INDEX ARMORIAL.

PREFACE.

THE surname of French, so identified with France, which affords considerable historical information in regard to the origin and change in its name.

The modern France, under the Romans, was called Gallia or Gaul, and became Francia, or more strictly speaking, Francia Occidentalis or Latina, the land of the Salien Franks, in the latter part of the fifth century, A.D., when these Franks or Franks had permanently settled there as rulers under King Chlodowig or Clovis of the Merovingian dynasty. In his reign Salic law was introduced into France, by which royal lands were made the reward of military service, so that possession under this law was in itself a title to nobility, and those holding Salic land were consequently Franks, the only freemen in the country.

These Franci or Franks were originally a confederacy of German tribes of the lower Rhine, "who were first mentioned in the year 241 A.D. by Roman soldiers, unless we give to Peutinger's Itinerary an earlier date than is probable; these "soldiers of Aurelian had previously been on the north German frontier, and as they marched out of Rome on their way to the Persian war, they sang (Vopiscus in Aureliano) a rough barrack song:

"Mille Sarmatas, mille Francos, semel et semel occidimus;

"Mille, mille, mille, mille, mille Persas quaerimus."

"Francus habet nomen a feritate sua," says Ermoldus Nigellus; "and the word carries the sense of boldness, defiance, freedom." And as it did not lend itself well to Latin verse-endings, and as its origin was late, we find the silver and leaden poets delighting to call the Franks, Sicambri, as in the famous speech of St. Remi, Archbishop of Rheims, in A.D. 496, when he baptized Chlodowig, and addressed him in these words: "Depone mitis colla, Sicamber, etc.," or perhaps more presentable in its English translation: "Bow down thy neck, O Sicambrian, and pray to that which thou didst burn, and burn that to which thou didst formerly pray."

"These are sufficient reasons to account for the silence of Cæsar, Tacitus and Ptolemy as regards these Franks, though they speak of other tribes which occupied the same districts in which afterwards we find the Franks."

The name seems to have been adopted by certain Germanic tribes which had leagued together to fight for freedom; hence the name of Franc, as applied to France, in its social condition implied the free, as in its national signification it indicated the people.

Passing from the early history of the name associated with a people and a country, we come to its application as an individual and family name.

It appears in old high German as Franco, in its Latin forms of Francus, Francensis and Franciscus, and in the dialect of Francia as Franc. These early examples in different languages, with the variations of Francigena, Francesius, Francon, Francesis, François, Français, Franceis, Fraunceys, Fraunces, Fraunck, and Franx are the principal illustrations found among the ancient archives; and at the period of anglicization in Great Britain, from many of these, the surname of French had its origin.

As regards the period when surnames came into existence, the statement of a well-known antiquary of the past, will probably meet the approval of those more modern:

"In the reign of Hugh Capet, at the end of the tenth century, surnames began to be used in France; in England, at the Conquest."

"In Scotland such names began to exist, as appears by the 'Inquisitio David, Principis Cumbrensis,' in the early part of the twelfth century." But it was many years before surnames came into general use in Great Britain.

An ancient instance in Normandy was that of Franc or Franco, Archbishop of Rouen, who arranged the conference of St. Clair-sur-Epte, in the year 912, between the Norman Hrolfr, or Rollo, the First Duke of Normandy, and Charles the Simple, King of France. In the following century are found, in French records, the names of Hugo Franco and Gualterius Francus.

According to Guillaume de Tyr and Albert d'Aix, "the Chevalier Francon distinguished himself in the First Crusade, at the siege of Antioch, in 1098; he was among the company of Crusaders belonging to the army of Lorraine, under the command of Godefroi (de Bouillon) the Duke of that province, and he belonged to the town of Mechel, on the river Meuse, During the darkness of night some Turks scaled the wall of a remote and undefended tower in the hilly portion of the city of Antioch; but a passer-by gave the alarm, which promptly brought to its rescue Henry de Hache with the young and brave chevaliers Francon and Siegmar, and in the encounter the Turks were annihilated, at the cost of the lives of these brave chevaliers. Siegmar was killed defending his kinsman and fellow-townsmen, the Chevalier Francon, who had fought valiantly, but had received a mortal wound."

Normandy shows many of the name, and in this respect the Cotentin is particularly interesting. Henry, the son of William the Conqueror, had the title of Earl of this district, and from it came many of the companions of the Conqueror, some of them identified historically with the more northern counties of England. Among these hereafter mentioned, particularly associated with these surnames, were the Albenceios, Bruces, Foliots and the Valoines.

