OUR SEVEN CENTURIES.

THE Rev. Mr James Scott, who had for 35 years been one of the ministers of Perth in 1796 published a Statistical account of that town and Parish, in which at p. 57 et seq., he gives some notices of the antiquity of the family of Mercer of Aldie, and Meikleour. Dr William Thomson, minister of the Old Church Parish, drew up the new Statistical account of Perth in 1844, and he also devotes some space at pp. 54, and 71, to the family history, indeed, any history of Perth would be incomplete, did it omit all mention of a family so intimately connected with its earliest reminiscences as to have originated the old saying—
“The Mercer’s aye are aulder than auld Perth.”

At p. 61, Mr Scott gives a copy of an epitaph “written on one of the old representatives of the family, which was, and perhaps is, still to be seen in some part of the burying-vault, it runs thus”—

“Mercer solennem, claudit lapis ista Johannem
Qui, dum vivebat, gratus in urbe fuit
Mille ducentenos, vixit annos octuagenos,”

Which may be thus rudely rendered,—

Grave old John Mercer, lies within this stone,
A pleasant man as e'er in Perth was known,
The thirteenth century, when he left life's stage,
Attained with him, their 80th year of age.

Mr Scott says of this vault—"This very ancient vault has its opening from within the middle church, near to the north side of the north aisle, and extends northward, a considerable way, from under the north wall."

"The tradition concerning it may be seen in the following old verses, which I received many years ago from a gentleman in Aberdeen, the late Mr David Mercer, who was a descendant of the family. They appear to be a translation from the Latin."—

On the Arms of Aldie.

"Behold the arms of the Mercers are
 Three mill rynds, three gold balls, with glistering star;
 To let the world know that their ancient race
 Possess'd three mills, for many ages space,
 In pleasant Perth, near situate by Tay;
 Which mills Perth keeps unto this present day,
 Three balls next shew them potent in each thing;
 Therefore they gift these mills unto the King.
 Who for their golden gift, and loyal mind,
 With arched tomb in church did them provide,
 With lands, rents, arms of privilege and fame,
 Kept now by Aldie's lairds chief of the name.
 Lastly, the star, clear shining as a gem,
 Proves their descent out of Moravian stem.
 Likewise their will and virtue doth presage
 In name and fame to last with shining age.
 Therefore men may avow, with justest breath,
 Mercers are yea older than old Perth."

"The two concluding verses, in which the Mercers are represented as older than old Perth, refer to the fabulous story of Hector Boece."

"There can be no doubt but that the Mercers obtained the burying vault in the church by a grant from the King. It is a fact which never has been questioned. But if so, it shews the antiquity both of the church, and of the town, for the royal grant must have taken place prior to, and perhaps long before, the year 1126; because in, or about that year, the King had given away to the abbey of Dunfermling all right that he had to dispose of any part of the parish church."

Mr Scott elsewhere remarks on the lines descriptive of the arms, that he supposes them to be a translation of some Latin verses of Arthur Johnstone ; there can be little doubt however, that they were the original composition of Colonel William Mercer, youngest son of Mr John Mercer, minister of Methlick, and afterwards of Slains, in Aberdeenshire, "a soldier," and a "lover of the Muses," as he styles himself, who was born in 1605, and died circiter 1684: the heraldic emblems which he erroneously describes as "mill rynds," were crosses patées, and the golden balls besants ; the reason for the adoption of these will be given hereafter ; the story of the mills is a creation of the poetical colonel's fertile imagination, the motto, "Crux Christi nostra corona," has a direct reference to the crosses patées, but is altogether inapplicable to the mill rynds. A silver star on a golden shield is heraldically incorrect. The Arms as described in the lines would be thus blazoned—

The more ancient tradition asserts that the Mercer's gave the North and South Inches to the King, (from whom they passed into possession of the town), and that the family in return obtained the burial vault within the cathedral church of St John, in Perth, whence originated the "bon mot," of the witty Harry

Erskine, which has been hitched into the following popular couplet or folk rhyme :—

“Folk say the Mercers tried the town to cheat,
When for two Inches they did win six feet.

This same Colonel Mercer had a very exalted idea of the antiquity of the family (with which by the way he claimed, but when put to a judicial test, was unable to prove kinship), as in his “Penman’s Apologie,” published in 1673, he says—

“They have been Mercers near nyne hundred years.”

Could this be relied upon, the family might now claim an antiquity of eleven centuries, but unfortunately for it, and the poet himself, he, in his “News from Parnassus,” candidly confesses “I am privileged to lie,” an admission fatal to his veracity.

The epitaph carries John Mercer, back to A.D., 1200; the vault is still in possession of his descendants, an existence of seven centuries ought therefore to suffice the genealogical pride of any family out of Jewry. John Mercer died in 1280: of his children records and tradition are alike silent, but a charter is extant, and given further on in extenso, dated 10th February, 1353-4,¹ noticing the grand-father Thomas, his son John, and grandson Andrew, which carries the birth of the first of these back prior to the year, 1280; and Ragman Roll enumerates four of the name showing that more than one scion of the race existed at the period to form the connecting link, between Thomas and Mercer solennis, these are—

Stephen Mercer, burgess of Berwick, who swore fealty to Edward I., on 3rd June, 1291.

Austin Mercer, burgess of Roxburgh, who swore fealty in 1296.

Walter Mercer, burgess of Montrose, who swore fealty in 1396.

And Bernard le Mercier, burgess of Perth who swore fealty

at Berwick, on the 28th August, 1296; but it is not sufficiently clear whether his surname was Mercier, or whether he was "le Mercier," or chief person of his trade or calling in the town of Perth, at this date: certain it is, that Bernard never occurs as a Christian name in the Aldie, or in any Scottish, family; it may therefore be concluded, that the latter supposition is the more tenable one.

In Aberdeen also, in 1292, Duncan Mercer founds an altarage in the church of St. Nicholas, he appears to have had a son, Thomas, who was Provost of Aberdeen in 1342; it is not improbable that Thomas of Perth, and Duncan of Aberdeen, were brothers, but this cannot be asserted as an ascertained fact, nor can it be authenticated, that the John Mercer mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls, is identical with John Mercer, the first of Aldie; but all the other notices hereafter given have clear and incontrovertible reference to him and his descendants. The notice in the Exchequer Rolls is in an account produced by the Chamberlain of Scotland, of his transactions between 18th March, 1327-8 and 26th June, 1328, wherein he pays to the wife of John Mercer, and certain Flemish merchants the sum of 33s. 4d.¹ 26 June,

John Mercer, burgess of Perth, witnesses a deed between the Alderman, Bailies, and Community of Perth, on the one part, and William Dispensar, on the other part, by which the former grant, in perpetuity, to the latter the Customs of the Bridge of Perth, and the latter grants to the former £3 annually, out of his lands of Gilgerston (now Kilgraston), in perpetuity, for the building of the Bridge of Perth. 20th June,

In the year from the incarnation of our Lord, 1353, on the 10th day of the month of February, at the monastery of Scone, this agreement was made between the religious men, Sir William, by the grace of God, Abbot of the monastery of Scone, and the Convent of the same place, on the one part, and John Mercer, burgess of Perth, Andrew his son, and the heirs of the said Andrew on the other part,—that is to say, that the said Abbot and Convent, with the unanimous consent and assent of their whole chapter, have granted, and let in farm to the fore-said John, Andrew his son, and the heirs of the said Andrew, their whole land lying in the street Sellatorum, of Perth, on the East side of the same street, which the deceased Thomas Mercer, father of the same John Mercer, held of them between the land of our Lord the King, on the South side, on the one hand, and the land which the deceased Robert Jopp, burgess of Perth, held of the same, on the North side, on the other hand—that is to say, in the first year, for a durable building to be erected on the same land; in the second year for paying 3s. 4d., sterling; in the third year, 6s. 8d., sterling; in the fourth year 10s. sterling; in the fifth year 13s. 4d., sterling; in the sixth year, 16s. 8d., sterling; in the seventh year, one pound, sterling; in the eighth year, one pound, 3s. 4d., sterling; in the ninth year, one pound 6s. 8d., sterling; and every year after that to perpetuity, one pound, 6s. 8d., sterling. And if it happen that the said John, Andrew his son, and the heirs of the said Andrew, should not build on the said land before the ninth year in the manner before denoted, the same John, Andrew his son, and the heirs of the said Andrew, should pay to them, and to their successors in the tenth year, six pounds of good and lawful sterling money by way of fine, without any remission. In testimony of which thing, to the part of this agreement remaining with the foresaid John Mercer, Andrew his son, and the heirs of the said Andrew, the common seal of the chapter of the said religious men is appended; but to the part remaining with the foresaid religious men, the seal of the foresaid John Mercer is appended.

