. Wilbraham has had three sons and five daughters: first, Charles Philip, in Holy Orders, Vicar of Audley; second, Richard, Major in the army, married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of William Egerton of Gresford, Esq., by whom, who died in May 1849, he had one daughter Catherine; third, Francis Henry Randle; fourth, Sibylla Elizabeth; fifth, Henrietta; sixth, Frances Maria; seventh, Emily; eighth, Charlotte, married to the Rev. Francis Twenlow, Incumbent of Smallwood, Cheshire. She died in December 1852, leaving a son and daughter.

(Signed) A. E.

COLZIUM, April 1851.

II.

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF THE ELDER BRANCH OF THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

---

HAVING in the preceding narrative brought down the descent of the elder branch of Edmonstone and Ednam to the sixth generation, I propose now to continue it as far as my materials allow, which are derived first from the Ednam Genealogy, which, however, ends with the year 1576, and is, moreover, not much to be depended upon, and chiefly from the information afforded by the older charters of Edmonstone, which Mr. Wauchope of Edmonstone kindly allowed Mr. Riddell, at my request, to examine. Though the genealogy thus produced is not so distinct and satisfactory as that of Duntreath, still it is sufficient to elucidate the descent. I would premise that in this portion the spelling of the name adopted by the elder branch is adopted. On this there seems to have been no rule, the name appearing in ancient documents in various shapes. The more modern orthography the Duntreath family uses is that I have generally employed. The six generations referred to above are—1st, Henry ; 2d, John ; 3d, John ; 4th, David ; 5th, James ; 6th, John.

This last John married Margaret, daughter to William Maitland of Therlstane, ancestor of the Lauderdale family. According to the Ednam pedigree, a dispensation was obtained for this marriage coming within the prohibited degrees. This was dated 1463 ; and the following year John Edmonstone gets a Bull from Pope Innocent the Eighth, taking him and all his concerns under the protection of the Church.

There is a curious indenture made at Dunfermline, dated 23d of July 1469, between John Edmondstone of that Ilk and William Preston of Craigmillar, whereby it is covenanted that John, the eldest son and heir of the aforesaid John Edmondstone, or failing him, William, the second son, should marry Margaret, the daughter of the aforesaid William Preston, or, in case of her death, her sister Elizabeth, William Preston giving 600 mcrks in dower, with which John Edmondstone shall redeem the lands of Ryslaw, and hand them over to William Preston. There are some more clauses relative to Ryslaw and the estate of Wallaceton in Perthshire, in possession of John Edmondstone, which it is not necessary to follow up.

This John, referred to in the indenture, seems to have succeeded his father, for in 1482 John Edmondstoune of that Ilk was appointed captain of the border castles of Cessford, Edgerton, and Ormiston,<sup>1</sup> at the time of the invasion of the English under Richard, Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard the Third, with the Duke of Albany and a band of rebel nobles.

In 1499 there is a solemn transaction whereby John Edmondstoune of that Ilk promises that he will not sell nor put away any more of his lands from John, his son and heir, and the heirs of the said John's marriage with Isabel Home. It would seem, however, that this John died before his father without leaving male issue, for there is a procuratory of resignation by John Edmondstoune of the lands of Edmonstone to his son David Edmondstoune, in Holy Orders, Rector of Fawls, under the reservation of John, the resigner's life-rent, dated September 1499. It would seem that James, the younger brother of David, had the estate of Ednam apportioned to him, as there is a special retour dated 'Montem placiti,' Moothill of Inveresk (where judicial procedures were held in the open air) before William, Lord Borthwick, James, Master of Morton, etc., as baillies of the regality of Dunfermline, on the part of Alexander, Archbishop of St. Andrews, Commendator of Dunfermline, by which James Edmondstoune of Ednam is infeft in the lands of Edmonstone as heir to his brother David. It is dated January 20, 1512.

There is a precept of sasine of a week later by the same Archbishop of the lands of Edmonstone as above.

In a legal transaction, dated 1507, James Edmondstoune of Ednam is designated as a Knight.

It seems likely that Sir James fell with his superior, Alexander, Archbishop of St. Andrews (natural son of James the Fourth, a very young man), at the battle of Flodden, for, as the battle occurred in September 1513, in February 1513 (which would now be 1514, as the year was then calculated as commencing in March), there is a precept of saisin, dated Dumferline, stating that John was the son and heir of James, who had died in possession of the lands of Edmonstone.

This John married Euphemia, daughter of Wauchope of Niddry, by whom he had three sons : John, who succeeded him ; James, and Patrick. He appears to have taken part in that remarkable and frightful case, namely, the trial of Lady Janet Douglas, sister to the Earl of Angus, widow of Lord Glamis, and wife of Archibald Campbell of Kepneith, who, together with her husband and son, was accused of attempting the life of James the Fifth by poison and witchcraft. John Edmondstoune of that Ilk, together with the Earl of Atholl and Buchan, and others, was on the Assize, and the unfortunate lady was condemned to be burnt alive. 'Her death,' says Calderwood, 'was much lamented, for her nobility, her youth, her beauty, her courage at her suffering, but most of all because it was judged that hatred against her banished brother, rather than guiltiness of any crime committed, had brought her to that end.' Her husband was killed by falling from the walls of the castle of Edinburgh while trying to escape. The son was detained in prison during the King's life, and afterwards restored to his patrimony. 'The accuser,' continues Calderwood, 'was one William Lyn. He repented, but too late, of his calumnies, and confessed his wicked purpose to the King, but the King relented nothing of his rigour, or of his forfeiture of their lands. His anger against the Douglas was implacable.' This dreadful tragedy took place in July 1537.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Black Acts, folio 66.