The early Norman rolls, relating to the Cotentin, show in the years 1180 and 1195, two of the surname of Franceis; in the first roll, that of Willielmus Franceis, in the roll of 1195, Rogerus de Franceis. The name, as well, is found in other districts of this province; in the Bailiwick of the Bessin, in 1198, Willielmus Le Franceis and Osmo Lafranceise; Bailiwick of Caen, in 1198, Matthew Le Franc, Hub't de La Franche, Ricardus, Willielmus and Arnoldus Le Franc, and in the year 1195 among the contributors of the inhabitants of the city of Caen, towards the ransom of Richard Coeur de Lion, were Franco and Franconi. In the list of the crown debtors of the Bailiwick of the Oximin, for the year 1198, appear the names of Robertus and Johannes Le Franc. The Exchequer roll of the Bailiwick of Pont Audemer has, in the year 1198, a Willielmus Le Franceis, and in the year 1203, Willielmus Francus. In this last named year the name of Walter Le Franceis is found in the following record:

“After the murder of Prince Arthur and the defection of Comte Robert of Sêes, William de Fougères, Juhel de Mayenne, and other Britons, were among the first to declare themselves in opposition to King John, who thereupon issued his writ to the Seneschal of Normandy, dated at Sêes, 27 Jan. 1203, commanding him to cause Walter Le Franceis (Francigena) to have, without delay, Hudimersnil with all its appurtenances and chattels, which was belonging to William de Fougères, who is against us with Comte Robert of Sêes."

Galterus Franceis, in the year 1210, held in Normandy, under King Philip the Second, of France, one-third of a knight's fee at Cleville.

Among those present at the assizes of Caen in 1245, was Henricus François.

John le Franc is mentioned in a confirmation charter of King Louis, in 1257, to a charter of Johannes Goceselin, burgess of Pont Arche, granting certain rights to Beate Marie de Bonupartu (Bonport) among which was some meadow land at Sotevillam, on one side of which was the meadow of John le Franc.

In 1277 among the gifts to the monastery of Saveigneio was one from John Le Franc, at Mathonem in the Bailiwick of Caen.

At Paris, in the year 1278, King Philip the Third gives to the Chapter of Bayeux land in several places,—that of William le Francheis in Baiocas, in the Bailiwick of Caen, at a yearly rental.

"The King to all people, etc. Know that we have given and granted to our diligent Lord William Fraunceys, Esquire, for his faithful services, the castle and houses of Clinchamp, in the Earldom of Perche, which lately belonged to Baldevini de Turry, knight, together with all land, possessions, rents, profit, forfeiture, and all other advantages belonging to the said castle, and after him the said castle and houses, together with all the said advantages, are granted to the male heirs of his body. For this he shall annually give a sword, at the feast of Saint George, at the Castle of Caen ; and the said William, and his heirs, must always, at their own cost, be ready for service in time of war, and keep sufficient provisions in the castle for the soldiers. Given at Villa de Bernay, the first day of June, 1418, by the King himself."

In the description of the grant in a charter dated at Pont Arche the 1st day of July, 1418, the king gives to Lord Thomas Andrew, for his lifetime, the villa of Harefleu, which belonged to Johannes Lefrie, the rebel, on one side of which was the hospicium of Radulphus de France.

Mahiet Le Franchoyoys had conferred upon him, in the year 1419, the sergeantry of the wood, in the forest of Yang, on account of his guardianship of Belencombe, election of d'Arques, vacant by the death of William Le Franchoyoys.

The parish of Canon, in the jurisdiction of the Castle of Falaise, is placed under the protection of Galfridus Le Franceys, Esquire, by order of the King, dated at "the royal Castle of Dalenson, in the royal Dukedom Normandy," 28 October, 1417-22.

Guillaume Franceys received from King Henry V, of England, the land of Clynchamp, upon the condition that he gave a sword, annually, at the feast of St. George, at Caen.

Besides these rolls additional information is gathered from the cartulaires of certain abbeys of Normandy,¹ viz :

Abbaye de Saint-Jean-de-Falaise in the Diocèse de Séez, founded in the year 1127. Robert de France and his wife Alix, daughter of Onfroy Le Chat, granted to Hamon d'Aneis the ruins and the mansion which are situated between the house of Samson Le Gagneur and that of the said Hamon. Without date.

Alverède de Vesqueville and his wife Béatrix La Française, in 1251, make a donation to the abbey of Falaise. Pierre de Pont-d'Ouilly, son of Pierre, Burgess of Falaise, granted the abbey of this town all the privileges he had in the fief, which Mathilda La Française held of him.

William de France and Jean Le Commun discovered, in 1371, a mistake in their account with the abbey of Saint-Jean-de-Falaise in regard to a house at Guibray, near the cemetery of l'Hôtel-Dieu.

Some acts in regard to fiefs, given at Guibray by the Abbey of Falaise, from 1410 to 1417, to Jean Le Jour, Jean Le Roy, Henri Montcocq, Raoul Le Moine, Jeanne, widow of Jean Lanion, and to Pierre de France.