Note.—In this document we have the name of the father Thomas his son John, and grandson Andrew, and may conclude that Thomas was born prior to 1280, beyond this, from the want of documentary evidence, the history of the family cannot be traced with any confidence, the Original Charter is at present in the Register Office, having been given over to public custody after the publication of the Liber de Scone, in 1843.

From this Thomas the families of Countess Flahault, Robert Mercer of Scotsbank, W. D. Mercer, of Huntingtower, and the Mercers of Gorthie, can be traced in unbroken descent, to the present time, 1868.

26 September, 1356. On the 26th September, 1356, the procurators of the towns and burghs of Scotland, assembled at Edinburgh, to deliberate on the liberation of David II. (who had been a prisoner in England since the battle of Durham, 17th October, 1346,) appointed the following persons to represent them.

1, EDINBURGH.

Alexander Gylyot (Provost), Adam Core, John Goldsmith.

2, PERTH.

John Mercer (Provost), John Gill, Robert Gatmilke.

3, ABERDEEN.

Laurence Garnok (Provost), William de Leth, John Crabb.

4, DUNDEE.

Mr John de Somerville (Provost), Robert Kydd.

Giving them full power to come to concord, with the Council of the King of England, on the ransom of David. The Clergy, Nobles, and Burgesses finally agreed on the matter, on 26th

September, 1357, and on the 3d October, 1357,¹ the matter was concluded at Berwick-on-Tweed, and David was released on 1st November.² 3 October, 1357.

Norman Leslie acting Chamberlain, enters as paid to John Mercer, burghess of Perth, between 29th September, 1357, and 16th March, 1357-8, the sum of £3, 6s. 8d., on account of the King's debt.³ 9th April, 1359.

Note.—From this and similar entries it appears that John Mercer, was not only a merchant, but also a banker, and in the latter capacity supplied the King with money in his necessity.

Next follows an Indenture between William, abbot of the Monastery of Scone, and Convent thereof, and John Mercer, burghess of Perth, relative to the land of Kyncarrouchy, Dated, 22nd April, 1358.

Indenture between William, abbot of the Monastery of Scone, and Convent thereof, and John Mercer, burgess of Perth relative to the land of Kyncarrouchy, Dated, 22d April, 1358.

This Indenture bears witness that on the 22d day of the month of April, in the year from the incarnation of Christ, 1358, at Scone, this agreement was made between the religious men, Sir William, by the grace of God, abbot of the monastery of Scone, and the convent of the same place, on the one part, and John Mercer, burgess of Perth on the other part—that is to say, that the said abbot and convent, have given and granted with the unanimous assent and consent of their chapter, to the foresaid John Mercer, and one, his lawful heir, their whole land of Kyncarrouchy, with all its right measures and divisions, commodities and easements, and other pertinents belonging to the foresaid land, or which shall belong thereto, the mill excepted, with four acres annexed to the said mill, and pasture for four cows: To wit, for the first ten years, for his faithful service, counsel, assistance, and labour rendered to the foresaid religious men, at the time of the obtaining of the church of Blare, and for the erection of the edifices to be built on the said land, and after the lapse of the said ten years, for the whole period of the life of the foresaid John, and his heir above-mentioned for 53s. 4d., of good sterling money, to be paid every year to the foresaid religious men, and their successors at the feasts of Pentecost and St. Martin, in winter, by equal portions. And the foresaid John and his heir, shall grind their own corn at the aforesaid mill of Kincarrouchy as freely as the said lord abbot has been accustomed to grind his (corn), and their tenants if any there shall be, shall grind their corn there to the extent of 24 vessels. And the foresaid John, and his heir shall cause, or cause in his name three suits to be made at the courts of the said religious men, to be held within Gowry in ylef only for all other secular service, exaction and demand, doubling of farm, and all other burdens, which can be exacted or required from the said land. But it shall not be lawful for the said John or his heir to set in tack, the said land of Kyncarrouchy to any other person more powerful than himself, unless with the consent of the said abbot and convent. And the above-mentioned John and his heir bind themselves to give to the above-mentioned religious men their counsel, assistance, and labour, as often as they shall be required. And the foresaid Lord Abbot and Convent shall warrant, acquit and defend, the whole foresaid land of Kyncarrouchy, with its pertinents to the forementioned John and his heir, for the whole period of their life, for the payment of only the foresaid farm, against all men and women. In witness whereof the common seal of the said religious men is appended to the part of this Indenture remaining in the hands of the foresaid John, but the seal of the foresaid John is appended to the part remaining in the hands of the said religious men.

Note.—From this it may be inferred that John Mercer, had other children besides Andrew, it is probable that they were Robert (1374), Mr Thomas, Archdeacon of Glasgow, 1379, and Mr John, Master of Arts, 1382.

23 December,

An acquittance by King Edward III, to his beloved merchant, John Walwayn, for a portion of the ransom of David II., amounting to 2500 marks Sterling, paid at Bruges in Flanders, by the hands of John Mercer, burgess of Perth, and Roger Hogg, burgess of Edinburgh.¹

1359-60.

A more full acquittance for the above sum, acknowledging that it was paid on the 24th June, 1359, according to the terms of the treaty; it is said to be 2,500 merks out of 10,000 which were payable on the feast of St. John the Baptist, 1359, of the ransom of 100,000 merks, the money was paid at Bruges in Flanders, by John Mercer, and Roger Hog, burgesses of Perth and Edinburgh.¹

Sir Walter de Byger, chamberlain, renders his accounts from 13th April, 1359, to date, and charges himself with £27, received ^{2 May,} 1360. from John Mercer, as the sum paid by the Sheriffdom of Perth, towards the second contribution for the King's ransom, and enters payment of £673, of the ransom to Roger de Bosville, for the purpose of being remitted to John Mercer in Flanders. He also brings to account a payment of £21, 14s, to John Mercer, burgess of Perth, for wine for the King's use, and of £12, 7s. 7d. for the expenses of the King at Perth, and also of £4, 15s. 7d. for expenses incurred by the King on the 1st of April.²

Note.—According to some authorities the sums paid for wine and Royal Expenses in the above account, would at the present value of money have amounted to £1550.

Sir Walter de Byger, chamberlain of Scotland, renders his accounts from the 2nd May, 1360, up to date, and enters payment ^{2., June,} 1361. to John Mercer, burgess of Perth, in Flanders, of the sum of £333, 6s. 8d. in supplement of the 5000 merks paid for the ransom of the King; Also paid to John Mercer £27, for the King's debt; also paid to John Mercer, burgess of Perth, £9, for his extra expenses.³

Note.—This £27, by M'Pherson's calculation would be equal to £710, if the other sum of £9 for the King's extra expenses, equal to £270, be added it makes in all £980, or in the space of two years, £2530. N.B.—£333, 6s. 8d.—500 merks.

Sir Walter de Byger, chamberlain of Scotland, renders his accounts at Perth, from the 5th June, 1361, up to date, and enters a payment made to John Mercer, burges of Perth, of £14, 6s. 8d. for different sums received for the use of our lord the King, as vouched for by the letters of the King himself.²

Original charter of confirmation by Maurice de Drummond to John Mercer, burges of Perth, his heirs and assigns, of the Barony of Meiklour, with its appurtenances in the Stormont which belonged to Allan of Kimbucke. Dated at Perth, on Wednesday next after the feast of St Matthew, 1362.⁴

Note.—This is one of the charters in the statement given to Mr James Scott by David Mercer of Aberdeen, as having been found among the papers of the grandfather of David Mercer. This grandfather was James Mercer of Aberdeen, who died 1702; the list was probably made hurriedly when the Aldie charter-chest was searched after the death of Sir James Mercer of Aldie, on the male heir instituting proceedings against Sir James's heirs-female in 1672, and being full of mistakes is not worthy of much reliance—it led Mr Scott into many errors. In Mr David's paper the granter of this charter is called Maurice de Cromod, palpably a mistake made by one unacquainted with the writing of the 14th century, when the word would have been written in its contracted form of Drōmōd. This is the first reference to Meikleour in connection with the Mercer family: it is now in the possession of the female representative of the house, as is Aldie; it has, however, for nearly two centuries supplanted the latter as the family residence. There is among the Meiklour charters one granted by Robert the Bruce at Roseneath, dated 7th February, in the 12th year of his reign—that is 1318, confirming a donation made by Malise, Earl of Strathearn, to Malcolm of Innerpeffray, of the tenement of Meikleour. This document in a manner connects the families of Innerpeffray and Meikleour, and gives a colouring to the supposition that Robert Mercer, son of John, obtained the lands of Innerpeffray either by purchase or by marriage with the heiress of the Innerpeffray family. This Maurice Drummond was probably of the house of Cargill; on the 17th December, 1363, he witnesses a Charter by Robert Stewart of Scotland, dated from the Abbey of Inchaffray, as his signature follows that of John Mercer, it may be concluded that John was the more important personage. The Abbey of Inchaffray and Innerpeffray are both on the right bank of the Pow, the latter at its confluence with the Earn, and the former nine miles higher up the stream.