In 1567 Captain Blackater, James Edmondstoune, and others were tried, tortured, and executed for having been concerned in the murder of Lord Darnley. Who this James Edmondstoune was does not appear. There was no proof of their guilt brought forward, but that was not necessary in those wicked times.<sup>2</sup>

John Edmondstoune was appointed one of the Association to protect King James about this time, but this was the son, for the father died in 1565, as is shown by a precept of clare constat, declaring John to have succeeded to his father John of that Ilk. During his father's lifetime this gentleman had been summoned to Parliament.

In the year 1567, being now styled Sir John of that Ilk, he, with sundry peers, at the head of which were the Regent Murray and the Earl of Huntly, signed a bond of association to protect King James on his mother's abdication. This bond is dated Edinburgh, 1567. In 1587 Sir John was proclaimed a rebel, with others;—what was the occasion, however, or the result of this proclamation, does not appear; but in 1589 we find him engaged in a breach of the peace, by attacking Archibald Wauchope, the young Laird of Niddry, who had been concerned in the slaughter of the Laird of Shireffhall, and his brother John Giffard.<sup>3</sup> The affair was brought to trial, and Lord Hume, Sir John Edmondstoune, and others, were the pursuers of Wauchope, who, in the meanwhile, escaped. Whether it was upon this occasion or any other, but in 1591 we find David Edmondstoune of Woolmet (a cadet of the family) and James Lawson of Humble bound for Sir John Edmondstoune of that Ilk, that he himself, and all he is obliged to answer for by the laws of realm, shall keep the King's peace under the penalty of £5000. This is dated November 13, 1591. Sir John married Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Kerr of Cessford, grandfather to the first Earl of Roxburgh. I presume this is the 'old Lady Edmondstoune' who is stated in Pitcairn's Criminal Trials to have been one who consulted Agnes Simpson, a witch, in 1591.

Sir John Edmondstoune died in 1592, and was succeeded by his son Andrew.

This gentleman mortgaged the estate of Edmondstone in 1612 to Master Thomas Hope, Advocate. He married Mary Gordon, and was succeeded by his son John, who was knighted, as there is an inquest de tutela of Dominus Johannes Edmondstoun de eodem miles, of James Edmondstoune of Newtoun, the son of Andrew de eodem, dated July 9, 1619; and there is a general retour of Sir John Edmeston of that Ilk as heir of Andrew his father, dated December 21, 1625. In the following year he finally disposed of the estate of Edmondstoune to Mr. James Raith, Advocate. He married Janet Lawson, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. There is a special retour of him as heir to his father, Sir John, in the barony of Ednam, the advowson of the Hospital of Ednam, and other lands in Roxburgh ; also as successor to his father in the office of Coroner of the portion of Lothian extending from Avenbrig to Colbrandpath, which office had been held in continued descent from the time it was granted to Sir John, husband of the Countess of Douglas. This retour is dated November 8, 1633.

<sup>1</sup> Calderwood, History of the Kirk, vol. i.

<sup>3</sup> Calderwood, History of the Kirk of Scotland,

<sup>2</sup> Keith, History of the Church and State in Scotland, vol. ii. p. 652.      vol. v. p. 56.

Andrew was succeeded by his son of the same name, who was retoured December 12, 1665. He married Isobel, daughter of Sir A. Don of Newton Don, by whom he had five sons :—

1. Andrew, married Miss Paterson of Eccles, by whom he had one daughter, who died unmarried.

2. James, who succeeded to his brother.

3. Patrick, married Miss Cox, by whom he had one daughter, Isobel, married to William, second son of Aytoun of Inchdairnie, by whom he had a son Roger, who died in 1843 ; whose son William Edmondstone Aytoun, the distinguished Professor of Rhetoric in the Edinburgh University, is now the representative of this ancient line.
4. Thomas ;
5. Gideon, both died unmarried. Likewise two daughters, Isobel, married William Hog, and Margaret, married to Hepburn of Humble, neither of whom left descendants.

James married Miss Pringle of Clifton, by whom he had James, who succeeded him, and five daughters : Isobel, married Theodore Baron Newhoff, King of Corsica ; and Janet, Violet, Ann, and Patricia. Ann, the last survivor, died in 1826, aged 102.

James died unmarried in 1772, and with him the male line expired. He had previously sold the estate of Ednam, and purchased that of Cora House, which, as mentioned before, the last Miss Edmondstone bequeathed to George Cranstoun, Esq., Lord Corehouse.