Abbaye d'Ardennes, Diocèse de Bayeux. Petronille La Française, daughter of Foulques Le Français, grants to Ardennes, 1271, a rental to be taken at Herouville.

Robert de Trun, clerk, of Saint-Nicholas of Caen, with consent of his wife Egydie, granted to William Le François the homage which Jean de Guernon had given the said Egydie, his wife, for a house, situated at Mathieu.

The above charter of the year 1290 was granted before the proper authorities of the parish of Mathone. The seal of Robert de Trun is attached to it.

Prieuré de Sainte-Barbe (en Auge), Diocèse de Lisieux. The rental at Ouville, which was given to Sainte-Barbe, in 1290, by Raoul Le France, was confirmed by Troé, his wife.

Richard Le François, of Quétiéville, Esquire, granted to Sainte-Barbe, in 1277, a rent for the service of the sacristy of the priory.

Richard Le François, Esquire, resigns to Sainte-Barbe, in 1283, the rights which he had to the field of Perche, situated in Quétiéville, which Geoffroy Grente held of the monks of Sainte-Barbe.

Abbaye de Barberie ou Berberie, Diocèse de Bayeux. Roger Le François gives to the abbey of Berberie, in 1250, a piece of land at Vieux-Frêne.

Evêché et Chapitre de Bayeux. Richard, called Le François, clerk, and son of William Le François of Bayeux, granted, in 1243, to William Guerest, a piece of land in the parish of Saint-Laurent-de-Bayeux for the service of homage, and other considerations.

William Le Francheis, or Le François, gives in 1257, to the Chapter a yearly rent for the repose of the soul of Robert Le Gamp, Prebendary of Bayeux.

Nicolas, called Le François, son of William Le François, of Bayeux, granted in 1270, to the Chapter, a yearly rental, and other considerations, for the repose of the soul of Richard de Clermont, formerly the Prebendary of Bayeux.

Abbaye de Saint-Pierre-sur-Dives, Diocèse de Séez. William, called François, son of Richard Le François, gave, in 1251, to the alms of Saint-Pierre-sur-Dives a yearly rent, which Geoffroy d'Aunon, son of Hervé d'Aunon, owed him.

Richard Le François, of the parish of Boissey, acknowledged before the Viscount of Falaise, in 1381, that he owed the monks of Saint-Pierre-sur-Dives a certain rent, yearly, for the possession of the meadow, which is called the Bissons, in the grand meadow, situated at Boissey.

Prieuré du Plessis-Grimould, Diocèse de Bayeux.—The parish of Montchavet. Robert de Beaumont, Count of Leicestre, gave to the priory of Plessis-Grimould, the church of Saint-Samson-de-Montchavet, with all the rights attached to the church of Saint-Evrault. This charter without date, probably twelfth century, not later than 1206, is witnessed by Nicolas de Gloz, Philip d'Aubigné, Guillaume Chapelain, André d'Ocannes, Lucas, clerk, Gautier Le François and others.

Abbaye de Troarn, Diocèse de Bayeux. Confirmation of its foundation in the year 1068.

Agnes, the wife of Michel Le François, gave, with the consent of her husband, to the abbey of Troarn, all that she possessed in and near that town.

Michel Le François confirms by another charter, without date, the preceding donation.

Walter, Abbot of Saint-Jean-de-Falaise, and the canons of the said place, make an agreement with the abbey of Troarn, in regard to the donations which were made to the last mentioned abbey by Agnes, wife of Michel Le François.

Abbaye de Sainte-Trinité-de-Caen. William, the Prior, and the prebendaries of the church of Saint-Jean-l'Evangeliste, of Legh, passed an act, in the year 1227, agreeing to give a yearly rental to Madame Jeune, Abbess of Sainte-Trinité-de-Caen, for some pieces of land, situated at Felsted, which she had ceded to the said priory. This act was given in presence of Hugues de Gybesworth, Henry de Kemeselt, Robert de Welles, Jean, son of Nicholas, Henry de Beauchamp, Richard Forestier, Roger de Ranlingherst, Richard de Plessis, Geoffroy de Flamundshey, Jehan de Horsted, Thomas, son of Osbert, Guillaume Mortin, Robert Langlois, Guillaume Le François, Adam Glainville, Raoul le jeune, and others.

Abbaye de Villers-Canivet, Diocèse de Seez. Raoul Le François granted, in 1258, to the Abbey of Sainte-

Marie-de-Villers, a piece of land and rental to be taken at Lessart.

Abbaye d'Ardennes, Diocèse of Bayeux. Mathilde, called Française, gives, in 1252, to Stéphanie, daughter of Robert Poutrel, a yearly rental to be taken from the parish of Fay.