1363. Robert the Stewart of Scotland, to Alexander de Blare, of an annual rent of four chalders of oatmeal, and one pound of pepper, out of the lands of Stane and Burettee, dated at the Abbey of Inchaffray, 10th December. 1363.²

26 June, Charter of confirmation by William, Earl of Ross, of a charter
1364. granted by Andrew Barclay of Grantully, to John Mercer burghess of Perth, for the lands of Meikle Kinnaird, in the barony of Forgandenny.³

Note.—Kinnaird in Forgandenny continued in the family till about 1830; it is now the property of Lord Ruthven. The Barclays of Gairntully, were of the Mather's family. The crosses patés in the Mercer shield, and the motto are still borne by the Barclay's of Pierston, in Ayrshire, they are said to be of the Mather's, but are probably of the family of Sir David de Barclay, who married the heiress of Brechin, in 1315, and became Lord Brechin. His male line ended with his son David, who left one daughter, Margaret, married to Walter Stewart, second son of Robert II. by Euphemia Ross: he in her right became Earl of Brechin, and subsequently Earl of Athole, and was executed in April, 1437, for the murder of his nephew, James I. Walter Stewart, Lord of Brechin, had the ward and relief of "the unquile" Sir Andrew Mercer from 1390 to 1400, as the next of kin, if he had court interest, usually got the wardship of the heir, it is probable that Walter Stewart and Sir Andrew were connected through their wives being of the Barclay family.

Charter by Walter de Moravia, Lord of Tullybardin, to John Mercer and Ada his spouse, of the lands of Aldie, in the Earldom of Strathearn.¹

Note.—This charter is without date but is said to be about the same date as the charter for Meikle Kinnaird, i.e. 26th June, 1364. The lands are still in the possession of Marchioness of Landsdown, some portion of the Castle of Aldie still remains, but Meiklour has long supplanted it as the family residence. Ada Murray was daughter of Sir Andrew Murray, executed in 1332, after the Battle of Dupplin. She was great-great-great-grand-daughter of Ada, fourth daughter of David, Earl of Huntingdon, whose ~~husband~~ ^{Second} husband was Henry de Hastings—their ~~only~~ ^{first} son competed for the crown with Baliol and Bruce as her representative; she married ~~secondly~~ ^{first} Malis, Seneschal of Strathearn, and brother of Gilbert, Earl of Strathearn, founder of the Abbey of Inchaffray.

Sir Walter de Byger, late chamberlain, renders his accounts at Stirling, from 14th August, 1362, to 25th March, 1363, and enters a payment of £16, 9s. 10d., made to John Mercer, burgess of Perth, for divers receipts for the use of the King, and of £10, to John Mercer by command of the King.² 10 December, 1364.

Safe conduct for Andrew Mercer, who is about to pass from Flanders by Calais and England to Scotland.

from thence at such time as he may think fit. These letters to remain in force till the Feast of the Nativity of the Lord next to come.

In presence of the King, at Westminster, the 16th day of October. By the Council.

Sir Walter de Byger, chamberlain, renders his accounts at Perth, from 21st January, 1365-6, up to this date, and enters payment made to Sir John de Lyle and John Mercer of £106, for their expenses as ambassadors sent to Flanders on certain matters.¹

Note.—This is the first notice of John Mercer as an ambassador, his son Andrew was probably the active partner and permitted the father to turn his attention more particularly to his public duties, as member of Parliament, Financier, Ambassador, Provost of Perth, etc.

Charter to John Mercer, of the lands of Pettland of Strathurd by the Earl of Douglas.²

Circiter
18 January,
1367.

Note.—In the Introduction to Robertson's Index, page xliii., this charter is said to be one of several granted by David II. during the last nine years of his reign—that is, from the 33d year of his reign, or 1362, to the 41st, 1370; these charters are supposed to be in the Register Office, but cannot at present be found, this one is evidently a charter confirming that of Earl Douglas, and as King David was at Strathurd on the 18th of January, 1367, and granted the charter, No. 181, page 58, of the Register of the Great Seal on that day, it is a fair conclusion that this charter was also there and then granted. John Mercer held these lands under the Earl as his suzerain, and was in the language of the time styled the "homo" or "homme" man or vassal of Earl Douglas, and this accounts for the epithet, "mon homme," applied to him by the Earl in his letter of the 16th November, 1376, as will be seen further on. Strathurd was contiguous to Tullybeagles acquired by John Mercer, in 1369-70, and not very distant from Meiklour.

20 January,
1368-9.

Sir Walter de Byger, chamberlain of Scotland, renders his accounts at Perth, from the 24th January, 1367-8, up to date, and enters a sum of 53 shillings due to John Mercer, for skins and hides received at Perth, for which he will cause a vessel to be purchased in Flanders, for the use of the King.¹

Note.—We see from this that even Kings in these days had their speculations: indeed, from the scarcity of money, trading or bartering in goods and in kind was universal. There are several safe conducts to nobility and gentry to travel about with merchandize.

18 February,
1369-70.

John Mercer was a Member of Parliament as a freeholder, representing the burgesses or 3d estate, in the Parliament held at Perth on this day, and was appointed one of the Committee to deliberate on Judicial affairs.²

Charter of confirmation by Robert Stewart of Scotland, Earl of Strathearn, and Baron of Methven, of a charter by Isabella, Countess of Fife, to Allan of Erskine, Lord of Inchmartin, of the whole lands of Tullybeagles, in the barony of Methven, and shire of Perth: and a charter by the said Allan to John Mercer, of the same lands.³

Note.—This charter is without date, but Robert Stewart of Scotland, was made Baron of Methven, 17th September, 1370, and became King on the 22nd February, 1370-1, so that this charter of confirmation must have been within these dates. Tullybeagles, though in the barony and parish of Methven by annexation, is really in the parish of Logybride, now united with Auchtergaven.

Charter by Robert Stewart of Scotland, in favour of John Mercer, and Ada his spouse, their heirs and assigns, of an annual rent of 30 Shillings, forth of the lands of Lednoch, in the barony of Methven.¹

Note.—This charter is also without date, but it must have been prior to 1371. Lednoch is now called Lyndoch.

John Mercer witnesses a charter by Euphame Stewart,^{23 February,} Countess of Moray and Strathearn, confirming a grant by 1369-70. Robert Stewart, her husband, to Sir James Douglas, knight, Lord of Dalkeith, of the lands of Keillor, which belonged formerly to Sir Roger de Mekfen. At Perth, the last day of February, 1369-70.²

Note.—The witnesses to this charter are “our dear son, John Stewart, Earl of Carrick,” afterwards Robert III., Robert Stewart, Lord of Monteth, Alexander Stewart, Sir John Stewart, knight, John de Ross, Hugo de Ross, and John Mercer, burghess of Perth. All these, except John Mercer, were members of the royal family—this shows the status of John Mercer at the time, and prepares us for Walsingham’s statement that he was held in high esteem by the King of France, Charles V. (Le Sage.)

granting to Andrew Mercer, "his cousin," the lands of Dalkaith, in the Sheriffdom of Strathearn.

Note.—Dalkaith is in the parish of Fossoway, and County of Perth. This charter being inaccessible, a more particular account of it cannot be given. David Stewart was the eldest son of Robert II., by his second wife Euphemia Ross, he was created, Count Palatine of Strathearn, on 13th June, 1371, and died in 1383, this charter must therefore have been granted between 1371 and 1383. There is an MS. copy at Gask, of the chartulary of Glasgow, in which the date of this charter is given as 1st July, 1371; the charter is in extenso in the Meiklour charter chest, the peculiarity in it is that Andrew should be styled cousin, this is the more remarkable as he is also styled their cousin in the charter granted him in 1381, by Walter Leslie, and his spouse Euphemia Ross—Euphemia having been daughter to William, Earl of Ross, the brother of Euphemia, wife of Robert II., and mother of David Stewart, Earl of Strathearn. David and Euphemia were consequently 1st cousins, but it is difficult to account for the cousinship between them and Andrew Mercer.

And thus there is deficient of the entire payment of the said redemption to be made after the payment made foresaid, 28,000 merks. And for the expenses of those who have gone to Berwick for the payment to be made of the said redemption at the term of St. John the Baptist by past, 4^{li} 3s.

1 June,

24 June,
1375.

This is the last account given in by Sir Walter de Byger. He appears from the two following Safe conducts, and the accounts presented by John Mercer, his successor in office, on the 20th October, 1377, to have died within the 82 days which elapsed between the 14th March, 1375-6, and the 4th June 1376. On his death the duties of the office were by John earl of Fife and Menteach (eldest son of Robert, II., and afterwards King, under the title of Robert, III.), entrusted to John Mercer, as Receptor pecuniarum Regis.

From the manner in which the payment is expressed of this sum of £4, 3s., for the expenses of those who have gone to Berwick, for the payment to be made of the redemption, at the term of St. John the Baptist by past, there seems to have been a want of completeness in the mode of this payment, the instalment of the ransom on the 24th June, 1375, was paid to John Mercer, and there are two safe conducts—viz., on the 7th May, and 4th June, 1375, to Sir Walter, to convey the money to Berwick; but the name of the person by whom the payment was made, is not mentioned in the acquittance, which is dated 26th June, 1375. The repetition of the Safe conduct betrays an uncertainty, which, coupled with the ransom having been deposited in the hands of John Mercer, and the death of Sir Walter early in 1376, leads to the inference that in consequence of Sir Walter's failing health, he was unable to travel, John Mercer therefore went in his stead, paid over the ransom at Berwick, and went from thence to France on his private affairs, and had not returned to Scotland at the date of the auditing of this account.

From John Mercer's own accounts it appears that Andrew his son transacted the duties of the office conjointly with him, whence it may be inferred that the name of the father is entered in these public accounts as being the head of the firm, but that the duties were in the absence and during the imprisonment of the father, conducted by Andrew Mercer his son. If the supposition be correct, that John Mercer went to France in June, 1375, and on his return in the tempestuous winter season of 1375-6, having been shipwrecked off Northumberland, was seized and imprisoned in Scarborough—it would account for the expression used by Earl Douglas in his letter of the 16th November 1376 (after to be quoted), "estee par grant temps trebuleez."

The amount of the ransom paid annually, was 4000 merks, equivalent to £2,666, 13s. 4d.: of this a receipt for the sum of £2,466, 13s. 4d., is given, leaving a balance of £200, to be made by Forrester and Lawder on the 1st June, 1376. This sum may possibly be in some manner connected with the £189, 13s 4d., out of which Andrew had paid the £166, 13s. 4d., which is brought to account by his father.

Account of the Receiver of the King's Moneys.

MCCLXXVII,

20 October,
1377.

From 1376.

The account of John Mercer, Burgess of Perth, receiver of the King's moneys during the vacancy of the office of Chamberlain, given in in the year of our Lord, 1377, of all moneys received and disbursed, from of the year 1376, to the day of this account, before Lord Earl of Fife and Menteth, Lord James de John Lyon, Chamberlain of Scotland, and other auditors of accounts, specially appointed by the King.

The same is charged, in the first place, with £1337, 11s. 4d., by arrears of the last account he gave in, as appointed by the said Earl of Fife, for receiving the King's moneys which remained at the time of the death of the late Sir Walter de Byger, Chamberlain: and with £7, 16s. 10½d., received by arrears of the account of the Bailiffs of the Burgh of Perth, the account being of this year: and with 8s. 3d. by arrears of the account given in by him of the office of Bailiff of Kinclaven: and with £121, in gold, received by the collectors of customs of Linlithgow of the same year: and with £47, 6s. 8d., received by the collectors of customs of Haddington: and with £20 received by the collectors of customs of Dunbar of the same year: and with £166, 13s. 4d. received by Andrew Mercer, his son, of the sum of £189, 6s. 8d., which the same Andrew Mercer received from Andrew Bet, banker at Edinburgh, in gold; and thus the same Andrew Mercer has to account for sixty-seven nobles of the said received sum:

and with £80 received by the collectors of customs of Dundee of the same year, which have not yet come to hand: and with £24, 7s. received by the collectors of customs of Inverness and of Forres and Elgin of the same year, which have not yet come to hand: and with £132 received by the collectors of customs of Aberdeen of the same year: and with £10 received by the collectors of customs of St. Andrews of the same year, which have not yet come to hand: and with £5 received by the Bailiff of Dumfries of the same year, which have not yet come to hand.

The sum of the moneys to be accounted for, £1952, 3s. 5½d.

The expenditure embraces the following particulars:—In the first place, For the payment made to the King of England, in fulfilment of the annual instalment of four thousand marks at the feast of the nativity of Saint [John] the Baptist by-past, ^{24 June,} for the ransom of the late Lord King David, £1333, 6s. 1377. 8d., and no more in the present account, as the remainder of the payment at the said term, namely 2000 marks, was allotted for the goods of the merchants who were cast away by shipwreck in England, which the English carried away; and thus there remain to be paid of the said ransom, after that payment made, 24,000 merks: And by delivery to our Lord the King for his own private uses, as appears by three letters of the King himself, addressed to the auditors under the Privy Seal, £153, 6s. 8d.: And to Sir Allan of Largys, then Secretary of the royal household, for the expenses of the King's house, as appears by five letters of that Secretary in acknowledgment of the receipts chargeable upon the account, £127, 12s. 1½d.: And to John de Dispensa, Secretary of the royal Household, for the expenses of the King's house, as appears by twelve letters of that Secretary in acknowledgment of the receipts chargeable upon the account, £241, 4s. 1½d.

And to Sir David Bell, Secretary of the wardrobe of our Lord the King, for divers things received into the said wardrobe, as appears by fifteen letters of that Secretary in acknowledgment of the receipts chargeable upon the account, £140, 19s. 9d.: And for rent of houses for the said wardrobe, £3, 6s. 8d.: And for the rent of the houses of the minter, £10.

The sum of this expenditure is £2009, 16s.; and thus the super-expenditure is £57, 12s. 6½d.

John Mercer, in the above account, deducts 2000 merks to reimburse himself for the loss he suffered when shipwrecked off the coast of Northumberland. This shipwreck and its consequences are thus related by Walsingham, who after narrating the death of Pope Gregory XI., which occurred on the 27th March, 1378, states as follows:—

¹Circa tempus illud filius Johannis Mercer, natione Scotus, collecta non parva manu Gallicorum, atque Scotorum, ac etiam Hispanorum, dum adhuc dux Lancastriae Johannes in terris ageret, aggressus et naves quasdam apud Scarborough, quas incautas levi negotio cepit, et secum ad mare deduxit, occisis prius quibusdam, qui navibus illis prae erant, quibusdam vinculis mancipatis. Et ideo quam maxime nostratibus irrogaverat in ultionem opprobrii patris sui, qui antea ab Anglis captus fuerat et in castello de Scarborough mandato regio custoditus. Est autem pater ejus aequae Scotus tam gente quam patria et Regi Franciae propter divitias multas praedilectus, nam erat mercenarius et vir satis vafer et consilio providus, cujus non immerito oris decreta in his quae Angliam contingebant ipse rex et omnes Gallici sequebantur. Hunc casu interceptum cum qui-busdam navibus, Northumbrenses eorum comiti praesentarunt Qui ut diximus in eodem castello custodiae deputatus, cito post deliberatus fuerat ad magnum damnum totius regni et omnium incolarum. Nam si redemptus fuisset captivorum more, regem et regnum inaestimabili pecunia divites effecisset.

Hujus filius ut praelibavimus, postquam damna nostratibus apud Scarburgh intulisset, gloriabatur de arridente sibi fortuna et majora Angliae damna non solum meditabatur, sed etiam publice minabatur, sed ejus conatus ipse impedivit, qui superbos humiliat et exaltat humiles. Tum vero suscitavit Deus contra eum unum ex civibus Trinovantum, qui eum humiliavit, et a timore ejus regnum Angliae liberavit, ut patebit inferius volentibus intueri. Johannes Philpot, civis Londoniensis, vir et ingenio praeditus, et potentissimus opibus, ducis Lancastriae, et ceterorum dominorum defectum, ne dicam falsitatem, qui regnum defendisse debuerant, attente considerans, et oppressionibus condolens incolarum de propria pecunia conduxit mille armatos, qui et praedicto Johanni Mercer, eriperent naves et bona, quae latrocinando ceperat, et regnum Angliae a talibus incursum tuerentur. Et factum est, omnipotens, qui semper assistit piis votis, sibi et suis successus prosperos ministravit, ita ut in brevi ejusdem Johannis Merceri filium jure bellico, sui conductitii caperent, cum omnibus quae apud Scarburgh ipse violenter abduxerat, et aliis quindecim navibus Hispanorum, onustis multis divitiis, quae sibi auxilio fuerant eodem tempore infausta hora. Fit ergo in plebe universa tripudium, omnibus laudantibus et admirantibus, tandem ipsius viri erga regem benevolentiam et charitatem, jamque solus Johannes Philpot ore omnium laudabatur, et admirationi habebatur, de nostris vero proceribus et militia quae dudum conducta fuerat, dicebantur probrosa verba, aspera et invectiva, prout commune vulgus solet inferre vario motu suo. Londonienses præcipue obloquebantur, dicentes, jam per paucorum procerum corda fore cum rege, eos solos sibi fideles esse, quorum rex, licet ironice, vocabatur a nonnullis proceribus, eo quod, ipsi multum juvissent eum in coronatione sua.