The earliest instances, thus far discovered in Great Britain, are recorded in the Domesday Survey, among which is a certain Franco, a Fidelis of Robert de Albemarle, who is called, in the Dives Roll, Robert d'Aumale; but Monsieur Magny, in his list, gives him the title of Comte. He was among the companions of William, Duke of Normandy, at the conquest of England, holding Mideltone and many other manors in County Devon as tenant in capite under King William, as Franco held Teweberie under Robert de Albemarle.

The sheriff of this same county, in the year 1167-8, appears to have been Robert Franceis, and in the same year you find in Berkshire, Willielmus Francesius.

A clerical member of the name appears in the Domesday Survey, in the one-hundredth of Derinlau, Shropshire, where is found Franco, the Priest, who had as his Lord the Bishop of Hereford.

In Yorkshire there are several entries in the Domesday Survey of a certain Franco, who held in Catefos, Biletone, Meretone, and Risun, all in the Wapentake of Gerlestre, as tenant in capite under Drogo de Bevrere, (La Beuvriere in the arrondissement of Bethune, a short distance N. W. of Aumale, in Normandy,) who held a vast estate in the part of Holderness, where he built a castle; these lands came again into the possession of King William, who gave them to his half-sister Adelais, Countess Aumale. She was a widow before she married Odo, Count of Champagne, who in right of his wife became Lord of Aumale in Normandy, and he was, by King William's creation, about 1071, made Earl of Holderness.

It is most probable that the first occurrence of the surname of Francais bearing a prænomen or baptismal name, found in published records relating to England, was in the county of York, between the years 1097 and 1101, and then in the personage of Robert Francais,¹ one of the few recorded knights of the second Robert de Brus, whose friendship with Earl David of Scotland at the court of King Henry the First of England, seems to have culminated soon after his accession to the Scottish Throne in 1124, as King David the First,² by the establishment of De Brus in the Annandale of Scotland, and his son, the third Robert de Brus, inherited his Scotch possessions.

Chalmer refers "to Robert de Brus obtaining the grant of Annandale," and goes on to state "as the

1 The record reads "Robertus de Brus, and three of his own knights, Rogerus de Rosel, Wydo de Lofthus and Robertus Francais." There was a Lordship of Rosel, in the Cotentin of Normandy.

2 Sir Robert de Brus is the first witness to a charter of Earl David of Scotland, to the church of Glasgow, at the period of its restoration and building; in the foundation charter of Kelso; and he is again mentioned as the first witness after Bishop John of Glasgow, in two charters of King David the First, in the year 1126, the third year of his reign.

charters of King David established a tenure by the sword, we may easily suppose, that Bruce brought with him into the Annandale Knights and Yeomen from Yorkshire, as indeed might be shown by tracing to their source some respectable families in Dumfriesshire." The feudality existing in Yorkshire to which reference has already been made, the origin of the Bruces and Franceis in Normandy, the known fact that a William Franceis was a witness of charters to the monks of Melrose in Scotland as early as the reign of King William the Lyon,—these circumstances taken in connection with later feudatory relations with the Bruces in the Annandale, strongly favor the opinion that one at least of the surname of Franceis may have been an early settler with the second Robert de Brus in the valley of the Annan.

According to M. Gerville, Château d'Adam, the castle of the Bruces of Great Britain and Normandy was located in the Barony of Brix, of the Cotentin in Normandy, and was built about the middle of the 12th century by Adam de Brix,¹ Baron of Brix, who gave it that Christian name.

The abbe Delamare refers to Adam de Brix¹ as the founder in the time of King Henry of England, of the church of St. Pierre de La Lutumiere, also called St. Jean, and M. L. de Pontaumont continues by recording

St. Martin-le-Gréard as belonging to the Barony of Brix, and that in the year 1144 it was given by Adam de Brueys,¹ Baron of Brix, to the abbots of the abbey of St. Sauveur-le-Vicomte in the Contentin, and that in this same year Adam de Brueys,¹ Baron de Brix, gave the church of Couville to this same abbey, and that Pierre de Bueys in the year 1155 confirmed this donation.

Besides these names there seems to have been at an earlier period, on the authority of the Abbe Delamare several others of this surname in Normandy, identified with the Cotentin viz. Ralph, Roger, and Richard de Brix, who succeeded as bishops in succession as late as the year 1132 the famous Geoffroy de Montbray, Bishop and builder in the Cotentin of the Cathedral of Coutances.

Delamare continues: "Roger de Brix who held the see of Coutances for 13 years, was a widower"; William "his son, one brother and three nephews, attachés of Henry, King of England, perished" in the year 1120 "off Barfleur in the Cotentin, in the famous shipwreck of the Nef Blanche."¹ Roger de Brix assisted at the council of Rouen in 1118, at that of Reims in the following year, and died in 1126." "His successor in the bishoprick was Richard de Brix."