[TRANSLATION.]

About this time, the son of John Mercer, a Scot, having collected a considerable band of Gauls, and Scots, and also Spaniards, during the government of John Duke of Lancaster, attacked certain ships in Scarborough, and as they were badly watched he took them without much trouble, and carried them off to sea, having first killed some of those who had charge of them, and put others in fetters. He had done all the mischief he could to our countrymen, in revenge of an injury done to his father, who had before this been seized by the English, and lodged in Scarborough Castle by royal mandate. His father was also a Scot by birth, and of Scottish extraction, and was in great favour with the King of France (Charles V.), on account of his immense wealth, for he was skilful in matters relating to commerce, and fertile in expedient and prudent in counsel, so that his opinion with regard to English affairs had, not without reason, great weight with the King and nation of France. The people of Northumberland had accidentally intercepted him with certain ships, and made him over to their earl. Having been put in safe keeping in the aforesaid castle, as we have mentioned, he had soon after been released, to the great loss of the whole realm and people; for had he been held to ransom in the usual manner of prisoners of war, he would have enriched both the King and kingdom by his vast wealth.

After inflicting upon our countrymen at Scarborough the losses we have described, the son was much elated by the good turn fortune had done him, and not only meditated, but openly threatened still further mischief to England. His career was checked, however, by Him who bringeth down the proud, and exalteth the humble; for God put it into the heart of a Londoner to deliver England, and to overthrow her enemy, as will appear to those who will read what we are about to relate. John Philpot, an able and wealthy citizen of London, having pondered much over the gross neglect, not to say treachery, of the Duke of Lancaster, and other nobles, whose duty it was to protect the kingdom, and sympathising warmly with the distress of his oppressed countrymen, raised, at his own expense, a band of a thousand men, with the intention of taking from the aforesaid John Mercer, the ships and property he had piratically carried off, and preventing the recurrence of similar attempts for the future. The Almighty, who ever furthers pious purposes, crowned with success the undertaking, so that in a short time John Philpot's men encountered and seized John Mercer's son, and took everything he had carried off from Scarborough, along with fifteen Spanish ships, richly laden, which, unluckily for them, had joined him in his piratical proceedings. This success caused great exultation among the people, every one praising and admiring the good will and loyal affection which Philpot had shown towards the King: all mouths praised only him, all men admired him; but against the chief nobles, and the soldiery previously raised, opprobrious words and harsh invectives were uttered, such as the common people are wont to use under the influence of every new excitement. The Londoners were especially abusive, saying that now the hearts of very few of the nobles were with the King, and that, although it was in irony that certain of the nobles called him King of those who had aided him in his coronation, it was nevertheless the fact that those men only remained faithful.

Macpherson in his Annals of Commerce,¹ remarks on this historical incident, as follows:—

John Mercer, a merchant of Scotland,² who used to trade to France, and was in great favour with the King of that country, on account of his prudence and good services, when returning home to Scotland in the year 1377, was driven by stress of weather upon the coast of England, seized, and confined in the castle of Scarborough, till an order from Court effected his discharge.³ His son, to revenge the injury, cruised before Scarborough, with a fleet composed of French, Scots, and Spaniards, and took several vessels. John Philpot, an opulent citizen of London, thereupon took upon himself the protection of the trade of the kingdom, neglected by the Duke of Lancaster, who, without the name of regent, governed the kingdom, in the minority of his nephew, and having hired a thousand armed men, sent them to sea in search of Mercer, whom they took, together with his prizes and fifteen Spanish vessels, his consorts, all richly loaded.⁴

² He seems to have been a burgess of Perth, apparently the chief port of Scotland after the loss of Berwick, till the royal residence, permanently fixed at Edinburgh, gave Leith a superiority over the other ports of the kingdom. He obtained charters for several tenements in and near Perth; and he also held lands of the Earl of Douglas, who calls him his vassal, in a letter sent to King Richard, remonstrating upon the injustice of the seizure.—(Robertson's Index, pp. 66, 74, 120, 129; original letter in Bib. Cott. Vesp. F. vii. f. 34.)

³ Walsingham says, If he had been released as a captive for a ransom, the King and the whole kingdom would have got inestimable riches by it, and he regrets the loss of it. This is surely overrating the opulence of Mercer at a prodigious rate. The narrow-minded monk, blinded with what he supposed, patriotic zeal, did not see any injustice in detaining a man a prisoner in time of peace.

⁴ By this enterprise Philpot got much envy and ill-will among the nobles and military men; but much applause among his fellow-citizens, who chose him for their mayor at the next election (1378.)

Hinderwell gives the following account of the Capture of Scarborough, by Andrew Mercer, in 1377.¹

A.D. 1377, first of Richard II.—A daring Scotch freebooter of the name of Mercer, having been taken by some northern ships, was committed prisoner, by the earl of Northumberland, to Scarborough Castle. His son, in revenge for his father's imprisonment, formed a desperate enterprise, and entering the harbour of Scarborough, with some Scottish, French, and Spanish ships, carried away several merchant-vessels which were lying in that port. Encouraged by this success, he for a long time cruised in these seas, and took considerable prizes. The damage which the merchants sustained by Mercer's depredations, occasioned great complaints against the government. Alderman Philpot, an opulent citizen of London, of a noble and patriotic spirit, resenting so great a national indignity, equipped a fleet of armed ships and sailed in pursuit of the Scottish pirate. He had the good fortune to encounter Mercer's fleet, and obtained a glorious victory. All the vessels taken from Scarborough were recovered, and fifteen Spanish ships laden with rich merchandise were captured, together with Mercer and the whole of his navy. The gallant alderman returned with his prizes in triumph to London. This action which gained him the general applause of the people, displeased the government, who looked upon it of dangerous consequence to suffer a private man to engage in such an important affair without their permission; but he gave such good reasons, and in so modest a manner, in justification of his enterprise, that he was honourably acquitted, and ever after lived in great esteem and reputation. Alderman Philpot was elected Mayor of London, in the second year of the reign of Richard II, and was knighted in the field by the king in 1382. * * * * * Sir John Philpot also maintained a thousand soldiers at his own charge, for the defence of the kingdom against the French, who sorely infested the southern coasts.¹

²Pinkerton thus alludes to the seizure of John Mercer, and the attack on Scarborough, by his son Andrew, and gives the letter from William Earl of Douglas, Warden of the Scottish Marches; which follows:—

The revenge of an individual contributed still further to destroy any remaining harmony between the two nations. Mercer, a Scotchman, commanding a small fleet of Scottish French, and Spanish vessels, suddenly displayed his motley squadron before Scarborough, and captured some valuable English ships of merchandise, because that his father, a wealthy merchant, residing in France, had been taken at sea, by some Northumbrians, and imprisoned at that place. The father was a man of importance at the French Court, esteemed by Charles the Wise, and his advice followed in many points detrimental to the English, and advantageous to the French commerce. Walsingham expresses unaffected concern that the Earl of Northumberland had executed justice in soon delivering him without ransom; for, adds he, "if he had been ransomed by the common rules, he might have enriched the King, and kingdom, with inestimable wealth."³ But, though the elder Mercer had been delivered, it would appear that his ships and cargo were ¹Froissart, Vol. II c. 115. Baker, p. 137. Speed, 730. Weever, 64. Ed.

²Pinkerton's History of Scotland, pp. 15-17.

³It was apparently on this occasion that a letter was written to the English King by the Earl of Douglas and Mar. It terms John Mercer, "mon homme," and says he was detained, though cast on shore, contrary to the great truce. "Mr Thomas Mercer, mon clerk," is also mentioned as captured.—See it in that treasure of original pieces, Vesp. F. vii., f. 34.

not, and that retaliation conspired with revenge to excite his son to this enterprise. The young man, boasting of the exploits continued to keep the sea, as defying the maritime power of England; till John Philpot, a wealthy and ingenuous merchant of London, stung with the disgrace offered to the commerce of his country, fitted out ships of force, provided with one thousand men, raised at his own expense, who assaulted and took Mercer, his newly-acquired prey, and fifteen Spanish ships which assisted him. The Duke of Lancaster, who swayed the councils of the young English monarch, rather checked than applauded the spirit of Philpot; and commissioners were appointed to treat with those of Scotland concerning peace.

[TRANSLATION.]

Most noble and mighty Prince, my object by these letters is to show, by way of complaint to you, Soverign Lord, and to your good Council, how that John Mercer, my vassal, has been for a long time subjected to trouble, and wrongfully distressed within your kingdom, in violation of our great truce mutually formed and agreed to between the two kingdoms; for when he had committed no fault, but was returning by sea into his own country, in the course of his lawful business, having been cast upon land by the tempestuous violence of the waves, he was arrested by your subjects, and is still held a prisoner by the Count of Northumberland. May it please you, most noble Prince, to extend to this matter your considerate attention, and by your letters to the said Count expressly to command that the said John, my vassal, be freely set at liberty, without putting him to further trouble, and raising any dispute about it. For at the next day of the marches, should this be your pleasure, he will be present to prove before your deputies, that he has transgressed in nothing, nor committed any fault in that particular, if so it please God. Besides most noble Prince, in regard to Mr Thomas Mercer, my clerk, on whose behalf I wrote before to your Excellence, and humbly showed to you, Sovereign Lord, and to your said Council, the damages, expenses, and losses, which he has incurred and sustained during the time of his detention as a prisoner; his troubles, distresses, and wrongs, which amount to 200 merks sterling, and upwards, may it please you to cause him to obtain adequate redress and restoration thereof, or otherwise to command the party or parties by whom he was arrested to compear personally, on the said day of the marches, to substantiate the charge before your above-mentioned deputies, or my said clerk will be prepared to answer by way of proof, and to hear, in like manner, what may be said against him, according to the customs of the day of marches, if so it please God. Most noble Prince, what you shall be pleased to command to be done in that respect, condescend to let me know by your letters, or by the bearer of these. May Almighty God, by His most holy grace, vouchsafe to conduct your Excellence to everlasting life. Written the 16th day of November.

THE COUNT OF DOUGLAS AND OF MARR.

(Addressed), To the most noble and mighty Prince the King of England.

Note.—In explanation of the term “mon homme,” it should be understood that a person holding land not in capite, but of a vassal, was by the superior or suzerain, styled his “homo,” and by courtesy “bonus homo,” whence the title of gudeman formerly common in Scotland. In Robertson’s Index,¹ we have evidence that John Mercer was the homo or vassal of the Earl of Douglas in the confirmation by King David the II. to John Mercer of the grant made to him by the Earl of the lands of Pettland, in Strathurd. This Charter is without date; but as we find from the Great Seal,² that the King was at Strathurd on the 18th January, 1368, it was probably on that day that this grant was confirmed.

The date of the year of the Earl’s letter is omitted; but from the expression “Que luy toute peussant Dieu, par sa tressantisme grace, votre noblesce veulle desmesner au vie perdurable,” it could not have been addressed to Richard II., who was a child of only eleven years of age at this time; it was, however, a most appropriate wish as regarded Edward III., who died within eight months after, at the age of sixty-five, broken down by disease, the loss of his renowned son the Black Prince,³ and the total discomfiture of the designs and schemes of a long reign of fifty years.

Mr Thomas Mercer, “mon clerk,” does not appear to have been released on this remonstrance, as we find a royal mandate³ to Thomas Cornwallis, Sheriff of London, dated 20th June, 1379, directing that the prisoner Thomas Mercer of Scotland, be detained in custody, but without chains; and he gets a safe conduct⁴ dated 18th October, 1379, permitting “Mr Thomas Mercer, Archdeacon of Glasgow," detained in England, to return to Scotland. He was probably a younger son of John Mercer, "mon homme," as also perhaps was "John Mercer of Scotland, Master of Arts," who gets a safe conduct,¹ dated 21st May, 1382, to proceed to Oxford, with servants, books, horses, equipages, and all other his personal property, "causa studendi."

Stowe thus refers to the exploit of John Philpot, in his Survey of London.²

"Richard II. began his reign on the the 21st June, 1377. Sheriffs of London, Nicolas Twiford, Andrew Pikeman; Mayor, Sir Nicholas Brembar.

John Philpot, a citizen of London, sent ships to the sea, and scoured it of pirates, taking many of them prisoners. He was a bold and worthy Member of Parliament at or about this time, and when a Bill was brought in, in the the name of the King, by means of the offended Duke of Lancaster, that the city of London should be no more governed by a Mayor, but by a Custos as in time before; and that the Marshall of England, who was then Lord Percie should have all the power of making arrests within the city, with other petitions tending to the like derogation of the liberty of the city he stood up and said such a matter was never heard before, and that the Mayor of London would never suffer any such arrest to be brought into the city—with more such words of the like stoutness."

The correct date of the accession of Richard II., was the 22d June, 1377. At this period the election of the Mayor of London took place on the Feast of St. Simon and St. Jude, 28th October. Sir Nicholas Brembar was therefore Mayor from the 28th October, 1377, to 28th October, 1378, when he was succeeded by Philpot, on whom the title of Chief Magistrate was conferred, in honour of his defeating and capturing Andrew Mercer, whose attack on Scarborough had taken place in the summer of 1377, and as Andrew Mercer was evidently not in Scotland, when his father presented his accounts for audit, on the 20th October, 1377, it may reasonably be inferred that he was captured about that time, and prior to the 31st December, 1377, as we learn from the following safe conduct, that Andrew Mercer was released on the 1st January, 1377-8. We also learn from it that he was sent home honourably, which would not have been the case had he been "the pirate," it is the fashion with English writers to style him. In all likelihood "the offended Duke of Lancaster," as Stowe calls him, thus honourably released the captive in order to show his contempt of John Philpot, and his strenuous supporters, the citizens of London, whose hatred carried them so far as to induce them to attempt to assassinate "old John of Gaunt, time honoured Lancaster."

Andrew Mercer is styled a royal esquire in this safe conduct, which shows he had been raised from the humble position of "Mercator Scotiae," for his gallantry.¹

Safe conduct for the Scottish Envoys coming to King Richard.

The King by his letters patent, to have force up to the first day of March next ensuing, has taken under his special protection and defence, and under his safe and secure conduct, Patrick de Graeme, knight, Mr Simon of Cettness, clerk, and John Mercer of St. Johnston, in Scotland, for coming into our kingdom of England to us and our Council, to treat of certain matters affecting us and our kingdom and the people of Scotland themselves, for remaining in this kingdom, and for returning thence into Scotland.

Given at Westminster the 25th day of March, by the King and Council.

As the year commenced at this period, on the 25th March, this safe conduct was granted on the first day of the year 1378, continuing in force one year all but 24 days; the persons mentioned in it and in the Chamberlain's accounts are the Commissioners referred to by Pinkerton.¹

The accounts enable us to fix the date of the presentation of the accounts of John Mercer, to have been the 20th October, 1377. In the accounts of Sir Walter de Byger, of 1375-6, John Lyon holds the office of keeper of the Privy Seal, in John Mercer's he is styled chamberlain, and in this capacity took over charge of his office, John Mercer, in the Safe conduct, is called of St. John's Town—the ancient name of Perth, which was also called Bertha; this is the last notice we have of him, he probably died before his son's marriage in 1379.

The following Charter shows that Andrew Mercer received a more substantial reward for his services to his King and country, than the honorary title of esquire, by obtaining a grant of the lands of Ballayach, now called Balladoes, and Balleve, in Kinross-shire, situated not very far from his paternal lands of Aldie.

The grant appears to have been conferred on the occasion of the marriage of Andrew Mercer, with "Joneta his spouse." Unfortunately the surname of the lady is not given, it is however, believed to have been Barclay, and she is supposed to have been a relative of Margaret de Barclay, the wife of Walter, Lord of Brechin, youngest son of Robert II. It was usual for the nearest relative, or connection who had sufficient court influence to obtain the wardship of a deceased proprietor, accordingly Walter Stewart gets the wardship of the umquhile Sir Andrew Mercer, in 1390, and continues to hold the office till 1400, when Michael Mercer, Sir Andrew's son, comes of age. Walter Stewart had in 1396, when both parties were in their minority, contracted Michael Mercer to his relative Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Robert Stewart, of Rosyth. They were married 12th June, 1402.