² King Henry the 1st had confided to Fitz Stephen, the master of the "White Ship," his son Prince William, his natural son Richard, with his daughter the Countess of Perche and their suite, and all on board were lost, except a butcher, who alone remained to tell the tale.

From these records of Normandy and Great Britain we naturally come to the conclusion that the earlier Christian names borne by members of the family of Bruce, were Robert, William, Ralph, Roger, Richard, Adam and Pierre, and of these baptismal names, Roger, Richard and Pierre are found in an earlier account of Normandy, before they appeared in the records of this family in Great Britain, which indicates a desire to perpetuate in the latter country, the earlier names particularly associated with the Bruce family of Normandy. Among these Christian names, Robert, William and Roger were the earliest recorded names of those bearing the surname of Franceis, having recorded feudatory relations with the Bruces of Great Britain; and in Scotland we also find, about the year 1200, one Adam Franceis, and at a later period most all the Lairds of Thornydykes in Scotland had Robert as their Christian name. This similarity of the earliest of these Christian names seems to give additional interest to the feudal relations of the Franceis with the Bruces.

You find the record of the Franceis in the Cotentin at a somewhat later date than you find these few reminiscences of the Bruces; and the rolls of the 12th century, of this district, to which reference has already been made, show only two of this name, William and Roger Franceis, the same baptismal names as are found in the Annandale of Scotland after King John of England had lost the Duchy of Normandy, and then as feudatories of Robert de

Brus, as appears in the Scotch records circa 1218, wherein it is stated "that Roger, son of William Franciscus, quit claims to Sir Robert de Brus, Lord of Annandale, land which the grantee held of him in the territory of Annan, for the excambion of land in the territory of Moffat, which William Franciscus, the grantee's father, formerly held of Sir Robert de Brus."

M. Gerville further informs us that the Château of Brix was confiscated early in the 13th century, and that the reason of the confiscation was without doubt because most of the lords who owned the castles in Normandy were far better off in England, and so retained their more lucrative possessions in the latter country; and thus we may account also for the Franceis apparently preferring to retain their possessions in Scotland under the Bruces.

Among those holding by "veteri feoffamento" direct or by inheritance from the reign of Henry the First, according to the list of Knight-Fees, compiled in the fourteenth year of the reign of Henry the Second, were the following: Aluredus Franceys in Dorset held one-fifth of a knight's fee under Aluredus de Lincolnia. In Wiltshire, Humfridus Francigena held under the Bishop of Salisbury and Willielmus de Franceis in Northamptonshire under Robertus Foliot, while the Bishop of Chichester in Sussex had among his feoffers one of the name of Franceys.

In the county of Hereford in the year 1167-8 Hugo de Lacy, Rudolphus de Baskerville and Thomas del Franceis held each one knight's fee by "veteri feoffamento" under another Norman Baron, Adam de Port.

Two of the surnames of these knights are found again in a charter to the Church of St. John the Evangelist, at Brecknock, which place was particularly identified with Bernard de Newmarch; Milo Fitz Walter, the Earl of Hereford; William de Braose and Rudolphus de Baskerville: and in a charter to this church of John Picarde among the witnesses were Rudolphus de Baskerville and Willielmus Francigena. As Baskerville was killed about the year 1194, the date of this charter must have been some time anterior to that period.

Albertus Francigena, who had two knight's fees in the county of Norfolk under Willielmus de Albeneio, Lord of Bokenham and Chief Butler of his sovereign, is also found several times in the reign of King Henry the First, notably as a witness in the two foundation charters of the same Willielmi de Albeneio to the monastery of Wymondham in the county of Norfolk, and in one of these charters his brother Reginaldus Francigena appears as a witness. The name of Albertus Francigena appears again in two other charters, those of Peter de Valoines, a tenant in capite and nephew of King William the Conqueror, who held in Norfolk two knights' fees under the same Willielmi de Albeneio. One of these charters was a grant to the monastery of Binham in the county of Norfolk about the year 1104, and the other to the same monastery in 1108.

Apparently this same Albertus Francigena is found again, in connection with the grant at Stoke in the county of Suffolk, of Richard de Clare, II Earl of Clare, to the monks of Bec, whom he removed in 1124, from the church of St. John the Baptist in the castle of Clare, to the village of Stoke in the same county.

Robert Fitz Stephen de France, whose name is found in the Record of the Chancery of Ireland and also mentioned by Lower, seems to have been among the companions of a nephew and namesake of this Richard de Clare on his invasion of Ireland, about the year 1170. Reference is here made to Richard de Clare, Earl of Pembroke, surnamed Strongbow, who died the 5th of April, 1176.