Charter by King Robert the Second to Andrew Mercer and Jonet, his spouse, of Ballayach and Balleve, in the shire of Kinross.¹

Robert, by the grace of God, King of the Scots, to all upright men, clergy and laity, of his whole dominions, Greeting. Be it known that we have given, granted, and by this our present charter have confirmed to our beloved and faithful Andrew Mercer, the lands of Ballayach and Balleve, with their pertinents within the shire of Kinross: To be held and possessed by the same Andrew, and Jonet, his spouse, and the longest liver of them two, and by the heirs lawfully begotten, or to be begotten betwixt them, of us and our heirs in feu and heritage, by all their right measures and divisions, with all and sundry their liberties, commodities, easements, and just pertinents whatsoever, belonging to the said lands, or which shall, in whatever way, justly belong to them in future, freely, quietly, fully, wholly, and honourably, well, and in peace: The said Andrew, and Jonet his spouse, and the longest liver of them two, and their heirs, rendering therefrom to us and our heirs yearly a silver penny, in name of blench farm only, at the feast of Pentecost, at Ballachach. In witness whereof we have commanded our seal to be appended to our present charter. Witnesses, the venerable father in Christ, William, Bishop of St Andrews, John of Carric, our eldest son, Steward of Scotland, Robert of Fife, and of Menteith, our beloved son William of Douglas and of Marr, our cousin, Earls; the venerable man Master John of Peblys, archdeacon of St Andrews, chancellor, James of Lyndesay, our dearest nephew, and Alexander of Lyndesay, knights. At Edinburgh, on the 6th day of the month of March, in the eighth year of our reign.

Note.—The lands of Ballayach (now called Baladoes), and Baleve, in Kinross-shire, have since the 6th March, 1378-9, been in the possession of the Mercers of Aldie, and are now the property of the Marchioness of Lansdowne, who succeeded to them on the death of Countess Flahault, on the 11th November, 1867. They were probably granted to Andrew as an acknowledgment of his services, and on his marriage with Jonet, whose surname is supposed to have been Barclay, she is believed to have been a relative of Margaret de Barclay, the wife of Walter Stewart, lord of Brechin, subsequently Earl of Athole, youngest son of Robert the II., who was executed in April, 1437, for the murder of James the 1st, his nephew.

With the knowledge afforded by the preceding recueil of facts, bearing on the history of John Mercer and his son, it is amusing to read the version of the story given by Mons. Michel, who thus makes history:—¹

“Les mers étaient alors infestées de ces aventuriers de toute nation. L’un d’eux, Ecossais d’origine, se rendit particulièrement redoutable à la marine anglaise. C’était un homme d’une grande énergie et fort entreprenant, qui, à la tête d’une escadre de vaisseaux armés in guerre, montés par des corsaires écossais, français et espagnols, écumait le détroit et s’enrichissait par de nombreuses prises. Si nous en croyons Walsingham,² le père de cet audacieux bandit, John Mercer, était un marchand d’une fortune considérable, qui résidait en France et jouissait d’un grand crédit à la cour. Pendant un de ses voyages, il avait été pris par des croiseurs du Northumberland et emmené à Scarborough. Peu reconnaissant du bon procédé du comte, qui l’avait renvoyé sans rançon, le fils attaqua ce port de mer et pillà les navires qui s’y trouvaient. Telle était la faiblesse du gouvernement de Richard II, qu’il ne fut pris aucune mesure contre l'auteur de ce coup de main; il fallut que Philpot, une riche marchand de Londres, armât à ses frais plusieurs grands vaisseaux de guerre et se mit à la poursuite de Mercer. Il le défit complètement, s'empara de sa personne et se rendit maître de toute son escadre, où se trouvaient quinze vaisseaux espagnols et une grande quantité de butin."

In the Athenæum for 1856¹ is a review of M'Kie's "Historical Account of Folkestone." With reference to some remarks therein made on the capture of the "fierce Scotch pirate, Mercier," General Alexander Cavalie Mercer contributes, the following criticism and anecdote:—

"Allow me to correct a slight mistake in the Athenæum of August last,² and to state that the 'fierce Scotch pirate' there mentioned was Mercer, not 'Mercier.' John Mercer, though termed a pirate in the parlance of that day (2 Rich. II.), was, in reality, a gallant and patriotic subject to Scotland's King. At a time when England and Scotland's royal navies were mere figments—when national armaments were got up by contributions from certain sea-ports, corporations, and wealthy individuals—the said John, at his own expense, fitted out a squadron, with which he soon became the terror of England's coast, from the Tweed to the Land's End. So great was his renown as a naval chieftain, that the Kings of France and Spain both sent ships of war to place themselves under his command; and the latter further sent him a commission of Admiral in the Spanish Royal Navy. I only obtrude these remarks as an introduction to the following little anecdote, which may perhaps be thought of sufficient interest to obtain a place in the columns of the Athenæum. Somewhere about the beginning of the nineteenth century, a cousin of mine (Lieut.-Colonel Mercer, of the Life Guards, and of Queen Anne Street, West), passing through St. Paul's Churchyard, was surprised at seeing a handsome piece of plate in a shop-window bearing his own family arms. Naturally enough, he went in to enquire whence it came, and was informed that it was one of numerous articles, which from time to time, had been brought for sale by an old woman, who lived somewhere in the neighbourhood—that some only of these bore the arms of Mercer, the greater part being totally different. My cousin purchased the cup (for such it was), and, having ascertained the whereabouts of the person who had sold it, went in search of, and, after some trouble, found her in a miserable garret, in a lane near St. Paul's. The poor creature was on her death-bed, and he only succeeded in eliciting from her, that, to the best of her knowledge, she was the last of the Philpots of Upton Court, East Kent—from a series of misfortunes the family had been reduced to poverty,—and that she had for some time subsisted on the sale of what remained of the family plate, among which was much that had been taken on board the ship of the Scotch pirate Mercer, by her great ancestor the Alderman, Sir John Philpots. It were needless to add, that Colonel Mercer did what he could to alleviate the misery of this last remnant of an ancient family, but in vain; she expired almost immediately afterwards. The beauty of the cup had saved it from the crucible, to which all the other articles had been consigned. In shape it is an urn has two handles, and the cover is attached by a hinge, highly embossed, having on one side the family arms as used at this day. In size it may be about a quart. This story was related to me by Colonel Mercer, himself, very many years ago; and I was somewhat surprised, subsequently to his death, on finding his son (the late Lieut.-General Douglas Mercer, C.B.), totally ignorant of it until mentioned by me."

This cup is now in the possession of Mr Mercer Henderson, of Fordel, in Fifeshire, the grandson of the late Lieut.-Colonel George Mercer, of the 1st Life Guards. The arms were engraved on the cup after its purchase from the last of the Philpot family. The arms of Andrew Mercer, at the time of his capture were not those now borne; the arms on his seal in 1385, are a chevron between three mullets, the whole surmounted by a helmet bearing for crest a peacock's head, and neck coupé, these were the arms of the Murrays of Tullybardine, borne by the Mercers as arms of affection, Andrew's mother having been Ada, daughter of Sir Andrew Murray, 2d of Tullybardine, from whom Andrew Mercer probably acquired his christian name of Andrew.

The following remarks from the Introduction to the Liber Albus,¹ give us an idea of the status and importance of sea captains, about the year 1419, the date at which the Liber Albus was compiled:—

"The only additional remark to be made on this subject relates to the captains or masters of ships. From the terms of a provision made with reference to average contributions in cases of Jattison, we may conclude, these personages were in general men of some opulence, and of very considerable consequence in their own estimation at least. Among the Articles there mentioned as exempted from contribution under such circumstances, and as belonging to them almost as a matter of course are the shipmaster's belt, his neck-chain (monile), his silver drinking cup, and the ring on his finger."

¹The Liber Albus is the first Volume of the Munimenta Guildhallæ Londoniensis, Edited by H. T. Riley, Esq., Barrister-at-law, pp. 97 and 23.

The cup was probably the more prized by the Philpot family, as showing the status of the captive. The badge of an admiral was his bauldric or belt: this in heraldry is represented by the fesse; accordingly Andrew Mercer, when he was knighted in 1385, obtained a distinct coat-of-arms, in which his naval rank is designated by the fesse, charged with three besants, denoting the office of Receptor Pecuniarum Regis, held by his father, and probably conjointly by himself. Nesbit, who was ignorant of the family history, sub voce besant, says one of the family was an Admiral, and the besants testify that the acquirer of the escutcheon had been connected with the Royal Treasury.¹

In proof of the excitement caused by the audacious Scottish bandit among the merchants of England, which was also the cause of Commissioners being sent to King Richard, the following petition and its response, dated 25th April, 1379, to which Hinderwell refers, may be here inserted. It was presented towards the end of 1378, or beginning of 1379, and lays the blame of the injuries done along the north-east coast of England, for the space of two years previously, to the French. As, however, the French could not have ventured to commit ravages at a spot so distant from their own shores as Scarborough, running the gauntlet of the English ships and ports, without the powerful support of the Scots, the latter ought to have been the parties complained of. The pecuniary mulct of £1000, which according to some authorities represents £30,000, of our present money, especially when added to the 2000 merks brought to account as indemnification, to those shipwrecked off Northumberland, in 1376, which at the same rate would represent £26,670, making a total of £56,670, doubtless went far to indemnify John Mercer and his son in fitting out their expedition:—

In like manner, the Commons petition—Whereas the French Enemies with great arms and several ships of war, have been continually, and still are, in the northern parts; and especially in the direction of the coast of Scarborough, which Town is dangerously situated on the sea, exposed to the assaults of the said enemies; and the people of the said town, through captures and ransoms by the said enemies, amounting to one thousand pounds, which have been payed in these two years last past, are thus destroyed and impoverished; and several of the said people being still in prison in Boulogne and other places more distant, that the said Town is at the point of being burnt and destroyed, and all the coast around, and that in a short time unless speedy remede is ordained. May it please our said Lord the King, and His very wise Council, considering the great damage and peril which have happened to the said Town and the surrounding coast, and are still likely to happen, to order and appoint certain vessels of war upon the said coasts, to guard them against the malice and fear of the said enemies, and that during the wars, for the safety of the said Town, and the Castle of our Lord the King, there situated, and of all the surrounding country.

Answer. This matter partly concerns the merchants of the said coasts who are in this Parliament, and by their advice, and that of others who send their merchandise into these markets by the sea, remede is ordained, in manner as the Earl of Northumberland, and Mayor of London, who were assigned in Parliament to treat concerning this affair, know more fully to declare.

This is the ordinance and grant by the advice of the merchants of London, and of other merchants towards the North, with consent of all the Commons of Parliament, in presenee of the Earl of Northumberland, and the Mayor of London, for the guard and protection of the sea, and coasts of the Admiralty of the North, with two ships, two barges, and two belandres (small ships), armed and equipped for war upon the coasts, etc.

John Philpot was the Mayor of London at the date of this Petition. He had been elected in acknowledgment of the service he had done his country, in revenging the injury inflicted at Scarborough, in 1377.

On the 16th June, subsequent, an order¹ was passed by the King in Council, directing the levying of certain customs to defray the expenses of the war vessels appointed for the protection of Scarborough, and the North-Eastern coast of England.

The next document in chronological order is the Charter by Sir Walter Leslie, Earl of Ross, dated at Elgin on the 18th August, 1381, conferring a grant of the lands of Faithly, in the barony of Kynedward (now King Edward), in Aberdeenshire, the peculiarity of this charter is, that it in like manner with the charter for Dalkaith,² is granted to "our well-beloved cousin Andrew Mercer."

This appears to be something more than a mere assumption of the royal style, for Sir Walter's widow in ratifying the charter of her late husband, styles Andrew Mercer her husband's and her own cousin; David Stewart (the son of Euphemia Ross, 2nd wife of Robert II., and aunt of Euphemia, widow of Sir Walter Leslie the granter of the Dalkaith Charter was indubitably Euphemia's first cousin, and the Charter of 20th June, 1364,¹ by which Andrew Barclay grants and William Earl of Ross confirms the grant of Kinnaird to Andrew Mercer—may point to a family connection between the Rosses and Barclays and Andrew; but it is difficult to account for any connection with Walter Leslie, who was the 2nd son of Sir Andrew Leslie of that Ilk. He married Euphemia Ross before the 13th December, 1365, having run off with her.

To all who shall see and hear this Charter, Walter of Lesley, Lord of Ross, wishes eternal salvation in the Lord: Know ye that we have given, granted, and by this our present Charter, have confirmed to our beloved cousin Andrew Mercer, for his faithful service rendered, and to be rendered to us, our whole land of Faythley, with the pertinents in the barony of Kynedward and county of Aberdeen, the which land with the pertinents, Janet of Menzies, daughter and heiress of the late Alexander of Menzies, lady of the said land, . . . in her pure and lawful widowhood, resigned simply to us at Doune in Menteith, on the fifth day of the month of June, in the year of the Lord one thousand three hundred and eighty-one: To be held by the same Andrew, his heirs and assignees, of us and our heirs in feu and heritage for ever. Alexander by the grace of God, bishops of the churches of Moray and Ross, Sir Alexander and William de Lindsay, brothers, our well-beloved Sir Walter Steward, Sir Robert of Innes, and Sir Richard Comyn, knights; Masters William of Dingwall, and Alexander Man, dean and archdean of the church of Ross, Adam of Urquhart, Alexander of Chisholm, Hugh of Munro, Robert Burnen', and many others. At Elgin, the eighteenth day of the month of August, and year aforesaid.

Although the charters have not yet been discovered, yet from the two following Ratifications it is evident that Andrew Mercer did obtain grants from Walter Leslie, and his wife Euphemia Ross, for the lands of Tyry, also in the barony of Kynedward, and annual rents out of the lands of Finletter, Netherdale, Pittendreich, and Culbreny, in the shire of Banff. Robert II. confirms or ratifies the conjoint grants by Walter and Euphemia, of the lands of Faithley and Tyry, on the 14th February, 1382, thus—and Tyry in Aberdeen; and annual Rents out of Finlater, Netherdale, Pittendreich, and Culbreny, in Banff.

To all who shall see and hear of this Charter, Euphemia, Lady of Rosse, daughter and heiress of William, late Earl of Rosse, Greeting in the Lord everlasting. Seeing that Jonet of Meyness, daughter and heiress of the late Alexander of Meyness. Lord of Forthyrgill, etc., in the plenitude of her spontaneous goodwill, living in her lawful state of widowhood, gave up per fustum et baculum, and purely and simply resigned to our dearest Lord, Lord Walter of Lesley, formerly our husband and lord of Rosse, all and each of the lands of Faythley, with appurtenances, in the barony of Kynedward, within the Sheriffdom of Aberdeen, which belonged to the said Jonet: And seeing that afterwards the said Lord Walter formerly our husband, with our consent and assent, and on mature advice and after distinct deliberation with his and our council, granted in perpetuity the foresaid lands of Faythley, with appurtenances to his and our beloved cousin Andrew Mercer, and his heirs and assignees, for his service to him and to us rendered, and to be rendered in future, for a pair of gilt spurs in nomine albefirme, to be paid annually by the foresaid Andrew, his heirs and assignees, to the heirs of the said Lord Walter our husband, and to ours procreated betwixt us, or in future to be procreated by ourself: And seeing also that the said Lord Walter formerly our husband, likewise with our consent and assent, granted in perpetuity, to the foresaid Andrew, his heirs and assignees, nine pounds sterling, proportionally and annually due from Fynleter Natyrdale, and Petyndreych, and twenty-four shillings annually due from Culbreny, within the Sheriffdom of Banff, for a pair of gilt spurs to be paid to our Lord the King, in nomine albefirme only annually, by the same Andrew, his heirs and assignees, and the lands of Tyre with appurtenances in the barony of Kynedward within the Sheriffdom of Aberdeen, for one penny sterling, to be paid annually in nomine albefirme to us and our heirs as above, by the before-mentioned Andrew, his heirs and assignees, only if demanded. We truly, now at length, abiding in our pure and lawful viduity, ratify in perpetuity the aforesaid donations, etc., of the said Lord Walter, formerly our husband, of the foresaid lands of Faythley and Tiry, and the annual rents forth of Findleter Nathyrdale, Petndreych, and of Culbreny, with their pertinents, made with our consent and assent to the aforesaid Andrew, his heirs and assigns, as the charters of the said Lord Walter, formerly our husband, made by himself thereanent more fully contain and testify, etc. In witness whereof our seal is set to the present charter at our camp of Dingwall, on the ninth day of the month of March, in the year of the Lord, one thousand three hundred and eighty-one, in presence of these witnesses, the venerable father in Christ, Lord Alexander, by the grace of God, Bishop of Ross, Master William de Dingwale, deacon of Ross, Walter Stewart, Richard Comyne, Knights; Adam de Urchard, Sheriff of Crombachy, Hugh de Munro, and many others.¹

Dingwall,
9 March,
1381-2.

Walter Leslie appears to have died between the dates of the two preceding charters. His widow married, prior to the 25th July, 1382, probably on compulsion, Alexander, fourth son of Robert II.: he is better known as the Wolf of Badenoch. He treated her most cruelly, and died on 24th July, 1394, and is buried in Dunkeld Cathedral; she died about the same time.

The next charter grants 40 merks out of the Customs of Perth to Andrew Mercer: this forms the connecting link with Andrew Mercer, Esquire, and the "umquhile Sir Andrew Mercer" mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls some years subsequent.