Another instance in the county of York, is that of Fulconi Franceis, whose name appears as a witness in one of the charters of Jordan Folioth to the Priory of Pontefract. This Jordan was the son of William de Folioth, an original donator to this Priory, as appears by the foundation charter of Robert de Lacy. Jordan Folioth held knights' fees in this same county under Henry de Lacy, younger son of aforesaid Robert de Lacy; the former had the honor of Pontefract, the ancient demesne of this family, restored to him by the Empress Maud.

In another charter to this same Priory of Pontefract, of Ralph de Capricaria and Beatrice his sister, in the time of the same Henry de Lacy, a Ricardo Franceis is found a witness.

In a charter of liberation, to the abbey of Whiteby in Yorkshire, by Roger de Mowbray, nephew of William de Albeneio already named, Thoraldo Francigena appears as a witness.

In the city of London in 1251, John Francigena or Francoys was Prebend of Holborn.

Among the many donators to the abbey of St. Mary in Yorkshire, was William Fraunceis of Harpham in last named county, who gave one ox-gang of land at Harpham.

Another grant to this same abbey, Robert de Manul or Maisnil gives the town of Myton, which was confirmed by his son Stephen de Maisnil, and among the witnesses is the name of Walter Fraunces.

The abbey of Meaux in the Deanery of Holderness in Yorkshire, was founded in 1151 by William Le Gros (grandson of Odo, Count of Champagne), Earl of Albemarle (Aumale) and Lord of Holderness, and in the chronicles of this abbey between the years 1235 and 1249, Robert Fraunceys appears among its benefactors.

In the charter of liberation of Thomas de Hastynges, in the year 1256, of the mill of Crossby in Cumberland, to the abbey of Whiteby in Yorkshire, William de Franceys is found among the witnesses.

Robert le Francois of Langele is found among the witnesses to a charter of confirmation of Henry de Clinton, to the abbey of Kenilworth in Warwickshire. He was a grandson of Geoffrey de Clinton, the chamberlain and treasurer of King Henry the First, about the year 1122, as well as the founder of this abbey.

Johannes and Albinus Franceis were of the committee of the city of Worcester, which made a grant in 1235 to the Priory of Leominster and Reading, but chiefly to the former religious house.

The name of Henry Fraunceys of Snypeston, is found among the Jurors on an Inquisition held at Bredon in 1302, after the death of Robert de Tateshall, the lawful patron of the Nunnery of Langley, near Bredon, in Leicestershire.

Continuing the county records, beginning with the year 1198 in the reign of King Richard the First, and passing down through the reigns of Kings John and Henry the Third to the year 1275 in the reign of King Edward the First of England, the surnames of Francus, Franceis, etc., are found in the records relating to all the coast counties of England, commencing with Norfolk and continuing southerly and westward as far as Cornwall, inland in Herts, Middlesex, Surrey, Berks, Wilts; they also appear in Somerset, Gloucester, and Oxford; while in the midland counties they are discovered in Bedford, Northampton, Warwick, Leicester, Stafford, Salop, Hereford and Worcester; while northerly these names are recorded in Lincoln, York, Westmoreland and Cumberland.

It is well now to take a rapid glance at the general published history of England, from the time of William the Conqueror downwards to about the end of the reign of Edward the First, during which period the Normans in England discontinued the use of the Norman or French dialect.

“For at least a century and a half after the conquest of England, there were two distinct peoples, the Anglo-Norman and the Anglo-Saxon, dwelling there. They were locally intermingled with each other, but they were not fellow countrymen. They held aloof from each other in social life, the one in haughty scorn, the other in sullen abhorrence. But when we study the period of the reigns of John, Henry the Third, and Edward the First, we find Saxon and Norman blended together under a common name, and with the common rights of Englishmen.”

“From that time forth no part of the population of England looked on another part as foreigners; all felt that they were one people, and that they jointly composed one of the states of Christendom.”

“It was in this period, the 13th century, that our English language, such as it still is, became the mother tongue of every Englishman, whether of Norman or of Saxon origin, and according to Latham the earliest extant specimen of the English language, as contradistinguished from the Saxon and Semi-Saxon, is the proclamation of Henry the Third, to the people of Huntindownschiere, A. D. 1258.”

The anglicizing of the more modern surname of French, began to take place in the latter part of the 13th century, and it is possible earlier dates, other locations, and additional christian names might have been given in the following list, if the examinations had been more extended. However, a sufficient number of individuals of this name are recorded to prove its antiquity, in different parts of England. Beginning in Sussex at the south, it is found northerly associated with all the coast counties as far as Suffolk; inland, to the westward, it appears in Northamptonshire, and on the Welsh frontier in the counties of Salop and Hereford; while southward again, other records of the name are found in Wiltshire, Hampshire and county Surrey.

It will be observed in this collection of court armor, there are numerically two conspicuous classifications in Great Britain borne by the surname of French. Those bearing the wolf, which appears to have belonged to the more northern families, this figure being apparently of local origin; and the other bearing the dolphins, etc., and mainly confined to the more southern counties of England.

The wolf is rarely to be found in Scotch armory, but in the Merse most of the leading ancient families carried wild animals or their heads. Near the Wolfstruther or Wolfmarch of this district were the Frenches, the association of this wild animal with their neighborhood evidently giving them a suitable territorial cognizance; and, at a later period, when they apparently changed their coat, they still retained the wolf, which may be considered as the principal figure of their paternal coat, as a crest.

The Earl of Dunbar and March, whose armorial bearings were an argent lion rampant, surrounded by argent roses on a field gules, was the earliest recorded overlord of these Frenches; and in the charter from Earl George, Robert French of Thornydykes is designated by that Earl as "clarissimus consanguineus noster." So it would have been more natural with any change in their coat armor, to have differenced their coat from that of Dunbar their superior Lord, an ancient custom illustrated in this latter family by the coats of the Homes, Dundas, Edgar, Hepburn, etc. But the Frenches appear to have taken a different course in accordance with ancient usage,—that of assuming the arms of an heiress, (which was in existence before marshalling many coats on one shield,) the three boar's heads in tincture and metal,—the armorial bearings of their neighbors the Gordons, but duly differenced by the addition of the chevron,—which possibly implies an early marriage with that family.

As regards the Frenches of England bearing the bend with dolphins, both particularly identified with France, they may be considered armorially of one family, and from the fact that the family of this surname in Ireland generally bore as a crest a dolphin, it has been considered that they were of the same origin; yet still they may be quite distinct.

Incidentally associated with this subject, it is well to direct attention to a certain similarity between two coats in France and those of some of the Frenches in England. Reference is here made first to the coat of the Dauphin of St. Etienne, who bore az. on a bend or a dolphin gu.

2d. The coats belonging to the d'Aumales, (those of Flandre Française) bore d'azure trois bandes or; those of Picardi d'azure à une bande de gueules chargée de trois besans d'or.

In England the Foliots of Northamptonshire and Yorkshire bore gu. a bend arg., while in County Norfolk the coat is differenced by changing the tincture of the bend to or.

The coats of the De Frenes herein blazoned have an interest in connection with some coats of the Frenches, specially with those of Ireland, from the fact that both Dalton and Burke claim a relationship between those families, and it has been said they have an armorial connection.

The Fleur de lis and Dolphin in heraldry were particularly identified with France, and from the fact that they were the principal armorial figures of their kings and that of their eldest sons the Dauphins, they were consequently rarely to be found in its general armory, except by special concession; but in a foreign country like England these emblems were more frequent, and both of these appear in the heraldic rolls of the latter country in the middle of the 13th century. In France, the azure dolphin on a field or, appeared on the shield of Andre, comte d'Albon and dauphin of Viennois. The Burgundian line of the Dauphins of Viennois ended in 1281, on the death of Jean First, whose daughter Anne, Countess d'Albon had married in 1273, Humbert of the collateral line of La Tour-du-Pin, who succeeded the late count as Humbert First: this house continued in the person of Jean Second, until the death of his successor Guigues Eighth in 1333, when it passed to his brother, Baron of Faucigny, who then succeeded as Humbert Second, Comte d'Albon and Dauphin of Viennois. He married Marie de Baux, daughter of Count d'Andria; the sad fate of his infant son and only child, together with continued war with his relative and neighbor Amedée Sixth, the Count of Savoy, had such an influence upon him, that he finally retired from the world in 1349, taking the habit of Saint Dominique, having in this year confirmed the cession to Philip of Valois, King of France, of the important province of Dauphiné. Thereafter you find the eldest sons of the kings of France styling themselves Dauphins of Viennois and bearing the coat armour of that extensive province. This title was given to Charles his young grandson, son of John, Duke of Normandie, who in 1364 became King Charles the Fifth.

Brydson states "that the first Troubadour was called the Dauphin or Knight of the Dolphin, because he bore this figure on his shield. In the person of one of his successors, the name became a title of sovereign dignity."

It is possible this may refer to Robert Dauphin called Robert First, Comte de Clermont and Dauphin d'Auvergne, a descendant of Guignes Fourth, Dauphin of Viennois, who was born about the year 1234, and is mentioned among the patrons and practisers of the poetic art of the Troubadours.

Judging by the illustrations of Anderson, the Royal Seals and Coins of Scotland in the reign of Queen Mary, were particularly interesting with the associations of the Dolphins and Fleurs de lis, and armorially they show an interesting historical page in the history of Queen Mary as well as that of the Dauphin Francis.

In the year 1558, when Queen Mary of Scotland married Francis, Dauphin of France, she became Dauphiness of Viennois. Francis was heir apparent of the throne of France, succeeding his father King Henry the Second, as Francis the Second, King of France, on the 10th July, 1559, at which time Queen Mary of Scotland was also Queen of France. Their reign was of but short duration, as Francis died 5th December, 1560. The first coin of Scotland now presented, is that bearing the date of 1557, which shows on one side only the arms of Scotland, the same as on one of the Great Seals of Queen Mary. A charter dated at Paris in 1558 of Francis and Mary by the grace of God, King and Queen of Scotland, England and Ireland, Dauphin and Dauphiness of Viennois, etc., has on one side of the Royal Seal, the arms of alliance dimidiated, the sinister half removed, showing only two quarters: 1st, the dolphin, the arms of the Dauphin; 3d, the arms of Scotland, those of Queen Mary, while on the sinister half of the shield were the arms of Scotland dimidiated, or the dexter bordure removed. On a coin of 1558 you find four pair of dolphins arranged somewhat in the form of a cross; on another at this same period, a shield per pale, the arms of the Dauphin of France on the dexter side, and those of Queen Mary on the sinister side of the escutcheon. In 1559 there is still another, the entire arms of alliance. Quarterly 1st and 4th, the arms of the Dauphin; 2d and 3d, the arms of Queen Mary. One more, evidently of this or the following year, when Francis had become King of France. This shows quarterly: 1st and 4th, the three fleurs de lis for France; 2d and 3d, the arms of Scotland.

On a coin of 1560 the arms of France are impaled with those of Scotland. Another coin of this same year deserves a passing notice. On the dexter half of the shield are the arms of France dimidiated; on the sinister half, quarterly of four, 1st and 4th, the arms of Scotland; 2d and 3d grand quarters, quarterly quartered, 1st and 4th, France; 2d and 3d, England.

One of the Great Seals of Queen Mary shows: 1st, the arms of France dimidiated, and the entire arms of Scotland on the sinister half of the shield. The same coat is found on a coin of 1562, the time of Queen Mary, during the reign of King Charles the Ninth of France.

“In ancient days the younger sons of the Kings of France were not permitted to carry the arms of France with a brisure, but only allowed to make use of the tinctures of that kingdom, azure and or, in those figures which the younger sons of the King assumed on account of their marriages, feus or appanages. One of the earliest illustrations of this custom was that of the ancient Dukes of Burgundy" (which line ended in 1361), who bore six bends of the Royal tinctures within a bordure gules.¹ So it appears that the Fleur-de-lis, the Dolphin and Bend were among the earliest emblems of the Royal family of France. The bend or, so associated with the Royal family in ancient days, apparently gave to the bend argent a greater notoriety because of its more general use, and for that reason was doubtless considered by the author of La Science Héroïque generally emblematical of France. Even in Scotland according to an early authority, such Frenchmen as bore a bend, bore it argent to show their origin. This metal according to Playne was that of the cross which represented France at the Crusades, and in the Salle des Croisades at Versailles, the Grand Masters of the Order of Saint Jean de Jérusalem bore argent crosses on their shields.

According to the Armorial Général of France, published in the 17th century, the surnames of de, des, du, and le Franc; France and de France; François, des François and le François, were pretty generally scattered over the different provinces.

As a matter of interest relating to some of these surnames, the records of France show that in 1350, the year after Dauphiné had come into the possession of the Royal family, the same year in which began the reign of King John of France, whose son Charles was the first Dauphin of the Royal line, Hughes de France received the patent of nobility. Eight years later, in the reign of the same King, Bertrand Defranche, a citizen of Montpellier in Languedoc, received a patent of nobility. During this century his name is many times found recorded in the history of France, and he was among those taken prisoners at the battle of Cocherel in Normandie, in the year 1364.

1 "The second race of the Royal Dukes bore the ancient coat on the 2d and 3d quarters, and on the 1st and 4th quarters, azure semee of fleurs-de-lis within a bordure gobonated argent and gules for Burgundy modern."

In 1363 Jean le François, ancient master of the Chamber of the King of Navarre, received a patent of nobility, and in the following year the same honor was conferred upon Jacques de France.

In 1378 King Charles the Fifth conferred upon Jean France, his counsellor at the bailliage of Orleans, and his family, the patent of nobility.

In 1404, in the reign of Charles the Sixth, the noble rank was conferred upon Jean Le François, master of the Pantry of the King's uncle Jean, Duke of Berry, and in the same year d'Etienne le François and his descendants became Franks in social condition.

The accompanying armorial collection shows many locations of those bearing the surname of French in England, yet much additional information is still desired as to the names of the townships and counties in which they were located, as well as additional information about their coats of arms prior to the year 1650.

The writer suggests that such information be published in "The Genealogist" or "The Notes and Queries" of London, or if more agreeable, they can be sent to the undersigned.
